DEDICATION.

One who loved Truth more than the commendation of men, left on record as a legacy to the human race, a sentiment, at once so truly religious, broad and elevating, that we quote his lines in this connection:
"The world is my country,
To do good my religion."-Pane.

With the same broad and philanthropic spirit which inspired the above we dedicate this work to the world.

TRIBUTE

J. M. ROBERTS, ESQ.

> Oh, faithful soldier of the Light, Whose buckler is an honest soul ! The sword of Truth in lustre bright Gleans in thy hand. Still onward roll The waves of battle. Yet the shafts of Hate Are vain; before the radiant shield That guards thee still. Thy glorious fate Will be to conquer - not to yield One inch of ground to adverse forceBut, marehing on to triumph high, O'er Error prostrate - left with no resource Whil'st thou can banded hosts defy, Knowing that Right shall yet succeed, And thou, oh soldier staunch and true, Shalt reap reward for every deed And word of faith. For such thy due. And in thy spirit home shall shine Thy record fair, inseribed by angel hands, Who to thee bring influx of light divine.

January 14th, 1885.
Forester Gordon.
The above lines were inscribed to one whose lamp of mortal life went out while he battled for the truth. None were more vakiant or fearless in its defense. He could suffer, but never yield to wrong, for his soul was cast in the mold from whiclı martyrs are born. He fell on the field of battle, full armored and face to the foe, leaving others to grasp' 'Truth's standard, close up the ranks and press on to vietory.

MEMOIR OF  JONATHAN M. ROBERTS. ESQ.

It is only matural that the readers of this volume should desire to know something of the life and characteristics of the individual whose intellectual labors contributed so much to its value. That earnestness and sincerity were marked elements of his character, no one could doubt who heard him speak or read the lines from his pen. To illustrate, we quote the following from one of his editorials: "Dear friends and patrons, it is true that we have not known what rest or reereation was, during the daily and nightly vigils which we have been forced to keep, but what of that? Who is there that is worthy to serve Truth who is not willing to forget self in the grander purpose of contributing to the common good of mankind?" His was a life full of usefulness, and his good deeds were many. When his great soul had outgrown its mortal surroundings and the measure of his earthly life was filled, he passed on to other fielis of labor in the spheres beyond, leaving this world better for his having lived in it.

Jonathan M. Roherts, Esq., was born in Montgomery Co., Penna., December, 1521 , and was a man of fine education as woll as marked ability. He studied law and practiced it for some years, from which he retired previous to his taking up the editorial pen. Prior to the war, he was an active Abolitionist. and being aman of strong temperament and positive convictions, he became one of the leaters of that party. Subsequently he became an active Republican, and spoke effectively during several campaigns. Abont 1873 he was convinced of the truth of Sipiritualism through receiving communications from his father, who, when in earth life, was proninent in National atfairs, and a member of the U. S. Senate. In 1878 Mr. Roberts started Minin AND Matter, a weekly journal, dewoted to the interests of Spiritualism and as its able editor gained a well earned reputation as a journalist and writer. He was a great student in anciont religions history, and made extensive researehes therein, prompted by the revelations received from many anofent and modern spirits. Thas amidnt his matiring latme for the genel of others, he passed tospirit life Fohnary es,

COMPILER'S PREFACE.

IN submitting to the reader Antiquity Unveiled it is with a feeling of assurance that its contents will answer this all important and oft repeated question-Is Christianity as known and taught in the western world, a divinely inspired religion, or an offspring of still more ancient religions? Every unprejudiced student knows, that notwithstanding the many claims made by Christian writers as to the origin of Christianity, it still remains simply a formidable religious system whose source is buried in the debris of remote antiquity. The revelations contained in Antiquity Unveiled are destined to unearth and solve all the great mysteries surrounding the origin of the Christian religion, for the unlearned and student alike. It appears from the testimony set forth in the following pages that fragments of teachings, forms and dogmas were gathered from various religious systems that were extant previous to the so-called Christian era and gradually moulded into what is known and taught as Christianity, the formulators of this system employing every means to disguise its pagan origin. This work contains a series of messages from occult sources bearing upon Oriental religions, and their relation to Christianity, with comments thereon by the late J. M. Roberts, Esq. The following is a brief account of the manner in which these messages were received. On March 26th, 1880 , Mr. Roberts, then editor of Mind and Matter, received a communication through the medium from Potamon the founder of Eclecticism, which was the beginning of the series. This was followed by others upon the same subject until the entire series was finished in 1886. All were published in a weekly journal as received. They contain in a small space a wast amount of knowledge pertaining to the religious history of mankind which before this unfoldment, was unknown to the world. It is these revelations of such great import to every individual that we place before our readers.

The object of publishing these important and startling revelations is not only because they are of universal interest, but to preserve them to the world as well as meet the popular demand of progressive minds in every clime. The corroborative evidence embraced therein demonstrates conclusively that Apollonius of Tyana was the Jesus of Nazareth, the so-called Saviour of the Christian Seriptures. This great teacher now returns to earth, and inspires a medium through whom he explains the mysteries which have surrounded the origin of so-called Christianity. These facts being so highly important, it seems imperative that they should be widely disseminated; therefore we have concluded to issue them in a volume entitled Antiquity Unveninid.

The work would have been published by Mr. Roberts in book form, had he remained in earth life a few years longer and received the encouragement and support he was entitled to in view of the great work he was called upon to fulfill for the enlightemment of mankind. We can not hope to eompile the work so emmpletely and ably as Mr. Roberts would have done, he being fully prepared with all the details, as well as possessing marked ability and wonderful adaptation for such a task. The only thing which now scems possible in view of the demise of Mr. Roberts, is to insert the the communications in the order they were received as far as practical,* and as much of his comments as the size of the volume will admit. These will rest upon their merits as bearing upon the religious history of the world. The work will at least be suggestive of thought, and cause many minds to look below the surface of the present religious teachings.

A considerable number of publications have been brought to the attention of the reading world heretofore by able authors and scholars upon the subject of ancient religions. These works, however, have been based upon what history of past ages has not been destroyed and is now aecessible, and sueh researches as could be made at a time so remote from the age in which these religions had their origin.

Other works have been published within the last twelve

[^0]years, whose authors have had the opportunity to draw facts and data from these communications and comments, which have been in print since 1880, and therefore accessible as sources of information upon the subject since that date. While it is gratifying to know that other writers have seen their value and importance, it is only just to the authors of these spirit messages, as well as to Mr. Roberts, in view of his exhaustive labors in this field of research, that we accord them due credit by placing on record the time when they were first received and published.

This work differs from all others preceding it from the fact that it is dependent upon history only so far as to identify the individuals giving the communications, and to bring to notice collateral facts bearing upon their testimony.* Instead of the conflicting statements of history, we have the corroborative testimony from spirit life of those who were conspieuous in the aneient history of our world. Some of these distinguished individuals were the leading lights in the propagation of the aucient religions from which the teachings of Christianity were borrowed. Others of their number lived at and subsequent to the date of the Christian era, and testify definitely as to the part they acted in the origination and promotion of Christianity, as formulated from ancient religions. Many of these witnesses now return and contradict the assertions of Christian writers, viz : that they taught and upheld Christianity while on earth. Others testify that they have learned in spirit life the fallacy of the teachings of Christianity. Still others testify, as they did in earth life, that they knew the teachings of Christianity were not in accord with truth, but were composed of fragments gathered from the decayed religions of the past, and moulded by skillful minds into the shape best suited for their purpose; after which all traces of their ancient origin were destroyed as far as possible, that they might appear as a direct inspiration from God. Hence we cannot expect to find the root of the Christian religion at the comparatively recent date of eighteen hundred years ago, but back through the dim vista of the Oriental ages. Many of these spirit witnesses it appears, fearing for their lives, withheld the truth while on earth, but retnrn and divulge it now. A few of them, only, were mwilling witnesses, who finally yielded to the foree of truth and rendered their testimony. We know of none more competent to testify upon these vital questions than those who were the religious teachers at the periods before mentioned.

Some of our readers may diseredit the souree of these communieations, but this does not dispose of the subject-matter. The testimony remains, baeked up not only by the truth which underlies it, but by the collateral facts of history. Therefore whatever the source, this mass of evidence must be met, if at all, on the basis of that logic and reason to whieh the subject is entitled. Others without due consideration, or the ability to comprehend the great and interesting questions involved, may consider the work a fiction. If so regarded, it must be admitted that it is a fiction of such ponderous proportions as to be unequalled in the field of romance. On the other hand, if it bears the scrutiny of the reasonable mind and proves to be gencrally true it must then be coneeded that the pages of this volume chroniele the most wonderful and startling revelations given to the world in any century of its history.

Though Mr. Roberts was a well-read man of great intelligence, he had heard of but very few of the authors of thesa spirit eommunications until they introduced themselves to him through the medium. He was, therefore, greatly surprised at reeeiving such startling historieal diselosures, and found it neeessary to eontinually refer to encyclopedias, biographieal dietionaries, ete., in order to establish their identity, and obtan as mueh evidence as possible of the correctness of their statements. This required the labor and researeh of years. Many of the historical sketehes of these spirits had to be translated from other languages into English, and in cases where there were no historical records extant, their statements had to be tested by the light of collateral evidence. In these revelations are pointed out many instances where historieal records have been so mutilated by Christian writers and others in the interests of Christianity that they are entirely unreliable as trme historical records. Reference is given in connection with eneh eommunication where historical evidence may be found, that the critieal reader may search for himself. From the faet that translation was neepssary in so many instanees, the idea is precluded, which some might entertain, that the medium eould have originated these communications. Even if he had been a great scholar and equal to the task of translation, there remains to be accounted for the many corrections made, the missing links furnished, as well as the masterly manner in which some of these ancient scholars expose the mutilations of history and settle questions that have caused much controversy among historical writers. No scholar living on earth at the present day, however learned, unaided by spirit intelligence, could thus have laid bare the facts in this connection, and certainly not one who, as an individual, was a marked illustration of how the ignorant and unlettered are chosen by the "powers that be" to confound the wise. The spirit nessages are given verbatim as received, but the biographical references are inserted in a few instances only, as it would make the volume too large. For a similar reason the comments of Mr. Roberts are only partially included. Enough of the latter, however, are given, to show the reader how deeply he entered into this vast subject, and also give him sone idea of the labor required to consummate this work. At many of these sittings other individuals, in company with Mr. Roberts, were present, hence there is no lack of evidence that the communications were received through the medium and carefully recorded. During the time these interviews were in progress, many questions were put to the spirits which were suggested by their statements. These were answered with a promptness and facility which proved their ability to elucidate any point bearing upon the subject under consideration. If the medium had been simply a pretender, instead of a passive instrument under spirit control, these questions would have remained unanswered.

Sone readers of this work, not knowing the essential facts connected with its history, and moved by their prejudices, born of a false education, may attempt to make it appear that the contents were produced through collusion between Mr. Roberts and the medium regardless of their misleading effects. No greater mistake could be made. From the evidence herein set forth, it appears that too much collusion has already been practiced by the Church authorities in the past for the good of mankind, the evil of which seems now in a fair way to be corrected by witnesses from whose testimony there can be no appeal. In regard to Mr . Roberts, no shadow of suspicion could reflect upon him as to collusion in this matter, for he was known to be a man of the highest integrity, whose rocord would bear examination even by his opponents. His ability, scholarly attainments, intelligence and earnestness, evinced in his exhaustive labors upon this subject to discover the truth, are apparent throughout the entire work.

Those who are unfamiliar with this mode of spirit intercourse, will searcely comprehend the ditficulties to be surmounted before these spirits were able to accomplish their self-imposed task. It seems marvelous to those who understand the laws governing these manifestations, that these spirits should be able to return and deliver so coherently this vast array of evidence, while controlling a physical organism so unlike their own ethereal organism. The consistency with which these individuals who lived on earth, not only in the remote ages of antiquity, but down through the centuries, present their testimony, every vital part in coherence with the other, is among the most remarkable events in the history of our world. In this instance the difficulties were largely augmented by the presence of a great opposing force from the spirit side, composed of those who from the very inception of the Christian religion have been engaged in promulgating its teachings, borrowed from heathen mythology and galvanized with the name and sentimentalism of Christianity. These spirit enemies of truth evidently knew that the result of these revelations reaching the world meant annihilation of the power they had gained, therefore every obstacle they could control was placed in the way to prevent their transmission.*

These witnesses were mostly the learned men of their time, embracing rulers, prophets and historians. They step to the front in the Nineteenth Century to refleet light on history's pages, by pointing out the eriminal errors eaused by interpolation and elimination, thus showing how the records of the past have been mutilated and the truth misrepresented

[^1]for selfish ends. In doing this they have fearlessly laid bare the parts where personal ambition has prompted changes foreign to the truth and misleading to mankind. The light they bring includes not only what they acquired on earth, but also the clearer knowledge gained in spirit life.

Now, in view of the many opposing factions in the religious world, each claiming to be right, many minds have doubtless questioned why this testimony as to the truth concerning the great religious questions which so agitate the human mind has been deferred so long? Why, if the lines of communication were open between the two worlds, the philosophers, teachers and learned men of old, who are in touch with these matters of such vast importance have not returned ere this to dissipate the fearful delusions which envelop humanity?

To close readers of the history of man's spiritual unfoldment, it must be evident that these revelations were brought to the attention of the world as soon as the state of man's growth enabled him to comprehend and embrace them. That the great and good in the spirit realms have been struggling for centuries through adverse conditions to consummate this great task, no unprejudiced reader can doubt. That they have failed many times in the past is equally true, consequently all efforts in that direction had to be abandoned from time to time until man had progressed to a condition which rendered success possible. Destiny, it appears, a warded that period to the latter part of the Nineteenth Century.

