THE PRESENT CRISIS IN SPIRITUAL ISM AND LIBERALISM

Virtue versus Vice.

BY WILLIAM EMMETTE COLEMAN.

"He who spares vice wrongs virtue." - Old Protect. "Call things by their right names! Hell, call thou hell; Archangel, call archangel; and God-God." - Bhiley. "How can 'The Cause' be more jrredeemably disgrac-ed than by our countenancing, by silence, sensuality and fraud" — Teltie.

Here in the desolate wilds of Indian Territory, remote from friendly associations and fraternal greetings, one of my principal sources of pleasure and comfort, is the perusal of the many good things contained in the spirituts and liberal journals of the day; and in the forefront of those thus utilized, is the ever welcome RELIGIO PHILOSOPHI-CAL JOURNAL. In each number of this sterling paper may be found rich nuggets of wisdom, some from the editorialpen and some from those of its excellent corps of contrib ors; but in the number for Dec 13th last there was spread before its readers (and may they be speedily quadrupled!) a special "feast of fat things," concerning one or two of which a few remarks may not be out of order.

First, we have an admirable article from Hudson Tuttle, headed "Frauds and Per-sonalities." It is but tarely that I can give unqualified assent to the entire contents of another's article, and I often differ from the expressed views of Mr. Tuttle,—owing to my own independent conceptions anent imatters and things; but in this there is scarcely a word but meets my most cordial endorsement. It is just what is needed in this crisis of Spiritualism and liberalism: 'it deserves to be engraven in letters of gold upon tablets of marble, as a warning-guide to Spiritualists and moral and religious reformers of this and coming ages. For one I thank Bro. Tuttle that he has been moved to write such plain and truthful, albeit comprehensive words, pointing out the duty of every lover of truth and honesty in Spiritualism, and purity and morality in Liberalism.

It is, however, what might have been ex-pected of Bro. Tuttle. Upon all questions involving moral considerations, Hudson Tuttle's writings never voice an uncertain sound. He never hesitates to speak of loose and victous theories, and of degrading, immoral practices, among Spiritualists or liberals, in such terms as they deserve. all remember, when the flood of Woodhullian sophistry, ably and plausibly presented by the high priestess of "social freedom" (otherwise moral putridity) and her coterie of coadjutors, was aweeping over the land, to the shame and disgrace of Spiritualism, and from which it has not yet fully recovered, how Hudson Tuttle denounced the free love infamy; and now, when an avalanche of fraud threatens the life of Spiritualism on the one hand, and Liberalism, in general, on the other, seriously threatens to engulfed in the fetid, turbid maelstrom of obscenity and free love, he again comes to the front with strong, earnest words for purity and moral worth, In this epoch in the life of freethought in its several phases, when the land is filled with apologists for knavery and moral laxity, who-

"Can gild vice, And praise it into alchemy, till it go . For perfect gold;"

when on every side spring up champions of wickedness and criminality,-

"Sneering at public virtue, Which beneath their pittless tread lies torn and tram-

Where honor sits smiling at the sale of truth," the demand is, among liberals, for men and women of staunch integrity, with an ex-single to the advancement of virtue ar the overthrow of vice in our own rations, unmindful of the clamors of the thought less multitude, led captive by the syren song of the extenuators of vice and the whitewash-ers of criminality.

Now, as in the past,—with present day liberals as with reformers of all times and "As beasts are hunted their furs, Men for their virgues fire the worse." Men for their virgues fire the worse."

The advocates of virtue, men like Tuttle, flove, the life-ersence of the universe, the Bundy, Abbot, Underwood and Denton, laboring zealously for the right and true, and for the purification and elevation of the cause to which they are individually attach-e d, whether liberal or spiritual, or both instead of receiving the fullest encouragement and godspeed—their merited due—from the adherents of the principles sought to be strengthened and depurated, are greeted with curses both loud and deep; the vocabularies of slang, billingsgate, and pro-fanity are ransacked through and through for opprobrious epithets and terms of foulest slander, with which to pelt them, -- and all this done by men and women calling themselves liberals! Liberals, forsooth! Their language and conduct prove them to be destitute or the faintest idea what true liberalism means. From such Liberalism and such Spiritualism may heaven and the efforts of the true and good of earth fully save us! and they will in time. The thick black scum which has risen to the surface of the liberal and spiritual waters, covering them like a pall, cannot forever be suffered to obscure the clear, pellucid streams of healthful, soul unlifting truth lying deep beneath. Like all exuvine, it will be cast aside as worthless, nor permitted longer to retard the normal growth of the young twin-giants. Orberalism and Spiritualism.

We know it is hard for the lovers of truth and right to bear the unjust revilings, the mendacious misrepresentations of the un-developed, the unthinking and the vicious. It augurs ill for our common humanity to witness the extravagant folly-to call it by no worse name-of those from whom we looked for better things,—allying themselves as they do, with partizans of fraud, vice, slander and general diabolism. ly conscious of the eternal supremacy of right, of the ultimate downfall of error, crime and folly, and of the deep, poignant remorse inevitably awaiting both the fool ish and the vicious, either here on earth or in the brighter refulgence of the celestial spheres above, our equasimity is not disturbed by the insensate howlings and wild ravings of our misguided and evil-directed brethren and sisters. Leagued as they are on the side of moral turpitude and shame-less infamy, so much the more complete will be their overthrow and disgrace; facing and attempting to withstand, as they the united moral sentiments of the world, liberal, spiritual, christian and pagar, be, by the open attacks and bold assaults now being constantly made upon some of the fundamental and best established principles of the ethical code.

Honesty in act and word, truth-telling, monogamy, the sanctity of the marriage relation, the suppression commoral literature, purity of heart and life, integrity in social, domestic, journalistic, political and business relations, are all ridiculed, hooted at, and denounced, and their advocates are laughed at, sneered at, abused and lied about; while fraud, swindling charlatanry, falsehood, slander, misrepresentation, free love, promiscuity, obscenity, and moral filth and purulence are openly indufged in as well as warmly advocated by some; theoretically defended by others; tacitly winked at by others; non-committally sanctioned (virtually) by others; and only feebly disavgwed or mildly disfavored by still another party, who at the same time are in fraternal addition with their practicers and champions. The boldness and extravagance of these vice-defenders and apologists will the sooner call down upon them the moral reprobation of mankind, and their doom will be another illustration of the truth of the classic aphorism: Quen Deux bult perdere, prius dementat (Whom the gods would destroy, they first make mad),-their present conduct not being many removes from actual madness. In an excellent article in this same Jour-NAL by Mr. A.J. Davis, upon the "Tendency of Liberalism to Satralization," the friends of justice and nobleness of character are encouraged to stand firm, and not to be cast down, not to succumb, because former friends anathematize or treat us with contumely. Let us all heed the words of wisdom from the inspired Seer of Orange: "All the good and all the strong, who inhabit lands among the stars," Mr. Davis tells us and we all know its truth, "will be with you in your every noble effort. They overflow with love and sympathy for you." "Good reader," says Mr. Davis, "you will not be overcome, will you? You will continue the good fight, will you not?" And from every honest heart, from every friend of impartial justice, from every soul filled with su-preme reverence for the deific principles ex-pressed in the formula, "Love of God (the highest good) and love of man," in their highest and most expansive sense,-Dave being ever guided and controlled by Wisdom,-from every true Spiritualist; or liberal of whatever name or character, let the cry ascend: "We will dare to do right under all circumstances! No matter how flerce and bitter the opposition of open foe gr whilom friend; though epithets, scorn and contempt be piled on us mountain high, o'ertopping old Pelian, or the skyish bead of blue Olympus,'-never for one moment will be untrue to the standard under which we are marching through this world, the banner upon which is inscribed in ineffaceable characters the holy emblems of virtue, purity, fidelary, honesty, nobility of soul, in-tegrity,—principles to be actualized and utilized in every department of life, in all our relations to and with each other; inter-blessed effluence of which ever finds expression in universal beneficence, charity, fraternity, good-will and ultimately, when 'wis-dom shall guide our human kind, in peace, unity and harmony. Communication from Charles Case. &

To the Editor of the Religio-Ph |ceophical Journal bearning from your kind letter how much it grieved you that certain typographical errors found their way into the print of my first communication, I regretted that your attention, was called to them. They were not very annoying at worst; and such mistakes will happen despite tolerably legible chirography. Even in my later brief letter chirography. your types made me say, "proffer," when I wrote profert; but I cannot fairly grumble, for I should have avoided the use of a word, quite familiar to those of my profession, but so nearly technical, that it is not often used in common parlance. At all events these little mishaps do not, as you see, deter me from additional scribbling. Indeed some two weeks ago, I commenced an article for. the JOURNAL upon some of the "Enigmas" of Spiritualism, and Doubts, and Disagree-ments of Spiritualists," which I hoped to make profitable and interesting; but my own frail health, with sickness and death, in the family of a neighbor and very dear friend, interrupted the work, after a few pages had been perpetrated, and thus it re-mains. Whether it will be resumed and completed is uncertain. It may depend upon whether the afflatus sets in that direction, sometime hereafter, when the manta for writing becomes inexorable; or, it may depend upon another contingency which, just now comes to mind, as worthy of men-

Our good and "exalted" brother Edwards of this city, as I learn, thinks, and has so published, that even so honored and eminent an advocate of our gospel as Hudson Tuttle, "has written a little too much!" Denton, too, he decides, should stick to his Geology; while the best he has to say of Coleman is that he is "winey, with vagary tendencies," etc. Verily, if the works of these apostles of Spiritualism, provoke such not behoove all lesser lights to keep out of print? Therefore, taking the hint, without waiting for a personal kick, I may conclude to remain henceforth, silent, Leaving this point at present in abeyance, and at the risk of "a crusher" from this same judgment seat, I must make bold while I can to put in the heartiest, largest A M E N my pen can frame to the article by Mr. Tuttle in the JOURNAL of the 13th t., on "Frauds and Personalities." many a day I have read nothing more in accord with my own well-safted convictions. Not only does he reason justly; but, considering certain tendencies and senti-ments, not alone apparent in our own ranks, but cropping out more or less, as almost inseparable, both from the iconoclasm, and the disturbed moral atmosphere of the re it seems to me he could scarcely have written more opportunely.

Certainly, in these transition times, there is danger that we become, not perhaps over-charitable, but too mild in our estimate and designation of acts we know to be censur-Well does he say-and it is worth re-

"Charity, generosity, catholicity, may go so far as to clothe the truth even in a garment of words which shall shield rather than denounce in and crime. If a thing is wrong, let us say it is wrong. . If there is rascality, let us say rascality, and not extenuate with meaningless words. This broad spirit may be carried too far, until all distinctions between right and wrong, good and evil, are lost sight of, and the blackest crimes are condoned with the selfsatisfying remark that, "Whatever is, is right," a proposition which destroys all moral distinctions."

With the unsettling of venerable religious creeds, particularly those of the more rigid, puritanical type; and while the broadest, boldest discussions of the very foundations of ethics abound on every hand, there seems to be danger that, temporarily, the clearest eye may become so dazed that the line of eternal antithesis between truth and false hood, virtue and vice, may seem too dim to be worthy of note, or following.

Mr. W. R. Gregg, in his "Enigmas of Life," page 53, makes a quotation from the Spectator, upon this danger of our era, well worth reproducing. The writer says:

"There is the profoundest danger of the collapse of that highest personal life, the glory of which has been shown us, before the confusion of the half-lights and halfshadows of the new era. Complexity of every kind is the great condition of the new -shades of thought too complex to yield up definite opinions,—shades of moral obligation too complex to yield up definite axioms of duty,—shades of insight too various to yield up definite sentences of approval or condemnation for the actions of others. On all subjects not strictly scientific, on all subjects not strictly scientific, on all the megal and moral questions which determine conduct and action, the growing sense of complexity and difficulty is rapidly producing a relaxing effect upon the force of individual character. In some sense emen are blinded by an excess of light. The simple old divial law, 'Thou shalt not kill,' 'Thou shalt not steal,' Thou shalt not commit adultery,' 'Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's goods,' is apt to lose half its meaning before multitudes of distinctions which gradually shade off forbidden acts into the most delicate and praise northy sentiments, and leave you wondering where the spirit of the law ends and the letter begins!

These were timely thoughts when written a century ago; and they are practical still. The world, even in its civilized parts is not yet so purified that the real reformer can prudently give fancy names to fraudulent acts, or wink at any deliberate wickedness. That truth may shine, it still remains that the false must be unmasked, and utter-ly destroyed. How deplorably Spiritualism has suffered, and suffers still, from the complexity of ideas, as to right action and moral obligation, above spoken of, may be partially inferred when we behold a sincere brother utterly failing to discriminate between war upon impostors and their shams, and war against honest mediums and real manifestations. He gravely warns "Christian people and neighbors to beware how they join in with Coleman, Denton, Tuttle, Davis & Co., in decrying the phenomena of modern Spiritualism," when the fact is that it is the counterfeit, not the genuine manifestations that these gentlemen de-nounce. Earhaps as regards Mr. Davis and one other it should be stated that they re-gard certain phases of the phenomena as of comparatively small-account, not questioning their origin, or reality, but beyond this it would surely trouble the worthy brother to put his finger upon a word from lip or pen of either of the persons named, decrying any real exhibition of spirit pow-Such complexity of ideas is deplorable. It would be disheartening, only that it may be regarded as one of the evanescent incidents of this transition epoch.

This same brother exhibits another instance of confused ideas when he confounds the anathemas of disbelievers in Spiritualism with the utterances of its friends in condemnation of real or supposed fraud, on the part of mediums. He is reported as saying. "There is not a medium for physical manifestations living on earth, that more or less people have not charged fraud against." Only in a certain sense is this Those who accept the reality of such true. Those who accept the reality of such manifestations are, as yet, the few; while those who deny and reject, are the many! And itimay be remarked in passing, they are a motley multitude, comprising the great body of protestant-christians, and with them, in sweet accord upon this point only, the majority of scientific materialists! strange spectacle it is indeed, to behold the worshipers of a triune Deity, and the scientists who find all potency in matter, and none elsewhere, thus fraternizing to blot out the last, best proof of immortality? But such is the spectacle; and it follows that the majority, thus repudiating the reality of the manifestations, must regard medi-ums as impostors, or worse. Thus, taking into account what unbelievers have said, it is doubtless true that every living medium has been charged with fraud. But I think it would trouble the brother to go beyond this and prove that all such mediums have been charged, by Spiritualists with trickery and deception. Even in the instance cited (Mrs. Simpson in St. Louis) if memory is not at fault, he would signally fail. As now remembered no Spiritualist, but only disbelievers, there accused, or even suspected Mrs. Simpson of fraud.

Before closing I must say a word upon another subject, to wit, the Editor-at-large project. I quite agree with you in the conclusion that, at present, it is an impracticable measure; for the reason so well put in your leader, that we cannot obtain the desired hearing through the secglar press and magazines now so universally given to misrepresention on the subject of Spiritualism. For the time being such misrepresentation lying would sometimes be the right word) pleases best the common ear, and therefore best pays. While this state of things continues we cannot hope that even so able a writer as Prof. Brittan will be permitted to defend us through these same papers and magazines. Indeed, before your editorial came-to hand I had "blocked out" an article, stating this objection to the project, which I had intended to trim up soon and send to the Banner; albeit this explanation is not made to avoid the insinuation of fol-lowing the least of the Journal! for I cheerfully take my place in the ranks of the "Gudgeons" of this-city, as assigned by our good brother Edwards.

Furthermore I could not agree with yau, upon some other points. If we could get a fair hearing in the same papers that now so wildly belie us, I think it would be a great point gained; and I would confidenty, gladly entrust the work of such vindicaus to Prof. Brittan. I would like to say much more on this subject; but I fancy can hear the editor saying, "Case, remem-ber what was the sin of Brol Tuttle, or, like him, you may write too mach!" I heed the ACTS OF LOVE.-Each one of a thousand acts of love costs very little by itself, yet when viewed altogether, who can estimate their value? What is it that secures for one the name of a kind neighbor? Not the doing of half a dozen great favors in as many years, but the every day kindnesses, neither of which seems of much conse-quence, considered in itself, but whose con-tinued repetition sheds a sunlight over the whole neighborhood.

Letter from Mrs. Lita Barney Sayles.

