THE NEVADA, SOLAR PYRAMIDS

From time to time our civilizations have rediscovered the harmony and understanding in the Great Pyramid form. Therefore the reincarnation of this shape in modern, practical application is long overdue . . . its time has come.

The tallest structure in the planned, Nevada, solar pyramid complex is a 42 story Hotel Casino. Ascending tiers of rooms inside form a vast atrium. They will overlook the huge casino floor where gaming enthusiasts can view walls beautifully decorated with ancient Egyptian art and symbols. In the upper levels, floating decks and astonishingly beautiful hanging gardens with cascading fountains and botanical displays animate the interior panorama.

Outside, a satellite system of stores, boutiques, restaurants and a Health Spa surround the casino. Palm-lined streets leading to the pyramid complex will be in keeping with the far east theme.

The second largest pyramid south of the Hotel Casino will serve as a 25,000 seat Olympiad. The structure incorporates a full complement of sports playing areas. The facility with Las Vegas as the entertainment capital of the world lends itself well for productions involving music, drama and the arts.

A twenty-story, international trade center flanks the Casino Hotel, and Olympiad on the northwest. The nations of the world can permanently feature their most recent industrial products and traditional innovations in the Olympiad.

Five thousand years ago the sunrise of western civilization dawned on a lush strip of land along the Nile River in Egypt. The greatest architectural wonder of all, the Great Pyramid and its lesser companions surely constructed earlier than 3,000 B.C., grace the slightly elevated plateau at Giza. The Great Pyramid can well be 70,000 or more years old according to new information. This master form of incredible engineering skill symbolized universal human wisdom, aspiration, the sciences, prophecy and the stored knowledge of pre-history civilizations. It rests in all its stunning grandeur above the Nile Delta awaiting those who attain the level necessary to unlock her timeless secrets.

Guided by the great stone monument of Giza, designers of the Nevada, solar pyramids have pursued mathematical elegance and structural simplicity. The plan to couple this approach with modular building principles offers a maximum diversity of form and function. Economical design excellence, employing advanced support systems with collecting and recycling devices will utilize solar radiation for interim heating and cooling. NASA engineered windrotors augment electrical energy requirements. The designers believe the project will reach operations efficiency not previously attempted. Las Vegas has already begun expansion of McCarran International Airport, and a Sky Harbor Cargo Airfield is under construction. Both facilities lie a short distance from the proposed, giant pyramid complex. The Nevada Pyramid Corp. estimates it will take $300 million to see the project through to its conclusion. L. Canada of Santa Barbara, California conceived the idea while travelling in India a few years ago. ▲

PYRAMID REPLICA VITALIZES SALT From Experiments Made by Jean Martial (1956)

"Separated by some 800 kilometers, Engineer Karl Drbal and I individually conducted a number of experiments that led to a copious and fruitful exchange of letters. . . .

"My tests were repeated and verified by my friend who kept me abreast of his work. Thus I was able to repeat it and check his results. . . .

"I used a 15 cm high pyramid, designated in our correspondence as P 15. Drbal used a pyramid 30 cm high, labeled P 30. The effects of both were rigorously identical: after seven days the pendulum's movements indicated termination of the experiment in the process of impregnating water. . . . What were the properties of the water thus treated? We used a pendulum as our test instrument. Fearing possible errors due to auto-suggestion we each distributed samples of treated water to several of our radiesthesists (Dowsing) friends and asked them to try to determine the particular properties of the liquid. . . .

"We thought, as a priori, that this water would be harmful to the human organism as well as to plants, taking into account the harmful effects we had observed on maggots in the meat we had used in our prior pyramid experiments. But following our examination of pyramid treated water, we and our friends concluded that it produced a healthful and revitalizing effect on both human and plant life. Some time later, on the 25th of April, 1949, I received the following letter from my friend Drbal:

"Starting with our experiments on water, I made an experiment to render ordinary white table salt better for health by exposing it to the influence of the pyramid, thereby vitalizing it.

"I used the 30 cm-high pyramid and placed a cup containing 100 grams of salt inside, at a point above the base equal to one-third the pyramid's height. During the treatment I observed the pendulum's movements as follows:

- April 2 9 p.m. (Before treatment) 17 Large oscillations.*
- April 3 11 a.m. 3 Small oscillations.*
- April 4 9 a.m. No movements.*
- April 5 3 p.m. 2 Small counterclockwise rotations.*
- April 6 1 p.m. 5 Small counterclockwise rotations.*
- April 7 9 a.m. 8 Fairly large counterclockwise rotations.*
- April 8 9 a.m. 12 Large counterclockwise rotations.*
- April 9 9 a.m. 16 Large counterclockwise rotations.*
- April 10 9 a.m. 20 Very large counterclockwise rotations.*
- April 11 8 a.m. 26 Very large counterclockwise rotations.*
- April 12 9 a.m. 28 Very large counterclockwise rotations.*
- April 13 9 a.m. 28 Very large counterclockwise rotations.*

"As this figure of 28 rotations remained stable, I stopped the experiment on the 11th day presuming the treatment was concluded. The salt treated was acknowledged by several Dowsers as being more healthful than the non-treated salt. Perhaps it is possible to vitalize various other foods in this way, sugar for example. This has already been done for milk and flour using ultra-violet radiation. However it seems the vitalization produced by the pyramid must be much more subtle and beneficial than ultra-violet rays.