We need not apologize to our readers for the length of the preface. On a subject of such vast importance, with so many points to be considered, even the space we have taken does not afford scove to embrace them all.

PREFACE

SECOND EDITION.

WHEN public attention was first called to ANTIquity Unvelled, we were uncertain whether the people had reaehed a point in human progress where they could accept its revelations. Bitter opposition was expected from those who were in sympathy with the Christian religion, as well as from many others who had not the courage to probe deeply for truth on heathen or Christian ground. But wo were not prepared for such an eager demand for the book from people of all classes. Even from far off India, a call was received for a large number of copies, a sequel to the interest manifested by Eastern scholars who attended the Parliament of Religions. On every hand was manifested a desire for more light upon the religious questions which cause so much agitation in the chureh as well as beyond its pale. The light that dissipated the darkness surrounding the real origin and promulgation of the world's leading religions, was found radiating from the pages of Antiquity Unvelled, where was also found the solution of the many vexed guestions that have bafled the seholar as well as the unlearned, for many centuries. Recently new and important information bearing upon the remarkable elams of this work, has come to hand from the land of the Orient, which should not be overlooked, and to which we shall refer later.
'The World's Parliament of Religions held in Chicago in 1893, was the opportunity of the Nineteenth Century for the study of comparative religions. This important event was in the line of evolution and has done much to establish the truth as to the origin, promulgation and ethical status of the religions of the world. It made it possible for scholars from all quarters of the globe to participate in this unprecedented religious assembly and throw light upon the various religions, and especially apon the Christian religion as viewed from their standpoint. The testimony of some of these seholars has done much to support the claims of Antiquity Unveiled. The real purpose of this great religious gathering was to convince the world of the originality and superiority of the Christian religion, but it resulted in bringing to the Western world through the scholars from the East, the knowledge that Christianity is simply the offspring of religions more ancient than itself.

HOW SCHOLARS SUSTAIN THE CLAIMS OF " ANTIQUITY UNVEILED."

The following is a quotation from a paper read at the Parliament of Religions, by Prof. Goodspeed, entitled, What the dead religions have bequeathed to the living: "Formerly it was customary to find little that was original in any religion. All was borrowed. The tendency to-day is reactionary, and the originality of great systems is greatly exaggerated. * * * Many a shrine of Christianity is a transformation of a local altar of heathendom. There is no more important and no more intricate work lying in the sphere of comparative religions than an analysis of existing faiths with a view to the recovery of the bequests of preceding systems. While much has been done the errors and extravagances of scholars in many iustances should teach caution. We must pass over a large portion of this great field. Attention should be called to the wide range of materials in the realm of Christianity alone. To her treasury, bequests of usage and ritual have come from all the dead past. From Teutonic and Celtic faiths, from the Cultus of Rome, and the worship and the thought of Greece, contributions can still be pointed out in the complex structure."

Rabbi Schindler, of Boston, the eminent Biblical scholar in writing of Antiquity Unveiled, says: "I have read the book with a great deal of pleasure, but it would be impossible for me to express my thoughts concerning it in a few lines. There is so much to be said about it, that it would take many pages to express it, and to do this I have not the time. However, permit me to touch upon a few points. The purpose for which the book seems to have been written, has long ceased to be a pressing want, because all wio even superficially have read history, know that the Christian religion las developed from Jewish and Pagan sourees, and that the supposed author of it was a myth. It is well known that there is no contemporary evidence in regard to him, that if he hiss lived he was not known at all, and has not been a great ideal of a man which Unitarians wish to make of him. That people do not speak out what they think, and do not eonform at once with their better knowledge is due to their unwillingness to pose as martyrs. They let things go as they please and keep their opinions to themselves." The foregoing is an extract from a brief review of the work by this very able writer.

Henry Franik, a leading liberal writer and scholar, August 26, 1893, writes: "Antiquity Unveileis is one of the most interesting books it ever fell to my lot to enjoy. I therefore, take the first opportunity to express the effect which the remarkable book is having on me, as I suppose you would like to know. In the first place let me say that the treatise itself is the most absorbing of anything on the subject, I have yet come across, not even excepting the writings of Max Muller. Mr. Roberts has certainly given us in a comparatively small space, a most surprising quantity of information, and I would at onee recommend it as a handy compendium on the general subject of the origin of all religions. Thus far, I refer only to the actunl historical eitations with which this work abounds."
(r. W. Brown, M. D. Author of "Researches in Oriental History," writes: "Having travelled over the entire historiaal ground with diligent care, I find the positlons taken in your book mainly true."

When the attention of Laksirmi Narain, of Lahore, India, who took part in the Parliament of Religions, was ealled to Antiquity Unveiled he said that the schohars of India knew that the teachings contained in the gospels originally eame from Indla, but was surprised that the fact was known and published in this country. He was deeply interested in the work, taking a copy to Indin with him. He said he would bring it before the religions societies that he represented in his native land, and he believed its influence and the information contuined therein, would do much to break tho effect of the teachings of Christian missionaries, who were misleading the uneducated classes.

Virchand A. Gandhi, of Bombay, India, one of the chief exponents of the Jain religion at the Parliament of Religions. in speaking of India, his native land, said, "I, like my friend, Mr. Mozoomdar and others, come to you from India, the mother of religions."

Mohammed Alexander Webb in speaking of the effects of the Christian religion in India, said: "Christianity makes no progress in India among the intelligent classes because the intelligent Hindoo is conversant with the principles of all religions, while the Christian only knows hisown imperfectly, consequently none of the people listen to the Christian missionaries, but the ignorant classes."

Maharajai of Kapurthala, the head of the Sikh branch of Hindoo religion, while on his late visit to this country, in a reported interview as to Christianity, said: "No high class Hindoo will accept Christianity since there is nothing to commend it to him for acceptance. If he is an educated man, he knows how pure a system of ethics is contained in his own religion and is satisfied with that. If antiquity is to be reverenced, then his own philosophy is far superior to that offered by Christian missionaries. He can compare-weigh-judge-examine-test-and finally he is forced to conclude that divested of its external covering the Christian religion owes its origin to the great philosophies of his native land."
Wrllard J. Hull, of Buffalo, N. Y., in writing of Antieuity Unveiled, says: "Probably no book ever compiled containing au array of testimony calculated to prove a given charge, has been so astounding in its affirmations or produced a more profound consideration than the work before me. It is indeed, a momentous undertaking to charge and prove the spurious origin of a religious system claiming prescience and exclusiveness. Yet this is the burden of Antiquity Uxveiled. Scholars in all the past ages who have been disinterested and unprejudiced in their researches in the occult mysteries of the effete systems of the East, have maintained that the claims of Christianity, so far as they relate to originality, either in moral precent, doctrinary points, or the so-called miraculons conception of a god, are wholly without warrant, drawn from these older systems, and were incorporated into Christianity for the
"Antlquity Unveiled is a compilation of communications from ancient spirits with explanatory remarks and suggestions by the late Jonathan M. Roberts. These communications were given through the organism of an entranced medium. They all testify that no sueli man as Jesus of Nazareth ever lived but the name was adopted by the framers of Christianity to cover the identity of A pollonius of Tyana whose teachings and mode of life they purloined and made use of as a model upon which to construct their system. A pollonius is a historical character ; a man of rare endowments, nobility of mind and singleness of purpose. He and others assert that the teachings he prescribed were given to him in great part by the spirits of theolder masters, and that what is known as Christianity is a mixture of Brahmanic, Buddhistic, Jewish, Essenian and Gnostic teachings. The affirmations made in the book at once place the upholders of Christianity on the defensive and they must meet them or their claims fall to the ground. The internal evidence of the different testimonies carries with it the fact of genuineness. The various identities are complete, showing the absurdity of attributing the work to a single mind. That such an idea should be entertained and used for the purpose of destroying the force of the book would be much more diflicult to maintain than the assumption that the communications are genuine and emanated from the personages they purport to come from. In Axtiquity Unveined the world has the uncontrovertible testimony that Christianity is of spurious origin and the most consummate piece of plagiarism in human history is laid bare to the eyes of men. The book now enters upon its second edition. It has created a stir in studions. minds, as was prophesied when it first appeared, and it is well, too, that one whose life was devoted to the promulgation of the Spiritual philosophy with a persistence few men ever manifested, should have reared his monmment in a work of this character. Mr. Roberts was a painstaking, eantions man, and woll cquipped by nature and training to eope with the great undertaking he expoused. I helieve that the greatest uses men beeme broalened in thought, the truths of the book will become thore ateptable and lasting."

The Banner of Light, Boston, Mass.

The Truth Seeker, New York.
"The book is bristling with points, deals with a wide range of subjects, and quotes extensively from well known authors. It shows where the early Christians found the myths and rites which they adopted and relabeled, and which the Western world now knows as Christianity."

"This is one of the most remarkable books that has ever found its way to our literary table, and can hardly be described without a repetition of its own history.
."The contents are remarkable to the last degree, and any one reading them and comparing the messages with the comments can sec that no one intellect could have been the author of all. All through the comments can be seen and felt the intellectual methods and idioms of the one mind that did the the work, but of the one hundred and sixty papers from other assumed authors, no two of them are alike in any respect, a fact that will puzzle critics more than anything else about the book.
"There can ouly be one of two positions, which we shall not pretend to decide upon in any way-either that the whole book is an ingenuous and exceedingly learned and able invention, or has a basis for its contents and argument. Its claims at once raise the question that is now so rife over all the world, of the credibility of occult methods and testimony. No scholar can read this book without intense interest, for its contents contain within themselves intrinsically so much that is plausible, and so thoronghly scholarly and circumstantial in statement that the frank minded are perplexed as to which category to assign it. It is the strangest book in claims, in contents, and in the fascinating interest of its story that can be found in occult literature.

From the Alcyone, Springficld, Mass.

"Antiquity Unveiled.-The conclusion arrived at in this book is that the Jesus of the Christians is a mythical character, chiefly based upon the life and deeds of Apollonius of Tyana. The statement, if true, is overwhelming. There is a fascinating interest in reading the multiplied testimony of Apollonius, Damis, Plotinus, Potamon, Josephus and others. In the work will be found much to show that Christianity, like all other religious systems, sprang from some other religions existing before it. Christianity is not a sudden burst of revelation upon the world. It is all evolution and grew out of other decaying religions systems."

From the Boston Investigator

"A very remarkable book has just been issued by the Oriental Publishing Co., Philadelphia, entitled Antiquity Unveiled. The testimony presented is enormous and of the most startling nature. It appears from this book that for centuries, commencing with the Christian era, there was established a regular system for the destruction of all the literature that did not conform to certain standards of thought, and that whieh was not destroyed was hidden and remained hidden until recent years. From unexpected sources a mass of information has been obtained in regard to Apollonius of Tyana that places that ancient in the very foremost ranks of the world's teachers. The real facts in relation to the origin of the Essenes and other societies are given, as are also the motives for the destruction by fire of the Alexandrian and other great tibraries. Antiquity Unvelifd gives proof that many men whose memories have been cherished with veneration for centuries were nothing less than forgers and cheats, whose highest ambition was to destroy historical evidence, and found new systems of thought upon lies, plagiarisms and interpolations. That mankind has been cheated out of much that was real and valuable in ancient literature by unscrupulous zealots, all intelligent men have known, but it will be a complete surprise to many to learn the enormous extent of the vandalism and to learn the names of the vandals. Had Antiquity Unvelied been published a century or two ago, it would have been burned and its anthor also. But in this age it will survive and open the eyes of many and cause them to shun evil and deception and aim to be noble and above all-truthful." - [Juns.]

APOLLOMIUS.

Apollonius of Tyana, the Jesus of Nazareth, St. Paul and John the Revelator, of the Christian Scriptures, Returns to Earth as a Spirit, and Explains the Mysteries that have Concealed the Theological Deception of the Christian Hierarchy.

