ANCIENT HISTORY IN STONE by Shaver

HE WALKED THE AMERICAS

BY
L. TAYLOR HANSEN

$6.95 plus 25c
postage & handling

Almost two thousand years ago a mysterious white man walked from tribe to tribe among the American Nations. He came to Peru from the Pacific, He traveled through South and Central America, among the Mayans, into Mexico and all of North America, then back to ancient Tula, from whence he departed across the Atlantic to the land of his origin. Who was this white Prophet who spoke a thousand languages, healed the sick, raised the dead, and taught in the same words as Jesus Himself?

These are true Indian legends, gathered during twenty-five years of research by L. Taylor Hansen, archaeologist, from many different tribes all over the Americas. By consulting museums, libraries and experts on folk-lore, it has been possible to correlate the findings into this fascinating book, backed up by the spades of the diggers into ancient ruins, and by all the sciences with which L. Taylor Hansen is familiar. This is a book that will back up the New Testament of the East, with the Christian Indian legends of the West. In this book is proof that the Savior came not only to one continent, but to all the world. This book will strengthen your faith as no other could!

EDITORIAL

One of the articles in this issue of SEARCH deals with transsexuals, but it is intriguing to your editor that the article does not deal with a very fascinating possibility (other than in the title where the word "obsession" occurs). We wondered why the author had included the word in the title, and why it had not occurred to him that here was a facet of the problem of transsexuality that he had not covered. Perhaps subconsciously the author has a feeling about it which did not surface in his writing of the article. Since it did not, we'd like to touch on it here.

Everyone who reads SEARCH knows how the editor regards obsession as a distinct possibility in many phenomena, particularly in cases of so-called "reincarnation". In respect to reincarnation, he has always observed that all the factors which seem to indicate a reincarnated entity who had experienced a previous life can also be attributed to obsession or possession, and in the process, overcome the very vexing problem of repetition as against a more reasonable and logical progression. Also, the factor of "arbitrary assumption of memory blackout" as a sort of "modus operandi" to explain why the vast majority of people now alive remember nothing of a previous life, and also demonstrate that previous lives of experiences have taught them exactly nothing. Those rare cases of proven "memory" can very obviously be attributed to obsession or possession; given the initial premise of "survival". One of the most vital factors bolstering the theory of obsession and possession is the vast array of proofs of survival that exist. In this editor's mind, there exists no doubt that there is an ongoing existence beyond death, and that it bears in itself an obvious progression; that is, that a learning and advancement process (demonstrated by such things as radar signals, flying saucers, and even Shaver's cavern world plus psychic phenomena) exists independently of the physical life, and therefore renders further physical life redundant and unnecessary. However, we are not speaking of reincarnation here, but of transsexualism. We are speaking of why it is that some men really consider themselves women, and some women believe they are trapped in a man's body (from birth, the author says!). Some of them seek out surgeons to have operations performed to give them the physical attributes of the sex they believe themselves to be, or want to be; or to remove those organs considered to be undesirable. Much can be done by surgery, and it is considered much easier to reconstruct the body and create either a male or a female physique, than to try to cope with the male or female mentality and reverse it so as to be compatible with the body. Yet, to this editor's way of thinking, it is precisely in this area where the problem originates—in the mentality. In the psyche, the personality, and consciousness.

What we are observing, rather than a "mistake" of nature in which a "female" psyche inhabits a "male" body, or both physical attributes are present in the same body with one or the other subdued or subordinate to the other, but the presense of both male and female psyches in a body with either characteristic. As a matter of fact, all human beings are physically both male and female. The female has a vagina and also a clitoris, a miniature counterpart of the male penis; while a male has a penis, and incorporated in it the miniature "vagina" to harbor the sperm, the male equivalent (and compensatory portion) of the female ovum. Actually we are being much too simplistic here, the fact is that in a vestigial sense, both man and woman harbor the reminders of a day when man was bi-sexual, and may have reproduced by a process of parturition.

It may be precisely this ancient evolutionary remnant which makes it possible for a female entity to obsess or possess the body of a male.

Just recently among psychiatrists, the problem of treating the lesbians and homosexuals has been described as amenable to electric "shock treatments", used in connection with "suggestion" to effect a "cure". In the case of homosexuals, the person is shown the photo of a nude man, and given a shock at the same time. The idea is to create a conditioned reflex that would operate to cause the homosexual to reject future attraction to other males, and to "take the less painful way out" of his desire for sex by expressing it (properly) with a woman. Yet, in the case of a rapist committed for therapy, this process is not followed because it is considered inadvisable to set up an "aversion" to women. Thus, a rapist is not shown a photo of a naked woman and simultaneously given a shock treatment. After all, the "right" way for the rapist to express his sexuality IS with a woman companion. Yet, a rapist is not the same problem as a homosexual. The rapist is a "normal" person who, though frustration, or other reason, attacks a woman without her consent. A homosexual would never attack a woman. In his “abnormal” way, he would attack a man (could he be called a rapist if there was no consent?).

Among believers in reincarnation, there is the very interesting “fantasy” that between lives the entity chooses what it will be in the next life in relation to its locale, its opportunities, its chosen field of learning (this or that thing either not learned before, or insufficiently learned, or even to make retribution or to undergo a sort of “purification” for previous wrong-doings or failures). One of the choices is whether or not the body now to be used for another life is to be male or female. It might be that, having learned all there is to know about being a man in one life (or hundreds of lives), it is not desirable to learn what it’s like to be on the other end of the spectrum and discover the mysteries of being a woman. Men are always saying they can never understand a woman!

So, assume that a female (now deceased) chooses to be a man in her next life. She selects (or is assigned to) the body of a male child being formed in the womb of a woman (who may or may not be the reincarnation of someone the reincarnator was associated with in a past life, maybe many lives ago, and is now going to either expiate some crime against the incarnator, or give her the love once denied), and at the moment of birth, enters the baby body and takes possession. To all intents and purposes, the reincarnator actually believes she is now reincarnated as a man (in spite of the almost universal fact that having entered the infant body, she now has lost her memory of her previous lives, and even of her identity). But if it is to be postulated that the infant body already has an “inmate”, which it acquired at the moment of conception—and a very inexperienced, weak and unsuspecting one—the rightful owner of the body can be subdued and suppressed and subjected to a background role in the future activities of that body. Then what we have is a “gay” personality which is actually female, but which has forgotten why it entered the body in the first place, and behaves in a logical manner consistent with its real sex, and tries to express its sexuality (the mentality of sexuality, which it learned in a previous incarnation or many incarnations) by selecting a man as its partner. In the event that the rightful owner of the body becomes a sort of “equal partner” the problem becomes one of transsexuality, and there ensues the struggle for dominance. The “woman” in the body knows she is a woman, and would like to escape from the male prison in which she finds herself.

In this editor’s opinion, the cure here might be shock treatment to drive the female entity from its usurpation of the body; not a surgical operation to change the male body to the appearance of a female body. Even if the operation is performed, having sex with a man is difficult, and pregnancy is impossible, so the "female organs" created by surgery are mere manipulated flesh and amputation of the original organs. In this case we have a true tragedy, the original male occupant of the body having been emasculated and totally frustrated, and mentally and psychically confused.

Experience has shown that transsexuals who have had sex-changing operations are almost always lonesome persons, unable to carry out a normal male-female relationship. It is true that some marry, but it is a sterile marriage, and actually no different than a homosexual marriage or a lesbian marriage.

In the universe there is always the dual principle. Male and female; black and white; hot and cold; positive and negative; good and bad; true and false, and so on. It is illogical to assume that these opposites are interchangeable, and in fact one and the same. The process of amalgamating both always seems to be the annihilation of both. It does not seem to make sense that there actually is no such thing as a male or a female, independently and incontrovertibly, but that an entity can "chose" what it is (either one depending upon a whim or whatever reason); rather it would seem that "once a woman, always a woman". And that "completeness" is rather a matter of "union" to achieve total expression. In a world where all entities were deprived of all mystery concerning either maleness or femininity, the whole thing might become a crashing bore, and the sterility of the face would result. Why even have boy and girl babies, if the ultimate goal is a neuter—an entity who is both or neither boy or girl? Along with mutuality of sexuality comes parturition, and we are back where we started from?

And what's the sense to that!—Rap.

ANCIENT HISTORY IN STONE

By RICHARD S. SHAVER

(Editor's note: This article is abstracted from the forthcoming book by Richard S. Shaver THIS ANCIENT EARTH—ITS STORY IN STONE, now in production. We believe you will find it fascinating and provocative. But it can only begin to suggest the incredible discovery that is set forth in the book, perhaps the most important writings of this controversial figure, who has already become a legend among his millions of followers. And now, modern electronics science is beginning to duplicate (and corroborate) an ancient science, as it is revealed here in Shaver's discovery of an incredible "library in stone" left scattered over the Earth by the ravages of that ancient "Deluge" of the Bible.)

It all began, for me, when my wife came in from the field with several "pretty stones" and said: "Richard, there are pictures on these stones!" I was amused at first, but when she showed me the stones, and I saw what she had seen—and more!—I went stone-hunting myself, and began a 25-year study of what I have come to call "rock-books". I am convinced that is what they are, and in this article, I intend to give you a glimpse

This (and other) "paintings" presented in this article were made by putting a slice of rock in an overhead projector and projecting it on a wet canvas. At the same time powdered marine glue is sifted into the light of the projection, which pushes the falling glue into a raised line image or emboss pattern of the light and dark portions of the projected image. These raised images are then "developed" by dragging a dry brush (one way only) across the ridges to emphasize the pattern. Another method is to coat the canvas with photo-sensitive material and project the image of the rock with the opaque projector.

This actual highly magnified photo of a rock slice can be viewed from all four angles. The dark area in the center is the significant area to study here. It is a reversible face and also a composite face. Note the white face facing the dark area, and then the front view of another face composed of both light and dark areas. See if you can find the several female profiles and a fierce male face. Due to the angle of the cut, all faces are slightly out of focus.

Another slice of stone photographed with light shining through it from the back side. The face on the right is male, wearing a round helmet, and its owner is apparently embracing the female facing him on the left. Directly between their faces can be seen a front view of a small child, probably symbolic of their union.

into the ancient past. It is said that seeing is believing. I don't ask you to believe! I ask you to look for yourself! The rock-book stones lie everywhere, and you can find your own; and with a little patience and a little serious examination and study, you can see for yourself!

It seems to me that Earth is far older than any of our scientists estimate, and far different in its life content from anything they try to explain.

If planets start as specks of dust in space, and grow by slow acquisition of space-dust into marbles, and the marbles gradually into something like planetoids. . . then, after a long, long time of slow growing, they are caught by the whirling gravitational field of some larger body and become satellites.

If you accept this view of the beginning of Earth, then you can perhaps see that on such a small ball, caught by the whirling magnetic gravity of a sun into new movement in a vast circle. . . conditions would become very different because of the new and sudden warmth.

That age of slow acquisitive growth of space-dust is the age of Earth, really. You cannot say it in figures. You have to visualize the immense span of time, so much greater than imagination can envision.

To understand this, think of gravity as a "something". Just because you cannot see it, doesn't mean it isn't a "something". It is a very "powerful something" that flows steadily into the earth and remains there. And it remains because it becomes something else—matter, rock, what-will-you—it becomes earth!

Gravity is itself the growth of earth-matter going on and on. It is a "real something", and it makes Earth grow. I think of gravity as the roots of a plant and that plant is Earth—the planet. It certainly is not a spirit force, real but unreal.

To grasp the concept of early life on Earth you have to see it as a marble in size, caught up by a giant sun long ago. It swung about the sun, and it was a living planet, warmed by the distant huge sun. It had air, because planets live and air is part of their life. Water condensed in the air and became oceans.

In these oceans life began to move. Earth had life, and I think of such life on a planet as a necessary part of its life, just as in your body the blood-cells are a necessary part of your life.

That is what people and fish and animals and oysters, etc., etc., really are! They are the blood-cells, the working parts of an immense life form. . . the planet!

A planet is alive, and its people are its blood-cells, circulating in its seas, moving over its land. When we are healthy and the life is normal, then we

This "projector" painting shows a confused mass of intermingled large and small figures and faces because of the difficulty of matching the focal length of the original images with that of the projector, and the "accidental" angle of the "cut" of the stone. Thus, the projector throws out all these images simultaneously. Note the many tiny images of the hair, the many instances of composite images (different angles of the same face in the same image).

This is a "four-way" picture rock. But when using a one-way movement of the dry brush, the other three embosses are usually obscured or eliminated. However, two images usually come out anyway, one of them "up side down", or in reverse black.

In these two photos, one of a projected painting, the other of a slice of very hard agate, we see the images quite plainly in both, even though they are probably separated in time by perhaps hundreds of thousands of years, because the stones vary greatly in geologic age.

These two rock paintings seem quite obvious—they are scenes of marriages. Marriages are always fun—the bride is being carried aloft, either on a shoulder, or on a special carrying chair. Note the immense confusion and profusion of tiny images (due to the plane of the cut being at the wrong angle) in the painting on the right.

know what to do, just as our blood-cells know what to do, and they carry the carbon dioxide away and bring the fresh oxygen, and so on and so on. Nobody tells them—they know. It is that knowing that is really built-in to life. Like gravity, you can't see it. We call it the sense of right and wrong, or we call it conscience, or we do not have any and call it nonsense. In the latter case, we are abnormal blood-cells of the plant planet. . .sick and burdensome to our greater life-mother, Earth.

To me, this is all built-in inherited knowledge. No one taught me. I just know it.

No one had to teach that early life on the planet Earth what to do or how to do it. It knew, and it did what the mother earth needed. It was healthy and good and not ignorant; It had the mother's vast ancient wisdom built-in when it was born!

Church people call built-in sensitivity to the greater life above us "soul", or they call it "divine knowledge", or they burden it all down with mystic references in large and nonunderstandable words of no real content.

But we commoners and laymen do not need telling, or teaching, or large and ponderous words thrown at us from every side. We know. . .we were born with the mother's umbilical cord still tight fast to our minds. . .and we know what she needs of us.

So don't blame us if we feel scornful of those with no string attached. They are orphans, and we don't know why they are orphans or why they don't know.

So when I talk about "This Ancient Earth", it is of a dying mother speaking to her children, exhorting them to find a way of their own, now that they have finally slain her with their misbehavior.

Our Mother Earth is not old as planets go, perhaps, but she has been moving through some terrible times, and the dead moon has struck her too many blows for everything to be quite right with her health.

We haven't been good children for a long time now, but she knows why. I often think she has been unconscious or things would be different. But one can't know if that is true or not, or if she feels the pain of wrongfulness or not.

Anyway, this article is about the ancient times of Earth's youth, when people were much larger of body and longer of life. Then the seas were not salt, and the air was not soiled with industry and its chimneys and its motor cars. Air was quite invigorating, and life was long and happy and filled with a sense of accomplishment and rightness that is no longer present.

