MAGNETISM EASILY DETECTED IN PYRAMIDS

In a recent test with a metal-frame Pyramid replica, using a pocket-sized magnetometer the outside Northeast corner registered a definite negative (North-Pole) effect. The same leftward movement of the magnetometer's needle occurred when the instrument was placed directly above the Pyramid's apex, but when the gauge was positioned inside, just under the apex, a positive (South-Pole) reading ensued.

Further testing showed a radical change from negative to positive as the magnetometer was moved upward from the Northeast base corner to apex, indicating that the Pyramid—if not a magnet in itself—is an accumulator, generator of magnetic energies. (See also: Pyramid Guide, editions #15 and #38).

When one looks for answers in conventional scientific books on the subject frustration follows, for the academic explanation that the two poles of a magnet are the same, or homogenous (meaning precisely the same in nature and effects) is incorrect. The magnet actually emanates two completely different forms of energy; particularly observable when a bar magnet is moved close to any television screen. There, the actual "figure 8" pattern appears with the negative north moving in a semi-turn counterclockwise and the south pole arcs clockwise right. In addition the two poles produce entirely different effects on biological systems with the electron spin cycling to the left (North negative contraction) or a right, clockwise (South positive expansion) which also registers as a left or right sweep of the pocket magnetometer's needle.

Thus a magnet's energy or that of the earth, doesn't leave one pole as popularly believed to travel around the magnet or globe, merely to re-enter on the other end. The energy in fact, upon leaving the South Pole travels only half way around to rephase itself at the center. Here the energy is altered into an electronic spin and takes on a reverse gyration, leaving that center of the magnet (or earth), continuing on to re-enter the North Pole, opposite end. The horseshoe magnet is mostly without value in this research because the two opposite poles are physically too close together for one to photograph or observe the two Pole Patterns which are distinct from each other. (continued on page 3)

CALIFORNIA CATASTROPHE PREDICTIONS ON SHAKY GROUND

IF THE EARTHSHOCK IS STRONG ENOUGH, LONG ENOUGH... Tsunamis (great sea-waves erroneously called tidal-waves) follow, inundating various coastal regions with devastating results. Tsunamis occasionally attain speeds up to 600 miles per hour and roll from a few inches in height on up to 50 feet or more. One report claimed a Tsunami rose up some 300 feet in the Pacific Ocean before lashing the seacoast.

Is earth approaching the end of another world age in a series of devastating, seismic upheavals? Will both east and west coastlines of the U.S. sink into the sea as predicted by Edgar Cayce? Can we expect one mighty earthshock to longitudinally divide California along the San Andreas fault?

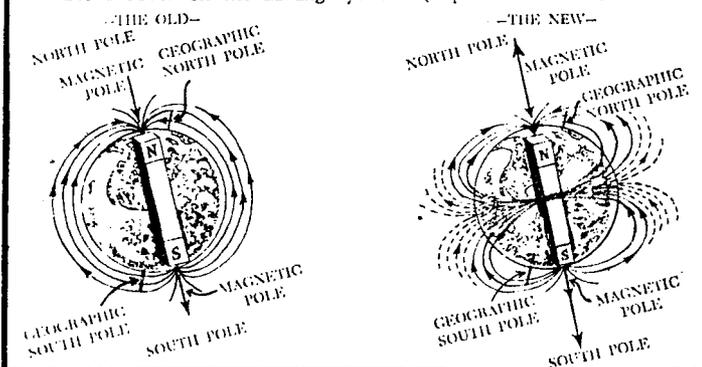

Most psychic, astrological and mediumistic predictions range within the 1960s through the year 2,000. Could some be correct? Will there be a global axial tilt? A shifting of poles with the Great Lakes emptying into the Gulf of Mexico?

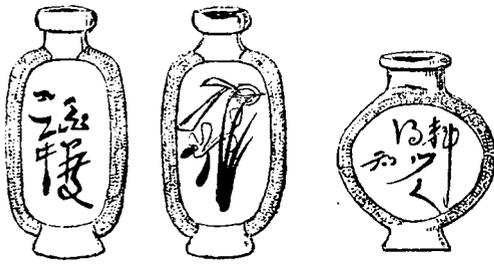

A minor exodus from coastal communities has been going on since the early 1970's. Havens of considered safety seem to be the four-corners region joining Arizona, New Mexico, Utah and Colorado; Indiana, Illinois and Ohio; eastern and south central Canada, etc. Some people who left California for these areas five years ago are back, as seemingly positive predictions made earlier in the decade failed to materialize. With continual updating, prophecies of California's impending doom, new groups of people are scurrying for presumed, inland sanctuaries. We have received a substantial number of letters from 'Guide readers warning us about the expected, upcoming cataclysm, asking: "How can you possibly stay in Santa Barbara? Get out, while you can!"