Before entering upon this all absorbing subject, it is simply proper by way of explanation to inform the reader that previous to the date given below, Mr. Roberts had been having regular weekly sittings with the medium through whom these comsmunications were received, but in reference to the sitting on May 25th, 1881, Mr. Roberts records in his notes the following : "Having been informed who would next manifest through the medium, the time having arrived, I felt a thrill of astonishment and delight of the greatest intensity, and the very air of the humble apartment in which we sat seemed filled with a mighty spiritual power, as the name of Apollonius of Tyana was announced, and we were greeted for the first time by the great Cappadocian sage and philosopher, as well as the greatest teacher and benefactor that ever drew to himself the love, admiration and reverence of the civilized world,-Apollonius, the Spirit Anointed Christ of the Orient." His communication was as follows:

[^3]of some wonderful physical manifestations of spirit power taking place through my then young mediumship, which persons living in Jerusalem had heard of, my entrance to that eity was hated, as it has been alleged the entranee of Jesths of Nazareth was hailed, with hosannats and songs of praise to one who came in the name of the Lord. And now, mark particuharly what I say ; this took place when I was thirty-three years of age. I want you to pay the elosest attention to what I shall here set forth. You will, by examining Josephus's work, 'War of the Jews,' see, that concerning the sicge of Jerusalent a certain prophecy was given, or words were spoken, as is alleged, by Jesus of Nazareth, which were fultilled. You will find what I refer to, in Matthew, $23 d$ chapter and 35 th verse, where the so-called Jesus is made to have asserted that that generation were guilty of all the blood that had been shed from Abel to Zacharias, the son of Baroeh, slan between the temple and the altar exactly thirty-four years after the alleged death of Jesus. And you will find this prophery then fultilled, while Jesus is made to have said that it was fulfilled in his time; and here you have an example of the unanthenticity of the Christian Gospels. All this I lemmed at the very time at which Flavius Josephus wrote the history of the 'W:ar of the Jews,' for I was employed and used by the Emperor Vespasian as his oracle, when in the same state as this medium is, who now sits before you.
"Never, during my mortal life, did I desire to be worshipped after death-never did I, as a mortal man, teach such a doetrine. But I was deified after my death. Nine opistles were made a present to me by Phraotes of Taxila, tmela, or rather between Babyon and India, who was a satrap, in thmse days. Those epistles contained all that is embraced in the present epistles clamed to have been written lys. Stanl. And from what I have learned, as a spirit, I eondede that I am hoth the Jesus and St. Panl of the Christian seriptures. Flattering enomgh to my ranity, but the ruin of my happiness. It is my duty, here, to confess all I ean bring to recolleetion, in order that spiritual darkness may disperse and the light of truth slime in.
"There is one thing that I desire particularly to speak of and that is the nltimate of spirit power on earth. All Materialists claim that it is impossible to restore that which is deat to life. Ijum this peint, upon my own knowledge, I asoctt that if yon havedevedoped your mortal bedy to that extent, not into What is called mornd purity, thet into at holy, trusting lowe, with a heart that beats for hamaity, if such a person can conse in contact with a fresh, yomm herly from which the sirit has been driven out before it could accomplish its mission, take that body by the hand, and with mighty will arrest that spirit, he can force it back to the body it once inhabited and make it fulfill its mission. Three things are necessary to do this-first, a perfectly healthy organism. That does not imply a strong, powerful one-it means an organism in which the spirit is greater than the body-the excess of spirit producing this result." [Here the controlling spirit caused the form of the medium to rise, and extending his arms at full length to the right and left said :] "The spirit addressing you is not confined to the limits of the form you sce before you. It not only fills the physical organism you sec, but extends far around it as well. In the time when I lived in the mortal form the old was dying out and the new being born. By this I mean that superstition, gods and all such ideas were on the wane, and man was seeking, as he is to-day, for something more practical and beneficial.
"It was not through any qualities that I possessed different from, or superior to, those of any other man, that I accomplished what I did, but through the spiritual power within and with me. This fact I want to have especially marked. The highest sensitive mortals living in any age or generation, and who are living the nearest in accord with nature's divine law of truth, will bring forth a child who may be the so-called Saviour of that generation. Those men and women who utter the highest and most beneficial truths to their fellow-mortals are the Saviours of their time.
"Further, I have this to say, I retired voluntarily, for I was neither ostracised nor banished for anything I had done, said or written, to the same island to which, as is alleged, the St. John of Revelations went, in the years 69 and $70 \mathrm{~A} . \mathrm{D}$. I there wrote what occurred through me in a trance state, not knowing what I wrote, an almost identical story with that attributed to the eo-called St. John the Revelator. That story was nothing more than an attempt of the spirit world to give the truth of the spirit life, through a mortal organism, in a day and generation that was not ripe to receive it. That is, the medium chosen for the expression of the teachings of spirits was too mueh imbued with the mysticism of Jutea and neighboring countries to he well suited for that purpose.
"What is known to you moderns as the anti-Nicene Library, contained docmments, some of which are still extant, that fully warrant you in challenging the translators of to-day as to the correctness of their production. Let them examine, if they dare, the manuscripts referred to and they will find what is now being published erroneous in many particulars. They have followed ton much what their ancestors translated, without havirg translatenl for themselves.
"Now and here, I declare that the Christian Cospels were all prached hy me-preached at Jerusalem-preached at Ephesus-preachedat Athens-preached at Philippi-preached at Rome-preached at Antioch-preached at Alexambiapreached at babyton. In all those eountries I preached, and by manipulations, and certain qualities developed in me, I healed the sick, restored the sight of the hind, and, in the way herein set forth, even raised the dead. I will try to make this raising of the dead plainer. If a child, a youth, or a maiden, whose body is fresh, full of vigor and perfection, and whose spirit has hecome detached from it, in that case I hold that one whose power is great and whose will is indomitable, while that body is yet warm, can cause the spirit to return and continue to inhabit that organism. In this way I know the dead can be restored to life. When I lived on earth atl the philosophers who taught men to expect redemption, according to more ancient authorities, taught that such redemption was to happen at that time. From what I have been able to leam ans a spirit, I was the person who was designed by spirits to fultil that mission. I cham no pre-minence ower any one. I only say that my mortal body contained more spirit than the average of men, or even the most highly developed among them, at the time I existed in mortal flesis.
"My history, as it has come down to you moderns, written by one Damis, and by others afterwards, in regard to the maln ineidents of my life, is eorrect, but in regard to the ghamour, romance and mystery of the narrative, it has no redation to me whatever. The latter was the work of my disciples and followers after my death, and was promulgated by them.

" It is my opinion, from all I can learn as a spirit, that all the Christian Gospels are borrowed from, and in fact that their origin was, the books that I brought from India, obtained in part from Phraotes, who was King of Taxila. I think those books were used by the Platonists, Eclectics and Gnostics of Alexandria, about one hundred and fifty years after. I died in the year A. D. 99, at Ephesus, and was 97 or 98 years of age, although some have enlarged the period of my earthly life to 150 years. The originals of the four gospels I obtained through one Hiram Ermandi, of Taxila, who took me forward into Farther India. They were written in characters not unlike those used by the Chinese, on thin, tough paper. They treated of the four stages of the life of Buddha. The first to his incarnation and birth, the second to his childhood and youth, the third to his mature life, and the fourth to his old age and death. These books I obtained at Singapore, at the extreme point of India, on the strait between India and Sumatra." [We here mentioned to him the fact that one week before we had received a communication from a spirit purporting to be Ulphilas, the Christian bishop of the Goths, who said he had translated from Samaritan manuscripts the epistles and gospels to which he, Apollonius, had reterred into the Gothic tongue; and that the manuscripts that he translated were the writings of himself, after the originals he obtained at Singapore, India. To which he replied.] "One Hegesippus made copies from my translations and modified versions of the originals in the Samaritan tongue and Ulphilas copied from the manuscripts of Hegesippus. I wrote in the Hebraic-Samaritan tongue, which was the language of my country."

Here the control of the medium became wholly exhausted. Bidding us a hasty and most benign adien, he left the medium more exhausted than we had ever seen him at any previous sitting. No other control of the medium was possible, and thus ended a spirit interview, which is destined to mark an era in human progress never transcended, if ever equalled, in importance and interest to all classes of the human race. We publish such facts, ats are conceded by ample authority, to be historically established concerning Apollonius. There is much that it would be desirable to add as the result of our own researches, but we will confine ourself mainly to the current history of his life and labors. As the best condensed sketch of the life of Apollonius that we have been able to find, we have chosen that of the "Penny Cyclopredia," London, 1834:

We feel that we may safely assume as true and proven, the following historical statements concerning Apollonius. He was lorn of wealthy parents at Tyana in Cappadocia, at the very priod when it is alleged the Christian's Jesus was born at Bethlehem. At the age of twelve years he was sent to Tarsus in Cilicia, the alleged birthplace and home of St. Yaul. Not liking the frivolous habits of the people of that city, with his father's consent, he retired to Rega, a town a short distance from Tarsus, where he remained until after attaining to man's entate. There he studied every system of philosophy, and perfected himself in rhetoric and general literature. There be took up his residence in the temple of Esculapius, so famed for its miraculous cures, was intiated by the priests of that temple in their mysteries, and performed cures that astonished not only the people, but even those masters of the art of healing. Ife there finally deeided to adopt the philosophy of Pythagoras, and vigorously observed the trying discipline instituted by the Samian sage. He performed the terrible task of five years silenee, which he condured cheerfully and without a murmur of complaint. He ahstained from animal food, wine and women -lived upon fruits and herbs-dressed only in linen garments of the plainest construction-went barefooted and with uncovered head-and wore his hair and beard uneut. He was especially distinguished for his beauty, his genial hearing, his miform love and kinduess, and his imperturbable cquaninity of temper. In these reseets he was the personal embodiment of the imaginary traits of the Christion Jesus, and was no doubt the original of the pictures of the so-called Nazarence, now :o venerated by uniaformed professors of the Christian religion. Determined to devote himself to the pursuit of kuowledge and the teaching of phansophy, he gave away his large patrimong to his poor relatives and went to Antioch, then a eentre of learning, but little bess noted than Athens or Alexamdriat. There he began his great mision by teathing philosophy to at number of diseiples and to the persple. He entered the temple priesthext. Philestratus dearalus the style of seaking atopted ly Apollonins, thus:
". 1 pollomins used astyle of speaking not elevated, nor swollen in the language of pertry, nor yet one tox retined, nor tox Attio; for whatever exaeded the Attio mediocrity was comsidered hy him disentant and mpleasant. He made use of no fastidions nicety in the division of his diseourses, nor any tine spun sentences; nor was he known to adopt an ironical manmer, nor any kind of apostrophising with his hearers. He spoke as it were from a tripod, to wit: 'I know,' and 'It seems to me,' and 'To what purpose is this?' and, 'You must know. His sentences were short and adamantine-his words anthoritative and adapted to the sense, and the bare utterance of them conveyed a sound as if they were sanctioned by the sceptre of royalty. Being asked once by a subtle disputant why he did not propose what side of a question he should take in argument? he replied: 'When I was a young man, I used to follow that practice, but that is no longer necessary as it is now become my duty not.to investigate, but to teach the result of my investigations.' When he was asked, by the same logician, how a wise man should speak, he said as a legislator, for it was the part of a legislator to command the multitude to do, what he himself was convinced ought to be done. In this way he conducted himself at Antioch, and converted many who were strangers to his knowledge."

Now, when it is remembered that this description of the style in which A pollonius spoke, was written by Damis, the friend, pupil and companion of the Cappadocian sage, long before Jesus Christ or the Christian seriptures were heard or thought of ; is it not remarkably evident that the original author of those scriptures was A pollonius himself. If identity of style and sentiment is possible, then was the learned Apollonius the original author of the teachings attributed to Jesus Christ ; an identity that all the altering, eliminating and interpolating by the Christian hierarchy have not been able to destroy nor even imperfectly conceal. Quoting Cudworth, Dr. Larduer, in "The Credibility of the Ciospel History," says:
"Cudworth, in his " Intellectual System," says: • It is a thing laighly probable, if not unquestionable, that Apollonius Tyamæus, shortly after the publication of the gospel to the world, was a person made choice of by the policy and assisted by the powers of the kingdom of darkness, for doing some things extraordinary, merely out of design to derogate from the miracles of our saviour Jesus Christ, and to cmable paganism the better to bear up against the attacks of Cliristianity.' So Cudworth, and I suppose that many learned men of late thmes, may have expressed themselves in a like manmer ; but I cammot assent to them."

He further cites Huct, as follows :
"He [Phmostratus] aimed," says Huet, "and thinks it to have been his principal design 'to obstruct the progress of the Christian religion, by drawing the character of a man of great knowledge, sanctity and miraculous power. Therefore he formed Apollonius after the example of Christ, and aceommodated many things in the history of our Lord to A pollonius."

Thus we see that the very learned and pious Christian, Huet, was forced to admit the eommon identity of Apollonius and Jesus-the first described by Philostratus according to the memoirs of Damis, made in the first century ; and the latter described by no one knows whom or when, but certainly not earlier than the beginning of the third century of the so-called Christian era, as now contained in what is called the New Testament. As Christian writers have been forced to admit the identity of the respective narratives, concerning $A$ pollonius and Jesus, the only question that remains to be settled is, which was the original author of the so-called Christian teachings? If this has not already been fully done, there remains very little yet to he done to complete the demonstration that A pollonius of Tyana was that author, and not Jesus of Nazareth, nor Paul of Tarsus, as is wrongly claimed by Christian writers.

After stating many reasons for his conclusions, Dr. Lardner, than whom there is no higher Christian authority, suys:
"It is manifest, therefore, that Philostratus compared Apollonius and I'ythagoras; but I do not see that he endeavored to make him a rival with Jesus Christ. Philostratus has never once mentioned our saviour, or the Christians his followers, neither in this long work, nor in the 'Lives on the sophists,' if it be his, as some learned men of the best judgment suppose ; nor is there any hint that Apollonius anywhere in his wide travels met with any followers of Jesus. There is not so murh ats an obscure or general deserption of any men met with by him, whom any ean suspeet to be (hristians of any deumnination, either catholies or hereties. Whereas I think, if Philostratus had written with a mind alserse to Jtsus, he would have laid hold of some oceasion to deveribe and disparage his followers, as enemios to the gols, and contemmers of the mysteries and solemmities, and different from all other men."

Lat it he remembered that Philostratus lived and wrote his life of Apollonins in the reign of septimus Severns, ahout the begiming of the third century A. D. At that time there cond not prosilly have been in existence any of the seripture narmtives of the life of Jesus ('hrist, so nearly andogrons to the incidents athd wents which he related coneroming Apodonims. Had there been shell persons living, ats Junts Christ and his apostles, and their Christian followers, during the time that Apollonius lived and labored throughout the then civilized world, Damis, who accompanied him during much of that time, and who recorded every thing worthy of especial note, would have made some mention of such people, either favorably or unfavorably. That he did not do so, is of itself sufficient proof that neither Jesus Christ, his apostles nor the Christian religion, had an existence either before or during that period, which was the only time in which they could have had a real existence. At all events, nothing can be more certain than the conclusion of Dr. Lardner, that Philostratus did not write the life of Apollonius to disparage the Christian religion.