"Here are vast horizons for experimenting Dowsers: we can imagine a practical use in daily life of the pyramid's power, granted that our observations are verified and checked by a large number of experimenters. I authorize you [Jean Martial], should you find it useful, to share this information with whomever you choose, including mediums, since I consider it of the highest importance that these experiments be verified...."

"As you can see, I have made use of this authorization so kindly accorded by my friend, Karl Drbal.

"It remains for me to encourage other Dowsers (Radiesthesists) to become interested in the problem of vitalization by treatment in the pyramid. . . ." ▲

CAN THE PYRAMID FORM BE DANGEROUS?

Readers occasionally ask: "Will meditating or living in pyramids prove harmful?"

The late psychologist, David Sharpe, in our last issue inquired: "Do you see any danger while living in pyramid structures? Yoga teaches too much Life Force can cause disharmony," he went on, "and increased reception of energy from the cosmos seems to occur within pyramids. It may be too much for people who express feelings of restlessness or uneasiness inside pyramid structures . . ."

A UFO writer recently claimed he knew people who freaked-out from the effects of meditating inside pyramids. So far, our investigations show a statement of this sort is completely without foundation. He has certainly scared a few people but documentation hasn't been forthcoming, and likely won't ever be.

Our research now goes back into the last century where pyramid and Life energies are concerned, and we find living organisms—including the human form—enjoying positive results. We have noted the comments of meditating subjects in our travels throughout the world as outlined in Pyramid Guide #8, #16 and other issues. Pyramid energy responses have been gentle, exhilarating, at times with signs of energy acceleration in the meditating subject—perhaps some overstimulation in the "feeling" apparatus rather than physical—and on rare occasions a light headache, a subtle warming or tingling over the skin. These reactions soon balance within a reasonably short time, upon a second or third visit inside the pyramid framework. As we see it, staying inside a pyramid model can cause no more discomfort than being in an overheated room. If I can't stand the heat, I get out of the kitchen. Mr. Sharpe went on to ask: "Can there be a convenient way of cutting off the resonance or pyramid energies apparently manifesting inside?" This is an interesting question because it strikes at the heart of the issue.

1. Yes, there can be a change increasing, lessening or an intensifying of energies. This depends upon the type of construction; floors, partitions, levels, materials. . . especially metallic surfaces, perforations or opening in the panels; the introduction of adjacent, sub- or super-jacent forms of a wide variety, their relative distance from the masterform; capstone and corner enhancement, additions or alterations inside or outside the replica and etc. . . We have repeatedly cautioned our students not to introduce orgone type construction into pyramid research. There are too many unknown forces here.

2. The pyramid as a form is not only harmless but rather produces beneficial results in both organic and inorganic substances. If the pyramid is to be considered dangerous in its simplicity as a basic structure then we'd better take a hard look at all forms. We live in a world replete with form. We are surrounded by moving and unmoving forms throughout our lives. In fact we mostly perceive our environment through our five senses via form. We occupy a form-body, ever changing. An X-Ray machine is form, but it remains harmless until someone adds another energy by plugging it into an electrical outlet.

3. There is a mistaken belief that larger pyramids produce greater energies. This is an oversimplification of an as yet, undetermined scale of power potential in pyramids of various sizes. This question will be resolved by accurate measurements of the force fields generating between subject or specimen tested, apex and corners and form relationships. A small pyramid produces energies in its capstone region with all the intensity of one several times larger. Here we are concerned more with a time factor rather than size. The little pyramid will charge and vitalize a plant resting six feet below the apex with all the success of a plant sitting on the floor of a six foot high pyramid model. Remember, all pyramids are capstones of an extended, invisible pyramid form with the ridge lines extending to an unknown distance below. The pyramid as a form is an essence, harmony crystal, an alchemical device of rare quality. An open frame replica can be just as effective as an enclosed, panel pyramid. Finally, a meditating subject's high vibrational state before entering the form contributes significantly to the usually enjoyable experience found inside. ▲

GREAT POWER FROM FORM WITHIN FORM

By Bonnie MacConnell, Tucson, Arizona

... More than fifty years ago an occurrence started me on a quest which revealed the tremendous power of the pyramid. I have been lecturing on this and related subjects for a long time illustrating with models how an octahedron—appearing as two four-sided pyramids connected base to base—containing a cube within can produce great power.

