a which is contained much interesting matter, and which I beg reave to recommend to the most profound attention of all who defire to know more than their neighbours, and to have: their names enrolled amongst those of the most distinguished fravans et philosophes.

. In my last preface I gave a detailed account of my aerial journey, together with a prophetic diary for the year 1815. I have the pleafure of faying that all my prognostifications were verified. I must confess, that although my chief end in thus unveiling the arcana of futurity, was to enlighten the minds of men at large, yet, I did hope that at the fame time I flould be purfuing the right path to fame and opulence. Of the former I may fay, without vanity, that I posses a pretty large share ; fufficient to fatisfy the defires of any reasonable mind; of the lat. tor-alas! I am as poor as Job was in the days of his adverfity. Former ages were more generous than the prefent. From them, I received the honourable title of Knight-but now-a-days, the number of these honourable men is fo great, that I who have laboured inceffantly for the good of the public, am loft in the general male-my country neighbours, by whom I was heretofore looked up to with a degree of reverence, begin to lofe that feeling, as they have found out, that there is fearcely a village in i England, is which a knight does not refide, -- I certainly have not wielded a fourd-but I have wielded a goofe-quill-my neighbours cannot diffinguish the difference-and thus I fear my ancient ; dignity will be confounded with the pretensions of those, whose henours are but of the growth of yesterday. However I always confole myfelf with this reflection, that an impartial public will decide between the men of war, and the man of peace,

I have had some thoughts, principally on this account, of re. moving my abode altogether to the upper regions, and there in . the folitude and privacy of my Jupiterian refidence, forget the petty vexations of this tumultuous world. It feems a most providential circumstance, that at the time when I was about to faffer (what Hudibras could never endure) I mean, in my honour, a fituation fould have to wonderfully fallen to my lot, where I can enjoy my folitary dignity, without the danger of intruders. The more I revolve this project in my mind, the more I am enamoured of it-but I cannot leave my real friends.

without a legacy, and this I fall prefere to them as the first frints of my foculations in that region, where the belief flat of prejudice no longer exists where the laculities and powers of the mind have room to expand themfelves and where every thing, even the very air itleff, confpires to elevate refine and piritualize the ideas of a dilgent featcher into the economy of nature." Here then is the Reliquiz Sacre the first fletch of ra fyrem which is to aftonifh, confound, and convert the philoso phers of all nations. A NEW SYSTEM OF METAPHYSICS

BY

POOR SIR ROBIN, KNT.

I really can fee no plaufible reafon, why you fhould not, and therefore here it is, just as it came forth from the brain—you have it therefore at first hand.

"When I have examined matter, (that is, the matter of this world, I fay nothing of the matter of my fatellite) it has appeared to me that it could not think, and I have readily admitted beings purely fpiritual; it is true, correct ideas of fuch fullflances have never been formed. This proves the fagacity of man does not reach very far.—But does it prove there is nothing beyond t

When I have confidered the animals, I have not been able to help thinking them intelligent, and that fo much ingentify was not without fome understanding. They are, therefore, faid I, provided with a fpiritual substance. But what there fafects, these worms, these microscopical animals, who increase without number in the shortest space, have they each a spiritual, that is to fay, an unchangeable, immortal foul i-may fome one fay—I do not imagine any fuch thought ever entered into a found head—my readers may therefore be assured it has never entered into mine.

"Then calling to mind that intelligent fubitance diffuited through the whole earth, and perhaps farther, that immente fpirit of whom fome ancient philofophers have talked, under the name of the univerfal foul; I have thought that, without multiplying infinitely fpiritual fubitances, that foul was very proper to furply their place, and alone fufficient to give life to all the animals. Thave therefore embraced the opinion of the ancients, with fome exceptions.

If they avers perforded that every thinking of gapized, being is substand by a particle of the universal, but so that fanged being Is this fould is capable of specceptions; it is for that fanged being the this fould is capable of specceptions; it is for that fanged being for an additive individual to another the for the fanged being for a different places can be able to perate state definition in different places can be able to be all the fanged being analytic to be a substant of the second of the second of the fange in different places can be because it for the san where the analytic to be a substance.