But Dr. Lardner is not content to make that fatal acknowledgment of the Christian plagiarism of the life and labors of Apollonius; but makes an equally fatal acknowledgment in another direction. In disagreeing with Cudworth, Huet and others, as to the life of A pollonius, by Philostratus, having been written to oppose Christianity, Dr. Lardner says :
"With due submission I do not think that Apollonius was a man of so great importance, as is here supposed ; for it does not appear, that any adversaries of the Christians, either Celsus or Porphyry, or any other before Hierocles, at the beginning of the fourth century, under Diocletian's persecution, ever took any notice of him in any of their arguments. Nor do I know that he has been once mentioned by any Christian writers of the first two centuries. When I first met with the observation of Cudworth [herein before given] I was very much surprised, considering the silence of all early antiquity. If this observation were right, I should have expected to find frequent mention of Apollonius in the history of St. John, and the other apostles of Christ ; but there is none. We had in that space of time divers learned men, some of them as eminent for extensive literature as any men that ever lived; as Justin, Tatian, Bardesanes the Syrian, Clement of Alexandria, Irenacus, Julius Africanus, Tertullian, Minucius Felix ; not to insist on Clement of Rome, Ignatius, or Polyearp, or the histories of them. Of all these we have some remains; they lived in the first two centuries or the begimning of the third; but of Apollonius they have not taken the least notice."

Very true, Dr. Lardner, and why did they not do so? That total silence on the part of those authors of the first and second eenturies regarding so eminent a philosopher and teacher as was Apollonius of Tyana, can be accounted for upon but one theory, and that will show that it was a necessity to utterly ignore Apollonius and his philosophical and religions teachings, in order that the Christian religion could gain a foothold to usurp the ficld he had so grandly occupied. Of all the authors named by Dr. Lardner, the complete works of none of them have eome down to us. Besides, the fragmentary remains of the works of the first three centuries that have reached us, have had to pass through the hands of Eusebius, Pope Sylvester I., and their coadjutors and suceessors, who, from the beginning of the fourth century downward to the time when the art of printing ended it, were so assiduonsly engaged in interpolating, mutilating and destroying every trace of evidence, within their roach, that showed the real origin and nature of the Christian religion. It should have struck the attention of Dr. Lardner, with vastly greater force, that no where in the books of the New Testanment is there a single mention made of $A$ pollonius, if we except in a few verses of lst Corinthians, where it says. "For while one saith, I an of Paul ; and another, I am of Apollos ; are ye not carnal? Who, then, is Paul, and who Apollos, hut ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man? I have planted, Apollos watered ; hut God gave the increase." In a very ancient manuseript of this Epistle found in a monasterv of France by a Huruenot soldier, called the Codex Beza, the name is not Apollos, but Apollonius. But even this positive clue to the identity of Apollonits with the St. Panl of the Christians Was attempterl to be obliterated by substituting Apollos for Apollonius, ats it origimally stoxd. This studied avoidance of all mention of $A$ pollonins in the Christian Seriptures, is positive proof that his recognition, in any way whaterer, hy the aththors of Christianity would be fatal to their selneme of deception and frand. We wonder they had not had the emmening to ohliterate that one reference to the preathing and teathinge of Apollonits, and the atmission that his teaching was in perfect woord with the teachings attributed fosit. laul. It is an ohl saying that liars should have geod memories. This was never mose apparent than in the serexight of not eliminating that tell-1ale eonfesion from the lat Epistle to the forinthians. There it stands, amb there it will stand, thanks to the att of printing, to eonfound these ('hristian enomises of truth, and make rlear the tratal they are "pholding. Dr. Lardacr further silys:
"The first Christian writer who has mentioned him" (Apollonius), so far as I can recollect, is Origen, in his books against Celsus, written not long before the middle of the third century. When he says: 'He who would know whether magie has any power over philosophers, may read the memoirs of Nœeragenes, concerning Apollonius of Tyana, both a magieian and a philosopher. In which Mœeragenes, who was not a Christian, but a philosopher, says, that some, and no inconsiderable philosophers were taken by the magical art of A pollonius and came to him as a magician. Among them I suppose he means Euphrates, and a certain Epicurean. But we can affirm upon the ground of our own experience, that they who worship the God over all through Jesus Christ, and live according to the Gospel, and pray as they ought to do day and night, have no reason to fear anything from magic.' So Origen is led to speak in answer to some things in Celsus; but it does not appear that Celsus had at all mentioned either Apollonius, or his historian. Apollonius is mentioned by Lucian, but what he says of him is far from being to his advantage. He is also mentioned by Apuleius who was contemporary with Lucian ; nor is there any other older author now extant where he is mentioned; which must be reckoned an argument of his great obscurity, till he was set up.by Philostratus. After that time Apollonius is taken notice of by many; as Arnobius and Lactantius, and Eusebius, who were led to observe upon Hierocles, whose whole book against the Christians was founded on the memoirs of Philostratus. He is afterwards mentioned by Augustin and other Christian writers; and he is mentioned several times by the writers of the Augustin History, who flourished in the time of Diocletian, or soon afterwards, and by Dion Cassius, and by Eunapius, who commends the history of Philostratus, but says, that instead of entitling it the 'Life of Apollonius,' he might have called it the 'Peregrination of a God among Men.'"
Now it must not be forgotten that the writings of Celsus were lost or destroyed long since; nothing being known of what they were, except as Origen has reported them. Whether Celsus did, or did not, mention A pollonius, is a matter of no consequence. Celsus did not write until nearly a century after the death of Apollonius, and may never have met with the memoirs of Danis or Moragenes concerning A pollonius. That Lucian and Apuleius, who wrote while Apollonius still lived or soon after his death, should have mentioned him is sufficient to establish his historical existence. Plilostratus had not then come into possession of the memoins of Damis, Mueragenes and Maximus of Fgis, and the history of the life and labors of $A_{\text {pollonius, }}$ had been suppressed, no doubt by the influence of the priesthools of Grecee and Rome. The desire of the cultured empress Julia Domna, to learn the history of $A$ pollonius, shows that he was not unknown to fame as a distinguished philosopher, as late as the beginning of the third century, when Philostratus wrote his Life of Apollonius. Asalmitted by Dr. Lardner, all through the third century, there was frequent mention of his name and teachings. But it was not until Hicrocles in the beginning of the fourth century boldly charged upon the Christian priesthood their plagiarism of the teachings and works of A pollonius, that the latter found it necessary to set every means at work that could in any way help to eonceal the great truth that Hierocles proclaimed with such portentous force. It is true that no one now knows exactly what it was that I Iierocles wrote, for Easebius, who took upon himself the task of destroying the testimony of Hierocles, took precious good eare to destroy the work of his formidable opponent, and to give his own version of the matter instead. The reply of Euselius to Hierocles has come down to us. Why has not Hierocles' arraigmment of the ('hristian priesthood also come down to us? Let that priesthood answer.

We can in no way more effectually show the effect which the Life of A pollonius of T'yana, by Philostratus, had upon the Cloristian prisethood and clergy, than to cite the observations of Dr. S. Parker, 1). 1)., Arehdeacon of ('anterbury, published 1681. We copy it from Mr. Larduer's works. They are as follows.
"But the man of wonders is Apollonins Tyaneus, of whom they boast and insult as the true heathen Messias; in that he wrought not, as Vepasian did, one or two chance miractes; but his whole life was all prodigy, and equal to our siviour's both for the number and the wonder of his works. But here tirst we have in part shown what undoubted records we have of the life of Jestes; whereas, all the eredit of A pollonines, his history, depemty won the athority of one single man, who tesedes that he lived athumed veare atter him, ventured nothiner, as the apmethe did, in contimation of the trath, but only digresions, to take occasion of enmmmitating to the worldall the learnine be hat rakel toerether. Ning, so for wat he from immorne any lons liy the work, that he was out upm it by a great enpress, whose religious zeal in the cause would be sure to see him well rewarded. And though he made use of the commentaries of Damis, the inseparable companion of Apollonius, yet he confesses that Damis himself never published his commentaries, but that a friend of Damis communicated them to the Empress, which himself probably might have forged (as is common in courts) to pick her pocket. However, as for Damis himself, it is evident from Philostratus, his whole story, that he was a very simple man, and that A pollonius only picked him up as a fit Sancho Panza to exercise his wit upon; so that upon all occasions we find him not only baftling the esquire in disputes, but breaking jests upon him, which he always takes with much thankfulness, and more humility, still admiring his master's wisdom, but much more his wit.
"But after all, what the story of Damis was, or whether there was ever any such story, we have no account, unless from Philostratus himself; and therefore we must resolve it all into his own authority alone. And there it is evident, that Apollonius was neither a god nor a divine man, as his friends boasted; nor a magician or conjurer, as his enemies imagined, but a mere fanatic and pedantic Pythagorean ; who for the honor of his sect travelled, as many others have done, into all parts of the world; and when he returned hone told his countrymen, that all men renowned for wisdom all the world over were of the sect of the Pythagoreans; and then for advancement of their authority told strange and prodigious tales of their wonder-working power. Though here either he, or his historian, has acquitted himself so awkwardly, as utterly to spoil the tale and defeat the design. This Eusebius has shown at large in his book against Hierocles, by taking to pieces all parts of the story, and discovering all its flaws and incoherences.
"But I shall content myself with proving the vanity of the whole from the notorious falsehood of one particular narration, upon which depends all that extraordinary power which he pretends to; and that is his conversation with the Indian Brahmins, from whom, if we may believe his account of himself, he learned all that he could do, more than the common philosophers of Greece. And if this prove a romance, all the rest of his history must avoidably follow its fortune."

Here some of the most trivial things related by Damis are cited to show that the Brahmans of India imparted nothing worth knowing to Apollonius. And then he continues:
"And that is the most I can make of the story ; though I know that Ifuetius is of opinion, that all the substantial miracles are stolen out of the gospels and the Acts of the Apostles, and that for the most part, in the words and phrases of St. Lake. And this he has endeavored to make grond by a great variety of parallel instances ; and thinks it a manifest diseovery both of the vanity of Philosiratus, and the imposture of $A$ pollonits, where he is only aforned with borrowed feathers, but a great accession to the credit of our Saviour, that when his enemies would frame the iden of a divine man, they were fored to steal their best feathers from his picture. So that, he says, it was no wonder that Hieroeles should so contidently compare the miracles of Apollonins to those of Jesus, when those of Jesis were with so little disguise clapped upon A pollonias.
"This were a pretty discovery if it stood upon good grounds ; but alas! most of the parallelisms are so foreed, or so slender, or so far fetched, that it were easy to make as many, and as prohable, between any other histories whatever. And indeed, in such a design as this of Phifostratus, viz, to make up a story as full of strange things as he could contrive, it is scarcely possihle not to have hit upon some things like some of those miracles which are recorded in the grospels; so that in some few of them there may be some resemblanee, as particularly there seems to the in that of the Gadarene damoniac, and the Coreyrean youth; yet it is very obvious to apprehend, that this might happen, not by design, bat by chance. And whereas Hnetius will needs have it, that Philostratus has stomen not only the stories, but the very worls of St. Lake, I find no instance of it, only in this one relation, where they looth, it seems, hise the word Basamichein; and this they might easily do without theft or imitation, it being the eommon (ireck word that signifies toment ; so that they could no more arod that in (freek, than werould this in rendering it into English. Nay, setting ande this one story, I tind no reemblance between the history of Philostratus and that of the gospels, that I scarce know any two storice more malike ; for it isolvions tomany man that reads Philost ratus, that his whole design was to follow the thatin of the old heathen mythology; and that is the betton of his folly, by his story to gain historieal eredit to the fables of the poets. So that it is a very true and just comsure which Ludovicus Vives has given of him, that ats he had emdeatored to imitate Ifomer, so he lad abmulantly out-liod him. For there is maredy any thingextraodinary reported in the whote history in which hedees not apprarently dexign aither to verify or to rectify some of that himi hallal-singors tales; lat expedially in conjurine Arhilles nut of his tomb, and diseoresing

"Sum yet after all, few of A pollonims" miracles are sificiently vonderd, even in his own history; v. g. the hast that I mentioned, of the apparition of Achilles; which had no other testimony but of Apollonius himself, who stubbornly refused to have any companions or witnesses of the fuet; beside many other absurdities in the story itself; as his rising out of the tomb five feet long, and then swelling to twice the length; his being forced to vanish away at cock-crowing, and the nymphs constantly risiting him.
"Aud so again, he pretended to understand all langnages without learning any [This is a positive misstatement on the part of Dr. Parker.] and yet when he came to the Indian King he was forced to converse with him by an interpreter. And whereas the story tells us of the devil's being cast out of a young man by a mandate from the Bralmans, yet it gives us no account of the event of it, only they pretended to do it ; but whether it was effectually done, we do not find that either A pollonius or Damis ever inquired.
"But the great miracle of all was his vanishing away at his trial before Domitian in the presence of all the great men of Rome. But then, though our historian be very desirous we would believe it, yet he falters afterwards, like a guilty liar, in his confidence. For whereas at first he positively affirms, that he quite vanished away; at last he only says, that he went away. And this, though he would seem to affirm that it was after a wonderful manner, and nobody knows how, is a pitiful abatement to the bigness of his former expression, 'vanishing away.' Though the truth is, if he stood to it, it must have unavoidably proved itself a lie ; for it is utterly incredible, that so strange a thing as that should have been done in so great a presence, and yet never any notice taken of it.
"But in the last place, the historian would fain bid at something of his hero's appearing after death; yet he does it so faintly, that in the conclusion of all it comes to nothing especially when he tells us, that the time of his death was altogether unknown, and that the uncertainty of it took in no less than the compass of thirty years. And then they that were so utterly at a loss as to the time of his decease, and that for so long a space, were very likely to give a very wise account of the certain time of anything that he did after it.
"But how, or to whom did he appear? Why, to a young man, one of his followers, that doubted of the immortality of the soul, for ten months together after his death. But how, or where? Why, the young man being tired with watching, and praying to A polionins, that he would appear to him in this point, one day fell asleep in the school, where the young men were forming their several exercises; and on the sudden he starts up in a great fright, and a great sweat, crying out, 'I believe thee O! Tyaneas.' And being asked by his companions the meaning of his transport: Why, says he, do you not see Apollonius? They answer him, No; but they would be ghad to give all the world if they could. It is true, says he; for he only appears to me, for my satisfaction, and he is invisible to all others. And then he tells them what he had said to him in his sleep concerning the state of souls. This poor account of tho dream and vision of an over-watched boy, is all that this great story affords, to vie with our Saviour's resurrection.
"And now upon the review of this whole story, it seems evident to me, that this man was so far from being endowed with thy extraordinary divine power, that he does not deserve the reputation of an ordinary conjurer; for though Huetius has taken some pains to prove him so, yet he gives no evidence of it beside the opinion of the common people ; and if that were enough to make a conjurer, there is no man of an odd and singular humor (as Apollonius affected to be) who is not so thought of by the eommon people. And, therefore, when he was accused for it before Domitian, the emperor, upon coming to hear the catlse, slighted both him and his aceusers and dismissed him from the court for an idle and fantastic fellow.
"And it is manifest from the whole series of his history, that he was a very vain man, and affected to be thought something extraordinary, and so wandered all the world over in an odd garb to be gazed at and admired, and made himself eonsiderable, in that age ly wit, impudence and flattery; of all which he had a competent share. And for his wonder-working faculty which he needs pretend to, he fetched that as far off as the East Indies, that is, the farthest off; as he thought, from confutation ; and yet the aceount which he has given of those parts is so grossly fathons, that that alone convicts his whole life of imposture and impudence."

