THE BIOGRAPHY OF SATAN:

OR A HISTORICAL EXPOSITION OF

THE DEVIL AND HIS FIERY DOMINIONS,

DISCLOSING THE ORIENTAL ORIGIN OF THE BELIEF IN A DEVIL AND FUTURE ENDLESS PUNISHMENT.

ALSO,

BY K. GRAVES,

Author of "Christianity before Christ, or the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviours."

"FEAR HATH TORMENT."—[1 John 4:18.

Price 50 Cents—Postage Prepaid. For Sale by the Publishers and the Author.

CHICAGO:

Published by the Religious-Philosophical Publishing Association

1865.
PREFACE.

It is common in the prefatory exegesis of a work to explain the motives which lead to its authorship or compilation. But as the motives which prompted this work are already partially disclosed in the introductory chapter, headed "Address to the Reader," and the succeeding chapter which sets forth some of the practical evils which spring legitimately from the doctrine of future or postmortem punishment, we will only add to explanation thus furnished, so far, as to state:

1. That notwithstanding countless ages have rolled away since the after-death penalty was first originated and propagated to the world, yet no work designed to furnish to the general reader a full and at the same time, brief exposition of the origin and design of this mischievous doctrine, with all its various and multifarious terms, dogmas, and childish traditions, has ever before been presented to the public since an extensive inquiry has been awakened on the subject.

2. We deem it a matter of the greatest moment, that some one should make the effort to arrest the almost boundless tide of terror and misery, of which the practical dissemination of the doctrine of endless damnation has ever been, and still is, a truly prolific source. For no person who has not scrutinizingly investigated the matter, can form any just or any approximate conception of the extent to which both the Heathen and the Christian world have been demoralized and flooded with misery and unhappiness, by the propagation of this doctrine. These facts, wedded to the hope of checking this wide-spread river—this shoreless current of mischief, constitute our principal apology for publishing this work.

3. The single and serious fact, that the superstitious fear of after-death punishment, furnishes the primary motive power by which more than a million of sermons are annually dealt out from the Christian pulpit of the United States alone, at a cost of many millions of dollars, levied mainly upon the pockets of the poor, which have the effect of exciting in the minds of the religious classes the most agonizing emotions, and the most torturing fears, and consequently the most painfully unhappy hours, often producing, temporarily, the ruin of health and happiness, even among the virtuous; while the people (and most of the priests, too) are ignorant of the origin of these alarming superstitious doctrines, the author considers an ample warrant, upon moral grounds, for attempting the task of aiding in checking the evil and demoralizing effects of this barbarous, anti-civilizing and terrible heathen superstition.

Whether these reasons furnish a sufficient justification for such an enterprise, is left for the candid reader to judge.

Reader, do not fail to read the one hundred and sixty-three questions.

Harveysburg, Ohio, 1865.

K. Graves.
CONTENTS

CHAP.                  PAGE

Address to the Reader ........................................... 1
1. Evils and demoralizing effects of the doctrine of endless punishment 4
2. Ancient traditions respecting the origin of evil and the Devil .... 5
3. A wicked Devil and an endless Hell not taught in the Jewish Scriptures ............................................................ 7
4. Explanation of the words Devils and Hell in the Old Testament .... 9
5. God (and not the Devil) the author of evil according to the Bible .. 10
6. God and the Devil originally twin-brothers, and known by the same titles ............................................................... 11 7. Origin of the terms, “Kingdom of Heaven,” “Gates of Hell,” etc.;
also of the traditions respecting the Dragon chasing the woman, (see Rev. 12,) the woman clothed with the sun, etc............... 19
8. Hell first instituted in the skies. Its origin and descent from above. 21
9. Origin of the tradition respecting “the bottomless pit” ............ 22
10. Origin of the belief in a “Lake of fire and brimstone” ............ 22
11. Where is Hell—ancient notions respecting its character and origin.. 24
12. Origin of the idea of man’s evil thoughts and actions being prompted by a Devil ................................................................ 24
13. The Christian’s Devil—where imported or borrowed from ....... 26
14. The various retributive terms of the Bible shown to be of Oriental origin ................................................................. 26 15. The doctrine of future after-death punishment proved to be of heathen and priestly origin—being traced to its invention by ancient Pagan priests ............................................... 29 Conclusion—One hundred and sixty-three questions for believers in post mortem punishment .................................................. 32

APPENDIX.

Origin of the traditions respecting “the war in Heaven,” (see Rev. 12,) fallen angels being transformed into Devils, and an explanation of the terms Hell, Hades, Tartarus, Gehenna, Sheol, Valley of Hinnom, etc.

* * * A gentleman who has read the 168 questions declares, “they are worth double the price of the work.”
INTRODUCTORY ADDRESS TO THE READER.

"FEAR HATH TORMENT."

FRIENDLY READER:

Are you, or have you ever been a believer in the doctrine of future endless punishment? And did you ever tremble with the fearful apprehension that you might be irrevocably doomed to a life of interminable woe beyond the tomb? Did you ever shudder at the horrible thought, that either yourself or some of your dearest friends might possibly in "the day of accounts," be numbered amongst those who are to receive the terrible sentence, "Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels!" Matt. 25—41. Were you ever "tormented and goaded with such fearful forebodings as these, and haunted with them day and night, for weeks and months together, if not during long and tedious years, as thousands upon thousands of the most devout believers in the Christian faith have been in all ages of the church? Or were you ever present during a "religious revival," and witness the priest remove (in imagination) the cover from Hell's burning mouth—(that blazing, "bottomless pit," whose lurid flames of fire "ascendeth up forever and ever," and did you hear him depict to a terror-stricken audience the awful fate of the countless millions of the "doomed, damned souls" of the underground world? Did you listen as he portrayed their agonizing sufferings, and spoke of their loud, terror-inspiring, heart-rendering wailings of anguish, their ineffable groans, their doleful yells and soul-bursting shrieks of despair, which like a thousand commingling thunders, reverberating along the great archway of their murky prison, shake "heaven and earth and hell!" And did a shuddering fear steal over your nerveless frame and chill the blood in your very heart in spite of your efforts to resist it and stave it off, as the "pulpit orator," in glowing eloquence, depicted the wretched inhabitants of this world of woe, as being tossed to and fro with their naked souls upon a fathomless sea of flame; a shoreless ocean of boiling, blazing, sulphurous fire, dashed into furious, dashing, mountainous billows, by the ever-thundering, ever-bursting, never-ceasing storms of divine wrath; and as they essay to quench their parching thirst with this liquid fire. "The worm that never dies," robed in burning brimstone, we are told makes his eternal feasts upon the vitals of their bleeding hearts, lacerated by the swift-sped thunderbolts of Jehovah's direful vengeance—aye, the barbed arrows, fresh drawn from God's own quiver. And old grim Lucifer, the deputed executor (in part) of God's vengeful wrath, heedless of their doleful yells and maddening cries, culminates the awful drama as he "woods up the fires and keeps them burning," and pours the red-hot, blistering embers down their shrieking throats. Or, to shift our stand-point from the realms of fancy to fact: A popular Christian clergyman, (the Rev. Mr. D——,) in a fit of inspirational turgescence and mental explosion which recently came off in Xenia, Ohio, as he collapsed, let off the following: (We present an extract from his sermon.) "Fathers and sons, pastors [mark this, ye preachers!] and people, husbands and wives, brothers and sisters, in unquenchable fire, with swollen veins and bloodshot eyes, strain toward each other's throats and hearts, reprobate men and women, devils in form and features, hideous to behold. As God's vengeance is in his heart, and he delights to execute it, he will tread them in his wrath and trample them in his fury, and he will stain all his garments with their blood." [Wonder if he will then reascend his burnished and beautiful "emerald throne" with these bloody clothes on.] "My head grows dizzy, as it bends over the gulf." [Quite likely, brother; lofty climbing always has the effect to make men with small brains giddy-headed. Empty vessels float easily. And we humbly suggest that you should have been cropped, blistered, bled and put to bed instanter, and opiates and cooling powders administered ad infinitum, after such an exhausting, moonstruck effort to scare sinners into heaven.] Take another example: A Rev. Mr. Clawson, (a Methodist Episcopal clergyman) as "it came to pass," being once pregnant with the spirit of eternal damnation (and not knowing, as we suspect, "whether he was in the body or out of the body," See 2 Cor. 2-4,) blew up the unconverted portion of his audience in the following spasmodic style: "God will keep the red hot cinders of black damnation upon your naked souls as high as the pyramids of Egypt." (We suggest that Mrs. Partington would have considered this as rather a dangerous case of "information of the brain," or of "a rush of brains to the head.")

Now, kind reader, let me ask you, have you had any practical experience in listening to such frightful and frightening ebullitions of folly and fanaticism as the foregoing, which we have presented here as mere specimens of the kind of priestly flummery which are continually rolling out from the pulpit upon the recurrence of every Sabbath, in every part of Christendom? Though it is true such pompous and foolish language is not always used as is found in the examples we have here presented, yet the spirit manifested is the same. And have you ever calculated or reflected upon the vast, untold and almost inconceivable amount of terror, fright, misery and despair, and consequent destruction of happiness it has brought to millions of minds and millions of families of the present era as well as those of the remotely past superstitious ages? If so, you can understand our object and appreciate our motive in throwing this pamphlet before the public. For certain we are, that "In fear there is torment," and consequently unhappiness; and certain we are too, that if the two hundred millions of people called Christians could be made acquainted with the historical facts which will be found in this work, and which go to prove most conclusively, that the doctrine of future endless punishment was originated and concocted by designing priests, and that a benevolent and beneficent God had nothing to do with their origination, as is claimed by the devout disciples of every primitive religion in the world, it would have the effect to dissipate a fathomless and shoreless ocean of fear and misery from the religious world. For it is now well-known to every intelligent person, that the fear of endless damnation has been, and still is, a powerful engine in the hands of the priests for "converting souls to God"—i.e., for grinding (or scaring) sinners into saints, and that there has always been at least ten devil-dreading, hell-fearing Christians to one that is made practically righteous by the natural love of virtue and truth. It is the fear of the devil and not the love of God which extorts from them a reluctant and tardy conformity to the principles of justice and the rules of practical honesty. That is, the devil is virtually set upon their track as a hound dog to scare them into heaven. And thus, they are nothing less, properly speaking, than drafted saints, or rather pious sinners—Christians by practice, but villains at heart. And if they shall receive the final benediction of "well done," it will, we opine, have to be attributed more to a pair of fleet legs than to a virtuous mind, for the former achieved the work enabling them to outrun "the grand adversary of souls" who howls upon every Christian's track, "like a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour." And here we may note it as a remarkable fact, that as momentous and solemnly important as this subject must be admitted to be, involving as it does our fate to all eternity, yet not one pious Christian in a thousand is able, when interrogated upon the subject, to give an intelligent answer as to the origin of the doctrine of post mortem punishment. (I have never found one that could tell.) They know nothing about how, when or where it first started, and this ignorance is sufficient to account for their blind and tenacious adherence to the superstition. It is generally believed and assumed, that its primary source is the Christian Bible. And does not, we ask, this lamentable ignorance greatly enhance the necessity and importance of publishing and circulating a work of this character, that by virtue of superior knowledge, the people may be undeceived in supposing that it is of divine institution instead of being as history proves, of mundane, priestly origin, and that they may thereby be delivered from the agonizing thraldom of fear and fright which have in all past ages beset the votaries of the various fear fraught religions. If it were ever a wise policy to try to frighten men into the path of virtue by "the fear of Hell torments," as was ingeniously argued by the Grecian Polybius, (300 B. C.,) that policy is now superseded by the substitution of more honorable, more laudable, and more enduring motives.
CHAPTER I.

EVILS AND DEMORALIZING EFFECTS OF THE DOCTRINE OF ENDLESS PUNISHMENT.

"Grant me, great God, at least,
This one, this simple, almost no request,
When I have wept a thousand lives away,
When torment has grown weary of its prey,
When I have raved ten thousand years in fire,
Yes, ten thousand times ten thousand,
Let me then expire."

We have not space here for an elaborate exposition of the evils and immoral effects of the doctrine of endless torment, but will present a brief list of a portion of these, condensed from our larger work on this subject, of which this pamphlet is a mere epitome or abstract:

1. The belief in a cruel after-death punishment is (as we have already shown) the prolific source on their own account of groundless and tormenting fears to all its believers.

2. It is also the source of a fearful amount of the most painful unhappiness to millions of the human race in dread apprehension of the fate of their friends even when but little is entertained on their own account.

3. The post mortem punishment doctrine taught by the Christian world, would invest the Deity with a character absolutely dishonorable and disgraceful, if not blasphemous, by representing him as morally capable of inflicting the most excruciating punishment upon the major portion of his children, whereas he would be a cruel and a hateful monster if he should thus punish one of his subjects for a single day.

4. It also fastens a disgraceful libel upon the moral attributes of man, by representing him as being so demon-hearted, even after he is translated to heaven and numbered amongst "the spirits of the just men made perfect," that he can witness, unmoved, the intolerable sufferings and raving torments of the millions of his fellow beings, consigned to endless woe.

5. It has caused the butchery, the bloody slaughter of millions of the human race by the efforts used to convert them, and "the rest of mankind" to the true religion in order to "save their souls from hell."

6. It has caused numberless suicides, infanticides, fratricides, etc.; children have been murdered for fear they would lead a life of crime, and thus "plunge their souls into hell."

7. The belief in devil obsession and endless punishment has caused more than one hundred thousand human beings to be tortured to death in various ways by "Christians" who believed in the superstitious notion of witchcraft.

8. The belief in post mortem punishment was the great "motor nerve," the primary mainspring of the Spanish Inquisition in which "Christians" slaughtered and "sent to the bar of God" more than 40,000 men, women and children.

9. It was the foundation of the fiendish war of the crusades in which five millions of people were made to drench the earth with their blood by the hands of "Christians."

10. It has contributed to fill our lunatic asylums with the insane, made so in many instances by the awful thought of eternal damnation.

11. It has caused an enormous expenditure of time and money in the various means used (as books, tracts, sermons, etc.,) for propagating the doctrine.

12. And finally, it converts the Christian world into cowards instead of moral heroes, by appealing solely to the organ of fear—the basest of human motives—instead of to the natural love of virtue implanted in the human mind.
We have an abundance of historical facts in our possession to prove all the above statements, but cannot occupy space with many of them in this small work. With reference to the first objection in the list, as also the third and fourth, the lines quoted from the poet Young, furnishes us illustrative proof. The victim of endless damnation prays that "After I have raved ten thousand years in fire, let me then expire." But the Christian world tell us God answers, "No, sir, no, your raving torments shall never, never have an end!" Now, not only must such doctrine as this be appalling to weak nerves, but we regard it as virtual blasphemy, as it represents God as being a more demon-hearted, inhuman monster than the most bloody-minded tyrant that ever drenched the earth in human blood. For neither Nero nor Caligula ever attempted to punish and torture in the most cruel manner imaginable even his bitterest enemy for a year, much less an eternity, as God is here represented as doing. But more, and worse. Listen to the following, from one of the most popular promulgators of the Christian faith that ever disgraced or rather disgraced the land of Christendom. The Rev. J. Edwards, a very popular preacher of the last century, president of a theological seminary in New Jersey, and "one of the brightest luminaries of the Christian church," as Rev. Robert Hall styles him, proclaimed from the sacred desk, that "the elect (in heaven) will not be sorry for the damned (in hell). It will cause no uneasiness or dissatisfaction to them, but on the contrary, when they see this sight, it will occasion rejoicing and excite them to joyful praises." (See, "Edwards' Practical Sermons," No. 11.) Now, reader, keep down "the old man," restrain your feelings of horror till we present you another example of this kind. The Rev. Nathaniel Emmons, who quit the stage of life in 1849, once declared in a sermon, that "the happiness of the elect will consist in part in witnessing the torments of the damned in hell, among whom may be their own children, parents, husbands, wives and friends; * * * but instead of taking the part of these miserable beings, they will say "Amen, Hallelujah, Praise the Lord." Now, assuming this to be Christian doctrine, who will not blush to be called a Christian? But perhaps some reader will reply that it is not—that it is bogus Christianity. Then we ask him to explain, how heaven can be "a place or state of perpetual happiness," (see Webster's Dictionary,) unless its inhabitants can witness such scenes as these unmoved. If "perpetually happy," they must actually enjoy every scene they witness. And hence must shout, "Amen, Hallelujah, praise the Lord," when witnessing, as they do, according to the Scriptures, (see Luke 16-28,) their friends and relatives, rolling, raving and shrieking with the pangs of perpetual woe. Now, reader, don't you see that Edwards and Emmons were preaching the genuine Christian doctrines? Whether or not, however, we regard such sentiments not only as blasphemous caricatures upon a just and benevolent God, but as insulting libels upon human nature as it exists among "the spirits of the just made perfect." If our friends, after entering paradise, did really possess such a character as here ascribed to them, I would rather be a dog and bark at the moon to all eternity, than go to such a heaven and be numbered among such saints or angels, even though I should be endowed with the perpetual charter or special privilege of singing "Old Hundred," or playing on "the harp of a thousand strings," forever and ever. And sermons containing just such gospel rantings as these may be found in nearly every Christian library in the world, and exert a demoralizing influence on all who read and believe them.

CHAPTER II.

ANCIENT TRADITIONS RESPECTING THE ORIGIN OF EVIL AND THE DEVIL.

We now propose to submit to the reader a brief and condensed history of the ancient notions respecting the origin and infernal operations and machinations of that imaginary monster, counter-foo and arch-enemy to all human bliss and blessedness, known as "the Devil," "Satan," "the Serpent," "the Dragon," etc.; but for whom we think a more appropriate designation would be, “The Ruler of Omnipotence,” or “Omnipotence Second.”