One can easily prove it for oneself by making a three-dimensional model tetrahedron. This can be done by inserting three sticks all the way through a small orange or rubber ball so that the six ends are protruding some distance out from the sphere's surface. These points will appear as opposite poles to one another. Two points will be seen on a north and south pole vertical axis, and the four remaining spikes will extend outward as horizontal axis equidistant at the four points around an imaginary equator. Each end represents either a positive, and its opposite, negative polarity. The ancient orientals used curved poles and produced the yin-yang curve and the swastika.

Now tie a string near the end of each point as you connect them forming an octahedron. The final result will show four equilateral triangles above the equator and four below—the upright and inverted pyramids joined base to base. Perpendicular to any of these three-dimensional planes will be the direction of the fourth dimension. More sticks inserted through each of the eight triangular faces of the octahedron mark the corners of a cube.

The first dimension is an invisible line in space caused by the vibrational movement of an equally invisible point—the common source of all things—which gives us positive and negative polarities, the masculine and feminine natures. Certain movement of a line in space registers a two-dimensional plane or square. Movement of the two-dimensional plane in space gives us the three-dimensional cube. Movement of a cube in space is a matter of expansion or contraction to function as a cube, giving us the direction of the fourth dimension. These octahedron forms in pyramids are based on poles of equal length while the great pyramid has base lines longer than ridge lines. If you construct a pyramid with the dimensions of one made with curved lines—the yin-yang—you'll have a pyramid that will be slightly flattened. The earth incidentally has three unequal axis. The point I wish to make is: the corners of the cube within the octahedron are at the level where the four-dimensional poles project. This generates one kind of energy. A larger model extended into the solar system would explain the activity of pulsars, quasars, black holes and etc. . . Using the same system with our planet, we encounter similar energy points, such as the Bermuda Triangle. Now one can see why the poles shift as the magnetic poles move about over long periods of time. This model concept aligns with the nature of gravity, the migration of birds and other creatures, and the continental drift. It provides a plausible solution to the UFO mysteries. It is the Cosmic key that unlocks all seven dimensions. ▲

 EXCERPTS FROM COLLECTED SCIENTIFIC DATA

Bacteria: The pyramid replica retards bacterial growth. Sterilized skimmed milk inoculated with STREPTOCOCCUS LOCTIS, a lactic acid fermenting bacteria, was inhibited from acid production when kept under an open framed, steel model pyramid. Findings by a major California University.

Water: When placed under an open framed, steel model pyramid, chemical traces of chlorine, fluoride and other impurities were removed. Water was definitely found to be in a much purer state after being within the pyramid shape for 24 hours. Molecule structure was definitely different than the control sample. Findings were analyzed by a mass spectrometer connected to Dupont 302 and Dupont 301 computer in an independent industrial testing laboratory.

Liver Extracts: Treated in an open framed, steel model pyramid: Extract remained pure and with stable oxygen levels after 72 hours. Control sample changed drastically in deterioration and unstable oxygen levels. Analyzed by mass spectrometer through Dupont computer.

Wine Sample: A natural wine without preservatives was tested after being left under an open framed, steel model pyramid for 20 days in an open glass container. The wine was found to be very stable and in a purer state than the day test began, or when it was first poured from the bottle. Control had a very high rate of deterioration to almost vinegar state, loss of colorization, putrid odor and heavy state of bacterial growth. Samples were analyzed through mass spectrometer and Dupont computer. Additional findings also showed a very baffling and dramatic change in molecular structure.

Seeds and Plants: Germination periods are advanced by as much as 150%, growth success to 80%. Varieties tested were: radishes, lettuce, alfalfa sprouts and strawberries. This means healthier plants earlier, an important asset to farming. Tests were conducted at several high schools and colleges in California, Texas and Canada.

This brief but informative report by Goggin and Kerrell, authors of GUIDE TO PYRAMID ENERGY, 3015 Nebraska Ave., Santa Monica, California 90404, in collaboration with scientists and students proves the furtherance of pyramid energy research as it unfolds today. Pyramid replica study is receiving greater acceptance by academia reinforcing our belief of the form's vast potential in behalf of humanity. (Eds.)

FROM THE SAINT JOHN'S EDMONTON REPORT 4-26-1976

REPORT ON A PYRAMID EXPERIMENT

The pyramid used is my 6 ft. base, 1 inch aluminum tube meditation structure. The side-frame, base to apex is also one inch tube all connected by touch at base corners and apex by angle fasteners. The solid copper sheet, 12 inch base, pyramid is used as the capstone. This pyramid sits in the front room of my apartment. It is positioned to magnetic North.

