SPIRITS ROLLED THE STONE AWAY.

BY T. P. NORTON.

When I sit in meditation
O'er the relics of the day,
Cherishing each fond relation
To the loved ones passed away.

One by one, familiar faces,
Fresh as roses wet with dew,
Smile in their accustomed places
With a radiance strange and new.

In the quaint arm chair beside me,
Dear as heirlooms are, and old,
Sits my mother, there to guide me,
With a kindness manifold.

Yet they told me she had left me
In this dark, cold world alone,
And that in some distant heaven
Was confined, and careless grown.

Softly through the shadows stealing,
Smiling here again to me,
Comes a childlike form revealing
Love, and immortality.

On my trembling knee reclining
Where his flaxen ringlets fell,
How I know his sweet entwining
Let these burning teardrops tell.

Yet they said that God had borne him
To some forsaken shore,
And 'twas foolish now to mourn him
While a stranger loves him more.

Oftentimes they smile around me
Till my inmost soul is stirred,
And the earthly chain which bound me
Seems to loosen at their word.

All ye mourners at the portal,
Hear this blessed truth from me,
God is love, and love immortal,
It, and truth shall make you free.

Know the tomb can ne'er divide us,
See it opens bright as day;
Morning shows our friends beside us,
Spirits rolled the stone away.

SPIRIT COMMUNICATIONS.

MRS. J. M. F., MEDIUM.

June 15th, M. S. 36.

PHILIP RAPP,
(Holland, N. J.)

GOOD MORNING:—I see that there a great many of my friends coming here, in some way to gain information in regard to what their duties really are. I never had any knowledge of Spiritualism. I belonged to the church, but do not think that I really understood what I professed to believe; but I expected in some way to be benefitted in a future life. I now think I would have been as well off without any knowledge of that book called the Bible; and I am here to try and reach some of my children and friends, in order that they may learn the truth in regard to themselves. My name is Philip Rapp, of Holland, N. J. I could speak German better than English, but it seems this is the only way I can communicate through this medium. Ques. Have you any message for your children? Ans. Yes, if they request it.

JESSE TINSMAN,
(Holland, N. J.)

I come in here anxious to aid in this work, if it is possible for me to do so. I am not anything more than an ordinary spirit, not having had any very great advantage while in earth life. I will not promise to do more than I have the ability to do, but so far as I am able I will aid in bringing about favorable results to every progressive move that spirits may make. Every location seems to be much interested in coming developments. My name is Jesse Tinsman, of Holland, N. J. There is another friend here from Holland, who desires to communicate.

ANNA CLARK,
(Holland, N. J.)

It has been a great while for me to wait the opportunity of giving something positive in regard to my experiences in spirit life. I had not very much experience while in my physical form, but it did not seem to make any difference to me as a spirit. It seems as though I glided into a place where every one was willing to give me instruction and pleasure, and I have grown to be something entirely different from what I was when in my old form. But this is the first time I ever controlled a medium, and, like all new beginners, I feel uncertain about the way my communication will appear. I do not feel any restraint or inharmony, but a strange feeling, on coming among strangers to give evidence of eternal life. My name when I lived and acted in my own body, was Anna Clark, of Holland, N. J.

SALLIE ANN McENTEE,
(Nockamixon, Pa.)

GOOD EVENING:—I feel very strange, and what surprises me most is, that I am able to give my thoughts to the world through some one else. I think that if people knew that they lived eternally, they would begin to try to make the best use of their time and fit themselves to enjoy happiness at all times. The trouble with all of us is, that we were taught to believe in something that does not exist, and it takes us a long time to outgrow the false system under which we lived. But I have come to the conclusion that it is best to lay aside the old and take up the new. And my wish is that you may all receive a full recompense for your kindness to us. I will work, with others, to bring about the conditions that so many earnest workers seem determined to bring about. I had many friends, and I think some of them will be glad to hear from me. My name is Sally Ann McEntee, of Nockamixon, Pa. Ques. Were you a member of any church? Ans. Yes; I belonged to the Lutheran Church.

EDWARD RUSKIN,
(Montpelier, Vermont.)

How Do You ALL Do?—I have been studying all day how to give my communication, and now that I am here, I am not certain of the ground that I walk upon. I have not come back here to complain of any one in particular, but society runs in so many different channels, none of which seem correct, that it is necessary for us all to try to lead people's attention to some of the greatest defects; and one is the unequal distribution of wealth. To me it looks very foolish to see men and women struggling to obtain something that they are unable to use, and extremely selfish. I do not think that men and women wish to contribute to their own misery. The first thing that developed this avaricious nature that seems to exist in man, was actual necessity. The earth naturally needed development to sustain human life, and the necessities of men compelled them to labor. In acquiring sufficient to supply their necessities, they trained themselves in a direction to accumulate or hold enough to sustain them through life. At length it became a habit over which they had no more control than over any other habit acquired through the influences around them, which they would willingly rid themselves of if possible. But continued practice has made them servants of a law, which, if correctly applied, would produce happiness—the abuse of which not only entails misery upon one individual, but throws the whole government out of balance. I want men and women to think well upon this subject, and to work in concert with us, that we may all gravitate to a correct system that will bring harmony out of discord, and make the earth a place where spirits will delight to linger, feasting upon the joys of all mankind. I am working with many bands that have promised wonderful results to the labor being performed; and I hope to be able to meet with you often, not only to improve my own condition, but to aid in furthering the interests of the human family. Edward Ruskin, of Montpelier, Vermont.

MAUDE BEALE,
(Mobile, Alabama.)

Would you allow me to give a communication? (Most certainly. We will be glad to have you do so.) I've been attending your circles for a long time, and have felt that my turn might come some time to speak to the world, and ask every individual to take hold with a will and work for true knowledge. In attending your circles, I naturally learned the thoughts of each one, and I find that you have laid off the old and taken on the new. You deserve a great deal of credit for your courage and perseverance. But I do not want you to forget that the world is full of people who have not had such favorable opportunities as you have had. They are wearing old garments, and these have become so easy to them that they prefer comfort to the truth. It is easier for them to have faith and believe they will be saved, than to watch their daily acts and shape their course by correct principles. The one is light and easy to do—the other needs constant care and attention; and the masses are gliding to the tomb, with faith leading them to disappointment and sorrow. Try to be patient and persevering with them; for a little knowledge gained to the spirit embodied in a physical form obviates many difficulties for the new-born spirit. My influence shall be used to break down the prejudices of all professing Christians—not with a tyrant's hand, but with a gentle sisterly love—reaching hearts that have been turned to gall by persecution and misery. This will be my labor in the future. Maude Beale, of Mobile, Alabama. Ques. Of what form of faith were you? Ans. I was a Catholic. I have friends there whom I hope will be glad to hear from me. You may, if you please, send the paper to Jeremiah Beale, Mobile, Alabama.

JAKE GRAY,
(A Mischievous Boy Spirit.)

I just come in a little bit to tell you I haven't forgot you; and some time I'm going to bring a whole lot of the priests here, and foolhem like everything. They'll think they are getting into a church; and won't they be fooled! I'll tell them the Pope is here. [That would be telling a fib.] Well, they told fibs, didn't they? It is no harm to tell fibs to those who tell fibs. [Yes, it is harm; at least to yourself.] Well, anyhow I am going to have a little fun. My name is Jake Gray. I came to see you one time. Don't you remember me? [Yes, we remember you very well.] There are a good many folks watching me to-night. Granny McFarland is here. She's found me out. She sung "Glory Hallelujah." I wish you had a seen her mouth.

[This spirit seems to have lived for mischief only, and admitted that he had been a great torment to an old lady neighbor whom he calls Granny McFarland. He seems almost incorrigible in his desire to play tricks on those whom he does not like. He had controlled Mrs. F. before, as he states.—Ed.]

ELIZABETH HELTMAN,
(Eight miles from Lock Haven, Pa.)

I felt as if I would like to give a communication that will reach my friends. I was not a Spiritualist, and I did not know much about the ways of the world. I generally staid at home and worked, and tried to do the best for my family that I could. But coming here makes me feel a kind of dazed. My head is all in a whirl. One of my sons married this lady's sister; and I came here wanting to send my love to them, and let them know that I am not dead, but living, happy and contented, knowing that all things are for the best. My name is Elizabeth Helzman, eight miles from Lock Haven, Pa.

JACOB REEVES,
(San Francisco, Cal.)

I expected I would have to make some great preparation when I came in here to speak; but I find that all I have to do is, to open my mouth and the words come out. And now, the question with me is, what I had better say, and how I can do the most good. If I do not interfere with your work too much, I would like to say just what I think. [Speak anything you feel like saying without hesitation.] Now most of the people that come here talk about Christianity, superstition, and such things. Now I am going to talk about a class of people called Spiritualists. I will divide them into two classes; the one class embraces those who call themselves Christian Spiritualists and seek to curry favor with the masses. I would rather be a Hottentot than to be one of them. They want to drag a divine principle down to their bigoted notions. I can only say of them: may God save them, when they get over on the other side. There is another class, the radical Spiritualists, who are working to undo all the wrongs of society. Of these some move in one direction and some in another. Each one of them is working for the progress of the human family, but they move in different directions to accomplish this. I have no particular objection to any of them; but they seem to have no sympathy for one another, and the spirit of condemnation seems to be the prevailing disposition with them. Now I would advise them to reason together, and to acknowledge that they are human, and that all are liable to err sometimes, although their purposes may be pure and fair. I so advise because it is necessary for them to unite for their mutual interests. If they will do so, it will be the means of making a magnetic condition that will overcome all the defects of society. And, as every living being knows that the time is not far distant before they will have to change their forms and blend as spirits together, and as good acts clothe the spirit in a garb of light, it is well to work to obtain such garments. As, on the shoulders of the radicals rests the great burden of labor, it would be well for each one to cleanse themselves of all defects. Jacob Reeves, of San Francisco, California.

JENNIE WEST,
(Pottsville, Pa.)

I have been watching for a long time to find a home in heaven, but I have not discovered it yet, and I would like to know whether you can tell me where to find it. Ques. Why have you not found it? Ans. I don't know. I have prayed hard enough, and gave up the world for the sake of something going to heaven. I have watched and waited in vain, and I have come here to see whether you can give me any instructions how to reach the place. Ques. What kind of a place are you looking for? Ans. For heaven. Ques. What do you expect to find in heaven? Ans. I thought I would see a throne and Jesus Christ, and all my old friends there. Ques. Of what church were you? Ans. I was a Catholic. Ques. Why do you not call upon the Catholic priests to show you where that heaven they told you about is? Ans. I have done so, and they tell me I must wait. [They did not tell you the truth when here, and they do not tell you the truth now. They well know that there is no such place as they taught you to believe there was; and now they are too dishonest to confess to you the wrong they did you, by misleading you.] You have no right to talk about them in that way. They are good men. [They are not good men or they would not seek to keep you in the state of wretchedness in which you find yourself. If you want to get out of that condition you will have to give up all thoughts of ever realizing what you have looked for in vain, and seek relief in another direction.] Then I would be just in the same state I was in when here. [Better be in that state than in the unhappy and discontented one you are now in. The fact of the matter is, that you are thinking too much about your own lack of happiness, and too little about the wretchedness and misery of others. Your selfishness is the main cause of your inability to advance out of your present condition. Pay no more heed to teachings, that experience has demonstrated to you, are not true, and seek and desire that you may progress only in proportion as all the human race progresses. By taking that course you will not only secure your own happiness, but the happiness of others. Help all human beings that you can, and you will find a heaven worth enjoying; not one that would prove a curse to you even if you could find it.] I will think of what you have said. My name was Jennie West, and I lived at Pottsville, Pa.