Fuch was the constemation produced by the tramslation of Philostratus' "Life of Apollonius of Tyana," into the morlern tongucs of Eurone, that ('laristians lath Catholicand Protestant, serm to have cast diseretion fo the winds and to have floundered intothe loge from which it was their chicfaim to ratapue. It will be seen that weither Dr. Parker, Inct, nor Dr. Lardaer (6) bumble tas deigned to notice the real and umdeniable facts combered with the life and habors of A pollonins, but spent all their ingenuity inmaking themest of the fietionsorexageraterl recitals which were so common th acemplaniment of anciont historical natratives, not one of which does not mingle the marvelous with the well authenticated events, which constitute the ground work and object of all ancient historical records. This avoidance of all notice of the philosophical and religious teachings of Apollonius, by those learned theologians, shows, as nothing else could, their conscionsness, that A pollonins was really the Jesus, Pau! and John of the "New Testament Scriptures."

We have shown that Apollonins for several years taught and preached at Antioch, and converted many, who were strangers to his knowledge, to a belicf in his doctrines. It was owing to his great renown as a spiritual medium and teacher, acquired at Antioch, that certain Jews who had become acquainted with his gifts as a medium, and the remarkable manifestations of spirit power occurring through him, prevailed upon him to go to Jerusalem. This visit, he tells us, he made to Jerusalem when he was just thirty-three years of age, the very age at which it hasbeen alleged that Jesus began his heaven appointed mission. He tells us he was then hailed upon his entrance into that city, by the people, as it has been alleged the entrance of Jesus of Nazareth was hailed, with hosamnas and songs of praise to one who came in the name of the Lord. He refers no doubt to the following portion of the (xxi Matthew 9), "And the multitude that went before, and that followed, cricd Fosanna to the son of David; blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord; Hosanna in the highest. And when he came into Jertisalem, all the city was moved, saying, Who is this? and the multitude said, This is Jesus, the Prophet of Nazareth of Galilee." It is true that A pollonius says nothing of his experience at the hands of the Jewish priesthood, and we are left to infer that their treatment of him was less agreeable to him than his reception by the multitude. It is true that there is no historical mention extant, of this visit of Apollonins to Jerusalem, and therefore we may justly conchde that the writer of "The Gospel According to Matthew," after making use of such a historical manuseript to serve his purpose of robbing Apollonius of his duly aequired fame, by substituting the mythical Jesus in his stead, took special care to destroy the historical original. That Apollonius never returned to Jerusalem, until he did so thirty-two years afterward as the oracle in Vespasian's camp at the overthrow of Jerusalem, would indicate that the usage he had received at the hands of the Jewish priesthood, on his first visit, was such as to deter him from again placing himself in their power. As strong evidence of the correctness of this conjecture, it is well to note, that Judera was the only civilized conntry that $\Lambda_{\text {pollonins did not visit, }}$ and throughont which he did not preach, and in which he did not receive the fraternal reception of every order of priesthonel. That Damis made no record of this visit of $A$ pollonitus to Jerusalem, may be reasonably accounted for by the facts that it wats made before Damis began his memoirs, and in all probability Apollonins was too much disgusted with the narrow bigotry of the Jewish hierarehy to inform Damis about it. Apollonius has not told us what followed his joyous reception by the people of Jerusalem. The writers who have made use of that event to exalt their mythical man-god, say, regarding the latter: "And the blind and the lame came to him in the temple and he healed them. And when the chief priests and seribes saw the wonderful things that he did, and the children erying in the temple, and saying, Hosanna to the sion of David ; they were sore displeased, and said unto him, Hearest thou what these say? And Jesus saith unto them, lea; have ye never read, 'Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise?' And he left them, and went out of the eity into Bethany; and he lodged there." How mueh of that is taken from the historical memoirs of Apollonius, we may not exrtainly know ; but nothing is more thoroughly anthentivated than the fact that Apollonins was a womderful hoaling modium-that he restored sight to the blind, strength to the lame, health to the sick, life to those apparently dead, and prophexied with an aceuracy that astomished the then eivilized world. That he did all these things at Jerusalem, is most probable, if not certain. Aud thas, through the return of the spirit of Apmilonits, we have a chapter of history revived that the writere of the Christian seriptures supposed they had entirely oblitemated from its records.

Abstract

"I Salute You, Sir :-All subordinate conditions, or such as may be regarded as of an inferior character, must give way where a great object is to be obtained. The spirit opposition to what I am here to say is of the most intense character. Everything has been done that it was possible to do to prevent my coming here. In the first place I know personally the truth of all that I shall here say; secondly, I know that the evidence exists that will support all I say ; and thirdly, I know that Apollonius of Tyana, my master or teacher, was the Jesus Christ of the Christians. We must now proceed in a systematic way to prove the truth of what I have said. The place where I was born was Ephesus. I was an Ephesian and not a Cappadocian nor a Ninevite. I was bom in the city which was the chief seat of the worship of The Great Diana of the Ephesians. The bond of unity between myself and Apollonius was, that we were both mediums in whose presence materialized spirits appeared. When I was present with Apollonius the spirit manifestations that occurred were stronger, and so with the manifestations that occurred through me, when he was present. A pollonius made two journeys to India, and not one as is generally supposed. The last of these was about from A. D. 45 to 50 . It was, when on that journey, that he reached Farther India, whence he brought back the Indian gospels in relation to the Hindoo god Christos. The first journey to India, by Apollonius, was about from 36 to 38 A . D. On that journey he only obtained a few extracts from those Hindoo gospels. The first attempt of Apollonius to introduce the religion of Christos in Western Asia was made shortly after his return from India, at Nazarita, a small village near Gaza. He there formed a community according to the Gymmosophic idens and practices. The principle of initiation is expressed in that fimous text of what is termed the Scriptures where it is said, 'Thou art a priest after the order of Melchisedec.' The origimal meaning of that was, 'A priest after the order of the Sun.' It was also the Parsee worship and was at a remote period derived from the 'Golden Iules' of Hermes Trismegistus or from Hesiod. The last named was the author of "The Seven Before Thebes" and "Agamemnon." The works of both those ancient writers contained the expression, 'Thon art a priest Mechel forever atter the order of the Sun.' The first works that my master brought from India contained the tachings of Christos, before their reformation by Deva Bodlisatona, in the reign of the king of Asoka. Bodhisatoun was prime counsellor of that king. His real name was Azabelle. He nos a Tamil King. Azabelle meant the rising Sim. The books which Apollonius afterward nsed, he obtained on his second journey, when he went to visit Iarchus, the chief of the Wise Men, in Farther India, near Singrapore. I went with him on his seeond journey and not on his first. I never saw Phraotes the King of Taxila. I was a disciple of Apolfonius and remanedat Ephesus and at Thessatonica while he was away on his first journey to India. The most important part of the life of Apollonius extended over the reigns of Tiberins, Caligula, Clandins, Noro, Vespasian, Titus, Domitian, Nerva and into the reign of 'Trajan. I passed to spirit abont 90 A . D. I wrote memoirs of A pollonins from alunt $3+$ A. D. tos0 A.D. The (ireek followers of Promet heus mutilated those memoirs. They were greatly opposed to the introduction of the Indian Christas among the (ireeks, and were exceedingly opposed to Apollomins and his leachings. Apollonius and myself were youthfol companions when I was at Tyana. Apollonins was the real Paul, this is rembered phan by the Epistles to Timotly: I was called Timothens ly the Thessalonians. What yon have received in relation fo Apollonins of Trana is all tres. Apoblonins was the foumber of the Nazarite sect. The word Nazarite meant to elear oft' the head bare. Ques. I was then at Alexambria in Egypht, where I died. I left my writings and other pronerty to my sister, samostra. After my death sle eame to Alexathlria mat carried my writhge to Tyana in ('appadocia. Marcion and Lucian obtained mutilated copies of my Memoirs concerning Apollonius and used them in shaping their gospel tragedies. If further information is needed about those matters it will be given through Aronamar."

We regard this communication as of the very highest import and value as a means towards solving some of the most perplexing problems counected with the origin and real nature of the Christian religion. It was intended that this communication should have been given at the sitting, one week previously ; but the opposing spirit influences were so strong that it became necessary to defer giving it until a more favorable opportunity. As it was, when given, the opposition at times was so great as to compel frequent breaks in the continuation of the testimony of this thoroughly informed spirit, and he could only proceed by the greatest power of will and the complete control of the medium's organism. Very little can be gleaned from biographical or historical sources eoncerning Damis, and very little of that can be relied upon, on account of the efforts that have been made to conceal everything possible that was true in relation to A pollonius of Tyana and his Nazarite disciples. We take the following brief reference to him from the Nouvelle Biographie Gencrale:
"Damis a Greek historian, of Assyrian origin. He wrote in the first century A. D., and was an inhabitant of New Nineveh. He joined Apollonius of Tyana in that eity, and aeeompanied that thaumaturg in his journeys. He wrote an aceount of those journeyings, in which he inserted the discourses and prophecies of his master. This work seems to have served as the basis of the Life of Apollonius by Philostratus. The style of it was rude and indicated him to be a foreigner raised among barbarians."

The Biographie Universelle in treating of A pollonius of Tyana, alludes to Damis as follows:
"He (Apollonius) quitted Antioch, followed only by two servants, and went to Nineveh, when chance offered him a new diseiple, named Damis, who became his faithful companion and remained attached to him as long as he livel. This forng man who was versed in the languages of the East, was very useful to his master on his journey, fand constantly expressed for him a religious veneration that often amounted to superstition.
"Damis had written very full details concerning his master. These writings bequeathed hy him to one of his relatives, at a hater period hecame the property of Julia, the wife of Septimins severus. This princess entrusted to Philostratus, an cloquent sophist of high reputation, the cluty of editing the Life of Apollonius, the philosopher of Tyana."

This is about the extent of what has been preserved to us of references to Danis by name ; but in the Pauline Epistles, there can be little doubt that he is referred to as Demas. In that connection I cite the following reference to Demas from MeClintock and Strong's Cyclopredia of Biblical Literature ;
"Demas, a companion of the apostle Paul during his first imprisomment at Rome (A. 1). 41), called by him his fellow laborer, Synesgos, in Philemon, 2t; see also Col. iv, 14. At a later period ( $2 d$ Tim. iv, 10) we find him mentioned ats having deserted the apostle through love of this present world, and gone to Thessalonica (A. D. 64). This departure has been magnified by tradition into an apostacy from Christianity ( Wee Epiphanius, Heres li. 6), which is by no means implied in the passage."

There may seem to be a contradiction between the two claims: on the part of the spirit that he was both Damis or Demats and Timotheus or Timothy, and yet there may be no such contradiction after all. The spirit tells us he was called by the Thessalonians Timotheus. I will show, I think, very clearly that the testimony of the spirit is fully born out by the testimony of the New Testament, but I will defer this until it is reached in its proper order.

It seems from the spirit's testimony that there is hardly anything said of him, even in the biography of Apollonins by Philostratus, which is strictly true, and much that cammot be true; but, for this, Ihilostratus may not have been to blame. No one can now tell what Philostratus really wrote concerning Apollonins and his diseiples, for his work has been motilated and interpolated to suth ath extent as to leave it of little value on many prints of the history of the (appaderian saviour. Philestratus, as his work hats come down to us, is mate to say that Apollonias of Tyamat marle ouly one jommer to India, while it is eretatu that he met have mathe two ; amt the wents of the two jourtegs have been so internlended ath at every step. This could hardly have been possible, if the Memoirs of Damis had been followed in good faith by Philostratus, as it, no doubt, was. The confusion, probably, was the result of the bad faith of the subsequent copiers of Philostratus's work. We are told in that work, as we now have it, that Apollonius first met Damis at Nineveh when he was on his way to India from Ephesus the first time. The spirit tells us that this was not the fact. For he was himself an Ephesian, and had known and was a companion of $A$ pollonius in his youth. That he was a pupil and Disciple of Apollonius, while the latter was at Ephesus, as he elaims to have been, is so highly probable, and so consistent with what we know of the intimate relations existing between Damis and Apollonius as to render the fact certain. It is known that Apollonius could not induce any of his Ephesian disciples to accompany him to India, and he was compelled to set out with only two serving attendants. Spirit Damis claims that he was one of the disciples who declined to accompany Apollonius on that journey, and says he was at Ephesus and Thessalonica during the absence of A pollonius while on that journey. Damis explains the nature of the bond of unity that existed between him and his master, and makes known the fact that they were both mediums through whom spirits materialized in a remarkable manner when they were mutually present and controlled by the operating spirit influences together. A grander band of spiritual influences never before or since united and held two men together throughout their protracted lives. From what the spirit says, it would appear that Apollonius made his first journey to India about A. D. 36, at which time he obtained a comparatively few portions of the Hindoo gospels.