A problem I've had in this apartment is picking up the ABC Channel 39 (UHF) picture on my TV. I have some experience in electronics and let me say I tried every location for the UHF bow-tie configuration antenna (about 13" wide) inside and outside my apartment to no avail.

In an effort to get some kind of picture to watch the Emmy Awards I used about 10' of flat 300 ohm lead-in, to the bow-tie antenna taped and hanging from a yard stick. I held the yard stick out and around my pyramid, also inside and above the apex. At about 3 ft. off the ground (floor) on the North slope on the outside of the pyramid I picked up a good color picture, no shadows, no distortion, no ghosts, some grain, but satisfactory. It worked.

Needless to say I am happy and will now see if I can use smaller pyramids in conjunction with the antenna to make a more practical arrangement for pick up here in this apartment.

PYRAMID SHAPE AN INSULATOR?

Pyramidal shapes may not be energy collectors, they may actually shield objects inside from energy penetrations from without. It can possibly be explained in this way:

Voltage gradient existing in the atmosphere has been used to detect the departure of an aircraft from level attitude, and used in terrain avoidance systems for aircraft. The earth's atmosphere acts as the dielectric between two capacitor plates—one plate is the earth's surface and the other is in the ionosphere. Millions of volts of electricity can exist between the two plates. The voltage gradient varies from something like 110 volts per six feet of elevation difference at earth's surface, to ten volts per six feet at a very high altitude.

When one stands in an open field, about 110 volts are impressed between the top of one's head and feet. The body as well as plant life is conductive, so a small current flows through the body. If one can measure the voltage difference and can rotate the body until no voltage exists between head and foot, the body will be in the horizontal plane. This feature is used by the electrostatic autopilot to level the aircraft automatically.

Any object on the earth's surface, including the surface, is a conductor of electricity and distorts the voltage gradient as shown in figure 1. The conductor translates the voltage at the surface to a higher altitude. In a perfect conductor, no voltage gradient will exist within the conductor, but the voltage gradient above will be greater than at points away from it. During storms, lightning is more likely to strike the sharp object due to the higher voltage per unit altitude existing above it.

In figure 2, the voltage gradient around a pyramidal shape is distorted with respect to free space providing the material is conductive. No voltage gradient exists within the pyramidal shape. Atmospheric currents can flow through any conducting material with the pyramid form. One must conclude that a pyramid cavity protects objects inside from atmospheric energy which must remain on the outside.

In batteries, the chemistry changes during current flow between two dissimilar metals results in chemical changes to the metals. Electrical currents resulting from atmospheric voltage gradients likely flow through materials and produce chemical changes. Materials protected from this current flow will not undergo chemical change with time. Can this explain why materials left in the open will putrify more rapidly than organic matter protected by the pyramid? Do we feel differently in pyramids because atmospheric voltage is not impressed across us? Experiments should involve 110 volts DC—by experienced researchers—with tests between two metal plates spaced six feet apart vertically to simulate the atmospheric voltage gradient in the laboratory.

Pyramid forms indoors prove nothing relative to this phenomenon; it is outdoors where it comes into play, unless the voltage is simulated indoors. Elmer D. Robinson, Wheaton, Md.

PYRAMID RAY REFLECTION (A GEOMETRIC EXERCISE)

by David G. Alexander

This is a supplement to the little article entitled "Pyramid Ray Reflection Analysis" which I sent the Pyramid Guide recently. I realized that some people might have trouble visualizing the triangle formed by the intersecting rays in the pyramid. This triangle is shown in hatching in the enclosed fig. A and the centroid of the triangle is designated by an encircled dot.

I noted with interest the results of Verne Cameron's dowsing of the pyramid as described in Pyramid Guide No. 4, where he stated the intensity of the energy field increases in the higher reaches below the apex. This is consistent with the ray intersection idea, in that the intensity would be greatest near the apex, since the rays travel the shortest distance before intersection (interference) at the apex region. However, more rays intersect at the base of the energy triangle, with the centroid being at one-third the height.

I would like to stress that I don't propose the ray reflection hypothesis as a belief that this is what is actually happening in the pyramid. It is simply a geometric exercise yielding extremely interesting results.

CONE-RAY REFLECTION PRINCIPLE

Enclosed are two conical structures of my invention, the subject of a pending patent application. They are a logical embodiment of an extension of my ray analysis. You will note the reflected energy in the pyramid intersects or interferes in the central plane of the pyramid in the form of a triangle. In my cones, this energy is concentrated into the central axis, thereby increasing the intensity of the energy.

The cross section of my cones in any horizontal plane comprises two symmetrical parabolic arcs. They face each other and have coincident foci at the central axis of the cone. The structure thereby acts as a double parabolic reflector.

I invite you to experiment with my cones by dowsing or any other means. My personal experiments indicate that cones duplicate the pyramid effect; the energy may be even greater. In accordance with the ray reflection principle, the effect is greatest when the curved conical surfaces face north and south. This fact has been verified experimentally.