To the Editor of the Religio Philosophical Journal : I congratulate you on that most excellent number, (the Christmas issue); and on the accession to your contributors of the honored name of Dr. S. B. Brittan, one of the very first of the workers of Spiritualism, a cultured gentleman, and one of the most consistent, earnest, thorough, scholarly, and unshrinking, as well as capable writers, of which we can boast in our ranks. He has worked for Spiritualism to the detriment of. self, through all the long years since he became convinced of its truth, using several small fortunes in his publications, all of which facts his own molesty and dignity of character may cause bim to chide me for publishing to the world. I beg his pardor f he thinks I am not altogether within the baunds of proper representation, and assure you that such is, nevertheless, the truth. So many other old families writers have given you their names and thought for this number, that I am more than half inclined to doubt if Spiritualism is "Aying out," or if the feeling of the people is against the JOURNAL as has been intimated, on account of the strong stand you have taken and sustained yourself in, since your management of the paper, both in your exposes of fraud in Spiritualism, and of similar fraud in materialism, or more properly in the Liberal ranks which will comprehend both. I was very glad to find yourself and Mr. Abbot of the Index working together; it was a most proper union, and a most necessary work to be done, ary work to be done.

I hoped you would say a good word for the "Editor-at-large" project; the gentleman nominated for the olice being so eminently well qualified to fill the place, and the place so much needing to be filled. But your editions to be filled. torial of December 20th, concludes with a paragraph which has the true ring to it, and which is so characteristic of you as to make up for any deficiency in interest, which you may have manifested in the succeeding offes. I am very sure Prof. Brittan will find your "columns thrown open to him, without placing any restrictions on what he shall write about," and sure, also, that yourself and your pub-lie will be rewarded by what you will rechive from him.

Another year is commencing. May it prove that the iconoclastic work of the lownnaL is mostly over, and that you may feel at liberty to bend your energies, where know they desire to move, and are needed, to the building up of something tangible to the world, as well as to those of ranks; something that shall bind us together, and develope our higher faculties; and be a good to humanity. It is not a pleasant position which you have felt called upon to assume, but it was one most needed to be taken, and one which few could have filled so thoroughly and propery as yourself, and all true men and women of liberal feeling will hold you in greatest respect for this work, and thank you for what you have accomplished. Killingly, Ct.

. Death of Mrs. Cowan.

This estimable july passed to the Spiritworld from her residence in Milan, O., on the 27th of December, at the age of seventytwo years. She was born in Vermont, and at the age of nine came to Ohio, and fortyeight years ago settled with her husband on the farm which together they subdued from the wild, and made their permanent frome. He died nineteen years ago, since which time, with a devoted daughter, she has dwelt in the old homestead and managed the business of the estate. She has two children in spirit life, and four occupying influential positions here. Belonging to the old pioneers, now so rapidly passing away, widely known and beloved, her funeral called out one of the largest attendances ever gathered in this section. Hudson Tuttle. gave the discourse, introduced by the reading of a touching poem by Mrs. Emma Tut-tle. Mrs Cowan has for many years been a devoted Spiritualist, and after she had become unconscious, she aroused and with great and repeated efforts said, "I am going over the beautiful river." She was fully conscious of angelic presence and retaining her conclousness to the last, had no fear of death. What a seautiful faith and knowledge is this, which is good enough to five by and to die by!

We have great faith in truth, for God is on the side of truth. Sometimes misstate-ments and misrepresentations seem almost victorious. Money, power, influence, num-hers, associations, parties, societies, and hosts of honest but misguided men may stand on the side of error and wrong; but God is always on the side of truth, and he giveth us the victory. That which is not true must die. Errors and misrepresenta-tions must perish. They may be presented smoothly, plausibly and officially; they may be believed by good men, peddled by gos-sips, multiplied by the press, endorsed by majorities, and scattered like thistie-down where no mortal can pursue or overtake them; but they must die. All untruth is mortal. Time will chase it, justice will grapple it, God will kill it.

Stories first heard at a mother's knee are never wholly forgotten—a little spring that never quite dries up in our journey through scorching years.—Ruffin.

LIFE WITH THE SPIRITS.

By Ex Clericus.

reader with my quotations, but I was particularly desirous to show how these new truths struck the mind of an earnest inquirer of more than twenty five years ago. I remember that I had a peculiarly inter-esting time whilst at work directing these pamphlets to be sent simultaneously by mail to almost all parts of the country. My especial spirit friends and helpers were very near to me, watching with especial interest this consummation of our work, for I felt that it was fully as much theirs as mine. My clairaudient, power was then in full activity, and many a pleasant word did I receive whilst engaged in my work; from some mutual spirit friend of myself and the party to whom I was sending. Sometimes, in spirit, we would seem to go with our pamphlet in a sort of prophetic imagination, and see the asjonishment-almost consternation of some good brother, when our highly elarged missive should reach him. It was indeed an interesting and somewhat amusing time that I had with the invisible ones whilst thus engaged in sending off our pamphlets.

RESPONSES RECEIVED

As a further illustration of the state of feeling among an important class of the public at that time, I will now give some extracts from the letters of those to whom I had sent my circular. It will be seen that of a favorable character, as indeed none of the opposite kind were sent me; the narrow-minded having doubtless had the good sense to keep their narrowness to themselves in a case wherein they had so little to say from personal knowledge, or using matured reason

I will first give almost entire the letter of one who as will be seen, was even more enthusiastic and devoted than myself:

"DEAR EROTHER-I have just received and perused your testimony to the truth; and I hasten to testify to you my sense of the value of the work you have done. It is just the work 1 am glad to see. It aims at the right place. I have been myself half inclined to take upon myself such a work; but as I am yet young in the ministry, and have incurred the suspicion of insanity from some peculiarities in the way of earnestness in religious experience and utter, ance, and from some superabundant impor tations of the Holy Spirit whilst preaching at P--, I have bught best to hold my peace till my time comes.

"I communicate with spirits through my thought; that is my insanity! They write, or help me write my sermons; interpret scripture, and otherwise watch over my life. I am also susceptible to their touch. When they embrace me, I feel the spirit wave or shock passing all over me, and thrilling all through me. They have, in some instances, at the solicitation of some of my friends, spoken through me. And were I, as perhaps I ought, to give myself up to their control, I think I could become in all respects, a first-class medium. But it does so alarm some of my dear friends, among whom is my wife, that I am reluct-ant yet to forsake father, mother, etc.; but ere long. I feel that so it may-must be if they will persist in opposing me after such a flood of testimony as is now before the public, among which, allow me to say it, I regard yours as behind none. . . . The evidence is overwhelming. I can now under-stand why it was that the miracles of Jesus made so little impression on the minds of his countrymen; and something of the force of prejudice in even the most advanced and cultured minds of our boastedly liberal denomination. . . . I am with you heart and soul! I am ready to act, too, as well as speak when the time comes, and action there must We must show our conviction by our conduct, in undertaking missions and enterprises commensurate with our convictions. For one. I have fully given myself up to Christ anew in his second coming, and am prepared to break asunder from the old dispensation.... It need not surprise you at any moment to hear of me as commencing to reenact the method of disseminating the new Gospel, glad messages of the kingdom. . . . My brother, the time is at hand when one stone shall not be left upon another of the old traditions, nevertheless it will not su-percede the law of Christ. It will be to the present institutions of Christianity, what they have been to Judaism. I write thus not to hear myself talk, but as the familiar thoughts and convictions of my daily life.'

The writer of the above was then an active Christian minister in one of our westera cities. His subsequent history is not known to me, but in as much as nothing further was heard from him on this subject, taken in connection with certain intimations to be found in his letter, I have a strong suspicion that his outspoken zeal may have caused the interference of socalled friends in a way which was not so conveniently at hand in the case of those reformers who were called "mad" or crazy in ancient times.

From another letter, I make the!following extracts, the first part of A having been occupied by the writer in giving his reasons for not engaging in an active personal investigation:

'I prefer therefore, to let those who have leisure, opportunity and disposition for it, do the work of investigation, and let me avail myself of the results of their labors. I have faith in the wisdom and integrity of many who are deeply interested in the subject, and who I have no doubt, will find out as much as I could were I to devote to it the time, and thought, and effort which I now feel belong to another department of labor. . . . I hope those who are looking into the subject will not labor in vain, No doubt there are, and will be, ignorant and vain persons who will engage in it without benefit to themselves or others, but all who have become interested are not such; and if there is something important to be discovered and declared, they will bless the world with the use of their talents in this way. . . . You know that men sometimes get their train upon the track of habit, and prefer to keep it to the end of the way, rather than switch off on to a new track with the end of which they are unacquainted. The spiritual manifestations lead somewhere, and I hope if you take this track you will continue to report progress; and if you find a bridge between this world and the next. and a good depot on the other side, that we shall have a map of the route and a good ac count of discoveries made."

From still another ministerial letter, quote as follows:

"I thank you for a copy of your 'Incidents of Personal Experience, which I received last evening, and which I have just finished reading. I have read it with great interest. Indeed it is about the best thing I have ever read on the subject. It supports well the spiritual theory, whilst it hits those knowing opponents just where they will feel the

"I do not feel as confident as you do that these communications are from departed spirits, but am free to say that this the most reasonable solution of the phenomena that has come to my knowledge. It may be that there are some secret laws of mind which, if understood, would account satisfactorily for those wonderful manifestations; but to think so requires a no less stretch of credulity than to accept your side of the matter. Indeed there is nothing unreasonable in the spiritual view. It is evident that spirits have communicated with mortals, if we may credit the Old and New Testament, and why may they not again?"

I will close these quotations by giving entire a note received from one highly honofed and esteemed in political life, having been a United States Senator, and likewise governor of Wisconsin. I mean Hon. N. T. Tallmadge, afterwards well known as an active and public advocate of Spiritualism:

WASHINGTON, D. C. December 25, 1852.

Dear Sir :- I have derived much pleasure and satisfaction from a perusal of your pamphlet entitled "Incidents of Personal Experience," etc., of spirit life and action. It was loaned by Rev. O _____, an old friend and college class mate of mine Being "not published," as you observe, I am under the necessity of asking the favor of you to send me a copy. I have paid considerable attention to the subject myself, and if I had attempted to give my personal experience and views in relation to it, I could not have done it more accurately than you have put them forth in your communication above mentioned.

Very respectfully yours, N. P. TALLMADGE."

The Doctors who Need Protection.

BY R WELDON.

Apropos to the doctors' law, I wish to give some instances which have come under my own observation, of the knowledge which rad istes from the medical profession, and the peculiarities of their so called science. The names of parties are withheld, but will be given if required.

hast week a frominent young business man T Chicago, was taken suddenly ill with severe pains, and a physician was called. He carefully examined the case, and then wisely said that the patient was suffering from a tapeworm, and that he was badly afflicted with round worms. He at once prescribed a remedy which was taken until the next day, when the symptoms grew more alarming, and another physician was called This second son of Galen said the disease was white diarrhea and unless he was successful in stopping it at once, it would certainly prove fatal. Fright ened as the friends were, they were glad that they had found a physician who understood the case. The patient grew worse under the new treatment, and the friends the next day called in a "magnetic healer," who at once allayed the pain and in a few days he was restored to health. He had no "tape worm," no "white diarrhea,"-his suffering being the tesult of a severe cold. The writer had a sister Just entering a life promising great usefulness, and beloved by a wide circle of friends. She never had a sick hour in her life, and was a picture of health. While visiting some friends at a distance she thoughtlessly exposed herself, and a cold brought on a congestive chill. For this a physician who had a wide practice and quite a local celebrity for skill, gave repeated doses of morphine, until death resulted—not from the chills as much as the poison. When I stood by her grave in bittegness of heart, I felt that this dear sister was a needless-sacrifice to the pretentious ignorance of the physician. Ordinary common sense would have taught him to use stimulants and heat rather than lourly repeated doses of a poison, which lowers vital action.

The aprogant officiousness of the average 'medicine man,' I saw !llustrated a/short time since while coming north from Cincinnati. A man walking on the track was caught by the engine and violently thrown off. The train stopped, and the train hands with several passengers came to the injured man, -- among these was a doctor. He felt the pulse, rapidly examined arms and limbs, and then ostental lously said: "The man's leg is baily fractured and will have to be amputated immediately, or he will surely die."

"Die!" I replied in astonishment, "Die! Why he is already dead! Would you cut off a dead man's leg?" And so it was. The victim was dead, and thus escaped what the doctor would call a 'beautiful operation."

When the cholera raged in the city of San dusky in 18-, the famous Dr. Ackley, of Cleveland, went there and gave his medical skill to the suffering. His remedy was calomel, and he gave it in unheard of quantities. One night after he had retired, a messenger came and said, "Doctor, Mr. Brown is rapidly get ting worse." "Keep right on with the medicine," replied the doctor. In an hour the. messenger returned again, saying, "Doctor, you must come and see Mr. Brown; he is dy-Keep right on with the medicine," was the doctor's reply, as he went to sleep. An hour or two after, the messenger again return. ed and roused the sleeper, saying, "You need not come, doctor; Mr. Brown is dead." "Keep right on with the medicine," was the doctor'

Thus it is that the "regulars" have become so confined to prescribed rules and formula, that no matter what contingencies arise they "keep right on with their medicines," ever though the patient be in the pangs of death.

' If Homeopathy is true, Allopathy must be terribly false and harmful. The two systems mutually destroy each other. There is no middle ground of compromise between them. If the present practice of medicine be correct. what can be said of medical practice fifty years ago, or even !wenty five? There is no such thing as "medical science," for science means accurate knowledge, and there is nothing accurate about medical practice except the high fees rigorously collected.

I would by no means be understood as saying that all physicians are ignoramuses, or rascals. There are many cultired, noble men in the profession who seek to alleviate suffering by every art, and having learned to assist Nature rather than obstruct, leave medicines with the druggists and prescribe nursing, exercise, and a tew simples while the cure is effected. The more notable such become, the less they rely on medicines, and the more attention they give to what is called nursing These, however, do not ask for "protection;" they want none. This is demanded by the "Heroic Killers," who are a better illustration of death, with their saddle bags on arm, than the "White Horse" of the Apocalypse.

The "dear people" whom the regulars wish to protect by law from quacks, ought to know enough to realize when and by who a they re-ceive the most benefit, and if they comploy quacks, it is because they find the quacks the best, and if the difference between quacks and "regulars" is so lit le that it camot be seen, as "regulars" confess by their continuous whine for "protection," then why give the latter a monopoly of the practice?

There has not been a discovery in medicine since the time of Esculapius, but has been made outside of the regular practice, and hence by a quack. Esculapius himself and Galen were the very princes of quacks.

Talk about scientific medicine! The whole system is one of empiricism, of hit for miss trial of deadly remedies.

There was once a regular who threw all the odds and ends of prescriptions into a bottle, and when he had a case he could not diagnose, he gave doses out of this terrible bottle. have all kinds of shot in there," he complacently said, "and I fire into the bush, sure that some of them will hit the disease." The game bagged by this kind of "fire," was usually the patient Few doctors keep such a bottle, but nearly all make just such bottles out of their, patients' stomachs, if their lives are spared for a sufficient length of time.

Every lover of liberty should at once actively set to work to defeat the "doctors' law," by which the "regulars" would hold their place before the people, instead of by success in healing the sick. By this admission they confess their incapacity and failure. Now they would set themselves up as tyrants holding life and death of the community in their hands

THE DANGERS OF SPIRITUALISM.

· Letter from Mrs. E. L. Saxon.

To the Editor of the Religio-Philosophical Journal:

Every day I am more and more impressed with the fact, that the indiscriminate following of spirit guides, unless the party is actuated by the very highest and noblest motives of purity and honesty, is not only mischievous, but is doing incalculable harm to the cause of Spiritualism, as an elevating and emancipating force. T use the form of a letter to you, giving as it does, a sense of freedom and ease, that a more elaborated article would scarcely allow. Like many have for years investigated the various phases of phenomena that have ap peared, And always listened with interest to every experience that has been given by others. Being in earnest myself, striving to honestly investigate all questions, I know others are just as honest and as astute as myself, and for that reason I accept their statements.

I do not decry Spiritualism; I am an earnest believer in it, both its good and its evil phases; but I have seen more lives shipwrecked by following the indiscriminate advice of mediums, than I care ever to see again. Woe be to him who hands the reins of reason over to the invisible denizens bevond the threshold. None but a tool will follow spirit guides unless reason sanctions the action. God forbid I ever become such a driveling idiot as to do so, or cease to warn others who do.

Ten years ago I received from a source that seemed of undoubted honesty, over a hundred communications urging and commanding me to go at once on the rostrum, leaving husband, children, home. To have done so would forever have separated me from them, and have destroyed my family, as well as my own domestic happi ness. I at last replied: "I see my duty clear: it lies in my own home; if I can be of service in the world, open an honorable way to the work. You have enough divorced and unhappy women in your ranks already. I will never add to the number; not one of my family think as I do. If your power is what you claim it to be, let nobler and higher influences be brought in play; bring my dear ones all of them to think as I do, and to endorse my actions, instead of separating me from them, help me to educate them; then I am ready to do the work, never until then. I have never yielded my reason to man in the reah, I shall never yield it to one out of it and unseen."

I laid every subsequent communication on the fire, and stood square to my word. I am new in perfect accord with all I hold dear on earth, in harmony with all true men and women, whether Spiritualists or not.