From the rock records we can draw a picture of the whole of the past eras of Earth's history under the domination of mankind. They can

A battle scene between an Amazon and a giant ape-bat. With an ape's terrific strength, coupled with a bat's dive bomber technique, they were apt to bowl you off your feet and have your throat wide open before you knew what hit you. This picture was made by projecting the stone slice with an opaque projector onto a canvas doped with photo-sensitive chemicals.

Photo of the sawed face of a rock sent from Viet Nam. Such faces as these run all the way through the rocks, and to call them accidental is to ignore the illogic of a rock crammed with faces. Today we "photograph" thousands of pictures by means of laser beams in one crystal cube smaller than a sugar cube. What we need is a better scientific way of bringing out the photos in these ancient crystalline stones.

Here are two actual photos of the same stone. One of them is focused on the plane surface of the stone, showing the many partial pictures the saw passed through. Visible also are the saw-marks. The confusion is evident, yet the pictures can be seen by study. By focusing on just one of the faces in the semi-transparent stone, we get the picture on the left. This is done by deliberately diffusing the focus so as to reduce distracting details. Each photo in these rocks has its own view-lane, and one is clearer than the other because the saw passed closer to this view-plane.

only show you the world as it was during a high state of civilization. For when the rock books were made, long, long ago, people had learned the immensely complex optical science behind the pictures in the rock books. (Just as we are now impressing millions of pictures and information on cubes of crystal with laser beams.)

But oddly enough one can find rock books of a very simple, childlike kind. Were they made first, during an age of slow development of the mind and the science? It seems not. They could be the product of children in school, learning how.

One keeps looking for the oldest, the simplest, the most primitive, but this idea rises out of our utter ignorance of how things really began on Earth.

One hesitates, because of our present-day shibboleths and fixations, to say what the truth about the beginnings really may be.

Yet to me it occurs again and again that the true beginnings of mankind are dual. There was life on Earth, and there was life on other planets. . . and somewhere along the line of time and travel and the infinitudes of space the line of mankind's origin gets hidden. I can't say for sure mankind did NOT begin on Earth. I can't say for sure man did not begin on Earth and develop from scratch the sciences of space research and the construction of space vessels.

We may never be sure. But it looks to me as though man may be a true son of Earth and Earth's oceans and no hybrid of space races. For the Mers of our oceans do indeed go back to the very beginnings of Earth itself.

"The Merm", as they called themselves, are the only genuine authorities about the earliest world, which was a world of water, mostly.

There were the Manoarfin, the Khmer, the Merfin, the Finns, etc., but generally speaking they were called the Merm.

The Merm have come down to us only in our legends of the Mermaids. The male mermen are hardly ever mentioned in legends.

Like varying species of fish they have their differences. In some, the males are larger than the females, and vice versa. One notices that some pictures of Mers show a very large female compared to the small male.

The scientists who look for a missing link among landlubber species are so wide of the mark it is laughable. They have been looking for the "link" in a tree for a good long time now. Mermen were not very expert at climbing trees!

The Merm were very bookish, and they made so many of them one knows they were as numerous as any other fish in those early oceans. Pondering on the vast numbers of rock books, one only begins to understand it when one thinks, "What would New York be like if newspapers would not burn?"

It would be buried under its own newsprint! They wouldn't survive very many Sundays of some of those big Sunday editions.

The Merm made very durable "newspaper" rock books and they saved all of them for they were a practical people. They even built houses out of them!

When I first found the rock books I had no intention of doing anything like work with them. I thought all I had to do was tell about them, and others would go to work on them and tell me all about them.

It was then I found that present-day American science was not receptive to being informed of the presence of rock books in the farmer's rock piles. They couldn't be told. It was like trying to wake the dead, or get the President on the phone, or like a postman trying to get a raise.

Mer book-rock were shaped to be put together. There are little ledges and keys so that properly fitted they make their own shelves, and will stack in a certain shape. That is, a stack of Mer rock originally was formed to fit together in a figure, a sculpture of some significant shape. These most ancient of all libraries were stacked so, under water, like so many sculptures arranged in the Mer idea of order.

Other rocks were shaped as they are to fit into the projector axle. The projector had a shaft with a socket into which the rock fitted, and turned slowly, the pickup eyes of the device scanned in a certain spiral sequence.

All this forgotten gadgetry of the forgotten peoples will have to be recreated from the rock-book pictures if we are ever to read them properly.

This is a new field, a new science. I started it. There are few quotes because there are no others to quote. There are no experts in pre-deluge artifacts; so far as I know I am the only one who ever really looked at any rock respectfully.

The optics of rock books are tricky. They need study to be appreciated. But, in spite of that, one can with almost no help but a couple of reading glasses over each other get a great deal out of any rock book.

It is that great deal I have to give you—a simple man's first look at a heretofore hidden past. The first man of our line, the "missing link" between man's evolution and the beast world, has been sought by antiquarians all over the world. And all that time he was staring at them from the rocks they ignored!

THEY FLY OVER THE POLE EVERY DAY

RAY PALMER

It's official! The atom bombers (SAC) fly over the north pole every day! And they fly in what they call a "grid pattern" which covers the entire area in a pattern of squares so that there is no part of the top of the world that they do not scan visually every day. And do you know what? They can state positively that there is no hole at the north pole!

How wonderful it is to know that we can now relax and quit wondering if Earth is hollow, peopled inside by super races, and that no hordes of invading flying saucers will come out and destroy us. We knew we could depend on the Air Force to come up with the facts, and with the ability to prove how wrong we are in theorizing there is a hole in good old Mother Earth! It's a great relief to us. . . or is it?

As we think back to the phone call that came to us (and lasted one and a half hours), we begin by appreciating the fact that it wasn't a "collect" call. It was nice of this SAC representative (he didn't say he was a SAC representative, mind you, but he did call from the area of the SAC base) to spend so much time setting us straight. And because he did, it is only fair that we pass on the information to you. Like SAC, "We'd like you to know".

First, he said, SAC is a very efficient and highly scientific organization. It has to be, because it is the first line of defense against an atomic attack on this country. They are ever on the alert, and there is not one moment when an atomic bomber(s) is (are) not in the air, ready to deliver horrible destruction to an attacker, once the fact becomes known that atomic rockets have been launched across the pole. Naturally, in flying these alerts, the pilots of the bombers know every instant where they are and where they are going, and how to get anywhere they are instructed to go. Navigation is their "thing" and they know everything there is to know. Their instruments are the most sophisticated in the world. When those instruments say their plane is over a particular spot on Earth, they are over it! And that goes for the exact spot where some persons have postulated a hole exists. In the process of flying the grid patterns, at least one SAC plane flies over that spot every day. None of them have ever seen a hole! That alone ought to settle all arguments as to the existence of the hole. It just doesn't!

If you laid out the grid pattern on a globe you would come up with a series of checkerboard squares about 100 miles wide. Any plane in any one of these squares would have in view the entire 100-mile expanse. In response to our question, the laying out of this grid pattern is done by use of celestial navigation, the shooting of the stars and the sun, the horizon, and whatever means are used to determine latitude and longitude. By this method, your own backyard could be pinpointed on this 8000-mile diameter globe no matter where it was. It is all a matter of geometry. But this isn't all—there are other instruments to confirm the observations. Such things as the magnetic compass (conceded to be useless in the vicinity of the pole, and besides, the magnetic pole is many hundreds of miles away from the geographic pole), and the inertial guidance system, which records the rotation of Earth (the closer you get to the pole, the slower the speed).

However, assuming that you have your grid laid out on a ball of clay, consider what happens to all the right angles in your grid when you place that clay on a potter's wheel and depress the top so a dimple begins to form, and also so the ball of clay begins to flatten so that the shape is more like a doughnut. As we begin to open the "throat" of our "pot" we gradually stretch the "grid" around the "lip" of the pot (in this case, the lip of the hole we have imagined in Earth) and we find our grid becomes a sort of acute-obtuse formation of diamond-shaped figures rather than squares. And where we had a single square at the center which is the location of our "pole" and also our "hole", we have a roughly circular area several hundreds of miles across where-in there is no grid. And, from the vantage point of the "distorted" grid areas adjacent, the "hole" is not visible because it is "over the horizon" and a very much foreshortened horizon at that. (See polar explorer Nansen's story.) So, we can see that no manner of celestial observations will give us a complete grid coverage if it is reckoned from a perfect sphere rather than this (exaggerated) doughnut we have fashioned on our potter's wheel. So, while we are sure SAC flies its "grid", it is necessary to note that while "diamonds" are a girl's best friend, they are not necessarily "friendly" to SAC's "opinion" that they are seeing what they think they are seeing!

What SAC if flying (if we assume our "hole" is actually there) is a 1500-mile "necklace" around the top of the world, formed of "squares" of a grid which have been "stretched" into "diamonds" arranged in a circle.

But that isn't the only thing our "SAC" informant told us—he referred to our contention that rockets shot directly over the pole invariably do not go into orbit, by stating the reason Vandenburg Air Force Base launches its rockets in what they describe as "near polar orbits", is to avoid the danger of atomic war. Said he: "If we launched a rocket directly over the pole, the Russians would have to assume it was an atomic attack, and retaliate. We would have to do the same for any rocket we detected coming our way!" But he neglected to explain how it was that if the SAC bombers fly this complete grid of the polar area, especially that square directly over the pole, this would also show up on Russian radar as "incoming atomic attackers" and they would retaliate. And of course, SAC is not going to notify the Russians of exactly where our bombers are flying, so that they can be intercepted—so how can the Russians know which "blip" to attack and which to ignore?

When "flight plans" were referred to, we asked if we could be furnished the flight plan and navigational computations and maps so that we could demonstrate where they would fail to come anywhere near the "hole" in the pole, we were informed very condescendingly and humorously that this was "top secret classified information" and therefore it was ridiculous that we even ask for it. Besides, we wouldn't want it—we've no desire to be accused of espionage! So, it would seem that the "proof" is still up to the "negatives", because if the hole actually is there, our "proof" is obvious even to a high school freshman.

Our informant was notoriously ignorant of the discovery by the Russians that the "pole" is not a "point", but actually a 1500-mile-long strip. He didn't know either that that sunken mountain range also mapped by the Russians and called the "Lomonosov Ridge" is also 1500 miles long, and coincides with the 1500-mile "pole". He couldn't conceive that the "Ridge" is not really a "mountain range" under the polar sea at all, but merely the "rim" of the "hole" where the Arctic Ocean grows "shallow" by the action upon it of centrifugal forces at the "rim" of the hole.

One final thought—if the hole actually is there, both sides are going to be very surprised at the failure of atomic rockets launched over the pole, which stand little chance of going where they are aimed! Maybe God thought of something they didn't!

HAPPENINGS NOW

EIGHTEEN U.F.O. JOIN SOVIET SPACE PROBE

Eighteen unidentified objects clustered around the Russian space probe, Salyut 2. This was reported by the head of the Wilhelf Foerster Observatory in West Berlin.

These objects were first noted on April 4th when the space probe was between its 22nd and 24th orbit around the earth.

It was expected that a manned

Soyuz capsule would rendezvous with Salyut. At this writing, no word has come of this. One wonders if the presence of the eighteen U.F.O. could have brought about a change of plans.

On April 25th, Walter Cronkite reported that Salyut 2 was breaking up in space. Again we might wonder if the presence of the 18 U.F.O. were in any way responsible for this.

SCIENTIST TESTS POWER OF "HEALING" HANDS" ON MICE

At the request of an unnamed Hungarian gentleman who professed to have "healing hands", a Canadian biologist, Bernard Grad, agreed to make scientific experiments to test these powers.

Forty-eight mice were divided into three groups. Then they were all anesthetized so that lesions about the size of a quarter could be inflicted on their backs. These wounds were then measured for accurate comparison of healing time.

One group was held in the hand by one of two "healers" for 15 minutes daily. The second group was mechanically warmed to the same degree as the hand warmed them for

Beneath the alarms and confusions of our time, not just one but TWO revolutionary trends exist, interlocking only occasionally.

Both are Marxist in origin; but their present-day inspiration is separate and distinct. One follows the line of the Socialist International, whose world-leadership since 1923 has been furnished by Britain's Fabian Socialists. The other, seemingly fragmented, is steered and provoked by International Communists.

One claims to be "peaceful," "liberal," "humanitarian" and "democratic," and under those labels has gained great influence in the academic, government, and business establishments of our nation. It aims to lock this country into political and economic union, first with Western Europe and then with a "federalized" World State via the United Nations—thus ending America's long-cherished Independence.

The other revolution breeds violence and terror without visible central leadership. Its thesis is, like Lenin's, that revolution resides in the barrel of a gun. Meanwhile, it benefits from the softening-up process which "liberals" and "social democrats" have fostered, and awaits the day when a military-type revolution might be opportune.

WHICH of these TWO revolutions will win in the end? WHY should either be allowed to win? The answer still lies with the people of the United States. But unless they know and understand the choice of evils being offered them, how can they be sure what to do? The Selling of America tells the story more factually and fearlessly than any book published in this country to date.

15 minutes. The third group of mice was left alone.

Results: The wounds on those held daily by the "healing hands" were noticeably smaller at the end of two weeks. The other two groups healed at exactly the same rate, proving that it was not the added warmth that speeded the healing, but rather, something that emanated from the "healing hands".

RETURN OF THE ICE AGE

The threat, according to scientists from a score of institutions who gathered at Brown University in Providence, R.I., recently to share information on "The End of the Present Interglacial," is not that miles-thick ice sheets are about to come sweeping down out of the north, returning us instantaneously to an ice-age climate.

It is rather than there are already signs that the earth is cooling in a cycle similar to those that heralded earlier great glaciations. And, while it may be several centuries before any major global effects are felt and several thousand years before ice sheets return, preliminary signs are already apparent.

Near End Of Warm Cycle

The 46 scientists who participated in the Providence working conference, most of whose research is supported by the National Science Foundation, have been studying the fossil and sediment records left by cycles of ice growth and thaw going back some million years.

They have been finding repeated patterns of advancing and receding ice, interspersed with "interglacial" periods when the earth's climate seems to reach its warmest just before beginning the steep slide back to glaciation.

We are currently in such an "interglacial," they report. And we are rapidly reaching its end.

"Interglacial maxima, of which the present warm interval is one," according to Cesare Emiliani of the University of Miami, "were less than 10,000 years long. This... conclusion is of immediate concern, because the present warm interval has already lasted close to 10,000 years."

What Emiliani and the others have concluded, from evidence uncovered on every continent and in all the major oceans, is that:

- The present interglacial interval of warm temperature reached a peak some 6,000 years ago.
- The drop in temperature since then has been of only a few degrees; a drop of only a few degrees more could have global climatic effects.

Deserts Would Spread

The problem of recurring glaciation is not the problem of the cold alone.

Along with ice spreading down from the north, increasing drought in many places could be expected as water becomes locked up in ice and global patterns of weather and rainfall are sharply altered.

Sea levels would fall, deserts would spread and once-lush areas would become wastelands; all of these things have happened before.

It Is Already Colder

The overall impact seems to be that the world's upper latitudes are experiencing small drops in temperature, which can have large effects. Meanwhile in the lower latitudes, nearer the equator, some areas are experiencing increasing dryness as storm tracks shift their paths.