If your examination indicates that the cones exhibit the pyramid effect to a significant extent, you have my permission to disclose my invention in your Pyramid Guide, as I am considering making the cones available to pyramid experimenters on a small scale commercial basis. At any rate, I would appreciate it if you would let me know the results of your examination, especially as to which of the cones, the larger or the smaller, seems most promising. Please feel free to keep the cones as souvenirs.

Your kind cooperation is most appreciated. Very truly yours, David G. Alexander.

• DORJE - THUNDERBOLT A PSYCHOTRONIC GENERATOR?

The "Dorje" is referred to as the Sceptre of Universal Dominion over matter. It is the Thunderbolt of Indra (the one supreme power) given on page 10 of the Egyptian Book of the Dead.

In 1974, upon viewing the Dorje at the Burke Memorial Museum on the University of Washington Campus, it occurred to me the Dorje-Thunderbolt might possibly be a psychotronic energy generator. I had recently read about and since found similarities between the powers attributed to the Dorje and psychotronic energies.

The instrument was to be given to the man "filled with transcendent consciousness," giving him control over the ether element, and over Vajraanger transformed into energy and precision. "The ether," according to the Tibetan Book of the Dead, "is the fire-mist aggregate of matter." Ether in its primal form is symbolized as the 'green-light' path of wisdom of perfected actions, the source of all organic life and life eternal.

The sphere, cone and hemisphere have frequently been described as powerful psychotronic devices. These shapes can be seen in the Dorje-Thunderbolt (see drawing).

The Frenchman Belizal, whose books "Waves of Form" published in 1926, describes how after years of research into ancient Egyptian healing methods stated the Egyptians found what he called the "negative green ray" emanating from psychotronic devices. The sphere apparently produced the most powerful field of energy. The terms, negative green ray and green light path struck me in their similarity.

Karl Drbal, Czech engineer once did a pyramid-meat preservation test applying a constant ray of green light. William Tiller, Stanford University scientist referred to 'Deltron' in a speech at the Boston Museum of Science. Deltron is akin to the supernatural phenomenon mentioned in Tibetan mythology. Dr. Tiller suggested Deltron may be associated with psychotronic energies, manifested by levitation rather than by gravitation, and is of negative mass and time flow. Perhaps the Dorje-Thunderbolt by virtue of its unusual arrangement of psychotronic forms allows it to gather large amounts of Ether-Psychotronic energy.

The goal of Tibetan Tantric-Shakti Yoga is to gain control of the energizing forces of nature. Since the Dorje-Thunderbolt was to be given to the man filled with transcendent consciousness, could he have controlled the etheric-psychotronic energy within the Dorje, the symbolic sceptre of universal dominion over matter? Knowledge of its proper use may have been lost over the centuries, especially in Tibet, where countless invasions have taken place.

I will welcome and exchange ideas with Pyramid Guide readers. William Hans Weiss, 8722-118th N.E., Kirkland, Washington 98033.

Dear Mr. Cox,
I was intrigued with your article Today's Thoughtography, Tomorrow's Thought-Viewer [Pyramid Guide issue #24]. It was your last sentence though, that prompted me to write. "Wireless mind-tapping devices, beyond wire tapping may soon become a reality."
I believe these devices already do exist. I wonder if you're familiar with work being done at several U.S. Universities, work founded by the Pentagon through the Advanced Research Project Agency [ARPA]? Dr. George Heilmeyer, director of ARPA revealed in his annual report to congress in March that researchers at three U.S. laboratories have managed to identify specific thought patterns in brain-waves.

Dr. J.E. Zimmerman, a physicist at the government's bureau of standards in Boulder, Colorado, has developed a cylindrical device now being used in tests at M.I.T. that picks up brain-waves without being physically connected to the subject. Dr. Zimmerman explains his machine as follows: "A very sensitive meter placed near the head detects magnetic emissions from the brain, and this information is fed into computers which analyze the brain-wave patterns. It's quite feasible that this machine can be developed to such a level that it can be used over a distance -- without the subject knowing it."

U.C.L.A. scientists are also working on another facet of the ARPA project, trying to read thoughts by studying subtle changes in the pupils and retinas of the eyes. I believe that it is only a question of time before pupil analysis will be advanced so as to identify specific thoughts. Through analyzing colors in the retina it is now possible to identify some emotional states.

I can see some medical uses for some of these machines, for example stroke victims who may be rendered speechless, or advances in electrical stimulation to help the blind see various shapes or colors. But I see other uses too, mainly of political nature. It makes me sad to think about it. As long as the ego of the country is motivated by an insatiable quest for power, I see little hope for the advancement of a more humanitarian approach to global harmony, or a more profound understanding of ourselves. Peace -- Dennis Rinard, Willoughby, Ohio.