A lady told me not long since an experience of her own, that will throw light upon some of the causes of communications from a class of spirits, that seem ever anxious to communicate. A name was given in an audible voice, and for her. She recognized it at once as that of a well known old acquaintance in life, who had been a gentle manly drunkard (as far as such a paradox can exist). He told her that in life he had loved her deeply, ant conscious of her love for her husband, and his desire to preserve her good opinion, he had refrained from ever making his feelings known. She said her mind was very much disturbed by his statement, and her thoughts frequently would recur to her singular communication. Soon she became conscious of some unseen presence, her dress would be pulled, fingers would seem to touch her, and with this would come desire to go and get a glass of wine. Not associating the two at first as cause and effect, she was constantly tormented with a desire new as strange, to drink wine, brandy, or whiskey, until sense and will seemed well nigh overthrown. Suddenly she roused herself, went to an old friend who had once investigated the phe nomena of spirit return, and confided all to her; by that friend's advice she railied all her forces to repel this influence, but it was not until every surrounding condition was changed, could she rid herself of the haunting influence.

Every man and woman not armed at every point, would do well to shun the promiscuous circles, and organize them among hose they personally know, and even then be very cautious in accepting evidence; for y such a circle I know as pure and lovely a oman as lives was developed, and yet the communications given her are a mass of alsehoods, with a bare grain of truth; advice, which, if followed, would engulf the unfortunate being so acting in irretrievable ruin, both financially and socially. *

I have yet to see a man of means who al owed his belief to influence him in all directions, that did not become the prey of vampires both in and out of the flash. Let hose who read these lines recall the men they know, and see if I am wrong.

I am shocked when I meet men and women who were once Spiritualists, who have now quietly withdrawn from the ranks and speak of it with pity on this very account, as strong believers in the phenomena as ever but averring it does no good.

I met yesterday a man of fine attainments: like myself he was strongly mediumistic he was in early life advised to do many things that invariably led to pain and trou ble for himself and others. He roused him self to his danger, and exerted himself against the force, calling on all higher and nobler aspirations of his nature. He de clared that henceforth nothing could influence him to follow aught save his nobier reason. This man said, "Woe to him who meets the 'dweller on the threshold and does not win in the contest, for if he fail, he becomes the prey of the unseen vampires

Bulwer had a deep meaning in his story of "Zanoni;" and it behooves all who doubt the powers of darkness, to read the book

I have seen men of the poorest health; de crepid from age, stammering with ignorance declare that their guides were developing them for great speakers or lecturers; others who had been flattered to their ruin by those who saw how easily such flattery would be accepted-promising in visions what could never be realized, and causing their poor virtue to become the jibe and sneer of all.

I have now in my mind a man who gave up a useful and paying avocation, at an advanced age, to become scribe for some tricky spirit, and turned the Bible into scurrilous raymes, sitting for four hours daily wait-ing for the outpouring of this spirit upon him; who by their advice, took what little money he possessed to make a trip around to see the various materializing mediums leaving himself and wife steeped in poverty I have seen so many good but weak people give up useful business to become useless sponges on the world, that I feel one sins in not uttering the warning cry. I am aston-ished at the vast number of Spiritualists I find everywhere, but they are not enrolled in the spiritual ranks; they are in churches and in infidel ranks. Many have retired it disgust from the spiritual ranks, owing the the very facts I hereig so frankly stated.

I certainly know that in Mrs. Simpson's case you refused to notice her until she gave you test seances, under strict test conditions, and since then you have nobly sus tained her, for she has sustained her fair fame as an honest medium, as far as know, insisting on test conditions herself. Your advice in a recent number does not look as if you were "helping the Jesuits," when you tell B N. H. what to do to investigate properly, in a circle in a private family. I can't see that you were acting in obedience to any law save that of honest common sense, which urges honesty and well sustained individuality to be preserved, instead of making one's self a weak passive tool for every low earth-bound influence to control.

You have, in some instances, gone beyond my ideas in your raids upon dishonest mediums, still I don't intend to "stop the pa-I want to know what both sides are doing, and in many instances the man who stops his paper gets his neighbor's and reads that allowed the tenth part of the license that has been allowed in the spiritual ranks to pass unscathed by retuke, and so, too, would nine tenths of the Spiritualists. It really seems as if the Spirit-world used this baser spiritual element, as a disorganizer, for there are beings fastened on the spirit usl ranks, in whose company an honest man would be ashamed to be found dead, let alone affiliating with them openly in

I am certain that many of the mediums that have been exposed are genuine in many respects, but the greed of gain induces simulated and fraudulent manifestations, when the real fail. I have recently received communications from a friend, who for years has held a circle composed of a choice few, who support their own medium, and she is unknown outside of this circle. ing beings have appeared there and given undisputed evidence of their identity, and he is a man of unquestioned repute, unknown entirely as a Spiritualist, even unfamiliar with its workings, never reading the spiritual papers. According to his state ment things of the most astounding character take place; and this is not the only one; I know of such a circle in Maine in a private house, that admits no medium save a daughter of the family, and the so-called dead come and go familiarly as living men. -In another family a little child is followed by tella things and gives tests of marvelous nature, the family striving always to conceal the fact of this child's being so used by some unseen

It is a singuar fact that what he wrote me as having been told by me, had been confided in conblence to me by the person in question. My own surmise was that another party had personated me in this interview, but subsequent occurrences have well nigh convinced me that the living spirit in the flesh, plays no inconspicuous part in these materializations, and with this light thrown up. on it, many an honest medium might be most cruelly misjudged, and by this light some circle should apply themselves to its

George White writes as follows from

Washington, D. C.: Professor Denton has closed a course of lectures on Geology in this city, which was well attended and appreciated. In his first lecture he asserted the perfect harmony existing between science and religion; as tho' he had lived in pre-historic times, his history of the world's progress was lucid and exciting His delineation of the development theory was both amusing and instruc tive. He evidently does not seek public applause at the expense of truth. His congregations were large, considering the numerous public lectures held at this season at over the city. His picture illustrations were beautiful. We can recommend him and his lectures to all inquirers into the origin of species or the progressive, destiny of man. He closed one of his lectures by a declara-tion of his views. He said, "I believe in an Infinite God, in genuine religion and in man's spiritual and unending advance-

The cheerless, soulless materialism of Underwood as expressed in one of his funeral discourses, has no place in his belief or teaching; yet he, in company with, Dr. Watson, Peebles, A. J. Davis, Bundy, Tuttle, Coleman, etc., is termed an ingrate by Gen. Edwards because he opposes and xposes the deceptions practiced at Terre Haufe and other places, and supports genu-ine instead of bogos manifestations.

Development of Mediums.

The Second Jubilee Convention of Spiritualists, was held in London, Eng., Nov. 1st and 2nd, 1879. There was much interest manifested, and the addresses were very interesting. Speaking of conducting circles. Dr. E. W. Wallis, an inspirational speaker. said:

I cannot do better than give the following for the conduct of circles for development:-First of all, let all come, as far as possible, in a good state of health, and feeling fresh and lively; persons tired, cross, and dull or, ill in body or mind, are better out than in. \ All anxiety and care must be left outside the scance room. Let it be a "hallowed hour," a "charmed circle," a "consecrated room." Frivolis and mere curiosity are not good conditions, and hatred, dislike, or distrust are worse than poison. Mediums who are beginning to be developed should not run from one circle to another and get up promiscuous sittings, and be dropping into trances at any and every hour of the day; they should discourage this on the part of the spirits, if attempted, and sit regularly and calmly in their own circles not more than three times a week, and the circle should not last over two hours. I have always found that circles opened with singing and a few minutes' silent aspiration, or trance invocation, have succeeded best. When a circle finds one or more of their number developing, they should not invite others to join them, as the introduction of a new sitter will often mar the results. Regularity and punctuality in attendence should be a condition in which each should emulate theother, and on no account should the spirits be pept waiting or disappointed. The spirit circle is a school which will develop other powers besides mediumship if properly carried on; for look at what is necessary for success, perseverance, pa-tience, gentleness, harmon sympathy, re-ceptivity, and good temper. Mediums need to feel themselves surrounded with these protecting influences, and then they can yield themselves freely and willingly to their controls. I for one do not advocate dark circles, but a "dim religious light." I regard the spirit circle as training or developing sphere for all, and when rightly employed, it is of the greatest advantage to all. But mediumship has its dangers, and is liable to abuse like all other gifts, and only the pure motives of the sitters and mediums can prove a safeguard. When once communication has been fairly established, the circle should be guided by the direction of the guides when the spirits are found to be trustworthy and intelligent, and whatever the phase of mediumship, to whichever class the medium belongs, and in whatever field he is called to labor, let it be with singleness of heart, simplicity of aim, and purity of purpose; let him ask to seek for the best gifts, for good, pure, and noble spirits to guide and guard him, and use him to the best of their ability in the efforts to discover, apply, and disseminate truth, and reveal man's spiritual nature and powers. F When mediums are thus honest and pure, and sitters trust, love, and protect their mediums, then will the Spirit-world pour out its richest blessings, and its choicest fruits of love and wisdom, and succeed in giving the grandest tests, the strongest proofs to poor toilworn and weary travel-lers of earth.

Letter from London, Eng.

DEAR SIR: -I reported to the council of the British Mational Association of Spiritualists at its meeting last evening, the fact that you had courteously inserted in your columns particulars of our discussion meetings, which I had forwarded to you.

I was requested to convey to you a vote of thanks for your courtesy, and to assure you that the association highly values all evidences of your good will.

The association, recruited by a steady accession to its ranks, is pursuing a course of useful and harmonious work; and I am happy to believe that a period of contention which we have deplored, and in which we have declined to take any part, save in the way of self-defence, is wearing itself out, and will soon die of inaution. The energies, we hope, so foolishly spent in antagonism, will now be devoted to working for the common cause. Our course, at any rate, will be in the future, and has been in the past, to strive by all means in our power to advance the knowledge of the great faith' of Spiritualism without reference to the crotchets of any party. We desire harmony.

with all honest and sincere workers.

In the belief that these principles commend themselves to you and to your readers, I wish you and them success during the coming year.

Letter from France.

To the Editor of the Retigio-Philosophical Journal:

.The Countess of Caithness desires me to write and ask you to send your paper to her at my address, as she will be there all winter. She revels in the sublime thoughts and teaching in it, and sends her best wishes, to which please allow me to add mine, for the success of your valuable paper. This is the hour of meetings; every department of life is full of them, and the closer our communion with supernal realms, the more apparent they become: Will you be kind enough to say that my address for six months will be 17 Rue de France, Nice, France, and obliges My work is wholly exoteric, and while I live, I shall be found on the side of what will bear the full sunlight of thorough investigation. You will change the Countess's address from 6 Portland Place, London, as she is now at her villa. We hope to find some here who will listen to the truth we can call.

Truly your well wisher.

Woman and the Household.

BY HESTER M. POOLE. [Metuchen, New Jersey.] -

The following poem was written several years ago, by Edna Dean Proctor, of Brook-lyn, N. Y., an authoress held in great esteem by those who are familiar with her infrequent writings. Miss Proctor's "Winter in Russia," is one of the best pen pictures extant of that country, and her poems are equally graphic. I think your readers will agree with me in calling this a genuine inspiration as well as delightful poetry:

THE RETURN OF THE DEAD. Low hung the moon, the wind was still, As slow I climbed the midnight hill,

And passed the rained garden o'er, And gained the barred and silent door, Sad welcomed by the lingering rose That, startled, shed les waning snow-

The bolt flew back with sudden clang, I entered, wall and rafter rang.
I entered, wall and rafter rang.
Down dropped the moon, and clear and high.

Then, by his side, his hand in mine, I tasted joy erene, divine.
And saw my griefs unfolding fair

GENERAL NOTES. Antoinette Brown Blackwell, the first woman Unitarian minister in this country. has taken the field as a lecturer after some years of retirement in which her pen was not idle. Her "Problems of Mind" evinced close reasoning powers and attracted much attention. Mrs. Blackwell's lecture, "Does Science prove Immortality?" creates much interest among her listeners. Josephine De Corella, a lady of Spanish extraction, ed ts and publishes a newspaper in the Spanish language, at Tuscon, Arizo-

Miss Stevens, an American girl, has or-ders from the royal family in England, for several pictures upon porcelain. She recent-ly took the highest diploma in that art, at the Kensington school.

It will be remembered that Miss Bertha Von Hillern was one of the first of women pedestrians to win success; and that afterward she disappeared from public view. It appears that she saved $8,000 from her winnings, after providing for her mother in Holland, and from the interest on this she has been living while pursuing her art stu-dies in Boston. The Woman's Journal announces that she is about to give an exhibition of her work at the instance of the many friends whom she has made by her sterling Twenty-two more nurses have graduated recently from the training school in New York city, and were gladly welcomed by even the most conservative allopathic physicians. It cannot be many years before the care of the sick will be, in a great measure, entirely in the hands of women, as there is a constant growing movement in favor of women's medical education.

Elizabeth Peabody, the originator of kin dergarten schools in this country, and an enthusiastic disciple of Froebel, organized a meeting of kindergarten teachers in Boston during the last days of the old year. Wm. T. Harris, of St. Louis, and Felix Adler, of New York city, exchanged there, methods and experiences. Miss Peabody is the sister of Mrs. Nathaniel Hawthorne and Mrs. Horace Mann, and has been a devoted friend of free education all her life. The free school organized for street waifs on the westside of New York city, by the Society of Ethical Culture, is successfully winning its way among those whom it benefits, and sets an admirable lesson to theorists in practical ethics. It is claimed that a real discovery has been made in teaching the elements of music by the means of colors. The Kindergarten Union is in communication with kindred societies in most of the distribution of the old world, and, like them, bases great hopes of the future from their universal prevalence.

For twelve years the Woman's Journal, of Boston, has been a faithful exponent of all that affects woman, including the home, education, art. literature and reform, and is the only weekly paper of the kind published east of the Rocky mountains. Its utterances are always true to the cause of good morals and the growth of the best civious the devoted and able

A Remarkable Experience.

[Correspondence Hartford Times.]

I met Mr. Wm. D. Hilton, of Providence, the other day. He used to be Superintendent of the Providence and Worcester Railroads and he told me some rather odd experiences of his own, which he gave me free permission to publish. I hardly remember how the conversation drifted from business to Spiritual ism, but it so happened; and, with some considerable animation, Mr. Hilton advocated his personal beliefs and opinions, founded, as he declares, upon the testimony of his own eyes and fars. Believing that any stories of the phenomena of Spiritualism, which are authentic, so far as the undoubted veracity of the narrator, is concerned, will prove interesting to your readers. I give you as exactly as is possible a transcript of this rather extraordinary conversation: "I think the most remark able instance of supernatural interference for the benefit of humanity, which I have personal knowledge of," said Mr. Hilton, "occurred when I was in the freight department of the Providence and Worcester Railroad. As the tracks entered the depot here, some few rods up the road, there was a combination of switches, which, if covered by a standing train, could not be rearranged, so that a down train would, unless signaled to stop, inevitably rush directly on to whatever stood in the way. One night the freight train, which always arrived in time to make its changes and get out of the way before the Shore Line Express should arrive, was late.

There were but twenty five minutes to make all arrangements and clear the track. This was no unusual occurrence, and, as the signal red light at the masthead was up and brightly burning, there was no apparent danger or any thing to produce the slightest nervousness The delays very frequently occurred, and were thus provided for by the signal. I remember very distinctly, however, that on this occasion I walked out to the very end of the depot platform, and that Vauddenly heard in my ear these words, twice repeated, and with impressive distinctness; "Hilton, the light will go out! Hilton, the light will go out! The sound was so positive, and struck me with such strange power, that I instantly looked at my watch, saw that the Shore Line Ex press was due in three minutes, grabbed the red lantern on the last car of the freight train, and ran up the track with all the speed of which I was capable. Along I fairly flew, impelled by some strange intuition that there was danger, and never questioning for an in stant, as I ran, why I was running, or what I was to do. Arrived at the first end of the curve near the Gorliss engine work. I stopped, and for an instant turned and looked back at the red light. It was burning, but in a second it fluttered a little, and suddenly went out. A world of emotions then seemed to rush through my mind, for the light of the on-coming express already illuminated the rails. I swung my lastern round and round, shouted, and danced up and down in my terrible anxiety. It seemed a thousand years before I heard the whistle for down brakes. The fate of that crowded train, the horrible telescoping of the cars as they would inevitably crush into that soljd, freight train, seemed to rise like a vision of Hades before me. But at last the engine was stopped. Without indicating to him his previous danger, I informed the engineer that the signal had gone out, and that I was stawarn 74m, and started back to the depot. When I got to the switch I found the switchman running round and round it, almost mad with terror, for he could not light the treacherons hantern, and had anticipated a most horrible disaster. When he saw me, and heard that all was safe, he gut his arms about me and he-we-well, he cried like a child, and I believe I offered up a prayer of praise and thanksgiving. I immediately established a series of three lights as signals, so that nothing of the kind could possibly occur again.'