And here we come to a statement of the spirit, which, to say the least, is of surprising import. Damis tells us that it was Apollonins of Tyana, who, after his return from India, about A. D. 38 , founded the commmistic sect of the Nazarites at a village near Gaza, which was called Nazarita, and that he modelled it after Giymosophic ideas of ethics, theology, social polity and religious observances. If this is the fact there cannot be a doubt as to the common identity of Apollonius, the Founder of the Nazarite sect, and Sanl of Tarsus or Paul, who was charged before Felix, governor of Judea, by Anamias the high priest of the Jews, through the orator Tertullus, in the following worls (Actsxxiv, 5) :
"For we have found this man a pestilent fellow, and a mover of sedition among all the Jews throughout the world, and a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes."

As I say in commenting on the commmication of Ananias, the Jewish highpricst, it is as certain as can be, that there never was a religious seet in Judea or elsewhere that wats called the sect of the Nazarenes, while it is just as certain that there was a Nitarite sect, and as it appears, it took its rise in Judea, near its southern border. If Panl was a Nazarene and the ringleaker of that sect, is it not very strange that none of the Episthes which are attributed to him say anything whatever about him, Paul, having been, or being a Nazarene. Indeed if we may believe the gospel of St. Natthew, to be a Nazarene did not denote membership in any religious sect, but merely a residence in a city called Nazareth. See Mathew ii, 23, where it is said:
"And he (Joseph) came ont and dwelt in ac city called Nazareth; that it might be fultilled which was spoken by the prophets. He shall be called a Nazarene."

If to be a Nazarene, then, was to belong to a sect called Nazarenes, that which was spoken by the prophets, has never yet been fultilled. It has been supposed that Nazarencs was a name given to the first Christians by their alversaries. It is a conceded fact that no sect that called themselves Nazarenes had any existence before the second century, amd, therefore, that I'aul, whodid not survive the first century, couhd not with any proprety have been charged with being the ringleader of the Natarenes. On the other hand, if $A$ pollonius was the ringleader of the Nazarites, a well known religious sect of that time, and if that sicet was bitterly hated by the Jews, ats was the case, it beeomes almost eertain that the man acensed before Felix at all. In view of the further facts, that the man :acensel did not deny that he was the ringleader of the sect which was so hated ly the Jews, and that he elaimed to be a Roman citizen and only amenable to the Roman law, what was almost a certainty, with those facts aded, herame a certainty, and the stuces-sind contradietion. Not only so, lat the truth of the spirit's te-amony in relation to the fomming of the Nazarite ret at reat. Th pophe, whe, in the seand entury athl atter, were called, or called themselves Nazarenes, were not Christians. "They believed it was necessary to unite the Jewish ceremonial law with the precepts of Jesus, and refer to a Hebrew gospel of Matthew." In fact they were even more Jews than Christians, and it is hardly likely that St. Paul was one of that seet, although the writer of Aets has exhausted his ingenuity and convieted himself of falsehood in trying to do so.

What the spirit says in regard to the passage of Scripture: "Thou art a priest after the order of Melehisedec," is very peeuliar as being a formula of initiation among the Nazarites. We are told by the spirit that this ceremonial expression originally meant "a priest after the order of the sun," and was used in that sense by the Parsees-and that it was at a remote period derived from the "Golden Rules" of Hermes Trismegistus, or from Hesiod. Nothing is more certain than that Hermes Trismegistus and Hesiod were priests after the order of the Sun, the one as of Oromazda or Ormuzd, and the other as of Prometheus. There is something so peculiar, not only about the text or passage to which the spirit of Damis refers, but that it should be so positively connected with Apollonius and the Nazarite sect, whieh he seems to have founded, that I will quote the passage of the New Testament in which it is used or referred to. In Heb. iii, 1, we read:
"Wherefore, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus."

Here we have Christ Jesus made an Apostle and High Priest of the profession of the holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling. Who were those holy brethren? What was their profession? In what manner were they partakers of the heavenly calling? Who made Christ Jesus the Apostle and High Priest of those holy brethren? When those questions are answered, we will find that the spirit of Damis has suggested the answer to them all. It has been strongly contended that the author of the other Pauline Epistles was not the author of the Epistles to the Hebrews. Why? Because it eomes too near to disclosing the true authorship of all those epistles. In none of the other epistles was Christ Jesus made to figure as an Apostle and a High Priest. In Heb. iii, 14, we read :
"Seeing (hen that we have a great high priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of Gorl, let us hold fist our protersion."

Here we have the same Christ Jesus figuring as a great High Priest that is passed into the "heavens." If the expression had been, is passed into heaven, it would not so plainly have been indicated that this great High Priest was the great liminary of day which so grandly presides over the celestial hierarchy. We have no doubt that the words "Jesus the Sou of (ioul" in that passage are a fraudulent interpolation in a Nazarite epistle to the Hebrews, and that that Nazarite epistle was written by the founder of the Nazarite sect, Apollonius of Tyana ; and more than that, that it was for writing that very epistle to the Hebrews, that Ananias, High Priest of the Jews, through Tertullus, charged him, Apollonius, before Felix, with being "a mover of sedition among all the Jews, throughout the world." In Heb. v, 4, 5, 6, we read:
"And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron.
"So also Christ ghorified not himself to be made an Hirh Priest ; hat he that said unto him, Thou art my Son, to day have I begotten thee.
"As he saith also in another place, Thou art a priest forever after the order of Melehisedee."

Now it is very evident that neither of those sayings could have been addressed to Christ Jesus, for the first saying wats used in P'salms ii, 7, and the second in Pralms ex, 4. There will hardly be any one who will be rash enough to claim that either of those sayings was addressed to Christ Jesus, for the latter was never heard of as gol, man or myth, until many humdred years after those Psalms were compsed. In Heb. wii, $1,2,3,4$, we read :
"For this Melehiserlee, king of salem, priest of the most high God, who met Abraham returning trom the sanghter of the kinges and blessed him;
"To whom also Abratham gave a tenth part of all ; first being by interpretation king of righternshess, and after that, abso, king of rialem, which is king of Peace;
"Withont father, without mother, withont deseent, having neither heriming of days nor end of life; but mate like unte the fon of (exd ; abideth a priest contimatlys.
"Now consider how great this man was, unto whom even the pat riateh Abraham gase the temt of the - peils."

Gis we will robsider how treat this man was without a father, without : mother, athe withont dereont, athl whot hat nether beximing mor end of lite; and we have eome ththe conclusion that he was no man at all, and no high priest or king who ever reigned among mankind. This Melehisedec was something else than a man, and we conclude that he was what the spirit of Dimis says he was, the King of Day, and High Priest in the heavens, the Solar orb, personified as a human king and high priest. It would beirrational to conehde otherwise. The Sun is a king without father, or mother, or descent, and without begimning or end of life, and the only such king that human imagination can even plausibly conjure up. In Heb. ii, 11, we read:
"If therefore perfection were by the Levitical priesthood, (for under it the people received the law,) what further need was there that another priest should rise after the order of Melehisedee, and not be called after the order of Aaron."
Here we can sce that it was this attempt on the part of A pollonius, the founder of the Nazarites, to subvert the Jewish priesthood, who claimed their priestly authority from the high priest Aaron, and to raise in its stead a priesthood after the order of Melchisedec or the order of the Sun; that was also the ground of the hatred toward him by the Jews and the cause of the charge that he sought to create sedition everywhere among the Jews. I will close my quotations in connection with this remarkable spirit disclosure with the following from Heb, vii, 21 :
"For those" (the Jewish priests) "priests were made without an oath; but this," (the High Priests of the Nazarites) "with an oath by him who said unto him. The Lord Sware and will not repent. Thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec."

Now the language there referred to is used in Psalms ex, 4, and was evidently used by some priest, perhaps some high priest, aeeording to the order of the Sun, which order of priests was in very ancient times designated as of the order of Melchisedec ; or, as the spirit of Damis testifies, it was but a modification of a similar expression used by both Hermes Trismegistus and Hesiod as follows: "Thou art a priest Meehel forever after the order of the Sun." I certainly have adduced sufficient evidence to show the substantial correctness of this surprising testimony of the spirit of Damis, that Apollonius was the founder of the Nazarite sect, and that the passarges in which the New Testament gives the expression "Thou art a priestafter the order of Melehisedee" is taken direetly from the formula of priestly ordination among the Nazarites : and indeed, enough to show that the Epistles to the ILehrews, is the appeal of the great founder and high priest of the Nazarites to the Jews to abandon their sacerdotal organization, and join the holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, ly becoming priests forever of the order of the Sun, designated as Melehisedee, King of Salem. Thus, point after point that has completely confounded theologians for centuries, is being explained clearly and satisfactorily through the testimony of returning spirits who have personal knowledge of the matters on which their communications bear. The great probability is that the Epistle to the Hebrews was written at an earlier period than the other Pauline Epistles, and just after he founded the Nazarite sect at Nizarita. On his second journey to India, he obtained the full Reformed Hindoo Gospels of Deva Bodhisatoua which had been drawn up by Deva, and adopted at the Council of Asoka, ly the Buddhist followers of Christos.

These are points of information in relation to the second journey of Apullonius to India that are worthy of especial attention. The attempt of Azabelle, king of Asoka, to reform the Hindoo religion and weaken the arlitrary power and rapacity of the Buddhist priesthood, ats a matter of course, called forth a deadly hostility on the part of the brahman priesthood ; and, although Agabelle was powerful enough to carry his reform over the greater part of India, as the momuments still standing in varions parts of that vast eomentry show, yet it is known that in later years the Buddlist reformers were driven into southem India and finally out of the romentry, as pricsts of an estahlished religion, the last Buddhist patriarch, bodhishomath, taking his departure for China in the early part of the C'lristian era. The Buddhist reformation took place aloout from 2.0 to 290 B . ( . When Apollonins went to India in A. 1). 45 or 46 in search of the reformed Buddhist gespels, he was compelled to trawel into Farther India, as Damis tells us, (o) fint them, on which journey, Damis says be accompanied him. It was there, near Ningapere, at the extreme southern limit of Farther India that Apollonius found Iarchus, and thromgh the kind olliees of Phraotes, king of Taxila, obtained from him the reformed Hindow (iospels, of Devat Bedhisatouat with which he returned to his Nazarite followers, and hegan those moditications of his originat plat whirh hed to surh bitter and Hermogenes, which Apollonius in his letter to Timotheus, or Damis, refers to as follows, 2 d Tim. i, 15 :

"This thou knowest, that all they which are in Asia be turned away from me ; of whom are Phygellus and Hermogenes."

The spirit of Hermogenes, in his communication, fully explains the nature of the controversy between himself and his Essenian assoeiates and Apollonias whieh grew out of $A_{\text {pollo- }}$ nius's sacerdotalizing tendencies, which were considered by his opponents as destructive of the communistic polity of the Nazarite sect. If Azabelle was a Tamil king, that was another reason why the Brahmans, who were Aryans, and who used the Sanscrit tongue, sought the more determinedly to drive out the Tamil reformation. At all events the Tamil population of India, still remaining there, are to be found in Southern India and on the island of Ceylon. It would seem that Iarchus found a refuge in the jungles amid the tigers, whose numbers gave the name to the neighboring eity of Singapore, which meant the City of Tigers. In that distant and last refuge of the reformed Buddhism of Deva Bodhisatoua from the hands of Iarchus, the chief of the reformed religion, Apollonius obtained the gospels whieh he afterward used in propagating the Essenian faith, and whieh have been since modified into what are ealled the Christian Gospels. Of these faets there can be no reasonable doubt. It has long been known that the Christian Seriptures could not possibly be what they purported to be, by those who songht, without prejndiee, to comprehend them, but to find out where they originated and what they really were, has never been possible until these spirit testimonies in relation to them were given.

What the spirit says about the reigns of the Roman emperors during which the most distinguished part of the labors of Apollonius of Tyana were performed is eertainly true, for they extended from A. D. 33 to A. D. 9 or 99 . It has never been known how long Damis lived or whether he survived Apollonins. He tells us he did not, but that he died ten or twelve years before him at Alexandria in Egypt. This accounts for the fact that D.mis gave no aceount of A pollonins's work while in retirement on the island of Patmos, and his subsequent publication of the (ionpel of St John and the Apocalypee, as they are called, at Ephesus, where he closed his long and remarkable labors.