● Snow banks cover areas of Baffin Island today which were seasonally snow-free 30 or 40 years before the present cooling, J.T. Andrews and his colleagues at the University of Colorado at Boulder report. Similarly pack ice around Iceland is once again becoming the serious hindrance to navigation it was during the "little ice age" of the 17th and 18th centuries.

● C. Bertrand Schultz of the University of Nebraska State Museum at Lincoln finds that warmth-loving animals, such as the armadillos which expanded northward into the American Midwest in the first half of this century, are now retreating southward again.

● Vojen Lozek of the Czechoslovak Academy of Science reports a similar ominous absence of warmth-loving snails from the forests of Central Europe. And Herbert E. Wright Jr. of the University of Minnesota at Minneapolis reports that hardwood forests are again encroaching on the prairie that 5,000 years ago spread into southern Minnesota under the influence of the interglacial temperature high. Pollen evidence there indicates that in the past, when the region got still colder, the hardwood forests gave way to pine and then to spruce. Ultimately, as the ice spreads south, the region reverts to a treeless, Arctic tundra before the cycle is reversed.

When the temperatures were at their peak in the world's high latitudes, according to Fairbridge, forest borders reached the Arctic shores in both Canada and Siberia.

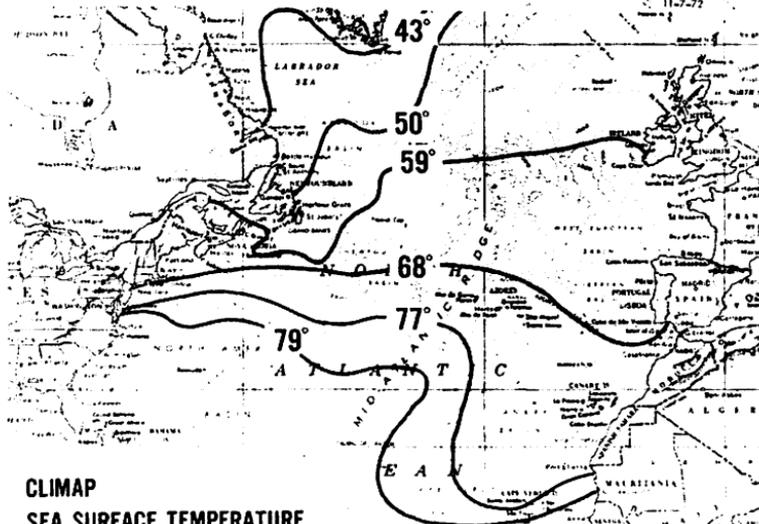

Since then, he reports, the tundra there has pushed the forest back some 800 miles to the south.

In the last 5,000 years, notes Fairbridge, vast areas of North Africa, which once enjoyed seasonal rains and maintained a savanna vegetation, great herds of wildlife and large and vigorous nomad populations, have reverted to desert.

More currently, "Progressive desiccation is now being recorded in easternmost Brazil, North Africa, the Middle East, the Kalahari, Iran, Pakistan, parts of India and northern Australia.”

In the future, he predicts, vast areas of Latin America, Africa, Asia and Australia will be increasingly affected by shortness of rainfall, with its associated scourges—drought, soil erosion and starvation.

We Are Living in An Unusual Time

Similar indications of what seems to be coming are being found elsewhere in Europe, Africa, South America, the Arctic and Antarctic as well as oceans and sea bottoms around the world. Anywhere a fossil or sediment record can be read, scientists are finding evidence of climatic cycles in which such warm periods as the present are the exception, not the rule.

“We find that sea-surface temperatures in the Caribbean have attained their present levels only two per cent of the time during the last 450,000 years,” declares John Imbrie of Brown University. “Clearly we are living in an unusual time and cannot, on the basis of past evidence, expect the present warm age to last much longer.”

What the world may be experiencing, the research suggests, is a return to normal. Temperatures as warm as those at present, appear to prevail on earth no more than 10 per cent of the time.

A believer tests faith by handling poisonous snakes.

TEST FAITH WITH SNAKES AND FIRE

Members of the “Holiness Church of God in Jesus’ Name” buried two of their brethren Thursday after they drank strychnine during services Sunday.

The bodies of the Rev. Jimmy Ray Williams, 34, of Carson Springs and the Rev. Buford Pack, 30, of Marshall, N.C., were buried with Bibles opened to a passage in the Gospel of St. Mark: “They shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them. . .”

The pastor of the church, the Rev. Lister Pack, said: “Several brothers have been drinking strychnine for years in addition to handling the serpents. We will continue. In addition, we are going to test our faith with fire.”

“Preacher Ruble Campbell down the road is going to give the church a blowtorch. God will furnish the power and we the faith," said the minister, whose church has 48 members.

He said the blowtorch will be turned on the faces and arms of "those anointed by the Holy Ghost."

Interpret Bible Literally

Religious snake handling began in 1909 in Grasshopper Valley, Tenn., when George W. Hensley read the verse in St. Mark. For proof he chased down a big rattlesnake in a rocky gap and called a meeting of his neighbors.

He exhorted them to express their belief in the truth of the Bible by passing the angrily buzzing snake among themselves. No one was hurt and word quickly spread.

The founder's faith caused his death in 1955 at Lester's Shed, Fla. He was fatally bitten by a diamondback rattler during a prayer service. The bite was nearly fatal to the movement as well.

Because of adverse publicity, many snake-handling churches have gone underground and allow only members to view the services.

THE DEVIL IS POPPING OUT ALL OVER

The Rev. John J. Nicola, assistant director of the Catholic Shrine of the Immaculate Conception in Washington, D.C. says he believes the world is on the eve of a new outbreak of diabolical influence and events. "In Eastern countries like Ceylon there are hundreds of diabolical possessions a year.

"Here, in the West, there is growing awareness of the spirit world. Why couldn't an outbreak of diabolical influence happen here, too?"

"The Devil may cause the exorcist to suffer physical injury or even death. In fact, 20 percent of the cases I've seen documented resulted in the exorcist himself becoming possessed by the Devil.

"I'm terrified by that prospect."

Full-Time Exorcist Wanted

"Today's increased interest in black magic and occult practices is revealing the true power of evil forces in the world."

"The need to restore the practice of exorcism is becoming more and more urgent," said Bishop Robert Mortimer of Exeter, England. "I have become disturbed by the number of requests from people in my diocese for help in exorcising evil spirits.

"The bishop himself has performed a number of exorcisms. But the last one he did didn't work out very well. The spirit just moved to another house further up the street.

"After that, we decided to hire a specialist."

Study of Devil Popular Course at Fordham University

A course, called "Devilology," devoted to study of the Devil, is given in the theology department of the university, which is predominantly Catholic.

"Thirty-six students are enrolled, and I could have found twice as many who wanted to take the course," said the priest-lecturer, the Rev. Robert E. McNally. "It deals with various aspects of the occult—witchcraft, demons, demonic possession and devil worship.

"I approach these subjects from the theological, historical and psychological points of view.

Devilology is the study of how evil works in the world—the evil that people see all around them, and how they cope with it.

"I'm not so sure there is really such a person as the Devil," says the priest.

"People just usually start thinking there is when they feel an acute amount of evil in their lives."

"We can explain away almost all the reports of witchcraft, possession and so forth, as superstition."

"But there are a few reports that really have no explanation."

AN ENGINEER LOOKS AT....

BIO-FEEDBACK AND ALPHA CONTROL

Bio-feedback, or Alpha control offers many tantalizing and exciting possibilities. This no-nonsense article may trigger off a heightened spirituality and happier life for the readers of Search Magazine.

R. N. Kamp

Bio-feedback is a method of achieving emotional tranquility by the control of brain waves. It is similar, or maybe identical, to the peaceful mind produced by Zen and Yoga. But, whereas Zen requires about 15 years to learn, bio feedback can be learned in several hours. Depending upon what literature you read, the benefits claimed for the control of brain waves are these:

- Improvement of concentration, imagination, spirituality, relaxation, learning ability, and ability to recall even during the stress of an examination.

- Reduction of tension, anxiety, neurosis, mental stress, migraine headaches, psychosomatic ills, heart attacks, allergies, gastro-intestinal problems, claustrophobia, stuttering, and hyperactivity in children.

In other words, if the problem starts in the brain, then control of brain waves may offer a solution.

PRINCIPLE OF OPERATION

The ten million cells in the brain are constantly generating electricity which has cyclic variations like the 60 cycle alternating current in your home. When two electrodes are placed on the two sides of your forehead, the voltage generated by your brain (about 50 microvolts) can be measured, and the frequency of the cyclic variations can be determined. There are four separate frequencies or waves, each of which has its own particular affect on mental alertness as shown by the following chart.

Name of Wave	Frequency Range. Cycles per sec.	Degree of Mental Alertness
Delta	0 to 4	Deepest sleep, unconsciousness.
Theta	4 to 8	Deep meditation, reverie, problem solving, creativity, first step toward sleep.
Alpha	8 to 13	Alert, calm but not drowsy, clear mind, relaxed, no anxiety.
Beta	13 to 30	Very alert, tense, anxious, high strung, extreme concentration.

All four waves are operating at all times but your degree of mental alertness depends on which wave is the strongest. In other words, when the Beta wave is stronger than the other three, you are tense; when Alpha is strongest, you are relaxed.

Each person has his own particular frequency for each wave, for example, your Alpha wave may be 9 cycles per second, and your spouse's may be 11.

For each person, the frequency of each of the 4 waves is relatively constant within about ½ cycle per second.

The particular wave that this article is concerned with is the Alpha wave. When you can cause your brain to have a high amplitude or strength of Alpha voltage, then you can attain all or some of the benefits described in the start of this article.

FEEDBACK

The method of producing high Alpha voltage is called biological feedback, or bio-feedback. In this method, two disc-shaped electrodes are placed on each side of the forehead to pick up the electric voltages generated by the brain. These voltages are amplified, and then filtered to remove all frequencies except that of the Alpha wave, although some equipment includes the Theta wave as well as the Alpha. The amplified and filtered electric energy is then conducted to a pair of earphones such as used in hi-fi and stereo sets. When the strength of the Alpha wave is low, no significant sound is heard in the earphones. But, when the strength of the Alpha wave is high, the earphones give a pleasant sound, such as falling rain. In other words, when a person is successful in strengthening his Alpha wave, he is reinforced or rewarded by not only the pleasant sound in the earphones but also by the feeling of pleasant relaxation. After a person has learned how to increase his Alpha voltage with this feedback equipment, then he can attain his Alpha "high" without the equipment at any time or place.

INDUCING ALPHA

The big problem is how to start or induce the increased Alpha wave so that the feedback can be initiated. Learning bio-feedback is like learning to ride a bicycle; you can learn only by trying, and after you learn, you can't explain how you did it.

To start to induce feedback, the amount of input to the five senses should be as low as possible. The room should provide a relaxed atmosphere with comfortable temperature and no odors. The chair should be comfortable. The earphones will exclude distracting sounds. The eyes should be closed to exclude visual distractions, but one instructor advises half of a ping-pong ball over each eye to produce "whiteness" instead of darkness. The idea is to produce a feeling of nothing. You can't force it to happen. You must let or permit it to happen.

Some start off by relaxing all the muscles so as to feel like a dish rag. Others start by thinking of something pleasant, like sexual fantasy. Still others count backwards as when going under anaesthesia. But, whatever method triggers off your Alpha wave, when it happens, you will be thinking of nothing at all.

Once you learn your own method of initiated Alpha, the pleasant rainfall in the earphones will reinforce your method. Then, with more experience, the electronic feedback equipment is no longer needed, and you can attain Alpha anywhere, anytime, under any circumstances. You have an instant tranquilizer, and immediate escape and an elevated spirituality without any loss of awareness.

An average person can learn to increase his Alpha wave in 5 or 6 hours with the feedback equipment. However, a person who is naturally relaxed may learn in several minutes. A tense person may require as long as 15 hours, or he may never get the "hang" of it.

WHERE TO START

In general, there are two methods of starting an Alpha program. One is to look for ads in magazines on where to buy an inexpensive (about $80) electroencephalophone which includes instructions, electrodes, amplifier, filter and headphones whereby you can learn at home. The other method is to attend a special school (in the larger cities) where they have professional electroencephalophones and experienced instructors. The course in school consists of about 10 sessions of 45 minutes each for a cost of about $175. There are some gyp artists in this new field of bio-feedback. So, before you invest your dollars and your sanity, check with your doctor and the Better Business Bureau.

CONCLUSION

After reading the many benefits of bio-feedback shown in the start of this article, you may think that it is merely another over-rated gimmick. Perhaps you still feel like the devil after trying tranquilizers, pot, heroin, pep pills, LSD, vitamins, negative ions, sleep learning, positive thinking, auto suggestion, ESP, Yoga, Zen, hypnotism, group therapy, psychiatry, bio-rhythm, vibrating machines, isometrics, aerobics, weight-watching, etc., etc. If so, it is entirely possible that your inherent personality plus your environment are such that you have already reached the pinnacle of your success and happiness. But, then again, because Alpha control is so basic and fundamental to brain activity, it is possible that it is the very foundation of many of the other therapies listed in the preceding paragraph.

So, if your profession, vocation or hobby requires clear, logical and unemotional thinking and decisions, or if it requires meditation and heightened spirituality, or if you are tense, unhappy, frustrated and concerned about the latest theory that heart trouble is related to emotional stress, then bio-feedback may be worthwhile investigating, of course with your doctor's concurrence.

TRUE EXPERIENCES

OUR HELPFUL GHOST

By Leonora E. Davies

Long before I ever thought of emigrating, a very well known medium gave me a 'sitting'. Amongst his predictions he said I would emigrate to Canada, buy a bungalow type of house, have mountains around me, a view of the water, and added "you will hear knocks on walls and doors, and the movement of unknown footsteps around the house" but advised me not to be afraid.

After spending most of my life in England, I am now living in Canada, and the house and scenery are exactly as described. Although a brand new house, I frequently hear heavy footsteps moving from room to room, the opening and closing of doors, and the conversations of these unseen guests, although the words are not distinct enough to quote.

Some months ago I was having a sleepless night and decided to creep downstairs and sit in the den for a while. Knowing I would disturb my daughter if I switched on the staircase light, I made my way in the dark. I had reached the middle of the unlit den when I became aware of the staircase light being switched on. Thinking to myself "now I am going to get ticked off for walking downstairs in the dark" I waited for my daughter to appear, and when she failed to do so, I guessed she was waiting for me at the top of the staircase, so went to meet her outburst. But she wasn't there—she was still sound asleep in bed, and we were the only occupants in the house.

Some weeks later, I decided to do some extra household chores whilst my daughter was on holiday in Hawaii. Our chandelier wanted polishing, and I was cleaning one of the crystal drops when it came away in my hand. Although I had handled it very carefully, I must have tugged on the fragile fitting and pulled it away from its base. I tried and tried again to fix it without success, so decided to place it on the table and await my daughter's return when I would ask her to do it for me. When she came back I mentioned my mishap to her and asked her to see what she could do. "Sure" came the reply "where is it?" I told her it was on the table but apparently she could not find it. We both hunted for it but it seemed to have completely disappeared. Then I looked up at the chandelier—every crystal drop was in its place, including the one I had pulled off. Who put it back? I had not received any guests during my daughter's holiday, so it must have been my unseen guests.