F. H Parthena the ancients believed that man, like the animals. derived from the universal foul all the intelligence he is endowed with-this is a grand millake. If we coolider in man, that hidden principle which carries him to efficaciously to follow the impreffions of fenfe, though ever fo repugnant to reafon, we shall agree with the ancients, that this principle must be the fame which animates, rules and directs the animals; the pure fenfitive nature of the universal soul is visible in it. But when I perceive in man another agent, which tends to fubject all his actions to the rules of justice; which fo often opposes the Tenfes (though feldom with fuccefs) which, even when it fucceeds not to hinder the fin, never fails to fing him with remorfe and repentance; I cannot help thinking, that belides the univerfal spirit, there is in man another principle of a superior order; a principle known by the name of the rational foul. is manifest by the clashing between the passions and reason, that there are in us two contradictory beings which oppole one another. If I may be allowed to compare things of fo dillerent a nature, I fhould fay that every thing which particles of the univerfal foul, is like a foonge foaked in the fea, and that if moreover the body is endued with a reafonable foul, (which is the cale of man) it is like the fame fponge foaked in the fea, but in which a drop of oil has found its way.

In fine—the ancients believed, that the universal foul was diffuled every where; but neither can that be. Perhaps it pervades the terrestrial globe, or it may be, the whole solar system; or even farther; but still it is certain it has its bounds—it is God alone that fills immensity.

But how shall the existence of a thinking being be admitted, which, bounded as it is, has however so prodigious an extension? What ideas can be formed of its capacions and its limits? How can it animate so many bodies physically separated one from the other, and forming so many individuals? Let us fathem as fat as in us lies these depths of obscurity.

"" Since spiritual substances have no foldity, they are penetrable, and take up no room. From their penetrability is tollows, that feveral spirits may exist in one and the same space, and that a fundy may take the in the famil place our Bromuchaios taking up no room it follows, that they have meithen lengthes ner breadth inor depth ;; that they have no extension properly forcalled. But fill a foirit is a real being, a fubliance sothougho it takes up no room, it is necessarily formewhere s and thoughin: has no extension properly fo called, it has necessarily its bounds. So in a metaohysical leafe, all foiritual beings may be faid to be! more or lefs extended, to contain, and to be contained and then we may deturn to our comparison of the sponge, pener trated by a drop of oil, and immerfed in the fear the as commo • A On the other hand, by virtue of the laws of combinations. the refult of the unions necessarily differs from the fubftances: that; are united; and it does not appear that the foul and the body fhould make an exception. When the fpirit and matter are united, think not the fpirit the fame as before-it is in fome measure materialized-think not the matter such as it was been fore ; it is in fome manner spiritualized. From this mixture refults a new being, different from pure fpinit, though it retains its soblest virtue; different from brute matter, though it para takes of its qualities. It is a particular being, forming an individual, and thinking a-part; in fine, it is fuch a being as you that are seading, fuch as I that am writing. Therefore, what pery ceives in us, is, properly speaking, neither the universal faiting nor the rational foul, nor organized matter; but a compound of all three. Just as when a lion roars, it is not the universab foul that is in a rage; it is the compound of that foul, and the brain of the lion. Hence it comes that each animal forms a feb parate thinking individual, though all the animals think only. by vintue of the one and the fame universal four. Let us proered without losing fight of the faint light which guides us through these dark paths. the matter of 11 - N

"We have seen that to form an animal, there needs only a combination of the universal soul, and organized matter, and to form a man there must be another union of organized matter, polyersal foul, and rational foul. If the universal spirit was wanting, ever obedient to the dictates of the rational foul, we phould see some but virtuous and spotless men, such as are no where to be found. If the rational foul were wanting, abandons where to be found. If the rational foul were wanting, abandons where to be found. If the rational foul were wanting, abandons where to be found. If the rational foul were wanting, abandons where to be found. If the valuersal fourit which always follows the allurements of fense, we should fee none but monsters of gips, and diforder.

• 19. The rational foul is united to the human body, the justant the motion of effectial life is fertical there; it is feparated, the inflans that motion is definited, and once feparated, it is known vite The universal fout is united and feparated in the fame circhynflances. But it is not always feparated for ever. East, in any perform, the motion effectial to life, after having totally called come to be very poffible), and what will be the confequence r The rational foul which departed upon the ceafing of the vital motion, cannot return; but the universal foul, aways prefert, cannot fail of remiting with the organized body fet in motion again. The man is dead, for his foul is feparated from his hody. He preferves however the air of a living man; becaufe the universal foul is refettled in his brain, which it directs tolerably wells.