The spirit explains another point which has been lost sight of in the confusion of the history of the first three centuries of the so-called Christian era, and that is, that the Greek and Roman priestly followers of the God Promethens were bitterly hostile to the Nazarite and Essenian propagation of the teachings and doctrines relating to the Hindoo Saviour Christos (C'hrishma, as he has been miscalled) and not less hostile to Apollonius himself. They no doubt, did all they could to ereate prejudice and doubt concerning the Christosite teachings of that real founder of the Christian religion. It is imposible to now judge how far the writings of Apollonius came into the hands of Marcion and Lucian in their original shape; those two Greek writers being none others than the St. Mark and St. Luke of the Synoptical gospels ; and it is equally impossible to know to what extent the latter altered them before they came into the hands of Eusebius of Cesarea and his contemporaries and coadjutors of the Council of Nice. It is enough to know that in spite of all this modifying by the priests of Prometheus, and the pricstly founders of the Orthodox Chrisfian religion, the Apollonian or Essenian Christosism is shown to pervade it from begiming to end, and that there is nothing original or true comnected with it as a distinctive or original religion.

We now come to the consideration of what the spirit says in relation to Apollonias of 'Tyana leing the real P'and, rembered plain by the epistles of Path to Tintothy. Damis tells us that he was himself ealled Timothens hy the Thessatonians among whom he resided at the time the Episthes to Timothy were written. It appears that he had gone into Thessaloniea yats before as a subordinate teacher of the philosophical, theologieal and sorcial dectrines of the Nazatrites, and when Apollonins wats sent to Rome, after his return from his seeond journey to India, that Damis, whose name had been ehanged to Demas, left him and went again to Thessalonica. It is proper to here say that in reply tomy question: Why were you ralled Timothen* lỵ the 'Thesatomians"? he replied: "In the Thessatonian diated Timotheus meant the same as leader or hishop," No one can read the two Epistles to 'Timothy and not see that the premen to whon they were ahdresed was one who had leen the innmediaterpilil of the writer of them. The words addresed to 'Timothy: are: " ["uto 'limothy, my own onn in the fath." It is true that it has been represented and supposed that Timotheus was at Ephesus when those two letters were written, but if we understand the import of what the spirit said upon that point, this is a mistake, the result no donbt, of the purpose to coneeal the identity of the Timothens who was addressed by Apollonius, who was none other than his devoted disciple Damis. These letters to Timothy do not follow the Epistles of Paul to the Ephesians, as they would naturally have done if they had been addressed to an Essenian bishop of Ephesus. They follow the 2d Epistle to the Thessalonians, thus showing very strongly that the statement of Damis that he was the Timotheus addressed is substantially correct. The name Timotheus was therefore rather the theological rank of the person addressed than the given name of that person. The one circumstance that seems to strongly weigh against this claim of spirit Damis is, that in the 20 Epristle to Timothy there seems to be a manifest reference to Damis himself where in chapter is ${ }^{*}, 9,10$, we read: "Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me. For Demas (manifestly Damis) has forsaken me, having loved this present world and is departed unto Thessalonica." Whatever seeming confusion and inconsistency there may appear about this matter it can all be the result of the bungling alterations that are manifest throughout the so-called Pauline Epistles. Why should we not prefer to accept the testimony of this spirit who has given so many proofs of his personal knowledge of the things about which he testifies, to the mintruthful versions of these same things, which have been produced to conceal the truth about them? I, at least, think it is safer to do so. I eamot prolong these comments, but I have adduced sufficient proof to show that the communication is authentie and substantially true. That being so, it seems certain that through this testimony of Damis we have been taken to the source of Christianity which we find to have been in India, and that instead of its having any relation to Jesus Christ or Jesus of Nazareth, it relates to the Hindoo saviour Christos; and was carried in to the Roman empire by Apollonius of Tyana about the time when it is alleged the mission of Jesus Christ began.

DEVA BODHISATOUA.

A Buddhist Prophet.

"Saib, I Salute You:-In all things pertaining to the spirit and mortal life, experience must be the guide and reason the teacher. It is my (luty as a spirit, being appointed by the higher order to come here, to tell youl what I know of what are termed the Christian Gospels-more particularly those relating to what are termed Mathew, Mark, Luke and John. Right here I might go into a personal history of myself, in order that you may understand more thoroughly what I herein set forth. I am of a line of teachers or prophets from Buddha down. Whether you ean obtain, throngh the eneyclopaedias of to-day, the information I shall give you I cannot tell. But if you can obstain the Japancse Encycloperliat of 1821 , translated hy Ahel Remusat, you will be able to learn a great deal about myselt. In the Sancrit tongue my name was Deva Borlhisatoua; in the Chinese tongue my name was Phot-sat, athd in the Hindoo tongre it was Ma-Ming. I commenced exactly as this man I am using to-day-a trance medium, in the Mahabarata country, and it was I who first tatugit, in Imbia, long before the Christian era, the metaphysieal-allegorical stybe claimed to have eome from one who never existed, called Jusus of N゙azareth. These gospels were trinaferred to sinsapore, where they afterwards foll into the possession of A pollomius of 'Tyana. Their original names, in your modern tongue, would represent the four seasoms; but were afterward used, or misused, to typify a saviour of men. The originals, as understond hy the limblons, werein this way. First, the preparation of the ground-the planting of the seed-the harvest time the gatherimg in-find the feast time or hatrest home. This was what those books, interproted lyy the aid of eertain stars, in what is now termet the \%orliac, meant. 'Thw 'star in the East' was simply a sighal of sereling time or planting tine. Now, these mysterics wore Had by Tlindous, to show rertain things ocemrring in the life of mant that remembled theoffices of nature, such as the infamer, Fouth, maturity and old age or death, of man. Von seo the heanty of thea things when properly understood. First, the stars used then as an almanac ; second, the seed time and harvest, and third, their analogy to the life of man. These writings or gospels were given to me, first, as I have set forth in the begimning of this communication, by experiences in the way of trance ; second, by my reasoning upon them; and third, by my intuitional nature coming in contact with the higher relations of spirit life. And here again, I must remark that in my time they were not original, but they were simply the reflex of spirits on my receptive organism. In an allegorical sense these writings can injure no one ; but when used by priests to gain power-and as they keep the key to themselves-endinenslaving the intellects of their fellow-men. We believed in re-incarnation; we believed, in the language of Buddha, that, as long as there was a decline of virtue in the world, a good man was raised up to re-establish morality ; and that this man was either Buddha himself, or that, at his conception, he was overshadowed by the holy spirit of Buddha. These epistles or gospels brought from India by Apollonius, were modified hy him to suit his spiritual nature. Much of the force and sub)limity of language in them is lost in their translation through so many different tongues. As near as I can give you their name, they would be called, in your language, translated from the Hindoo, "The Code of the Initiated." There was at that time, in India, a sacred order, in which all persons of good blood-not that there is anything in caste-were to become pupils, and gradually go from one degree to another, similar to modern Freemasoury. No one was admitted as a pupil unless first examined to see whether he had any spiritnal gifts, and this was tested in different ways. One of the principal tests was looking through a hollow tube on a piece of glass or piece of skin. If he discovered any sign on either, this was evidence of clairvoyance. Others were tested by a tube shaped like a horn placed to the ear. If they heard a voice, or any noise, or anything was photographed upon their brain, they were admitted on the gromind of clairaudience. By this method we were always enabled to have mediums that not only preached our philosophy, but proved it also. I have certified to all I think that is necessary, and I have fulfilled my duty to the best of my present ability; and if I am not mistaken, this communication, which is launched in this humble home to-day, will undoubtedly be looked upon, in the future, as one of the marvels of Spiritualism, considering the source from which it comes. Wise spirits-not that I lay claim to wisdon!-never enter where pride shats them out. Humility is the best prep)aration any medium needs to receive the whole truth and nothing but the trith."

We can find no historical reference to any such person as Deva Bodhisatoun, Phot-sa, or Ma-Ming, and are therefore compelled to confineour test of its genumenessand authenticity to what we can learn regarding Abel Remusat, referred to in the conmmnication. We take the following facts concerning Remusat from the Nouvelle Biographie Generale :
"Jean-P'ierre-Abel Remusat, a celehrated Orientalist, born at Paris, the 5 th of September, 1788 , died of cholera, in the same city, the 4th of June, 1832. The cireumstances that awakened in him a taste which was soon to develop into a true vocation, were as follows: The Abbey of Tersan had united to the Abbey-aux-Bois a precions collection of antiquities and objects of curiosity, to which was joined a library composed of rare books, relating to the different objects of the museum. Amid these amateur treasures was a Chinese pastoral poem. Abel Remusat being permitted to visit this collection of the Abbey of Tersan, from the first gave special attention to that work and determined to give a translation of it. Animated by his tastes and his desire for the distinction, because it had defied the learning of the time, he surrounded himself with all the works, small in number and insufficient as they were, which treated of sinotogy or the Chinese writing. The track was rough and almost inpracticable in the state in which he found the undertaking; but he persevered beeause he felt he had found the way. Without neglecting his profession of medicine, he found time to learn the Tartar language, copied all the aphabets he could procure, and in a manmer made a vocabulary for his own use. After five years of habor he published his lissty on the ('hinese Language and Literature. In doing this he gave his attention particularly to the Chinese writing, the composition, origin, form and variety of characters. From this he pursued the art of reading and writing the ('hinese tongue; and timally treated of the inlluence of aceentuation exercised over the phonetic value of words."
This essay was followed hy a work, in 1s11, entitled, The Study of Foreign Languages Among the Chinese, which attracted the greatest attention. In 1813 he pmblisher his Tranographic Dongole and his Dissertation on the monosyllabie nature commenly attributed to the Chinese lamguage On the 19th of November, 1814, he was : 1 ppointed Profision of Ghinces, in the College of France. From that time his life was devoted th the stady of the languares of the extreme Orient. In 1500 he mate public his Researehes (omerning the Tatar Lamghare, or Memoirs on ditferent points of the (irammaram

Literature of the Ouigours and Thibetans. After mentioning several other essays and works of Remusat, the writer in the Nouvelle Biographie Generale says :
"The study of Chinese documents, both printed and in manuscript, enabled the learned sinologue, to indicate to Cordier, according to the Japanese Encyclopædia, the locality where the Calmouks collected the salts of ammonia, and to reveal the existence of two burning volcanoes, situated in Central Asia, four hundred leagues from the sea, information of which Humboldt, travelling in Chinese Tartary, was pleased to recognize as correct. The Japanese Encyclopredia, is the most important work in relation to information concerning the state of the sciences, arts and occupations in China. Its entire civilization is therein described. Abel Remusat early gave a translation of the titles of the chapters of it, with that of an entire article relative to the tapir, that the imagination of the Chinese had transformed into a sort of fabulous animal. * *
"Historically Abel Remusat was particularly occupied with the Tartar nations, and he know how to profit by the relations of the Chinese with them to solve many historical problems. Instead of making the barbarians who overrun the Roman Empire descend from the North he showed their oriental origin and the different localities of them in the countries of Asia. * * * The trine object of the researches of Abel Remusat concerning the religions of China was Buddhism. Three memoirs from his pen appeared on this subject in the 'Journal des Savants' of 1831. Soon after he published his translation of the 'Book of Rewards and Punishments,' of the popular moral code. His labors on the history of Buddhism are numerous. The discovery that he made in the Japanese Encyclopredia of the list of thirty-three first patriarchs of Buddhism, with the date of the birth and death of the greater number among them, relative to the Chinese chronology, entitled him, at least approximately to fix the epoch of the death of Buddha, which would have taken place nine hundred and fifty years before Jesus Christ. One of the centres of Buddhism was Rotan, which also became a great centre of civilization. Abel Remusat translated the history of that city. It was at this period that the pentaglot dictionary, called by the author the 'Somme or Whole of Buddhism,' was conceived. The translation of that collection, undertaken by Abel Remusat and E. Bournouf, was only begun. The former of these savants also intended to translate the journeyings of the religious votaries of China, going on pilgrimages to visit the places consecrated by the Buddhistie legends. Death surprised him, so to speak, with pen in hand."

Such was the learned Oriental scholar to whom the Hindoo spirit prophet referred. Whether this Buddhistie patriarch either under, the name of Deva Bodhisatoua, or Phou-sa, or Ma-Ming was found recorded in the line of patriarchs of Buddhism, by Remusat, in the Japanese Encyclopsedia, or not, we cannot tell. Should it be there, it would hardly be possible to doubt the authenticity of this strange, and as we incline to believe it, most important communication. In the absence of positive knowledge upon this point we are warranted in giving great weight to the reference of this Buddhistic spirit to the Japanese Eneyclopedia, and its partial translation by Remusat in 1821. But most significent of all is the fact that Remusat in his labor of translating that noted Oriental work, diseovered a chronological list of the names of the thirty-three first luddhistic patriarchs with the time of the birth and death of most of them, so fully given as to determine with considerable certainty, that the Buddhistic religion had its origin about nine hundred and fifty years before the Christian era, so-called. If we could obtain that chronological list of the first thirty-three patriarchs of Buddhism, and if it should prove that Ma-Ming was among them, and that he was the Buddhistic patriareh about two hundred years before the Christian era, as the communication seems to imply, it would be impossible to doubt the gemuineness and authenticity of that communication.

We will now proceed to enalyze this very remarkable communieation, when the indirect evidence of its authenticity will become almost irresistible. The spirit tells us that he was a trance medium, and that under the control of spirits he wrote several books-that they were written in the Mahabarata country, which we understand to mean in that portion of India, where the Vedie Poem called "The Mahabarata," was composed and hede as satered-that he it wats who first tatught in the metaphysical-allegomical style, two humdred B. (.--that he afterwards sent the books thus written to Singapore-that $A_{p}$ ollonins of Tyana two humdred and fifty years afterwards fomm them in that eentre of Buddhism-that Apollonitus bere them away with him, making such alterations in them :ts hetter suited his spiritual philosophy-that they were originally. used to typify the four seasons, callsed by the ammal revolution of the earth around the sum, but that they were used, or misused to typify a saviour of men-that as understond by the Hindoo priesthood they implied the time for preparing the ground, planting the sced, the harvest and gathering in time, and the feasting time or harvest home-that those books were interpreted by the successive appearance of the Stars of the Zodiac, "the Star in the East," simply being the signal of seeding or planting time-that these books were also used by the Hindoo priests to show certain things in the life of man that resembled the offices of nature-that stars were used by them as an almanae, as a rural calendar, and as relating to the life of man-and he might have added a fourth use of them as relating to the atmospheric or meteoric changes of the four seasons.