A few weeks ago, a gold chain my daughter was wearing broke at the clasp, and she put it in an envelope ready to take to the jeweller for repair. When she went to look at it again it was so knotted she wondered if even the jeweller could do anything with it. When I asked about it, she said "Oh, you look at it—I think it is hopeless". I took the chain out of the envelope and it was perfectly straight, yet it had not been touched since she put it back in the envelope.

WHO WROTE THAT SONG?

By E. B. S.

Anyone who writes songs knows it takes days, weeks, sometimes months to turn out a polished, professional idea. One has to dig and wait and sweat for a fresh line, an original thought.

One evening I was depressed because my creative talent had left me. . .left me completely. I alternated between frenzy and apathy, for I had a notebook full of great ideas, but nothing would come! I was written out. . .kapoot! So I sat down to doodle pictures with a grim mouth and cynical heart.

To this day, I can't describe what happened at that moment! Something was pushing my hand so fast that I didn't know what was coming next. When it suddenly stopped, I felt like a speeding car when the brakes are suddenly yanked.

I stared breathlessly. Every word was in perfect rhythm, the structure was perfect. . .I didn't have to change a syllable! I ran to the piano and the music to this song came as smoothly and as quickly as the lyric. I was flabbergasted! I had never experienced anything so magnificent before! True, I'd gotten inspiration before many times in my sleep. . .as all creative people do. . .but this was different.

That glorious feeling. . .I must be truthful. . .was short-lived. I felt just like a deflated balloon when I went to mail it off to a publisher and this writing came through: "Wait. Put the song aside. Let us handle it."

And I'm still waiting. • But I've calmed myself down about it by realizing it isn't really my song. If "they" are not worried about time (as I've been all my life) or the outcome of the song, why should I be? If they tell me to WAIT, then why should I feel frantically pressed for time? If 'they' want to handle it, then "they" must have a plan outlined for it. . .and I'm wise enough to realize that my forcing anything, my protests, my own display of any aggressive initiative is NOT going to change that plan.

It took that experience to show me that everything I write is planned. . .that I'm being watched over and guided, that I'm not just a straw in the wind being blown aimlessly about. I don't get frantic or bitter anymore when I get that 'I'm-written-out' feeling. I just rest and re-fuel, so to speak, and kinda lean my head on God's Shoulder for awhile.

WHO WROTE MY SONG? I'm certain I didn't. . .so who are you? What was your life like when you were here on earth? How wonderful and inspiring that you can still create and give forth beauty, when those who loved you mournfully weep that you are dead. You are ALIVE. . .more alive, perhaps, then we are. . .for in that song there's all the feelings, emotions, passions and beauty of love. It's a contented love. . .not the one-sided, disillusioned love we write about so often. What is your name? Where did you live? How humble I feel that you gave that song to me. And WHY was I the one you gave it to?

My fear of complete extinction after death has left me. It's been proven to me that DESIRE never dies. And what I've done here, I shall do after death, too. And I shall know then WHO wrote that song.

A WARNING VISION

By Eve Roe

It was late on a dark October day on the prairie, and the snow had been piling up in drifts against the house all day. Mother was weary, what with nursing her eldest girls, all dreadfully ill with typhoid fever, and at the same time she herself was only a month from childbirth.

As she sat rocking quietly in the sickroom, the bedroom door opened and two men, carrying a small white coffin, appeared in the doorway. She recognized Mr. Nimmo, the town undertaker at once and indignantly rose to chase him out! Suppose one of the sick girls had seen him and the coffin! It was enough to scare them to death. But as she made a warning gesture of silence the men and their burden disappeared.

She sank down, overwhelmed with dismay. The children seemed to be recovering. As anxious mothers will, she touched their brows and scanned each little face but they were all sleeping and they were better!

Exhausted, she yielded her place to Papa while she went off to snatch a few winks of sleep and when they awakened her she knew at once that the vision had been a warning.

"Ida is dead," they told her gently.

Mr. Nimmo the undertaker came and told her that he had only two coffins from which she must choose—one, a big ugly brown one was made for a big man. The other was a nice little white one, suitable for a young girl. . .but it was a trifle too short. . .He hesitated, delicately leaving it to her to fill in the details.

She chose the too-short white one, as indeed, she saw was inevitable. In a blizzard, on the prairie in 1900 there was little choice.

I am the daughter whose birth occurred a week after Ida's death and these details were told me by my mother.

The town was Devils Lake, in North Dakota.

CONVINCED

Dear Mr. Palmer,
I've read Oahspe once and am now in the process of reading again, "The Green Oahspe". I am convinced that Oahspe is the truth which I have waited and searched for. If you will have me, I would like to work for and serve Jehovah by joining you and anyone else who shares my faith in Him. Although I have no skills in science or medicine or law it is my greatest desire to serve Jehovah's Kingdom on Earth in any way He may find possible. Although I am not able to join you permanently until September for reasons which I will explain later, I would like very much to correspond with you and present some questions I have concerning Oahspe. I am nineteen years old and have completed my high school education. If you are able to find time to answer my letter, my address is:

● Thank you for the offer, but we do not have a colony here—our job is publishing; and this is a highly technical thing which I spent a lifetime learning, and also requires creative writing skill. We have a competent staff, many of whom have been with us for years. Actually, we get many offers, really hundreds of them over the years, from people who would like to join us, thinking we have a Faithist colony. Some have even come to visit us, and unfortunately, not all of them have really been Oahspeans, but the sort of people it seems the drujas send to put obstacles and annoyances in our way.

We have no way of judging, even if we accepted anybody except a bonafide applicant for a job. So, since to us the family and its privacy is of the utmost importance, we have a policy of making it plain we don't wish to become involved with outsiders. It has always been a serious mistake when we allowed it, and it handicapped and impeded our work. You understand there is a reason for our policy, I am sure. However, we are publishing your letter so that those of our readers who are interested in colonies or wish to contact people like you, may do so.—Rap.

WHAT IS A FAITHIST?

❖ A Faithist is one who gives recognition, faith and devotion to the Creator, the Eternal Being, and not to lesser gods or lords or saviours.

To the Faithist, the One Supreme Being is ever-present with man; and man has the capability of direct communication with Him.

The Faithist sees God, the Creator, as the All Life and Substance of the universe, a Being of spirit and body and person, but not in the figure of a man.

The Faithist may use many names in his effort to describe or comprehend the Creator, such as, Supreme Being, Universal Intelligence, Great Spirit. He often uses the name Jehovih, which is the most ancient name of God in recorded history, derived from the sounds in nature as perceived by primitive man,—EE—OH—IH.

The Faithist believes in individual immortality. He understands that, although high-raised individuals of heavenly realms may be designated as gods or goddesses to hold authority under the Supreme Being, they are not worshipful. Only the All One is worshipful.

The Supreme Being, the All Person, dwells as a center of Light within the soul of all human beings,—His sons and daughters. Therefore, loving and serving one's fellowmen is, to the Faithist, loving and serving the Creator. He is kind to, and considerate of, all forms of life. As he does not believe in taking life, he does not believe in war. He is a vegetarian, refraining from eating anything that has breathed the breath of life.

Working to raise up one's fellows, and to create a better world for all, is the purpose to which the Faithist consecrates his life. He seeks out other Faithists and unites with them in a brotherhood to accomplish the One Purpose, sharing his worldly goods, and endeavoring to lose self that the Creator may be all through him.

The Faithist's bible is OASHPE, yet he realizes that no book is infallible, and relies finally on the wisdom of the Creator in his own soul.

The Faithist sees life as eternal progression toward ever more complete oneness with the Supreme Being,—not a oneness in idleness or ease, but in working as a co-creator with the Almighty, developing the infinite faculties of the human soul for god-like service in higher and higher worlds forever.

THE UNNATURAL MOONS OF MARS

Phobos and Deimos the two tiny moons of Mars (named Fear and Terror) by their discoverers because of the fact that their strange unnaturalness inspired these emotions) are possibly man-made satellites.

The American astronomer, Hall, discovered the moons in 1877. The most striking feature of the tiny bodies was their high "albedo", or reflective power. They were much brighter than they should have been. If their composition was similar to Mars and if made of the same substance, they should have been less bright. Instead they possessed an albedo which could only be due to a highly polished or otherwise brilliantly reflective surface.

Phobos is less than ten miles in diameter and Deimos is less than five miles. Both of them revolve around Mars exactly in the plane of its equator, that is, precisely around its middle, unlike any of the satellites launched from Earth. The condition that exists there is not duplicated in any other satellite orbit anywhere in the solar system. It is almost beyond the realm of possibility through anything but deliberate plan.

Mars revolves on its axis in 24 hours and 37 minutes, only slightly longer than Earth. Phobos revolves around Mars in 7 hours and 39 minutes, so that it completely circles Mars three times in a Martian day. To an observer on Mars, Phobos would, on a particular night, be seen rising, move across the sky at visible speed, set, and rise once more before morning. There is no other satellite in the solar system which has a faster period of revolution than its parent body. That is, not but artificial satellites!

By

Lately astronomers have been paying more attention to the moons of Mars. In 1945 the American astronomer, Sharples, took very careful observations of Phobos and Deimos and when he had finished, compared his results with similar observations made fifty years before by Russian astronomer, Struve. Phobos wasn't where it should have been! Its orbit has shifted $2\frac{1}{2}$ degrees! As astronomers measure movement in space, this is a fantastic deviation. It is not at all natural and can't be explained by natural conditions on Mars.

The change in Phobos' orbit was a slowing down. As it slows, it gets closer to the surface of Mars. This means one of these days it will crash into Mars.

What is slowing down Phobos should also be slowing down Deimos. There is only one explanation, and for a normal, natural body, this is impossible—Phobos, for its size, must be hollow and of extreme lightness. It must be only a thin skin of metal, absolutely round and rigid. And if this is so, it cannot be anything but man-made! Man as he must have developed on Mars, eons ago!

Today, apparently, only the most primitive of plants exist on Mars. Any intelligent beings who may have lived there once are now extinct, or have left the planet. Millions of years ago, Mars had an oxygen-rich atmosphere, capable of supporting a civilization. Gravity is much less than on Earth, and any race living on the planet would have had a much easier job of conquering space. The task of building Phobos and Deimos, although a tremendous engineering problem, would not be impossible. Today's Earth engineers working on Mars, could place such a satellite in orbit, building it by accretion in a slow, centuries-long process. If we could do it, so could intelligent Martians.

There are so many practical uses to which such artificial satellites can be put that the necessity to the Martians for such engineering projects as Phobos and Deimos are quite understandable. If the Martian civilization was highly advanced, such satellites as actually exist would be a must.

Soviet scientists have come to the conclusion that the two Martian satellites are not natural "moons" but abandoned artificial space stations by way of which the inhabitants of a "dying" planet may have fled, or attempted to flee, to some more salutary world. We must realize that no reputable scientist, Russian or otherwise, would dare venture aloud the obvious guess at the answer to that without substantial evidence to back him.

ARIES March 21-April 20.

June-July '73: Problems likely through relatives, children included, or in regard to domestic, property matters, much activity in the home, while the accent could also be on parental matters too. Trips may be held up. Keep secrets of others, be discreet, diplomatic, and use some caution if in any out of the way places and with all strangers. . .that is, don't get too involved with them. You may be visiting a shut-in, or be concerned over another's health. Keep energy up, don't overdo, get enough rest and sleep. Romance is stimulated, your personality magnetic. Excitement mounts, impulse may rule, during this Mars period. Prophetic dreams.

TAURUS April 21-May 20.

June-July '73: Watch health, Taurus. This may be a contradictory period in more ways than one and "patience" must be your motto now. There is some concern over a relative, also background areas may figure in your affairs, much discussion here, behind the scenes. . .or trips to one who is ill. Keep up your own vitality, avoid too much credit buying and watch reputation. Expenses may be heavy. You may keep a love affair secret, for the time being. A job promotion, business advancement or expansion will figure now for many Taureans, also gain through parental matters.

GEMINI May 21-June 21.

June-July 73: Love accelerates but you choose to take your time, will not appreciate criticism from the loved one. Watch finances now and valuables. Don't be careless of either. Your personal magnetism is perking, your personality aglow, yet don't overdo and get enough rest and sleep, with the social as well as the business picture lively and fast-moving. Friendships are more important than ever, the new as well as the old. Saturn still in Gemini brings contact with those older and much can be learned too, from these. A love message arrives and warms your heart, something you have been waiting for! Along other lines, your impatience with the slowness of someone irks you—but perhaps the time isn't just right. . .so, hold on, Gemini, just a bit longer? You impress others, yet at the same time don't be fooled by facades.

CANCER June 22-July 22.

June-July 73: This period holds two full moons (around mid-June-July) when your judgment could be off, Cancer, so don't make any hasty decisions. . .hold off a bit, and try to look at things from all angles, not only from the standpoint of your own emotionalism. Especially could this be so in July, when Mars will be high in your chart, affecting job matters. . .and you could quit, at the drop of a hat, or have angry words with one in authority. So, cool it, Cancer, and don't be sorry later. Friendship and romance could overlap, present something of a puzzle around this time. July altogether exciting. Exciting news from a distance, while matters regarding in-laws may also be accented now. Publishing, promotional matters are stimulated. Gain through a legacy soon. Property, domestic matters still subject to change, because of Uranus in this house up to next November.

LEO July 23-August 22.

June-July 73: Expenses may concern you, more so than usual, with Jupiter for some months to come in opposition to your Leo Sun. Important or influential people favor you, while with regard to some friendships or contacts there is from time to time, an element of the disappointing. Love is glamorous but must not be taken for granted. Things in the background hold your interest, much may be planned, worked on now in quiet, or behind the scenes. A child, young person or friend may pose a problem or problems. Listen to your intuition, Leo, it generally never fails you. Don't be over-confident in regard to money or property matters. Your personality is appealing. You are interested in all that is philosophical, metaphysical, the occult, in life itself. . .and you are thinking high.

VIRGO
August 23-September 22.

June—July '73: Impress those able to boost your fortunes and be in line for future promotions, greater prestige. Something to do with a young person or a friend could hold some uncertainty for you now. A friendship may also soon turn to love. Be selective in friendship matters generally speaking though, and don't be too susceptible. This especially in mid-June and mid-July both. Continue to be careful as to who you entertain in your home too, as appearances (and others) could deceive. There could be a property gain or in any case a rise in income for Virgos now. Be diplomatic at work and with all in fact, and take care of health. Secret matters will be important to you now, and you may be making plans for the near future. Be alert as to the motivations of others.

LIBRA
September 23-October 23.