5.45 Such to you appears a perfon perfectly recovered from apoplectic or lethargic fits, who is but half come to life; his forl is flown; there remains only the universal fpirit. Excels of joy, or of grief, any fudden opposition may occasion death, and does eccasion it, in tact, oftener than it is imagined. Let a fit of jealoufy or patient affect you to a certain degree, your foul, too firongly shocked, quits its habitation. And let your friends fay what they please, or fay what you will yourfelf, you are dead, positively dead. However you are not buried, the universal foul acts your part to the deception of the whole world, and even of yourfelf.

5 # Lihall now speak of the figns by which the living may be diffinguished from the dead; and doubtles the reader fees already what these figns may be. To behold wickedness with unconcerns, to be unmoved by virtue; to mind only felkinterest; and without remorfe to be carried away with the torrent of the age, are figns of death. Be affured, no rational foul inhabits fitch abandoned machines.

• "I will conclude with opening a door to new reflections. Suppofe x man, like for many others, vegetates only, and is reduced to the universal foul, I demand whether the race of stoch x man is not in the fame flate. If fo, I pity our pollerity. Res tional fouls were frame flate. If fo, I pity our pollerity. Res tional fouls were frame among our foreitations; they are full more among as ; furely there will be none left among our offs fpring. All are degenerating, and we are very near the laft flage."

Seeing this to be the cafe, I now take my leave of this planet; I thall certainly make occasional visits to it, to be proval things are going on-but for my credit's lake for the take of my hou nous and of my peace of mindy-I cannot relide them any longer; and fo my good readers

PART THE SECOND:

FOR THE YEAR OF MAN'S REDEMPTION, 1816!

THE GHOSTLY ADVENTURES OF

A POEM,

Dedicated to all the lovers of the MARVELLOUS in the United Kingdom.

THE night was dark—the night was cold, A winter's night in days of old; When, from the ancient Gothic hall, Sir Triftam gave his page a call.

Sir Triftam was a worthy knight, Of fame renown'd, of honour bright; Proof of his courage had been made, Before his shoulder felt the blade.

"Hubert," he faid, "go bring my fword, With which I thrash'd that doughty Lord, Who dar'd, within this facred place, Affront my knightship, face to face."

Had heard a footstep, pit-a-pat; And starting, from his easy chair, Refolved to see that all was fair.

. Mirabilia

He thought—and 'twas a ferious thought, Which late events to his mind brought, That he might be that night a hoft To entertain fome fhiv'ring ghoft.

The thought once lodg'd within his breaft, He vow'd he'd take that night ao reft; Till he had fearch'd the caffle round, And all the vaults beneath the ground.

His stufty page now brought his fword, Whom then he bade, upon his word, Declare that he, although twas late, Where'er he went, would follow firaight.

Forth went the knight—his trufty page Did many flocking fights prefage; Spectres, and fkulls, and bleached bones Scatter'd around, and blood-ftain'd ftones.

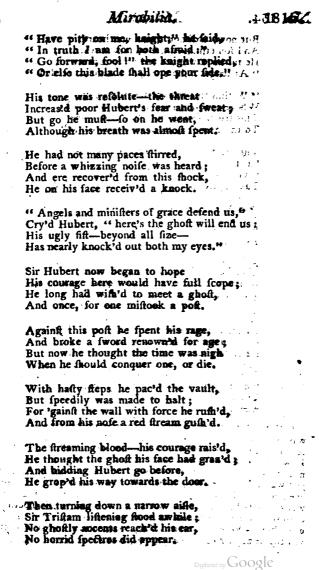

Facts which had neard old men declare, (1995) Facts which had made him quake and flare, How, at a certain night i'th' year, Strange lights did in the vaults appear.

> Through galleries long they took their way, And Hubert then for once did pray, That he might fee the light again, Although he fear'd his pray'rs were vain.

At length they reach'd a vaulted room, In which he fear'd to meet his doom; When the knight bade him ope a door, Which ne'er had feem'd to ope before.

He pull'd-the rully hinge did creak, And then was heard a horrid fqueak; "Save and defend us all," he cried, "From every harm that doth betide."

"Knave," cried Sir Triffam, "hold your tongue, Or elfe thy nole ifhall quick be wrung," and Think you that all the hofts of faints "" Will hear your pray'rs, and yows, and plaints ?"

Mirabilias.