Predictions are not all based on clairvoyance though. Mt. Vesuvius is supposed to be (and is somewhat) acting-up prior to the anticipated great quake. Planetary alignments due in the early 1980's and again with the "biggie" prophesied for the end of this century (Cayce-Nostradamus), are considered to be the most reliable indicators of things to come, all based upon records of earth's super energy releases in the past. Twenty-five years ago, Dr. Rudolf Tomaschek, a University of Munich physicist, wrote a paper based upon the relationship between the world's major earthquakes and the planet Uranus' location, when it was close to, or in direct mid-heaven alignment at times of earth's largest tremors. Tomaschek's findings showed solar, planetary positions coinciding with times when 134 earlier, major earthquakes had taken place. (continued on page 3)

Among the many bottles found in Thebes, none have exacted greater curiosity than those showing ancient Chinese inscriptions. The accidental discovery as a single bottle of this type might pass unnoticed, but if it were surprisingly found in an Egyptian sepulchre, one might conjecture than an oriental visitor in later times may have left it there, perhaps while searching for items of Egyptian antiquity of a more valuable kind. But this explanation would cease to be admissible as similar Chinese bottles have been discovered in other Theban tombs.

A Professor Rosellini, prior to 1862, comparing the style of sculptures in a tomb with a pharaonic period corresponding to the 18th dynasty (circa 1580 B.C.) was able to date the burial of one Chinese bottle which could have been much older in terms of its manufacture.

One of the bottles made of an inferior material presented a flower one side and an inscription on the other with the following legend: "The flower opens, and lo! another year."

The bottles (some only 2 inches high) were likely brought to Egypt through India by desert caravans. And since the vessels were of little value of themselves they likely contained some precious ingredient ordinarily unavailable along the Nile River.

Bottles of glass, porcelain, alabaster and other materials were frequently exported to other countries so the Egyptians also manufactured a quality Porcelain at the time, adding credence to the supposed value of the little vase's contents. When finally exhausted of its liquid treasure, the little bottle again became functional as a container for Kohl or Collyrium, a beauty aid used by Egyptian women for staining their eyelids.

Fourth Dimension Reachout FUTURE MEMORY

Upon first impression, the title of this article appears utterly absurd. The idea of memory itself naturally implies something observed, experienced and/or catalogued in the past; according to our awareness of things within the measure of world "clock time."

But, there's a plethora of documented cases on hand, plus events occurring in most of our own personal experiences, to prove that many individuals can correctly perceive valid information through ones intuition; beyond the physical barriers of space and time, at least within the ring-pass-not of this solar system.

Premonition is an activity of Future Memory, meaning a gut-level forewarning or presentiment; but this activity shouldn't be confused with prognosis (prediction or forecast based on available information), or deja-vu (an event seemingly seen or previously experienced). Documented cases of accurate precognition (knowledge of a future event cognized by means of one's extended, sensory awareness) can easily be found throughout the annals of recorded history. Some aspects of prophecy must be the higher flight of Future Memory; for in Prophetic revelations, a series of consecutive events spanning great periods of time have often unfolded with uncanny accuracy. Moreover, the prophet seems to be able to produce certain knowledge of a future happening at will. With premonition however, involuntary moments of this phenomenon most often occur. The Bible and scriptures are replete with amazing future perceptions of this quality. Gifts of prophecy have often been ascribed to the seer's ability to communicate directly with God (or the great Akashic records) as seen in visions, previsions or by direct voice contact. Various mediums have at times shown surprising talents in auguring the future.

One doesn't have to research long to find sufficient evidence that extended foresight or clairvoyance is just as natural a function of mind as hindsight. The extension of recall roams the realms of race or cosmic memory and the so-called collective unconscious. Therefore a serious study of Future Memory should begin with the various modalities of human and Divine portent.

The ability to presage events or happenings is not so rare as previously believed. For one thing, it's now scientific fact that left-brain input through the five senses is generally considered to be locked onto tick-tock time; whereas, subjective, right-brain activity adequately deals with spatial, non-time information; the point thus being that right brain hemisphere perceptions, channelled through one's intuitional faculties, emanate from the deeper realms of consciousness. Here, one is able to see future events with astonishing clarity. This phenomenon, usually labeled as clairvoyance, at its optimum level, extends into the category of the oracle and Divine providence. The higher flight of Future Memory is often erroneously ascribed to astrology or the various forms of occult prognostication...palm, card or crystal ball reading and other types of psychic or medi-umistic soothsaying.

The greatest difficulties encountered in divining the future invariably lie in the seer's inability to correctly time the happenings, either with the clock or calendar; which shows that non-time, intuitive perceptions coming to conscious awareness, are frequently cognized but not understood within the correct time frame. The occasionally used and mysterious terms: Line-Pass-Not and Ring-Pass-Not, allude to the invisible boundary or boundaries lying within our solar system. Reference to the realm of feeling (the upper astral aspect) is sometimes implied with their use. Ring-Chaos, applies to the instinctive or driving force in nature. Ring-Cosmos, focuses upon a particular concept held in the mental plane. Line-Pass-Not, is self explanatory, but doesn't necessarily describe the complete functions of the more often used term: Ring-Pass Not.

MAGNETIC ENERGIES BEHAVIOR

Early experiments were made on seeds, plants and animals and later on tests with fluids, upgrading the quality of foods, vital acids and proteins so exposed to a particular pole (end) of the bar magnet. The South (positive) and expansive pole energies seemed also to be electrical in nature transmitting a positive effect in several biomagnetic tests. Not surprisingly then, the North (negative) and contracting pole energies caused a negative effect on biological systems. It therefore arrested or slowed down the development in plant specimens and creatures used in the research. South Pole magnetic energies produced greater production of natural sugars in sugar beets, and more natural peanut oils with higher protein content were detected in peanuts so charged.