We examined the light, and could see no possible reason why it should have gone out It was full of oil, with a perfect wick, and there was no wind blowing, although, if there had been, it should have remained burning, as it had before, through many a storm. Now, what was it that spoke in my car? What was it that forced me to save that train? There were ordinarily but two passenger cars on the express, and this night there were seven, all BOYNTON'S OFFERING of Poetry and Song (No. I), being the "Garnered Sheaves of thought, gleaned from the harvest of years. Price 15 cents. Warren Boynton, Reckford, Ill.

It appears from the preface of Mr. Boynton's offering, that the author "has endeavored to give the words of the translation by Ossian's Poeses as nearly as possible; which will explain with it is so different from the literature of the present time. The reader must remember that these are the sayings of 'olden time,' some eighteen hundred years' ago, among a semi-civilized people. Oasian was the son of Fingal, King of Scotland, who flourished about the beginning of the third century of our era. He was a poet and chieftain. . His poems are traditions and legends of former ages, embracing, also, the age in which he lived, and have been handed down through many generations, like the poems of Homer. Upon revival of letters in Europe, some Scottish bard transmitted them to future generations, in the old Gaelic language. They have been echoing through the highlands of Scotland for nearly two thousand years. They were translated into English about the middle of the seventeenth century, by James McPherson, of Scotland, in their original style of poetic prose. The author of this work is now versifying them with the fond hope that they will be appreciated by others as well as himself."

The Daily News, of Rockford, Ill., says:
"Warren Boynton, an aged war vetersh and a Rickford citizen has interpreted by the says."

a Rockford citizen, has just published a small volume of original poems. The work is very interesting and is worthy of perusal." John G. Whittier says: "Permit me to thank thee for thy lines." The Philadelphia North American says: "Having the poetry, he will print it, and being an invalid soldier, the people will only it. We trust Mr. Boynton's labors will be productive of comfort and profit to him."

Those who desira to aid an old soldier and the soldier will be productive of comfort and profit to him."

SHAKER SERMONS, SCRISTO-RATIONAL.

The Substance of Shaker Theology, with Replies and Criticisms By H. L. Eads, Bishop of South Union, Kv. Published at Shaker Manifesto Office, Shakers, New York, 500 pages.

The title page of this book is given, to convey an idea of its aim and scope, yet that is made still more clear by these words on that same page:

"The supreme good in the mind is the knowledge of God, and the highest virtue of the mind is to know God."—Spingest.
"There is no soul so feeble but that, well directed it may attain to absolute control over the (animal) passions."—Descrites.

"And this is life eternal, that they might know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom Thou has sent."-Christ, The handsome engraving of a portrait of the author faces the title page, and shows a countenance and head betokening peace, cheerfulness, harmony of character, energy and capacity. The few lines of preface tell of his being a Shaker from infancy, speak of the sermons as embracing "nearly or quite every feature of Shaker polity," and think they will-be "highly appreciated by many as a book of reference on Shakerism," of which the author "is a most excellent representation" in his life and thought, and close by saying that his life and works give a renewed "confidence that virgin purity, non-resistance, peace, equality of inheritance and unspottedness from the world-the fundamental principles of Shak. erism--have not been, nor are they, preached and practiced in vain."

Thus we have an effort to explain and illus trate the ideas and lives of a peculiar people, who are held by many as fanatical and foolish, but who have views and aimsfull of value and spiritual beauty, with some theories not so easy to square with our ideas of the most natural and true life. There is a wide range of topics, a copiousness of argument and intuitive statements, and a variety of subjects that make any summary or symopsis difficult, and we give the titles of some discourses to lodicate their contents. Harmony of Truth; Duality of God; Plato and Locke; Final Consummation; Perverted Amativeness; Revelation subject to Reason; Christ in the Female; The Devil; Spinoza; Conception of Christ; Orthodoxy and Spiritualism; Tyndall; Dr. McCosh; Analysis of Shakerism; Has Jesus followers; God's Word; The Judgment of Sin; Infidel Mistakes, reply to Robert G. Ingersolf, are only a part of the sermons and reviews.

A spiritualized rationalism wedded to a tender reverence, a transcendental faith in intuition-the voice within-and a quaint and Ane attachment to Scripture teachings a divine and beautiful desire for self-poise, for the su-premacy of the sprit over the senses, for the fidelity and purity and spiritual culture which alone bring inward peace and joy and inspiration, are manifest in this book, and are indeed the finer and higher elements of Shakerism, in which the world and the church of to-day, might well learn from them.

There is an occasional coarseness in the allusions to the relations of men and women, in singular contrast with the delicate tenderness of other passages. The facts of Spiritualism are accepted, with due care, and the remarkable manifestations in their Shaker families are held as genuine. They are Spiritualists, yet hold these views in a high and truly spirit val sense. The criticism of Ingersoil is the best yet published, and aims fairly to show the detects of his materialism. Whoever would learn of Shakerism, from one who has given care and study to a statement of the cherished faith and devoted practice of his life, would do well to read this book.

YOU THE SPEEDY RELIEF OF

Fever and Ague, Intermittent Fever. Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Billious Fever, &c., and indeed all the affections which arise from malarfous, marsh, or miasmatic poisons.

Has been widely used during the last iwentyfive years, in the treatment of these distressing diseases, and with such unvarying success that it has gained the reputation of being infallible. Pre shakes, or chills once broken by it, do not return, until the disease is contracted again. This has made it as accepted remedy, and trusted specific, for the Fever and Ague of the West, and the Chilis and Fever of the South.

Ayer's Ague Core eradicates the noxious poison from the system, and leaves the patient as well as before the attack: It thoroughly expels the disease, so that no Liver Complaints, Rhematism, Neuralgia; Dysentery or Debility follow the care. Indeed, where Disorders of the Liver and Bowels have or curred from Miasmatic Poison, it removes the cause of them and they disappear. Not only is it an effectual cure, but, if taken occasionally by patients exposed to malaria, it will ex-pel the poison and protect them from attack. Transfers and temporary residents in Fever and Agus localities are thesen-abled to defy the disease. The General Debility which is so apt to enone from continued exposure to Maiaria and Hissm. has no speedler remedy. For Liver-Complaints, it is an excellent remedy.

Spiritualism-Its Ground of Unity.

Underneath differences and variety is the ground of unity. We may disagree, or even dispute, about personal merits or demerits; we may differ as to the value or reliability of facts; we may prize this or that form of mediumship more or less. All these are matters of individual character and temperament, and, while temper and patience may be tod, we would do well to think what a dull and monotonous world this would be if all were cast in one mould, all souls and bodies of one cast and pattern. It is Nature's variety that makes Nature's harmony, and this wondrous variety in humanity gives life and stimulus and ministers to growth and unfolding development.

No people perhaps are more frank and outspoken, if any are as much so, as the Spiritualists. The movement seems an incentive to individuality. We once heard of a spirit message through a medium that seems rational enough to be worthy a spiritual origin; the question was asked of the communicating intelligence, "Why do not Spiritualists organize?" and the answer came: "We, in the Spirit-world, are trying to do the best we can for our friends on earth, and we have looked over the ground with some care. So far as we can see and judge the first work to be done is to help men and women to be themselves, to stand alone without any creeds for crutches, to think freely for themselves. This we are trying to do, and when this gets far enough we shall try to help you organize for mutual help and growth, and the executive force that unity gives."

So this individuality is the schoolmaster leading us to a true and free unity-a unity in essentials, a variety in non-essentials. But meanwhile it is trying, when, in the new enthusiasm of our freedom we assert and dispute and wax hot to the loss of our serenity of spirit and wise balance. To be wisely and truly free is a great lesson," learned only by time and thought and ex perience. It is true that the millions of freedmen make poor use often of their emancipation from chattel slavery in our land,-their freedom bought with the great price of precious blood and hard-earned treasure, but that is no reason why they should again wear fetters or be bought and sold like cattle. Thinking men all over the land can see, even at this early day, their growth toward a higher future. So with the spiritual freedmen, emancipated by millions in the last score of years from the thraldom of creeds and sects, they are often willful, opinionated, facking in reverence, inharmonious, blunt and rude of speech, and given to doubtful disputations. All this is no reason why they should be bound in spirit again. We can see that they, too, are on the upward path and that their freedom, as they come to know how to use it wisely, will bring harmony and power.

What is the ground of unity for true Spiritualists, underneath all this difference that we see and feel? It is the great truth, -so rare and sweet and full of inspiring light and power-that the life beyond is real and. that we know our friends live, and can and do reach us through the soul and the senses. As we reach to this truth we stand together, and "the unity of the spirit is the bond of peace" between us all. We do not forget justice, but heavenly charity draws nearer. We are of one great family, partly here but more in the heavenly mansions. Here and there we are to grow in harmony and wisdom and "to put away childish things." In the light of this heavenly truth the jar and clash and heat of prejudice and passion soften, and we feel the fraternity of a common and uplifting inspiration.

The Pilgrim filled our office with his genial spiritual magnetism on the last day of the old year, en route to Battle Creek to spend New Year's day with relatives; from there he goes to Willoughby, Ohio, to fill an engagement. Dr. Peebles is apparently growing more robust with increasing age and bids fair to be an active worker for twenty years yet.

The Doctor's Plot-A Blg Cat in the Meal

Our reporter, in an interview with the editor of the Chicago Medical Examiner, a new semi-monthly journal in the interest of the "regular" practice of medicine, succeeded in drawing out the plan and object of the Allopathists in establishing "Boards · 6 mos.,....$1.25 of Health" and procuring the enactment of stringent laws relating to the practice of medicine. The "regular" editor said, in

"In order to accomplish anything successful in the future we must for the present unite with the quacks. It is well known that most of those who profess to be Homeopathlets and Eclertics are ignorant quacks. But I am in favor of extending our "code of ethics" goo as to counsel with them. In no other way can we so effectually show up their ignorance. The few educated and worthy men among them will soon be brought to Join us and then we can drive out the rest. I would not treat them as I would a "regular" physician in consultation, but would hold the consultation in the presence of the family, so that I would not give them an opportunity to lie about what was said. For my own part I am ready to perform a surgical operation for any of them, and if the Medical Society desire to make any fusa about it I will dely them. There has been a good many thousand dollars put into this journal and its encess is secured, and it will labor to secure these objects. I may take five or six years to bring it about, but when we have absorbed all the educated and talented physicians from the ranks of Homeopathy and Eclecticish we shall discard the balance and procure laws to suppress them."

This is just what we said a year or more ago. The Allopathists will appear to combine with the Homeopathists and Eclectics as long as they can use them, and when they think they will need their assistance no longer will turn upon these accomplices and in the end crush them.

Who among the liberal practitioners is prepared or preparing to sell his principles for place or power among these conscienceless medical bigots, and thus help on the work of destroying his old time friends and co-laborers, rather than stand up for his principles and fight manfully for that freedom which is his and their inalienable birthright?

It is time for the liberals in medicine to withdraw from all association with those who are combining for their destruction. The only way to avert the ultimate fulfillment of the intended onslaught is to at once withdraw from all participation in the "Board of Health" as organized, and to demand equality before the law. To do this they must recognize the rights of genuine healing mediums and extend to them the "right hand of fellowship;" otherwise they will find they have been sowing dragon

Spiritualism in Sweden.

Two eminent professors of Sweden have furnished for the London Spiritualist, an account of a scance held at Stockholm, by Mr. Eglinton, of London, England. It appears from the account given, that the scances were held at the house of an honored family. The room in which they took place was closely inspected before the beginning of the scance, but nothing unusual was discovered. The circle was composed of ten persons. On the table were placed a guitar, a musical box, and a small bell, all of which had been procured at a music shop in town. All hands were put on the table so as to form a chain, nobody being able to move a finger without his neighbor noticing it. The perons sitting next the Englishman closely observing his slightest movements. The lights were extinguished, but as the adjoining rooms were lighted up, which could be clearly seen through the crevices of the door, nobody could enter the room that was being used for the séance without being observed. After waiting for a few moments, the conversation still going on, the things lying on the table were beginning to move about. The guitar was touched and, to judge by the sounds proceeding from the playing, was hovering about the room near the ceiting. In returning to its former place, several persons were lightly touched by it. Then the musical box began playing, and was carried over the heads to a corner of the room, till it finished playing; then it came back to the table and began playing again. The key was to be heard winding up the box by itself. At that moment one of the Swedish persons present asked if the musical box would stop playing, which was immediately done, then to go on playing again very fast. He was obliged at once the box playing even much faster than its usual time. After, the scance was at an end, it was observed that a large sofa standing near the wall had been moved nearly a yard from its usual place. During all this time the Englishman's hands were not let go for one moment. When the candle was lighted many things had been displaced in

Mrs. E. L. Saxon contributes an article for this issue which every experienced reader will admit contains a world of truth. These are grave matters of which she so eloquently and effectively speaks, and they require the careful attention of all candid intelligent people who have the true interests of Spiritualism and humanity at heart. We need more just such free, outspoken and talented exponents as is Mrs. Saxon, to come to the front at this time and aid in carrying forward the all-important educational phase of Spiritualism. All should see that it is high time to pass from the crude and 'rudimentary stages; inquirers must be taught that in turning from the blind faith and worship demanded by the church, to Spiritualism, requires a careful ed. ucational course, and that substituting blind faith in and subjection of the will to the denizens of the Spirit-world in place of the old creeds, is but changing one form of superstition for another, and that other a thousand times more demoralizing than the old one. By the regular processes of evolution, gross superstition and fanaticism are gradually being eliminated. Let every reader see to it that he does his part in the work.

The "Editor-at-Large" Scheme Again.

We exceedingly regret that the reasons we gave for not advocating Prof. Brittan's editor-at-large scheme, should seem to bring us in antagonism with that worthy gentleman. We endeavored to be as considerate as possible, and we think our readers will say that our bill of exceptions taken as a whole, is good and capable of being in the main sustained, and yet that it is kindly and appreciative toward Dr. Brittan. In the last issue of the Banner of Light, Dr. Brittan has an article over his own name on the subject in which, after stating that he has in the past had articles published in the Tribune and Times of New York, etc., he adds:

"In view of these facts it will be perceived that the mere speculators in the chances of our obtaining such recognition, and the captious critics who imagine it will be necessary to raise a separate fund to pay for the insertion of such contributions as advertisements, have no more substantial foundation for their opinions than the idle vagaries of the unwilling mind, and a manifest lack of knowledge of what has already been accomplished.

"Articles forwarded to the press from the Editor-at-Large Bureau, if finally declined will probably be published in the Banner of Light, together with such reasons as may be assigned for their rejection."

We deplore the effect that our well intentioned article seems to bave produced on our most excellent brother. We submit that it is mere speculation as to whether leading papers will publish his articles, hence the covert sarcasm in the phrase "mere speculators" grieves us. Again, we appeal to the spiritualistic public to know, if our article warranted Prof. Brittan's use of the term captious critics." True, he has so worded his letter that the readers of the Banner who do not see the JOURNAL will not know that he refers to us, yet it is apparent what he means, though it is discreet not to let the mass of his readers know from whence the objections to his scheme come-when we speak of the scheme as one of Dr. Brit tan's own conception we speak advisedly and from personal knowledge. Furthermore, we did not speak from "lack of knowl edge of what has already been accomplished," but on the contrary with a full knowledge thereof.

The kernel of this nut is laid bare in the second paragraph quoted from Dr. Brittan So after all Bro. Brittan is to be paid by the general public for writing articles which will probably be published in the Banner of Light.' That is good! Very good! The probability is so near a certainty that it is safe to say a very large proportion of the articles will certainly be published in the

To this we have no objection; what we do object to is the attempt to foist an eleemos ynary scheme upon the public in this way; and too, there are very grave doubts as to whether some of the subscriptions as published are bona fide. We do not say they. are not; far be it from us to make such a grave and dâmning assertion, but we simply state a fact when we say there is a wide. spread doubt on the subject.

We are authorized to and do hereby offer to the editor of the Banner of Light, 825 toward the fund if he will produce the evidence on demand of our attorney, which shall prove that the purported donation of $500 was bona fide. It is not essential that the name of the donor be made public. If the proposition is accepted we will name our attorney, place the money in his hands, and on receipt of his report will publish the same, and thus either allay or confirm the suspicions now held by many including representative people who are perfectly friendly toward both Dr. Brittan and our Boston contemporary.