Here let the reader note it and emphasize it as a remarkable fact, that God not the devil, was primarily believed to be the author of evil, by the Oriental nations, and that this doctrine is taught in the Christian Bible. The words Evil and Devil seem to have been originally synonymous terms—the latter being, as we are told, a contraction of the words “do-evil,” and hence represents a mere personification of evil. And there is abundance of evidence accessible to prove that the conception of evil existed long before the devil was discovered or thought of; so that should his devilish majesty set up a claim, or any of his friends for him, of being the originator or author of evil, he would be nonsuited in open court. The case would be reduced to a nonle prosequi or pronounced tout au contraire. Instead of ascribing evil to the devil in the early ages of human society, we find it was ascribed to the Deity himself, and considered the natural action of his own faculties, the normal and legitimate working of his own divine powers and purposes. He was assumed to be the source of both good and evil. There being already (in the conception of the people) one Infinite Being, (God) no room was found in the original creation for another, and hence his sooty majesty was left out. He was an after-thought.
It was not until the second edition of creation was struck off, that his long-tailed lordship was thought of, or allowed to have an existence except among snakes.
He was finally gotten up as a “helpmeet” for the priests, it being discovered that it would require the three-fold power, 1st. Of “The drawing chords of love,” from the fountain of infinite goodness. 2d. The draw-game of the priests (upon the pockets of the people) and, 3d. The howling of the serpent alias the dragon, alias the devil, (like “a roaring lion,”) to get a sinner into heaven. Verily, verily, “Jordan is a hard road to travel, I believe”—i.e., heaven seems to be a place not very accessible. We have stated that the devil was not thought of in the original creation. And how the people were restrained from the commission of universal crime and carnage without the fear of the imaginary ghost of old king Beelzebub before their eyes, is a “mystery of godliness,” which we suppose only the spiritually-minded can comprehend—that is, those who are sufficiently spiritually-minded to “understand the things that belong to the kingdom,” or to see a devil where there is none. There is abundance of historical testimony to prove that no nation in its earlier history—not even “God’s holy people” had any idea or conception of the existence of a prime originator of evil, or “tempter of souls,” separate and apart from God himself, while it is evident that no possible advantage or end could have been served by the existence of such a being, while the people were ignorant of it and the conception foreign to their thoughts. Hence the presumption must be, that he was not yet born or hatched. Strange, too, when according to orthodox showing, this was an age of the world in which it was all-important and indis-نسaneously necessary that he should have been incorommed and established upon his throne, and the fact extensively advertised, because we are told that “the imagination of man’s thoughts were evil, and only evil, continually.” (Gen.
8—52.) And, hence, a devil was needed to scare them on to the right track—the straight and narrow way that leadeth unto Jordan,” as we are virtually taught. This is his “high calling”—the great end of his creation. It certainly, then, was a great blunder, a serious desideratum, to omit this creation at the start, or if created, to neglect to make it known. Good and evil were primarily regarded as only different degrees of the same thing, and both as emanations from an all-wise and perfect God, “the author of everything both good and bad,” whose residence then by man was believed to be the sun.
And let it be noted here that the first conception of evil and a devil was inferred from the violent and destructive operations of the elements of nature not now classified with, or regarded by any one as moral evils, and which it was known even these human beings could have no agency in producing. And here dates the first rude conception of a devil, which means simply a destroyer—not of souls, but of natural objects.
CHAPTER III.

A WICKED DEVIL AND AN ENDLESS HELL NOT TAUGHT IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

The proof that the early Jews (Hebrews or Israelites, rather,) like the heathen at a still earlier period, were entirely ignorant of, and had no conception of the existence of a devil, or distinct evil principle, and ascribed all evil and all crime as well as all goodness, to God, is of a three-fold character.

1. The absence of any allusion to such a personage in the Jewish Scriptures, or even to a state of punishment after death.

2. The repeated positive declarations in the same "Holy Book," that God himself is the author of evil.

3. The fact that all those names, terms and titles, now applied to the devil, or used to designate such a being in the Old Testament, were by the Jews applied also to God, and are still more remotely traceable to Pagans, astronomical imagery or star-born spiritual beings.

First. Relative to the first of these propositions, it may be remarked, that orthodox Christians have often been challenged to place a finger upon a single text in the Jewish Old Testament, (the only authentic record of their doctrine,) which either specially or by fair implication teaches the existence of either a devil or an endless hell, or any doctrine tantamount thereto.

If we examine the history of the first transgression ever committed by man, according to the report of the Jewish and Christian Scriptures, we will find no allusion to these doctrines, and no threat of punishment in another life as a penalty for this or any other sin, as most certainly we should, if these doctrines were then known, believed and propagated. True, we are told, that mother Eve was beguiled by a serpent to eat an apple. But a serpent is not a devil according to our dictionaries, but a snake. And according to the opinion of the learned Dr. Adam Clarke, the serpent that beguiled Eve was really nothing more nor less than an ape or monkey—a very different animal (having its tail and its destructive propensities) from the fancied, cloven-footed orthodox devil. But whether the original tempter were a devil, serpent, snake, snappeturtle, or biped, quadruped, non-ruped, or a legless, crawling reptile, there is no intimation that he had anything to do with punishing Adam and his wife for their "manifold transgressions," but let them slide over Jordan un molested.

There is no account that either of them were consigned to the fiery pit, minus a bottom; no sentence or threat of never-ending torment or punishment beyond the grave as a penalty for the first great transgression of the human race—that "mighty sin" which resulted, we are told, in the downfall, depravity, and almost moral wreck and ruin of the entire race of man. Now, had there been a devil then "to punish the wicked," certainly he would have been brought out, sworn into office, and put upon duty. His enthronement and inauguration would not have been delayed an hour. At least his existence and his fiery whereabouts would have been proclaimed "from Dan to Beersheba," and Jehovah's threatening vengeance and thunderbolts of wrath would have been rolled in fiery billows, along the moral heavens as he announced the existence of a world of endless woe for all sinners and apple eaters in the future, as well as the place of consignment for father Adam and his new rib-made wife for ruining the human race, by indulging their gustatory proclivities upon a pippin. The existence of a fiery world, with its malignant, relentless ruler and omnipotent potentate, should have been and would have been announced, and the notice engraven in imperishable golden characters upon the boundless, cerulean, over-arching concave of heaven, immediately after the first transgression of man as a standing terror and eternal warning to sinners, or those who might be tempted to sin, in order to deter them from future transgression and future crime, had such penal arrangements existed or been thought of. But instead of this, the punishment was only temporal. The ground was cursed, grandmother Eve sentenced to "bring forth children in sorrow," the serpent doomed when jejune to eat dust, (except in wet weather, when he had to "go it slyly," if not suffocatingly on mud,) and grand-father Adam chased out of the garden "with a sharp stick," but no roasting or fiery pit punishment is even once named.
Second. Then look at the case of the first commission of the greatest crime ever perpetrated by human hands, or ever registered upon the scroll of human depravity—that of the perpetration of murder, and the murder too of a brother (fratricide). Cain was to be a "fugitive and a vagabond in the earth" for killing his brother, and the soil was to be unpropitious on his account. But there is no burning, broiling, or frying threatened, or hinted at, to be inflicted either in this life or "that which is to come."

Third. Not even on the occasion of issuing "the law on Mount Sinai," when we must presume the whole counsel of God was proclaimed, and when it is confessed the whole world was steeped in crime, do we find the doctrine of future rewards and punishments in another life even hinted at.

Fourth. Nor yet on the occasion of drawing the whole world for its superlative wickedness, (Noah and clique only excepted,) was the fiery whereabouts of the "Evil One"—his Satanic snakehead—made known and announced as the future home of the wicked. There is no intimation, that while their bodies should be floating on the expansive waters of the "mighty deep," their souls should be roasting in pandemonium below, or should be floating on a sea of fire. Noah was a "preacher of righteousness," but not a preacher of "endless damnation."

Fifth. We will dismiss the argument with the remark, that while Jehovah is represented as often getting angry, and as being again and again engaged in dealing out his sublimating thunders upon his "Holy people"—in pouring out his threats, curses and wrathful imprecations upon the "devoted heads of his own chosen nation," he never once threatened them with fire and brimstone, or to cast them into the pit without a bottom, for their "numerous transgressions," their "manifold backslidings," and their "wickedness of heart," not even after they had rolled up a mountain of crime whose towering apex stood in defiant mockery before the throne of heaven. Two thousand five hundred years thus rolled away after creation, as we have shown, and we will now add to it at least one thousand more, basing our calculation on "Jude's Christian chronology," before his devilish or saukish majesty was born or ushered upon the stage of action; or, at least, before he was introduced to society, or anybody was honored with his acquaintance, or even suspected him as being in esse. As we find no traces of him among the prophets, he either had led a very obscure and retired life, or was yet in the labyrinth of chaos. For it was not until about the dawning of the era of the Gospel Dispensation, that he was inaugurated and crowned king of pandemonium.

Now we have only to appeal to Jewish and Christian history to show that society was as moral, and as free from crime, during this long period, that the world (or at least this portion of it) was in want of a "devil" to help on the cause of Zion, as during the devil-preaching, hell-scaring system or policy of proclaiming the Gospel, and frightening the people into pietie and paradise (or rather into priest paying pews,) which was practiced in the "Dark Ages," so called. If, then, society could prosper without a devil for nearly 4,000 years, why could it not continue to prosper without his assistance or presence through all time to come? More especially as we have the historical proof that society was not improved morally by his introduction into the world, or the introduction among the people of the belief in such a being; as we could amply prove, were it not so well known to every reader of history. Hence, is it not evident, that as there was no “prime Evil Agent” known to society in the early ages, to assume the introduction of one after the lapse of several thousand years, is to assume that in the economy of God something took place which was entirely useless, redundant, foolish and absurd. Reader, please answer this question before you read further. Tell us why it now requires two omnipotent powers (God and the Devil) to save a sinner or get a Christian into heaven—one leading the way with the inviting language, “Come ye blessed of my father”—the other pursuing in the rear howling upon his track like a roaring lion, when but one was sufficient during a period of 4,000 years.

Reader, reason and reflect.
CHAPTER IV.

EXPLANATION OF THE WORDS “DEVILS” AND “HELL” IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

I have asserted what I will here repeat, that the primitive Jews did not teach the doctrines of a devil and a hell as appertaining to another. It cannot be found in the Old Testament, nor in any writings of the Jews prior to the Babylonian captivity, (600 years before Christ,) during which some of the Jewish sects obtained these doctrines. Let it not be supposed that I am ignorant of the fact that the words “Devils” (always in the plural,) and “Hell” occurs several times in the Old Testament, but they are never used in the sense now popularly attached to these words. In every instance in which they are employed, they have exclusive reference to this life. It should be specially noted, that the word devil never occurs in the Old Testament—it is always in the plural—“Devils,” and in this form had reference either to heathen deities, or to the evil spirits which many of the Jews believed infested the minds of men in this life. They had no “king Satan,” or “prime Devil,”—as they had no place to keep him—no bottomless pit of fire and sulphur to cast him into. As for the word hell where it occurs in the Old Testament scriptures, it is translated and derived in every instance from sheol, and sheol is the Hebrew word for grave. And it is a noteworthy fact, that it is translated grave in twenty-eight cases. Why it was not translated grave in other cases and in all instances where it is found in the Old Testament, is a “Mystery of Godliness,” which will hereafter be explained. But the context and the original meaning of the word “Hell,” where it is found in the Old Testament, clearly shows that it would have made better sense had it been translated “grave.” I will here present some proof of this. Job ejaculates—“Oh! that thou wouldst hide me in the grave,” (sheol,) (Job xiv: 13,) David exclaims: “If I make my bed in hell, (sheol) behold! thou art there.” (Psalm cxxxix: 8,) Observe how much similarity of sense exists in the two texts above quoted. And yet the former is translated grave, and the latter hell. Now, why did the translators not render sheol hell in the latter instance, so as to make David talk of making his bed in hell? Who that has an ounce of brains between his ears would speak or think of making his bed in a cauldron of blazing fire and brimstone, or a red hot furnace of living coals glowing with the most intense heat? He could not “sleep a wink” in a month in such a situation. But had sheol in this text been translated grave instead of hell, it would read—“If I make my bed in the grave, etc., language which approaches much nearer to good sense, for the grave will really be our bed when our bodies are consigned to the earth. I ask, then, which is the most reasonable translation, hell or grave? Again, Jonah is made to say—“Out of the belly of hell cried I, and thou hearest me.” (Jonah ii: 2,) What! did Jonah tumble through “Symme’s Hole” into Tartarus (for he was too righteous a man to be driven thither) unobserved by Omniscience, who was not apprized of the sad catastrophe till the prophet roared and bellowed with a voice sufficiently stentorian to be heard over the wallings of the damned, all the way from the “belly of hell” up to the throne of heaven.

How did his Jonasliip get loose from the clutches of old Splitfoot, grizzly, king Beelzebub? Or how did he manage to elude the vigilant watch of his jail-keeper, old black Tzphphon, who guards the gates of Ceresbus “day and night,” so as to dash through the door and make his way back to Nineveh? There were no Isaac T. Hoppers in Pandemonium then to construct underground railroads, and run off some of the “damned souls” occasionally. The truth is, Jonah’s “belly of hell” was the belly of a whale, a pretty warm place, but not at hot as boiling brimstone—not hot enough to singe the hair, or burn a blister. It is evident, therefore, that sheol here is inappropriately translated hell; and it would not have been so translated, but that, as a Christian once expressed the idea—“It would not do to have no Hell and Devil in the Old Testament.” Their feelings are analogous to those of the Methodist Episcopal clergyman, who exclaimed to his congregation, “Brethren, the Universalists tell us all men are to be saved. But we do not believe it. We hope for better things.”
Let it not be understood, however, that those who translated sheol into hell, entertained the thought that it had reference to any other than this life. Some of them have admitted that it had no reference to another state of being. I venture to affirm that no Hebrew scholar would risk his reputation for learning by interpreting sheol as having reference to a place of torment after death. They all know better. Commentators skilled in the language and in Jewish history, admit this is not the true interpretation, and the context proves it. All Jewish history shows that they never in their earlier history had any conception of a Devil or Hell as being provided or prepared for the wicked in another state of existence.

A volume might easily be furnished of historical extracts from some of the best and most popular authors, both Jewish and Christian, in proof of this statement, but a few must suffice: The celebrated Christian Church historian, Mr. Milman, declares that "the lawgiver Moses maintained a profound silence on that fundamental article, if not of political at least of religious legislation—rewards and punishments in another life." (History of Jesus, vol. i: page 117.) Bishop Warburton, so well known in English church history, and whom a writer, Mr. Arnold, styles "a great and shining ornament of the Gallican Church," says, "In the Jewish Republic, both rewards and punishments promised by Heaven were temporal only, such as health, long life, peace, plenty, and dominion, etc., (on the one hand,) and disease, premature death, war, famine, captivity, etc., (on the other.) In no one place of the Mosaic Institute, is there the least mention, or any intelligent hint, of the rewards and punishments of another life." (Divine Legislation, vol. iii: page 2.)

"No mention is anywhere made in the writings of Moses of a judgment day at the end of the world," says Mr. Mayer, Professor of the Dutch Reformed Church. And that great logical defender of the Christian faith, Dr. Paley, avers to the same effect, that "the Mosaic Dispensation dealt in temporal rewards and punishments, and you will observe that these blessings consisted altogether of worldly benefits, and the curses of worldly punishments." (Sermon xiii: page 10.) Bishop Watson, the champion defender of the Christian faith against Paine's Age of Reason, tells us that devils in the Old Testament means "men and women as traducers." The learned and celebrated Dr. Campbell says, relative to the word sheol which is rendered hell in several places in our translation of the Old Testament, that "it sometimes signifies the state of the dead without regard to their happiness or misery," as the Religious Encyclopedia of England tells us the Jews had a conception of a world or place of general rendezvous for souls after death without distinction of character. The ablest and most popular Christian scholars, then, admit, that the early Jews, known primarily as Hebrews, had no conception of a personified wicked agent, or transmundane personal Devil, or of a place of endless torment beyond the confines of time; but that all words or names in the Old Testament, seemingly implying such ideas, were intended to have reference exclusively to this sphere of being.

CHAPTER V.

GOD (AND NOT THE DEVIL) THE AUTHOR OF EVIL ACCORDING TO THE CHRISTIAN BIBLE.

Our next and second proposition is, that the earliest ancestors of the Jewish race recognized God as being the author of evil by virtue of being the source of everything. The sequence had to be admitted to maintain a logical consistency. God could not be the author of all things without being the author of evil. The doctrine of future rewards and punishments constituted no part of the ancient Jewish creed, simply because, as we would naturally infer, all human actions, both good and bad, were regarded as proceeding from their God, Jehovah, or as being "inspired by the great Breath," as they express it, (in the Talmud.) But we are not left to mere inference from the omission of after-life punishment for wrong-doing from their creed, that they regarded God as the author of evil—but we have taught it in the most explicit and unequivocal language in their own “Inspired Writings.” Read and mark well this inspired utterance of the great and leading prophet of the Jews, “I form light and create darkness. I make peace, and I create evil. I the Lord do all these things.” (Isaiah.) Could language be more explicit than this? And the prophet Amos asks, “Shall there be evil in the city, and the Lord hath not done it?” And Job speaks in the same strain, and puts forth the same doctrine: “We receive good at the hands of the Lord, shall we not also receive evil?” And Solomon also carries the principle or doctrine so far as to declare, “the Lord hath made even the wicked for the doing of evil,” as it should read; but our translation makes it read, “the day of evil.” Let it not be said that it is merely physical evils that are referred to in these texts. For, besides these, there are numerous other texts which go to show that there was not a crime known or perpetrated at that day, but what Jehovah himself is represented as committing or approving, and thereby assuming the authorship of. For example, he puts a lying spirit into the mouths of the prophets, (see 1 Kings, 22,) so that all the falsehoods they told were his, and not theirs. And the prophet Jeremiah goes further, and says that God lied virtually with his own lips: “Wilt thou be altogether as a liar?” “O Lord, thou hast deceived me, and I am greatly deceived.” (Jer. xxii: 7.) And Ezekiel caps the climax: “If a prophet is deceived, I the Lord have deceived that prophet.” Now, as deception and falsehood are synonymous terms, it follows that God stands charged here with being a liar, i.e., “the father of lies” in the Jewish system, as the Devil was afterwards in the Christian system. He is frequently represented as getting mad, (see Deut. i: 37,) and swearing; and also of committing or approving of theft or stealing, (Ex. iii: 2,) of robbery, (Ex. xii: 36,) of murder, (Deut. xiii: 2,) and in fact of every crime known in that barbarous age.

Now, it is easy to perceive from this, why the Jews had no Devil. They had nothing for him to do. The Lord did it all. He perpetrated the evil as well as achieved the good. And to punish the wicked or evil-doer with “everlasting fire,” would have been to build a fire around their God. And let us here remark, that optimism (the belief that everything is ordered for the best) is a doctrine scouted by the Christian Church—yet it certainly is the legitimate inference from the above quoted texts from their own sacred Bible. Of course, if every species of crime, evil and immorality, had the divine sanction, it was all right—ergo, it was for the best. Nor is it incredible that the Jews in a state of barbarism, and mental childhood, should have no clear conception of a line of demarcation between good and evil, and hence confound and classify them altogether. The oldest books in the Hindoo Bible evince the same state of mind, and also teach the same doctrine.

CHAPTER VI.

GOD AND THE DEVIL ORIGINALLY TWIN-BROTHERS, AND KNOWN BY THE SAME TITLES.