MARY ALLEN,
(Cottageville, Pa.)

GOOD EVENING:—I feel to-night like talking a little; for my friends are anxious to know my condition in spirit life, after so many years of suffering. I think that suffering must have made a condition for my happiness. I enjoy my spirit existence to the fullest extent. I have so many friends with me and am so happy, that it seems as though I was a new being. But, in my happiness, I do not forget my loved ones on earth; and one of my pleasures is in making preparations for the union of each and all of them in spirit life, as time rolls on. I want them all to remember me with pleasure, to cease regretting my earthly experiences, and to think only of my happy existence, while aiding in the great work of reform. I thought I knew something of Spiritualism, or of spirit existence; but in my wildest dreams I never anticipated anything so sublime as I find it to be. All care and sorrow is smoothed from my brow, and the beauty of my surroundings I am unable to describe; for language cannot convey an idea of its magnificence. Men's lives are full of difficulties and their days uncertain; but the crowning event of human life is what is called death. It unlocks the prison doors, and allows the spirit to revel in scenes of delight. To the dear ones who administered to my wants, I send all the love and gratitude that fills my soul. Hoping soon to be able to give them other messages; I remain their faithful daughter, loving sister and true friend, Mary Allen, of Cottageville, Pa.

It has been the observation of speakers, mediums and visitors, that the Lily Dale camp meetings are unsurpassed in excellence and spirituality. Thus far the most attractive and exalting influences have prevailed, which are tangible to all who come within the sphere of the Lily Dale meetings, and it is hoped that the same spirit will continue to bless and prosper these annual gatherings.

The following speakers are engaged: Lyman C. Howe, Fredonia, N. Y.; Geo. W. Taylor, Lawton, N. Y.; Mrs. E. C. Woodruff, South Haven, Mich.; Moses Hull, Erie, Pa.; Mrs. Mattie E. [NUMBER TWO.]
PROPHECY, OR THE FORETELLING OF FUTURE EVENTS—HOW IT IS DONE.

BY J. H. MENDENHALL.

In our first paper upon this subject, we gave, in a few brief statements, what we regard as constituting the initiatory steps into that realm of knowledge known as Prophecy. In said paper we endeavored to make plain the fact that prediction—the declaration of coming or undeveloped events—is no miracle; nor does it belong to any special class or order of the human family; but is the result of an attribute common to all minds alike, and can be so employed by all, when occupying the same plane of mental or spiritual unfoldment. Our effort embraced only such elements of prophetic knowledge as have their basis in natural or physical phenomena, as coming directly through the channels of the external senses. We come now to a point, the exquisite delicacy of which, at one age of the world, would forbid our entering its threshold. But as our subject is taken out of the hands of the gods and their priestly oracles, and is transferred to the domain of the human intellect, in its twin sister, intuition, we feel assured that we are not treading upon forbidden ground, or violating any divine principle of our nature, if we venture to lift the veil and take a peep at what is being written upon the tablets of life's great athenium.

We have already stated that there is both a physical and a spiritual universe most intimately connected and interblended. Also, that man is a dual being, consisting of physical and spiritual constituents, which adapt him both to the material and spiritual sides of life. And that as he is acted upon by the one from without, so he is acted upon by the other from within; that as the history of all external phenomena is written in the Book of Life—the mind of man—through the chemical action of material light; so the history of all mental phenomena is registered upon the same golden pages through the chemical action of what we term psychic or magneto-mental light. By this dual process of action man is made the recipient of all the influences of nature. Being a physical being, he is equally related to both sides of the dual universe; and standing as he does, in his individualized, organic form at the head of the two worlds, he not only acts, but in turn is acted upon by all the influences or forces of both matter and spirit; even from the crudest atom up to that of the highest angelical being. Nothing passes before his view, physically or spiritually, but what daguerreotypes its image upon his spiritual sensorium. There it stands ineffably registered to be seen by the eye of the spirit during the sempiternal ages. To illustrate: Owing to the extreme sensitiveness of the chemically prepared plate, the skillful artist, through actinism or actinic light as an agent, can catch from and hold fast a true likeness of any visible object that may be properly placed before the lens of the camera obscura. Should a finer grade of light be accessible, objects invisible might thus be made to transfer their image upon the same sensitized plate.

Now, the soul or spirit of man is the most intensely sensitized substance in the known realms of existence, and the magneto-mental radiance the highest or most refined quality of light. Hence all objects, whether visible or invisible, being brought into focal position with the soul or spirit, as the object-glass, will impress upon said soul or spirit a true image of itself. Aye, the very thought of one mind may be, and is thus transferred in likeness upon the mind of another, even when broad distance intervenes. These truths are demonstrated beyond refutation through the thousands of facts brought to light by clairvoyance, clairaudience, psychometry, and more than all else, through that noted channel universally known as mediumship. By the agency of clairvoyance, which means clear seeing, nothing can obstruct or bedim the soul's vision. To the fully developed clairvoyant or seer, all matter becomes radiant, distance is annihilated, and time itself cannot intercept or curtail his boundless view. For, not only can he discern movements going on in remote parts of the earth, but, following the golden threads of empyrean light, he is enabled to leap to other planets, survey their dimensions, properties and native scenery, and graphically describe the same. Not only this, but the very spirit world is made an object of his boundless view. Before his raptured gaze stand the shining retinue, liberated from their temples of clay, who have put on the celestial form, donned in aural raiment of their own life-making. If the same person be clairaudient, he may catch their celestial voices in speech or song, as they fall upon the inner auditory nerve like sunbeams from the boundaries of other worlds; the tread of angels' feet may be heard around him as the march or footsteps of messengers of peace, while the softly swelling strains of the moving spheres may be telephoned and become music for his soul. How intensely refined must be the material constituting the media for the daguerreotyping of celestial forms, and the conveyance of angel voices. And yet, thousands of persons now living can testify to the truth of its realness. If we advance one step forward and appeal to the psychometrist—the soul-measurer—we have only another channel through which there may be brought within the sphere of our knowledge a new world of wonder and beauty.

In virtue of the eternal truth, before stated, viz: that all objects influence each other through the law of reciprocal action, each object or being imparts to others, portions of its own life aura, which becomes indelibly stamped or impressed upon the recipient's sensorium. The developed psychometrist, by coming in contact with any of said objects, is enabled to read with the greatest precision and certainty the wonderful history of a world of events that have transpired in ages gone by. As for instance, the pebble brought from the wave-lashed shore of old ocean, when touched to the forehead of the fully developed psychometrist, opens to his view or understanding the living, endless history of all that occurred in connection with it during the long period of its formation. From its presence come the echoes of the ocean's solemn moan; and the wave's white crest sparkles with foam as if actually sporting upon the face of the briny deep; while the shades of living monsters that plow the main, and huge fowls that rift the air, pass like magic scenes from its solid folds before his view. Should the pebble chance to be one plucked from the ruins of some ancient temple, or the yet standing sky-touching pyramid, then the hands that reared them are felt, seen and described; the tribe or race to whom they belong, graphically told, and even the mental caste or genius characteristic of their intellectual and moral unfoldment, is as readily read as would be their printed history.

Again: a lock of hair put in contact with this all-seeing faculty of the developed psychometrist, will reveal at once to him the whole life-history of the one upon whose temple it grew. If he has led the life of a tyrant, that fact stands out prominently upon the aura surrounding said lock of hair. If taken from the head of the high-toned philosopher or moralist, the history of his broad researches will be written thereon, in characters of merited fame; or yet, if from the bard whose strong rhythmical proclivities guided him to the realm of song, then a life of music and harmony is most beautifully and exquisitely portrayed. Nay, the mere white card unwritten, but touched by the hand of man or angel, proclaims to the psychometrist the character, and life-history of him who touched it. In short, whatsoever is hidden shall be revealed.

But what, you ask, has all this reading of the past to do with prophecy, or with the declaring of things to come? We answer, thus: If there is in man a faculty for knowing or understanding, by which he is enabled to take a retrospective view of things transpired in the eternal past, then, by changing the direction of the mental telescope, he may with equal precision and certainty view things from the side of the eternal future. It is said to be a poor rule that won't work both ways; and we say that the eye that can look downward or backward can look upward and forward. If by the searching of effects their causes can be ascertained, the studying of causes will reveal their effects. For be it known, that in every cause is embodied the rudiments of the undeveloped effect; and to him or her whose faculty of vision is in line or equilibrium with radiant matter, the effect is made manifest, though it be silently treasured within the bosom of causative force. As, for instance, the acorn, though a small roundish oblong seed, giving the natural beholder no visible clue whatever to the majestic form of the oak when fully developed, contains within its secret folds the causative forces which give rise to its future stately trunk, its branches, foliage, bloom and fruit. This, though unseen by the natural vision, because the natural light through which the acorn is viewed, is too crude, and its rate of vibratory motion too slow to reveal the finer life forces which are to develop the future oak; nevertheless, to the fully unfolded psychometrist, who views the interior or soul of things, they are clearly seen. For he, looking through the radiance of psych-aura or magneto-mental light, can behold said forces in their silent, secret process of evolution, and though he may have never seen an oak, he will be able to describe it in all its majestic strength and beauty of form.

Here, then, is prophecy, not as coming from or through any external channel of knowledge, but from that which is internal and reaches directly the understanding of the human spirit. With this view of the subject, is it not readily seen how prophetic utterances can be made, apparently, in the absence of all knowledge of the events declared to come, which, in the future, do come to pass; and yet, evident it is that he or she who gives utterance to said predictions, instead of being in a state of necience, stand amid the noon-tide blaze of the very fount of knowledge. Having, then, sustained our claim that prophecy is no miracle, but the result of mental action in strict accord with the law of mind and understanding, we will close our present effort by reference to a case or two of prophetic utterance, in which the how of said prophecy could be made with certainty, has ever been a matter of wonder and mystery to the general mind. Not only the how, but the why that further revelation was not made at the same time of said event, has been regarded as being equally wrapt in mystery.

But a short time previous to the assassination of that great soul, Mr. S. S. Jones, it was announced through a spiritual medium, then in Chicago, that he (Mr. J.) "would soon experience a great change." If memory serves correctly, it was the spirit of Abraham Lincoln who gave utterance to this prediction. Why he did not tell Mr. J. what the nature of that change would be, and by whose vile hands the change was to be brought about, is an expression that has often been made in the hearing of the writer. "For," said the speaker, "had Mr. J. been apprized of the fact that his life was to be taken by the assassin's bullet, and yet further, who the assassin should be, why then the whole tragedy could have been avoided, Mr. J. would have lived, and the assassin been spared the lashings of a violated conscience for centuries to come." In answer to all this, we will say that as to how spirit L. did come into possession of a knowledge of the coming change predicted, is not within our province to say, nor is it our present purpose to set forth this fact; but to show the several ways by which he could have known it, and the probable why spirit L. did not make further revelation of the matter at the time.