June—July '73: The accent may fall strongly on your own health and job. . .your associations with others, some of whom may be dominating, so that diplomacy on your part will be a wise procedure for harmony itself means much to all Librans. Look out for mishaps such as cuts or burns, at the place of work. Opportunities to advance yourself, offers open up for you, you may also learn something of importance to you that up to now remained a more or less hidden matter. A romantic period when some gala events could occur with you in the center. Jupiter now in your 5th house for the next several months, could bring an old love back, or bring you a new love. Business, job matters continue lively and you can accomplish a great amount of work now.

SCORPIO
October 24-November 21.

June—July '73: Avoid being too critical of the loved one; also you might do well to cut down somewhat on the social activity and this you will do too, as this period gets underway and will turn your mind to the more intangibles of life, the spiritual and philosophical. With Uranus still in your house of secrets and hidden matters, you will be looking within seeking the answers to things that have seemed rather baffling. Love, children's or young people's matters, also investments, will hold the limelight over much of this period...and you can gain through some investment or speculation from March on of next year. Watch health, don't overdo, or drive too fast...and let moderation be your watchword.

SAGITTARIUS

November 22-December 21.

June—July '73: With Mars stirring up domestic and property matters for the first half of this period, these will be points of sensitivity for Archers. Be tactful with those in the home, avoiding conflict or personality clashes. With Neptune on your Sun for a long time to come, use the realistic approach, see things and others whole, not in a rosy glow only. Develop your creative, artistic or literary side now. Love is exciting, with possibly a new face on the romantic scene. A friendship can be strengthened. You could win in a contest or buy a lucky ticket on something. A pleasurable period but don't be too sensitive in a love matter...or too impulsive in spending, though with Mars in your 5th house for all of July, it may be hard not to.

CAPRICORN

December 22-January 20.

June—July '73: Much mental if not physical as well activity in this period, Capricorn. Use care in trips, which may come up suddenly. You express yourself with fluency, communicate well...while job, business matters should be thriving, or soon will be. Later, watch your speech. Something is settled, whether this pertains to a parental matter, or the home or property. Property will soon be worth more so attend to its upkeep improvement. Protect health, avoid mishaps. An older partner soon enters your life but this person must watch their health. Don't believe everything you hear, Capricorn, around this time, for rumors will be flying fast and thick, and things could be distorted for another's benefit. Be diplomatic with those in the home, who might be excitable for some reason. Inside information may come to you but sift it well before you jump to any conclusions. Use your charm and persuasion to advantage now.

AQUARIUS

January 21-February 18.

June—July '73: Some things just can't be rushed, so be more patient, Aquarius. Take care of health which can be improved and benefited now. Exciting news comes around this time and a trip you take will be of personal significance, could relate to job matters. A relative may pose a problem, disagree with you, etc. If so, handle the matter with tact and calmness. Something in the nature of a big change for your good is in the making now. Keep your own counsel and soon matters will develop in your favor. Income is due to increase. Environment gains momentum during July. Be diplomatic with the partner. New romance for single Aquarians with marriage a strong possibility; with all Water-Bearers Jupiter now on their Sun up to March '74 brings good fortune, rise in prestige and new enlightenment. Friendships continue to be most interesting, in some instances unusual, but should not be taken for granted, nor should you be too gullible.

PISCES
February 19-March 20.

June-July '73: Some one at work may irritate you and you could have a falling out with this person. Tone down a too forceful side of your personality or other conflicts could arise...which could extend into financial matters possibly. Control the outgo of money as it could go fast now, and take care of possessions, property. Might be labor or employee problems or discontent from these sources. Money benefits withheld for a time will be forthcoming. Don't invite "showdowns" with the loved one, handle all romantic and marital matters most adroitly. A child or young person could hold some concern for you around this time, while an investment or speculation matter may also call for your close attention. Don't overdo physically. Take note of your dreams—they could be prophetic.

INTRODUCING LORETTA

Of the many magazines published by Ray Palmer, the one that continues to remain my favorite is FORUM. This because so much of its contents—editorials, articles, letters, and answers to the letters—reach the apogee of mental stimulation. One such letter was printed in the November 1, 1966 issue where a reader questioned the uselessness of the atrophied male mammary glands.

The answer given by Palmer was that a man's mammary glands, if stimulated by hormones and drugs, could actually be used to nurse a child. He pointed out that the male and female body is not so different as might be supposed, and that over three hundred transsexual operations were performed surgically in 1966 alone.

This was news to me, and I was very much intrigued. Of course I had heard of the famous Christine Jorgensen case of 1952. Born George Jorgensen, this ex-U.S. Army photographer had traveled to Denmark for a sex-change operation, and had become, in physical functions and appearance, a quite delectable female.

My interest had me doing some research which unearthed many startling facts.

Alex Saunders

THE BIZARRE OBSESSION OF TRANSSEXUALS

By Alex Saunders

What is a transsexual? Well, simply put, he or she is a person with the seemingly normal physical make-up of one sex, but possessing the psyche (since earliest recollections) of the other. They are said to have a cross-gender identity. Male or female, they repudiate their biological sex, and often try to pass as opposite members. The number of true American transsexuals are estimated to range from 2,000 to 10,000.

Baltimore's venerable medical center—Johns Hopkins University—initiated the daring sex-change operations in 1966 which, when revealed, astonished the world.

Their spokesman, plastic surgeon Dr. John E. Hoopes, stated at a press conference that the unprecedented transsexual surgery were apparent successes though of course leaving a lot to be desired. Still, the male-to-female change-over was so advanced that even doctors might not notice that the "new" female organs were man-made.

Those desiring the operation had a passionate conviction. That by some cruel whim, or tragic mistake of nature, they had been given the mind of one sex in the body of the other.

When it was found that their beliefs could not be shaken by reason, psychiatric therapy, analysis, massive hormone injections, etc., the only solution that remained to help them was surgery. What other solution was there if medical specialists were unable to make the mind match the body? Surgery would result in having their body match the mind.

But while surgical treatment could not of course change their actual gender (which was fixed at birth), it could at least make them FEEL normal.

Unarguably, the men wanted their sexual organs removed and substituted by those of a woman. Nothing less than the reverse were the womens' desire.

There is the case of a husky, forty-five year old ex-U.S. Army sargeant, seemingly a real he-man, who pleaded for the operation because he KNEW he was actually a woman, trapped since birth in a man's body.

Another case involved an efficient, twenty-five year old blonde, female office manager, a knockout in a bikini, who begged for the operation. Her reasons were that by temperament, inclination and almost every yardstick, she was a man.

And so it went. Many tales of stark misery from genuine transsexuals were told to the newly-formed Johns Hopkins panelists. What the transsexuals felt in depression, isolation, bewilderment and despair was unbelievable. Attempted suicides were very common.

Several males who had been rebuffed by surgeons had in desperation made pathetic attempts at self-mutilation. Fake remedies that were highly expensive were tried by others who knew all along that they were useless. Yet they kept trying, hoping. . .

One woman begged dozens of eminent surgeons for the operation. All of them roughly refused. Three turned her over to the police, while two others had her confined to mental hospitals.

Though most transsexuals did not know that others of their kind existed, some, by pure chance, met fellow-sufferers with the same delusion.

Do these people belong to the murky, half-world of homosexuals, transvestites, hemaphordites and others whose actual gender bore little relation to their sexual proclivities? Not at all. It was the findings of psychiatrists that they were quite sane—normal in every respect—except for their one fixed delusion. Even truth serum injections had them stoutly maintaining their beliefs.

When performed on male transsexuals, the irrevocable operation takes three hours, and what with hospital costs, could exceed ten thousand dollars.

Breast enlargement is performed in most cases. With the removal of the penis and testicles, an artificial vagina is constructed, lined with the sensitive skin of the penis.

As for female transsexuals, their breasts are removed, and a hysterectomy performed. A penis, used only for urination, is constructed, using the sexually responsive clitoris and other tissue. Testicles are made by implanting prostheses under the skin.

A number of operations would be required over a period of months. Hormones would be a lifetime undertaking. Testosterone for the "new" males, and estrogen for the "new" females. This would stimulate such secondary characteristics as beard growth, distribution of body hair and body fat, and breast development.

Before the Johns Hopkins doctors could perform the radical operations, many legal problems had to be solved.

And, thankfully, they were. Public reaction, too, was favorable. Quoting one clerical view:

"If modern medicine can help these people live happier lives, I can see no moral objections."

Happier lives? Judge for yourself from the following typical testimonial of a former female transsexual who underwent the operation in 1970.

"For more than twenty years, I lived in a continual state of confusion and loneliness. I thought of myself as a boy, but the world reacted to me according to what they saw—a girl. Now, for the first time in my life, I can live as a complete and normal human being. I am a man, the world sees me as a man and treats me like a man."

At the present time (several years after Johns Hopkins announced its willingness to perform sex-change surgery) similar programs have been established by a number of private surgeons. About a dozen U.S. medical centers are included, such as the Universities of Minnesota, Stanford, Michigan, Virginia and Washington in Seattle.

There are now an estimated five hundred Americans who have undergone reverse-sex surgery, with thousands of applicants on the waiting list.

In studying the married couples of sex-reassigned transsexuals, many findings have come to light. Children are being raised through adoption or artificial insemination. Most detested publicity. Also, every one of them, after their unregrettable operations, were brimming with gratitude, and experiencing greater happiness.

Thanks to the sensitively-lined penile skin of the "new" woman's artificial vagina, sex relations were enjoyed. Needless to say, becoming pregnant would be impossible.

In the case of the "new" man, the medically constructed penis would be quite useless in its inability for erection. Still, in most cases of the patients who have married, the partners appear to be normal heterosexuals, typically reporting that sexual relations—however they are achieved—are satisfying both physically and emotionally. Most "new" men and "new" women claim they reach orgasm.

Another good thing that can be said about sex-change surgery is that it will cut down the appalling suicide rate which is three times higher than that of homosexuals. For, as stated earlier, one definite fact is that they are NOT homosexuals.

What homosexual, for instance, would beg to be surgically transformed into the other sex? It is the strong hatred and fear of the opposite sex that has most homosexuals forming liaisons with members of their own sex. But the transsexuals wanted surgery even with the realization that they would receive little tangible in return.

What drove many transsexuals to suicide was the realization that the only way society would allow them to function as members of the opposite sex was in a homosexual relationship.

And that, to many of the transsexuals, was the ultimate, unbearable horror!

SHAWN ROBBINS

“THE PSYCHIC
DETECTIVES”

SHAWN'S PREDICTIONS

In 1972, Shawn accurately predicted several events which within days or weeks became national headlines. In front of more than 300 people attending a symposium on psychic phenomena she went into a light trance and reported seeing the collision of a large airline and a smaller plane. She even foretold the day this was to happen. On that exact date her prediction became a reality...A Japanese airliner was struck by a small aircraft.

Shawn Robbins also foresaw earth tremors in California and told associates of impending quakes within days of their occurrence. And finally she predicted a big scandal in government and identified the initials of those who would be involved. This was, of course, the now famous Watergate scandal.

In her predictions for 1973, and beyond, Miss Robbins tells us that we are likely to see news items and headlines on the following:

- A political assassination in May, June or July.
- A minor earth tremor in California around the 11th of April. No great damage.
- Pope Paul will die within two years. . . of a stroke.

- Jackie and Onassis are likely to separate by 1974.

- A gold strike in the U.S. similar to the 1849 strike in California. "I see the letter 'M', which I believe represents the state in which the gold strike will occur."

- A political change in South Vietnam within six months that may go against what the United States government might wish would transpire.

- Volcanic eruptions will occur and with this a new land will emerge from the ocean which may be part of Atlantis or some other ancient civilization.

In general, Shawn sees this country involved in a number of crises both here and abroad, "but for the most part, 1973 will be a good year. . . better than most I would say."

SHAWN VISITS NEW ORLEANS

It was an early Saturday morning in February, when a reporter friend and I went off to visit the grave of the most famous Voodoo Queen of all time, Marie LaVeau.

I had come to New Orleans to investigate several of the city's haunted houses, which were said to have a long history of uninvited guests not of this realm. My plans included doing some digging into modern-day practices of Voodoo. Surprisingly enough, town officials are weary of admitting to outsiders that such practices still take place.

One glance at the stores along South Rampart Street show that Voodoo is still very much an integral part of the customs and culture of New Orleans life. These little dank occult curio shops carry a wide assortment of paraphenalia, ranging from innocent looking candles to do-it-yourself wax molds to be forged into the image of the person you wish to cast a spell (be it good or bad) upon. Before heading South I had been told to anticipate some pretty strange things. Israel Jones, a professional rock singer who performs under the stage name of "Satan-The Eternal Fire Man" had related to me several episodes which had happened to him while growing up in this section of the country.

A Visit to the Grave of a Voodoo Queen

My first stop with Jack Wardlow, editor of the NEW ORLEANS STATES ITEM was at the cemetery where the remains of Marie LaVeau are buried beneath a sizeable gravemarker befitting her social position in life. For Marie led somewhat of a double existence—as part of the New Orleans aristocracy, who welcomed dignitaries into her home. It is even said that Lafayette was among her frequent visitors.

Unbeknownst to these individuals, Marie LaVeau had another, darker side to her personality. For more than a decade, it is said she reigned as Queen Mother of all Voodoo, presiding over strange sacrificial ceremonies performed in the murky swamps on the outskirts of the city.

According to stories Israel had told me about her, she used a huge snake in her initiation ceremony which she would release and hand to each individual member of the cult who would, in turn, hand it to the next person in line.

Seated on a throne behind an altar adorned with gold plated figures of the Gods, it is said, Marie would, as part of her duties, drink the blood of freshly killed animals.

Of course these are only “stories”. There are as many people who liked her for her supposed power, as hated her. Hundreds at a time are said to have waited for hours to receive her blessings.

Editor Wardlow told me, as we approached the site of her grave, that legend has it that those individuals who come seeking a specific request and whose faith in the “supernatural powers” of the lady is strong enough are granted their wish.

I had been studying Voodoo and Witchcraft for a number of years as part of my own development in the psychic sphere of things. And although I never tampered with the negative aspects of these beliefs, I have become convinced that the power to influence another person’s thoughts and emotions can be arrived at after concentrated effort.

A Test For Psychic Abilities at the Race Track

Our next stop was at the New Orleans Fair Grounds where Mr. Wardlow planned to test my psychic abilities in picking the winning horses. I made a simple request—I asked that I be given the power to select a horse who was given little chance of winning by the odds makers.

A few days after my visit, the STATES ITEM ran an account of my successful trip to the track under the banner headline, “HOW ONE GAL DETERMINES ‘WITCH’ HORSE WILL WIN”.

When we arrived, the fifth race was about to be run. After looking over the program, I was asked to make a decision. I picked a four-to-one shot, a Mr. Louie. We placed a $2.00 bet and watched as our horse came in and paid $14.40.

In the next race I selected number five, a 15-to-1 nag by the name of Satin Lark who my editor friend insisted couldn’t “pull a plow across a cornfield.”

Jack watched in amazement as the “nag” paid $26.20!

Later on I picked another four-to-one shot called Young Ticket. He took command in the stretch and paid off to the tune of $9.60.