Another proof that the primitive Jews, like some of the earlier heathen nations, had no devil, and recognized but one common source for good and evil, regarding both as proceeding from Jehovah, is found in the fact that those names and titles now applied to the Devil, were by them and other nations primarily applied to the Deity, thus evidencing that both characters were formerly comprehended in one being, that being Jehovah God; and that after another being was hatched, created or conjured up (the Devil) to saddle all the sins of the world on, he still continued to be known and designated by the same names and titles that various nations, including Jews, had used in application to God only. Whereas a being possessing opposite characteristics should have been designated by names denoting opposite qualities, but for the fact (as we shall soon show) that the Devil was at first considered a God, and as such was worshipped by several nations including some of the early Christian sects. And the same is true of Jesus Christ and the Devil, that the same titles were applied to each, evincing that they were both derived in common from the Pagan conception of good and evil, virtue and vice flowing or emanating from one fountain, which fountain was primordially the sun. In Exodus, 6th chapter, God is represented as saying, “I appeared unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, as God Almighty.” Now this God Almighty is found to read in the Hebrew Bible, Baal-Shadai, and in tracing the derivation of Beelzebub, the highest title for our or “your father the devil,” to its original analytic form, we find it terminate in Baal-Shadai. Thus both are traceable to the same origin. Beelzebub, in its original Chaldean and Phoenician form is Baalzebub. Then we have Baal-Shadai God Almighty, and Baalzebub the Devil. And on further research, we find these terms are essentially the same—that is, were originally applied to the same being. Baal, as synonymous with Bel, was the Chaldean name for the Lord dwelling in the sun. Baal-Shadai was the sun in the zenith of his glory, and Baalzebub the sun while in the sign or constellation of the scorpion. And then there is Baal-il, or Baal-iel, a Chaldean and Phoenician solar title for God. And this is the word or term from which the Devilish Beliel of the Christian New Testament is derived. Beliel is from Baal-il, Lord of the Opposite, which means a sign or constellation opposite to the sun at any given point. Adversary, another Satanic title, (“your adversary the Devil.”—1st Peter, 5–8.) is also traceable to the same source; Adversary being like Beliel a sign at right-angles, or adverse (adversary) to the sun. Paul asks, “What concord hath Christ with Beliel?” I answer, the same that Christ hath with the Father, all being traceable to one and the same original source. Dragon is another title for the great Attorney General of the lower kingdom, and is found to be synonymous with Baal and Bel. St. John speaks of “that old Serpent which is called the Devil and Satan—the great Red Dragon, with seven heads and ten horns, and a tail which drew the third part of the stars of heaven, and cast them to the earth.” (Rev. xii. and xiii.) Here Serpent, Devil, Satan and Dragon, are used as synonymous terms, as nouns in apposition. Now, let it be observed, that the Dragon was worshipped by the Canaanites under the name of Dagon, and Dagon is compounded of Dag, the fish, and On or One, the Egyptian name for the God of the sun or in the sun. And this On or One is the source to which “The Holy One of Israel” is traceable. Dragon or Dagon, then, signifies Dag, the fish, and On or One, the sun—that is, the sun in the constellation of the fish. Satan, another of the numerous epithets or titles, with which his cloven-footed majesty was honored or doubted, is from the Babylonian Saith-ain or Aith-ain, and is said to mean, The Word, Logos, Fountain of Wisdom, etc. If, then, Satan is the fountain of Wisdom, there is some sense and appropriateness, after all, in the Scriptural injunction, “Be ye wise as serpents, (or satans,) and harmless as doves.” And some consistency, too, may be found, according to this explanation of Satan, in the two apparently incongruous Scripture texts—one representing God and the other Satan as tempting David to number the people. It may seem like rather a derriere expedient to get rid of a glaring contradiction—to make God and the Devil both one. But perhaps the end will sanctify the means; and if truth is sometimes stranger than fiction, may it not be in this instance?

Another title, applied to both God and the Devil, is that of Father. Christ spoke of “My Father in Heaven,” and “your father the Devil.” “Ye are of your father the Devil.” (John viii: 44.) He also referred to a certain class of believers, crying “Abba, Father.” Well, now, Abba, we are informed, is from Abaddon, (Abad-don,) which St. John tells us is the Hebrew for Beelzebub, while Apollyon, (Latin, Apollo,) is the Greek. (See Rev. ix.) Apollo is, however, the Latin, for the impersonised Sun, or Solar God. Abba is Father, and Don is Lord, in the Hebrew, and according to the inspired John, the Revelator, the two together is Beelzebub. Abba-don—Father—Lord—Beelzebub—rather an imposing title for his Snakeship.

We will now notice some of the titles applied in common to Christ and the Devil. Lucifer, (suggestive of Lucifer matches, of which it may be presumed his Satanshp was the patentee or inventor,) if not a common title for the “Evil
One," is, at least a very illustrious title. I think the old gentleman was formerly better known by this title than at present. It is one of the numerous titles, however, by which he has always been known and honored. Isaiah dubs his Royal Majesty as "Lucifer, Son of the morning," (Isaiah xiv: 12), or, as some translators have it, and ours so explain it in the margin—Day Star. Then Lucifer was "Son of the Day Star." Well, now, mark the evidence. In Rev. xxii: 16, it reads—"I Jesus am the bright and Morning Star." Then, there is just the difference between Lucifer and Jesus that there is between the Morning Star and the Day Star—which Bailey's Astronomy, and Dupois's "Astronomy of the Ancients," show to be none at all. They were one and the same star. And this identity in name of Christ and Lucifer, as well as the reasonableness of designating each a star, is rendered more apparent when we recollect that both were considered the source of light.

Christ was "a Light to lighten the Gentiles." (Luke ii: 32.) And Lucifer, or Satan, was by transformation "an Angel of Light," (2d Cor. ix: 14,) or as it is rendered, "a Star of Light;"—the stars anciently being considered angels, or the homes of angels, and were sometimes addressed as angels. We have then Christ as the "Morning Star;" "Light to Lighten," etc., and Satan, or Lucifer, "a Star of Light." Both are stars and both are lights. God is another honorable designation for both Christ and Satan. Christ is "The God of Peace," (2d Cor. xiii: 11,) and Satan "The God of this world." (2d Cor. iv: 4.) And the appellation of the designation, and vanity of the title of the latter, I believe is not disputed by the Christian world. Christ himself seems to have conceded it; for when his Satanship offered him "all the kingdoms of this world" for one genuflexion, or act of worship, he did not dispute his title, contest his proprietorship, or call in question the correctness of his boundless claim to "all the kingdoms of this world." He seemed disposed to give the Devil his due, if not a little more.

Again: was Christ honored with the title of a "Prince?" So was the ruler of the brimstone kingdom. Christ was "The Prince of Peace"—Satan, "The Prince of Darkness," "The Prince of the Power of the Air." But why was he styled "The Prince of Darkness?" Does fire and brimstone, or brimstone and fire give no light? Certainly it must. Then, would there not be as much propriety in dubbing him "The Prince of Light," as an "Angel of Light?" However, he is acknowledged to be a "Prince" as well as Christ, and this far they are equal.

And did Christ receive the awe-imposing title of "Son of God?" So did Satan receive a similar title. For "Son of the Morning" is, when properly rendered, "Son of the God who made the morning—who rules the morning," the God in the sun. But, perhaps, the most common title, or rather emblem for "that old serpent, the Devil," as John the Saint styles him, is that of serpent. And serpent was a popular emblem among the Jews for God also, if not a direct and explicit title for the Deity. We are told, (in Num. xxi: 9,) that "Moses made a serpent of brass, and put it upon a pole, and it came to pass that if a serpent had bitten any man, when he beheld the serpent of brass he lived." Now we have the most conclusive evidence that this serpent was designed to represent Jehovah. In the first place, its uniform use in nearly all countries to represent either the Deity or the Devil, would indicate that Moses' serpent was designed to represent one or the other. And then, when Christ tells us that Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness as a type of him, (Christ,) we are no longer left in doubt as to which of the two (God or the Devil) it was intended to represent, and constitute an image of. No doubt remains of its being intended as an image or emblem of Deity, especially when we take into consideration the wonderful and God-like healing power ascribed to it, equal to that of the great idol, Dagon of the Babylonians, than which it certainly was no less an idol. Certainly it would be difficult to conceive of a deeper vein of idolatry running through the religion or mythological system of any nation, than that practically manifested or implied in this brazen serpent of Moses, or brazen image of God, as we may truthfully style it. I think no greater power was ever ascribed to any idol, nor more distinctive essential attributes of Deity. Then observe, what a glaring and high-handed infraction it involves of the first commandment: "Thou shalt not make unto thyself any graven image, nor the likeness of any thing that is in heaven above or in the earth beneath, or in the water under the earth.” Was not this brazen figure a likeness of something found both “in the earth beneath,” and “in the water under the earth?” Are not serpents numerous in both localities? They were especially so at that time. I ask then what does the setting up of the serpent image by Moses lack of constituting idolatry, and commandment breaking; but the name.

The origin of this brazen serpent’s business among the Jews, however, is not hard to trace out. The Egyptians, among whom they dwelt for several hundred years, entertained a very high respect, and we say for a portion of them, veneration for serpents, as did other Pagan nations; and made much use of them as emblems in their religious worship; as did also the Persians among whom the Jews or Israellites long sojourned. Indeed, Ophiology, or serpent worship, was prevalent at that time in nearly every nation on earth—that is so far as to use and venerate them as emblems of God and his various attributes. And the motives or reasons which led to the election of serpents for these purposes, is also easily explained. It was simply because its peculiar form or construction and character made it susceptible of supplying a great variety of emblems for most of the supposed leading attributes of the Deity.

We will here endeavor to present a brief explanation of the matter. In the first place, his entire wholeness or unitary construction of body, being without limbs or external parts, suggested the serpent as an appropriate emblem of the unitary conception of the Godhead. And then his movement without feet or legs, thus making no noise, was suggestive of the many, silent, noiseless, yet stupendous achievements of the Deity constantly going on throughout the Universe, as well as his supposed power to change his location without walking, without the use of feet and legs. And especially did this represent, in imagination, that beautiful, noiseless revolution of the planets in their orbits, at all times observable to the devout worshipper—these shining orbs being venerable and sacred as the homes of the lesser gods. And the innumerable, shining, dazzling scales of the serpent, following, as he moved silently onward, those two brilliant, visual orbs situated in the front of his head, were suggestive of the sun and moon leading the starry host through the heavens. By putting the end of his tail in his mouth, he formed a circle which was the chosen emblem of eternity. Mr. Higgins says, “The serpent was the emblem of eternity and immortality, and hence tempted the woman (in paradise) to bring forth immortal offspring.”

This was the doctrine taught in some of the very ancient religions and mythologies, and revives very forcibly the story of Adam and Eve, and the serpent in Eden. The typical or emblematical use of the serpent to represent immortality, was suggested by the annual casting off the epiphanies. The annual shedding of the skin of the serpent, which, however, always left him in possession of a new external covering, led many to believe that he never died, but was simply renewed or “regenerated,” and born again every year, while all could see in the process an illustration of the soul’s casting off the body in the act of being born into immortal life. Hence its use to represent eternity and immortality. The hissing of the serpent, it appears, was supposed or fancied to resemble “the still small voice of God.”

The Jewish prophet, Isaiah, seems to have entertained this superstitious, Pagan idea when he declared, “The Lord will hiss unto them from the ends of the earth, and he will hiss for the fly of Egypt.” This sounds rather snakish as well as heathenish. And Christ’s “still small voice” was doubtless derived from this serpentine source, as a “still voice” and a “small voice” were ascribed to serpents alone.

And more than all, the wonderful attractions or fascinative power of the serpent was beautifully suggestive of “the drawing chords of love,” which God was supposed to exercise towards all men. Christ declared, “If I be lifted up, (like Moses’ serpent in the wilderness,) I will draw all men unto me.” In like manner did Moses’ serpent draw men unto it, and all natural serpents do likewise when men present themselves within the sphere of their magical powers. And by nearly every Oriental nation reported in history, the serpent was supposed to possess wonderful sanative or healing powers. We are informed that the Egyptians were strong in this conception; and of them, in all probability, Moses, (who was "skilled in all the learning of the Egyptians,"—Acts vii. 23,) borrowed the idea of his brazen serpent to heal the snake-bitten Israelites. And we are told the Hindoos and Grecians, as well as a portion of the Egyptian nation, were, from a very early period of their history, in the habit of carrying a pole, during their travels, with a serpent entwined around it. It will be recollected that Moses' brass serpent was constructed upon a pole, and the emblem of the healing God Esquapius, according to Faber, was a serpent around a pole.

The word Seraphim, denoting an order of angels in the Hebrew theocracy, (see Isaiah vi.: 2—6,) and the word Serapis, the name of an Egyptian God, both appear to be derived from a serpent, and hence may be considered twin-brothers. And it is a singular circumstance, and one which must certainly be regarded as implying great veneration for the reptile or snakeish tribe, that Moses' foster mother, (Thermuthis,) according to Josephus, was named for a serpent—at least the Egyptians had a serpent by that name. We are told that the Hottentots from time immemorial have believed that bruising the head of the serpent with the heel will cure its bite, which calls to mind the seed of the woman bruising the serpent's head, as spoken of in Genesis iii. We have already elsewhere stated, that Eve is from Heva, Heva, or Eva, a serpent. And we may state here that some of the early Christians partook of this spirit of universal homage paid to snakes or serpents. One of the earliest sects of the Christian faith noticed in history, was called Ophiates, (which is from Ophis, a serpent,) on account of the homage paid to serpents.

We are also informed, that more than a thousand years ago, Christians were in the habit of carrying serpents with them in their travels in the manner we have described some of the Pagan nations as doing. And the walls of some of their oldest churches may now be seen decorated with the figures of serpents. So that even the Christian religion seems to have been a little snakish or serpentine in its character in earlier history. After reminding the reader that the serpent in the garden of Eden is by the Christian world identified with Satan, while Moses' serpent was an image or emblem of Jehovah, so far at least as appertained to his omnipotent healing energies and divine guardianship—we will remark that other and older nations, or religions, than the Jews and Christians, choose or made use of the serpent as a mystical figure or representation of both good and evil personified, that is, both the Deity and the Devil; or, as some expressed it, he was both creator and destroyer—creating himself anew, it was thought, every time he threw off his old exterior covering, and exhibited a new one, while his venomous bite destroyed whosoever made battle with him. And the venom in the fangs of the serpent being fatal, like that deadly moral poison instilled into the souls of mortals by the great adversary and arch-enemy of the human race, while his (the serpent's) resistless fascinating powers being supposed to resemble the wily insinuations and attractive or seductive allurements of the "Evil One," aptly and powerfully hinted the propriety of using the former to represent the latter—in other words, the propriety of identifying the Serpent and Satan together.

Hence the serpent became a Devil, or the Devil. Here then we have another example of the same name being anciently used in application to both God and the Devil, evidencing still further the truth of our proposition, that they were originally comprehended in one being, as all the names and titles of the Father, Son and Satan, which we have thus far enumerated, most clearly indicate. We have shown that the same names essentially, and in some cases literally, were applied indiscriminately to Jehovah, Jesus Christ and the Devil, from which we must certainly readily infer that they were originally considered one in essence—that is, were derived from the same imperfect perception, and consequently unitary conception of good and evil blended and confounded together.

This view of the case is corroborated by Christian testimony. The Rev. Mr. Rittrat (in his "Pagan Origin of Partialists' Doctrines," page 58,) quotes the Grecian poet, Euripides, as saying, "In no case good is separated from the evil. There must be a mixture of the one and of the other." The author adds: "This opinion is of immemorial antiquity, and has been held by theologians, legislators, poets and philosophers."
Thus the opinion is indicated to have been of general prevalence as well as of great antiquity, that all good and evil, (and of course, their personified representatives, God and Satan,) were co-essentially, at least, inseparably one, as we have indicated to have been the belief of “God's holy people.” Or, to state the thing more definitely, the Jews and their Pagan ancestors, if we recur to a very early date in human history, had no Devil, but comprehended all conceptions of good and evil in one being. So that when the perception of good and evil as distinct elements and characteristic qualities began to be made, and a distinctive line drawn between them, and as a consequence a new author hunted up or conjured up for the latter, his names and titles were borrowed from that compound being, Jehovah, who had hitherto been regarded as the common source and creator of both good and evil. It was not until man's moral perceptions had so far matured as to fancy a distinct line of separation or demarcation between virtue and vice, that a Devil, or personified evil genius, was created in man's imagination as the father, creator, or author of the latter. And even at this period their perceptions, or appreciation of a distinction between moral and immoral actions, were so weak and imperfect, that the new-fangled or newly created author of the latter still passed for a God-deserving homage, and not entirely devoid of moral qualities. In fact, some nations regarded him as but little inferior to God, (that is, the first or original God,) except with respect to power; and even Christians at this day concede him to be very near equal (if not in fact superior) in this respect, as he outgenerals God Almighty, and captures nearly all his subjects, according to their own showing, and the teaching of their own Bible. So near equal at first was the great evil genius to the God of infinite goodness, that he was by somnations regarded as a twin-brother. We will quote history in proof:

"With regard to evil spirits," says an author, "the growth of ideas seems to have been very gradual. In the beginning, there was no distinct and defined separation between good and evil in the minds of men. In Hindoo theology, the same God destroyed and reproduced, and was not supposed to be impelled by wicked motives in his work of destruction any more than nature is. In Egypt the two powers were divided, but the malignant Typhon was twin-brother of Osyrus the Good."

And it should be treasured in memory here, as will be observed from this quotation, that the first distinction or classification of good and evil, did not appertain to moral actions or the actions of men, but was restricted entirely to physical nature, the operations of the elements, etc. For a long period, the attention of mankind seems to have been wholly directed to the phenomena of the physical external world, and for a long time they rested in the opinion that the same being, the same God, who had created, also destroyed—the same being who sent down the genial warm rays of vernal spring, also sent the chilling, desolating blasts of winter; the same God who poured down the genial, gentle showers, to revive the drooping flowers, the withered grass, and parched up-dying cereals, also darted forth the forked lightning and blasting thunderbolt. But, at length, as men's observations grew broader, and their perceptions became more distinct, their cogitations ripened into the conviction or conclusion that there was too great a difference between the creative energies and the desolating or destroying effects of Nature, to be the product of one and the same being. And hence was originated the prime evil genius, or Evil One, to stand as sponsor or author of the evil actions, not of men, but of Nature—not of the moral world, but the natural world.

"It is impossible," says the Grecian philosopher and historian, Plutarch, in his 'Hermes,' "that one sole being, either good or bad, can be the author of all, for God can cause no evil."

And hence he tells us on the next page:

"We must admit two opposite causes, two contrary powers, leaning the one to the right and the other to the left. As the good cannot produce evil, then there is a principle causing evil as well as one causing good."

Thus reasoned the priest of Apollo and philosopher of Greece.
"We see by this passage," adds the Rev. Mr. Pitrat, "that the true origin of the two principles (God and Satan) proceeds from the difficulty which men in all times found in explaining by one sole cause, good and evil in nature."