"Within this paffage lies the ghoft, Whole conquest foon shall be my boast ; This trusty sword shall fend him hame To the Red Sea, from which he came."

Then rushing towards the fatal spot, Sir Tristam every fear forgot : "Ghostly disturber of my peace, Take that—and let thy wand'rings cease."

Woe to the ghoft, had he been there, The fury of his wrath to fhare; But fomething check'd the direful blow, And laid the honour'd knight full low.

Along the floor he lay—the while A voice like thunder flook the aifle, "Help !—help !—I'm murder'd;" then a groan, That echoed back from every flone.

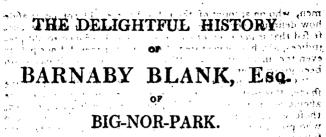

'Twas Hubert's voice,—he left the knight, By his command—to fetch a light; But thinking danger fill was near, He funk upon the ground through fear.

The knight arofe, and vow'd he'd make "Each bone within his fkin to fhake; The object of his hopes fo near, And his vile form to interfere!"

"Well," may fome lover of the marvelious fay-if this laft was certainly not fupernatural-but, what was the caufe of the fqueak ? and what gave the blow, that nearly blinded Hubert ? How do you account for those things?"-I will tell you-The next morning Sir Trifam renewed the fearch-and the first object was a dead rat, which Hubert had fqueezed to death in opening the door-and the next thing which prefented itfelf, was an owl-this being diffurbed in the middle of his inofturnal cogitations, had revenged the interruption by flying in the face of Hubert.-Was there any thing fupernatural this? I give you till next year to anfwer the quediens.

PART V.

"WILL you have the goodnefs," faid Barnaby Blank, Efq. 9 to the fhade with whom we last year left him conversing; "to to a explain the nature of those fingular appearances which you call furfaces ?" " Cortainly," replied the fhade, " I do not wonder, in the least, that they excite your curiosity. There is first the furtace of Modefty, and this is the only thing necessary for a Babylonian lady Equipped in this, they go forth to the theatre and the ball-room; places in which it is extremely conve-6 nient to have only the furface of modefty. The most elegant¹ mode of arraying themfelves in their furfaces, forms one of the most important features in their furface of Education. From³ their earlieft years, they are taught to part with the fubftance,33 and to be contented with the furface. They are told, when? and where it may be difplayed to most advantage; and, by the time they have arrived at years of difcretion, they are perfected adepts in this most needfary art; and with the aid of a far," are shielded from any unpleasant sensations, which has they the fubftance of modefty, must be produced by the language. manners, and actions, which they continually hear, observe, and practife. There is also the furface of Friendship, by the means of which all Babylon feems to be but one family. Friendfaip is like a frong band, made of very weak thread, twifted tegether. A Babylonian is tied to no one by the band, but he is tied to each of his fellow-citizens by a fingle thread. There is the furface of Piety-many years ago in great repute, It gives people a certain Gothic air, quite ridiculous in the eyes, at the bau ton. A few years. Ance it was found only among the adherents to the old bigots, and in an order of ق الدانية العالية بالدارية ا men, who on account of their functions could not lay it afide how defining (order) they might be -although it much be confeffed that many even of this clafs did bid defiance to old prejudices, and boldly ventured to declare that they did not poffes even the furface of piety. Within thele few years it has again been growing into repute.

"One of the most firking furfaces in Babylon," continued the fnade, "is that of opulence. Behold in the temples, in the affemblies, in the public walks, those citizens fo richly dreffed, those women fo adorned, those children foneat, fo lively, and who promife fo fair to be one day as frivolous as their fathers: follow them to their homes; furniture of the best tafter, commodious apartments, house like palaces, all continue to proclaim opulence—but ftop there: if you go any further, you will fee families in diffrefs and hearts overflowing with cares.

"Again, there is the furface of patriotifm—we must diffinguish in the conduct of the Babylonians between the theory and the practices. The theory turns entirely upon patriotifm. Public good, national interest; glory of the Babylonian name, all this is the language of theory—the practice hangs folely upon the hinge of private interest. It is very remarkable that in this respect the Babylonians have long been dupes of one another. Two many performs plainly perceived that Country did not much affect them, but they heard others talk of it fo often, and foaffectionately, that they verily believed there was shill fuch a thing as a patriot, although they were not fo themselves.