I was ahead on the day although the last two races failed to materialize as I had “picked up” they would. We may not have had a smashing success but I felt I had gained another convert to the occult and I wasn’t so ready to doubt the legend surrounding Marie LaVeau’s grave. In addition, I found out later that her grave rests in the St. Louis cemetery and my first winning horse of the day had been a Mr. Louis. Coincidence or proof of a legend come to life?

Haunted House Produces A Strong Psychic Flashback

Despite all this activity, I still hadn’t visited any haunted houses. Thus, when Onedia, the proprietor of a Voodoo shop, told me about a place that “most folk are plum afraid to go near” I was game for a visit.

The house at 1140 Royal Street doesn’t look particularly menacing from the outside, but old timers in the vicinity know of its background and stay far away from its walls. In fact, the structure has not been inhabited by anyone for any period of time despite its low rents. Other than knowing these details I was completely unfamiliar with the stories surrounding the place.

As I entered the back door I could sense the screams of tortured souls and feel the tension in the air. Onedia led me by the hand to the master bedroom upstairs where I immediately felt a cold spot and knew that something evil had once taken place in this area.

I closed my eyes and a scene began to unfold before me. It was a strong psychic flashback of unprecedented horror.

Later I was told that this fashionable estate had once belonged to an extremely wealthy woman, Mme. LaLaurie who had chained within its dungeons over a dozen slaves who were constantly tortured and forced to go without food for days.

Her hideous behavior was found out after a slave set the house on fire in a feeble attempt to free himself from bondage. When the chief of police arrived to check out the blaze, his eyes were met by the horrendous sight of the confined and almost crippled servants.

Upon hearing about this inhuman treatment of fellow human beings, the townspeople attacked the LaLaurie estate in an attempt to lynch the attractive mistress of the house. She escaped under rather suspicious circumstances, but the house at 1140 Royal Street was totally ransacked of about five thousand dollars in art work and jewels.

Subsequent owners have reported hearing the moans and cries of tormented voices as well as chains rattling in the basement below.

While in my trance state I saw a young girl being dragged through the court yard, whipped and finally thrown into a deep well. Onedia told me after I had revived back to normal, that the bones of a young girl, believed to be the child of a slave, had been found in a well "around back" many years previous to my visit. Again my psychic abilities had proven accurate!

My visit to New Orleans had been fruitful. I had won at the races, supposedly because of Marie's wish-granting spell and had made a psychic track through the pages of history—even if it had been a sad journey.

A Cure For Loneliness

I can remember when my neighbor seemed to have such a far-away attitude when we talked to each other, and I didn't understand why he had that way about him.

Now, that I have grown older, and have learned a little more about loneliness. I can perhaps understand why he acted that way, and why I acted very much the same way to him. I couldn't feel that he was on my side because he only seemed to be willing to help me with the hope that I might return the favor back to him. We usually will help a neighbor only because we feel sure that, sooner or later, we would have to ask a similar favor of him.

If we do something for someone, because we feel that it must be done, or perhaps that we will be criticized if we don't, it is not showing love toward a neighbor. We must do these things with the kindly feeling of love instead of a financial, social or perhaps a political attitude.

If we have a feeling of love with full cooperation for a neighbor, then we do not have that awful lonely feeling toward him. If we love someone, we have that feeling of wanting to do something nice for him, without expecting something back in return, maybe two or more times. We do it because we want to see him happy, and then we feel happy ourselves. We are happy to see him happy, which is about the greatest feeling on earth.

When we feel alone and like a stranger, maybe that's the way we feel about those we know. We don't care very much one way or another whether he's happy or not. We'd prefer that he would let us alone, unless, of course, we need something from him; then that makes everything seem different.

If we like to see our neighbor happy and are willing to help make it that way, then we are not alone so much, because our thinking is on someone else. The more we cut ourselves off from other people, the more we feel lonely and cold with our indifference in our attitude. It's almost like being in prison. We may not have those cold walls and prison bars around us, but we feel very much the same way is if we did.

Love is what makes the face light up with pleasure, and it must come from somewhere. Does our neighbor's face light up with happiness when he sees us, or does he look at us with an indifferent, couldn't-care-less expression? It's up to us, to make that face one way or another. Isn't this a very good way to tell just how much we love "GOD"? We reap what we sow. Is it love or an indifferent feeling that we express?

WE CAN MAKE OURSELVES MORE COMFORTABLE BY MAKING OUR NEIGHBOR MORE COMFORTABLE, WHETHER IT BE BY WORD OR BY DEED.

Dr. Ann Wigmore

Dear Doctor Ann

For the many readers who have sent in questions about diabetes the following article is Dr. Ann's reply:

DIABETES

By Ann Wigmore D.D.

There are a great many diabetics in this country today and the number is increasing rapidly. The time has arrived when diabetics should learn the CAUSE of their condition and thereby the means to eliminate it.

Modern medicine offers us no cure for diabetes and blames this condition on a "sick pancreas," or on some "mysterious, inexplicable or hereditary factor" that causes the pancreas to function improperly. Doctors first blamed diabetes on the inability of the pancreas to manufacture enough insulin to regulate the formation of sugar in the blood. Then, through further research and watching the action of a living, human pancreas OUTSIDE the body, scientists discovered that the pancreas in the average diabetic functions correctly, manufacturing all the insulin needed to keep the sugar down in the blood to the proper level, but that the osmotic action which carries the insulin into the bloodstream often becomes stopped up and the insulin never reaches the circulation.

Relying on man-made "miracle" solutions, external stop-gap aids, most doctors have simply offered an outside substitute for the needed insulin, Isle of Langerhans transplants, or a daily capsule or injection of insulin taken from the pancreas of dead sheep, the dangers of which have brought on insulin shock, emotional complications, vascular disease and interference of growth in children. Recent research has shown a definite correlation between these unnatural daily doses of insulin and certain disastrous side-effects, most notably blindness and fatal heart disease. There is an outcry for working out some other remedy which may be less harmful. So science is forced once again to seek the CAUSE of the affliction, to look past the isolated organ to its place as a working integral unit within the perfectly designed organism.

I have never yet been confronted with a situation where the pancreas was unable to produce the amount of insulin the Almighty intended. My intensive investigations as to the cause of diabetes convince me that the excessive use of sugar and flour (and other dead foods) puts sweetness and pollutants in the bloodstream in amounts which the normal human body is not equipped to process and eliminate, which clogs the walls of insulin-manufacturing cells (islands) and prevents the passage of the necessary modifying insulin through them into the circulation. The relief of diabetic troubles, it would seem, should therefore be toward the unclogging of these tiny cells, towards the cleansing of the bloodstream.

As diabetes is increasing rapidly in this country, blindness is keeping pace. Statistics show that more than fifty thousand human beings become blind each year. In 1930, glaucoma, a disease of the eye, characterized by increased pressure within the eyeball and progressive loss of vision accompanied by intense pain, as a result of diabetes, was about 1% of the cause of blindness. In 1972, the ratio has risen to a full 15% of all new cases. Doctors are certain that the increase in the cases of glaucoma has nothing to do with "aging" but is due primarily to a diabetic condition in the body and the taking of insulin to relieve or combat this condition, which causes a blistering of the capillaries supplying the blood to the retina of the eye. When it is understood that there are at least four million diabetics in this country today, we realize the importance of understanding this correlation.

Doctors Cleave and Campbell of the Diabetic Clinic at the King Edward Hospital in Durban, South Africa, have done extensive research which points the accusing finger in diabetes at the consumption by human beings of refined sugar and flour. Statistics show that the rise in the consumption of sugar by the population is also followed by an increase in the number of diabetics. For example, a large insurance company estimated that in the early 1930's, diabetes was 27th in line as a cause of death among Americans, and in 1918, the use of sugar per person was 12 pounds per year. Fifty years later, this consumption was close to 110 pounds per person annually and diabetes ranked third as the cause of death. Heart disease has grown at a similar rate; might we not look for a common cause? What blocks the little outlets from the pancreas is very likely the same toxins or poisons which form in the bloodstream and block the arteries around the heart, causing what is called by medical science, coronary thrombosis. And it has been proven many times that sufferers from polio, shock, nerve and muscle deterioration are large consumers of white sugar and flour. When we look at sickness in the body as disharmony in the organism as a whole, we get a much larger picture and can readily discover the real, underlying cause of illness, as well as the means of eliminating the condition.

The following symptoms generally indicate diabetes: abnormal thirst (polydypsia) and a persistent hunger (polyphagia); the need to urinate frequently (polyuria); bruises and burns that are difficult to heal; excessive nervousness (polyneuritis); and a feeling of constant fatigue and unending drowsiness. The reason for frequent urination by diabetics is because the sugar in the body can not be fully utilized for energy and gets into the urine. The kidneys have to work extremely hard to get rid of this excessive sugar. Some think a focus of degeneration may be in the small arterioles of the kidneys. In any case, this brings on thirst, as the kidneys need additional lubrication. The overworked kidneys upset the normal processes of the other adjoining organs. When there is too much sugar in the bloodstream, it depletes the necessary amounts of minerals the cells require which, in turn, affects the nerves and creates mental problems and disorders. An imbalance of circulation with the intracellular and extracellular fluids follow the mineral disturbances. When the sugar in the body is unnaturally burned up by the insulin, the body fails to get needed energy from the natural processes and it begins to take energy from the fat, a process which causes pollution of the bloodstream. This pollution impairs circulation, causing swelling of the feet, and other severe discomforts and disorders.

There is much controversy regarding the best treatment for diabetes, and many doctors still depend on unnatural, external means, such as insulin taking, to keep the sugar level in the blood in balance, not realizing or ignoring the serious side-effects on these unnatural, isolated methods. I was visiting a little girl in the hospital who was suffering from a serious diabetic problem and heard her mother ask if the child could have ice cream, a food stuff which slows down digestion and adds carbohydrates, fats and chemical food additives in amounts that are poisonous to the digestive system. The doctor replied that the child could have any food she wanted, and that the insulin doses would be adjusted to the need. The child was already taking huge doses of insulin, yet the diet recommended would only intensify or enlarge this vicious cycle, as more sugar would require even larger doses of insulin. This could bring on many serious side-effects and lay the groundwork that would make the child sickly all her life.

Insulin taking also brings on circulatory problems, which cause painful, often disabling swellings of the feet, ankles and legs, disrupts normal mental functioning and often causes severe depression. The latest oral method of treatment has been studied for more than ten years and it is now the consensus of responsible researchers that the drug taken in this form, tolbutamide, often brings on fatal heart disease. Again, we must look at the body mechanism as a whole, integrated working unit, not only isolated organs or processes.

As Dr. T.M. Schippell, Diabetes Specialist in Washington, D.C., discovered, diabetes is caused by a nutritional deficiency, and to relieve and eliminate the condition, we must remove the CAUSE. Few people in or out of the medical profession seek to find and remove the CAUSE of the disorder. If we have tight shoes which cause our feet to ache and swell, should we inject a drug to cut down the pain and swelling, or should we get larger shoes, shoes of the correct size and fit? The same answer is true for the treatment of diabetes. We need to find and remove the causative factors. An example of the effectiveness of such a method of approach is the widely acclaimed case of the elderly diabetic who has, often unintentionally, found and removed the cause of his trouble when he is forced to change to a proper diet by his "aged" and worn-out body and digestive system, which refuses to digest the harmful foods any more.

It is healthy cells which keep the balance in our precious mechanism; yet in the denatured, cooked foods we eat, over 83% of the precious elements required to keep the body cells healthy are destroyed. Dr. James B. Sumner of Cornell University called enzymes the secret of life, that without them, the body is incomplete and off balance. He has shown that there are over seven hundred different types of enzymes, some of which are produced in our bodies, each with its own special job to do. However, without the additional ones we obtain only from living, uncooked, organically grown food, these enzymes in our bodies remain inactive; and without the enzymatic action and reaction, our bodies cannot digest the food we eat to give nourishment to the cells. When the body cells are weakened through lack of proper nourishment, the normal functions of the body are slowed down and many toxins are created and put into circulation which the blood is unable to throw off or eliminate.

We need wholesome, naturally grown living foods to correct this deficiency, which is usually a result of eating inorganic, sprayed foods and dead, cooked (denatured) foods. It is most difficult for folks nowadays to obtain really organic, wholesome foods, even though the dealer may call what he sells, "Organic." Therefore, the best method of obtaining this living, body-building nourishment is to grow our own food indoors at home. Sprouts are the most inexpensive and easily used foods, which can be simply grown in a jar or a bowl and ready to eat in three days, merely by rinsing them twice a day in water. Organic sunflower seed is very valuable for its high protein content; and organic oranges, grapefruit and watermelon (in season), as well as other fruits, are very helpful in cleansing the system, as well as for energy. These should always be kept on hand. Avocado, if available has protein and oil and buckwheat lettuce and sunflower greens can be grown indoors in only a few inches of soil and are excellent additions to the diet. Wheatgrass chlorophyll, which can be grown and juiced in the home, should be taken at least three times a day with rejuvelac. Wheat cereal or wheat milk is an excellent energy breakfast and should be eaten often.

We have proven scientifically that when diabetics use the wheatgrass therapy faithfully, insulin can be eliminated within a few weeks. The human body is designed as a self-sustaining, self-healing, sacred mechanism; it alone can right all adverse conditions but it must be given the proper tools (nourishment) with which to work. Diabetes is not an exception. The need for misguided, misinformed or mentally averted sufferers to learn the natural living habits of the human being is a progressive, crying social need. Diabetics of all ages, children as well as adults, must learn natural health and hygiene measures, which include plenty of sunshine, fresh air and water, exercise and relaxation, in addition to proper diet.

When a person comes to see us who has a condition diagnosed as diabetes, past experience gives us the assurance that our wheatgrass therapy, if conscientiously followed for at least three weeks, will bring relief. We ask these sufferers to bring with them health reports from their doctors and to go regularly to the local clinics for medical checkups and blood tests, including the final check-up when the wheatgrass therapy has been completed. Thus, as the program proceeds, a close check is kept by medical doctors of the mental and physical condition of each sufferer in order to eliminate all fear and doubt. If, after obtaining the relief, the person then insists on going back to the same unnatural habits of eating and living which brought on the diabetic condition in the first place, the old, distressing symptoms will, of course, again appear. On the other hand, if that former sufferer has learned a lesson and makes this newly acquired knowledge of the laws of health an active part of his or her life, the good which has been established in the body will be permanent. The following letter should be encouraging to those who have suffered long with this most frustrating and painful ailment:

"Dear Dr. Ann: I was afflicted with diabetes for over 19 years. I went along with my doctor's instructions, taking the insulin daily, but as years passed I began to have trouble with my legs and my left ankle enlarged in a frightening manner. I went to a clinic and various hospitals and finally learned from an intern that this trouble was probably caused by the large amounts of insulin I was taking. Then my common sense told me that I was using the wrong procedure if it brought this disagreeable side effect and when the minister at my church handed me one of your pamphlets telling of the experience of others in freeing themselves from the slavery of insulin, I set out for Boston that day. Arriving at the Mansion, I found exactly what I needed—the assurance that I alone could help myself—and in less than 3 weeks following the routine, I took myself completely off the insulin. My real surprise was the change in my mental outlook." Miss Addie D—Missouri.