Dr. Heinrigh Tiedemann, the author of "Four Essays on Spiritism," published by the Religio-Philosophical Publishing House, a son of the great German anatomist of that name, thus speaks of Spiritualism:-

"I am even more than ever convinced that it is for the family, more than for the public, which in its present state of culture is more eager after horrible mysteries and coarse materializations. When facts and mysteries are blended and given to average minds they become bewildered and throw one or the other overboard Spiritism may be in union with any of the existing religious systems, but it is a lamentable and ruinous mistake to combine it with any. It must free itself from all before it can become a religion of itsalf. All true found ers and reformers of religion, were Spiritualists, necessarily, for religion rests on Spiritism, and depends on it for its existence. Spiritualism must become a religion of itself, through itself; but must be autocratic, and thereby supplant all other systems. The good in all other systems, disrobed of dogmas will be absorbed by the Dogmas always breed corruption, and hence require successive reformers, who are only repairing old evils; and never make anything lasting because they work with corrupt material. Spiritism must be a re-ligion which requires no reforming, but of sternal development like the spirit itself."

We are pleased to learn that our esteemed friend and valued contributor, Mr. Epes Sargent, is improving very slightly in health. If it is possible for the Spirit-world to aid in restoring his physical system to its old vigor, it will be the best piece of work. for Spiritualism that can be done. Without disparagement to others, we survey the field and fail to find, one who can entirely supply his place when he shall pass to spirit

Interesting Mesmeric Experience of Mrs. Anna Cora Mowatt.

A correspondent of the Inter Ocean, interviewing Mrs. Davenport, the mother of the celebrated Davenport family, and herself addistinguished actress, ellicited from her the following interesting account of the trance life of the famous Mrs. Mowatt. On her alluding to this amiable and "Then you knew Mrs. Howatt wery

Yes, indeed; she was one of the warmest friends I ever had, and she died in my arms. She was a very gifted and lovely woman, though I think her literary ex-ceeded her dramatic ability:"

"Is it true that Mrs. Mowatt was a firm believer in mesmerism?" Yes, and I can tell you an incident in her life that will, prove it, and I do not think has ever been published. Soon after I was married Mr. Mowatt was sent to Jamaica for his health, and before he left, at his urgent request, we went to reside with his wife, in order to make it less lonely for her. She was subject to hemorrhages from the lungs, and on several occasions when they were so extreme as to prove dangerous, her life was saved by

THE EXERCISE OF MESMERISM. She refers to this in her autobiography. Twice during her life she was made temp-orarily insane; once by the loss of a brother who, in her sight, was drowned at sea, and again when her mother died. The wird at-tack was brought on by bad news from America, and she became so violently insane that the physicians declared she must be sent to an asylum. This was when we were living together, and my husband knowing how beneficial meameric influence had proved, asked the doctor's consent to keeping her at home under a sustained in-fluence, trusting that the attack would wear itself away. They consented to the experiment, and she then went into a sleep which lasted three months." Not without food ?"

"Oh, no; she would occasionally rouse up, eat, drink, and talk, prescribing for herself. She lay in bed or on a sofa, dressed in a pale blue wrapper, and cap of delicate white lace. She looked almost

LIKE A SPIRIT.

Throughout she called herself 'Gypsy,' and would not allow the word to be spelled in any other way but in this, which, you know, signifies Truth. She referred to her former. self as 'Simpleton,' or more frequently as 'Simpy,' and her voice acquired a peculiarily wide-awake tone. She never opened her eyes, but could write equally well, and, by placing a sealed letter on her forehead, would reveal the contents. Of course, this event, in spite of our efforts, became noised about, and attracted much comment, especially from the medical profession.

"Did any eminent physicians visit her?"
"Yes; it happened that during this time my daughter Fanny was born, and the wellknown Dr. Westmacott, a nephew of the famous sculptor, was in attendance upon me. One day he jokingly inquired, "What is all this I hear about your clairvoyant patient." I told him the truth, and, of of course, as he believed in nothing of the kind, he 'poohpoohed.' A little out of patience, I asked him if he would see her, and he promised to one condition that I would he promised to, on condition that I would not mention his name or possible call. A week or two afterward he came to vacci-nate Fanny, and after it was over I saked him to go up stairs with me. When he reached the upper hall I motioned him to wait, and advanced to the door of the room, but almost before I entered Mrs. Mowatt called out in her clear, bird-like voice, Fanny, dear, you can bring your doctor in with you."

"I assure you we were both astonished. When he advanced to the bedside she said, 'Oh, you do not believe, you doubt, but Gypay will prove strange things to you.' Dr. Westmacott replied pleasantly, No.you are right; I do not believe, but I am open to conviction, but (he concluded, laughing) it would be a sorry truth for a physician to find his patients able to take care of and prescribe for themselves, as they say you

The doctor then seated himself and began questioning her, which she interrupted him

The Doctor looked disconcerted for a soment, but replied: "You are quite right, I have a package for you, and if without opening your eyes, or the package, you can tell me what it contains. I will believe at least that you are not humbugging us all."

So saying, he drew from his coat-pocket a flat package heavily wrapped in thick brown paper, securely tied and sealed with wax. Without hesitating Mrs. Mowatt, her fair face shining with intelligence, took hold of the package and placed it against her form head. In a moment she exclaimed, "O, what a strange old man; he looks like a To, what

My Association with the People of the Other World.

BY MRS. AWANDA M. SPENCE.

NUMBER NINE

In my last article, I put apon record a hitherto unwritten chapter in the history of the Utica Convention. In this article, ia further illustration of the power of spirits to control vast bodies of excited people, I shall present the reader with an equally remarkable chapter in the history of an equalcelebrated convention-a chapter which likewise resembles the one that I have recorded of the Utica Convention, in the fact that, so far as I know, it was not published, or even referred to, in any of the spiritual papers of that day or since; and it may therefore, like the other, be called an unwritten chapter, so far at least as the spiritual papers are concerned. It was published, however, somewhat at length, by one and, so far as I know, only one paper in the United States, the New York Tribune of Sept. 21st, 1858.

As I stated in my last article, the Utica Convention lasted three days, beginning Friday morning and closing Sunday evening. Just one week afterwards, the celebrated Kiantone Convention came off, beginning also on Friday and closing on Sunday. Of this convention I had heard nothing until I reached Utica.

From-Utica, my friend Mrs. McCormick and myself went to visit our children at Jamestown, N. Y., where they were at school. There we met quite a number of persons who intended to go to the convention at Kiantone, which is only seven miles distant from Jamestown. Though strongly urged to accompany them during the first days of the convention, yet I declined. On Sunday, however, Dr. Wellington procured a large hay wagon, fitted it up with a row of seats on each side, and in it some twelve or fifteen of us made our way over to Kian-As soon as we started a feeling of great depression came over me, so that, without knowing why, I-wept during the greater part of the journey.

The convention had been called by a party

Spiritualists who were then living at Kiantone in a kind of camp life, in the expectation of eventually establishing a great city and a new order of things on earth. In this they were, as they believed, to be aided by a host of ancient spirits who formerly lived in that same locality, in what was called the Harmonial City, which some great convulsion of the earth had swallowed up. burying an immense amount of treasures that were now to be recovered and used in the re-establishment on earth of a state of things similar to that which existed in the Harmonial City at the time of its destruction, beginning with the people already hy-

ing at Kiantone as a nucleus. With this Kiantone movement, I had not the slightest sympathy. And I will here say that I bave never had the slightest sympathy or least feeling of co-operation with any of the numerous attempts that have already been made, or are now being made, to organize Spiritualism, and to circumscribe and isolate Spir hualists from the rest of the world. That would make them simply an excrescence which would surely and deservedly slough off, and die. To be a power in the world, whether for good or for eyil, Spiritualists must remain incorporated into the heart and core of the world. At the Kiantone Convention, therefore, as at the one at Utica, I considered mysel? simply a spectator-an observer-not a cooperator. I was, however, treated with the politeness and civility due to one who had for years labored earnestly, continuously, self sacrificingly, and, I believe, not inefficiently, in the spiritual movement; and a delegation of two speakers was sent to in-vite me to occupy the public platform, and to participate with them as a speaker. This, however, I had to decline; and after walking around and taking a general survey of the people, the houses, and the peculiarities and salient points of the experiment there commenced in the new order of things, I returned to my seat in the hay wagon which had conveyed me to the grounds.

Sometime in the afternoon, a lady, said to be a medium arose on the platform, and began to ridicule and burlesque the project-ed new order of things on earth and the people who were engaged in it. A large majority of the vast multitude who listene i to her remarks, were totally ignorant of the actual doings and expectations of the people who had located at Kiantone, until they were revealed in their most ridiculous and offensive aspect by this lady speaker, who, by the way, had been the prime mover in having the convention called. Her re-marks created an intense excitement in the immense concourse of five or six thousand people there assembled. This excitement soon took a riotous form, and the lady speaker had to be removed from the plat-form by her friends. The rioters, however, form by her friends. The rioters, however, rescued her from them, and placing her in an open wagon, surrounded it to protect her, and told her to go on with her exposure. In the meantime another crowd cleared the platform of all the speakers, and other occupants, and taking possession of it themselves, gave vent to the wildest and most excited denunciations of every body and every thing connected with the Kiantone organization for the inaugustation of the new order of things on earth. The contagious excitement spread throughout the entire assembly; and, in the fury of wild and clamorous contentions, hot, menacing

I rose to my feet in the hay wagon. A power superior to myself had full posession of both my mind and my body. I have no recollection of what I said beyond the fact that I appealed to the constitutional rights of American citizens to the undisturbed exercise and enjoyment of their religious opinions. Soon the most profound silence succeeded the tumultuous uproar, and, at the close of a speech of about an hour's du-ration, the vast assembly which had crowd-ed up closely around the hay wagon in which I stood, gave expression, in tones both loud and long, to their appreciation and approv-al of what had been said. I remained standing in my wagon for still another hour receiving the hand-shaking, thanks, and congratulations of hundreds, many of whom believed that my mediumship had been the means of saving the convention from a fearful riot. Among the number was a gentleman who climbed into the wagon, and extending his hand to me, exclaimed: "I have seen a emiracle performed to day. I am a reporter for the New York Tribune and, with your permission, although I am not a Spiritualist, and know nothing of Spiritualism, I wish to make a report of what has occurred. I of course assented, with the request, however, that he would do sustice to those who were engaged in the Kanttone movement, as I believed them to be honest, however much I might differ from them in opinion. Histeport appeared in the New York Tribune of Sept. 21st, 1858. From it I make the following extracts: "Following Dr. W., John Sterling, areatle of Treasures, attempted to speak, but-a clear ringing voice was heard in another part of the grounds, and thither the vast multitude was swayed, leaving the aforesaid apostle without an auditor. Mrs. A. M. Britt [now Mrs. A. M. Spence] of St. Louis, had commenced a speech, and that speech was the great event of the conven-tion. . . . When her voice was first heard, several hundred of the worst character of rowdies swarmed about the carriage in which she was standing, howling and blaspheming like so many demons, and evident ly intent on driving her from the ground. But the voice of the speaker was firm, though musical, and fell with a pacifying potency upon the ears of the ruffians. Then she assured them that they were not in the blame for the disturbance—it was wrongly organized society. They were only giving vent to the freedom of their young hearts. She bad perfect confidence that they would yield her their attention, since she kindly and affectionately invited them to hear her speak. And that confidence was not mis-placed. The confusion ceased at once, and speak. an almost perfect silence reigned during the flour she was addressing the conven-tion. Indeed, the speaker proved herself an orator of rare power and accomplishment, Her speech, saying nothing of the sentiment expressed-and even that was not very censurable-was far more eloquent and impressive than any other feminine address to which I ever listened. The thousands who heard it were lavish in their expressions of gradification. Several ladies came with streaming eyes to thank the orator and yield assent to the sentiments and opinions advanced."

HARMONIAL PHILOSOPHY. The Sea of Life.

BY O. W. BARNARD.

When the tide goes out on the sea of life, And the waves roll back in their ceaseless strife, Against the rock of hope,—the strength of years Then on the shores of Time, are grief and tears,

We mourn when the bark goes out from the shore, For it unto us, returns never more, We thick of it then, the rock and the gale, As over strange seas it ever must sail.

A wanderer ione on the mighty abysa, Like a doomed soul that is banished from bliss. No compass or helm 'mid icebergs and snow, In darkness Piutopic forever to go.

Our fears when a boat sails away from shore, That it unto us returns sever more, Are but the shadows of weakness and dread,— Offspring of darkness, by ignorance fed;

Mere phantoms and myths that flit past our sight Like mist on the mountain when cometh the light, Or like owls and bats that soon fice away, When the light of the morn ushers in the day.

The ebb of the tide as we all must know, is no more a truth than that of its flow, This ceaseless action under laws control, Extends to the parts and embraces the whole.

Throughout this vast sea wise laws govern all.

And nothing is lost either great or small, No wrecks are found on its pearly strand, And no Trace of death 'mid its golden sand.

Of fathomiess depth is this mighty sea. Its width as boundless as infinity, And countless sails do on its bosom ride, With the ebb and flow of its mighty tide

All there is of life is this boundless sea, othing else there is-nothing else can be. So there is no death, but universal life, And eternal motion's but apparent strife.

Communication from Sarah E. Somerby, M. D.

I look upon the Journal as the standard paper for the representation of a true Spiritualism; the for the representation of a true Spiritualism; the multiform communications from the many writers who are admitted to its columns, are tending to prove to the world that Spiritualism is not only philosophicab but strictly scientific, and while we claim to tand upon a perfectly moral basis, we are prepared to renture into a strict analysis of all subjects the scientific world lays claim to; and here we boldly declare that nothing can be proved scientifically without dealing with the spiritual as well as the physical. The very reason why so many things, claiming to be of a scientific nature, have been disproved and exploded, has been because, only their material side had been investigated and represented.

Spiritualism teaches us that the phenomena occurring, are only the effects of the cause or inner life behind them. We are lead always to a scien-tific analysis of the force or cause controlling phenomena; for instance, let a few persons assemble together and form what I would call a de-veloping circle; that is, make themselves passive to receive whatever sensation may come to them mentally or physically; they will soon find that they are more or less influenced or governed by the spiritual forces lying back of all corporeal ex-istences, and that there is a world full of animat-ed life, which can only be taken hold of by us through our interior consciousness, or through that spiritual part of us, which is destined to survive the physical. Our spirits meet and blend for time being with the dear departed ones; we see and converse with them; we feel their celestial magnetism, and we are spiritualized thereby. By the cultivation of our spirit senses, we may soon become adepta in the recognition of the peculiar sphere or influence which may come from each spirit that, approaches us. Let me illustrate: I believe I have seen from my interior vision, John Birman and Thomas Police of the converse of Pierpont and Thomas Paine: these persons differ so essentially that I can at once detective one from the other, and, although they have arrived at the same truth, they each take their own particular way to bring it, forth their own particular way to bring it forth and present it. I know by this that indi-viduality is never lost, and it is this fact that makes Spiritualism a distinct religion, and trancendently superior to all other forms. The orthodox world claims a belief in immortality, but it gives no rational definition of it; if it does attempt a definition it is an unnatural and absurd

one. The materialist or so called positive philosopher, is not, we claim, scientific either in his logic or in his conclusions. Is it not absurd to claim that matter in and of itself, is either creative or destructive; that it has any power to shape or mold itsetf whatever? I can conceive of no greater blunder a person can fall into, than to say that matter can develope from itself either soul or spirit, but it is quite rational to say that there is a life or force acting upon all material substances, which will select and appropriate whatever it has need of for its own individual necessities and develop-

I claim that in the germ lies all the potentialities or possibilities of the future growth, and in it is determined what the finality shall be; that is as to whether it shall be man, beast, or insect. Neithe of these can be developed from, or amalgamated into the other; could such amalgamations take place, this condition of things would be disastrous n the extreme; all would be disorder and uncertainty, and the very planets could not revolve in space as they do now, with their wonderfully pre-cision. Who of us doubts when we lay down at night that the morn will break upon us? Then why doubt the continuity of a life, which is, and ever must be, founded in and controlled by imputable law?

Spirit in its. pure essence is ominpotent and eternal, but the form it may choose to dwell in, is ever changing, and evanescent spirit in man becomes a constructive intelligence, and by will power is able to maintain a distinct individuality, power is able to maintain a distinct individuality, and by no means can be be deprived of this, for he is daily adding to, and increasing in, strength of will and purpose. He may apparently be acting under the influence of his surroundings, but they can never bias him to the extent of injuring him in his essential being. His physical organization may take much from his parents; he may inherit either health or disease from them; and this may effect his mental state, and to the extent of coneffect his mental state, and to the extent of con-tinuing even after the dissolution of the mortal body, but all of these thlogs are not inimical to the true development of the real spiritual man. He remains unswerved and undaunted, knowing that, it is just as necessary for him to mingle with, and feel the discords of life, as to realize its harmonies; but the very fact that he can never enjoy discord, as he does the harmony, proves him to be destined in time, and by growth, to stand above and beyond all present necessities and to become, what he really is a very God in power and divini-ty. I dare not enlarge further upon this great subject, but will leave it for our beautiful faith, a divina Spiritualism to gradually unfold and elucidate it to the truth seeker.