If we shall be successful in this, especially in the later paragraph, we shall have given a reasonable answer to numerous questions put by inquiring minds, as to why spirits do not perform many things which it is thought they ought to do. In the first place, spirit L. could have been present and overheard the plotting of the scheme for taking the life of Mr. J. If this be the fact in the case, then there is no mystery in his knowing it, as this is the ordinary way of obtaining a knowledge of similar occurrences in mundane life. At very least, it would not excel the mystery of a common case of clairvoyance. Having thus learned the intent of the assassin and his accomplice, all that remained necessary to make the prediction would be for spirit L. to take control of the medium's organization and so announce the fact, as in any other case of announcement with spirits where they use mediums for their spokesmen. Again, spirit L. may not have been present at the plotting of the death of Mr. J., but was incidentally thrown into the presence of the intended assassin. The intent to take the life of Mr. J. had matured in the mind of the to-be assassin; and having thus assumed shape, daguerreotyped its image upon the spiritual canvas or sensorium of the said assassin. There it hung as a picture on a wall, and spirit L. beholding it, saw that it was a fixed fact, mentally, though as yet unexecuted. With this view of the fact, spirit L. could announce the coming event with as much, if not more certainty than he could have done in the former case; for when an intent becomes fixed, its execution is most sure to follow. If there is any mystery in this, then all mental imagery is mystery; but such has been shown to be in harmony with the law of thought and intelligence; and no person ever commits a deed, good or bad, without first imaging that deed upon his soul.

We will now advance one step further in the line of means by which the aforesaid event could have been predicted. Let us suppose that spirit L. had not seen, or ever met with the person proving to be the assassin, but was only present with Mr. J. and the medium at the time of predicting the event or change soon to come. The assassin having formed in his own mind the intent to take the life of his intended victim in a certain manner, which intent he could not possibly mature without fixing his mind and concentrating his thoughts upon the person of said victim, Mr. J.; then the intent being substantial, mental aura or radiant matter would have been necessarily aured to, and impressed upon the spiritual sensorium of Mr. J., upon the same principle that spirits impress their medium with their thoughts, Spirit L., beholding said aured intent or image thereof, fastened upon the intended victim, knew its execution was near at hand; and could, as he did, declare the coming event. Much could be said as regards the certainty of the fulfilling of said prediction previous to its occurrence, but we must pass on, believing what we have already said is made plain to the reflecting mind. But why did not spirit L. reveal the whole matter, stating what change it was that Mr. J. was to meet, and who it was that should be the means of bringing about said change; and thus lay the means for preventing the sad calamity? This is a natural inquiry, and one that has often been asked the writer. We answer, first, it is a fact that all effects have their appropriate causes, respectively, and that all causes work by means and are themselves governed by conditions. (2.) It is also true that when causative forces have reached a certain point in their process of action, surroundings being equal, abortion becomes impossible. As for instance, oxygen and hydrogen properly proportioned and manipulated produce water. During their process of manipulation, these elements become floating vapors in the air, from which state it would require but a slight action to change them back into their original gaseous condition; but if allowed to move on unarrested, with a very slight reduction of temperature they become liquid or water; and having reached this point, they become too condensed to remain longer in the air, hence are compelled to fall to the earth in the form of rain.

As with the physical, so it is with the mental movements of the world. When a resolution is formed in the mind and becomes fixed, sufficiently solid to resist counteracting influences in the same mind, it will be carried out, executed. This was the case with the assassin who had resolved in his mind to take the life of Mr. J., and spirit L. could, and no doubt had perceived the fact from the vivid intenseness appearing in the aured intention as seen impressed upon the sensorium of the intended victim. It is a fact, then, that while spirits may have the power of discerning certain events in their process of development, they may not always be able to arrest them and thus prevent their maturity; for spirits, too, are as much governed by the law of conditions in their efforts to accomplish certain objects as any other acting cause. We see at present but the one way by which the assassination of Mr. J. could possibly have been prevented, even if the intention of his assassin had been in a state susceptible of disintegration. This would be to bring about a reformation in the mind of the assassin before he could have time to commit the deed. But as the intention was only known to himself and his probable particeps criminis, except to those in spirit life who had learned the fact, why, the work of reformation, under the circumstances, would necessarily have fallen upon said spirits to perform. The question, then, becomes this: Were conditions such that said reformation could have been wrought in due time, so as to have saved the life of Mr. J.? We answer positively, no. If it could, it would have been done.

There was, then, but one alternative left spirit L., by which he could have discharged his duty honorably to Mr. J., and that was to warn him of the coming change in a manner that would cause him the least possible mental agony. Had spirit L. revealed the whole fact to Mr. J., he might, of course, have prolonged the time of its execution; but it is hardly possible that he could have escaped it entire; while it is more than probable that consequences equally calamitous would have transpired, even with a knowledge of the nature of the change awaiting him. What were the real sufferings of Mr. J. as compared with those which would naturally arise from a knowledge of the fact that he was the chosen victim, in all probability, by the Jesuitical powers; and yet, know not the hour of execution, nor the manner thereof? Let us suppose Mr. J. to have been in possession of all the facts so far as they existed in the form of resolution. What then? Who but spirit L., or other wise, discerning, spirits, could measure and declare the result? Self-defense being the first law of nature, Mr. J. would naturally have resorted to such means as in his judgment would secure his protection against his declared fate. An unwise choice, which too often occurs under cases of excitement of such magnitude, gives rise to powerful effects. Effects, in turn, become reactionary causes for the production of other results; and where shall we look to find the end link in the chain of events growing out of a revelation of the whole matter connected with the assassination of Mr. S. S. Jones? Wise, discerning spirits see clearer than man in mundane life, and know better what to, and what not to reveal. We intended more, but our space and time are up. The present will suffice the reflecting mind.

SHAKERS, N. Y., May 6, 1883.

Dr. J. H. Rhodes—Kind Friend:

The three dollar boxes of your very valuable lozenges, one addressed to Eldress Pauline and the others to myself, have been received all safe. We prize them very much, and wish that every invalid could be advised to try a box, and they then would feel the effect. We know it they had one they would want another. Sister Pauline joins me in sending you this testimony for your very valuable medicine. ALVIRA CONKLIN.

Parkersburg, W. Va., March 1883.

Dr. J. H. Rhodes—Dear Sir:

At the earnest request of my wife, I have been taking your remedies for kidney complaint, with decided benefit. Enclosed you will find one dollar for one large box of the same. Yours truly, T. T. DAVIDSON.

AN APPEAL ON BEHALF OF ALFRED JAMES.

We make a special appeal to the friends who duly appreciate the importance of the spirit work that is being done through the mediumship of Alfred James, to aid and assist him to maintain the position in which he has been placed as a medium. Few, indeed, too few, are the number of those calling themselves Spiritualists, who are sufficiently developed, either mentally or spiritually to understand the importance of his mission, hence he is opposed to such an extent by the ignorant and prejudiced as to be reduced to the most trying necessities. He needs and deserves assistance from those who can and do appreciate the vast importance of his mediumistic services to the cause of Truth; and we feel it a duty, not only to ask such assistance for him, but to urge it as a matter of the gravest moment to the public, as well as of justice to Mr. James. Any contributions sent to this office for that purpose, will be promptly acknowledged and handed to him. If desired, public acknowledgment will be made in these columns of any or all remittances for that object.

Mrs. E. C. Hatch's Wonderful Public Flower Seance.

Editor of Mind and Matter:

DEAR SIR:—Having been elected to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignations of Professor Thompson as Corresponding Secretary of S. P. Association, I send you, at the request of many members, a report of a seance held in this city by Mrs. E. C. Hatch, flower medium:

REPORT—MRS. E. C. HATCH, FLOWER MEDIUM.

Agreeably to an offer made by Mrs. Hatch to the Spiritistic Phenomena Association, about one hundred members assembled at Ladies' Aid Parlor, 1081 Washington street, on the evening of June 11th, 1883, to witness her phase of mediumship. Much has been said about this phase of Spiritualism, also of the medium, but of the number that were in this large circle, not one dissenting voice was heard in regard to her. None but members of this Association were allowed admittance, and previous to the extinguishing of the lights, Father Davenport, in a few words, explained why it was necessary that the condition of total darkness was to be observed, and every intelligent Spiritualist could see for himself, or herself, that this should be. In a few moments darkness reigned profound, and all joined in singing, when almost immediately the flowers rained down, as it were, into the laps of all, as it proved at the conclusion of the seance. One hour or more was occupied in this way, all the members remaining quiet until the gas was lighted, and to the surprise and gratification of all, everyone had been presented with flowers.

Many were the expressions of delight on receiving flowers in this manner. That they should receive a peculiar twig, spray, or flower of any kind, in response to mental questions or thought, would show that spirit friends were cognizant of our wishes in each and every case. "Why," says one, "I mentally wished a red rose, and here it is, a counterpart of me that my little girl had with her as we laid her away." A white rose, a white or carnation pink, a calla lily, and different kinds of flowers, which at the mental request of any member of the circle, was produced and given to them.

The utmost harmony was observed in this circle, and every one was pleased that it proved to be a perfect success. As the medium had given her services, a collection was taken up and presented to her, and at the close of the seance a vote was taken by those present, which resulted in endorsing her as a genuine medium, with not one dissenting vote. Taken altogether, it was a satisfactory showing that spirits are with us, can produce flowers, and know the wishes and thoughts of each and every one. With perfect darkness, with a three deep circle, that every mental thought was answered, is enough for one day's glory.

Cor. Sec. of S. P. Association,

Notice.
An astounding narrative left by the late Alexander Smythe, author of "Jesus of Nazareth," is now in the hands of a reviser and editor, for the press, to be produced in book form at an early day, entitled, "Travels and scenes in Foreign Land," through mediumistic control: whose descriptive powers of scenes, has no parallel in the annals of published history. The book will comprise about four hundred pages, executed in the most modern art, on fine tinted paper. The price of the book not definitely determined but will not exceed $2.00. The editor and compiler is desirous to obtain as many orders for the book before publishing, as no hired canvassers will be employed to enhance the cost. To whom this notice may come, by addressing the undersigned, giving their name and address plainly written, can have mailed to them anywhere in the United States, at the subscription price, when the book is completed. Yours truly, application of the sacred formula, 'Om Mani Padma Hum. It contains a description of the wonderful region Sukhavati, where Amitabha sits enthroned, and where those are who most merit blissful existence; a history of creation, prayers to Padmapani, and the advantages of frequent repetition of Om Mani; the meaning of that sacred sentence; an account of the figurative representations of Padmapani, and of his images, which represent him with faces varying from three to one thousand. It contains, moreover, the ethics and religious ordinances of Buddhism; biography; a description of the irresistible power of the Om Mani, etc., and tells how it secures deliverance from being reborn; legends, translations of sacred books," etc.
JOHN M. WASSON,

We have quoted more than enough to show that the Buddhist word O'M, which represents the triad A. U. M., was the expression of the god idea of that religious sect. As we quoted the mystic and awe-inspiring words Om Mani, we could but recall the fact that the same words slightly abbreviated is the closing word of every Christian invocation or prayer. We were forcibly impressed with the conviction that we had in this apparently accidental manner been led to discover the real source and meaning of the Christian word "Amen," which, in most Christian churches, has come to be pronounced Amen; which is enough like the Buddhist Aum Mani to be its twin brother, to say the least. We for a time supposed that the Christian Amen had been derived from the custom of the Egyptian priests, who closed their prayers with "Our Lord Ammon," who was none other than the sun-god in the sign of the Ram of Spring. But it now appears that the Ammon of the Egyptians and the Aum Mani of the Buddhists were borrowed, the one from the other, or both from some older original, and it seems equally clear that the Christians borrowed their Amen from the latter, and not the former source. If there was no other proof of the Buddhist origin of the Christian religion than the frequent pointless and meaningless Christian use of the Buddhist invocation Om Mani or Aum Mani, in their scriptures, creeds, liturgies and prayers, that would of itself suffice to show that the one was but an imitation of the older religion. We do not hesitate to challenge the Christian world to question the identity of the meaningless Christian word Amen or Aumen with the comprehensive Buddhist formula Aum Mani Padma Hum abbreviated into Aum Mani. But we find that the triad, A. U. M., mentioned in connection with a statue of the Celtic god Hesus, as he was represented in the imperial pantheon of Alexander Severus, and this by the spirit of Dion Cassius, through a medium that has no knowledge whatever of any of the facts which we have here hastily thrown together; thus showing that while the Christians borrowed their Christ from the Indian Krishna or Christna, they borrowed their Jesus from the Hesus or Iesus of the Celtic Druids. Truly, when such a flood of light is blazing from the world of ancient spirits, we may conclude that the veil has been rent assunder, never again to be closed against the revealed charms of that mother of all human progress, Truth, pure uncontaminated Truth.