Besides the cases and examples which we have just submitted, we might refer to the theories of various ancient nations to show that the original conception of a Devil or evil genius was that of a God ruling over a portion of the empire of Nature, or what was generally considered the adverse antagonistic or evil portion of Nature. In the ancient Chaldeo-Persian system, he held dominion over all the aquatic portion of animals and birds. In other countries his empire was more restricted.

Speaking of the ancients in general, Plutarch says:

"They believed in two Gods of different trades, if I may say so, who caused the one good and the other evil. They called the first, God by excellence, and the second, Demon."

Of the Persians, he says:

"They believed that the first was of the nature of light, and the second of that of darkness."

This accords exactly with the modern Christian theory.

"Among the Egyptians," he continues, "the first was called Osirus, and the second Typhon, eternal foe to the first."

To show that the notion or doctrine of a personal evil agent, the author and embodiment of all evil, is not a tenet peculiar to Christianity, but is of very ancient heathen origin, and prevailed very extensively in the world long before the era of Christianity, or advent of Christ, we will cite briefly a few other examples. Augustine tells us:

"The ancient Assyrians as well as the Persians, admitted two principles whom they honored as two Gods, the one good, and the other bad."

The Rev. Mr. Pitrat says:

"The inhabitants of Tolugomy, (India) believe that two principles govern the Universe, the one good, who is light, and the other bad, who is darkness."

He further says:

"The Peruvians (of South America) revered Pacha-Carnac as being a good God, and Cupai as being a bad God. The Charibs admitted two sorts of spirits, the one benevolent, who dwelt in Heaven, and the other evil, who hovers over us to lead us into temptation. The former, on the contrary, invite us to do good. Those of Terra Firma think that there is a God in Heaven—the sun. Besides, they admit a bad principle, who is the author of all evil."

The inhabitants of the kingdom of Pegu might be referred to as holding similar notions. Also, the Portuguese, who style the great evil genius, Demon. The Hottentots call the good principle "The Captain of Above," and the bad principle, "The Captain of Below." The latter is known as Touqua. The arch-demon of the natives of the island of Formoes, is Chang, and their supreme God, Isky. Among the inhabitants of the island of Teneriffe, the Devil is known by the name of Goyotta.

The people of Coterea believe in two Gods—one white and good, the other black and evil. Among the Scandinavians, the evil God is known by the name of Locke, and is believed to make perpetual war against the good God, (Thor.) In Brazil, his Satanic majesty passes by the name of Aguayan, while among the Tartars of Katschenzi he is known as Tous. The Devil of the Manicheans is Hyle, The Esquimaux, says the Rev. Mr. Pitrat, believe in a God supremely good, whom they call Ukouma, and in another Ouikan, who is the author of all evils, who causes the tempests and who capsizes the boats—verse 83. He says also, "The Siamese sacrifice to an evil spirit whom they consider as being the cause of all the misfortunes of mankind," which is similar to the idea of the Hottentots, who say that, "From him all evils flow to this world." I will add here that the Chaldeans had their evil stars, (as well as good ones,) which they believed were controlled by the Devil or evil spirits. And thus, says Plutarch, "The dogma of two principles (two Gods) was admitted by nearly all nations."

3
Thus we perceive that the most ancient notion of a Devil or Evil Genius was, First, That of a being antagonistic to God, and yet himself a God, the two possessing many similar characteristics and on nearly an equal footing with respect to power and jurisdiction, being in Persia “own brothers,” twins. Second, The sphere of his operations was at first restricted in most theogonies to physical nature. Third, He was graciously gotten up to save God from the stigma of being considered the author of evil, a logical deduction from the premises that a good and pure being could not be the same, or author of that which was not good—or anything evil. A further research into the great arcana of Nature would have taught them that all evil, both moral and physical, is simply a natural concomitant of the crude germinal immature state of nature, which will disappear as the world matures and ripens into perfection. Fourth, It will be observed, that nothing is said about the smoking pit or infernal regions, as it had not at that time been discovered or thought of. A Columbus had not as yet sailed in that direction. The respective thrones of the two omnipotent Gods was situated in the stars or among the elements. The good God some placed in the sun, while his rival antagonist was consigned to the moon or some of the planets, as all theological conceptions at that period were connected with the starry heavens, more or less. The distance of the two kingdoms apart is not known. In Persia, they were situated so near together, that Mithra the Mediator, or as Plutarch calls him, the Inner-Mediator, being situated between them, could transmit messages from one to the other, and interfered or intermediate to settle their difficulties and disputes, from which circumstance he received the name of Mediator. It will be recollected that the two kingdoms in the Christian system were situated so near together that Dives and Lazarus, or Dives and Abraham conversed together, though it must have required halloving on the highest key to be heard across the “impassable gulf” situated between them.

That the Devil, Satan, or “the Old Serpent,” was at first a coequal God, and not invested with the odious repulsive character with which we now find him represented by the Christian world, we find further evidence of in the ancient diagrams used in physical astronomy. By examining the astronomical charts, maps, and text books used in our schools and colleges, it will be found that the Serpent is pictured under the two-fold aspect or character of “A Good God” and “An Evil God.” In the first place, we find him represented under the name of “The Hydra,” extending through and including three constellations, that of the Crab, the Lion and the Virgin, thus representing the three summer months, June, July and August. And then we find another diagram of the Serpent in another part of the heavens under the name of “The Scorpion,” inaugurating the winter season—inaugurating the dreaded insidious October, the harbinger of cold and dreary and evil Winter. And thus he was used to represent or symbolize both good and evil; which, when personified, were God and the Demon. We can easily understand, therefore, why Moses and the Israelites, as well as the Egyptians and Hindoos, had both a good Serpent and an evil Serpent—the latter figuring in Eden, the former constructed of brass and displayed on a pole. And the statement or theological proposition, that the great Emperor or “Charge d’Affairs” of the smoky regions was once considered a God, is still further confirmed by the fact that he was formerly in several religions a coequal member of the Trinity, “hail fellow well met” in the triad of Gods. The third member of the Trinity in India, Egypt, Persia, and I believe Mexico, also, was a representation and personification of evil in their most ancient legends, which furnishes evidence indisputable, that they stood in the relation and occupied the position of Gods. We may legitimately conceive that although the character of the two Gods at first stood nearly parallel with respect to moral attributes, yet as time rolled on and developed and matured the moral perception of the people and capacitated them to demarcate or discriminate good and evil, they would in imagination see the two Gods diverging morally wider and wider apart and becoming more and more hostile to each other, until finally they would become, and did become, directly, antipodes, and in deadly array, strife, and opposition to each other in nearly every conceivable respect, though in all the change the Evil God did not lose his power or sway. He still retained almost uncurtailed the omnipotent power with which he was at first invested, though his tenure or jurisdiction was gradually removed from the physical or natural to the moral world, so that the seat of his empire is now in the minds of men, and not among the physical elements or planets as formerly. Such has been the work of man’s imagination.

CHAPTER VII.

The Christian theory, as we have briefly stated on a previous occasion, so far from restricting the power or empire of the Evil One, grants him the lion’s share; allowing him to carry off the major portion of the human family, having first permitted him to construct a broad gauge or “broad road” for the purpose, and “many there be who go in thereat,” while they have the road leading to the other kingdom so very narrow that “few there be who find it.” And thus they permit the “Prince of Darkness” to carry off to his subterranean empire nearly the whole retinue of souls which God had created for the purpose of his own glory; and thus thwart the main object of creation. We observe, from the authorities quoted, that the perception of physical evil or natural evil preceded that of the perception and recognition of moral evil; and that physical evils first recognized were those produced by the violence of the elements and the rotation of the seasons. Winter, with her cold, bleak drapery, and her wide-spread desolation and destruction, was in the estimation or imagination of the ancients, the principal and most prolific source of evil—i.e., the God of Winter. The primitive inhabitants of the earth, as heretofore intimated, having noticed that during six months of the year the powers at work in Nature were engaged in fructifying, vivifying, beautifying, producing, etc., and that during the other six months some apparently adverse power arrested, blasted, and destroyed those desirable operations and their results, they hence imagined two contrary hostile powers engaged in perpetual war against each other. And as the six Spring and Summer months were attended with almost perpetual sunshine, and the growth and production of fruits and flowers, and edible vegetables; such things as were calculated to supply their natural wants, they were regarded as constituting, and became known as, “the true kingdom,” or “kingdom of Heaven,” while the Winter months were denominated “the kingdom of Darkness.”

The former was also called “the kingdom of the Sun,” or God, who dwelt in the sun. This imaginary entrance to the kingdom, which it was supposed opened to the sun as he left the tropic of Cancer to travel back to the south, was called “the gates of Heaven,” while the fancied passage through the other tropics constituted “the gates of Hell.” At the first stood the Lamb, the zodiacal sign of Spring, to usher in the glorious sun, or sun-god, as he drove up with his fiery steed to the portals of Paradise in early Spring. At the latter stood the hideous Scorpion, Dragon, or Devil, ready to drag everything accessible to his clutches or power, down into his bottomless pit, at one time hitching his tail over and pulling down one-third of the stars. Hence, you will discover, that the Devil is from above and not from below, though he descends below every six months into Hades, as will be hereafter explained. You will find by consulting your almanac, that Aries, the lamb or ram, is the zodiacal or astronomical sign for March, the first Spring month. And the Scorpion was (though the Eagle is now) the sign for October, the first Winter month, (in the bisectional division of the year,) that is, by dividing the year into two seasons of six months each. St. John (in his Revelations xii.,) speaks of the Dragon having power to hurt the five months; and astronomically speaking, he does hurt the vegetable productions of the five principal prolific months of the year with a vengeance. And St. John’s monster, with the seven heads and ten horns, may find a solution in astronomy, or astro-theology, by assuming the seven heads to be the seven Summer months, (as some nations divided the year in this way,) and duplicating the five Winter months for the horns. And then the story of the Dragon "pursuing the woman to destroy her male child," finds an easy explanation here. Turn to your almanacs, and you will notice that the Dragon or Scorpion is in pursuit of the woman Virgin sure enough, being the next sign in order in the zodiac; or direct your eyes to the heavens in a cloudless night, you will observe that just after the old maid (a virgin with a child in her arms as the Persians represented her) rises above the horizon in the east, up comes the old Scorpion called a Serpent, among the Persians; a Dragon in Phœnicia; and Draco among the Romans, which is the Latin for Dragon. Virgil calls him Maximus Anguis, (the Great Snake.) (See Georgius 8.) The Great Dragon, according to astronomical diagrams, is actually after the woman (Virgin) and her child, and was for thousands of years B. C., and until modern astronomers caught him, bound him, and cast him into the bottomless pit, and substituted the eagle in his place.

How easy it is to imagine, when, by observing in the almanac, that the Dragon or Scorpion (the same thing) is the next sign after the Virgin, that he is chasing her through the sky! And it may be more than fancy to associate the woman and Serpent here with the same in Eden, wherein a serpent is represented as tempting a woman (Mother Eve) to masticate a pippin with her new incisors and molars, which never before had been used. And as we find a man also (Aquarius) among the signs of the zodiac, this may be Father Adam; for it is more agreeable, not to say honorable, to fancy or conceive of our first parents being formed among the stars, than in a mud-hole, according "As the Lord said unto Moses." The prophet Daniel speaks of a great contest between a ram and a goat, (see chapter iv.,) and both of these you will find represented in our zodiac and apparently (to a fanciful imagination) chasing each other through the heavens. And again, St. John's marvelous figure of "a woman clothed with the sun, the moon under her feet, and a crown of twelve stars upon her head," (Rev. xii.,) is easily understood when viewed through an astronomical mirror. More appropriately may the astronomical virgin woman be said to be clothed with the sun, than could be said of any other of the twelve signs of the zodiac, judging from her situation among the signs and her relative position to the sun. There she stands, right in the focus of the sun's rays in August, the hottest month in the year, and thus is clothed with the sun more brilliantly than that of any other sign. Of course the moon is under her feet, while the twelve months of the year, or the twelve signs of the zodiac form her crown of twelve stars. Now mark! we are not becoming "wise above what is written," for these things are all written, not merely in your school-books, but in your almanacs, copied from the skies.

The sun's crossing the equinoctial line in March, was an event of great moment to some of the ancient nations, as it ushered in the thousand blessings of Spring and Summer. We can't wonder, therefore, that the cross became a sacred emblem in nearly all the religions of the earth. Now let it be noted here, that the scenes which I have depicted as occurring in the starry heavens, are not mere fanciful pictures of my own conjuring up, but are a matter of actual record in the histories or sacred books of Persia, Egypt, India and Rome. Take for example the story, or allegory, of a woman pursued by a Dragon, Serpent or Devil, etc., (all one according to St. John, the Revelator and mystagogue). This is not only found substantially related in several mythological histories, but was in Persia represented on the celestial globes. And Kircher, Seldon, Eben Ezral, Manobius, and Scaliger, (Note ad. Manil, page 341,) furnish evidence of its being referred to in astronomical works of several nations.

It will be recollected that St. John describes the woman as being clothed with the sun and chased by a Dragon or Serpent, (for both terms are used, see Revelations xii.,) which seeks to devour her child, and pours out a flood of water after her as she flees into the wilderness to save her child. In the Grecian version of the story, Latona, being about to be confined, flies into a desert isle to save her child from Python, the Serpent or Dragon; while the Persians, according to Scaliger, had the virgin woman represented on their astronomical CHAPTER VIII.

HELL FIRST INSTITUTED IN THE SKIES—ITS ORIGIN AND DESCENT FROM ABOVE.

Strange as it may seem, it is nevertheless true, that even the Christian fabled Hell may be found (like most other of their venerated and Pagan-derived myths and mysteries) among the stars, though they generally point the other way, or in the other direction, when they wish to indicate its locality, not reflecting that Dives and Lazarus would not have conversed together while one was in Heaven and the other in Hell, unless these two places had occupied contiguous localities—at least, been situated near together, and this was as likely above, as below. The word astronomers use to indicate the sun in its highest point of ascension, is perihelion. Now you may notice there is a Hell in this word; (peri-hel-ion,) at least it can be traced to Hell, or Hell to it. Helion, the last part of this word, was pronounced by the Greeks Elias, and is synonymous with Acheron, which is generally translated Hell. So that we have “peri,” which means roundabout, and “helion,” Hell—that is, the sun round about Hell. We cannot think it strange, therefore, that Hell is a pretty warm place. And let me admonish the reader not to be alarmed if we should find good old Elias in Hell, the same who appeared with Moses at Christ's transfiguration. For it is a fact that Elias (the Greeks using the aspirate instead of the H) is about synonymous, as I have already stated, with the Greek Acheron, which is rendered Hell by translators. Hence, it follows, that Elias means Hell, if not Hell-fire, which will account for his face shining with such lustre at the transfiguration.

And Hades, or Ades, (for the Greek alphabet has no H,) may be traced with still less difficulty to the sun for its origin. And Ades, it is well-known, frequently occurs in the Greek New Testament for Hell, and is so rendered in English. Well, now, Ades analyzed is Ad, an Ammorian name for God or God-sun, and as the fire; and hence means "the God-fire," or "sun-fire." It was the belief of some of the ancient nations, (the Greeks, for instance,) that Heaven and Hell were nearly contiguous, being separated only by an impassable gulf, and both, as some believe, are located in the sun, though more generally the former only was located there.

CHAPTER IX.

ORIGIN OF THE TRADITION RESPECTING "THE BOTTOMLESS PIT."

The "bottomless pit" had a different locality and a different origin from that of Hades, or Hell. Its geographical position was a fancied one beyond the South Pole. This location grew out of the persuasion of some of the ancients, that their dreaded and devastating winters came from that quarter, and hence "the Evil God" who produced the winters (known as "the Winter God") had the seat of his empire there. A circumstance which facilitated or contributed to this superstition, was that of its being beyond the purview or reach of the natural vision. And as it was apparently situated below them, and they could not conceive of its having any bottom, they hence called it the "bottomless pit." Winter was supposed to come from the South, because it was observed to come upon them as the sun receded southward, which some imagined had some agency in sending the winter. And the sun going down below the horizon out of sight in the Arctic regions so as to result in darkness, was supposed or fancied to die, but it was born again or arose from the dead when it reappeared in Spring or arose again above the horizon. And as it approached the "gates of Spring," "the Lamb of God," or the Lamb of March gathered up the "sins of the world," or the sins of Winter, and bore them away. And thus was realized, astronomically, not only "the Lamb of God taking away the sins of the world," but also the death and resurrection of the Son of God, or the sun-God, more properly. While the South Pole was the great "bottomless pit," the fancied abode of demons and devils, and also the synonym of everything evil, the North Pole as the supposed residence of "the Good God," was called "the Mountain of the Lord"—as nearly every nation had its "Mountain of the Lord" or "Holy Mountain."

CHAPTER X.

ORIGIN OF THE BELIEF IN A "LAKE OF FIRE AND BRIMSTONE."