W. De Clarenze, D. M., writes: I have read with some interest the article in your issue of Nov. 23ac, from the pen of Bro. H. H. Brown, on The Bennett Exposure, and can heartily in-dorse what he says. I think Liberals and Spirit-ualists should rid themselves of all those libentious hypocrites, and by their examples set a bet-ter lesson for coming generations.

True, the Comstock law is a menace to our lib-

True, the Comstock law is a menace to our liberaties and emanated from religious bigotry and intolerance, and it behoves us to be watchful of our rights; but I don't think our liberties depend upon our championing those lechers that may see fit to clothe themselves in the gards of Liberalism. I honor Bennett as a Liberal, but I can not respect him from a moral standpoint. I think all should practice what they preach; and if Liberalists and Spiritualists would adopt a higher standard of morality, they could do much more good.

NOTES FROM VIRGINIA.

A Letter From Mrs. A. Watson.

To the Editor of the Religio Philosophical Journal: Since 1873 I have been an eager and constant meader of your paper, the best extant, and only when my right hand forgets its cunning and my resources fail, will my subscription to the Joun-al stop. There is something beautiful, invaluable and new in every number. A friend of mine, who is sees ahead of Petersburg in intellectual endowments and true enlightenment, to whom I loaned many spiritual works from various authors; all of A. J. Davis's works but two or three, also the Journals, which were read with interest and pleasure—though still clinging to her Christ, she sent to Boston for the Seer's "Morning Lectures" and Peebles "Travels Around the World." Having and Peebles "Travels Around the World." Having read the Pilgrim, she was delighted with his travels. Taking it for granted that they would find favor in the eyes of her physician she loaned them to him—a man of fifty, who quotes Greek and Latin, and makes fun of everything but his own stilled concells. A week after, overtaking her as she entered a gateway on the street, he shouted her name at the top of his lungs, to point the nameous moral he was intending to deliver, and show his bravery in his insoleut manner. Rein. show his bravery in his insolent manner. Rein-ing in his horse, he gesticulated in the same acreeching tone, while the sweat poured down his broad face "as red as a peony," to repeat a part of her graphic delineation, 'I have read that book, or part of it, and find it to be the most blasphe-mous thing I ever saw, and I wonder that God Almighty does not strike any one dead that will be guilty of patronising such outrageous, miser-able blasphemics."

Like her paternal grandfather, Patrick Henry, this lady is a rapid annuclator of the most eloquent language, and had a proper answer at command; but nothing can move those supercilious pig-heads from the errors they love to hug. She is an enthusiastic and warm admirer of the Seer and his writings, and praises them without stint, while pig-headed superstition couples her superior wis-dom with insanity; and when one like her falls in the advocacy of this auroral light, or induces no spiritual response, no one less gitted need try.

I am writing these reminiscences merely to show how useless have been all endeavors to offer a spiritual lamp to a people more than eight gen-erations behind the times, bidding fair to remain so as many more, dead and buried in trespasses and ains, and absolute heathenism; where you can see horse shoes nailed over and under doors of dwell-horse shoes nailed over and under doors of dwell-ings and groceries which are always grog shops; on gates, etc., for the express purpose of exorcis-ing witches.

We have often been told, not only by colored, but white people, about their being "tricked" by enemics, and were made sick even unto death, enemies, and were made sick even unto death, unless some conjurer gave them a counter charm. The first year we dwelt in Petersburg, a white woman who lived next door to us on Washington Street, informed me in good faith, that one time whenever she crossed the threshold of her door and went down the steps, she became deathly sick; after a while it occurred to her to look under the steps, when she found a bottle of infinitesimal surrans batrachia, serients pickled in a ville sal sauriaus, batrachis, serpents pickled in a vile sal-magundi, that made it a bapeful witch broth, which she uncorked and then put the bottle in running water, and then recovered from the nauseous

A young girl who refused to marry an importunate lover, wasted away to a skeleton and died, after which a bottle was found buried under the ground in the gateway. A baggage master who bought a house and lot of Mr. Hyde adjoining our lot on Pearl Street, whose wife from the country was lond of flowers and shrubbery, gathered seed of the arborvitae to plant, but her neighbors sent word to her not to plant the seed of trees on her ground,-it would surely bring bad lucksome member of her family would die before the year was out, so the innocent soul withheld her hand from planting the seed; yet her much loved husband died a few months later, and left her desolate with three small children and one un-born. There is not space for the sequel of this sad story.

About the time my last subscription ran out, we About the time my last subscription ran out, we had designed to move to Fhiladelphia, intending to renew it as soon as located there, but were detained in Petersburg till late this fail, when very unexpectedly my son-in law, Mr. Hyde, was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue in the Second District of Virginia, which changed our point of location for the present, and also our hopes of pleasure in not reaching a locality of more convanial and alexanter convenient. more congenial and elevating acquaintance, where Spiritualism is not ignored, nor enlightenment at a discount, standing where it did in time of Henry the VIII; nor "universal suffrage a grand fraud"

The people here generally are helplessly tethered to their numerous churches, because made to believe that in belonging to and supporting them. they are earning their only sure escape from brimatone fumes, eternal. This is the all-sufficient remedy most eagerly sought to absolve them from the crimes of beastly and universal intoxication by ardent spirits, and the unlimited and stupefy-ing use of the "filthy weed" in all its various filthy forms. . The enervating and stupefying pleasures found in these two mixed curses of earth, and especially of Virginia, tend to keep superstition and paganism as green and prosperous as it could have been in the bacchanalish revels and debauch eries of primitive ages, and, perhaps, the noble Caucasians prated, as the Virginians do, about "elegant leisure," while lolling in a muddled conditien over the fruits of slavery, the thankless sweat of millions. Opinions of a Representative Kansas Liberal.

One of the most prominent workers in the cause of Liberalism in Kansas sends us the following private letter received by him from another influential Liberal, and desires us to publish it as. reflecting the sentiments of a very large majority of the freethinkers of that State.. We had already become fully satisfied that the Spiritualists of that enterprising State were nearly unanimous in the support of the Journal's demand for honesty and morality, and we are gratified to learn from various sources that the great body of Liberalists are of the same mind:

"I have read the RELIGIO-PHILOSOPHICAL JOUR NAL with interest. I cannot see how the expose of Bennett's shortcoming, peccadillos, and lustful amours, could, after the trial, have exerted any influence on his sentence. Mr. Bennett has received from the course what he desired, and deserves, and has no right to complain. Col. Jundy makes no fight on that score; he even says trat the trial was a farce, and that he sympathizes with him. Here the Celonel and I differ. When a man openly, defirntly, and knowingly violates the laws of the land which protects and grants him a freedom unknown a most in any other country, he should not expect or receive sympathy of the people. I do not see that the circulation of liberal literature through the mails was or could be benefited by Bennett's sale of 'Copid's Yokes, be benefited by Bennett's sale of 'Copid's Yokes.'
No freethought publication, couched in decent, dignified languige, no matter how plain and to the point, has ever been refused transportation through the Post Office. That being the case, there was no need offs martyr, and Bennett knew this as well as any one; for his paper, which was often full of coarse upfall and indexes. often full of coarse, unfair and inclegant expres sions, calculated to rouse the prejudices and op-position of a class which constitutes a majority of our population, was received regularly by his aubscribers.

"It seems to me that the fountain is being purged. Mrs. Underwood's article on the 'Alleged Obscenity of the Bible,' is well timed and many will do well to profit by it.

"If Bunds attempts to answer all the letters, in-quiries and arguments of the credulous fools, he will have his hands full and be compelled to enwill have his hands full and be compelled to enlarge his paper. Bundy's expose of the Terre Hante frauds was perfect and complete, letting the light dispel the mysterious darkness, that has so long shrouded Pence Hall, and showing up the false spirits even to the material drawers of the ahadowy White Fawn. The case needs no more evidence; the jury is convinced, and without leaving their seats will return a verdict 'Guilty,' most guilty!" ARE ALL SOULS IMMORTAL?

A Reply to Mr. Case.

BY HUGO PREYER.

Although Brother Tuttle has given an answer, I think it is far from meeting the question squarely. He gives some beautiful ideas, but that is all. Let us see if we can find a logical answer for Brother Case. It will first be necessary to define the word soul. Webster says: "Soul, the spiritual, rational and immortal part in man." Winslow in his Inand immortal part in man." Winslow in his Intellectual Philosophy defines it as follows: "Something that lives without the body." Now the question naturally suggests itself, are soul and life identical? Life is, as I understand it, an organizing power imparted directly by God or the Creator of the universe, the source of all life. Now I believe that the soul is life. The soul cannot exist before life, as life is an organizing power, which power when forming and operating through a human body, is said to be the soul. Whether this soul is from the first rational and immortal, can be soul is from the first rational and immortal, can be answered in the affirmative when we admit that soul and life are-identical; because, if life is an organizing power it certainly is rational, and I believe immortal, because I cannot conceive of the end of life. That the soul and life are identical I end of life. That the soul and life are identical a think can be proven, and I will here quote Winslow:

"The soul is the controlling agent over the body.
The soul is active; the body passive. The soul acts directly upon the body; the body only reacts upon the soul. The heart beats, the blood flows, the lungs play, the body grows, only as operated upon by the power of life. The body then is the soul's instrument and hence cannot produce the soul. An instrument cannot operate without an agent to operate it. The soul, the agest must exist be-Now if the soul or life existed before the formation of the physical body, is it not rational to believe that it will also exist, after the death of the physical body? The next question now is, is not life known to us by the name soul, when it is organized? I believe not; because life is organized in the animal and vegetable creation. But I do hold that we call organized life in the human body, soul. The question Brother Case wants answered now is. tate after it has left the physical body or will it in course of time dissolve itself into its original, organizing element again. This question can only be answered by Spiritualists, by those who know that after the organized life-soul has left the physical body, it does exist and is capable of not physical body, it does exist and is capable of not only communicating intelligently with us, but is capable of returning to earth and showing itself in a physical organism. That souls do this, is and can be proven daily. This, then, would go to prove that God who had once created life and formed it into a human being, did continue to prolong that life, even after it had left the human body on this earth. As all human bodies have life, i.e., a soul, it would also be natural that all souls are immortal. I do not believe that terrance of are immortal. I do not believe that ignorance of God's laws will destroy life. Ignorance may force life out of the physical body and destroy the physical, but life itself I think cannot be destroyed. If through ignorance it could be destroyed, then thousands who bring upon themselves physical death through ignorance, could not exist here-after, but the facts prove that they do so exist. We also find that those who died centuries ago are able to still return and communicate with us, proving that time has not with them destroyed life. I believe and from experience know that so called "diakka" or evil spirits will in time de-velop and be sorry for their foolish conduct formerly, and be able to bring us tidings of great joy. I then hold that all souls—that is, all life which once organized to form a human body, will exist until such time as God, the source of all life himself, destroys it.

The Class Legislation.

To the Editor of the Religio-Philosophical Journal:

We are glad to see that editorially you continue to ventilate Class Legislating, Star Chamber Acts, and go in for free trade in the healing art. For years the JOHNAL has been outspoken on this subject, the great doctor plot, and has ever been in the thickest of the fight. It is well, Me Editor, for there is no exact standard of science in medicine as faught by our medical colleges. There always has been, and for a long time to come will always has been, and for a long time to come win be, a difference of opicion, and the State by this action interferes with individual rights, and the sacred conscience of her citizens, and by its in-terference limits the scope of research and the apa particular medical sect. It is moreover foreign to the purposes of which the State authority has been created in the assumption of responsibilities which belong entirely to the citizens in their in-dividual capacity, and for the abuse of which they alone must suffer—not as a State, but as individuals. The law would be ter idleness and carelessness in those once surplied with a diploma, whom it will cause to rest upon its recognition, more than upon the recognition in themselves, of real learning, faithfulness and skill by the people whom they are called upon to serve, and give a precedent which we truly believe will soon be followed in religious and nollitist affairs, which will lowed in religious and political affairs, which will ultimate in, or lead to, a complete despotism in place of a republic, or to more dreadful scenes of civil discord and anarchy.

Do the people ask for this law? No! It is a combined effort of a set of narrow minded, bigoted regular schooled quacks, for self-aggrandizement, and did not originate in the broad ideal man of medical science, who believes in progress and nature's laws.

The true physician has a glorious mission to perform, hence my comments do not strike the good and true men that ornament all professions. whose wide scope of humanity takes in every healing art. My strictures are against the narrow minded medical quack, who is so clamorous for legislative protection.

Whatever may be the sequence of this act, let all lovers of truth and fair play put in their denial.

Yours for truth and humanity, DUMONT C. DAKE, M. D. New York City.'

Dr. DeCaux Tilney writes: Fisher Doherty is probably the oldest and best known Spiritualist in Indiana; he and his children have been mediums all their lives. He was the first person West, to invite the presence of spicits on hearing of the "Rochester knockings." From that time to this, he has preached and practiced Spiritualism in and out of season.

Matt, his son, will be well remembered for his genuine spirit photographing in Indianapolis and Cincinnati, where he submitted to the strictest test conditions, not touching any materials used, and in strange galleries.

Fisher Doberty has lately taken much interest In independent politics, but is getting disgusted at the blindness of the people, and the requery of leaders, and feels the impulse growing stronger on him to turn his attention again to the spiritual field of work. He is a most excellent and enthusi-astic speaker.

In renewing his subscription, he, desires me to say to you, that he fully endorses your honest en-deavors to crush out open and constant intention-al frauds; but desires to caution you of the well atteeled fact of which all mediums [including my-self] who are not unconsciously entranced, are fully aware, that the strong psychological infuences of both sitters and spirits, compel the unconscious medium to comply with their desires to produce fraudulent manifestations. Such medium, if afterwards questioned, asserts his innocence, and is truthful, though the manifestations may have been a fraud to the above extent. The strong determination in the minds of the skeptical sitters, that they will witness fraud, acts to produce it. All the best materializing phenomens are of arse produced by the complete entrancement of

Mr. Doberty knowing these to be the facts, from a life long experience, says he desires to caution you to deal gently with the personally innocent, the badly handled or developed mediums of this kind, and hopes you will always bear this in mind as a main feature in favor of any such you may deem ft right and proper to expose and thereby prevent from further public work.

With this in view he believes your course is right, and wishes you success, as do yours for the right, though the heavens fall.

Battle Creek Notes.

To the Editor of the Religio-Philosophical Journal. Or. George H. Geer closed an engagement for the month of November here; and his labors were attended with the utmost satisfaction end success. In behalf of the First Spiritualist Society, and by their expressed request, I desire to state through the columns of your worthy paper, our thanks and appreciation for his instructive and valuable services. Brother Geer is a young man of good moral character, gentlemanly in his bearing; too charitable to censure individuals, yet out-spoken in his convictions of what he deems justice and right; radical and uncompranting in dealing attended with the utmost satisfaction and success. right; radical and uncompromising in dealing with principles, he hurls deadly blows against superstition, bigotry and priesteraft.

By his general deportment, he has won a host of loving friends all over the State, who will fol-low him with earnest solicitude for his welfare of loving friends all over the State, who will follow him with earnest solicitude for his welfare and success wherever he may go, and hereby cheerfully recommend him to spiritual societies throughout this and other States, as one well qualified every way for the lecture field.

The subject of one Sunday's discourse in the morning was, "Spiritualism and Materialism;" during which the relative position of each belief was clearly defined, and a decided stand taken against any attempt to bring together or unite these two opposite elements, which are a decided contradiction to each other. Subject in the evening:—"Our Guiding Star." This address was a most finished and eloquent effort. The 'speaker first gave a scientific or astronomical definition and history of the eignificance of the most prominent constellations; also the Star of Bethelein, the eastern star, polar star, etc., proving that none were "fixed stars," but all slike subject to time and conditions of change; thus it is ever with matters of our belief. We hold to day to an opinion which we deem as fixed and unchangeable as time itself; to-morrow, perchance, we cling as tenaciously to another in conjunction with our actions, for time, conditions and surroundings have revealed a, new light; therefore self-poised and unerring as we may deem our present course to be, like the stars above, our ideas may change in accordance with the unfoldments of time.

But is there no bright star of hope to light our human progress and that guides our destinies?

with the unfoldments of time.