But precious as time and space is, we cannot refrain from giving the Buddhist meaning of the triad A. U. M., according to Mr. Lillie's suggested interpretation of it. "Aditi pronounced Udithe the wife of Kasypa, and the mother of the gods. She is sometimes styled for greater distinction, the "mother of Indra." She is supposed to personify the earth." "Varuna, a name in the Hindoo mythology originally applied to the sky or heaven, as enclosing or surrounding the earth, but used by later writers to designate both the ocean (which also encompasses the earth) and the regent of the sea, or the deity who presides over the waters of the ocean." Mitra was a Persian and not a Hindoo god, except by adoption, and was regarded as the god of the sun: "but he was more properly the god of day, and, in a higher and more extended sense, the god of light presiding over the movements and influence of the principal heavenly bodies, including the five planets, and the sun and moon. The primary signification of the Sanscrit Mitra is, a 'friend, and Mitra would seem to be the representative of light as the friend of mankind and as the mediator between heaven and earth."

We have taken the above quotations from Thomas's Dictionary of Mythology. The explanation given by the spirit as to the way the triad A. U. M. was taken from India to Western Europe is perfectly consistent with what is historically known of the courses taken by the currents of the Eastern civilizations towards the West. We can find no reference to any such writer as Sebius, whom the spirit mentioned. The spirit states what was undoubtedly the fact when he says the word Christian was known in A. D. 240, but that it was of little account. He is equally correct in saying that it was not until Pamphilus's time that Christianity took shape. Pamphilus was executed, after two years' imprisonment, by order of Diocletian in 309. This suggestion of the spirit is most important, as showing that what has been called Christianity had no existence for the first three hundred years of the Christian era.

Treating of Pamphilus and his labors, Smith's Greek and Roman Biography says:

"The life of Pamphilus seems to have been entirely devoted to the cause of biblical literature, and of a free theology, but more especially the former; he was an ardent follower and admirer of Origen; Jerome tells us that he was always ready to show his friendship for studious men, and to supply their wants; and that he multiplied copies of the Holy Scriptures to such an extent that he was able not only to lend, but to give them away. He formed at Caesarea a most valuable public library, chiefly of ecclesiastical authors, a catalogue of which was contained in the lost work of Eusebius on the life of Pamphilus. Not only did the writings of Origen occupy an important place in this library, but the greater part of them were transcribed by Pamphilus with his own hand, as we learn from Jerome, who used these very copies. Perhaps the most valuable of the contents of this library were the Tetrapla and Hexapla of Origen, from which Pamphilus, in conjunction with Eusebius, formed a new recension of the Septuagint, numerous copies of which were put in circulation. Among the other treasures of this library was a copy of the so-called Hebrew text of the Gospel of St. Matthew as used by the Nazarenes. There is still extant one MS., if not two, which some suppose to have been transcribed by Pamphilus for his library."

It will therefore be seen that it was not until Pamphilus's time that the Gospel According to St. Matthew was obtained and published; and not then as a Christian book, having any relation to Jesus Christ, but as a book relating to the Indian Krishna, as we shall show when we come to comment upon the communication of the Roman emperor Galerius now in hand. Pamphilus prepared the way for the subsequent work of that Christian cheat and fraud Eusebius of Caesarea. We have thus at great length set forth what appears to us the vast import of the communication of Dion Cassius, the renowned Roman historian, and friend of the two Severuses.

We claim that until the Christian world show that their oft repeated invocation Amen is not the identical Aum Mani of the Buddhists, it is folly for them to pretend that the Christian Scriptures are anything else than plagiarisms or paraphrases of the Buddhist scriptures. By adhering to that mystic formula of the Buddhists, without any sense or meaning in the connection in which they place it, they have betrayed beyond concealment the heathen nature and origin of their much vaunted holy scriptures. We defy them to shake this unavoidable conclusion.

The Proposed State Liberal Conventions.

We have some response to the suggested series of Liberal conventions for the coming season. These conventions ought to be, indeed must be held. They will do an immense amount of good. It is not enough to publish newspapers, print books and circulate tracts. We must disseminate our principles by word of mouth as well as by pen of hand. We must assemble the people together to hear the living voices of our best speakers. There is nothing like this for stirring up souls, warming cold hearts, rousing the indifferents, enlisting new recruits to our organization. Every Liberal convention I ever attended has richly repaid all its cost. There is nothing like it to enable timid Liberals to free their minds, speak out their sentiments, and throw off the shackles which have been slowly and stealthily imposed on their mental liberty.

One of the commonest refrains that ran through the letters received at this office, is that the writer, or such and such friends and neighbors of the writer, would help organize, would take Liberal papers, would do something for Liberalism, if they only dared to come out and speak what they think. This shows an astounding state of things. It shows that this free republic is full of intellectual slaves. It shows that hundreds of thousands of thoughtful minds, bright, keen intellects, born free and equal with the rest of their fellows, do, nevertheless, submit to snubs, consent to take orders from a specially favored class, confess themselves sinners, look up to their tyrants as saviors, and sing small whenever they do dare to air a sample specimen of their own thought. To free such souls from their oppressive environment, there is nothing like bringing them into the presence of orators who are free, and who do dare to speak out, ringing and clear, their deepest, best thoughts. Then the newspapers report, the people read, everybody talks, the timid ones see that nobody is hurt, and soon begin to protrude one little peep out of their own shell, and then another, till by and by there is no more shell. So freedom grows and public spirit becomes catching.

Let us have the conventions then. They bring our Liberal speakers before the public, and make them personally acquainted. They furnish avenues to sell Liberal books, circulate tracts, take subscriptions to the Liberal papers. They are, in fact, Liberal fairs, social and intellectual bazaars, free thought market days, where the best Liberal works and wares are kept on sale. Liberalism has arrived at that stage in this country when it should avail itself of every avenue of communication for the circulation of free thought. Yield the monopoly of stump, pulpit or rostrum to nobody. When the theologians sap and mine, we should burrow lower, strike a profounder lead, sink deeper shafts. We should do everything—neglect nothing. Our "Lord's anointed" are losing faith in the ointment. It doesn't heal any more. They are clamoring for a "New Theology." Their own journals are full of it. They are now on a leisurely, orderly retreat from the old untenable dogmas. Let us organize a line of aggressive attacks and hurry them up.

Now for the practical details. In New York, Illinois, Kansas, and Iowa, where there are State Leagues, it will not be difficult to organize State conventions. We leave those further West to Mr. Walker and Mr. Follet. In Pennsylvania, Iowa, Indiana, and Michigan, there are no State organizations, and nobody feels authorized to start the movement. What is everybody's business is nobody's, and nothing will be done. It seems proper, then, for the National League to initiate proceedings. To that end the Secretary will take a trip through these States, meeting Liberals, conferring as to the best convening places, make appointments, and arrange for expenses. He will be at Philadelphia (223 North 12th St.), June 16th and 17th; Harrisburg, 18th; Altoona, 19; and Pittsburg 93 Fifth Ave.), 20th and 21st. In Ohio he will reach Salem on the 22d; Alliance on the 24; Cleveland; the 25th; and Toledo, the 26th. In Michigan he will be at Detroit on the 27th; Jackson, the 28th; Dowagiac, the 29th. Here he will take a good rest with our first class Liberal friends, Amos and Abbe Knapp, and go on to Kalamazoo, July 2d, and to Burr Oak, the 3d. On his return he may visit Indianapolis and other places in Indiana.

He will arrive at these places as nearly as possible on the morning of the days named, stopping at one of the well known hotels, so as to be easily found, and he hopes the Liberals in these places and from the region around will take some pains to call upon him for the purpose of advice, suggestion, consolation, and help in the proposed convention work. He will be glad to meet them.

Mr. E. C. Walker, in a late Man, suggested that there should be three series of these State convention, all converging towards Milwaukee and closing there, with the seventh annual congress of the National Liberal League. And he promises that there shall be speakers enough to supply the three. But it is questionable whether two would not be better. Two would more compactly fill up the time, and give the most States a chance to hear some of the best known speakers. On the plan of the three series the following would be about the schedule time:

N. Y.	(5 days)	Mo. and Kan.	(3 days)	closing Sun., Sept. 2
Pa.		Ill.		Thurs. " 6
Ohio		Iowa		Sun. " 9
Mich.		Ind.		Thurs. " 16
Wis. League Congress				Thurs. " 20
				Sun. " 23

One advantage of this programme is, that it would bring Sunday as one of the convention days, and that the closing day, in nearly all the conventions. The disadvantage is, that some of our best speakers who are men in professional pursuits, and who can hardly get away anyhow for such a long trip, would have to lie over three or four days unoccupied. If there were an assured demand for their lectures in intervening and neighboring towns, this might not be an objection. But on the whole, the two series plan seems to us, here and now, the safest, and combining the most advantages, as follows:

N. Y.	(5 days)	Mo. and Kan.	(3 days)	closing Sunday, Sept. 2
Pa.		Ill.		Thurs. " 6
Ohio		Iowa		Sun. " 9
Ind.		Mich.		Thurs. " 13
Ill.		Iowa		Sun. " 16
Mich.		Mich.		Thurs. " 20
Wis. (League Congress)				Sunday " 23

Now, Liberals and Leaguers, the preliminary programme is before you. What do you say? Let me hear from you at this office, and while I am on the wing.

to speak their words, and give evidences of their personality.

Such was the answer to the question given through Mrs. Watson, and it may have met with the wants of the particular inquirer; but there are many other reasons why Spiritualism can never be made the useful vehicle for carrying the load of selfishness which centuries of perverted human efforts have produced to such a cumbrous extent, as it now prevails, in every department of business, political and social life. For centuries mankind have been taught from the cradle to the grave that the great duty of their lives was to look after their individual interests and welfare, and in order to do this, to delegate to some one else the province of inquiring and deciding what their individual interests and welfare required here and hereafter. The natural result of this irrational policy has been to divide society into two classes of persons—those mentally, morally and socially enslaved, and those who in their presumptuous ignorance assume to do the thinking and judging for their enslaved dupes.