Magnets can lose power by being dropped or struck a sharp blow or when exposed to excessive heat. They are best stored on a piece of flat metal called the "Keeper" which acts as a conductor to keep the energy flowing in a natural course through the magnet. Also when magnets lie close together so that their poles oppose each other, the energy will rapidly bleed off their magnetic charge. This phenomenon helps to explain why Pyramid energies can be disrupted by other energy devices or force fields radiating from nearby electronic and electromagnetic devices such as fluorescent lights, motors, generators and the like.

Magnets have been used to polarize and upgrade the quality of water. Plants watered at the roots only with South Pole treated water showed accelerated growth. Scientists looking for a change in the mineral contents, solids, PH acid and alkaline tests and so forth, found no difference. But further research revealed that the oxygen level was lower in magnetically treated water, though hydrogen levels appeared to remain unchanged. Hydrogen ion electronic activity did become altered however.

DECODING PYRAMID SECRETS...Dr. Watson Fell Quimby, M.D. authored a book in 1880, entitled: Solomon's Seal, A Key to the Pyramid. John Barnes Schmalz in 1905, wrote a lengthy manuscript explaining how our popular playing cards embody a scientific record of the Great Pyramid at Giza. Earlier, in 1856, John Wilson, published a book declaring that a record of the lost solar system of the ancients had been rediscovered in the Great Pyramid. Then writer Conor Mac Dari, in 1923, advanced a convincing, research work, showing—in his opinion—how Irish wisdom has been carefully preserved in the Bible and ancient pyramids.

Now, in a spiralbound book offered by Health Research, Box 70, Mokelumne Hill, California 95245 at $4.00, the idea is further pursued in "The Four Pyramids and the Nature of Man" that Irish Magian Adepts, were the Grant Architects who built in "the most important and significant group of symbols ever erected by the hand of man." An identical concept is also embodied in mythical and cryptic language found in the Bible, presumably inspired by the illuminated authorship of the great Irish Priesthood. Irish wisdom, according to the advance notice, was responsible for names such as Egypt, Nile, Pyramid and other monuments and sites of great antiquity.

AND FROM GREAT BRITAIN...Gary and Carol Olson of Scarlett's Cottage, Cowden, Edenbridge, Kent, report that a quartz crystal—placed there by natural means—can be seen in the side of an ancient standing stone at Mattocks Down, near Combebarton, North Devon, near the English Coast.

PYRAMID ATOP THE WASHINGTON MONUMENT...A six pound, aluminum pyramid, surrounded by eight platinum tipped, lightning rods, all stationed around the capstone was first mounted in place back in 1884. Has anyone seen the monument's uppermost tip lately?

A MEXICO CITY MONOLITH...of the fallen moongoddess Coyolxauhqui, measuring 10 feet in diameter and weighing eight tons was recently unearthed next to the cathedral and presidential palace, February 21st, 1978. Further investigations revealed the presence of a massive temple foundation temporarily dated between 1325 and 1521. A Tenochtitlan Pyramid and nineteen small stone chambers also turned up during excavations. In addition, workmen found human and animal bones along with some exquisitely carved figurines. The site, now known as "The Historic Zone" was once the scene of a highly evolved Aztec Culture which flourished until the Spanish conquests in 1520.

Both young men are sponsoring an educational, research tour of the Egyptian Pyramids and Antiquities scheduled for March 1979. Additional future tours (one lasting 30 days) are planned later this year. Mark says, "We need three more speakers or researchers for the March 79 tour." POINT CONCEPTION: SACRED PORTAL IN THE WEST Point Conception, lies on a Pacific shore 50 miles north of Santa Barbara, California. According to Indians encamped there, it may be the most important land on the North American continent, the only physical location and western gateway leading one from the physical into the spiritual world.

Chumash Indians say Point Conception is the place where one's spirit leaves the earth plane to rejoin one's ancestors after death. It is also the portal through which all unborn spirits come into the physical dimension in the birth process, and they add, the location through which nourishment comes into the world for all living things. Many of the Indian's yet undisturbed ancestors lie buried there and Point Conception has long been the site of sacred ceremonies performed by Native American Indians.

But now, the sanctity of Point Conception is now threatened by a proposed Liquefied Natural Gas (LNG) Installation. Moreover, preliminary reports indicate the LNG storage tanks could be potentially dangerous due to unstable ground overlying numerous earthquake faults. Besides, incoming, gas-laden vessels will be troubled by the constantly restless sea and storm-warn- ing calibre winds there.

The Indians have protested experimental trenching by LNG in an attempt to determine if the earth faults pose a problem or not, saying: "We saw what those trenches did to Mother Earth, and to the animals in the area...they (LNG) have left 37 foot deep, football-field long wounds in the Earth, leaving many scars on the lands. Snakes, birds and other animals stirred up by the disturbance to their home have been seen at times when they're normally inactive."

The local Indians are being supported by Native Brothers and persons of all races. A spiritual encampment has been set up in Cojo Creek Canyon near the site of contention. "The young," they say, "will be discouraged from participating in their religion and culture, sacred land and burial sites will be disturbed if the LNG installation goes in." A bumper sticker frequently seen in the Santa Barbara County area supporting their view, reads: "Let's Keep Conception Immaculate."