But is there no bright star of hope to light our human progress and that guides our destinies? No immovable anchor that we may safely trust? Or must we forever drift unaware, swiftly down the course of human events; no sure unerring guidemark in view? Yes, thank God, there is one, found within the interior life of every human soul. Each soul ardently desires change or growth; let us then study well this guiding star, or rather it is a galaxy of stars, composed of three: Wisdom, reason and comprehension. By wisdom we are enabled to discere, by reason we are enabled to classify and arrange for use, what wisdom unfolds. By the two united we are made to comprehend the distance and units of things; possessing these three, if we study well and properly use these gifts, we have an unfailing guiding star, by which we may unfold to an unlimited degree.

gree. Standing upon the sublime heights of infinitude how serene, ennobling and grand, yet how insig-nificant appear the littleness and petty changes of life! Let us cultivate, then, this guiding star to human happiness, the only guiding star of life. All our deeds; all that we have passed judgment upon, is brought before the tribunal of these three gifts. If we profit by the dazzling light of this brilliant star, we shall gain success, and win the victory to eventually dwell in immortal glory; peace and happiness walt us in our eternal home, —the reward of goodness."

MRS. L. E. BAILBY. Battle Creek, Mich.

Communication from Dr. D A. Moore. To the Editor of the Religio-Philosophical Journal;

The world moves, and it cannot be helped The powers above have so ordained. According to many theories, it moves very badly; but now and then a philosopher boldly assures us that this is a mistake; that, on the contrary, everything is go-ing just right; that what we call evils are no such things, but, in that high and broad sense, real benefits; that what we call sics are merely the results of inharmony in the organizations of the world, and that this inharmony grows out of unfulshed plans and processes originating with infinite wisdom, and which require periods of time for their full and rounded consummation; that socalled sins are necessary and inevitable links in the chain which stretches from deep darkness into light ineffable-from chaos to heaven; that the powers above us govern everything by immutable laws, which tend towards perfection as constantly as gravitation tends towards the center of the carth; that all moral deprayity grows out of meatal weakpers and imperfection; that man's agency is under the control of invisible and omnipotent influences; that the sinner should never be punished except for preventive and reformative purposes, but should be restrained, instructed and reformed, if possible; if impossible, confined; that the advanced members of the human family should do what is possible to help on the work of progress and renovation, by such means and measures of wisdom as they possess, and that, in the end, God will see that his laws are triumphantly vindicated. When a tree grows crooked we know it is not the tree's fault, but the effect of extraneous causes in the seed, in the atmosphere, in the soil or other surroundings. When a horse is perverse, or bad tempered, or ungainly, his faults are imputed to his ancestry and his training.

Like chickens just emerging from their shells, we stand and look about us, perceiving no cause even of our existence; and though wondering and even of our existence; and though wondering and sanxhously inquiring and making it the chief bustness of our lives to find out, we see no light, we hear no certain voice that gives us any clew to the solution of the problem, and thus we grope on through life. Now to us this does not seem to be the finality of the inquiry. This human life of ours seems to be in the course of transition to a higher one, a state in which these important queries will be answered, and answered to our comprehension. It cannot be that his agonizing anxiety in regard to our very existence, will be allowed forever to remain unsatisfied—that we must go down through these gloomy passages to the darkness of annihilation, while value supplicating, in angular of soul, to have the problem of our existence solved to our understanding.

This great problem of human life—the greatest

This great problem of human life-the greatest problem in the universe, that we know of reached and the solution of it evolved, to the comprehension of man, some time in the future; and the souls of men-of all men-will be there to see. Possibly, it may turn out that this is one of the missons of the Spirit world, and that so-called Spiritualism is the beginning of its development.

Notes and Extracts.

There is no royal road to developing medium.

Mediumship is known to depend mainly upon organic physical condition.

There is many a man whose tongue might covern multitudes, if he could only govern his ongue.

The great use of going to fine places is to learn ow happy it is possible to be without them.—

A good man is often deceived, because, judging other people by himself, he thinks men are better than they are.

The pearly gates swing on love to God and love to man, rather than on statements of belief and professions of faith.

No man need be auxious as to when or how he shall die, if he is sufficiently auxious as about bow and where he lives .- Golden Rule.

The general attitude of the church has been to divorce religion from morality, and make the pro-fession of a bolief of infinitely greater conse-quence than the living of a true and noble life.— F. H Hinckley. One of the first important law cases which

Robespiere ever was engaged in, was to defend a company of Frenchmen arrested on an accusation of hereby, for introducing into France, Dr. Frank-lin's lightning rods. Does orthodoxy favor sel-Spiritualism is doing to-day what Christianity endeavored to do in the past,—to release the mluds of men from sectarian servituds and the minds of men from sectarian servituds and bondage, and engrafting in their stead broader conceptions of Infinity wisdom and granting greater freedom to markind.

Religion is the right action of the faculties of the human mind. Every man is religious if he but feel and do the right. An actor on the stage is as religious, if there is conscience within him, as he would be saving his prayers; a sallor on as he would be saying his prayers; a sailor on shipboard, if he do his duty, as the preacher in the pulpit.—Dr. E. A. Bartol. A minister once told Wendell Phillips that if his business in life was to save the negroes, he ought to go to the South where they were and do it. "That's worth thinking of," replied Phillips; "and what is your business in life?" "To save men from going to hell," replied the mini-ter. "Then go there and attend to your business!" said Mr. Phillips.

To the man of the world, the records of the Old and New Testaments are a mystery, and to such Spiritualism is the gravest of all mysteries, because it sweeps away the mists and cobwebs of ancient ignorance and superstition, and in their place kiedles the investigator's torch and sends him forth to light up the heretofore darkened pathway of human life. We find that the great thoughts which the leading and thinking minds of the past have produced are tabulated in the literary institutions which surround us, which now afford us so much pleasure in perusing, and which in their begin-ning were considered heterodox, therefore dan-gerous, and estractized by the conventionalism of the society of their day.

Physical mediumship includes the phenom? ens of the ordinary dark circle, slate, or independ-ent and automatic writing, materializations, spirif voice and dights, fire tests, levitations, and elongations, spirit-photography, direct paintings, or the tilting and rapping manifestations; as in all these power is abstracted from the medium and to a certain extent, inden

Memories of Youth .- Can man be so agestricken that no faintest shadow of his youth may revisit him once a year? The moss on our timeworn mausion brightens into beauty; the good old pastor who once dwelt here, renewed his prime and regained his boyhood in the genial breezes of his ninetieth spring. Affis for the worn and weary soul, if whether in youth or age it has outlived its sprightliness.

Mediumship has been regarded in past times as the especial privilege of a class, which has con-sequently been elevated to a position of supremacy and regard, as being almost more than human; but we now know that mediamship does not necessarily pre-suppose its possessors to be any bet-ter, morally or intellectually, than the rest of mankind, though it ought to help to make them good, pure, and unselfish.

Animal and vegetable life keep pace with the human, as can be seen in the fineness of texture; the neatly turned limbs of the horse, the pointed ear, the glistening eye, all speak of finer development; and we see in the vegetable kingdom corresponding improvements, but in every case the change is from the coarser to the finer, from the unsightly to the beautiful. The mind of man is affected in a similar manner.

Man is the only animal on the earth that has wan is the only animal on the earth that has used his capacity for loving to degrade and brutalize himself and his offspring. And he has been enabled to do this through his possession of superior powers of reasoning. Hence the great importance of instruction and guidance, for though we must admit that man has done this in ignorance for ages, and is therefore entitled to all charity and avenges herself. tf, nature knows no charity, and avenges herself upon ignorant and wise alike when they violate her laws.—Charles Ellis.

I tell you women are more prudent than men. I tell you, as a rule, women are more faithful than meb. I never saw a man pursue his wife into the very depths of degradation and take her in his arms. I never saw a man stand at the shore where she had been morally wrecked, waiting for the waves to bring back even her corpse to his arms; but. I have seen woman with her white arms, lift man from the mire of degradation, and hold him to her bosom as though he were an angel.—Col. Robert Ingersoll.

The Great Consolation.—Would you like to know the great consolation? you who suffer the lack; you who bury your faces in your pillows the night long, and to whom the coming of morning brings no delight, because the morning brings only an addition to the needs that are unmet, and a repetition of the previous prayers that have never yet been answered. This is the great consolation—life! To live foreyer; to think and feel; to have the pleasure of krowing knowledge and intelligence eternally; to rise and keen on rising through the climbing age; to have what we purely longed for, but missed in this mortal life, made ours by an everlasting bend. To know that all this is ahead; to feel it; to fix our disquieted souls upon it, as the swaging pillar is at last fixed upon it base; this is convolution. This is not escape from trouble, it is the conversion of trouble into contentment. This is not the surcease of sorrow, but the transmutation of sorrow into a great, expectant and here for a done day that man's life who lives his checkered life unsoofhed, uncharmed, unsustained by this eternal verily. I do not wonder that many of the great ones of the earth committed suicide, living as they did, with no knowledge that their deprivations should have eternal recompense. They were great enough to be expectant. They sayer the night of great suffering with their beams, shine downward from no less a dome than the waited and inessureless The Great Consolation .- Would you like patient. The stars that cheer the night of great suffering with their beams, shine downward from no less a dome than the vaulted and measureless thought of man's immortality. Failure loses its hitterness when you feel that in the ages ahead, God will give you a new start. "Let not your heart be troubled."—W. H. H. Murray.

ISIS UNVEILED A Master-Key to the Mysteries of Ancient and Modern Science and Religion.

BY H. P. BLAVATSKY.

The recent revival of interest in Philology and Archeology, exaulting from the labors of Runsen, Layard, Higgins, Musice, Dr. Schlieman, and others, has created a great demiand for works on Eastern topics.

The author enters the field well equipped, A native of Asia, her childthood passed among the Cannucks, Tartars, Persians, and other Eastern peoples; her maturity among Hindux, Chengalese, Thibefans, and Expetians, oriental traditions, languages, literature, and mythology have long been her chief study and Occupation. The infimence fund of information stored up during years of thousaful study and observant travel in all lands, enable her to throw more light upon the moteric philosophy of Eastern nations than, perhaps, any other writer who has contributed to the literature of this important subject.

Letters from the Tropics.

NUMBER EIGHT.

To the Editor of the Religio-Philosophical Journal: It seems somewhat germane to the subject of my last letter to glance at the bloody ex-ploits of the race of freebooters that infested the Spanish possessions in the New World, and made-frequent raids upon the Isthmus of Panama. For the space of nearly three hundred years these outlaws were constant terror. It was not long after the discovery before they began to swarm throughout the West Indies and along the Spanish Main. Nor did the difficulties and dangers of crossing the jungly Isthmus prevent their infesting the South Sea, and plying their infessious trade of robbery and murder, along its shores from Mexico to Patagonia. In one sense that era of piracy was an illustration of the old saw of diamond cut diamond. Cortez it is true, in his wonderful career of pillage and slaughter, had a show of authority from pope and king. The same is true of Pizarro and the lesser lights of early Spanish conquest and occupation. Through all they claimed the protection of heaven and Spain. As an instance of poetic justice, we find that when the bloody bucaniers began their savage work, they prey-ed upon the ruthless conquerors in turn, with no other question of right but that of might. It was a case of the survival of the strong-

There is a rare and quaint old book still extant, in which the dark and daring deeds of blood of some of the more noted of the pirates are recorded. Its title page, in full, reads as follows: "History of the Bucaniers of America, from the first original to this time—written in several languages and now collected into one volume; containing—

"1. The Exploits and Adventures of Le

The volume is a literary curiosity, aside from its horrible interest as a picture of those lawless times. It is impossible to deny the blind and fearless physical .bravery of those terrible men, but it was the bravery of the ravenous tiger, rather than that of the hero. One is lost in wonder that the limits of human courage and endurance could go so far. For instance in the account of the deeds of valor of Captain Henry Morgan, who seems to have been a representative villain, the feats accomplished seem amazing and incredible.

According to the record, Morgan was of Welch origin, well-born, and a man of great natural force as well as acquired accom-plishments. The island of Jamaica, taken from Spain by the English in 1655, was the great rendezvous of the freebooters. Being of a restless, roving, brave spirit, and above all a born commander-one of Carlyle's able-men -Morgan soon gained the leadership of the bold sea-rovers, and began a series of depredations attended with sickening cruelty, carnage and blood. Among other places, he captured and sacked Porto Bello, then a strongly fortified place (about twenty miles east of the present town of Colon), murdered the garrison and many of the inhabitants. After several days of wild license and debauchery, hearing that the Governor of Panama was coming with a large force to retake the place, the corsaircaptain sent a present with a polite message to His Excellency, promising that he would visit Panama soon, then loaded his ships with treasure and merchandise and sailed

According to the promise, the next year, A.D. 1670, Morgan made an attack upon fort San Lorenzo, at the mouth of the Chagree river, preliminary to crossing over to the Pacific. The fort was bravely defended and it seemed doubtful if the pirates would succeed. In the hottest of the fight, as the story goes, one of the besiegers was mortally wounded with an arrow. As a last act, he tore the deadly missive from his bleeding wound, thrust it into his gun, fired it to wards the fort and expired. The fight raged on; but a great smoke was seen to issue from the Spanish stronghold, and it was soon discovered that the barracks of the garrison were on fire. The powder of the discharge had set fire to the feathers of the arrow-shaft, which had fallen upon the thatched roof of the quarters inside the fort, and soon caused a general conflagration and panic, under pressure of which an unconditional surrender was made.

Thence, on the 18th of August, 1670, Morgan left, via the Chagres river, with twelve hundred men to attack the rich and famous city of Panama, which was in those days the depot of all the fabulous wealth flowing towards the mother country from Peru. The hardships of that journey parallel any thing of the kind recorded in history. With out food, exposed in open boats to the alternate deluges of rain and scorching tropical sun, in consant danger of ambush and destruction at every turn of the winding stream, for ten weary days they toiled against the rapid current until at last they reached the low hills, at the feet of which Panama and the placid Pacific greeted their rapacious sight. With brief delay, though worn with fatigue and starvation, the brave leader rushed down with his twelve hundred, and gave battle to the army of defense upon the open plain behind the city. The record says that the Panama forces consisted of "400 horse, 24 companies of foot of 100 each, 60 Indians and some negro slaves, who were to drive 2,000 wild bulls upon the bu-

Notwithstanding the fearful odds, resistance was of no avail. Like devils incarnate, the invaders rushed upon the Spanish forces, carried death and dismay everywhere, and were soon masters of the proud and wealthy city. It is said that Morgan intended to save the city from destruction; but during the panic that ensued upon his victory and occapation, a fire broke out and before it could be stayed, nearly every building was in ashes. This calamity was a sad disappointment to the pirates, as it deprived them of the rich loot they had an-ticipated. And although unheard of cruelties were practiced upon the inhabitants, in order to compel them to reveal their hidden treasures, the result was far from meeting their expectations. After a few days of brutal indulgence, as was the custom of those vandals, the return to Chagres was ordered, and loading their unhappy prisoners with the booty saved from destruction, they made their way across the hills to their boats and soon rejoined the small party left to garrison San Lorenzo.

After this memorable expedition the freebooters separated into several parties, bitter dissensions having arisen over the division of the spoil. It was claimed, and probably with justice, that their bold and unscrupulous leader had appropriated the lion's share. At all events he withdrew with all speed to Jamaica, "turned respect able," and afterwards became governor of that lovely island, as Sir Henry Morgan.

Another tale of daring and horror is told of a precious quartet of villains named Watlin, Sawkins and Coxon. These men and their followers crossed the Isth-mus and entered upon a wild life of piracy among the islands and along the shores of the beautiful bay of Panama. Their object was to intercept the rich galleons from Peru, and they were horribly successful. As an instance of their method of proceedure, in cases of urgency, it is related that having captured several prizes and made prisoners of their passengers and crews, they wished to make an exchange with the Governor of Panama for four of their own number, who had fallen into his hands. They sent a message accordingly, from the anchorage in front of the city, demanding immediate compliance, or as an alternative, the heads of a certain number of those held by them as prisoners, would be sent as a present. The Governor took what'seemed to them too long a time for consideration, and sure enough a boat was sent with thirty ghastly human heads, fresh reeking in their gore, with the further information that all the others should meet the same fate, unless the four pirates were sent off. It is needless to add that the demand was complied with.

Every page contains its especial horror. One poor old man at Maracaibo, whom his fiendish captors believed to have hidden his wealth, was tortured in the following manner: Four stakes were driven in the ground and the poor victim suspended between them by cords tied to his thumbs and great toes. Then his tormentors would strike the cords with sticks, and finally build a fire beneath him and roasted him alive!