When Spiritualism became a recognized fact, many of those who had so long groaned under the impositions of those upon whom they had leaned for guidance and direction, saw a hope, at least, that some relief from their intolerable dependence upon the blind leaders of their blind steps, was to be found in the spirit heralds of the dawn of a true Spiritual era. Cutting loose from their old moorings, they floated away to find a more satisfactory anchorage in the haven of spirit communion. They did not take into consideration that they were drifting upon the accumulated rubbish of their past experiences, and looked for the spirit messengers to take charge of their worthless cargo and pilot it to a remunerative mart. What has been the consequence—disgust and disappointment, if not despair. We think we can almost hear the question asked: If this be the outcome of Modern Spiritualism, of what avail is it to any mortal? Under the circumstances, that question is a natural one, and it is mete and proper that it should be answered. We will briefly attempt to answer it, in part. To answer it fully would require a volume; and more time than in our terrible press of business we could devote to it. Why the disappointment referred to? We answer, because of the irrational and mistaken ends and aims of those who seek in Spiritualism a means of perpetuating the perversions and errors which have been the natural result of individual exaltation on the one hand and debasement on the other—in other words the worship of self instead of seeking the common good and happiness of all. We are all familiar with the story of the backsliding of the Jews, in the brief absence of their alleged deliverer, Moses, when under the inspiring influence of the remembrance of the flesh pots of Egypt, they set up the Golden Calf and prostrated themselves before it in the dust. The story, whether true or not, but parallels a great deal too much that has been saddled on Spiritualism by those who, by long inherited habit, have become the slavish devotees, if not of the golden calf, at least of the golden coin. Old and young, great and small, men and women, and even prattling babes, worship at its shrine with a devotion not less self-immolating and insensate than that displayed by the bigoted fakirs of that land of superstition and stagnation the home of Brahminism. These people, not knowing what they do, are seeking to drag down their deliverer, Spiritualism, and make it serve them to acquire power, honor, wealth and idleness. They will not see that to aspire to the attainment of those ends, is but to trammel, if not to undo, the human soul, and leave it stranded upon the breakers and shoals of a misspent life. Spirits who come to commune with them, to enlighten and instruct them, through mediums who are sensitive to every psychological influence that comes near them, are beset with questions, thoughts, desires and purposes that destroy all chance of profitable impartation, and the result is ever unsatisfactory and almost useless.

For more than sixteen centuries it has been preached that the greatest calamity that could befall any one was to become rich, as it ever resulted in the eternal damnation of the soul; and yet what have we seen, even on the part of those who believed that that preaching was but proclaiming the mandate of the God or God of the Universe? We have seen one eternal scramble among them to out rival each other in the attainment of that very thing that they profess to believe will be their eternal ruin.

Spirits return by hundreds of thousands who have followed those false lights of human effort power, place, wealth and luxury, and without an exception testify to the fallaciousness of all such efforts to advance the human soul in its career of eternal life—indeed, they, without exception, testify to the evil effects of mortal efforts, thus governed and directed, upon the welfare and happiness of the disembodied spirit; but with what result? Attend the interviews between mortals and spirits through mediums, and listen to the questions and answers which usually take place, and it will be found that selfishness in one form or another, is the rule, both on the part of spirits and mortals. Indeed public seances are monopolized by those whose interest begins and ends with themselves or their relatives and friends. This is all wrong.

It helps neither the mortal nor the spirit attendants of such seances, but if anything intensifies the prevailing perversions and errors of both sides of life. The first lesson to be learned in spirit, we are told, is to free the soul from the corroding afflictions of selfishness, in order that it may take its first step upon the path of eternal progress. Either that is true or Spiritualism is false; for this is the one great ever-repeated lesson taught by returning spirits. If it is expected that Spiritualism can be made to serve the grovelling aims, purposes and ambitions of mortals; then must disappointment come, or truth is not truth.

Where are those men and women, as spirits, who enjoyed power, fame, ease and luxury, when in their earthly forms, and who in their mistaken estimate of what constituted the true and enduring basis of human happiness, looked with haughty scorn, contempt and pity upon their less favored fellow beings? Are they not the beggars of the spirit life, dependent for relief upon those whom they once despised? Certainly this is the case, if spirit testimony has any value.

We do not underestimate the importance of provident foresight, frugality, prudence, and perseverance in the pursuit of business ends, but let these be ever influenced by the desire that the result may be for the general good of society: No endowments of benefactions which are intended to glorify the individual in the sight of selfish mortals, can relieve the violator of a natural law—a law that requires civilized men and women to seek for individual happiness in the good of all—from the awful consequences of disregarding it.

When those who profess to believe in the truth of the teachings of wise, beneficent, and loving spirits, shall manifest a willingness to discard the arbitrary reign of selfishness and isolation, and inaugurate in its stead the reign of benevolence and universal brotherhood, Spiritualism will have attained the accomplishment of its initial purpose, and its march of eternal progression will have begun.

In what we have said, we have preferred to treat the subject, for the present in a general way; but as occasion may serve to illustrate the crying error of the time, we will adopt the concrete method of treatment, and illustrate the general points made, by the application of special facts. But we must leave the matter for the present.

Mr. A. W. S. Rothermel a Reliable Medium.

BY DR. G. BLOEDE.

I had recently the pleasure of assisting at one of the sittings given by Mr. Rothermel, at the residence of Mrs. Ruggles, of Brooklyn, and I consider it a tribute due to truth (of course as I understand it, to report in your paper what I witnessed on that occasion), as Mr. Rothermel has been on the proscriptive list of the party of rigorous test conditions. It will appear from this report, what reasons I have to pronounce Mr. Rothermel a reliable medium for physical as well as higher manifestations.

I will not occupy your room with a lengthy description of the externals and paraphernalia of this seance. They are well known. They were the construction, before our eyes, of a very simple cabinet consisting of some black drapery only, in a very small corner of the parlor—the binding down of the medium's legs to a chair, and the fixing of his hands to his knees by sewing the sleeves of his shirt to the bandage around his knees, absolutely impeding any motion of hands or feet without breaking the ligature—as well as the constant keeping exposed the head of the medium to the eyes of the audience—satisfied me that the suspicion of any fraud by the action either of the medium or a confederate was excluded.

The cabinet which was just large enough to hold a small side-table with the musical apparatus, enclosed the door from the hall, but this was partly nailed over with black oilcloth, and even its opening wide enough to let a kitten pass would not have escaped the notice of the audience.

Under these conditions the rattling of the instruments, the constant appearance of hands above and beside the head of the medium, the rapid taking in and throwing out of objects of all kinds, from a siken handkerchief or a small sheet of paper to the ponderous tambourine and other instruments, were to my unprejudiced mind satisfactory proofs of the physical power of the invisibles present. More astounding, however, and more convincing were the evidences they gave of their conscious personality and identity, as well as of their higher spiritual attainments, their artistic skill, and their love and benevolence toward their friends in the audience.

I myself received the most convincing proof of the real presence of a departed friend of mine, and of her desire to impress me with the certainty of this fact. This was the first proof of this kind given that evening. I was requested by the invisibles to hand in, first my handkerchief (a dark silk one), then my eyeglasses, and at last one of my cards. A while after, these objects had rapidly disappeared behind the curtain—not without my half-earnest, half-joking petition not to break the spectacles—a bundle was hurled back at my feet, which proved to be my handkerchief, containing, carefully wrapped up in the middle and secured by several knots, the eyeglasses, and at one end my card, fastened to it by passing one corner of the handkerchief through a roughly made hole in the card, and by several knots outside. But the pith of this physical manifestation was its spiritual part. On the back of the card I found, written with the now frequently used blue-ink pencil, the following words: "Ich lebe doch, Anna." (I am living though, Anna). The author of this direct spirit writing I could not fail to recognize at once. It came from a young friend of mine, Anna K., the wife of a physician of this city, who died in May, 1881. She was a German lady of uncommon intellectual gifts, a highly nervous temperament and most active mind, interested in everything worth knowing, but thoroughly imbued with the materialistic teachings of the age, and having strong doubts in regard to a life hereafter. She had, of course, been an opponent of Spiritualism, but very candid and eager for truth, and had become, through my agency, greatly interested in its facts. I had lent her books. Sometime before her passing off, we had frequent conversations on this subject, and I had once accompanied her to a seance with Dr. Slade. Her premature death, alone, had prevented her from becoming a convert to our blissful philosophy; and now her spirit availed itself of the first opportunity to make me sure that in her new condition she had realized the truths her skeptical mind had refused to accept while in the flesh.

Short as was her message, it could not have been any more striking and significant, to acquaint me of her present enlightened state. "I am living though!" that is, notwithstanding my doubts and objections to what you tried to persuade me of in our conversations.

I may be allowed to mention yet a trifling fact in regard to this card from a spirit hand, which, however, may amuse others as it did me. The hole made in my card, in order to draw a corner of the handkerchief through it, (apparently for no other purpose than to secure it,) was, as its rough edges betrayed, made by piercing the card-board with the finger, and this finger had left distinct traces on the paper, of its being tainted with the blue ink—quite in the fashion of some ladies—but proving at the same time—at least to my understanding—that these spirit writings behind the curtain are really done by materialized human fingers.

The playing of the "cithern" which we heard repeatedly during this remarkable seance as in the cabinet, was, notwithstanding the rough handling of the instruments by the powers behind the curtain, really delightful. Not one false note to be discovered, and the execution, particularly of the pianos and pianissimos, bearing testimony, as well to the feeling as to the high artistic skill of the player.

I may also mention, that one of the usual controls of the medium, called Emma, addressed me, particularly, in a short but perfectly faultless and elegant German conversation, during which she said with some pride: "Ja ich bin ein Deutsche madchen." (Yes I am a German girl).

In another control of Mr. Rothermel, while he was entranced—a new one as I was told, a gentleman with a sonorous voice and a somewhat solemn tone, I had reason to suspect the spirit of Epes Sargent, with whom, without ever having made his personal acquaintance, I had frequently corresponded. He refused to give his name, but said, that if he had the free use of his hands, he would give a "symbol," by which his friends would be able to recognize him. He would hold his one hand to the side of his head, and put the other to his heart. It is known that Mr. Sargent suffered severely from a neuralgic pain over one of his eyes, and was in the habit of keeping his hand at the suffering spot. Soon after his passing away, he manifested himself to me several times through another medium of this city, and made that neuralgic pain on one side of his head a signal of his appearance, by making the medium feel a similar pain; an incident which at that time I reported in the Religio-Philosophical Journal, of Chicago. Mr. Sargent's personal friends may be able to say more about the "Symbol," of which he spoke through Mr. Rothermel.

Quite a number of loose sheets of paper were offered to the eagerly grasping hands from the cabinet, and returned covered with messages to friends, and I believe to all the members of the circle.

On the whole, I count the testimonies I received on that evening through the mediation of Mr. Rothermel, of the truths and beauties of spirit intercourse, among the most delightful and satisfactory, that thus far have fallen to my lot, and I thought it my duty to attest this fact, in favor of a medium, who, like many others, has been the object of unjust persecution.

Brooklyn, February, 1883.

By one of those provoking concatenation of circumstances that too frequently occurs to prevent us from doing what we would so gladly do, Dr. Bloede's most interesting article was mislaid until a short time since. Glad as we would have been to have published it when it was sent to us, we did not get to read it until a few days since, when we saw how great had been our misfortune in not having published it months ago. It is not yet too late, for its being greatly useful to the cause, and we hope to Mr. Rothermel, as well. From personal experience we can fully appreciate the correctness of Dr. Bloede's observations, and especially in relation to that marvellous music, as sweet as ever, human ear listened to. The incident of the coming of Dr. Bloede's lady friend, should be enough to convince the most stubborn Materialist that the soul of man is immortal, and its individuality as well. Would that all mortals could or would witness these proofs palpable of the after life; surely they would then know how futile and fleeting are their misdirected strivings here to outshine or outwit their fellow beings. Knowledge of Spiritualism is the one thing needful to make the whole human family equal heirs of the treasures of endless life and happiness. To this all humanity must attain, or the failure of perfect justice must lie at the door of mother nature.—Ed.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

SURE-ENOUGH FAIRIES.