The fact has been disclosed by the foregoing historical exegesis or sketch of Satanic biography that the feats, capers, infernal operations of the Devils, Demons and Evil Genii of the Oriental nations, were at first confined to the skies or starry heavens. But it is important to observe that in the course of time their sphere of operations was transferred to the earth, and finally to "the underground world," beneath the earth, long prior to the dawn of the Christian era. According to the legends of the mythological era of Oriental Egypt, when the Great Dragon, Serpent, or Devil, Python of Typhon was conquered by the archangel of Apollo, and hurled down headlong from the battlements of Heaven, (and thus became a fallen angel,) he was thrown, body, hoofs and horns into lake Sirbon, or Sirbonis, situated at the foot of Mount Osmius. This lake was chosen as the place of consignment for the great Arch-Demon or Arch-Enemy of the human race, because it had become a haunt for the most weird and wild imagination, and a focus for the most disagreeable and detestable association of ideas that ever nestled in the brain of a superstitious people. Hence it became universally execrated. Bearing these facts in mind, let us observe that when the Nile overflowed its banks as it did semi-annually and spread over the country for many miles around, it reached this lake Sirbonis, and submerged it with its putrid waters. And as it receded back into its channel by the subsidence of the current it deposited in the lake a great amount of debris, putrefying vegetation, and nauseating substances of various kinds. And it is a matter of fact or fable, that upon its stagnant waters, there accumulated a scum bearing a strong analogy in taste, color and smell to that of brimstone or sulphur. In fact, some authors speak of it as being veritably and truly brimstone in solution—i.e., sulphur. And travelers and historians tell us that when the sun shone upon this brilliant mirror like a floating substance, it presented the appearance of being on fire, and from this circumstance was called “The lake of fire and brimstone,” while the steam, gas, vapor or miasma created and eliminated by the action of the sun upon the deposits of mud and slime around the margin of the lake, ascending upward, formed the imaginary smoke of the imaginary place (as it was fabled to be) of endless torment, which from time immemorial has been the source of fear, false and fiction, to the ignorant, credulous and superstitious people of various countries, and which now causes the pious Christian to “work out his salvation with fear and trembling.” This lake being situated in a warm climate, became the habitation of various kinds of aquatic or amphibious monsters and noxious vermin, which the imagination and credulity of an age of superstitious fear could easily transform into “Imps of Darkness,” or evil genii and frightful hobgoblins, while the many hideous noises issuing unceasingly from the mouths of the numerous denizens of this “frightful waste of waters,” augmented and heightened by the glare of the host of Jack-o’lanterns, Will-o’wises, and other nocturnal lights peculiar to the moist or humid atmosphere of warm climates, finished the imaginary picture of a Demon’s home and a Devil’s Hell. And as the inundation of the river, together with the overflow of the lake, often produced a great amount of damage, destroying cattle and other domestic animals, dwellings, etc., it was very easy and very natural for the childish superstition which held supreme sway three thousand five hundred years ago, to believe that that great giant foe of human bliss and human beatitude, the imaginary Typhon had something to do in producing these calamitous and direful events, more especially as it was assumed as an axiom indisputable, that “the righteous Apollo, the God of the skies,” was too transcendentally good, too merciful and too benignant to his creatures, to have any agency in such business. And here it may be mentioned, that it was currently reported, that human beings residing in the vicinity of the lake were occasionally borne away in the clutches of the hydra-headed Typhon “to parts unknown,” to be disposed of in accordance with his diabolical designs and infernal purposes, and that the smell of brimstone encountered upon their receding pathway, disclosed unmistakably the damnable fate of these luckless human victims. This tradition brings to mind the story of the Hibernian, who, while in America, hearing the funeral of a priest spoken of, remarked, “We do not go to the trouble of burying priests and pickpockets in our country.” “What do you do with them when they die?” inquired a bystander, “Well, when they give up the ghost, we lay out the defunct bodies in an open room, and the next morning they are gone, and nothing more is observable but a strong scent of brimstone in the room, and the mark of diabolical footsteps on the floor. This is all we know about the matter.”

We have, then, fully disclosed in the foregoing sketch of Satanic history, the origin of the tradition nearly four thousand years old of a “lake of fire and brimstone,” with its imaginary potenti—i.e., it being originally nothing more nor less than lake Sirbonis with its fancy-hatched ruler, the redoubtable long-tailed, double-headed Typhon. “He who hath ears to hear let him hear,” and no longer tremble with fear when he encounters the smell of brimstone. The tradition respecting “The worm that never dies,” (see Mark ix: 44.) had its origin likewise in Egypt, and started from the circumstance of a gnawing, stinging worm which infests that country, (a fire-eater by tradition,) being never known to die, simply because, as later researches show, it burrows down into the soil before it dies; hence, not being seen after its death, it was supposed to be immortal. It was found within the precincts of the "Flery Lake," and was supposed to be one of the infernal agents in the employ of his Satanic majesty, the horned, iron-hoofed Typhon.

CHAPTER XI.

WHERE IS HELL? ANCIENT TRADITIONS RESPECTING ITS CHARACTER AND LOCATION.

St. John tells us (see Rev. xxi: 10) he saw the New Jerusalem descended from God out of Heaven. And we have shown by the previous historical disclosures of this work, that Hell also descended from above; being a much older institution than the New Jerusalem, we suggest the propriety of styling it "the Old Jerusalem." We have followed it in its descent to the earth. We will now trace it to its present locality, "the underground world," whither it was removed several thousands years ago. Various and multifarious were the notions among the ancients with respect to the substantial whereabouts of the fabled Hell—the after death depository for wicked souls. Some fancied its location in the sun, others referred its geographical position to the moon; others again imagined its unquenchable fires raged in the bowels of the earth, but the opinion finally became somewhat prevalent that it was hung or planted under the earth. Mr. Higgins' remarks relative to the ancient tradition with respect to its locality, that "the lower or southern hemisphere which is hid in darkness in winter, and which is always attended with darkness, decay, disease and death, and every kind of discomfort, became imaginarily controlled by, and consequently the abode of evil beings, now known as demons, devils, etc., and the abode itself as Hell, while the upper hemisphere was the abode of celestial beings, as gods, angels, etc." And no less various were the notions with respect to its character, than with respect to its locality. Mr. Higgins shows that many believed it to be a place of "utter darkness," and a very cold place. This was perhaps before its combustible faggots had been lighted up or set on fire. The name for Hell among the ancient Celts was Ifuein, which means "cold climate," which shows that they also regarded it as a cold country. The ancient Gauls and Britons, Goths and Germans, taught that Hell was a place of "dreadful darkness," and was infested with venomous reptiles, ferocious beasts and wicked spirits. The Egyptian astrologers taught that Hell was a "bottomless pit," the damned inmates being suspended on hooks fixed in the sides of the pit, though many of the natives of that country held to a "lake of fire and brimstone." The ancient Buddhists and Mexicans believed in a Hell of "unquenchable fire prepared for the Devil and his angels." Here it may be remarked, that the inhabitants of cold countries, generally, taught that Hell was a hot place—a place of "glowing, melting heat," while on the other hand, the inhabitants of warm climates taught that the place of consignment for the wicked was "as cold as a mountain of ice." So that all who were captured and carried away to Pluto's realms by old "Plug Ugly," underwent a change of climate, whether they hailed from the torrid or frigid zone.

CHAPTER XII.

ORIGIN OF THE NOTION OF MAN'S EVIL THOUGHTS BEING PROMPTED BY A DEVIL—SATANIC AGENCY HAVING BEEN PERMANENTLY RESTRICTED TO THE UNPROPITIOUS PHENOMENA, THE EXTERNAL WORLD.

Here we wish it distinctly noted as an important historical fact, that the conception of a Devil and a Hell long existed before the remotest idea was entertained that either had anything to do with or any connection with, punishment in a future life. Both had a fabled existence in the external world among the physical elements long before the Devil was made an agent of punishment, or Hell a place of punishment for the wicked after death, in the imaginations of the people. Indeed, we are credibly informed, that the Manicheans long believed Hell to be the blissful abode of the righteous. The first conception of evil and malevolent beings, as we have just intimated, restricted their sphere of operations and machinations to the physical world, to the violent storms and destructive elements and all the unprophetic events of nature. In their utter ignorance of natural causes, a superstitious age would naturally assign such things to imaginary beings. But no thought seems to have been entertained, that the malicious denizens of the "Evil World," had anything to do with the thoughts or actions of men—not even the most wicked and vicious; for the reason that man's moral perceptions were not at that period sufficiently developed to observe any distinction between good and bad actions. The nature and effects of immoral actions had not been as yet discovered; everything in the Jewish Bible was ascribed to God. Their perception of any distinction or line of demarcation between virtue and vice ran too low (if they possessed any) to incite even the thought that any actions or line of conduct that any man could pursue, could be sufficiently bad or criminal to require any punishment to be sent after him, and inflicted on him after he left the world. Nor had the priesthood as yet acquired sufficient ascendancy over the people to lead them to invent a Hell to punish delinquent pew rentees or tithe payers, as we shall hereafter show it to be an institution of their getting up. As man's moral perceptions grew and expanded, and ripened into the conviction that some actions were good and some bad, to such a degree of difference as to require a separate and distinct source for their origin, he began to look around him to find a way of accounting for each class of actions separately. And as the heavens above and the great imaginary abyss below the earth were already peopled with imaginary beings of different and opposite characters, it was easy—it was natural to begin to associate these beings with the actions of men, and to conclude that all good actions were incited by good beings or by "the good God," as they styled the Supreme Being, and all evil and immoral actions by the "evil God," "the Master Mischief-Maker." And the conception in this respect seems to have been at first wholly anthropomorphic and unspiritual, or sensuous—at least local and circumscribed. The Devil, it was thought, could not influence the actions of men unless bodily present with them. He was not then, as now, omnipresent, and invested with the omnipotent power to tempt or seduce millions at a time, though scattered all over the globe at an immeasurable distance both from him and from each other. The Hindoos, Buddhists, Burmese, and some of the Chinese taught that the malignant maleficent beings, called devils or demons, entered the body, head and heels, into the minds of men, and from there rolled out their evil thoughts and prompted them to vicious actions. Most of the ancient religious teachers of the Oriental schools taught that "old king Satan" was supplied with a numerous train or retinue of inferior sub¬devils, who acted as sub-agents in the work of decoying souls and leading them into perdition. The Hindoo Bible, (the Shasta,) more than three thousand years old, teaches this doctrine, and tells us that the demi-devils (or Devas, as it styles them,) (lacking but one syllable of making the Christian's Devil,) were completely under the control of the Master Demon or Devil-in-Chief, and entered the minds of men at his bidding; but that they could be ejected at any time by exorcisms and the prayers of priests, especially if the patients' pockets were well lined with "filthy lucre," which often seemed to operate as a powerful charm in the way of dispelling or expelling the diabolical intruders from "the inner man," and thenceforth keeping them at a respectable distance.

Now, the foregoing notions of the Orientalists seem to be fully recognized and acknowledged by Christ and his Apostles as a part of the Christian "plan of salvation." No less than nine times is Christ represented as "casting out devils," and on several occasions as having a familiar chat with them. At one time he is said to have ousted seven at a clip. They were tumbled nolens volens, pull merr, out of a respectable Christian lady whom we would naturally have supposed was too virtuous and too high-minded to entertain such "low company." [For a fuller history and elucidation of this subject, see the chapter in our large work headed, "Devil Obsession, and Devil Expulsion—its History and Oriental Origin."]
CHAPTER XIII.

THE CHRISTIANS' DEVIL—WHENCE IMPORTED OR BORROWED.

We have stated in a previous chapter, that the primitive Jews did not teach the doctrine of future endless punishment—that they evidently knew nothing of the doctrine until after their exile to Babylon, as we do not find the doctrine taught in any of their writings penned previous to that era. The first traces of it are found in the "lesser" or later prophets, now termed Apocryphal, and the Talmuds or Mishra written but a few centuries prior to the Christian era. And from these sources, in all probability, the founders of the Christian religion derived, in part, their doctrines and traditions on this subject. Though we find the after-death primitive doctrines of the New Testament are an admixture of Babylonian or Chaldaic, Egyptian and Syrian traditions on this subject, and all conform approximately to the still more ancient Buddhists' doctrine of future rewards and punishments. The Egyptian Devil was a huge monster, panoplied with horns, and "shod" with hoofs, a formidable tail of unmentionable, if not immeasurable length, which we supposed served as a kind of balance-wheel as he "flew his giddy rounds amongst the sons and daughters of men," though it appears he had doffed his tail for the convenience of inserting his legs into a pair of unmentionables or breeches, that he might join the respectable society which he accompanied as they went to attend a picnic at the house of Job, in Chaldea. We frequently hear instances spoken of, of "a descent from the sublime to the ridiculous;" but here is a case of the ascent from the ridiculous to the sublime, presented in the account of Satan's becoming a "hail fellow well met" with the sons of God, as they journeyed to visit and make important negotiation with that "servant of the Lord," Job. He must have felt honored and exalted in the highest degree by such a peculiar favor being vouchsafed to his majesty.

We have stated in effect that the founders of the Christian religion (perhaps while yet Jews) obtained their model for a Devil from the Babylonians during their bondage in that country. It is well to remark, however, that Christians have invested his long-tailed majesty also with some of the characteristics of the Egyptian Devil, as we find in the illustrated works of the early Christians, he is represented with horns, hoofs, and a rear appendage of lawless dimensions. We will conclude our answer to the question, "Where did the Christian world obtain their Devil?" by presenting an extract from an able writer on the subject, who tells us, "The ancient Egyptians had a Devil called Typhon, afterwards engrafted into the Greek mythology, as the author of evil. The later Jews, who became followers of Christ and the founders of the Christian system, admired the idea of having such a fearful, ugly Devil, (as he had horns, hoofs and tail,) and hence engrafted his monstrous physical proportions on to the idea of a Devil they had obtained in Babylon. At the same time, they gave him the malignant and ferocious character of Beelzebub, the Devil of Syria." And thus the question is explicitly answered.

CHAPTER XIV.

THE VARIOUS AFTER-DEATH PUNITIVE TERMS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT, OF ORIENTAL ORIGIN.

It only now remains to be shown that the writers of the Christian New Testament must have copied from the ancient Pagans, as they have all their variously modified forms or modes of future endless post mortem punishment. In fact, the whole train of ideas and doctrines, apparently, both of a Devil and a Hell, which we find incorporated in the Christian Scriptures as a part, seemingly, of the Gospel plan of salvation, are found likewise in the Pagan systems of mythology long ante-dating the inception of the Christian religion. The Bible of the Christian speaks of—

1. A Hell of darkness.—[Matt. viii : 22, and Jude xiii.]
2. A Hell of light—at least of fire, which must emit light.—Matt. v : 23.
3. A Hell in which both body and soul are destroyed.—[Matt. x : 28.
4. A Hell in which the soul is eternally punished.—[Matt. xxv : 46.
7. An upper (implicitly) and a lower Hell.—[Psalms lxxxi : 13.
8. A Hell, or lake of fire and brimstone.—[Rev. xiv : 10.
11. The chains of Hell, or the chains in Hell.—[2 Peter ii : 4.

Now, an examination of mythological history will show that all these ideas or conceptions, are of Pagan origin, together with the various Scripture notions and myths appertaining to a Devil or devils, such as:

1. His being the author of evil.
2. His leading or decoying men into vice.
3. And this for the purpose of afterwards destroying or punishing them.
4. His taking up his abode in the minds or souls of men, with his troop or train of inferior second class Devils or evil spirits.
5. The savours and saints casting them out of the temple of the "inner man."

6. Their change of residence from the souls of men to the souls and stomachs of swine and other animals.

7. Also, the various metamorphoses or changes of the Devil-in-Chief, by which he sometimes appears as a crawling or creeping serpent—
8. Then as a roaring lion.
9. At other times as a flying dragon.
10. And occasionally as an "angel of light," etc., etc.

Some of these notions or conceptions have already been traced to Pagan origin. The origin of others will be indicated as we proceed to speak of the several Pagan doctrines or myths appertaining to future endless punishment, as compared with those found in the Christian Scriptures.

The Rev. Mr. Pittat, in the work before mentioned, tells us, (page 177):

"The Pagans believed that in their Hell, there were two principal abodes, (an upper and a lower Hell,) the one expiatory, in which the common wicked were detained and tortured until they had expiated their faults, and been purfied enough to be admitted into the Elysium, (Heaven,) and the other the filthiest, the darkest, and the deepest cavern, where great criminals were burnt and excruciated endlessly, and without any hope, cessation or relief in their torments."

The same author adds:

"According to Plato, (400 B. C.,) the dead who have been guilty of murder, sacrilege, and other enormous crimes, shall be endlessly miserable in the Tartarus. (Hell.) Those whose crimes have not been so great, shall be detained therein for a year."—[Page 211.

In the above extracts we have the Christian Bible doctrine of an "upper and a lower Hell," a "purgatory," an "endless Hell," a "fiery Hell," etc. Again, our author says:

"The Pagans believed that there was a gate to their Hell, at which, (in Roman mythology,) the frightful Tisphon watched day and night, 'seeking whom he might devour,' and that Lucifer holds the keys of the gates of Hell."—[Page 175.

Here are disclosed several other Christian ideas of Hell.

"The Pagans believed that the deepest darkness reigned in their Hell."—[Page 178.
Here is the Christian's Hell of "outer darkness." Speaking of the Tartarus, our author says:

"There are incessantly heard the rattle of chains dragged by wretched victims, their groans, and the strokes of the lashes that tear their flesh."—[Page 134.]

Here are the chains spoken of in 2 Peter ii: 4. The Hindoo Vedas, (written before Moses, according to Mr. Dow,) informs us that:

"Yama, (the just judge, or 'judge of quick and dead,') delivers over the trembling wicked souls to evil spirits, in order to expose them to be lacerated by demons, or gnawed by fiery worms, or plunged into pits of flame."

Here we have presented "the bottomless pit," where "the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." We might continue to trace out the parallel in every minute particular. But to present a full history or description of the numerous doctrines, notions, conceptions or myths, of the ancient superstitious Pagans relative to the after-death punishment of the wicked in Hell, Hades, Tartarus, Infernus, Gehenna, Tophet, Sheol, or the Fiery Pit, together with the various operations and machinations of Devils, Demons, Dragons, Serpents, Satana, Furies, Evil Spirits, or Wicked Genii, which were in vogue, and currently believed thousands of years ago, when the deepest, darkest, and direst superstitions enveloped the human mind—a considerable portion of which we find copied into or rehearsed in the Christian Scriptures—such an exposition would require a large volume. We will conclude this branch of our subject by two quotations from two poets, one Pagan, and the other Christian, and observe the similarity of their train of ideas in attempting to depict the underground world. Hear the Grecian poet Virgil, 600 B. C.:

"At Hell's dread mouth a thousand monsters wait, Grief weeps and vengeance bellows in the gate:
Fierce, formidable fiends the portals keep,
With pain, toil, death, and death's half-brother, sleep.
Here stretched on iron beds the furies roar,
And close by, Lerna's hissing monster stands,
Briareus, and all around
Fierce harpies screamed, and direful gorgons frowned;
Here rolls the roaring, flaming tide of Hell,
And thundering rocks the fiery torrents swell."

Now let us observe how successfully the Christian Pollok has taken lessons in the Pagan school of infernal ideas, and how exactly he makes the Christian theory of Hell accord with that of the ancient heathen:

"Beneath I saw a lake of burning fire,
Toasting with tides of dark tempestuous wrath,
And now wild shouts and wailings dira,
And shrieking infants swell the dreadful choir.
Here sits in bloody robes the fury fell,
By night and day to watch the gates of Hell,
Here you begin terrific groans to hear,
And sounding lashes rise upon the ear;
On every side the damned their fitters grate,
And curse 'mid clanking chains their wretched fate.'"

I leave the reader to compare the effusions of the ancient heathen bard with those of the Christian, more than two thousand years later, and to determine for himself which is the most Paganish or fiendish. The proposition which sustains or maintains the striking resemblance in the post mortem punishment theory of the ancient heathen nations and those of the Christian Bible, written at a later period, is sustained by even Christian writers, of which we will present one proof. The well-known popular (English) Christian clergyman, Mr. McKnight, in speaking of Christ's parable of the rich man and Lazarus, says:

"It must be acknowledged that our Lord's descriptions are not drawn from the writings of the Old Testament, but have a remarkable affinity to the description which the Grecian poets have given. They, as well as our Lord, represent the abodes of the blessed as lying contiguous to the regions of the damned, and separated only by a great impassable river, or deep gulf, situated in such a condition that the ghosts could talk from one to another from its opposite banks. The parable says the souls of wicked men are tormented in flames. The Grecian mythologist tells us they lie in Phlegethon, the river of fire, where they suffered torments."