There is also an account of the blood thirsty fiend, Lolonois,-illustrated by a curious old wood-cut,—in his rage cutting a man's heart out, and, wolf-like, gnawing at

These are some of the events that came to pass, in this part of the world, in the "good old times," say two hundred years gone by. These, the flendish acts of rapine and murder, which may be found recorded in the "History of the Bucaniers." They will afford your readers, let us hope, as they have the writer, a wholesome confirmation of the harmonial idea that humanity has progressed somewhat during past ages. After a successful exploit, in which their hands were stained red with blood, and their souls blackened by the most horrible crimes, these inhuman wretches, incredible as it may seem, often sang Te Deum and professed thankfulness to God for all his blessings and mercies! We, in our turn, may, I think, safely enough thank heaven we know of no such god, that we live in a later and far better age. Such realistic glimpses of a past not so very far away from ourselves, and our nineteenth century homes of liberal culture and refinement, While they may make us shudder with horror, will perhaps at the same time awaken and strengthen a feeling of thankfulness, for having escaped that "age of gold," about which poets dream. They may help to convince us that no glamour of sentiment can exalt the past or rob the present of its pre-eminence in all that relates to the wellbeing of our race.

Colon. Speed of Ice-Yachts Scientifically Explained.

BY J. G. JACKSON.

To the Editor of the Religio-Philosophical Journal:

I do not quite like the heading of your editorial in the JOURNAL just received (December 6th) concerning "Speed of Ice boats—Science Contradicted by Facts." True science never contradicts facts, but explains them. Thoughtless or careless professors of science, it would appear, often make fool-ish blunders as they have in this case. It is real jolly to get such a twist on the professors as this has given you. Right richly have they deserved it, with their high handed a priori reasoning, and pedantic as-sumption that nething can be true which they an not understand and explain—that there are no laws of nature but those in which they are posted.
Science is fully competent to admit and expound the fact that wind may communi-cate to an ice-yacht a velocity superior to the wind itself, and I am astonished that Prof. Loomis of Yale, and Pres. Barnard of Columbia, should have been so careless as to commit themselves without examining the full bearing of the question. Tell them that one of these deluded Spiritualists of Delaware, a mere amateur in science, can readily convict them of error, and show as well popularly as scientifically that the fact in question is both probable and certain.) To come at the professors and others popularly, we will ask, did they ever, when boys, shoot a melon seed, a cherry stone, or any other slippery seed by pressure between the thumb and finger? Did they ever explain scientifically how the comparatively slow hard pressure of the muscles was re-solved into the rapid motion of the mucous solved into the rapid motion of the mucous missile? If so, they can readily discover how the ice-yacht is shot forward by being caught between the pressure of the wind on the one side and the solid keel holt of the yacht upon the slippery ice on the other. To illustrate more perfectly I would say, take a wedge of wood or any smooth rigid material and lay it flat upon a hard political. terial and lay it flat upon a hard polished table or other smooth surface. Let it be, say, twelve inches long and three inches thick, tapering to an edge. Next apply a rigid and steady perpendicular pressure downward near the base or thick end of the wedge. The effect will be (if the surfaces are sufficiently smooth or lubricated) that the wedge will be forced forward in the direction of its thick and, and will travelite. direction of its thick end, and will travel its whole length (twelve inches) while the per-pendicularly pressing body descends three inches. That is, the pressing body will have communicated to the movable wedge a velocity four (4) times as great as its own. Now, in the ice-yacht the keel, or runner holding it to the ice forms one inclined side of the wedge, and the sail (not quite "flat aft") forms the other, while the pressing body is the wind.

Should the yacht be placed with the wind exactly a beam (that is at right angle to the keel) with the sail hauled aft, but slightly to lee-ward, (say three feet in twelve feet length of yard) we will have the same proportions as above stated in the wedge, and a ten mile wind will tend to propel the yacht forty miles per hour. Proper allow-ances for friction and the yielding in-stead of rigid nature of the wind and the sail, will doubtless greatly lessen this theoretical speed

Quad Erat Demonstrandum.

P. S. We would incline to believe that a well constructed sailing vessel on a smooth sea might, under provable circumstances, be made to illustrate the same seeming

JOTTINGS.

Experiences of the Spirit in Dream-Land.

BY ALFRED BULL.

Permit me to add my mite to the regret, expressed so universally by legal, scientific and spiritualistic journals throughout the English speaking world, at the sudden death of the eminent Jurist, Mr. Serjeant Cox.

I first met him when assisting at an entertainment in Silchester Hall, London, some twelve years ago, at which meeting the Ser-jeant presided. His easy good nature, and in terest in all designed for the general weal, had led him on a comfortless winter night, many miles from his own luxurious fireside, to preside at this meeting in a squalid, rawly-new suburb, attended by its poverty stricken in-habitants, at a nominal admission fee. And it is of painful interest to note in this connec tion that he attack to which he succumbed immediately succeeded his exertions, consequent on a similar philanthropic effort.

Through subsequent correspondence, favors

ranted me when, as honorary secretary of a imilar series of entertainments, I needed his services, and an carnest interest in his doings as successively chronicled in the daily press, I learned to appreciate his large heartedness and powers of keen, critical analysis; and re joiced with him as he slowly emerged by laborious and patient experiment, heedless of contumely, pity or superficial ridicule, from the shadows of "psychic force" to the pure light of Spiritualian.

Such a heart and brain as his are letters patent to any movement, and his painstaking efforts in connection with the meetings of the Dialectical Society, his establishment of the Psychological Society, and energetic, long-continued advocacy of a similar policy to that of the Religio Philosophical Journal, have won for him such a place among spiritualistic pioneers in England, as is accorded to Judge Edmonds here. While he had achieved three score years and ten, his ever active interest in contemporary literature, and in all the varied subjects to which he gave careful attention, rendered his sudden death an unwelcome surprise to all, and England cannot immediately fill his vacant chair.

Venturing over the same path he trod so firmly, purveying as does the Jackal for the lion, thankful as I am it, after all psychic. odic, mesmeric and magnetic aura are learnedly distilled, enough remains for a meal, allow me again to offer the singular experi ences of some friends in dreamland and terra incognita. As the experiences of Chicago people, possessing only a sneaking kindness for Spiritualism, notwithstanding the experience they themselves have had, though one rise from the dead they will not believe. It am compelled to omit all proper names and data that would lead to identification. Consequently I can only offer my own faith in their veracity, after having striven to exhaust all normal theories, Spiritualism and her sisterhood apart.

A real-estate dealer in this city, formerly resident in a neighboring county, had the misfortune to lose his wife, to whom he was deencies, having no faith in a life beyond this, a blank void spread before him from which his very soul recoiled. Months passed, and he had become morose desolate, his business neglected, his friends estranged, the lunatic asylum yawned wide open for him; when, one summer evening, near dusk, he started for a lonely stroll. lonely stroll.

As the garden gate clicked behind him, an arm was gently linked in his own, and turning, he saw his dearly-loved-wife again beside him, gazing into his face with tender solicitude. Mechanically, doubting his own senses, he turned to begin his stroll, but she accommodated her pace to his, and leaning lovingly on his arm, the familiar accents again met his ears, and for an hour he listened, in ecstatic delight, to an earnest, hely exposition of his duties, too sacred for tepetition.

Meanwhile they had traced together the round he had designed, each avoiding irregue larities in the path, making due divergence necessary from building materials at one point; and save that her step was lighter, and her motion more like that of floating than ordinary locomotion, he could detect no other changes, could only realize that the dreary interval had been bridged, and she was again beside him, the dread future vanished. They had met no one on the walk, and as they paused for a moment at the gate, the loving pressure lightened, was gone, and the had disappeared, while on his lips trembled the thous and things he had desired to say, and into his heart came, and took root, permanent knowledge of the truth that "blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted.

I turn now to three incidents in the life of a city merchant, an old man racked with uncertainty as to the journey in the dark'so soon to be undertaken.

Twenty five years ago, a callow youth, in all the agonies of calf-love, he misunderstood the symptoms, proposed too soon to the wrong lady, when one in the same house had really won his heart. On the bridal morning, he was giving his boots their final polish before the ceremony, when the latter lady came into the room. A brief conversation led to the finaltatement, "If you say yes-down go the boots." But ane understood her position better than he, and urged him to do his duty as she un-derstood it. In a short time she also married, and died in giving birth to a child. My friend subsequently paid a visit to the widower, and occupied the bed in which she had died. He was awakened by an impression of her bodily presence, and, though seeing nothing, folded ocr in his arms, and they held converse through the night. The morning found him a new man, his dormant duty to the woman he had sworn to love awakened, and her life, till its close, the happier for the factor which had previously been lacking.

This may seem decidedly sentimental, and yet had you seen the odd intensity of this practical, satirical old man, as his memory, moved by some accidental trigger, recalled the scene, no one could doubt his own-firm belief in its reality, while the contrast with his every day life such an incident affords, strengthened its probability, and its influence with him.

Twenty years ago, he retired to rest without thought of his daughter, a thousand miles away, but woke in the morning to tell his wife he had dreamed of their child's serious illness, and of the alarm he felt. The impression remained, notwithstanding all-efforts at sober, daylight thought, and in the afternoon came a despatch, "Your daughter is seriously ill. Diptheria." The next day she was dead.

The last of his experiences, as related to me, was an incident occurring only five months since. A servant girl had recently been mar ried at his house, and removing about half a mile, had gone to housekeeping. Working far away from home, the girl's full heart had naturally been poured out to her kind mistress, and the ties of sympathy were close and strong. One afternoon, the lady, scated by her window, heard the girl call her shrilly and suddenly, dismissed for a time the idea, but dis agreeably impressed by it finally prepared for walking, and arrived at her humble friend's house, to find the latter, then in feeble health, extended on the floor in a dead faint. On recovering, the girl admitted having called on her former mistress' name when first seized, though the distance, and mulitudinous noises of a great city, effectually prevented her cry from being heard, even by neighbors or passers by.

Four years ago, a hotel keeper of Minnespolis, Minn., Aralzeman Bacon by name, whom I had known long and intimately, died, a freethinker with disregarded spiritualistic tendencies. Shortly before his death he told me of the premopition he had received of his brother's death, when both were boys. Bacon, then seventeen years old, and living on his father's homestead on the Connecticut river, one afternoon, during his brother's absence with New York friends, fell without warning in a minting fit on the kitchen floor. Reviving, he described the capsizing of a boat in which his brother and a party of friends were sailing, and the death by drowning of the former. Although entirely ignorant of his brother's doings on that day, subsequent let ters detailed the accident with its fatal result in exact accordance with his description, and the time of the one's swoon, the other's death exactly coincided. In conclusion, my mother again furnishes me with an interesting incident in the life of a lady friend, who was possessed of unusual mental and physical attractions. Advised by mutual friends not to broach the subject of Spiritualism with Mrs. M., (as we will call her) the subject tabooed was eventually introduced by that lady herself, Her eager questionings won equally earnest responses, and led to the narration of the following experience in Mrs. M.'s life. While her mother was on her deathbed, she had in formed her daughter, Mrs. M., of the disposition she desired to make of certain jewelry, and its proper distribution among her child ren; but, after the Suneral, this property fell into the hands of another daughter, who, in the absence of legal proof to the contrary, ap propriated it. So matters remained for three months, when this sister wrote Mrs. M, the particulars of a dream she nad had the previ ous night, in which her mother appeared, and stated that her wishes with regard to the Jew elry would be found written on the back of an oil painting, then in Mrs. M.'s house,

The picture had been sent to a cleaner a few days before; but happily was secured untouch ed; while the paper, soiled and discrlored, but legible, was discovered on the back, con firming in its provisions the prophetic dream.

Are such experiences proofs of immortality. or must be fall back on the new old theories of sympathy, and lapsed memory unconsciously restored, to explain them? Here be texts, let who will preach the sermon. Your readers, who remember some extraordinary experiences of mine at Braidwood, Itl., in August, 1877, duly detailed in your columns, may be interested to hear of an agreement l have made with a noted 'spirit exposer" to revisit the mines there, and spend the anniappointment, there may be a sequel to that

A Strange Story of a Mountain Gap in Pennsylvania -- An old Legend Revived.

[Danville (Pa.) Correspondence Philadelphia Times.]

In the southwestern part of Luzerne County there is a remarkable stream of water, known as Black'Creek. Its average width is perhaps a dozen yards, while its waters are very dark and extremely sulphurous. In it fish can not live, while a frog or snake thrown into the stream instantly turns over and floats away, dead. It rises somewhere about Hazleton, and about six miles from its source enters a deep mountain gap, which it follows to its furthest extremity, and soon after mingles its black current with the limpid waters of the Nes-copeck Creek, which a little further on joins the wide Susquehanna. The mountain gap traversed by this stream is one of the most dismal places to be found in the country. Only, a narrow stretch of sky is visible from below, and this is almost always filled with a haze, which the sunpeams scarcely ever penetrate. When the sky happens to be clear it is not sunrise in the gap till ten o'clock, while at two the sun goes down. Immensegray boulders abound. The ground is covered with ashes and trunks of fallen pines, charred and blackened by mountain fires, which yearly sweep over the place, lie decaying, sometimes one across the other. Enormous snakes crawl over the rocks or bathe in the slimy pools. The only trees are stunted pines, which grow out from between the rocks.

In addition to the gloom and desolation infesting the place, it has, according to the people thereabout, been sadly troubled with witches. One of the stories handed down from a generation long in their graves runs thus: Much less than one hundred years ago Black Creek was a beautiful transpareat stream. The skies above it were as clear as other skies. Green moss thickly covered the ground and rocks, and birds sang among the branches of the trees. The gap about this time was the favorite resort of hunters. and one individual, owning a large tract of mountain land, including the gap, had erected a cabin in it for the accommodation of himself and friends during the hunting season. It happened one day that the owner of the cabin got into a quarrel with a stranger over a wounded deer, each claiming that he had fired the lucky shot. During the quarrel the stranger struck a blow, and received in return one that leveled him to the earth. Being seriously hurt, he was carried into the cabin and word sent to his friends, who resided at some distance. In a short time his sister arrived, a black-eyed girl, with long raven hair. On the same day he died, and the girl cursed the young man who had dealt the fatal blow in a manner that made a terrible impression on all

In a short time the waters of the creek became black and sulphurous, the sky grew dim and hazy, while the gap became the abode of serpents and a scene of desolation. The black-eyed girl was afterwards frequently seen-sometimes walking through the gap at midnight, enveloped in/a large black cloak; at other times in the midst of the tempest, on the top of the loftlest tree, swaying to and fro, with her leng, black hair streaming in the wind. So the good people of the long ago came to regard the place as bewitched by the vindictive sister, and no one cared to be found in the dismal place at night. But an important road, connecting the Tombicken and Nescopeck Valleys, led right through the beyitched gap, and it was consequently not always possible to avoid it. The road was always hard and in the best order. Yet farmers in passing over it on their return from market, with four horses attached to an empty wagon, would often come sudden-ly to a standstill. Then the farmer would crack his whip, the horses would throw themselves into the harness and scratch the ground for a foothold, but the wagon would stand as though riveted to the earth beneath some invisible weight. The farmer would then know that "the witches were riding his wagon" and simply wait till they got off, when the team would travel on as easily as before.

About ten years ago a mining company began operations four miles up the gap, but there was no success predicted for it in such a place. And a little later Simon Kase ran his new railroad right through the gap. About this time Henry Croil, who owned a valuable farm out in the Nescopeck Valley, sold his property for a large sum, and, fearing neither Simon Kase nor the witches, decided to build a large hotel right in the mountain gap. His friends expostulated with him, reminding him that he could not succeed there. He went to work, however, and in a short time had the new hotel under roof. The new coal mines attracted agreat deal of travel, and before long Croll was doing a dourishing business. He had ten sons, and he built a house for each of them near his own. Other relatives followed, so that the place soon came to be called "Crolltown."

At the end of two years the town contained, fifty houses, and had besides the hotel a stere, lime kiln, post office and a school house. Soon after this Croll began to show some strange eccentricities. He became very quarrelsome, and without any apparent reason would forbid his best customers the house. A large portion of the population had found employment at the neighboring coal mines, which, lowing to some cause, no longer afforded constant work. Croll and his village began to go down hill together. The unfortunate failedord then advertised his property for sale, but when persons appeared to buy he spoke so unfavorable of the place and its surroundings that they went away disgusted. He now did no busi-ness at all. The people had become indolent and indifferent, and the storekeeper was drifting on toward ruin. Their school teachers year after year got the blues and left the place before the school term had expired. Cfoll, seated in his bar-room; disheveled and haggard, surrounded by a crowd of loafers, would discourse on his ap-

He knew how much he was worth, what his loss was per day, and consequently how long it would be till he was a beggar. He seemed determined to fail, to be utterly ruined, and made no effort to avert the misfortune. He frequently reminded the limeburner and the merchant of the the place that a similar fate awaited them, and told them exactly how long they would last. At the time he predicted the sheriff came along and sold him out of house and home. He then moved back into a less pretentious dwelling, and has since resided there, often without enough to eat. The whole place has become the abode of misery and wretchedness:

It is a remarkable fact that a few years ago, in this region, a belief in witchcraft was almost universal. The most abourd stories were credited. Even now not a few are to be found who believe that Croll and his town are laboring under the curse of k-eyed giri, or are, in other words, bewitched.