GETTING CHARGED UP

It is a fact that one can stand on top of the Great Pyramid and, at times, feel a tingling in upraised finger tips. The hairs on one's upraised arms may even stand up. Sometimes snaps and cracks can be heard, with sparks flashing out from the finger tips. What causes the phenomenon?

We have learned about atmospheric electricity from the studies of well known scientists such as Benjamin Franklin, Lord Kelvin, Peltier, Volta and others. A highly conducting layer about 60 kilometers above earth is known as the Atmospheric Equalizing Layer. It can be compared to one plate of a capacitor with the earth's surface being the other plate. Earth's sky capacitor is continuously charged at a rate of about 1600 amperes by the action of some 1800 storms going on around the world at any one time. A nonlinear voltage gradient between the similar capacitor plates varies from a few volts at altitudes above 1220 meters to, from 100 to 200 volts per meter at the earth's surface.

Assume that the voltage gradient on the Great Pyramid Plateau at Giza is 160 volts per meter. Supposing a person stands on the platform at the top of the Great Pyramid (137.38 meters above the base) and raises a finger 2.5 meters above the platform. In the ideal case a potential of 22,380 volts would exist between the platform and the tip of the finger. But as a practical matter, the electrically compressible atmosphere enables only about 62% of this energy to be realized, or a voltage difference of 13,875 volts (see Page 4 Vol. V #1 of Pyramid Guide).

In somewhat humid weather, no effect would be noticed. But in an unusually dry climate, a spark of about 15 millimeters might be obtained and this could prove to be a startling experience.

PYRAMIDS OF THE WORLD... Here stands the monument tomb of the brother of Frederick the Great (Heinrich) at Rheinsburg Park in Germany. The Pyramid has been peculiarly inscribed in French, because of the fashion in court circles at the time of the monarchy, which was used as the international tongue whenever elite foreigners gathered. The tablet expresses Henry's displeasure at the lack of recognition and proper status during his lifetime (as he saw it). Even after Heinrich's death, consistent with the mysterious rebuff, the Pyramid was not advertised as a tourist attraction, and few mourners came to the relatively unknown sepulchre. Another monument to man's eternal desire to be revered and remembered, regardless of the era, (below). This lake Pyramid in Branitz Park, near Cottbus, Germany, was erected in honor of the globetrotting poet, Prince Pückler, whose dying wish was to be buried in the grand style of an Egyptian Pharaoh.

Dear Mr. Cox:

I'm interested in experimenting with pyramids... One thing bothers me, though: Christopher Hill's concept of the "negative green." I asked Robert Massey—one of Christopher's students—about it and told him that no one else seems to have found it to be true in their experiments with pyramids, but Robert insists that Hill has done more careful experiments than anyone else in the world.

Since you are well-versed in the field of radiesthesia, have you found support for the existence of the "negative green" energy as an energy which has negative effects on people using pyramid structures? It would be of major importance to know for sure about this before building pyramid-shaped structures, homes, and so forth... Sincerely yours, Ursula Krainock, San Francisco, CA.

Dear Mrs. Krainock:

In reply: the so-called "negative green" nonsense recently put out by Hill and a few others, originated in the mind of the inventive but eccentric French radiesthesisist Andre Bovis and friends about a half century ago. The late Verne L. Cameron was aware of this nonsensical notion after Cameron's own Dowsing and pyramid research began back in 1926. Verne used to speak to me about some of the rather bizarre concepts of the French bicycle maker, Bovis, and the small clique of overzealous, French pendulum-pushers who made numerous claims about rays that simply don't hold up in light of present day knowledge.

For one thing, the often observed colorless emanations and beams emitting from above or below the apex of a pyramid replica have otherwise at times, been seen by clairvoyants and perceived by mediums as a single shaft of gold, silver, violet, or blue; or they may register in a combination of hues as layers in the column of energy above the pyramid's apex, but seldom mixing with the other hues to produce another specific, dominant tone. If the color green can be threatening to one, or one's own environment, we're all in trouble, behold the manifesting green in the Verdant world of our existence. Of course certain plants have stickers, needles and poisonous substances but green isn't the cause.

Moreover, if a basic, man-made or natural form can harm one, we're even in deeper trouble. You're possibly sitting in a form (chair) and within a greater form (a room), within an even greater geometric form of particular design (house or business building) while you read this. Even if outside, you are likely near a multitude of forms (trees, signs, vehicles, etc...) If one begins to worry about the French Radiesthesists hangups about color and form, one can soon become paranoid. I've seen this happen to people who become too literal in their beliefs in Vivaxis, noxious earth rays, devil ring, errant magnetism, Zappers, Sappers and the like.

True, one can alter color or form so that the instrument of their making becomes dangerous. Consider a harmless box converted into an x-ray machine. Once the electrical connection is plugged into the wall socket and the switch turned on, the form quickly becomes a potentially dangerous instrument. An ordinary box isn't going to hurt anyone but put wheels under it, add motor and a careless, angry driver and a practical, comfortable mode of transportation suddenly becomes a lethal weapon, which leads one to wonder why all the fuss about geometric forms and color, when it's people who can become dangerous.