"He who hath ears to hear let him hear" how a Christian divine thus affirms to the truth of our proposition, that the Christian's Hell is a transcript from Pagan tradition of heathen mythology.

CHAPTER XV.

THE DOCTRINE OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT OF HEATHEN AND PRIESTLY ORIGIN, INVENTED BY PAGAN PRIESTS.

The conception of future punishment, or rather the thought of turning it to practical account in the way of influencing the actions and conduct of men, seems to have been first suggested to the officiating priests of ancient Egypt by the peculiar circumstances attending their mode of interring the dead. We are told that a certain cemetery belonging to one of the principal cities of Egypt, being situated at a considerable distance from the town, required the river Styx to be crossed in order to reach it; and before it could be crossed, the ferryman (Charon) must be satisfied by the payment of his fee. But in numerous cases, the surviving relatives were too poor to raise it. In such cases, the fee had to be paid by the public, or if not thus paid, the body of the defunct was thrown into the ditch to be devoured by dogs and vermin, or cast into the river Acheron, which means Hell—at least Christian writers so interpret and translate it. Thus, this river was made the receptacle of the bodies of those who, on account of their vices, were excluded (so the multitude were taught) from the common obsequies of the dead and the favors of Heaven, or rather its Supreme Ruler Jove, while the righteous, if poor, were always honored with a decent burial at the public expense. To decide whether the defunct had led a life sufficiently virtuous to deserve an honorable interment, men were chosen called "Episcopes," from the Greek epí (over) and skopeo, to see or look, and thus literally means to see over or oversee. And thus originated the term and the sacerdotal order of Episcopacy now found in the Methodist and other churches. For the accommodation of this instituted order of priesthood, towers or buildings were erected which are now known as temples and churches. And this dates the origin of the priesthood and their officiating tabernacles or edifices—temples and churches. As here suggested, these Episcopes or priests were invested with the prerogative of deciding who, from their acceptable conduct through life, deserved to be decently consigned to the tomb, when that conduct was measured by; and conformed to a standard, which the priests themselves had instituted. And observing that this moral discrimination with respect to the election of subjects for decent interment, exerted a powerful influence upon the morals and conduct of the people, it hence at once suggested to their minds the thought of carrying the principle or overt policy a step further, promising the credulous populace not only an honorable disposal of their bodily remains after death, but unending felicity in the world to come, (as a reward for well doing,) which country lay beyond the river Styx. And thus this river became the highway, or "the strait and narrow way" to paradise beyond the grave. The grave-yard, or cemetery, through which they passed, and in which the bodies were deposited, was called the Elysian fields, which was regarded as a place of blissful sojournment, to be occupied transiently, preparatory to their entrance into the abodes of superlative felicity; while Tartarus, beyond the river Acheron, was the place of consignment for the wicked, or those who were not faithful in complying with the requisitions of the priests. The entrance to this post mortem prison (Tartarus) was guarded by the mastiff Cerberus (a dog with a hundred heads). Into this Tartarus the priests warned the credulous, ignorant and superstitious populace they must be thrust as a penalty for any delinquency or neglect of duty they might be guilty of—not to be punished eternally, however, for endless punishment was not yet invented or thought of. They were only to be consigned to this fiery underground prison for a period proportionate to the magnitude of their crimes. And this fact was elaborated into fiction, and thus originated the doctrine of future punishment in Egypt; and out of this grew the doctrine of endless punishment or "eternal damnation," as the priests lengthened the period of punishment from time to time as the public utility or their own cause and craft seemed to suggest the necessity for it, until it was finally made to reach to all eternity, and the culprit was told that he must "roll on a sea of fire," and kick, and flounder, and splash the melted brimstone during the endless ages of eternal duration. And thus we observe that:

A research into Oriental or ancient sacred history, reveals as an important fact, or, if you please, reduces to an important fact, the natural apprehension or suspicion of all these philosophic minds, who, having long since investigated the nature of priestcraft, set down the doctrine of future endless punishment as the work of designing priests. Mythological history is exuberant with the evidence that the traditional conception scheme of punishing human beings or human souls in another world for actions committed in this, was invented by the priesthood as one of their auxiliary means of promoting the interests of their craft. And according to Grecian writers, the agents of Government, or administrators of law, joined with the priests, and likewise adopted the system as a more effectual manner of controlling the populace, and keeping them in subjection to the Government.

To state the thing in brief, priests and politicians "colleged together," and invented the Devil and his domicil as scarecrows to frighten the ignorant superstitious masses into quiet, submissive allegiance to the ecclesiastical and judicial tribunals, namely, "the powers that be." That I do not misrepresent when I aver that the Devil and Hell-fire doctrines were concocted by designing priests and petitfoggers, to serve as bugbears to frighten their credulous and childish subjects into acquiescent submission to their assumed authority, I will quote the most unquestionable authority to prove it. We have some very ancient testimonies on this subject from Egypt, India and Greece. We will first call up Strabo, known as "The Geographer of Greece." He declares that

"Plato (a Grecian priest) and the Brahmans, invented fables concerning the future punishments of Hell."

And he appears to justify the invention, for he says:

"The multitude are restrained from vice by the punishments the gods are said to inflict upon offenders, and by those terrors and threatenings which certain dreadful words and monstrous forms imprint upon their minds. * * * These things the legislators used as scarecrows to terrify the childish multitude. They cannot be governed by philosophical reasonings. They are not led by such means to piety, holiness and virtue, but this must be done by superstition, or the fear of the gods."—Geo. Book.

It is impossible to conduct women and the gross multitude, and to render them holy, pious and upright, by the precepts of reason and philosophy. The fiery torches and snakes of the furies and spears of the gods, and the whole ancient mythology are all fables employed as bugbears to overawe the credulous and simple. Mr. Robinson remarks on the above (see History of India), these ideas afterwards adopted in Europe, were precisely the same which the ancient Brahmans had adopted in India for the government of the great body of the people.

Polybius, the historian, (born 200 years B.C.,) declares in like manner:

"Since the multitude is ever fickle, full of lawless desires, irrational passions and violence, there is no other way to keep them in order but by the fear of the invisible world—on which account our ancestors, it seems to me, acted wisely when they contrived to bring into the popular belief these notions of the gods, and of the infernal regions.

"Hell is useless to sages, but necessary to the blind and brutal populace."
So the whole secret is out, that the soul-roasting doctrine of the ancient Pagans, copied into the Christian Scriptures, and transmitted through Christian credulity and superstition down to the present day, was not designed for sensible and intelligent people, but to frighten fools with. And those good Christians, who, in this enlightened day and age of the world, still hold to this ancient superstition or myth, should not complain if we rank them with this class, seeing that it is historically demonstrated that no other class of people were expected to believe it but fools. For this is the testimony not of one or two writers only, but of all who wrote on the subject thousands of years ago in Egypt, India and Greece, and they were many. They all concur with Strabo and Polybius in representing the doctrine of Devils, and post mortem punishment, as having been fabricated for the special benefit of the blind, low, ignorant and superstitious populace. If space would allow it, I might quote in proof from Cicero, Dyonisius, Seneca, Socrates, Virgil, Livy, Plutarch, and Zimaus. The last named writer (Zimaus or Zimaus) says, in a figurative illustration:

"For as we sometimes cure the body with wholesome remedies, when such as are most wholesome produce no effect, so we restrain those minds with false relations which will not be persuaded by the truth. There is, therefore, a necessity for instilling the dread of those foreign tortments reserved to the criminals in Tartarus; and, also, by the other fictions, which Homer (900 B.C.) has found in the ancient sacred opinions."

As Homer's time was several hundred years before Christ, this declaration makes the doctrine of future punishment of very ancient existence. This poet, whose some chronologists place 900 B.C., is here represented as finding the doctrine in the then "ancient sacred opinions."

I will quote but two other Roman and Grecian writers, Seneca and Cicero. The former tells that:

"These things which made the infernal regions terrible, the darkness, the prison, the river of flaming fire, and the judgment seat, are all a fable with which the poets amuse themselves, and by them agitate us with vain fears."

Cicero ranks the doctrine of future punishment with "silly fables," and Plutarch places it with the "fabulous stories." I will quote from one author relative to the prevalence of this superstition in India three thousand two hundred years ago, to show how it was looked upon by the more intelligent classes of society, even in that remote age and country. Colonel Dow, in his "Dissertation on India," says:

"The more learned Brahmins affirm that the Hell which is mentioned in the Vedas was only intended as a mere bugbear to the vulgar to enforce upon their minds the duties of morality. For that hell is no more than a consciousness of evil, and those bad consequences which invariably follow wicked deeds."

Very sensible thoughts indeed to issue from the minds of heathen more than three thousand two hundred years ago; for the Rev. Missionary, D. O. Allen, places the compilation of the Vedas, at 1,400 B.C., while other writers assign it a much earlier date.

I will close my historical citations by brief quotations from two Christian writers. The Rev. Mr. Pitrat, in his "Pagan Origin of Partialists' Doctrines," says:

"Indeed, there is no sort of torment that was not invented by legislators, mystagogues, poets and philosophers, to frighten the people under the false assumption of making them better, but the truth is, it was rather to keep them down in subjection."—[Page 138.

The Rev. Mr. Thayer says:

"Of course, in order to secure obedience, they were obliged to invent divine punishments for the disobedience of what they gravely asserted to be divine laws."

It will be observed, then, that we have the most positive evidence, the most demonstrative historical proof, to establish this three-fold proposition:
1. That the doctrine of future endless torment, the after-death penal retribution, was extensively preached and promulgated in the Pagan world long prior to the era of the inauguration of Christianity.

2. That it was invented, or hatched up, by designing priests and law-makers, as a “raw-head and bloody-bones” to frighten those who might be simple or silly enough to believe it, into loyal submission to their aspiring power—that the credulous, ignorant and superstitious masses or classes of society might thus become the plant tools, the stepping-stones to the selfish ambition of the demagogues of both Church and State.

3. The learned or intelligent classes of society never believed the doctrine, nor was it expected that they would, as it was not designed for them. And hence those who now subscribe to this doctrine as being a literal reality, although they may be called Christians, cannot in a strict sense be called sensible and intelligent people.

“He who hath ears to hear let him hear,” and with reference to future punishment, banish all fears.

We deem it proper to remark here, that we have omitted a direct reference to the authorities for many of the historical facts exhibited in the preceding pages of this work, simply because we found it would burden the work, and swell it to an inconvenient size. But in proof of our most important statements, we have in most cases given the name and page of the author. If the reader, however, will consult the following works, with those already named, he will find nearly all the facts contained in this pamphlet, and many others of a similar character, viz.: Bailey, Dupins, Bryant, Faber, Taylor, Theon, Kirker, Staffler, Boyer, Scaliger, Selden, Macrobius, Virgil, Nonnus, Hyde, Creden, Higgins, ete.

EXPLANATION OF HELL, HADES, TARTARUS, INFERNUS, GEHENNA, AND TOPHET.

The word Hell is the genitive case of the Anglo-Saxon word hole, and was used with reference to the imaginary future home of the wicked, as being in a hole somewhere in the earth—perhaps “Symmes’ Hole.”

The word Tartarus is from Tartary, being first used with reference to an imaginary abyss supposed to be located in Independent Tartary, and was the fancied abode of the wicked after death. It was believed to be “a dreadfully cold place,” and Hesiod speaks of it as being a “deep, dark place.”

The word infernus means inferior, under, below, and was used to designate the fiery world “under or below the earth.” Hence comes infernal.

Gehenna, used twelve times in the Greek, and always translated Hell, is from the two Greek words ge or gen, “the earth,” and Hinnom, the name of the place where “The Lord’s Holy People” were in the habit of sacrificing doves, pigeons, etc., and sometimes their own children. Hence, it simply means, “the land,” or rather “The Valley of Hinnom.”

Tophet is from Topa, a “drum,” (see Jer. 7: 31,) beaten during the sacrifice of children, (by “the Lord’s chosen people,” as we have already stated,) in order to drown their cries and shrieks. It was afterwards used to designate a depository for the carcasses of dead animals, and other filth. And from these circumstances it came to represent the imaginary place for the punishment and torment of the wicked.

The word Hades has been explained in a previous chapter.

CONCLUSION—ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY-THREE QUESTIONS FOR BELIEVERS IN POST MORTEM PUNISHMENT.

There is both a logical view and a moral view of the doctrine of future endless punishment which we have not space to present here. We will, therefore, conclude this essay on the “Biography of Satan,” with a series of brief questions, designed in lieu of an elaborate disquisition on these points, and covering the ground to present a compendious and comprehensive view of the whole subject of post mortem punishment:

1. Who created the Devil, and when, and also what is now his age?
2. What is his type or race, Malay, Mongolian, African or Caucasian?
3. Of what kind of materials was he originally composed, constituted, or created?

4. Assuming that he was made of nothing, (the materials of which the whole universe was created, according to Webster,) must we not hence conclude, that he is still, and must ever continue to be, nothing, in view of the philosophical axiom, that everything must possess the qualities of the materials of which it was originally composed?

5. If, however, his internal majesty was not created by God, are we not then compelled to set him down as self-created or self-existent?

6. And if so, does it not then follow that we have two omnipotent, omnipresent and Almighty Beings?

7. And if two, we would ask, how many Almighty and Infinite Beings can exist at a time?

8. Or can we admit the existence of more than one in any other sense than that implied in the Otahelitan tradition, that “a Devil or God can dwell within a God as a snake within a snake”?

9. Or if God was the first Omnipresent Being, and filled all space, by what process was room found for another omnipresent being?

10. And here the correlative query arises, also, is the “Grand Adversary of Souls” dependent on, or is he independent of God?

11. If dependent on God, are we not logically compelled to consider God responsible for all his wicked, nefarious and diabolical deeds?

12. But if independent of God, how will we dispose of the philosophical absurdity of two Infinite, Almighty and Omnipresent Beings holding at the same time the reins of universal government?

13. Or if his Satanship is not omnipotent, how does he manage to “decoy millions of souls to endless ruin,” when “God wills that all shall be saved”?

14. And if not self-existent, does it not follow that God must have created him?

15. And if God did thus bring into existence “the Great Prime Mover of Evil,” then is not God himself the author of evil, inasmuch as without a Devil, (according to Orthodoxy showing,) there could have been no evil?

16. Who then is responsible for the existence of evil God, or the Devil?

17. Or how can God hate evil and yet allow the Devil to exist, when he possesses omnipotent power, and hence is able to destroy him?

18. And if the Devil is a “fallen angel,” as Christians teach, who tempted him and caused him to fall?

19. Or how could he be tempted, when as yet there was no “Wicked One” to tempt him?

20. Or would God have created him if he had known that he would turn out to be so naughty, nefarious and diabolical?

21. And if he did not know if, how could he be omnipresent or be the All-Wise God?

22. And how could this primarily perfect archangel fall in heaven where everything is and must be perfect—infallibly perfect?

23. And if (as we are notified in “Holy Writ”) “it came to pass” once upon a time, there was “war in Heaven,” may not such a bloody conflict occur again and consequently all Garrisonian non-resistants be compelled to leave, or have their feelings and principles outraged by the exhibition of carnage and blood, they being in principle opposed to all wars and fighting?

24. Or shall we conclude they will prefer not to enter such a bloodstained paradise, but in preference “travel the broad road that leads to destruction”?

25. And what security have we that the next “war in Heaven” among “the spirits of the just made perfect,” will not result in a victory in favor of “Old Nick” (Lieutenant-General of Pandemonium) and his rebel host, and the Old Dragon thus drag himself on to the Emerald Throne, and bring all the Celestials under, and henceforth wield his cat-o-nine-tail power over the whole Heavenly host?

26. Can anything exceed the injustice of allowing the Devil to “transform himself into an angel of light,” seeing that it is impossible to distinguish him from a celestial being while in this character, and hence impossible to know when to “resist” him, as the Bible enjoins?
27. Assuming that his Satanicship had a beginning, may we ask what was the modus operandi employed to make known his infernal existence, whether it was by the current mode of making known important truths, that of divine revelation by and through the Holy Ghost, or whether he drew up with his fiery steed at the bar of the world in propria persona, and thus announced his diabolical essence?

28. Why is "Holy Writ" silent on this important matter?

29. And when (may we be allowed to ask) was the Great Bottomless Pit first discovered or brought to light?

30. And how was it brought to light? Did it turn up on a voyage of discovery for a "Northwestern Passage," or "Polar Inlet"?

31. And we would like to ask, by what right and title does his infernal majesty hold his fiery pit or brimstone dominions. Does he possess it in fas simple, or by the right of "squatting sovereignty"?

32. And do we not discover the strongest proof of the matchless skill and wisdom of the Divine Architect in constructing the demoniacal pit without a bottom, seeing that without such a wise arrangement it must long ere this have been full to overflowing?

33. Though it may be asked, what in the absence of a bottom prevents the impish inmates from falling through?

34. Whether they are hung on hooks, provided for the purpose, in the sides of the pit?

35. Or whether, being fledged, (as Milton tells us,) they are required to "keep on the wing"?

36. And were not the Great Bottomless Pit minus a bottom, (seeing that thousands are daily dropping into it according to Orthodox preaching, and have been for six thousand years,) may we not suggest that those in the bottom must long ere this have been totally smothered to death?

37. And if (as Buffon calculates) two hundred persons die every minute, and one hundred and fifty of these are precipitated into Pandemonium, we would like to ask, how many Imps, Demons, or Dei Devilis, must be incessantly employed in carrying off the sinful, reprobate souls, and tumbling them overboard into Tartarus, their new fiery home, where there is to be "gnashing of teeth," (or gums if no teeth,) forever and ever?

38. Or if not carried, how are they conveyed or conducted into Hades?

39. Do they ride, walk, crawl, fly or hop?

40. And are they coerced to go, hired, led, pulled, pushed, dragged, or "toted"?

41. And as the Bible speaks of the incumbent ruler of the nether kingdom in the singular number as Satan, "The Devil," etc., we would like to ask how one "Unwary Adversary" can possibly attend to every son and daughter of Adam, amounting to 1,000,000,000 of souls (as are all tempted, we are taught) in the way of decoying them into endless perdition, if he is not omnipresent?

42. Would he not have to move in his "giddy rounds" with the celerity of the telegraph to make calls but once per annum upon each son and daughter of Adam—leaving him scarcely time as he hauls up to the humble domicil or gorgeous palace of each, to bow and scrape, with a "How do you do, sir?"
Glad to see you, madam?"

43. Or are we to assume, in order to dispose of this difficulty, that as "nothing is impossible with God," so nothing is impossible with the Devil?