EARTHQUAKES MAY TRIGGER PYRAMID ENERGY

Nick Edwards of "NEESI" Pyramid Environmental Systems, Van Nuys, California, has been investigating the relationship between pyramids and nature's moving forces such as earthquakes in a trip to Mexico earlier this year.

Edwards' research exploration of the Pyramids of Teotihuacan near Mexico City, revealed physics principles he believes were understood by the ancient Toltecs and Aztecs. "This energy can be tapped as a source for the entire planet," he says. Nick and his team tuned into this power as they walked two miles down the famed Street of the Dead, passing the Pyramid of the Sun and ending with the Pyramid of the Moon. "The earth's own shaking, oscillation powers these pyramids," Nick continues. "I believe if you vibrate a pyramid with the right frequency you will step-up its energies many times over."

To prove his point on a smaller scale, Edwards applied an electric vibrator to his hand holding one base-rail of a tubular, open-frame pyramid. Then directing the apex energy flow into stale tobacco, Nick noticed a 10 second charge sufficiently altered, and drastically improved the tobacco's taste.

It seems the vibrational effect intensifies the pyramid energy action upon organic and possibly non-organic matter. This is a marvelous discovery aiding future pyramid energy experiments, significantly reducing the time usually required in laboratory tests. ▲

Dear Mr. Cox,
You will find enclosed my translation of the chapter in Jean Martial's book on the table salt experiment. Other experimenters in France are using both pyramids and electrical devices to vitalize foods, notably water and honey. One man in Paris sells his vitalized water and honey to the public. Mr. Simoneton, in his book draws a connection between vitalized water and the curative properties of water at Lourdes and other famous spas. Martial's small book published in 1956 covers pyramid and mummification with similar tests by Dr. Roger Weissenbach. The book also contains an expose' using the pendulum to record mummification in process. Several sections in the text concern questions, to my knowledge, not previously published in English. Beside the salt test recorded over eleven days using a pendulum, there is a nine day pendulum test of razor blade sharpening under a pyramid by the Czech engineer Karl Drbal.

The article I previously mentioned is by Reynaud, where in his tests around 1939, he determined the pyramid's polarity with the aid of the Bovis Biometer. Aside from this, the interest is mainly historical. Another book which goes into "Waves of Forms" Ondes de Vie Ondes de Mort, by Jean de la Foye, is sold in France.

Andre' Simoneton's Radiations des Aliments, Ondes Humaines et Sante, was published in 1971. It is an extremely detailed account of hundreds of experiments Simoneton made testing food using a pendulum. I can testify to the validity of his postulates as a result of my own tests. This is a completely new way of determining the nutritive value of foods replacing the idea of "calories" by that of radiation as determined by the pendulum. Simoneton was referred to in the book "The Secret Life of Plants". Simoneton believes all canned and highly cooked foods are "dead," that is, producing a very low level of radiation as determined by the pendulum.

A pyramid has been used in France to send and receive messages over long distances. I will be able to translate this for you, though the language is quite arcane in parts and certain passages are virtually incomprehensible, even in French. Sincerely, Robert W. Kenyon, Institut de Paraphysique, Paris.

Hi Bill,
At your last seminar in Mountain View, Calif. you asked me to write you a letter about my experience with the pyramid and my Volkswagen. Using your 12" X 12" base, open-frame pyramid, I opened the rear deck lid and placed the pyramid forward as far as possible. It didn't center directly over the engine but covered part of it. I did this at night each successive day. As you suggested, I blessed the car each time and mentally put the white light around it-- to be sure-- when I'm driving the "bug." The car now has over 140,000 miles on it, with no major repairs effected as yet; just tires, points, plugs, brakes and fan belt, etc..

The VW has a slight miss now and I think it is a valve. This is mainly due to neglect and poor maintenance on my part. If I park the car under a larger pyramid or leave it overnight inside a pyramid garage would eliminate the valve problem, I believe.

Will keep you informed. Right now I have a malfunctioning camera under a pyramid. I'm leaving for Minnesota in a few days and will try to get some pictures of two-story houses with pyramid shaped roofs. I was never aware of this phenomenon before I became interested in pyramid energy. In my hometown I noticed a number of older style, square houses with this type roof, and often wondered if it was a coincidence or otherwise. Lloyd E. Krause, Clovis, Ca.

Dear Bill,
Add a subscriber. I'm building a pyramid house in Topanga Canyon, California (actually a momma, papa and baby pyramid) and each connects to form the whole house. The plans by California Architects, are now in the building department for approval. We have applied all principles of pyramid science to the design. It's beautiful. David Shapiro, Topanga, Cal.