[From Golden Days.]

And so you would know "are there, sure enough, fairies,"
And giants and genii, and where do they dwell?
Sweet Black-eyes and Blue-eyes and Goldy and Dimple,
Ah, now you shall hear, for a secret I'll tell!

There certainly are, dearies, wee little fairies,
As light as the wind that blows out of the west,
As bright as the sunshine, as fair as the dawning,
Perseverance and Patience, these two are the best.

And giants and genii—yes, there are, surely—
Awaiting the mystical sign to appear,
To conquer the Spirits, malicious and hateful,
That rise in the pathway of each little dear.

A giant is Effort, majestic and mighty,
And Virtue, a genii so noble and true,
Who'll vanquish the Evils, enchantresses fateful,
That Passions, bad sorcerers, they will subdue.

They dwell, do these genii, giants and fairies,
In Island of Happiness, Fairyland fair,
And unto the worthy the way they'll discover
To Garden of Paradise, radiant and rare!

The Three Midgets.

About four o'clock, one summer day, you might have seen Stella Bainbridge peeping into all the flowers in the field, with an eager, expectant look on her little face.

She was just seven years old, and had been hunting all the afternoon for the home of the fairies,
but had met with no success.

Presently, tired out with her fruitless search, she sat down on the grass to rest. How it came about she did not know; but when she looked up,
she saw three of the queerest little people before her, who seemed to be watching her with great interest.

They were only about a foot high, and had the drollest, little faces, with great, staring eyes, and large ears, while a crop of stiff, unmanageable hair stood up on their heads. But the strangest thing of all was the color of this hair, it being a bright green.

After they had gazed at her for some time without speaking, one of them said:

"We are the three Midgets, of which you have doubtless read. My name is Midge, and my sister's names are Mudge and Madge. Once a year we are each allowed to gratify a wish of some one, and we have chosen you to be that one. So now tell me the first thing you wish for."

Stella had listened attentively to all Midge had said, and when she was through she clapped her hands and cried:

"Oh, please take me to the fairies' home!"

Immediately, Midge plucked a green leaf growing in the fields, and handed it to Stella.

As soon as she grasped the leaf, she felt herself rising in the air. Higher and higher she rose, until the earth was only a speck; yet upward she flew, when suddenly Midge said:

"We have arrived."

And instantly, Stella found herself in a world where the trees and grass were gold, and where the windows in the palaces were made out of precious stones.

Fairies flew hither and thither, and poor little Stella felt quite lost.

Just then Midge turned to her, and saying, "I have gratified your wish," vanished.

But in her place stood Mudge, who asked:

"Tell me what you desire next, and you shall have it."

Stella thought a moment, and then said:

"Show me the children that are brought here
for a time for not minding their parents."

Mudge took her by the hand, and led her through a long gallery. This terminated in a solid iron door; but, at a touch from the Midget, it slowly swung open, disclosing a large room.

Inside of this room were children from the ages
of three to ten years.

They were all busy working, with sad, tearful, faces, and, as Stella came in, a little girl, about her own age, asked her what she had done to be brought here, and what kind of work she was going to be put to.

To these inquiries Stella made no answer, but only gazed in surprise at the variety of occupations going on.

In one corner there was a little boy, at work
at his lessons, in another, a little girl was scrubbing the floor, while still another little girl seemed to be constantly doing errands for the other children.

Mudge told Stella that the children were all at work at the thing that they had refused to do for their parents.

"And will they always stay here?" asked Stella,
while two pitying tears stood in her eyes.

"Oh, no!" said Mudge; "they will only stay here until they see how wrong they were, and when they are ready to ask for forgiveness, they will be returned to their homes."

Then, turning to Stella, she said, "My mission is now fulfilled," and vanished, leaving Mudge in her place, who offered her services to Stella in the same words used by Midge.

Stella thought a moment again, and then replied:

"I would like to see the magic mirror."

"In order to do that," said Mudge, "you must descend to earth."

And instantly Stella again found herself journeying earthwards.

As soon as she reached the earth, Mudge took her to a large palace, in which was the magic mirror, that had the property of showing people their character instead of their figure.

Stella walked in, and beheld a long line of people waiting for their turn to catch a glimpse of themselves in the far-famed glass.

When Stella ventured to look in, she saw a childish face, upon which the stamp of evil had not yet left its fatal mark; but she saw with fear that the bad in her character was struggling to obtain the mastery over the good, and she thought to herself that in the future she would be more obedient to her mother, and more thoughtful of her comfort and wishes.

While she was thus thinking Mudge bid her good-by, and vanished, and Stella found herself once more in the fields near her home. She looked around for her palace, but it had disappeared,

together with all traces of the three Midgets.

She quickly ran home; but did not mention her strange journey, but several times during the next month her mother remarked how much better she did her work, and what an obedient little girl she was.

Stella did not say anything, but in her heart thanked the Midgets for allowing her to see her true character in the magic glass.—Golden Days.

Dr. B. F. BROWN, of Lewiston, Maine, clairvoyant, test, trance and healing medium, has taken rooms at 454 North 5th St., Philadelphia, Pa., where he will receive patients to treat. Give clairvoyant test sittings and hold developing circles. Patients visited at their residences if required. Also treated by mail. Accommodations for patients visiting from out of the city. One of his principal phases is the treatment for obsession, his guide (Dr. J. Bonney) having had remarkable success, through him, in the treatment of such cases. We advise all who are afflicted in such a manner, to call on or consult with him. Testimonials can be furnished of the many remarkable cures which have been effected through his organism. Office hours 10 A. M. to 8 P. M.

Dr. J. Bonney and Spirit Class,

Through the instrumentality of B. F. Brown, at
No. 454 N. 5th street, Philadelphia, Pa., are performing remarkable cures at home and abroad.

For the purpose of informing the public, Dr. B.
F. Brown reproduces, in the following record, some of the most important cures which are being made through his co-operative instrumentality,
from day to day, by the restoration of the lost spiritual equilibrium throughout the nervous system, the vitalized and devitalized action of which causes obstructions that superinduce the painful manifestations of various acute and chronic disturbances, the removal of which are very difficult under the regular systems of medication; but which generally yield to the magnopathic treatment as practiced by Dr. Brown. Where cures are not effected, the patient is never injured, but always benefited.

CASE No. 1—CONSUMPTION.

On the morning the patient was received, his attending physician had informed him his case was hopeless. He required night watchers, and was unable to sit up, except at intervals. A perfect cure in three weeks.

JAMES DAVIS,
East Auburn, Maine.

No. 2—CONSUMPTION.

This is to certify that about six years ago I contracted a severe cold that settled in my lungs and left me with a bad cough, for which I could get no remedy from any of the best physicians in the city, and supposed I must die with consumption of the lungs; but good fortune brought me in contact with Dr. B. F. Brown, who, with only one of his treatments and some magnetized paper, has made me a well man. I cheerfully give this for the benefit of others in the same condition.

JOHN S. STINCHFIELD,
Lewiston, Maine.

No. 3.

I commenced to take treatment of Dr. Brown.
Took them once a week for three weeks, for weakness of the bowels and costiveness and restlessness, with which I have been troubled for over forty years. I am now sixty-one years of age. I have rested well every night since the first treatment. I had some fluttering about the heart, which has left me, and am now enjoying good health. Thanks be to Dr. Bonney, the controlling spirit, and his band of spirits, and Dr. Brown, the medium, through whom I have received all this benefit.

MICAH S. GIBBS,
6 Knight's Court, Philada., Pa.

No. 4.

This is to certify that I suffered several years from weakness of the urinary organs, but after a few treatments from Dr. B. F. Brown, I am now perfectly restored.

RICHARD CULVER,
250 Crown St., Phila., Pa.

No. 5.

I have been a sufferer for the past sixteen years and although employing first-class physicians, I never was able to ascertain my difficulties. I had been told by them that it was bronchial trouble and loss of vitality. I was prevailed upon to call on Dr. B. F. Brown, and his controlling spirit, Dr. J. Bonney, informed me it was obsession. I am happy to say that I am now improving wonderfully, and feel like a new man.

J. S. W. JOHNSON,
418 N. Third St., Camden, N. J.

No. 6.

I had suffered for two years with what my attending physician pronounced lung and kidney affection. On calling on Dr. B. F. Brown, I was informed that I was a victim to what he termed, spirit obsession. After receiving a few treatments I am enjoying good health.

A. J. BENTLEY,
210 N. Tenth St., Phila., Pa.

The above are only samples of the many testimonials that are being received daily from the many patients, who have also worn the "pad" in connection with the treatments, and I would here advise the wearing of the pad by all suffering physically, mentally or spiritually, as the testimonies already received of its efficacy are sufficient to convince the most skeptical. Patients treated by mail.

Call on; or address, Dr. B. F. Brown, 454 N.
Fifth Street, Philadelphia.

Love and Justice.

Love and Justice, like all other principles, are attributes of the Supreme Being, and although they are supposed to be conflicting in their tendencies, they are only apparently so, when considered according to the idea of the total depravity of man, for according to that doctrine, perfect Love would require the salvation of all mankind,
while Justice would demand their condemnation.

Love, however, is not a sentiment, but simply an emotion, or a function of all the senses and faculties of the brain, and is peculiar in each;
hence, we have as many kinds of love as there are senses and faculties, and as a consequence, love can give, take or steal, fight, murder, rescue or worship, etc., when acting singly, and would,
therefore, prove an uncertain quality in man,
and a changeable attribute in Deity.

Charity, philanthropy, mercy, forgiveness, and self-sacrifice, etc., result from the activity of the functions of love in the organs of benevolence, veneration, hope, and consciousness, etc.; while justice springs from firmness, or the sense of right, and results from the position of the functions of the moral faculties apart from those of an opposite nature.

Justice is blind to all selfish interests, private loves, and all threats or bribes.

Right is its law, and its expense. Justice, therefore, and not Love, should be the only principle to govern our actions.

I would like scalloped oysters," she remarked.
He answered, meaning to be funny: "I don't know how to scallop oysters." "Then bias some,"
said she.

J. W. Van Namee's Work in Bridgeport, Conn.

J. M. Roberts—Dear Sir:

Enclosed you will please find two dollars to renew my subscription to MIND AND MATTER for another year. In looking at my receipt for last year, I see that my last year's subscription run out some three weeks since, but I suppose it will do now. I was waiting for a notice from you, as you have formerly sent.

J. William Van-Namee has lately settled in our city and is creating quite an interest here in spiritual matters by holding circles at his house
on Sunday evenings; he is also having good success in curing the sick. He has had some very critical cases, some that the regular doctors had given up, and they are all doing well and will recover.

Truly yours,

MRS. S. A. LEAVENWORTH.

Bridgeport, Conn., June 17th, 1883.

An Iowa editor, being asked by a correspondent if hogs paid, had looked over his subscription list, and decided that they do not. The treasurer of one of the Boston churches has come to the same conclusion.

In a Chicago school recently the children were asked to give a sentence with the word "capillary." A little girl wrote: "I sailed across the ocean in a capillary." When asked what she meant by that she turned to Webster's Dictionary
and triumphantly pointed out this definition:
"Capillary, a fine vessel." Farther investigation showed that more than twenty scholars had made the same blunder.

The Bishop of Oxford having sent round to the church-wardens in his diocese a circular of inquiries, among which was, "Does your officiating clergyman preach the gospel, and is his conversation and carriage consistent therewith?" the warden of Wallingford replied: "He preaches the gospel, but does not keep a carriage."