44. Or if the difficulty is attempted to be surmounted by supposing and assuming that his Satanic honor is supplied with a numerous retinue of subaltern imps or pigny demons (subordinate or second class officers) to aid him in his malevolent enterprise, we ask whether he would not, in that case, have to engross all his time in drilling, training, and posting these auxiliary or subsidiary functionaries in their new vocation of soul-catching?

45. And whether this would leave him any time to eat and sleep, or even to rest upon the Sabbath?

46. We would likewise query, whether, in high latitudes or in northern climes (say the icy Polar regions,) if any of the hobgoblin board of soul-catching demons should venture out from their intensely calorific fiery dominions while the thermometer is perhaps ranging at 50 or 75 below zero—stiffened limbs, a bad cold, and mayhap still more serious, if not fatal, consequences might not ensue?

47. And should we not calculate on the danger of some reprobate souls foreordained to destruction, making their escape into paradise on these occasions of their demon pursuers being inevitably retarded in their operations or perambulations by the inclemency of the weather?

48. Ought not God to be very thankful to old Harry Haulaway for taking the punishment of the wicked off his hands, since he has declared "the wicked shall not go unpunished," and hence would have to punish them himself if the Devil did not?

49. And since we learn that God has decreed that "the wicked shall be punished in Hell," and the Devil is his agent in performing the needful work, must we not therefore consider his snakish majesty as a truly faithful servant, of the Lord, and a co-worker with him?

50. Or if the punishment of the wicked is to be set down as the Devil's doings exclusively, and yet God assents to it by permitting him to exist and achieve his hellish work, then is he not acting in conformity with God's will, and hence performing his duty?

51. And does it not thence follow, also, that it is God, and not the Devil, who punishes the wicked—the latter being only an agent?

52. On the other hand, if we assume that God is really opposed to the Devil's operations and machinations, then does it not follow that his diabolical majesty holds the supreme sway and compels God Almighty to hold a subordinate rank under him, and to be a kind of secondary Omnipotence?

53. And does not this follow from another assumption, viz.; that the Devil's "broad road" into which so many "go in thereat," is much more thronged than "the narrow way that leadeth unto life"?

54. And may we not ask, if it was not labor lost to make "a house of many mansions," seeing so few tenants find their way to it, or are allowed to enter it?

55. And may we not also consider the Christian "plan of salvation" a kind of lottery system or scheme, in which God and the Devil are the ticket holders—the souls of the wicked constituting the ballots?

56. And is it not the teachings of "Holy Writ" that his infernal or Satanic omnipotence drew Mother Eve as the first prize?

57. And since that "hit of good luck," has he not drawn the major portion of the smaller fry—a much larger share than the Creator himself?

58. And if the Devil, after the curtailment of his ubiquity or of his infinite power, (as taught in Rev. 6:8,) and after God had declared, "All souls are mine," still managed to decoy most of them into his fiery domicil, how many souls should we suppose he would have left for God if his power had not been curtailed?

59. And if most of "God's heritage" travel "the broad road which leadeth unto destruction," as "the Holy Scriptures" inform us, then are we not to suppose there are "rooms to let" in "the house of many mansions"?

60. And is it not strange, that if the wicked are to be punished eternally in Hell, as declared, (in Matt. 25: 46,) that God should speak of the destruction of Hell in Hosea 13:14, (i. e., shoel, the Greek for hell)?

61. How can the wicked be punished after they are destroyed, as taught in Matt. 21: 41?

62. Or how long can he continue to exist after being destroyed?

63. How can the souls of the wicked burn forever (see Matt. 18: 8,) without being consumed, since it is the nature of fire to reduce all combustible substances to ashes?

64. And would it not be a great acquisition in the chemical art to find a substance that would thus burn forever without being consumed, especially if it could be used for culinary purposes in countries where fuel is scarce?

65. Do we not make God a thousand times worse and more fiendish than the wickedest of his creatures when we talk of his punishing any being forever?

66. And do we not invest him with an inhuman, brutal and savage character, which the most bloodthirsty tyrant who ever drenched the earth in human blood, would spurn to own?
67. For where in all history can the name of a demon-hearted villain be found who would burn an enemy a week, not to mention an eternity?
68. Then, which is the worst to believe, such a libel on the character of God, or to believe the writer mistaken who assigns him such a character, even though said writer may claim to be inspired?
69. Is not Leigh Hunt right, when he says: "If an angel were to tell me to believe in eternal punishment, I would not do it, for it would better become me to believe the angel a delusion than God monstrous, as we make him; by considering him the author of eternal punishment"?
70. How could a Being who is perfectly good and kind hearted, punish one of his creatures without mentally if not physically punishing, and thus himself suffer eternal misery and torment by such an act?
71. And is it not the climax of absurdity thus to assume that God would or could punish himself in this manner?
72. Or could a God, with one spark of sympathy, justice, or mercy, punish a being (especially one of his own children) a year, a month, or even a day, to say nothing of eternity?
73. And would there be any sense in punishing a being for any other purpose than to reform him, or make him an example for others?
74. But would it not be impossible for post mortem punishment to serve either of these ends?
75. Or could a just God punish one of his creatures for acting out the impulses of that nature which he himself had endowed them with, and does not every human being do this?
76. When God (according to the Bible) saw that the greater portion of mankind were going to destruction, and creation thus proved a failure, why did he not knock the whole thing into "pie," and try it over again, or give it up for a bad job?
77. Is it not strange, that an Almighty and Omnipotent God, who "wills that all men should be saved," could not hit on some plan by which all could be saved?
78. Did God foresee man's proclivity to damnation or destruction?
79. If not, how could he be omniscient, or a God at all?
80. But presuming that he did foresee it, and was unable to prevent this fatal tendency to ruin, should he not have refrained from bringing him into existence?
81. Must we not consider it a cruel act to bring man into existence under such circumstances?
82. Could any being possessing a spark of feeling or sensibility, whether he be a God or a man, be happy for a moment with the consciousness that one single soul was suffering the ineflable torments of Hell?
83. Could any man ever smile if he really believed that he had a friend or relative suffering, or doomed to suffer, unending misery in a lake of fire?
84. Or could he avoid hating a God after knowing that he had consigned his wife or child to the excruciating agonies of unquenchable fire?
85. Or would a man consistently be a father while holding such a doctrine as this?
86. For how could any man of feeling or principle consent to bring children into existence with the liability and even probability of the greater portion of them being lost, as he must presume they will be if "but few are saved," as the Bible teaches?
87. Or, we might ask, how can God punish any soul eternally, when it is positively declared in his holy "Word," "The Lord will not cast off forever."— [Lam. 3: 31.]
88. Can there be any justice or sense in punishing all men alike in the world of woe, when there is such a vast difference in the nature of crime—a world-wide difference there is, for example, between stealing a penny and killing a man?
89. Indeed, are we not warranted in concluding that it would be morally impossible for a God of justice to inflict infinite punishment upon a mere finite being for any crime whatever, as it would be impossible for eternal consequences to grow out of any finite action either good or bad, without overthrowing the last principle of moral equity and common justice, and even common sense?

90. And do we not make God egregiously inconsistent after he has commanded us to love our enemies, to represent him as punishing his eternally, especially as he can (according to Phil. 3: 21) "change their vile hearts at any time"?

91. In what sense can Jesus Christ be the "Saviour of all men," as taught in 1 Tim. 4: 10, when we are told that they are not all saved, but the greater portion lost?

92. And what good does belief in a Hell or future punishment do when nearly all the crime committed in the world is perpetrated by believers in endless misery?

93. Indeed, does not the belief in a Devil or Hell rather furnish a license for crime by putting the evil day of punishment so far off that the sinner can calculate on a hundred chances of dodging it?

94. Or can a man, with any sense or truth be said to be virtuous, who refrains from evil or crime merely from fear of the Devil or a Hell?

95. If so, may not a dog be said to be virtuous when he refrains from deprivations among the poultry from the effect of observing the threatening aspect of his master's cane suspended over his head?

96. May not the Christian's Devil be properly denominated the Orthodox Bull Dog or "Scarecrow General to Kingdom Come," seeing that he is employed to drive those free agents into Heaven?

97. Or can a man truly be said to be free in any sense when chased into Heaven as a refugee from an all-devouring enemy, or when he turns his face Heavenward because pursued by a fire-avenging or ferocious Devil?

98. Being thus frightened into Paradise, can he receive the answer, "Well done"?

99. Must we not conclude that a Christian possesses pretty strong propensities to damnation, seeing it requires two omnipotent powers to save him—one that of the All-loving and coaxing Father going before and saying, "Come unto me all ye ends of the earth," and be saved; and that of the Devil-driving pressure of the "Unweaned Adversary," who pursues him day and night, howling or roaring on his track like a lion?

100. Seeing, then, that notwithstanding two omnipotent powers are set to work upon the Christian to get him into Heaven, (one in front and the other in the rear,) yet but few reach the kingdom—but few are saved, (the elect only,) are we not hence to conclude that a Christian is pretty hard to save?

101. Especially, as he has two passports to Heaven, besides the fear of the Devil—one is the forgiveness of his sins, the other is the atonement which cancels them?

102. May we not reasonably conclude, that if God wished to punish his children, he could do it without the aid of fire, or Devils, or Serpents?

103. As we are told, the serpent caused the sin of our first parents, must we not conclude his creation was a blunder, and that Omniscience would not have created him at all if he had known he would have turned out to be so diabolical and devilish, but rather have let him remain "without form and void," especially as he must have had but little of the raw material (of nothing) left to make him of, after making so many worlds of this material?

104. And if the "ruin of the race" was caused (as we are told) by the Serpent presenting Mother Eve with an apple, we ask if he should not be pardoned, in view of the fact, that he must have been pretty much of a gentleman and pretty well brought up thus to offer the fruit to others, and the lady first of all, before helping himself?

105. And as this fruit was calculated to "make wise unto salvation," and the Serpent "became wiser than any beast of the field," (see Gen. 3: 1,) must we not hence conclude he did ultimately "pitch in" and help himself pretty freely to the luscious fruit?

106. And, as we are told, our primeval parents "got their eyes open" and came "to know good from evil" by eating the forbidden fruit, (see Gen. 3: 22,) may we not ask how long they would have had to "go it blind," had they not hooked some of the sacred and prohibited fruit?
107. And are we not compelled to conclude that it was a very necessary and a very righteous act of stealing and sinning, seeing that if they had not pillaged some of the tempting pippins, they would never have come to know good from evil?

108. Are we not therefore indebted to the “Father of lies” (his Serpent-ship,) for the most important truth ever disclosed to mankind, that of “the knowledge of good and evil,” seeing that he instigated the act which led to this knowledge?

109. If eating the forbidden fruit was calculated to make Adam and Eve “wise as the gods,” “ye shall be as gods knowing good and evil,” (Gen. iii: 5,) would they not have been the veriest fools to refuse to eat, especially as it was so luscious and inviting to the taste?

110. Which told the truth, Moses’ imaginary God or the Devil, besides the Serpent, when the former told Adam, “In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die,” (Gen ii: 14,) while the “Father of lies,” or talking Serpent, declared, “ye shall not surely die,” (Gen. iii: 4,) seeing that “Adam lived nine hundred and thirty years and begat sons and daughters”?

111. Indeed, does not God (according to Moses) himself most explicitly admit that his lying Snake-ship was right, and he (Omnipotence) wrong when he announced to the Trinity or family of gods, “behold the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil”? (Gen. iii: 22.)

112. How then can the Serpent-Devil be justly charged with deceiving our first parents, when God himself thus admits he told them the truth?

113. If the Serpent of Genesis is the Devil of Christendom, the great prime central wheel of Orthodoxy, the same which Brigham Young declares is after sinners with a “sharp stick,” to whip them into Heaven; and which he also declares makes more saints than all other means combined, (the power of God not excepted,) then why was nothing said about roasting or broiling our primitive parents in “the kingdom prepared for the Devil and his angels,” for their high-handed infractions of the divine commands?

114. Could not the great and dire calamity and curse which befell the human race, through the malicious agency of a Serpent, (according to Orthodoxy,) have been easily and most effectually avoided by simply making the fence which enclosed the golden garden, snake-proof, so as to keep his long-tailed majesty out, or else by placing the angel with the flaming sword at the gate before the fall of man instead of after, so as to “bruise his head” or decapitate him on his unwarrantable attempts to enter?

115. As the Serpent after the fall-curse was doomed to crawl, (“upon thy belly shalt thou go,” Gen. iii: 14,) the question arises, how did he travel previously to the fall? On which did he walk, his head or his tail, or did he hop or fly?

116. Is the devout Christian, hard-right, who declares,

“God made the Devil, and the Devil made sin,
So God Almighty made a hole to put the Devil in!”

117. In order to become fully “wise unto salvation,” should we not be informed in what language the Serpent talked to Mother Eve. Was it a living or a dead language?

118. Must we not suppose that Mother Eve was surprised to hear a serpent talk, or shall we conclude she was familiar with such oddities?

119. Did the Serpent, otherwise Satan, (for proof they are both one, see Rev. xii,) furnish the first instance of walking without legs or feet, or had the curse expired and his legs grown out when he came from “walking to and fro in the earth,” to pay his respects to old Job, and honor him with a visit?

120. How could it be a curse upon the Serpent to be doomed to crawl, when serpents and lizards that now crawl bare as well as toads that hop, or animals that walk?

121. Or is it more of a curse for snakes or serpents to crawl than the hundreds of other species of reptiles which travel in this way?

122. If the Serpent-Devil lost all his legs by an act of pure kindness in handing round the pippins instead of ill-manneredly monopolizing them all himself, had he not some cause to complain for being rendered legless, and may this not be the reason he is now "the Grand Adversary" of Moses' God?

128. What headway could the Serpent have made eating dust? ("Dust thou shalt eat all the days of thy life," Gen. iii: 14.) Must it not have been a pretty tedious operation with his long-forked, spindle-shanked tongue, and did he grow lean or fat on such nutriment, and was mud, we may ask, a substitute for dust in wet weather?

124. Was the Devil a free agent before the fall or crawl? If not, how could he be the subject of a curse?

125. Is it true that there is now more enmity between the seed of the woman and the serpent (see Gen. iii: 15) than at present exists between mankind and hyenas, rats and polecates?

126. How much enmity exists between the Hindoo juggler and his snake which entwines around his neck and crawls through his bosom?

127. As father Adam was doomed to eat the ground, "cursed is the ground for thy sake, in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life," (Gen. iii: 10,) we may ask, if man had not become mortal, and short-lived by the curse, but all his future progeny had continued to live here forever, how long would it have been before the race would have multiplied to a sufficient extent to have eaten up all the ground, consumed the whole earth, and left not a mole hill of terra firma to stand upon?

128. Which may we suppose ate the most ground or dust, father Adam or the Snake?

129. And why does not man continue to eat the ground now?

130. May we not conclude that it is because he got his eyes open by the curse, that now possesses too much sense and intelligence to eat the ground, "as the Lord said unto Moses"? [For many other questions similar to the above, let the reader see the chapter in our large work, "Christianity before Christ," headed, "The Ancient Cosmogonies."

131. As we are told that the Devil on a certain occasion set Christ on a pinnacle of the temple, may we be allowed to be so curious as to inquire how the operation was performed—whether he was carried like Habakuk by the hair of his head, and whether he made any resistance to the operation?

132. Must we not conclude the Devil was a pretty able lawyer, from the skill and knowledge which he displayed in his arguments with Christ?

133. And also well read in the Bible, as he quoted Scripture quite flippantly?

134. And is it not rather dishonorable to the character of an omnipotent and omnipresent God to represent him (as Christ is represented) as following him about like a tailed sheep or an old associate?

135. Were the Evangelists, who relate so many cases of Christ casting out devils, aware that it was an old heathen superstition of various countries long previously? [For proof, see the chapter on this subject in our large work.]

136. When the devils entered the swine on Christ's permission, as related, (Luke viii: 33,) which end, stem or stern, served as "the porch of entry," (as Erin expresses the idea)?

137. And had the hogs been sold while the devils were encompassed in their "inner man," what discount should have been made to the buyer for tare (tear) so as to come at the net weight?

138. And should such diabolical occurrences take place now-a-days, would it not render the pork speculation rather a precarious business?

139. How high above this globular earth must Jesus and the Devil have been elevated to enable him to see "all the kingdoms of this world," including those on the under side?

140. Why is it that superstition could always find a devil anywhere, while science could find him nowhere?

141. And why is it that in countries where there are no priests, Devils are and ever have been as scarce as June-bugs in December?

142. Does not this circumstance demonstrate that the priest and the Devil are a kind of Siamese twins, inseparably connected and each indispensable to the other?

143. And is not the cause of this intimate relationship disclosed by the fact, that the Devil superstition tends to keep the wheels of priestcraft in motion, furnishes the oil, greases the gudgeons, and more than all, keeps the priest's pocket replenished with "filthy lucre"?

144. Is it not a historical fact, that Strabo, Polybius, Zimmamnus, and various other Pagan writers, who lived long before Christ, spoke of a Devil and a Hell as being the invention of priests and law-makers, concocted wholly and solely for the purpose of scarifying the credulous, ignorant and superstitious populace into obsequious subjection to "the powers that be"—i. e., priests and potentates?

145. And why does not the Christian Bible revelations reveal the important fact, that its Devil and hell-fire doctrines are those of Pagan origin, and mere heathen superstition?

146. As, then, the ancient Pagan philosophers show, that the notion of a Devil and a Hell were fabricated to frighten fools with, does it not thence follow that all who now believe in this superstition should be ranked in this class?

147. Which is the most merciful and reasonable being, the Christian's God, which they tell us punishes to all eternity, or the heathen Devil of Siam, which only punishes a thousand years, according to the Siamese?

148. And must we not consider the Persian's God too, as more reasonable and merciful than the Christian's God, inasmuch as he promises to let "Old Splitfoot," or Plag Ugly himself, ascend from Limbo to Paradise in the course of fourteen thousand years with his whole rebel host, or elfin host, with him?

149. And which should we consider the best and most reasonable being, the Bible God, who told Abraham to murder his son Isaac, or the Devil who told him not to do it?

150. Is it not strange that men can ascribe to God a character which they know angels would spurn, and they themselves would blush to own?

151. Has not the principal effect of preaching the Hell-fire superstition been to make numerous Hells on earth, without saving any from an imaginary Hell hereafter, as it has made thousands miserable with foolish fears?

152. And has not the practice of representing God as damning a portion of the race had the evil effect also of causing men to damn each other, and is thus the principal source—the primary fountain—of all the profane swearing with which all Christendom is now cursed and demoralized from one end to the other?

153. Is it not true that from "God damn you," in the Bible and the pulpit, comes the "God damn you" heard from a thousand lips daily in the streets?

154. Is it not true, also, that the doctrine of endless punishment is only calculated to operate upon the "weakest spots" of the weakest people—in other words, the weakest portion of their natures, and thus is only a bugbear for weak-minded grown-up children?