Dear Bill,
My current interest involves a conductive inquiry into magnetic field parameters in ancient Mayan site planning. Mayan architects appear to have given careful alignment consideration to magnetic declination, earth's magnetic field, polar wandering and magnetic ground influences. Having visited most of the major pyramid sites in Meso-America, I would recommend to readers contemplating a pyramid pilgrimage to see PALENQUE, TIKAL'S TEMPLE of the giant jaguar and UXMAL'S PYRAMID OF THE MAGICIAN. Though not as well known and visited as the TEOTIHUACAN and CHICHEN ITZA they appeal to me, evoking more of a power and living spirit. sincerely yours, Ray Clare, Los Angeles.

Dear Mr. Cox,
I was particularly interested in your article in Pyramid Guide #24 "PYRAMID LIGHTS the DARKNESS" especially with reference to "light globules." This called to my mind comments the great medium, Eileen Garret made in her book "My Life." She tells of her experiences seeing these globules as a child. Elizabeth Werner, Inner Space Interpreters Services, P.O. Box 1133, Magnolia Park Station, Burbank, Calif. 91507.

Dear Ms. Werner,
Eileen Garret's comments agree with so many other percipients who know wider ranges of vision: "globules of light, bursting at intervals within the beams of sunlight... my globules danced." B.C.

THE GREAT CAPSTONE CONTROVERSY

What happened to the Great Pyramid's missing capstone? From what materials was it made? If there ever was a pyramidion at all, what happened to it? Can we determine its former height and size? What was its significance or symbolic representation? Was the pyramid crown constructed in two or more stages—one atop the other?

These questions frequently arise in our mail and at workshops. Research in this area can be most discouraging, as various reports, measurements and conclusions seldom agree. The 'Guide prefers to favor the following thoughts. The explanations of other possibilities excite the imagination. Here's a typical letter showing Scott France's approach to the mystery:

The mean average dimensions of the Great Pyramid's interior included angle of 51°51' corresponds with a base length of 763.62 feet, and an overall vertical height of 485.5 feet, base to missing apex of the capstone.

The late pyramidologist, Adam Rutherford, figured the base to apex slightly less, at 485 feet—with base to the level of the truncated platform at 454.5 feet. This leaves a net vertical height of the missing capstone at 30.5 feet, or approximately so. . .

In other reports, a smaller topstone may have existed in the total pyramidion superstructure. Estimates range from a tiny sphere or pyramid shape no larger than a grain of sand (the Biblical Mustard Seed?); a crystal or invisible energy form, or possibly a stone structured peak two, twelve or thirty feet high. It's anyone's guess.

The base side measurements of the Great Pyramid's summit platform calculations agree more with the approximately 30 foot high topstone theory. Whatever it was that rested above this removable monument is certainly open to wide conjecture. Some say the capstone was never put in place, and pyramidologist Bernard Pietsch of northern California says the measurements now available indicate the mathematical lines drawn from corners to apex on the Great Pyramid cannot possibly come together at one point in alignment with the entire structure.

Perhaps there were two or possibly three levels making up the total pyramidion. The chronicles of early historians suggest the topstone's exterior may have been coated or laminated with gold, silver or some other highly reflecting metal.

The fifth and most elevated corner once mounted atop the Dashur pyramid of Amenemhet III has a golden-winged, sun disk containing carved hieroglyphs in its polished, black granite surface.

As displayed on the American dollar bill, the shining eye of God appears within the topstone's radiant form. Although invisible, maybe the pyramidion's energy space as charged is still there, as envisioned by clairvoyants, maintained by Etherian guards placed there eons ago. Perhaps the invisible pyramidion awaits the perceptive eye of those who can see beyond the limits of the visual spectrum. It may well be the "Secret Chamber of the most High," holding forever the key to unlock the mysteries and wisdoms contained within the Great Pyramid's total architecture.

Again, the capstone may have been a giant crystal, grown to its proper proportions by masters of a prehistory era; Beings with skills as yet unlearned in our advanced technological age (see Pyramid Guide #23, China's Crystal Capped Wonder).

Esotericists believe the pyramidion will one day be returned to its former site announcing the dawn of a new and enlightened age on our planet. If the capstone was indeed lifted off long ago by spacemen and used as a charged energy device on some other world, would there ever be a need for its return to the pyramid platform? ▲

Dear Sir: I've just completed a Pyramid research program at the University of Nebraska and am in the process of constructing a scale model of the Great Pyramid. I hope to precisely duplicate the dimensions of the alledged PYRAMIDION once crowning the Great Pyramid. This particular size might generate more intense energy phenomena. . . In his book View Over Atlantis, John Michell says the Pyramidion was exactly 1/56th of the Great Pyramid's dimension. Using Cole's G.P. measurements, the Pyramidion's base length is 13,496 English feet. Agatharchides of Cnidus, Greek grammarian, second century B.C. described the apothem of the Pyramidion at an estimated 10 feet, with a base length of 12.36' (the consistency of this ancient unit and the modern English foot is dubious.) Livio Catullo Stecchini, concludes that the base side of the Pyramidion averaged about nine feet. Using Michell's figures generates several special measures-- the product of 56 to the 5th power-- the Pyramidion's base approximates the earth's circumference. If the Great Pyramid was constructed according to Newton's five sacred cubits in height 20.63" refined by Stecchini to 524.1483mm the Pyramidion's height translates to 103.1785". My own figure for the height by the 56th proportion is 103.004" about 8.5 feet. Scott France, 203 Pear Lane, Wenatchee, Washington 98801.