54 Such is the lot of the elementary fpirits," continued the lighter "No fooner are they out of the probation column where they are purified, but they return to their ufual labours; and to fee where their prefence is most necessary; and where many stave most need of their allitance. At their comingout of the column they afcend this hill. There by a mezhanifus which required the utmost skill of the fpirits every thing that patters is all parts of the world is feen and heard. Thou are going to try the experiment thy felf."

Qn each fide of the column is a large flair-cafe of above an hundred fleps which leads to the top of the hill. We want up and were forcely half way when my ears were flruck with a difagreeable humming, which increased as we advanced. When we cance to a platform in which the hill eads, the first thing that Aruck my eyes was a globe of a confiderable diameter. At a diffance it was a humming; mearer it was a frightful thundering; noise formed by a confider mixture of flouts of joy, ravings of defpair, flricks, complaints, ringings, murmurs, facelamit tions, laughter, groans, and whatever proclaimsthe immoderate forrow and extravagant joy of mortals.

"Smallimperceptible mines. (faid the flade), come from cath point of the earth's furface, and end at this globe. The infide is organized to that the motion of the air which is propagated through the imperceptible pipes, and grows western in time, refumes frefh. force at the entrance into the globe and becomen fenfible again. Hence these noises and hummingson But what would these confuled founds fignify, if menos were not found to diffinguish them? Behold the image of the earth mainted an the globe; the illands, the continents, the oceans, which dust round, join, and divide all. Don they not lee Europe, that quarter of the earth that bath done fo much midebief atouthe other three? burning Africa, where the arts and the wants that attend them have never penetrated ? but from which millions . of human beings have been folen in order to gratify the lumbica of Europeans by cultivating their lands, and enriching, the finit with their blood ? Afia, whole luxury, paffing to the European nations, has done to much good according to fome, and fo much harm according to others. America, still dyed with the black of its unhappy inhabitants, whom men of a religion shat breathers "peace and good-will," came to convert and barbinoinly mure der? Observe what point of the globe thou pleaseft, place theme the ond of this pod which I give thee, and putting the other and to thy car, thou shalt hear diffinctly whatever is faid in the corresponding part of the earth." Just in Surprifed at this prodigy, I put the end of any rod upon Babylon, I applied my car and heard what follows. # Is it at true," faid a farmer of the imposes who was making his calculations upon the people, "that in the occasions of the fate," every one flould contribute in proportion to his means, after at deduction of his necessary expenses? Is it not also mue that do very thort man fpends lefs in cloaths than a very tail one? Isit not true that this difference of expense is very confiderables: fluce there is occasion for fummer habits, winter habits, fpring, habits, autuma habits, country habits, riding habits, and fr know not how many others ? there flould be likewife morning and evening habits, but the morning is not known as Mabylon. I would therefore have all his Majefly's fubjects measured and taxed each inversely as his flature Another confideration of equal weight. A tax on bachelors has been talked for Money should be raifed upon those who are rich esough to be married, and especially upon those who are rich enough to von ture upon having children, and therefore married men divide be taxed in a ratio compounded of the amount of their capiton tron, and the number of their children. I have in mp pocketbook I know not how many projects as good as that and which a I have very luckily devifed; each man has his talents; this is mine and it is well-known how much it is to be prized now. a days." Story at 1 in h Aga line distance was a grammarian making his obfervations. (Three languages (faid he) are spoken at Babylon, that of the mobe that of the petit maitre, and that of the better fort. The first ferves to express in a difagreeable manner shocking things, With all their judgment, fome authors have written in this langaage, and the Babylonians, with all their micenels, have read shem with pleafure. The fecond is made up of a certain contextuce of words without any meaning. You may talk this lan. guage a whole day together, and when you have done, it will be found you have faid nothing at all. To enter into the character of the idiom, it is effential to talk inceffantly without scalog and as far as pollible from common fenfe. The third wants a certain precision, a certain force and certain graces: but it is furceptible of a lingular elegance and clearnefs. It will not perhaps be expressive enough of the flights of the poet, or the wanfports of the mulician; but it expresses with admirable ease all the ideas of him who observes, compares, discusses, and feeks. truth. Without doubt, it is the properest language for reasoning; and most unhappily it is least used for that purpose."