Negative green ray advocates are boxing at shadows and the prophets of doom are everywhere. It's a fact that anything good can be shot-down if one assumes a strong, negative point of view. A London cult leader for example, preaches that meditation can be dangerous, and is therefore to be avoided.

"As to the results of the whole investigation, perhaps many theorists will agree with an American, who was a warm believer in Pyramid theories when he came to Gizeh. I had the pleasure of his company there for a couple of days, and at our last meal together he said to me in a saddened tone, — "Well, sir! I feel as if I had been to a funeral." By all means let the old theories have a decent burial; though we should take care that in our haste none of the wounded ones are buried alive."

W.M. Flinders Petrie 1883 Introduction to "The Pyramids and Temples of Gizeh."

AN ACCURATE NATURAL CALENDAR (Part II of Two Parts)

by James R. Morgan, M.S., F.R.C.

Reprinted by permission of the author and (abridged from) The Rosicrucian Digest, article of the same name, January 1976 edition.

It is a pity that so few people in today's world ever take time to really observe and study the motions of the heavenly bodies; the Sun, the Moon, and the stars. The Bible states they are for signs and for seasons... Several years ago the former Emperor of the Rosicrucian Order, Dr. H. Spencer Lewis, wrote a book called Self Mastery and Fate with the Cycles of Life. Dr. Spencer described an extensive system of natural cycles featuring a division of the year into seven equal parts together with the recognition of lunar polarities as mentioned in Part I of this article.

I had studied very intently the workings of these cycles in my own life and in the lives of others for about twenty years. This occurred before the present revelation of Indian astronomy dawned on me. I was many times astonished by its power and appropriateness to real life situations. I therefore integrated simple digital counting techniques used by the Indians and Stonehenge Britons, applying fundamental principles of astrobiology as I understood them. The result was 'Morganhenge' illustrated in Diagram A. Morganhenge quantitatively monitors the most important yearly personal cycles. Additionally it is so accurate in the astronomical sense that 92,000 years must elapse before it will accumulate even one day of error relative to the real world as governed by the sun. To appreciate the accuracy of this astronomy-based "clock," let's assume an Ice Age Folsom Indian started one of these devices 9,200 years ago. Today, it would be in error by only two hours and twenty-four minutes!

The Chaco Indian civilization prospered for about five centuries; then, with no evidence of war, pestilence or natural calamity it rapidly sank into decay and utterly collapsed as a viable civilization...

Each year the earth receives from the sun about 6,000 Q of radiant energy. (One Q is 10^{18} Btu. which is about the amount of energy derived by burning all the coal in a train long enough to stretch forty times the distance from the earth to the moon.) Axiomatically the earth must radiate back to space over geologic time precisely the same amount of energy that it receives from the sun. If it did not, the earth would melt or freeze. Water is the principal agent involved in distributing and regulating the earth's prodigiously large annual budget of 6,000 Q of energy, roughly 25,000 times more energy than man uses for all purposes! The process by which this energy is handled is called weather. Clearly, any change in the earth's energy budget must necessarily show up as a perturbation in the vigor with which the earth's "weather engine" has to work...

The effect of carbon dioxide is so great that it is conceivable man could be materially altering the Earth's climate by the carbon dioxide he releases through the burning of fossil fuels. Among these resources are notably coal, natural gas, and gasoline... We cannot materially alter the temperature of the ice and water mixture. As we add heat we melt the ice and vice versa, but the temperature stays the same. The Earth's mean temperature must remain essentially constant for the same reason. Thus in order to maintain this thermal balance on a worldwide scale, the increase of energy entrapped by man's addition of carbon dioxide to the atmosphere must be compensated by a greater flow of energy to the polar regions. There part of it melts polar ice and a portion of the energy is radiated into space. This flow of energy is simply weather... Mankind may be at the forks of a long road of painfully slow progress up civilization's hill. One alternative leads to destruction. The other enters the Temple of Godhood in the sense of making man master of himself, if not of his environment. We should immediately redirect our national and world efforts toward an intense study to understand these subtle forces of nature.

"When Man understands the Pyramids, he will understand himself!"

Heinrich Schliemann's monumental discoveries in the face of frequent ridicule proved that his intuitive insights about Troy were basically correct; so why not give the interesting, yet unproven perceptions of rightbrain mystics, dowsers, clairvoyants, mediums, arm-chair mathematicians, astral travelers and hypnotized subjects a chance to be heard?