PYRAMIDS AS GLOBAL AND LOCAL ENERGY STATIONS

In the #24, July-August edition of this newsletter the "PYRAMIDS AND THE PLANETARY GRID" article provoked worldwide response from readers. The 'Guide didn't go far enough" they write, and questions arise. . . so the exploration continues:

As we learn more about Geomancy in relation to earth, sky and Cosmic energies, one must conclude nature is constantly revealing her subtler mysteries to the aware observer. The order, size and life of the earth's vegetation and cloud formations don't just happen by chance: They represent visual, material aspects of a greater Cosmic (Divine) plan. The ancient priests of wisdom in the dim, unknown past must have understood these laws.

Through time, as the intellects of men advanced into a more material evolutionary state, the truths and wisdoms of their antecedant masters were warped into fragmented half or non-truths. Higher understanding of the Great Plan has for the most part been lost to the masses. Fortunately, remnants of this inspiring legacy have been passed down through time or recaptured through the intuitions of a few of the planetary elite. In other respects, some knowledge can still be gained by an understanding of our world's antiquities, extraordinary art in stone, monuments and the pyramids erected by the ancients.

Lillian L. Brown, of Mansfield, Ohio writes:

Dear Mr. Cox

The Pyramid Guide has been a most welcome part of my work in Pyramid energy research for the past two years. Thank you for your work in making such a fine publication possible. For the last few years I have studied and worked with pyramid energies in many ways. Now, I've seen something very interesting and wonder how I may obtain information so I can continue investigation of pyramid energy flows. Can you give me the Great Pyramid's exact location on our planet? I hope to exactly plot its precisely opposite location on the globe. I wish to know where an extended plumb-line from the pyramid's apex passing through the earth's core would appear on the earth's surface on the opposite side.

I have seen something of importance in pyramid study. We may find the greater energies not confined within the pyramid, but where the structure may be on an axis protruding from its own position. This could well affect planetary energies.

I have seen many things concerning pyramid energy but am not sure of the accuracy and request feedback at this time. If I have seen correctly I will have faith in my sight. If not, I may lend a new thought to those studying various pyramid energies and related force fields forming elsewhere over the earth. Have the energies in the Great Pyramid's lower chamber been measured or seen? I have both seen and felt this form energy. Has any artifact been found in the subterranean chamber which may have formed energies within the chamber? Do you know of any power generated from the chamber area passing through the earth's core and returning to the pyramid's apex following its transmission over the planet's surface?

My main interest lies in the form energies involved. Do we have any clues made possible through knowledge of other pyramid chambers? Mr. Cox, have you ever observed the energy I have seen? If so, how did it appear to you?

sincerely yours, Lillian L. Brown, Mansfield, Ohio.

We will pass the question of the Great Pyramid's precise location along to our readers who are more expert in cartography or whatever. Yes, I have -- along with hundreds of people-- seen pyramid energies and will write about it soon. Bill Cox.

The GR100 series Control Unit utilizes a candle flame, a method of producing ions without creating ozone and other harmful substances. A flame produces both positive and negative ions through the process of combustion. The electrometer, a scientific measuring device indicates more negative than positive ions from combustible materials as a source. By separating these ions while in a gaseous state, candleflame provides an abundant flow of ions of either positive or negative potential. An ion flow of sufficient volume is thus made available to the serious researcher or experimenter who may want positive or negative ions in quantity. Negative only, or positive units available through the Pyramid Guide. For more information write to Box 30305, Sta. Barbara, Ca. 93105.

With a leap from yesterday into tomorrow, three colossal pyramids—the largest being taller than the Great Pyramid of Giza—comprise a complete, planned recreational community. It will rise on the Nevada desert on a 1,000 acre site south of Las Vegas, if current financing plans materialize. The three basic recreation/entertainment facilities—Hotel Casino, Olympiad and International Trade Center are slated to interact as one giant organic complex. These three majestic structures, composed in their natural setting, promise to present a powerful, magnetic and visual effect, drawing worldwide visitors with focussed expectation. Because of its shape the pyramid's surface receives high exposure to sunlight throughout the day; hence the Solar Pyramid concept. (See page one for details). ▲