The end of my rod by chance fell upon an affembly where they were talking of happinels. Each declared his opinion as follows:

think of removing those pitiful little houses which darken that grand and beautiful front; they repent of having built under. ground to adorn a place : take is reviving : the arts are going to fourill : , very fortly Babylon will proclaim the magnificence of is: a great question," faid another, "whether colonnades, find fquares, and large cities, will make a nation happy: they must be enriched. Industry must be excited, agriculture encouraged, manufactures ingreated, and trade made to flourish: without which all the reft is nothing."

"Nonseafel" faid a third, " I have faid it, and I fay it again s if we will be happy our manners must be more simple: the circloof our wants contracted; and in a country life, we mail: withdraw from the vices which attend the luxuries of ciries."

: 41 do not know wherein confifts the happinels of nations,  faid a fourth, " but 1 think the happiness of individuals confists edly not," faid another, A health caufes no lively impretion and tranquillity is tirefome. with encomiums." " Yes! and at every inftant your ear will be grated with centures, because there is no pleasing every body. It is my opinion, that every man is happy in pro-all was in your power you would care for nothing. For my part, I am of opinion that to be happy we muft defpife all things; that is the only way to avoid all kind of vexation and be indifferent to every thing; as the means of enjoying an unchangeable happinefs." " I take wifdom to be the thing, for that alone will fet us above all events." "And I fay it must be folly; for tolly creates her own happinefs, independently of any thing crofs or difagreeable about her." "You are all of you in the wrong. Nothing general can be affigned that may be productive of the happinels of particular perfons. So many men-fo many mihars this defires one kind of happinels, and that another: one withes for riches, another is content with necessaries: this would "love and be loved; that confiders the paffions as the bane of the foul. Every one must study himself and follow his own inclination." "Not at all; and you are as much millaken as the reft. In vain do I perfuade myself that I should be happy, if I pollefied fuch a thing; the moment I have it, I find it infufficient; and with for another. We defire without end and never enjoy. A certain man was continually travelling about, and always on toot; quite tired out he faid, If I had a horfe I mould be contented. He had a horfe ; but the rain, the cold, the lun were still troublesome to him. A horse (fays he) is not fufficient; a chariot only can foreen me from the inclemencies of the air. His fortune increased, and a chariot was bought. What followed? exercise till then had kept our traveller in health: as foon as that ceafed, he grew infirm and gouty; and prefently after, it was not possible for him to travel either on how or on horfeback, or in a chariot."

Thus my dear readers I have brought you to the end of part the fifth of this interefting and wonderful hiftory, compared with which the molt interefting yoyages and travels of four molt celebrated men are dull and infignificant. A production which is a remarkable for its clofe adherence to truth and probability, as for its fidelity in the correct delineations of nature, and in the species and cultum of the manners and cultum of marking.

THE FOUR SEASONS:

OR, THE WHOLE YEAR IN ONE PAGE.

th. SPRING QUARTER commences on the 20th March, at 5 h. 9 min. afternoon.

2d. SUMMER QUARTER commences on the 2st June at 2 h. 45 min. afternoon.

3d. AUTUMNAL QUARTER commences on the 23d September at 4 h, 43 min. morning.

4th. WINTER QUARTER commences on the 22d December at 2 h. 27 min.

SPRING.

First midst the features of the year, Spring and its jocund train appear, She o'er the Earth her gayest mantle spreads:

Ten thousand varied hues are feen-

The violet-purple-entertill green-Are all combin'd to ornament the meads.

A SOMMER EVENING. The fun was fet, and twight's lateft fay Yet linger'd ew it fied and clos'd the day 2. Glow in the Eaft, the Moon arofe to view, And o'er the feene, a mellow'd glory threw. On the lake's face-its undulating beam, Dazeled the eye that watch'd in filent ftream; No found was heard, fave where the cat'raft fell, And forcad its echoes murmuring through the data.

AN AUTUMN EVENING.

The Sun was haft'ning to his ocean bed, His broad orb finking glow'd with deepet red, The mountain tops were ting'd—the village fpins Caught his laft rays, and blaz'd with vivid fire. The foreft which on Wernode's top had rear'd Its lofty head for ages—now appear'd In autuinn's huies—its firong boughs gently wav'd, That oft the elemental firfe had brav'd.

WINTER.

Day clofes in a pace—the failing fnew Throws its pale mantle o'er the fields below; The wind blows keen, and fighing as it goes, Seems to commilerate the poor man's woes, While o'er the embers' flow departing bloze, He, with a wife and children, this ring gave.