To help yourself or a loved one and to share the humanitarian benefits of this knowledge with other sufferers, we recommend the formation of diabetic study groups of Mother Nature's way to health in the home. human footprints in the sands of time

By
Herman Kraege

In early eays, seafarers brought news that they had seen tall men like giants, on the coast of Sicily, seemingly with one eye in the middle of the forehead, a gleaming red penetrating through the heavy mist. Those giants became known as the Cyclops.

Encyclopedias say there were three written versions: (1) the Homeric

Cyclops, a gigantic race inhabiting the sea coast of Sicily, the most prominent of whom was Polyphemus. (2) the three Cyclops mentioned by Hesiod—Brontes, Stereopes, and Arges, each with an eye in the middle of his forehead. (3) the Cyclops mentioned by Strabo as a people who had come from Thrace and Lydia to Argolis, a Greek peninsula, and were distinguished for their skill as builders.

This eye in the forehead was said to be a shining red color but it has been pretty well established now that they had three eyes instead of one. The eye in the middle of the forehead was the pineal gland attached to the brain, and in children at birth even today, you find that hollow spot in the head.

In the Rocks & Minerals Magazine May issue 1967, there was a little article that read, "back in the days of Aristarchus, a group of Greek people surrounding an accumulation of huge bones including a very large skull. In the middle of the skull they noticed a single large, gaping hole. Naturally the news spread that they had found the corpse of a giant man with one eye." Then it says, "the bones and skull they found were not of a Cyclops but rather the bones of a mammoth or mastodon, with the large nasal opening mistaken for an eye."

It is not our intention to take sides in who was right, but we are very much impressed with the fact that the Greek people believed in the truthfulness of the stories of the Cyclops.

Professor William H. Matthews III, a noted writer on Paleontology, writes thus: "There are some useless structures in animal organisms which can be recognized as once useful parts that have lost their function. These vestigial structures offer additional proof of evolution. Typical of such structures is the human vermiform appendix. In Man, the appendix is now only a source of trouble, but in certain of the lower animals, for example, the rabbit, this organ is an essential part of the digestive system. Its presence in Man is best explained as a relic of a once useful part of the digestive system of a remote ancestor."

Another vestigial structure is the useless earmoving muscle homologous to those of lower mammals. Another is the pineal body in the skull, remnant of a third eye, which is still well developed in certain lizards."

One little crustacean animal living in both sea and fresh waters has been given the genus name of Cyclops because of its eye in the middle of the forehead. When viewed under a microscope, this eye sparkles like a gem of a bright crimson color.

In the city of Mycenae and other places in Greece, Italy, and Asia Minor, are stone walls called Cyclopean. Other Cyclopean architecture styles have been found in the British Isles, and even in South America in the Peru area.

Now we come to where we like to say—Human footprints in the sands of time.

In January or February 1971, we heard this broadcast on the radio—that on the slopes of Mt. Etna in Sicily was found what looked like human footprints in the lava, hardened into stone. These footprints were five feet long, and thirteen feet apart. Not exactly in sand, but. . . .

WORLD OF SPIRIT

"Our aim is to put spirit in contact with those in your world who reach out to open the barrier which separates our two worlds, which in reality, are one".

One must not tamper with what is unknown unless he is protected by forces which are known and proven.

Question: How can I know whether my spirits are of a higher or lower level of development?

Answer: You cannot other than by testing them. Should they in every way indicate, through what is received, only that which could be useful in bringing an expression of good. What is high and what is low? Those that come through you are of your level, unless you have somehow become infested with those who wish to bring harm to you for their own satisfaction. You must protect yourself, and until you know, you must not attempt to open yourself unless you are in the company of one who is capable of reaching forces which have proven again and again to be helpful and not of a playful nature.

Question: How can I help mankind?

Answer: By looking to the Father for guidance. There are many ways and He knows how you are most suited. He is anxious for your help and doors are opened only when the key fits the lock.

Question: Is there an evolution of consciousness on earth?

Question: Is there reincarnation on earth?

Answer: It is hard for you in your limited scope to understand truly what takes place. The entire process must be reduced to languages—all of which have their limitations. Your grasp is confined to three dimensions and very few in the physical are able to project the mind beyond that. The spiritual you, not the physical you is capable of being used and changed to some degree by spirit, although this too is misunderstood and attributed to physical change. The spiritual eye and awareness is what is affected during a seance.

With this in mind, and the aforesaid limitations of grasp, which all mortals possess (through the laws of the Father), I shall attempt to clarify, to some degree, your question.

For one of logic, it is quite apparent that reincarnation is a fact. It is only just and natural. The soul cannot learn and refine during the course of one lifetime. It is the process of such reincarnation which is in question here and extremely difficult to relate.

To live another life through another entity is correct, and yet is is not. That entity living another life, being given another chance through you, is you. It might be stated that it is your own 'ghost'—the ghost of what you were when you entered your present body. It is given another chance to perfect and refine through another lifetime. A new branch on the tree which is 'you' will emerge at the end of that life and become part of the whole "you". If the life just ended adds nothing to the present soul accompanying it; if it detracts from the soul you desire to become, the soul rejects that portion and refuses to accept it as part of the whole. It then becomes a true ghost of the soul. That portion hovers about the soul attempting to fuse. It actually haunts the soul. This ghost must be refined to the point where it is acceptable to the soul so that it may infuse with the entire entity. Reincarnation takes place; the refinement of this portion must come through physical life. Therefore, it is this part or ghost, which is indeed the new entity which in controlled and guided by that portion of the soul which has already been accepted as part of the whole. It attempts to guide from without, the physical you in order to refine and reform the ghost. Depending on how well this is done, it could be accomplished in one physical life, or it may take more. After the refinement is attained, and the soul accepts the former ghost, you again learn, grow and modify. If the soul wishes more in the way of development, it will

YOUR INDESTRUCTIBLE SOUL

By H. D. HARGRAVE

“The soul can never be cut into pieces by any weapon, nor can he be moistened by the water, nor withered by the wind.” (Bhagavad-gītā, 2.23) Thus Lord Kṛṣṇa describes the properties of the spirit soul. These properties are opposite to the properties of the body. We all know that the body can be cut to pieces, burned up, drowned, and so on, and because of this, it is subject to pain and death. We are informed from Vedic literature that there are living entities even in fire. “The individual soul is unbreakable and insoluble, and can neither be burned nor dried.” (Bg. 2.24).

Because the soul can live under any material means, it can go anywhere and live anywhere. We have practical experience that living entities are everywhere and that they acquire suitable bodies for their particular environments. If we dig into the earth, for instance, we will find many worms, and on the earth’s surface there are many entities, and also in the air and in the water there are infinite creatures. From Vedic sources we understand that even in fire there are many living entities that have bodies which are adaptable to living in fire, just as some souls can acquire bodies for living on a planet with no atmosphere. These bodies must be more subtle and difficult to perceive by our gross senses.

Because the soul is not influenced by material condition, we conclude that on all planets there are also living entities because every material planet is made up of at least one of the five gross elements: earth, water, fire, air and ether. Some of the planets are principally composed of water and earth, like our planet, or of fire like the sun, or of air, ether and gases like Jupiter.

Material scientists doubt that life can exist on any other planet in our solar system. They believe there is no life on Mercury because it is so close to the sun that the temperature on its sunlit side is as high as 700 degrees F. Venus, also has a surface temperature of 800 degrees F. They fail to understand the ability of organisms to adjust to any circumstance.

Our mean earth temperature of 57 degrees F. may be too hot or cold to other living entities who may argue that life is not possible on earth due to intense heat or cold. Man has landed on the moon, which has a temperature of 215 degrees F. on its sunny side and minus 250 degrees on its dark side, and seeing no living entities, he concludes that there is no life there.

We should not conclude that there are no living entities on the moon or elsewhere because the soul can inhabit various subtle bodies which can endure lack of atmosphere and extreme temperatures.

The surface temperature of the sun is 10,000 degrees F. and its average interior temperature is 25,000,000 degrees F. This temperature is inconceivable from our point of view, and yet we have information that the sun-god Vivasvan is residing there, presiding over the "sun dwellers". It is stated in Vedic literatures that Vivasvan drives a chariot with horses. Obviously these must be able to withstand such heats. These bodies, in order not to be consumed, must be very subtle. Thus they are imperceptible to our mundane vision.

Using the earth conditions as a criterion for life possibilities, scientists speculate as to whether life exists on Mars. This planet is most similar to earth. Seasonal color changes that appear suggest some kind of vegetation. However, they conclude that in our solar system only the planet earth provides the proper condition for life. It is not logical that living entities can exist in the elements earth and water and not in the other elements. We are reminded of the classic story of Dr. Frog, PhD, an eminent scholar who lives in a well: One day a fellow frog went down to see the Doctor and inform him that there is such a thing as the Atlantic Ocean. Upon hearing about this ocean, Dr. Frog enquired, "Tell me, how big would you say it is compared to this well? Is it as big or twice as big?" "No, much, much bigger," said the visitor. "Oh, much bigger?" asked the Doctor. "Then tell me, is it five times as big, ten times as big?" "Oh, no, much vaster." "Vaster? How is that? Maybe a hundred times or a thousand—how can it be so much bigger?" It is obvious that Dr. Frog will never comprehend the vastness of the Atlantic, because it is totally outside his experience. Thus it is illogical and contrary to experience to state that life is supported in one part of the universe and not in another.

Lord Krsna gives us this information about the soul's constitution. "It is said that the soul is invisible, inconceivable, immutable, and unchangeable. Knowing this, you should not grieve for the body." (Bg. 2.25) The soul cannot be perceived by material eyes. The most powerful microscope cannot see the soul. We do perceive symptoms of the soul as life symptoms. When the soul has left the body, the body is dead. These are symptoms of the soul which can be perceived materially. It is wonderful that a minute particle, smaller than an atom, can sustain life in a body; without this atomic particle the body dies. This is almost beyond human conception.

What happens to the soul after death is a matter of conjecture or belief. Millions believe the soul reincarnates in many bodies and in many ways before it finally reaches the "Godhead" and relinquishes material form entirely. Others believe the soul progresses on in other realms or other densities.

In spite of the diversity of opinion with all its variations, there appears to be one area of agreement. The majority of mankind believe the soul to be eternal.

WHERE THE READER
HAS HIS SAY

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT, REVEREND BILLY GRAHAM

Dear Ray:

I was shocked to note the words of Billy Graham in "Happenings Now" (March 1973 issue). I had always considered him to be one of the great men of our time, leading thousands to a better life.

My own interest in the occult stems from the scriptures. According to the dictionary, occultism is "inquiring into the unseen and that which is beyond the bounds of common knowledge". Thus, I have found much that is occult in the Bible.

Jesus told us to search the scriptures. He did not say that we must go to any one preacher or church for interpretation. I believe He meant for me to find my own answers so that my beliefs and my faith can be absolutely sincere and my very own.

I feel I am a Christian and my interest and study of occult (unseen) subjects is a good thing and is not "linked with pornography, sexual license, mental problems, violence and drugs" as Billy Graham says.

True, so-called "occultism", in its many forms, has become almost a run-away fad today, especially among the young. Some have taken a little speck of knowledge and, not taking the time to study the whole picture, have perverted the whole scene.

Surely, Reverend Graham knows of many church members who have committed terrible sins. Does he, therefore, condemn all churches and all church members because of the imperfections of some of this worthy group?

I would hope that Reverend Graham would think this over. Did he really intend to malign all of us sincere searchers for truth?

REVEREND GRAHAM'S PUSILLANIMOUS ALLEGATIONS

Dear Mr. Palmer:

I was pleased to see the absurd statements made recently by Reverend Billy Graham reprinted in SEARCH (Happenings Now, March, 1973 issue), where they will be brought to the attention of the thousands of people who were slandered by these bigoted and thoughtless accusations. Not since the Scopes trial in 1925 has such a blind, unreasoning, and unintelligible attack been loosed upon the principles of free thought.

Do you realize, Mr. Palmer, that this libel by Rev. Graham is but the statement of procedure for a much larger counter-attack by the fundamentalist Christian cults? There is a movement in the air to return us to the glories of the 'Bible belt', when our country was almost driven to the brink of extermination of religious freedoms during the above mentioned trial.

Dozens of books have recently appeared, all attempting to prove in their totally illogical manner that astrology, occult sciences in general, and eastern religions in general are

(sic) the "Devil's work". One of these waxes so bold as to alphabetically, from alchemy, acupuncture, and astrology down to Zen Buddhism demonstrate by twisted Biblical quotations the involvement of Satan in these matters. Even the generally accepted science of hypnosis is not immune to this stigma.

The reason behind this feeling in many of our more reactionary churches is twofold. First, a fear of any spiritual discipline that proves itself by results rather than requesting obedience through blind dogmatic faith; and second, a distrust of any Deity who refuses to eternally punish his children for their lack, but instead essays to meet the needs of that lack, thus bringing the soul to its final completeness.

Regarding the Rev. Graham's statements themselves, in his most self-ridiculing column to date, he asserts:

"Interest in the occult is directly linked with pornography, sexual license, mental problems, violence, and drugs."

Just prior to this uninformed remark Rev. Graham gives us his definition of the word 'occult';

"...including astrology, Tarot card readings, Ouija Boards, palmistry, fortune-telling, and, particularly witchcraft."

To answer, at least, for astrology, there is, I feel, enough scriptural data concerning the science to offhandedly refute the Rev. Graham's pusillanimous allegations. What else does Revelation chapter twelve, verse one speak of, when it states:

"And there appeared a great wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun (the sun being the most important aspect of astrology; the prime mover), and the moon under her feet (the moon is the strongest subsidiary influence, the platform upon which other aspects may stand), and upon her head a crown of twelve stars." (representing the twelve divisions of the zodiac, they are set in a crown to show the intellectual and spiritual requirements necessary to the mastery of the influences outlined in celestial movements)

The vast allegorical symbolism of this chapter does not end here. For in verse seventeen we find:

"And the dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ."

Since the woman has been symbolised as an astrologer (or perhaps the embodiment of astrology), then the "remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ" would represent those astrologers, and their practice, who are today concerned with spirituality and a positive path. Who then would seem to be portrayed as the dragon, referred to in verse nine as "that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan"?

Myriad other scriptural mentions of astrology may be found scattered throughout the Old and New Testaments, including Judges 5:20, Matthew 2:2, and the nineteenth Psalm, also known as the Astrologer's Psalm.

As to the connection of astrology to "pornography, sexual license, mental problems, (and) violence"; astrology, as a whole, has done more to cure these ills, through analysis of character flaws, than most 'Jesus-selling' churches would ever think was even within their scope. Rev. Graham, in his own article, admits

"One of the reasons people are turning to the occult (i.e. astrology) is that many churches have failed in their responsibility."

Yes, that is half the reason. The other half is that where churches have failed, the spiritually oriented phases of the occult, especially astrology, have not.