"When were these eggs boiled?" asked a man of a negro lunch dealer. "Dis mawin', sah." "Well, then, they're no account. I can't eat an egg that hasn't been boiled several days." "Oh, does yer mean when da was fust boiled? Da was boiled fust las' week, an' was only biled ober dis mawin' sah."

Unanswerable.—Priest: "Pat, I understand you are going to be married again." Disconsolate widower: "Yis, your riv'ence." Priest: "But your wife, Pat, has only been dead two weeks?" D. W.: "Yis, yer riv'ence; but shure ain't she as dead now as she iver will be?"

A District Attorney, who was cross-examining a doctor on a criminal trial, exclaimed petulantly:
"A doctor should be able to give his opinions
without mistakes!" "He is well able as a lawyer!" retorted the doctor. "A doctor's mistakes are buried six feet under the ground," said the lawyer. "And a lawyer's are sometimes hung six feet above it," responded the doctor.

Enthusiastic Professor of Physics, discussing the organic and inorganic kingdoms: "Now, if I should shut my eyes—and drop my head—
so—and should not move, you would say I was a clod. But I move, I leap, I run; then what do you call me?" Voice from the rear: "A clod-hopper."

Mrs. Jones: "Oh, I've left out the Browns!
Must we invite them?" Jones: "Hang it all, it's a beastly bore, but I suppose we must!" Mrs.
Brown: "An invitation from the Joneses, love; must we accept it?" Brown: "Confound it! It's a ghastly nuisance, but I suppose we must!"

Boston, June 18th, 1883.

Editor of Mind and Matter:

DEAR SIR:—I have read your well-merited tribute to our ascended friend and medium, Mrs. C.
M. Morrison, and as one connected with her in the work for over ten years, I feel to thank you most heartily for it. There are many others in all parts of the country who will feel in like manner, I have no doubt. On the afternoon of the 11th, a number of friends gathered around the mortal remains of Mrs. Morrison, and Mr. J. William Fletcher gave an inspirational address, embodying her work on earth, and picturing her birth into the spirit. I felt called upon to state what that work had been, and then, with our farewell look, we laid the mortal remains away.
Almost immediately she manifested through another medium, and declared that the work must go on; also that the band and she have been able to so arrange it, that the work will continue on the same as before the transition. They have selected another medium and clairvoyant, through whom they can give diagnosis of disease by means of a lock of hair. They will also prescribe for, and give all directions relative to the treatment as heretofore. Terms for diagnosis will be as formerly, as will be seen by reference to advertisement, and the business will be conducted in all respects as in the past.

Letters can be sent to the old address, P. O.
Box 2519, Boston, Mass., and all correspondence will be promptly attended to.

Fraternally yours,
H. B. WILLCOX.

ALFRED JAMES, MEDIUM.

May 18th, M. S. 36.

DION CASSIUS.

(A Roman Historian.)

I lived from A. D. 200 to A. D. 240. Some will extend the time to A. D. 260; but the most prominent period of my life was between the first mentioned dates. I want to show you positively that St. Augustine and St. Irenæus set forth the following points, which I will elucidate, as a spirit, to the best of my ability, and I will rest my proof on Christian authority, so-called. They declared that there is no knowledge of the great creating power. It extends so far in the past, and is so involved in obscurity, that it is utterly impossible to analyze life as it now exists. But I would say this to you: Alexander Severus, about A. D. 235, was much importuned by Christians, (although they were in a minority at that time,) to say that the Buddhist god Gautama was arisen at that period; while they knew that he flourished at a period far remote from the time in which they made this appeal. Severus had inscribed this declaration of his personal views as far as I can remember it, now. "To all be it known that I am a worshipper of nature. I am subject to no god—no theory—no wisdom—other than such as reason dictates to me to be true." Such was the logic of Alexander Severus. Although he did me great injustice at one time, under the promptings of a slave, and drove me into exile, yet I do not blame him, for no man can control the circumstances that concentrate around him in life, by which he is more or less governed. I was with Severus, in the temple in which were erected the statues of Orpheus and Apollonius Tyanæus. At that time it was a current saying, "No one except the great gods—Orpheus and Apollonius, can give you the true rules by which to act in the mortal life. Their teachings were embodied in books something like the Psalms and Proverbs of the Old Testament. It is claimed that Severus was a Christian, and that he worshipped Jesus Christ in his private temple. He did nothing of the kind. His last additions to his gods, was owing to the drifting of the people from the northern countries of Europe into the Roman provinces, bringing with them the Hesus of the Celtic Druids. There was nothing that so added to the fame of kings and rulers in those days, as to adopt the gods of the people whose good will and favor was desired. The greatest success attended those rulers who subordinated themselves to the superstitions of their subjects. Ques. Did I understand you, correctly? You saw the interior of the private temple of Severus? Ans. I did. Ques. How was the Hesus god represented there? Ans. By the bust of a man inscribed with an inverted A, a half circle or U and the M or the mystic bond of the Gymnosophists. That was the way he was represented. Ques. Have you any idea how that Gymnosopic symbol came to be found among the Celtic Druids; or were those letters inscribed upon the image of Hesus, by Severus for any special purpose? Ans. Those letters came to the west and north of Europe from the East, by way of Africa to Marseilles, and spread from there over Gaul, Britain, Germany, and Scandinavia; and this took place according to a man named Sebius, B. C. 474. But you must not expect to find all these things corroborated, because every possible effort has been made to destroy all historical trace of them; and therefore much that must remain to you conjectural, is real. The word Christian was known in our day but it was considered of little account. It was forty years later that it took shape, that is from A. D. 280 to 290. About that time it was put in shape by a man named Pamphilus of Cesarea. All of these things I have considered it my duty to come back here and explain. But there is one who will come after me, who lived at a much later date, who will give you points as to the rise of religions in the East. He possessed infinite knowledge in his day, but he was crushed by European autocrats. That is all I will now say.

"Dion Cassius Cocceianus, the celebrated historian of Rome. He probably derived the gentile name of Cassius from one of his ancestors, who, on receiving the Roman franchise, had been adopted into the Cassian gens; for his father, Cassius Apronianus, had already borne it. He appears to have adopted the cognomen of Cocceianus from Dion Chrysostamus Cocceianus, the orator, who, according to Reimarus, was his grandfather on his mother's side. Dion Cassius Cocceianus, or as he is more commonly called Dion Cassius, was born, about A. D. 155, at Nicaea, in Bithynia. He was educated with great care, and was trained in the rhetorical schools of the time, and in the study of the classical writers of ancient Greece. After the completion of his literary studies, he appears to have accompanied his father to Cilicia, of which he had the administration, and after his father's death, about A. D. 180, he went to Rome; so that he arrived there either in the last year of the reign of M. Aurelius, or in the first of that of Commodus. He had then attained the senatorial age of twenty-five, and was raised to the rank of a Roman senator; but he did not obtain any honors under Commodus, except the aedileship and questorship, and it was not until A. D. 193, in the reign of Pertinax, that he gained the office of prætor. During the thirteen years of Commodus, Dion Cassius remained at Rome, and devoted his time partly to pleading in the courts of justice, and thus assisting his friends, and partly in collecting materials for a history of Commodus, of whose actions he was a constant eye witness. After the fall of this emperor, Dion, with the other senators, voted for the elevation of Pertinax, A. D. 193, who was his friend, and who immediately promoted him to the prætorship, which however, he did not enter upon till the year following, the first of the reign of Septimius Severus. During the short reign of Pertinax, Dion Cassius enjoyed the emperor's friendship, and conducted himself on all occasions as an upright and virtuous man. The accession of Septimius Severus raised great hopes in Dion of being further promoted; but these hopes were not realized, notwithstanding the favor which Severus showed him in the beginning of his reign. Soon after the accession of Severus, Dion wrote a work on the dreams and prodigies which had announced the elevation of this emperor, and which he presented to Severus, who thanked him for it in a long epistle. The night after he had received this epistle, Dion was called upon in a dream to write the history of his own time, which induced him to work out the materials he had already collected for a history of Commodus. A similar dream or vision afterwards led him to write the history of Septimius Severus and Caracalla. When the history of Commodus was completed, Dion read it to the emperor, who received it with so much approbation, that Dion was encouraged to write a history of Rome from the earliest times, and to insert in it what he had already written about the reign of Commodus. The next ten years therefore were spent in making the preparatory studies and collecting materials, and twelve years more, during the greater part of which he lived in quiet retirement at Capua, were employed in composing the work. It was his intention to carry the history as far down as possible, and to add an account of the reigns of the emperors succeeding Severus, so far as he might witness them. Reimarus conceives that Dion began collecting his materials in A. D. 201, and that after the death of Severus, in A. D. 211, he commenced the composition of his work, which would thus have been completed in A. D. 222.

"The reason why Severus did not promote Dion, is probably owing to the emperor's change of opinion respecting Commodus; for, during the latter part of his reign, he admired Commodus as much as before he had detested him; and what Dion had written about him could not be satisfactory to an admirer of the tyrant. Dion thus remained in Italy for many years, without any new dignity being conferred upon him. In the reign of Caracalla it became customary for a select number of senators to accompany the emperor in his expeditions and travels, and Dion was one of them. He bitterly complains of having been compelled, in consequence, to spend immense sums of money, and not only to witness the tyrant's disgraceful conduct, but to some extent to be an accomplice in it. In the company of the emperor, Dion thus visited Nicomedia; but he does not appear to have gone any further; for of the subsequent events in Asia and Egypt, he does not speak as an eye-witness, but only appeals to reports. Macrinus, however, appears to have again called him to Asia, and to have entrusted to him the administration of the free cities of Pergamum and Smyrna, which had shortly before revolted. Dion went to this post about A. D. 218, and seems to have remained there for about three years, on account of the various points which had to be settled. At the expiration of his office, however, he did not return to Rome, but went to Nicaea in Bithynia. On his arrival there he was taken ill, but notwithstanding was raised, during his absence, to the consulship, either A. D. 219 or 220. After this he obtained the proconsulship of Africa, which, however, cannot have been earlier than A. D. 224. After his return to Italy, he was sent, in A. D. 226, as legate to Dalmatia, and the year after to Pannonia. In the latter province he restored strict discipline among the troops; and on his return to Rome, the prætorians began to fear lest he should use his influence for the purpose of interfering with their conduct likewise, and in order to prevent this, they demanded of the emperor, Alexander Severus, to put him to death. But the emperor not only disregarded their clamor, but raised Dion, A. D. 229, to his second consulship, in which Alexander himself was his colleague. Alexander also conferred other distinctions upon him, and undertook out of his own purse to defray the expenses which the dignity of consul demanded of Dion. However, as Dion could not feel safe at Rome under these circumstances, the emperor requested him to take up his residence somewhere in Italy at a distance from the city. After the expiration of his consulship, Dion returned to Rome, and spent some time with the emperor in Campania; but he appears at length to have become tired of the precarious life at Rome; and under the pretext of suffering from a bad foot, he asked and obtained permission to return to his native place, and there to spend the remainder of his life in quiet retirement. At Nicaea, Dion completed his history, and there he also died. The time of his death is unknown. Respecting his family nothing is recorded, except in two passages he just mentions his wife and children; and it may be that the Dion Cassius whom we find consul in A. D. 291, was a grandson of our historian. The account we have here given of the life of Dion Cassius, is derived from scattered passages of his own work, and from a short article in Suidas.