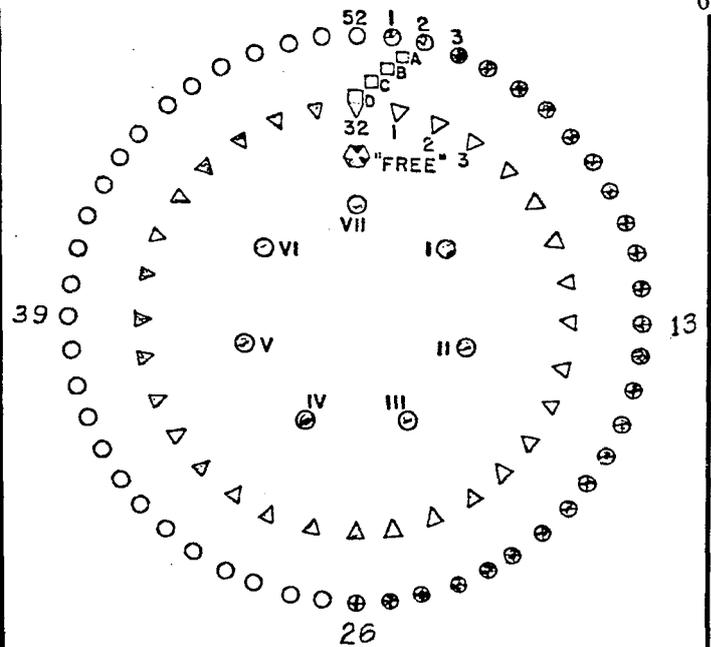

DIAGRAM A: "MORGANHENGE" INDIVIDUAL CALENDAR

MORGANHENGE... The operation of Morganhenge is so simple that even a primitive tribesman could reliably operate it. His primary chore would be advancing a day marker to the next station in the outer circle at each day's sunrise, or at any other time of day as long as he was consistent. Each time the day marker stood in station 52, he would advance the period marker one station in the innermost circle (Roman numerals I-VII). Once yearly, that is when the period marker resided in station VII ready to advance to station I, he would make the leap year correction by simultaneously advancing three markers in the group of square stations marked A, B, C, D. Each marker would be advanced one square (for example: A to B) with the marker in D being advanced (returned back) to A. In effect he is thus advancing an empty station one square each year — making box D empty once every four years.

Also, the day marker, at the end of each year must spend one day in the place marked "Free." This is required because seven periods of fifty-two days account for only 364 days. Additionally, when box D is empty, once every four years, the day marker must spend the 366th day in box D. An average yearly count of precisely 365 1/4 days is thus generated. But the true length of the normal, or "tropical," year is 365.2422 days. Thus to achieve greater accuracy the leap year addition needs to be cancelled once each 128 years. This would be achieved by advancing an extracalation device around the middle circle of stations at the rate of one station each leap year. Each time station D was empty the extracalation device would advance to the next place. Thus once in each 128 years ($4 \times 32 = 128$) the use of station D as a leap year addition would be denied...

The author has combined some of the principles used by ancient astronomers to produce a new calendar concept that monitors important astrobiological cycles, which is at the same time, an extremely accurate astronomical clock.

AGHARTA, LEGENDARY SUBTERRANEAN KINGDOM

A special feature of inquiry and information.

THE GROTTO BEHIND AGHARTA'S SMOKING GATE... somewhere in the Gobi Desert. Here appears an idealized version of the seldom found grotto inside the secret portal, before the steps leading to that vast underground sanctuary and the earth's deeper but hollow interior. According to legends, Agharta's vast system of caverns occupy numerous layers below the earth's crust which shelter many civilizations in various stages of development; the descendents of those who allegedly sought refuge there prior to the sinking of Atlantis and presumed, planetary deluges of the past.

Turgut, a Lama traveling with Ossendowski from Urga, Mongolia to Peking, China, told the explorer: "The capital of Agharti, reminds me of Lhasa, where the Dalai Lama's Palace, the Potala, occupies a mountaintop dotted with temples and monasteries... There the King of the World — surrounded by the Holy Panditas and incarnated masters of wisdom — rules both the visible and invisible forces of earth and where the 'enlightened ones' can do everything for the life and death of humankind... Woe be it to anyone foolish enough to try to make war upon them," he went on... "Invisible threads join the 'Goros' from the surrounding palaces to the will of the King. They are all concerned with the rhythms and harmonies, the natural balance of elements and things in the physical world, mineral, water, fire and the airs, ever attenuating unmeasurably upward into the cosmos," he continued. "They are custodians of the molten elements in the earth the volcanic substances, boiling waters, steam geysers and springs spewing out over the earth's surface. Some work with the mysteries in the depths of the seas, lakes and rivers, and still more work with the elements of weather, the sky creatures, and their healing, life giving energies.

"The King of the World in Agharti, is aware of all thoughts entertained in the minds of Kings, Czars, Khans, World Leaders, Scientists, High Priests and strong men of all nations," the legend continues... "he, the King, knows of their plans and if they are constructive and benevolent, he will help them with powers he wields through the invisible realms and forces. But if they become unpleasant in the sight of God, the King will work towards their destruction. This Power," said Turgut, "is given to Agharti through the mysterious science of "OM" the originating tone of the mystical prayer: 'OM' being the name of an ancient Holyman, the originating Goro who lived 330,000 years ago, who first saw the face of God and received the great powers attributed PYRAMID ON THE PLAYGROUND... Again a novel and imaginative use of this most positive and functional form, by architect Robert Armon, 1227 S. Lincoln, Birmingham, Michigan 48008.

SAUDI ARABIA'S MYSTERY RINGS

Circular stone formations are scattered throughout Saudi Arabia on remote hilltops and valleys. At Jeddah, the rings are formed by stone walls a foot or two tall that vary from five to more than 100 meters in diameter. There are no legends for their purpose or origin... The Saudi rings have 'tails' often stretching out hundreds of yards across the wilderness. Viewed from the air, the rings bear a marked similarity to huge circles in the Peruvian Nazca Plain.