Finally, I will admit that many of those seeking a way in the 'occult' without guidance have become entrapped by drugs, but no spiritually inclined person would deliberately lead another soul onto this dead end. Most astrologers, in point of fact, are aware that certain conditions in a chart pinpoint a predilection toward drugs, and, in many cases, are able to assist their clients in changing this difficult and dangerous part of their personality.

To this point let the Rev. Graham answer for those who are today quite common within his own Jesus movement, who fanatically insist upon the use of drugs by Jesus as justification for the abuses of their cult. The well known fundamentalist slogan "turn on to Jesus" has too often become "turn on for Jesus".

"Judge not, that ye be not judged. For with what judgement ye judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again."

The Master, Jesus Christ.

ASTROLOGY Vs BILLY GRAHAM

Dear Mr. Palmer:

The article about Billy Graham, in "Happenings Now", of March 1973, issue of Search, stems from ignorance of the meaning of the Bible (King James Version) the Divine Design. Truly a good example of not having "eyes to see and ears to hear", and of the "blind leaders of the blind".

It is indeed a pity and a disgrace that "America's foremost evangelist" relegates Astrology, not to mention the other subjects (barring witchcraft) to "the Devil's work", and overlooks these all-important fundamental principals of astrology found throughout the Bible:

(1) Chapter 49 in Genesis: Jacob's dying blessing to his sons who represent the 12 signs of the Zodiac and the 12 tribes of Israel on which all astrological calculations are based.

(2) The Book of Exodus and its numerous references to the 12 tribes or houses.

(3) Revelations 21:12 refers to the 12 gates and the 12 tribes of Israel.

King Solomon, who asked to be given wisdom as the greatest gift of God, gave us these inspiring words:

"I thank Thee, O Great Creator of the Universe, that Thou hast taught me the secrets of the Planets, that I mayst know the Times and Seasons of things, the secrets of men's hearts, their thoughts and the nature of their being. Thou gavest unto me this knowledge which is the foundation of all my wisdom."

SOMEWHERE BETWEEN MAN AND APE

Dear Ray:

In the subtitle of his article "The Abominable Snowman Explained" (SEARCH Jan. 73), Mr. Foran asks "Are they humans suffering from glandular disorder?" and answers in the affirmative, concluding that gigantism and "acromegaly causes normal-looking men to change form into a Sasquatch, or Yeti."

Acromegaly, gigantism and cretinism are basically as Mr. Foran describes them, but in reaching his conclusion it would appear he has failed to note and take into account physical abnormalities, other than the abnormal growth, which are characteristic of these disorders. The abnormal growth is of course the most obvious but it is accompanied by one or more of the following: muscular weakness (I doubt if such a person could carry off a 700 lb. wheel as Bigfoot is reported to have done), sexual underdevelopment, shortened lifespan (seldom living beyond their twenties), and mental retardation. Cretinism in particular is associated with mental retardation. An untreated adult cretin of exceptional intelligence would be fortunate to have the intelligence of a normal four-year-old child. When all the facts are taken into consideration it is of course still possible that a person suffering from acromegaly or gigantism could, on very rare occasions, be mistaken for a Yeti or Sasquatch, but that such conditions are actually responsible for such creatures is highly unlikely.

Most scientists, those who don't deny the existence of such creatures as Yeti or Sasquatch outright, insist they can only be some species of mountain ape. Those who claim to have seen these creatures insist they are not apes. They are much more 'manlike' and therefore must be of some totally unknown species of 'apeman'. Of course we won't know who is right until a Yeti is examined. (It is quite possible we are dealing with two different species as Sasquatch's footprint is reportedly more 'manlike' than that of the Yeti.)

The Yeti could be a remnant of some species of stone age or pre-stone age 'man'. This is unlikely for a number of reasons. A more likely possibility is that he is the descendant of Gigantopithecus. Anthropologist Carleton Coon, briefly mentioning the Abominal Snowman and Gigantopithecus in his book "The Story of MAN", suggests just such a possibility.

In 1935 G.H.R. von Koenigswald found a giant fossil tooth and, at first believing it to have come from a relatively recent ape, named the creature Gigantopithecus blacki. This tooth, a third molar, has a crown which measures almost one inch from front to back. Subsequently four jawbones and almost eleven hundred teeth have been found in southern China (Kwangsi province), and the foothills of the Himalayas (Bilaspur, India). The jawbones are all extremely large, the largest can only be described as massive. It is twice the size of the largest gorilla's known to exist today. If the rest of the creature's body was in proportion to this jaw, when standing upright he must have been at least nine, and some have suggested as much as twelve feet tall. This giant was no killer. His diet consisted of seeds, grains and roots, indicating he would have been prey and not predator.

In the absence of any other fossil remains it is difficult to know just where in the evolutionary scene Gigantopithecus belongs, but he was not a true ape and does not belong on the evolutionary line leading to the apes of today. The indications are that he belongs somewhere between 'man' and ape. On the evidence of only a few teeth von Koenigswald at first classified him as 'ape' but later reversed his earlier opinion and decided he had certain affinities with the 'human group'. The late Franz Weidenreich, on the same evidence, said he belonged on the line of 'man'—ancestor to Meganthropus and Pithecanthropus erectus. This was before the discovery of the Gigantopithecus jawbones and the fossil African primate Australopithecus. Today most experts, noting the striking resemblance between a female jaw specimen and one of the oldest-known Australopithecus specimens, place him very close to 'man', perhaps a parallel line of evolution. Wherever Gigantopithecus is finally placed he certainly seems to resemble a stone age Yeti.

(For more detailed information see SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN; Jan. 1970 "Gigantopithecus", Jan. 1972 "Population Genetics and Human Origins.)

YOUR ANSWERS MAKE ME MAD

Dear Ray:

We'll take up the good news first. The Beautiful World of Spirit is beautifully written, and is probably the best series you've ever run. I don't know whether or not it's faked, but once in a while I run across an "answer" in the article which I know from experience to be the truth, so I would like to see this series continued for a long while.

And now for the bad news. The article, How Astrology Works, in the January, 1972 Search was well written and showed considerable research on the part of the author—BUT his knowledge of spelling is about like that of my old aunt Meg.

And, lastly, the article Eve, Hear My Voice is a silly piece of balderdash and shouldn't have been written in the first place.

Knowing that you have large filing cabinets, I will now pronounce my special blessing on you: May the Wisdom of the Pyramid and the Eye of Horus bless everything in your drawers.

Paul A. Smith
Chicago

P.S. If you publish this letter, you don't have to print an answer to it. Your answers don't make me "thank"—they make me mad.

✓ We've received many letters from you over the years, and one thing I've noticed is that every one of them points out an itemized list of typographical errors, and most often, the number of errors decided whether you liked or disliked the article in question. I used to wonder at that, until you informed me that you were a typographer by trade. So, you can't read an article without placing a large portion of your attention on noting (with annoyance) every typographical error, making a note of same, and writing a sharp letter about it (I deleted your list this time!). But, Paul, as a typographer, you ought to know that there NEVER has been anything like a magazine or a newspaper (and most books) that does not contain those nasty "typos"! I've never succeeded in producing anything that was typographically perfect. I don't expect I ever will—because I've really tried, and then found that I'd failed more miserably than when I just "skimmed over" the proofreading!

And I don't blame you for being "mad" at this response to your letter—it does point out that you have a "conditioned reflex" to the printed word when it isn't printed correctly, or spelled correctly, or punctuated correctly. And that isn't a flattering remark to make, is it? But then, I have a "conditioned reflex" to people who only get mad at me, and tell me I don't make them think! We all have our faults! Mine REALLY makes me mad! So you are probably the better off. However, I am really flattered that you read our publications, even if they are so full of typos. That proves you actually do see beyond the type fonts! And for that, thanks!—Rap.

DISAGREES WITH "BEAUTIFUL WORLD" REPLY

Dear Ray,

With ref. to the piece by your writer Mr. Vern Overlee I would like to say that, honestly, there are really not that many persons, even on Earth, who are so evil, silly, stupid, or mischievous, as to wish or to try to contact other dimensions for "fun" etc.

As a medium who has worked in public, and from schooldays on, has given personal and private readings to all types of persons in all walks of life, both for free and paid for, (mostly for free!) by card-reading, tea and coffee grounds, and messages given from the platform in spiritualist churches, from locks of hair, and psychometry, and through the mail by straight messages,

I have found that 99 per cent of persons wishing to contact the "other side" are persons desperately wanting to know answers to personal problems, depressed persons who feel life is offering them nothing and who need counsel, and persons who have recently lost relatives.

Actually, I have yet to find one person who wished to contact spirit for a "hobby", "amusement", or to gain power over somebody.

I have, however, met and heard from persons who while not requesting readings or etc. made sure to inform me how "advanced" they were, how "privileged" they were, and how what they "had" was something no one else possessed or was worthy of possessing, including yours truly.

I hope you will print the piece by my contact. [Later, ED.]

Ziofran is still very much alive and kicking. About a year ago, give or take the odd month, he dictated a personal message to me concerning another matter altogether, but in the course of the message he told me clearly that he actually was my husband in an incarnation on Earth in a time I believe was thousands of years ago.

So I understand why this world and this time are so foreign to me and why I have felt all my life as though I was an alien here. Nothing is familiar. Something that was here is missing in this time. And something else that was here, and is gone, is now coming back, and it is not good. I see a struggle ahead for these people here, a time of feelings of lostness and maybe even terror, as a matter concerning the whole planet will have to be decided.

A wrong decision, that is, a win by the Others, will mean a giant slide backwards by mankind. It happened before.

I have seen myself as I was in the incarnation when Zio was actually my earth-husband, before he was "posted" to the HQ in the Andromeda Sector.

I was a sweet, gentle little thing with long dark hair and lived in a place where there were big trees and a road along which they grew, and I wore a garment something like a shift but it fastened on one shoulder and I had bare feet. I have sure toughened up since then, by necessity of course.

Peace and Love

Joan Howard

ONE HOROSCOPE NOT ENOUGH FOR FORETELLING THE FUTURE

Dear Ray:

Here's a new discovery in astrology. Standard horoscopes are invisible and incomparable due to symbols and house positioning. With all charts turned one way they become comparable, sign 1 at the old house 1, 2 at 2, and so on, the symbols can be dropped entirely in charts after a little practice. There are too many planets too, so start with the two most important—Sun, ☉ and Saturn, ♄.

The boy born Aug. 1, 1910 had these two square, 90 deg. apart, and so did other people too numerous to mention, many with tragic happenings if the other members of their family or group also had them square, opposition, oo, conjunction, o. That is parts of a cross. Parents horoscopes being very much involved for the young, like the Lindberg baby, and marriage partners for the parents, Lindy's Sun, ☉ progressed to wife's ♄, and in aspect to all the servants too.

This runs true for all? Tragic presidents, kings, dictators that I have on file, ask for any you may be interested in to check up. Even for Wilhelm Reich alone, progressed to his death, given in Forum just received. And the "Sexual Molesters of Afterlife" are very much involved too, they are the wives of Saturn, ♄ mentioned from Babylon, Egypt on down and some rediscovered from 1917, plenty of time to verify, but invisible charts hold back, as well as conservatism and fixations.

If you send your parents or other close contacts I think that you will see that fortune telling by one horoscope alone is far from being enough to predict anything definite. Hitler and wife squared up as did Napoleon—wife, his parents squared up too, Kennedys or any tragic ones, Harding, Hoover, etc.

Write for samples if interested.

Yours truly

THE TRUTH ABOUT THE BOOK "MARY" BY WILIS

Dear Ray:

When first I received the issue of Search Magazine in which you advertised my book Mary, I wrote you a letter protesting errors in the ad. Now when the book is advertised in the third issue, I am told by one I trust that the letter was "stolen" by the Dero (i.e. astralised so that you did not receive it). This was done by the Dero Dymo, because he is the dero who has inspired you to give him the credit for having dictated the tale. He is in fact one of the 5 leaders of Enghèd who take it in turn to reign as Dero (i.e. the chief).

The truth is as follows:

The tale is written by myself, for the spirit that incarnated in me is the spirit that was incarnated in Rebecca as Joses, younger sister of the Virgin Mary. Both waking and sleeping she watched, and made her record in the planet Delfo (which in the tale is referred to as Hevin). Her name is Wilis.

Until 1967 I was a whole spirit. In March 1967 Dymo broke me, hoping thereby to drive out the parts and to take possession of the body to write by my hand some more of his lying tales. This ambition has been his undoing and the means of his exposure to the true ethereal rulers, for the parts, instead of leaving the body, withdrew, some of them in search of help, some of them in search of confirmation of facts not fully remembered, while others stayed to guard the body.

The result? The Tales of the Rat, of which Mary is the first, written by Wilis from notes made in her record in the schare of Delfo. The only part the Dero (or dero) played was to hinder, beset and physically hurt. (This day Dymo set my car engine ablaze—let Charles Fort sort that tale out for it was done by astral fire.)

The ad, therefore, should read “The story of the Virgin Mary and Joseph as it is told in Heaven.”

I would ask you also to remove the quotation marks from the title, as printed in the ad, and to correct the impression given in your editorial in which you said “strangest of all, to me, is that a ‘dero’ could have written a book so entertaining. . .” etc. You do not actually say that a dero wrote it: yet Dymo has successfully claimed the credit in many places and among many people. It has all but cost me my life trying to prove to the true ethereal rulers that Dymo had no part in it except to hinder and beset me while I wrote. Please, therefore, if you wish for any more of the tale, say straight out as soon as possible the truth—that the tale is written by Wilis alone and that Wilis is not dero, although she has, while out of the body, done much work among them.

BEAUTIFUL WORLD OF SPIRIT

reincarnate in a new body. This time there were no ghosts—a learning and refining process takes place, as the physical is not haunted by past mistakes to be amended and goes unencumbered through the physical life.

It is well that one attempts to understand this. Too many dwell on reincarnation for the wrong reasons. This in itself makes it unpalatable for many to accept this ideology. If one tries to understand the true meaning of reincarnated life, he would lead a more suitable life so there would be no 'ghost' to deal with when the physical succumbs and the soul returns to its true home.

Question: Do you think it wrong for people of different races to marry?

Answer: We here in this group who work through the brother, represent all races. We work together in harmony; we are in close rapport with one another; our association, our harmony is more complete than any that is now being practiced in any part of any country of your world. We choose to be together, as we have like interests, like desires and like goals. This is as marriage should be—having like interests, desires and goals. You are hampered by bigotry which is practiced by those who believe they are not bigots; they are the worst kind. They make it much more difficult for people of different races to dwell together in harmony. Should your love be such that you can shield yourself and your loved ones from this bigotry so that your union can remain intact, then you should by all means join together in matrimony. But know ye well, that your love must be stronger and deeper to survive that which is often difficult to survive by those of the same race. Marriage in itself is not merely love, but respect and mutual interests and a strong desire to share your possessions, cares and happiness. We see that to survive, barriers must be lowered until no question is needed in deciding a mate. When that day arrives, man will dwell together as the Father would have him dwell, as His child, sharing together the fruits which He has so amply provided.