"The following list contains the works which are attributed by the ancients to Dion Cassius:—1. The work on dreams and prodigies which we mentioned above, is lost. Dion had probably written it only to please the emperor, and he seems afterwards to have regretted its publication; for, although he is otherwise rather credulous and fond of relating prodigies, yet in his history he mentions those which have reference to Septimius Severus only very cursorily. 2. The history of the reign of Commodus, which he afterwards incorporated in his history of Rome. 3. On the reign of the emperor Trajan. This work is only mentioned by Suidas; and, if it really was a distinct work, the substance of it was incorporated in his Roman history. 4. A history of Persia is likewise mentioned only by Suidas, but is probably a mistake, and Suidas confounds Dion with Deinon, who is known to have written a work on Persia. 5. Edodia, that is, Itineraries, is mentioned by Suidas; but it is very doubtful whether it was a work of Dion Cassius, or of his grandfather, Dion Chrysostomus, whose extensive travels may have led him to write such a work. 6. A life of Arrian is altogether unknown, except through the mention of Suidas. 7. Getica is attributed to Dion Cassius by Suidas, Jornandes, and Treuphous; while from Philostratus we might infer that Chrysostomus was its author. 8. The history of Rome, the great work of Dion Cassius consisted of eighty books, and was further divided into decades, like Livy's Roman history. It embraced the whole history of Rome from the earliest times, that is, from the landing of Æneas in Italy down to A. D. 229, the year in which Dion quitted Italy and returned to Nicaea. The excerpts which A. Mai has published from a Vatican MS., and which belonged to a work containing the history from the time of Valerian down to the time of Constantine the Great, bear indeed the name of Dion Cassius, but are in all probability taken from the work of a Christian writer, who continued the work of Dion, and A.

Mai is inclined to think that the continuation was the work of Joannes Antiochenus. Dion Cassius himself intimates that he treated the history of republican Rome briefly, but that he endeavored to give a more minute and detailed account of those events of which, he had himself been an eye-witness. Unfortunately, only a comparatively small portion of this work has come down to us entire. Of the first thirty-four books we possess only fragments, and the Excerpta, which Ursinus, Valesius, and A. Mai have successively published from the collections made by the command of Constantine Porphyrogenitus. A few more fragments have recently been published by F. Haase, who found them in a Paris MS. It must further be observed, that Zonarus, in his Annals, chiefly, though not solely, followed the authority of Dion Cassius, so that, to some extent, his Annals may be regarded as an epitome of Dion Cassius. There is a considerable fragment commonly considered as a part of the 35th book, which however probably belongs to the 36th, and from this book onward to the 54th the work is extant complete, and embraces the history from the wars of Lucullus and Cn. Pompey against Mithridates, down to the death of Agrippa, B. C. 10. The subsequent books from 55 to 60, have not come to us in their original form, for there are several passages quoted from these books which are not now to be found in them; and we therefore have in all probability only an abridgement made by some one either before or after the time of Xiphilinus. From book 61 to 80 we have only the abridgement made by Xiphilinus in the eleventh century, and some other epitomes which were probably made by the same person who epitomized the portion from the 50th to the 60th book. A considerable fragment of the 71st book was found by A. Mai in a Latin translation in the Vatican library, of which a German version was published anonymously; but its genuineness is not quite established. Another important fragment of the 75th book was discovered by J. Morelli, and printed first at Bassano, and afterwards at Paris, in folio, uniform with Reimarus's edition of Dion Cassius.

"Notwithstanding these great losses, we possess a sufficient portion of the work to enable us to form a correct estimate of its value. It contains an abundance of material for the later history of the republic and for a considerable period of the empire, for some portions of which it is our only source of information. In the first of the fragments published by A. Mai, Dion distinctly states that he had read nearly everything which had been written on the history of Rome, and that he did not, like a mere compiler, put together what he found in other writers, but that he weighed his authorities, and exercised his judgment in selecting what he thought fit for place in his work. This assertion of the author himself is perfectly justified by the nature and character of his history, for it is manifest everywhere that he had acquired a thorough knowledge of his subject, and that his notions of Roman life and Roman institutions were far more correct than those of some of his predecessors, such as Dionysius of Halicarnassus. Whenever he is led into error, it is generally owing to his not having access to authentic sources, and to his being obliged to satisfy himself with secondary ones. It must also be borne in mind, as Dion himself observes, that the history of the empire presented much more difficulties to the historian than that of the republic. In those parts in which he relates contemporary events, his works form a sort of medium between real history and mere memoirs of the emperors. His object was to give a record as complete and as accurate as possible, of all the important events; but his work is not on that account a dry chronological catalogue of events, for he endeavors, like Thucydides, Polybius, and Tacitus, to trace the events to their causes, and to make us see the motives of men's actions. In his endeavor to make us see the connections of occurrences, he sometimes even neglects the chronological order, like his great models. But with all these excellencies, Dion Cassius is the equal neither of Thucydides nor of Tacitus, though we may admit his faults are to a great extent rather those of his age than of his individual character as an historian. He had been trained in the schools of the rhetoricians, and the consequences of it are visible in his history, which is not free from a rhetorical tinge, especially in the speeches which are introduced into it. They may not be pure inventions, and may have an historical groundwork, but their form is rhetorical; though we must own that they are among the best rhetorical productions of the time. In the formation of his style he appears to have endeavored to imitate the classic writers of ancient Greece; but his language is nevertheless full of peculiarities, barbarisms, and Latinisms, probably the consequence of his long residence in Italy; and the praise which Photius bestows upon him for the clearness of his style, must be greatly modified, for it is often harsh and heavy, and Dion seems to have written as he spoke, without any attempt at eloquence or refinement."

Such is the account that has been permitted to come down to us of the life and literary labors of Dion Cassius. As a spirit he tells us that the most active period of his life extended from A. D. 200 to 240. This coincides with what is said of him by Reimarus, who says he commenced collecting materials for his great history in 201 A. D.; and it was during the reign of Alexander Severus that he retired from Rome and public service to Nicaea, where he completed his great history as the crowning act of his life. The reign of Alexander Severus ended in A. D. 235, so he must have continued to labor some years beyond that date and perhaps until 240 A. D., when he had reached the advanced age of 85 years.

He testifies that "St. Augustine and St. Irenæus declared that there is no knowledge of the great creating power of the universe; that it extends so far in the past, and is so involved in obscurity that it is utterly impossible to analyze life as it now exists." We are not sufficiently acquainted with the writings of Augustine and Irenæus to state how far this is correct, but it is very certain that those Christian fathers were very averse to metaphysical speculations; preferring to accept what was dogmatically asserted, to questioning the probability or improbability of what was thus arbitrarily set forth. It is an oft quoted saying of St. Augustin, that to believe what is known or probable has little merit in it; but to believe and rest in that which is uncertain and absurd, is most meritorious and commendable.

That Alexander Severus was importuned by those who were seeking to found the Christian religion, to aid them in their scheme, is most probable, whether in the manner stated by the spirit it is impossible to decide. That Severus was virtually a materialist, whether an avowed one or not, is in the highest degree probable. It is undoubtedly a fact that Alexander Severus held Dion Cassius in the highest esteem, and that they were intimate friends. The spirit of the latter, if any spirit could know ought upon that point, was the one of all others who would have known the personal views of his imperial friend. It would appear that Dion Cassius was not a voluntary exile from Rome, but that his going to Nicaea, was only the choice of the scene of his banishment. It is certain he left Rome on account of the dissatisfaction of the Prætorians with Alexander's partiality for him. Dion, as a spirit, exonerates him from blame, admitting the necessity of the apparent breach of friendship.

Dion tells us that he attended Severus in the imperial temple, in which were erected the statues of Orpheus and Apollonius Tyanæus. He tells us that their teachings were embodied in books something like the Psalms and Proverbs of the Old Testament. Dion says it has been claimed that Alexander Severus was a Christian, and that he worshipped Jesus Christ in his private temple. Whether this is a mistake or not we cannot say. It has been claimed that Septimius Severus had the statues of Orpheus, Apollonius and Jesus Christ, side by side, erected in his temple, and that he worshipped them as of equal sanctity and authority. This can only be true in the sense that Orpheus, Apollonius and Jesus Christ were substantially the one and the same divinity. Christianity had no public foothold in the Roman empire until fully one hundred years after the death of Alexander Severus, and was for nearly two centuries thereafter in a very undefined and unsettled condition. Dion Cassius, as a spirit, testifies positively that Alexander Severus was not a Christian. He says, however, that he, Severus, adopted the god of war, Hesus, of the Celtic Druids in order to conciliate his barbarian subjects of Northern Europe. Out of this fact, in all probability, the allegation that Severus worshipped Jesus Christ, originated. Not only does the spirit say he saw the bust of the god Hesus in the imperial temple, but he tells us that upon his statue was inscribed the Gymnosopic cabalistic characters A U M. If this part of the communication is true, it is almost certain that the Buddhist and Druidical religions had the same origin. We feel that the reader will not begrudge us the time and space necessary to show the great significance of this spirit mention of that mysterious word A U M.

Charles Hardick in his "Christ and Other Masters," in Part II, page 11, in a note says:

"The Sanscrit word (Tad) is literally That. And the same idea was in all probability expressed by the mystic monosyllable Om (aum), by which the hymns of the Vedas were uniformly prefaced. Some writers, referring the three letters (a u m) to a triad of the elements, explain a of Agni (fire), u of Varuna (water), and m of Marut (wind); but the true etymology of the word appears to be suggested by the old Persian 'avam' (-aum), meaning 'That': see Lassen, i, 775, n. 3."

Mr. Hardwick then defines 'That' as follows, in speaking of the Hindoo Vaidic conception of God:

"The doctrine of one great First-Cause was not indeed, as we shall see hereafter, absolutely banished from the bards and rishis; yet their extant hymns should satisfy the most incredulous that the idea of God as one, supreme and spiritual, never formed a prominent article in the early creeds of India. It retired far-off in the background. It seldom operated as a principle of life. It was the feeble and expiring echo of an older and purer revelation; and even when it showed its power at all, where Indra for the moment was absorbed completely by some brighter and more spiritual being, the God of whom such visions preached, was not a thinking, willing, loving Spirit, personal and self-conscious, ruling over nature as His work and as the Father of the spirits of all flesh, but rather a great That a neuter abstract, separable from the world of matter in idea, but not in essence; Spiritualized indeed, but Spiritualized, ennobled, deified by the poetic faculty of the worshipper. He was a nature-god, and not the God of nature."

It would thus appear, according to this very learned Christian scholar, for Mr. Hardwick was the Christian Advocate in the University of Cambridge, that the word aum or om was the Buddhist designation of the nature-god or great First Cause. Arthur Lillie, in his "Buddha and Early Buddhism," on pages 1 and 2, says: "In the Vedic hymns two distinct forms of religion are traceable—the religion of the prophet (Rishi) and the religion of the priest. The former religion was the earlier; and a Vedic book (Satapatha Brahmana) alludes with regret to those halcyon times when there was only one O'M, and one caste," and in a note he says: "A. U. M., monogram of the triad, originally most probably; Aditi, Varuna, Mitra. A letter is taken from each name." Under the head of Buddhism, McClintock and Strong's Cyclopædia, says: "Sacred is the mystic word Om." Under the head Lamaism, the same work says:

"Among the native sacred literature of Thibet is the historical book called Mami Kambum, containing the legendary tales of Padmapani's propagation of Buddhism in Thibet, and the origin and