Similarities exist between the Arabian rings and the numerous Medicine Wheels seen along the eastern slopes of the Rockies in Northwest U.S.A. Legends link them with visits by "ancient astronauts." The stone rings have also been described as "energy wheels" associated with the natural forces of earth and the cosmos. Dr. Ron Anjard, 906 Bellevue Place, Kokomo, Indiana 46901.

to him. Thereafter, following his counsel with the planetary assemblies of men well along the lighted path," Turgut added, "the King of the World retreats to the great temple of solitude and prays; and through a flame appearing upon the altar again sees the face of God. Here he receives the Divine orders of the Almighty, thereupon to go out to his followers radiating the Divine Light."

Many have gone into Agharti, it is said, but all have well kept those secrets of trust given to them there. Members of the Olet tribe near the border of Inner and Outer Mongolia supposedly penetrated the outskirts of Agharti. There they learned some of the lesser mysteries brought to the surface through the smoking gate and that is why the Olets, Kalmucks and Gypsies are considered artful Shamans and prophets unto this day. The learned Panditas have reportedly recorded their channeled wisdoms concerning our planet and other worlds on stone tablets. "The Chinese Buddhists," it is said, "know of this 'pure Knowledge'." Every century it is believed that one-hundred sages in China assemble in a secret place by the seashore and await the appearance of 100 eternally living tortoises, whereupon new inscriptions add to the old record all developments of the Divine (Sacred) Sciences throughout time. A foreboding written prophecy from the King of the World in Agharti to the Goros and Lamas in 1891, detailing the coming unfoldments from 1921 to 1971 have been incredibly accurate, though the time projection may have to be stretched a little.

By a curious circumstance the mythical Agharta, if not located in the Gobi Desert, conceivably occupies the underground below Lhasa in Tibet. But to most, Agharta is the mirrored earthly reflection of the heavenly Shamballa, believed to be centered in the etheric and higher realms of the Gobi (Shamo) Desert of Outer Mongolia. THE GREAT PYRAMID: WHO BUILT IT? (Orthodox Views Challenged) 8

To its majestic dignity we must superadd its hugeness and ponder the origin and meaning of the Great Pyramid of Giza. Was Herodotus, 5th century B.C. Greek historian correct in his assessment that the colossal stone monument was constructed with the labor of 100 thousand men over a 20 to 30 year period?

Experts down the line don't always agree on who, when, how and why the Great Pyramid was built, so it's open season for anyone with imagination and a basic approach to the problem. With all the speculation going on, one's guess is probably just as good as another, at least until we have irrefutable answers to mysteries so often explained away by opinion or theory.

It's no secret that many of those whom we look to for answers, when questioned with unassailable facts, admittedly don't know for sure how the Great Pyramid was built. Scientists often say they do, but do they know? Or only think they do? When they positively claim that the Egyptian pyramids were all erected the hard way by ancient Egyptians applying primitive techniques?

Some Egyptologists seemingly avoid confronting the riddle of ancient engineering by quickly changing the subject. Others counter the claims of visionaries like Immanuel Velikovsky and Robert K.G. Temple or jokingly suggest that Erick Von Daniken entitle his next book "Steamshovels Of The Gods." This achieves little in our attempts to understand the casual forces lying behind the pyramid mysteries, rather than forever analyzing the obvious physical effects encountered at every turn. Extreme views leave us with little middle-ground knowledge necessary to attain understanding. We need intelligent dialogue between investigators with open minds, followed by full spectrum examination of every possible clue, even if the information can't be explained in modern technological terms. We are presented with endless conjecture on all sides about the pyramid mysteries. When were they built? by whom? and why? By far, the largest number of unanswered questions focus on HOW?

Herodotus claimed that the early Egyptians built a massive 3,000 foot-long, 60 foot wide causeway of polished stone running from the Nile to the Giza mesa. This remarkable pathway, according to Egyptologists, accommodated hordes of captains, engineers, drivers, workmen and slaves who presumably tugged huge blocks of stone on sledges up-ramp for installation into their pre-designated position.

Some modern-day engineers don't entirely buy this theory, saying that even with a one-in-ten inclined ratio, the ramp's plane would have to allow for a 120 foot rise over a distance of 6,000 feet, twice the length of the ramp ruins known to exist. The historian's time estimate that this causeway was constructed over a ten year period should also be doubled if we are to rely upon his figures. Thus 20 years of land and access preparation was likely needed before actual pyramid construction could begin. And what happened to the missing 3,000 feet of ramp if we are to believe in the method of construction proposed by Egyptologists? Is it concealed by the Nile? Or was it torn up after the Great Pyramid was built? Could it be that the missing length of ramp never existed at all? Apparently an early pyramid with steep ramps on three sides and a fourth shallower ramp was recently discovered in Egypt. "We believe there's sufficient evidence to prove that the pyramids were built in this manner," say Egyptologists.

Scientists also say that since we don't build stone monuments on such a huge scale anymore, we don't have the technology or experience upon which a proper evaluation of ancient pyramid building could be made. Could we duplicate the feat today? Was the Great Pyramid constructed with nearly 2 1/2 million stone blocks, weighing an estimated 6 million, 250 thousand tons (1,250 thousand trillion pounds) actually designed, cut, shaped and assembled by a race of primitive pyramid builders?