155. Why is not the Devil now frequently seen and encountered as in the days of Martin Luther, who threw his inkstand at his "devoted head," and who seriously relates several combs and combats he had with him; and many profess to see him daily?

156. Is it not because his Snakish honor is afraid of the day-light of science and infidelity?

157. And may we not reasonably calculate, that the "march of science and infidelity" will soon drive him and his demon host back into the dark ramparts of superstition, for another thousand years?

158. And may we not assume that society will prosper as well morally without a Devil, after his Luciferish has given up the ghost, the priesthood only excepted?

159. And is not the Scriptural fact, that neither Paul nor John make any mention of a Hell, some evidence that it is not an indispensable institution?

160. Or, if it were, should we not be informed which Hell sinners are put into first—the fiery Hell spoken of (in Matt. 5: 22) or the Hell of "outer darkness, (see Matt. 8: 12,) where there is to be "wailing and gnashing of teeth"?

161. In conclusion, we would ask, "If there were a Hell, whether it is not probable that some ingenious Yankee imp would soon construct an underground railroad and run off or let out all the fiery prisoners?"

162. Or may we not reasonably conjecture that the angels in Heaven, while bending over the battlements of Paradise, and gaz ing into the awful pit below, would be moved to shed tears enough to put out the fires of Hell, and thus permit the subjects of perdition to ascend to the regions of heavenly bliss?

168. And finally, as several of the Christian sects have, since the dawn of science and civilization, cast the Devil out of their Bibles, (i.e., deny his being recognized there,) may we not reasonably hope that the time is not far distant when all sensible men can stand alone in the path of moral rectitude without the aid of such old, obsolete baby-jumpers to support them and frighten them into piety and Paradise, as the Devil and Hell-fire superstitions are?

APPENDIX.

THE WAR IN HEAVEN.

"And there was war in Heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the Dragon, and the Dragon fought and his angels."—[Rev. 12: 7.

There is scarcely an Oriental nation whose religion has been commemorated in history, but that has preserved in its traditions the story of a celestial battle or "war in Heaven," similar to that referred to in the above text. Titan, according to the Roman legends, rebelled against Jupiter, and thereby stirred up a war in Heaven. But Jupiter prevailed and cast him and his rebel host over the battlements of Heaven, (as Michael and his angels did the Dragon,) and imprisoned them under mountains, where they

"From our sacred Hill (Holy Mountain) with fury thrown, Deep in the dark Tartarian gulf shall ever groan."

And it was the belief of the superstitious classes that it was the attempt of this infernal host to rise and liberate themselves which produced all the earthquakes and volcanoes. And the battle of the Titans (children of Heaven) against the gods of Olympus in the upper world, is found in the mythological traditions of ancient Greece. And then we have in Egyptian traditions the story of Typhon (the Devil) rebelling and making war against Osiret or Osyrus, who cut him to pieces. The Chinese relate a battle between the inhabitants of the clouds and the stars—the Lamb ("the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world") headed the starry host and conquered. With the Persians, who seem to have the original copy or edition of the story, the scene was an astronomical one. A war broke out in Heaven between the summer God and winter God, which was simply a contest between the seasons of summer and winter—that is, between heat and cold. The winter God was hurled out of Paradise and became a fallen angel. Each had a retinue of subordinate angels, as in St. John’s case. And here we will call attention to a curious circumstance in the choice of names which St. John selected for the principal combatants in his account of the celestial combat. Michael is his good angel, and Dragon his bad or wicked angel. Now let it be noted here, that the last syllable of Michael is ε, which is the Hebrew name for God; (the genitive case being Elo.) "Eloim tama subachthani" is a prayer to God in the Hebrew language. And On, the last syllable for Dragon, is the Egyptian name for God. Hence, it is simply the Hebrew God E1 in battle array against the Egyptian God On. And of course St. John would represent that the Hebrew God or angel God, Michael, conquered. On was also a name for God among the Babylonians. And it is a curious circumstance, that whenever the Hebrew and the Hebrew-descended Christians (hating as they did the Egyptians and Babylonians, because they had conquered and enslaved their ancestors,) had occasion to refer to or speak of the God of either of these nations, they would employ some odious and even devilish title as the Drag-on, Typh-on, Dag-on, Abad-on, Apolly-on, Pyth-on. Some of these were very honorable, lofty and sacred titles or names for God among the ancient Babylonians and Egyptians. But the Jews and Christians have dragged down their Gods and converted them into Devils; or rather, they have stolen their sacred title for God, and rendered it odious by applying it to the Devil; as Typhon, Dag-on, The Dragon, etc. While, on the other hand, they deified some of their own angels and ancient worthies, by attaching to them names either at the commencement or termination the Hebrew title for God—el, as Gabri-el, Micha-el, Isa-el, El-isha, El-iah, etc. They were thus God-ified or deified. In view of these facts, it is not to be wondered at that St. John should speak of Babylon (Babylon) as being "the mother of harlots and abomination," (Rev. xvii: 5,) and rank Egypt with Sodom (Sod-on, on and on being the same) and Gomorrah; and that Bible writers should use on name of both Egypt and Babylon as synonyms for everything hateful, disdainful, odious, or wicked. It was but the natural, practical or wicked outworking of their pent-up feelings of revenge. And thus the great enigma, "Mystery: Babylon," is solved.

Reader, please read and reflect upon these things.

ANGELS FALLING AND BECOMING THEREBY CONVERTED INTO DEVILS AND DRAGONS.

The belief has obtained wide acceptance in the Christian world, that the Devil alias the Dragon, is "a fallen angel." And St. John speaks of the Dragon falling (from his angelship) and being cast into the bottomless pit. (See Rev. xx: 1.) And how did old Captain Dragon (captain of the infernal goats) fall, let us inquire? Why, he simply fell into the hands of Christendom who assumed the license to metamorphose him from a God to a Devil. They Drag-ed him from the throne of God in the Babylonian and Egyptian heavens, armed him with horns, hoofs, and tail, and converted him into a Devil—a fallen angel, Dragon, and cast him into "the bottomless pit," as a retaliation for the bondage endured at the hands of these nations in times past. And as this Dragon came down from Heaven, according to the Mystic and Apocalyptic St. John, his tail becoming entangled among the starry worlds, tore one-third of them loose from their orbits and precipitated them down upon our little planet. [We suggest that he must have been nearly all tail, or rather that the story is all a tale.] No wonder that "the kingdom of Heaven suffered violence." (See Rev.) However, astronomically speaking, it is literally true; for according to Burritt's "Geography of the Heavens," the astronomical Dragon spreads over a pretty large portion of the canopy, embracing at least five large constellations. And as to his falling, it is even so, for the Dragon (now the sign for October) under the name of Scorpio, has fallen. Being once away up in the harvest month (August) by the procession of the equinoxes, he fell lower and lower, until he sunk clear below the southern horizon into the "bottomless pit," or pit of darkness. The conception of "fallen angels" is neither new nor original to the Christian's Bible. The Hindoo Bible, at least three thousand years old, (the Vedas,) gives in its third chapter, a somewhat detailed account of the fall of angels, while the third chapter prescribes or describes their mode of punishment, which consisted in being hurled down from their lofty positions in Paradise (because they rebelled against Heaven, i.e., "the trinity in unity," Brahma, Vishnu and Diva) and were precipitated into Ondras, ("the deep, dark pit") there to remain until "the Intercessor," called, also, "The Lamb of God," the second person of the Trinity, would plead for them and have them delivered; having first, however, to serve their "thousand years' probation," which reminds us of St. John's Dragon being "bound for a thousand years." (See Rev. xi: 8.) The Persian tradition of fallen angels found in their Bible (the Zend Avesta,) is somewhat similar excepting that out of thirty different orders of angels, they had but one to fall, who thereby became a "Peris," a Devil.
(ADVERTISEMENT.)

A NEW WORK,
(NEARLY READY FOR THE PRESS.)

"CHRISTIANITY BEFORE CHRIST; OR THE WORLD'S CRUCIFIED SAVIOURS."

BY K. GRAVES, AUTHOR OF "THE BIOGRAPHY OF SATAN."

CONTENTS OF VOLUME I.

1. Preface and address to the reader.
3. The motives which defiled men into gods, anciently, (strikingly showing how Christ came to be worshiped as God.)
4. Many cases of miraculous conception, and virgins conceiving, "without knowing man."
5. Virgin-born gods, anciently numerous; how the belief in them originated.
7. The birth of several Saviours presaged or announced by stars, as in the case of Christ.
8. Prophecy of "the seed of the woman bruising the serpent's head," (Gen. 3:15,) of Pagan origin.
9. Sacred Cycles, (furnishing the key to "the great mystery of the incarnation," and showing how the notion originated of God's descending to the earth and dying for the sins of the world. New and startling historical facts of great importance.)
10. Why the twenty-fifth of December was fixed for the birth-day of Christ and many other more ancient Saviours.
11. Magi angels and shepherds visiting infant Saviours before the time of Christ.
12. Titles of Pagan Saviours, Lord, God, Saviour, Redeemer, Messiah, Mediator, etc.
13. Several of the infant Saviours threatened with death by the incumbent tyrant ruler, and why.
14. Mary a common name for the God-mother, (a curious piece of history.)
15. Forty days fasting by several Saviours, and why?
16. Why Christ and the ancient Pagan Saviours are reported as being of royal blood, and descending through kings and princes.
17. The Saviour's kingdom not of this world. Why?
18. Very ancient Oriental history reports sixteen Saviours or Gods as having been crucified, (a new and astonishing development of historical facts on this point; how obtained.)
19. The Cross as an emblem or spiritual figure, of Pagan origin.
20. Atoning sacrifices of animals, men and gods—how, when and where they originated, (a very instructive piece of history, and showing how a belief in the atonement originated.)
ADVERTISEMET.

C H A P.
21. The Saviours or Demi-Gods were real personages.
22. Descent of the Saviours into Hell (explaining most clearly and conclusively "two mysterious texts" of the Bible, (1 Peter, 3: 19, and Acts 2: 31), which have long puzzled the Christian world.)
23. Resurrection of several God-Saviours reported. And why believed.
24. Reappearance and ascension of several of the atoning crucified Gods.
25. The Pagan Saviours performed the same miracles as those related of Christ, (a chapter of startling historical facts for the Christian reader.)
26. Prophecies of Pagan and Christian compared, with respect to fulfilment.
27. Heaven; notions respecting, by various nations.
28. Hell, or the Devil, and his domicile, of priestly Pagan origin, (printed also in pamphlet form.)
29. Obsession, or casting out devils—an ancient Pagan tradition.
30. Absolution, or the confession and forgiveness of sins, of Pagan origin.
31. Conversion to God, or conviction for sin, an old Pagan doctrine.
32. Regeneration, or a "change of heart," taught by the Orientalists.
33. Devoutness and sincere piety characteristics of the votaries of the Pagan religion.
34. Twenty Bibles noticed, all (including the Christian) essentially alike; (a chapter of astonishing revelations for the devout admirers of the Christian Bible.
35. A Divine origin and spiritual interpretation claimed for all Bibles.
36. A Divine revelation believed in by all the ancient nations.
37. Inspiration shown to be natural and common to all religions.
38. Moral precepts (500) of various Bibles and ancient Pagan writers, (many of them superior, practically, to those of the New Testament—a chapter of great moral value.)
40. Loving enemies enjoined by ancient heathen moralists.
41. Precepts showing that a spirit of intolerance pervaded all the religions.
42. Precepts showing that but one Supreme God was taught by the Orientalists.
43. Precepts evincing spirituality as characteristic of every ancient religion.
44. Precepts proving a belief in the immortality of the soul by every ancient system.
45. Precepts showing the status of woman under every ancient system.
46. Miscellaneous precepts of various Bibles and Oriental writers.
47. Prayer a rite and a practice among the votaries of every ancient system.
48. Baptism by water, by fire and by blood, of Pagan origin.
49. The Sacrament, or "Lord's Supper," an ancient Pagan rite.
50. The Trinity, (Father, Word and Holy Ghost,) found in all the ancient religions.
52. The Holy Ghost, (in its various forms, 1st—as "cleft tongues of fire:" 2d—its descent in "the shape of a dove," etc., etc.; also the unpardonable sin against the Holy Ghost—all historically explained, and shown to be of Pagan origin—highly curious and interesting.
53. Dreams and angels have played an important part in all religions.
54. Martyrdom attests the sincerity of the votaries of every ancient system.
55. Circumcision an ancient custom—its heathen origin.
56. A grand millenium prophesied of by all the ancient religions.
57. The doctrine of the Fall, Original Sin, Divine Redemption, etc., of heathen origin.
58. Idolatry, its origin and uses, shown to be a practical element of the Christian religion.
59. Anointing with oil a general Oriental custom—its origin.
60. The phenomenon of the transfiguration, an ancient Oriental legend.
CONTENTS OF VOLUME II.

1. Jesus Christ not God, according to the Scriptures.
2. His many finite human qualities enumerated and the inference.
3. Or twenty-five texts disproving his divinity.
4. Testimony of his mother disproving his divinity, (a strong case.)
5. Testimony of the Father disproving his divinity.
6. Testimony of the Son disclaiming the divinity or Godhead.
7. Testimony of the Evangelists, incompatible with his divinity.
8. A summary view of the evidence. (The unprejudiced and unposted reader will be astonished at the amount of evidence deduced from the Bible itself in the above chapters disproving Christ's divinity.
9. A view of Christ's divinity presented by metonymy. (Striking proof.)
10. A logical or common sense view of Christ's divinity. (A powerful argument.)
11. A philosophical view of Christ's divinity. (A conclusive argument.)
13. The doctrine of Christ's divinity is virtual polytheism.
14. To worship Christ as God, is practical idolatry.
15. The belief in Christ's divinity is virtual atheism.
16. The dual or two-fold nature in Christ disproved by thirteen powerful arguments. (The doctrine of Christ being "both God and Man" is here shown to be fraught with many most shocking absurdities, and the arguments are founded on the Bible itself.
17. The thirty-four divinity texts examined, and their utter failure to prove Christ's divinity, shown.
18. Christ's divinity not believed or taught by the primitive Christian churches. (No less true than astonishing proof. The testimony of twenty-seven churches, nearly all, of the first century is given.)
19. Many leading Christians in all ages of the Church rejected Christ's divinity. (Strong proof.)
20. Origin of Christ's doctrines; proof of their derivation from the Essenes. Every spiritual doctrine or idea of Christianity is here found 200 years B. C.; and the founders of the Christian religion shown to have had ample opportunity to borrow them.
21. How the miraculous legends related of Christ, originated. (Powerfully convincing.)
22. 356 striking parallels in the doctrines of Christ and Christina, (born 1200 B. C.) Every doctrine, principle, and moral precept, ceremony and miracles of Christ, is here traced to Buddhism, 1200 B. C.
23. Miracles of the Saviours or Demi-Gods of ancient Egypt like those related of Christ.
25. The same miracles (exactly) related of Appollonius (50 B. C.) and Christ.
26. Miraculous character of Simon Magus strikingly similar to that of Christ. (The preceding chapters overthrow the miraculous feats of Christ most completely.)
27. Christ's miracles (those erroneously ascribed to Him) historically disproved.
28. The story of the miraculous conception disproved logically and Scripturally.
30. Scriptural proof that Christ was the son of Joseph. (A strong case.)
31. The story of the infant massacre by Herod disproved.
32. The Apothenos, or scenes at the crucifixion, historically disproved.
33. The story of Christ's resurrection not proved by the Scriptures.
34. Christ's ascension left in doubt Scripturally.
35. The miraculous history of Christ logically and historically disproved.
36. Or, the thirty-two wonders of Jesus refuted or explained.
37. The great problem solved—origin of the miraculous stories told of Christ. (This, we think, will explain to every candid reader satisfactorily the origin of these stories.)
ADVERTISEMENT.

CHAP.
38. Origin of the apotheosis or deification of Jesus Christ. (Strikingly convincing.)
39. The moral grandeur of Jesus viewed as a man and sublime moral teacher.
40. Jesus a man only; fifty-two errors in his doctrines, precepts, principles and practices. (Many a reader will be taken by surprise on seeing the numerous errors of the noble and honest Jesus here presented in a panoramic view—mostly errors of moral extremism.)
41. A substitute for Christianity furnished—the religion for this age.
42. The Mosaic Cosmogony unworthy of belief—a substitute for it.
43. A substitute needed for Christianity more compatible with science.
44. Contradictory texts on religious faith and practical morality.
45. Impossibility of learning our moral duties by the Bible.
46. Uncertainties and impossibilities of Bible history.
47. Obscene stories and vulgar language of the Bible. (100 proofs given).
48. Demoralizing effects of.
49. Impossibility of learning the true character of God by the Bible.
50. Contradictions and uncertainties in the history and character of Christ. (In the six preceding chapters, hundreds of contradictory texts are presented and classified, showing that every species of crime is both sanctioned and condemned, and every moral duty commanded and countermanded—thus rendering it absolutely impossible to learn our moral duties from the Bible.
51. A high state of morals attainable without the Bible—many historical proofs.
52. A high attainment in civilization by nations without or by any Bible.
53. The Harmonial or Spiritual Philosophy as a substitute for Christianity.
54. The spiritual manifestations furnish a hundred fold more evidence of a future conscious existence than the Christian Bible.
55. The old and the new religion contrasted.
56. The New and True religion a glorious outgrowth of modern science and civilization.

The foregoing work (of two volumes of about 400 pages each) comprises the result of long and laborious historical research, and will, it is presumed, (despite its literary defects,) be found extremely interesting, from the fact, that it contains several thousand important historical facts of great value, many of which will be found to be entirely new to most readers, never having been before put in circulation in this country. They were obtained indirectly from the old countries—some of them from the British Museum, where they were long since deposited, in matters of curiosity. And yet, they are found in works which (although not now comprised in any Christian library) were centuries ago, popularly endorsed by the Christian church, and therefore may be regarded as reliable and indisputable authority.

NOTE.—Any person or company who will defray the expenses of getting out the first edition of the above named work, shall be entitled to one-half the profits arising from its sales, and the same proportion for any amount contributed, or the copyright will be disposed of entirely, on liberal terms. The author makes this offer, because the destructive and ruinous hand of war has prostrated his business and crippled his resources. The work can be examined, or specimen chapters in print or manuscript will be furnished by mail, on application. Address "K. GRAVES, Harveysburg, Warren County, Ohio," or the "Religio-Philosophical Association, Chicago, Illinois." Two hundred copies of the work will be received at trade price as part pay, and no dividend of profits demanded by the author, until the person investing shall have received back sufficient to cover the outlay. Many copies of the work are already applied for.

N. B. If no one shall feel disposed to purchase the copyright, I would thank some good friend and reformer to loan me the necessary funds for getting out the work, to be secured by mortgage on good and safe real estate.