WHO BUILT IT? from page 8

How could the Great Pyramids have been constructed by a horde of primitives and wretched slaves, under the direction of leaders so ignorant they hadn't even yet learned to use a wheel? Were these stupid savages driven to this stupendous task by a vain, tyrannical king who wished to be remembered for all time by being buried in the world's most gargantuan tomb? Is it possible that the mighty edifice is the handiwork of a long forgotten race of giants? Or was it skillfully put together by the descendants of divine beings, Atlanteans or Von Daniken's ancient astronauts?

"Von Daniken, wonders where the pyramid builders got the wood used as log rollers" (applied underneath in moving the enormous, pyramid stone blocks overland), says David Larkin, University of California Egyptologist. "Well, we have references prior to pyramid constructions, showing that forty shiploads of cedar was imported to Egypt..." Larkin also claims that stone sledgehammers, copper tools, chisels, adzes and saws have been found in the quarries. "Moreover, rails, sledges and mudbrake ramps, sometimes reinforced with stone retaining walls were used at Giza at the time the pyramids were built," he adds. "Von Daniken's case for proving that ancient astronauts designed and built the pyramids would be much stronger," says Larkin, "if the Great Pyramid had been erected a few hundred miles out in the desert" (away from the Nile River and the rock quarries upstream).

Can we rely upon scientific predictions cranked through a computer? Astro-meteorologists are apparently having their successes. For example, rainfall increases are about three times greater following a new or full moon than in the week preceding. An earthquake prediction, its time and location in the sea off the coast of Mexico was remarkably accurate last month, showing that statistical probability is now possible. Earth seems to have its most physical uprisings (sneeze, hiccup or cough) following a prolonged series of shocks over a ten to twenty year period. "Earthquake weather" has been observed in the behavior of animals and creatures prior to the first major rumbles. Alert citizens have noted the presence of nighttime, sky illuminations, flares, meteors and/or strange, hazy blue clouds during the day.

Even now, while this article is being written, a 4 plus magnitude earthshock has just occurred with its center located in the Los Angeles area. Santa Barbara has already had two substantial earth disturbances to shake things up in the latter part of 1978. Still, with all the signs of an increasing number of seismic shockwaves happening and the threatening behavior of the San Andreas fault at hand, we're not too concerned, just yet, predictions or not. FINDING THE CORRECT POLE OF YOUR MAGNET... Remember, opposites attract and similars repel. The North Pole as defined here is not the north seeking pole, for the north seeking pole is in fact, the south pole of the magnet. Many magnets sold today are incorrectly marked. A simple test can be made to correctly label the pole ends, by suspending a bar magnet tied around its center with a string. By letting the magnet turn freely in space it eventually comes to rest with the end pointing NORTH actually being the SOUTH POLE of the magnet. One can use a compass to determine a north direction when this information is not already known. Finally, one can correctly mark the poles of the magnet, which can later serve as a guide in labeling other magnets not already so marked.

THE PYRAMID IS A MAGNET... To further show that the metal Pyramid replica behaves in the manner of a magnet, the previously described experiment can be duplicated to some degree by substituting the metal frame Pyramid for the magnet. The replica's base sides will tend to align with the Cardinal Points (North, South, East and West).

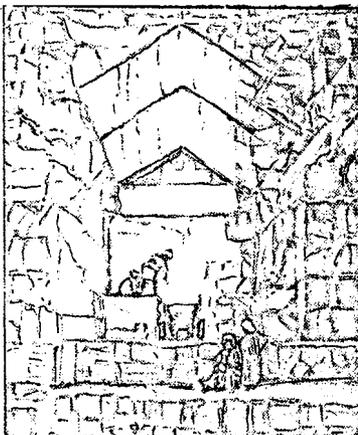

THE FUNNEL EFFECT OF MAGNETIC ENERGIES... a tornado-like (smaller end) vortex starts at the end of the Pole, enlarging as it travels in space. "Within the wide diameter vortex of a magnet's pole a similar attracting vortex spin occurs expressing power and energy. "The electron spin acts as a force of direction in rotation, and the inner, or reverse vortex located within the center of the electron fields acts to form an uptake or downward thrust of energy. The spin reversal results in an opposite (counter) moving inner vortex action. Here we see a completely different behavior from that of a tornado vortex which vacuums its energy from a smaller radius below and expands into ever widening diameters as a funnel seen in the earth's atmosphere.

PACIFIC HORSESHOE, EARTHQUAKE ZONE (above)...shows in shaded areas the regions of maximum earthquake activity. Seismic shocks of intense magnitude appear to coincide (right) with planetary conjunctions, eclipses; planetary patterns in certain alignment during the solstices and equinoxes. This lineup of planets may cause an electrodynamic induction triggering earthquakes on earth. Note lines of configuration occurring on August 31, 1932, preceding the March 10, 1933 highly destructive, Long Beach, Calif. earthquake: Pluto 1, Mars 2, Venus 3, and Saturn 4; also Neptune 5, Jupiter 6, Sun 7, and Moon 8, while Mercury 9 and Uranus 10 pendulize midway between the lines of active force.