No one who has given any attention to the subject of the Brahminical, Buddhistic, Zoroastrian, Egyptian, Grecian, and Roman religions, which all preceded the so-called Christian religion, can doubt or question the fact that they were one and all based upon the annual revolution of the earth around the sun, and the natural changes which were thus produced on the earth, and which especially affected the comforts, interests and happiness, or the misery, misfortunes and calamities of the human race. Such were the religions and philosophies, everywhere met with by Apollonius of Tyana, in his long and active journeyings throughout the then civilized world. That the books obtained by him at Singapore, India, were of that nature, eannot be reasonably questioned.
Those Buddhistic books were afterwards written, as has been alleged by the spirit of Ulphilas, bishop of the Goths, and Apollonius himself, in the Hebraic-Samaritan tongue; the written language of his native country. They were afterwards copied by Hegessippus in the same tongue, and from the copy of Hegessippus, Ulphilas made his translation into the Gothic tongue. This Gothic bible of Ulphilas is suffieiently extant to-day in the Codex Argentens to show that it is identieal with the canonical books of the New Testament. We have thus a direct eomection between the Gothic bible of Ulphilas and the Hindoo writings brought from India by Apollonins. This singularly diselosel transmission of Hindoo theology to Europe seems to be fully confirmad ly the otherwise meaningless decorations of Christian churches, and the ceremonial mummeries of the Christian hierarchies, which are identical with the decorations of the caves and temples of India, and the feasts and fasts and ceremonies observed and enforeed by the Bralmanical and Buddhistic Hindon priesthoods.
Now it is a positive fact, especially noted by the learned Charles Francis 1)upuis in his great work, "The History of A!1 systems of Worship," that upon the door of the main entrance to the Chureh of Notre Dame, at Paris, dedicated to the worship of Mary the alleged mother of Jesus Christ, are delineated in basso-relievo, our series of ideas, alluded to ly the spirit purporting to be Ma-Ming. They consist first of a series of twelve panels arranged around the outer margin of the door, corresponding with the signs of the Zodiac, arranged in groups of three, each corresponding with the four seasons. The panels of eleven of those signs contain each the respective symbol representing it, to wit: Aries, Taurus, Gemini, Cancer, Leo, etc. But in the square corresponding with Virgo or the Celestial or Zodiacal Virgin, the symbol, a young woman, is absent, and in its place is a figure of the sculptor himself, at his work. The Virgin of the Zodiae which should have occupied that panel, is placed in the large central panel of the door, holding in her arms an infant effigy or representation of the new born Sun, which, according to all the so-called heathen systems of religion was supposed to be born of the zodiacal Virgin, at midnight, at the winter solstice, an event which Christians celebrate, in concert with the heathens of every hue, or condition of savagery or civilization, at that precise hour. The church of Notre Dame or "Our Lady," stands on the site of a sacred grove of the ancient (iallic Druids, conserated to the mother goldess of the northern nations ; afterward appropriated by the loman conquerors of Gaul as the site of a temple consecrated to Venus, the Roman goddess of love and leatut, and now eonsecrated to Miary, the Christian successor of the same \%oxliacal virgin mother of the sum. On the same door of this noted Christ ian chureh is another series of panels, in which are arranged figures of men, denoting the diflerent stages of cach individual life on earth, the dress and garments of which denote the changes of the temperature of the seasons. On the same door is still another series of figmes showing the varions rural oceupations of the var. Similar deviese, says Dupuis, ornament the doors of the chareh of sit. Denis, also in laris, showing leyond all question that the Christian religion is nothing more than the same old theologieal Monsiem Tonson of heathendom come again in a Christian garb. In view of such facts as these, who can doubt the pagan origin and nature of the Christian religion? We feel sure, as these spirit revelations are continued, that every possible doubt as to this point will be done away with.

What this Hindoo spirit says as to the incarnation of the Deity, the mediumistic character of the Buddhistic priesthood -their methods of selecting their priests and teachers-the spiritual origin of their religion and sacred writings, and indced, all that he says, is worthy of the deepest consideration of all who desire to know the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, concerning the mutual relations of the world of mortals and the world of spirits. If they will give it this consideration, they will wonder more and more how such important information is given through the mediumship of an unlearned man; and why it has been so long withheld. We confess our own amazement as we proceed in our researches, at the prospective store of knowledge that is soon to be poured, in one unbroken flood upon the minds of thoughtful and intelligent people.
[As may be seen by the above comments, Mr. Roberts states that he had been unable to find any historical referenee concerning Dera Bodhisatoua. This was written by him July, 2, M. S. 34. Two years later, September 1, M. S. 36 , he records the following. "The reader may judge of our surprise when in searching for some historical reference concerning Ardilua Babekra, two years after the communication of Deva Bodhisatoua was published in Mind and Matter, we came across the following account of the remarkable man, whose spirit gave that grand explanation of the Buddhism of his time, which we translate from the Freneh of Abel Remusat's work, 'Melanges Asiatiques.' " -Compiler.]
"The eleventh of the line of patriarchs was Founayche, who was suceeded by Ma-Ming or the celebrated Phou-sa, his name in sancerit was Deva Bodhisatoua. This one who was of the order of the incarnate divinities coming immediately after Budtha has given into the whole class of gods of the second order, the diflerent names that he has reecived in the languages of the various Buddhistic people. The Hindoos calls him Bodhisatoua, which signifies sensitive intelligence, the Tibetians have changed his name into Djangtchhoub or Djangtchhoubsemspain. The Chinese have abbreviated it into Phou-sa, which by a very ridiculous misunderstanding, some Chinese idolaters, and following them many missionaries have given him the name of foddess of Porcelain, they have lavished most honorable titles on him, such as most intelligent, most victorious, ommipotent, most holy son of Bouddha, born of his moutli. We do not have at present to seek the allegorical sense of all these mames, but it is very important to determine the age of the historical personage to whom they attributed them, for Bodhisatoua seems to have been one of the reformens to whom the Buddhist philosophy is mast indebted. (ieorgi has given vent to a crowd of eonjectures upon this subject, he takes Bodhisatona for somonakodom oi Bomddhat, and leesides for a celebrated religious person in China in the 4th eentury after our era mader the name of Fo-thou-tchhing, and even for Seythianus or Manes. By reason of this error he makes him live in the $3 d$ century of our era. I must confess that Chinese authors themselves ditfer upon the epoch of this celebrated man, some make him live three humdred years after Boudtha others makesix humded years interval, other still eight humdred years interval, but the Book of Mahaya whence is borrowed the sucession of the Patriarehs, cuts this difticulty, since it makes Bodhisatona die in the thirty-seventh year of Hian-W゙ang, 33: before J. (., or 618 years atter the death of Chaikia-Mouni. He wats hom in the kingrdom of Po-lonai, and had received from Fountyche the deposit of the doet rine which he transmitted to the thirteenth Patrareh named Kiabimara; this one travelled in the west part of Indies and delivered his body to the flames in the forty-first year of Nan-W:ang, 27t before J. C." [Our readers will motice that the spirit of Bodhisatona says he reecived the grospels, which atiterward had the fomdation of the Christian religion, from spirit sources, he leing a trance medium. The tramsation of Remmsat clams, however, that he reowed them from his pedecosor, Fomatyede. This evident contradiction is casily acomented for, as it is not likely that after taking so much trouble to suppress all evitlence of the real origin of the ("inistian gosele, that an aftempt would not be made to mishad in this direetion. The great womber is that at this late day, so mach evidenee ean lw ohtained, which only shews, that at same point in their ealcolations, a misstep was made and that this evidence was owertooked, which makes it posil, the the in this the nine ternth entury the true facts mas be bronght tolight. The mamer in which this last information was obtained is of itself, strong testimony, to the faet that though truth may be suppressed for a time, it cannot be so erushed that it will not come uppermost at last. Our readers will do well to earefully study this communication, as it will shed more light upon the supposed divine origin of the Christian gospels than any other information extant, proving that the priesthood after obtaining them changed them to suit their own views and purposes, thus perverting the truth to the detriment of all mankind.-Compiler.]

PLOTINUS.

The Neo-Platonist.

"Ours is A War for Truth:-As it was with me in the mortal form, so it is now with me in the spirit. While you fight with benighted souls in the mortal form, I am fighting with the deluded millions in spirit. The school to whieh I belonged is known to you moderns as the Neo-Platonic; by us it was ealled the Eelectic. The founder of this school was Ammonius the Peripatetic; but the person who really furnished the materials for this sehool was A pollonius of Tyana ; and all the ideas that this school ever gave forth under Potamon, Ammonius Saccas and myself, were gathered from the originals of the sehool of that famous Hindoo, known to us by his Sanserit name of Deva Bodhisatoua. His writings were the foundation, combined with some Platonic writings, which form the whole of what the Eelectie sehool taught. In the first place, the whole history of Jesus of Nazareth, so-ealled, was started by that Hindoo representing the life of Buddha, and afterward taught by Apollonins of Tyana. In my mortal life I was a particular friend of the Emperor Gallienus. I had frequent eonversations with those who clamed to know anything of this Jesus, and proved to them so conelusively that A pollonius was the real Jesus, that my works were destroyed by the Christians; and the next spirit that communicates after me, shall be the one to tell you when and where they were destroyed. This pope comes here by the foree of my medimnistic power. I acted in precisely the same capacity to the Emperor (ialliems that Apollonius did to Vespasian, that is, I was his oracle. I obtained atmost all your modern physical phenomena. I hat indepandent writing on copper phates, which were closed and sealed together, and the writing was produced on the inside of those plates. I also taught in my own house on two days of the week while in trance or an ecstatic state. It is by the mediumistic power of us so-ralled heathens, that the Christian interpolaters and destroyers of other men's good works are compelled to come back here and confess their rascality. Fight them fathfully on yourside, my good brother, and you will find that one Plotinus will ever help you when he can. I have exhausted the time allotted me for this sitting. Good-bye."
[For the historical record of Plotinns, we refer the reader to the Eneyclopadia Britannica, also Nouselle Biographie (ien-erale.-Compiler.]

We have found enongh evidence in the works referret to above to show that Plotinus was beyond all question a medium; and no one will deny that he was the first Neo-Platonie Eclectie author of whose writings we have any trace. It is the spirit of this truly great and goocl man who comes back to testify to facts regarding the Christian scriptures and religion, which absolutely contirms the spirit testimony of Ulphilas, A pollonius of Tyana, Vespasian, Deva Bodhisatoua, Felix, Ignatius, Gregory, Hegessippus and many others; that the original source of all that is called Christianity was the Seriptures of Buddhism, introduced into Westerin Asia, Europe and Africa, ly Apollonins of Tyana, afterward moditied by Amonius the Peripatetic, l'otamon, Amonius Saceas, and lotinus himself. Thas do the facts acemmulate that must render ats elear as the noonday sun that Christianity is a monstrous framd and delusion, that has desolated the earth and tilled the spirit world with demons. The reader may imagine with what curiosity we awaited the next eontrol, that was to show the power of Plotinns, the spirit medium, to compel a Christian pepe to diselose the most important serrets of his chureh. Reader, we are about to bring to your notice facts that must prowe beyond atl question, not only the authenticity and trathfulness of these astounding communiontions, but also the wonderfal attributes of the mextim through whom they are given. Read attentively the fates that we are about to lay before som, and doubt if you can that high and beneficent spirits ate behind the revelations of truth being made through him and recorded and published ly ourself. The communication refered to was from the epirit of Jope Gregory.

POPE GREGORY VII.

By Whose Order the Library of the Palatine Apollo Was Destroyed in the 11th Century.

"Good DAy :-I come here by force, as the preceding speaker (the spirit of Plotinus) told you; and what is worse, I am forced to tell you exactly what I did, when here in the mortal form. When living on earth I was known as Pope Gregory, and what I am here for to-day is to own to the destruction of the Library of the Palatine Apollo, which contained the whole of the writings of the School of Alexandria from the days of Potamon to the days of one Maximus. And what was my excuse for its destruction? Religious bigotry. I made the exeuse for it, that I did not want the elergy to have their minds diverted from their holy work by studying heathen literature. But the real canse of my action in that matter was, that there were recorded in that library all the facts that would prove that no such person as Jesus of Nazareth ever existed ; and therefore, feeling the weakness and insceurity of my position, I did all I could to strengthen it, by letting as few as possible know what the real contents of that library were. I am here also to state that there is a power-a band of spirits now oecupying a position that enables them, when they want a man to return here and atone for the wrongs he has done during his mortal life, to force him to come back and communicate the truth. By the force of truth itself, he is eompelled to come back and acknowledge his wrongs. It is the same with spirits as with mortals; they love power and hate opposition as much there as they did here. That is all I liave to say."

Consult Chambers' Eneyclopædia for sketch of Pope Gregory.
When I was told by this spirit, through the lips of the medium, that he had destroyed the library of the Palatine Apollo, whieh contained the whole of the writings of the Alexandrian (or Neo-Platonie) school, from the days of Potamon to the days of one Maximus ; or, in other words, from the early part of the first to the middle of the fourth century, I wondered whether it could be true; for it seemed to me that no man possessed of the learning which such a library was said to contain, could have been so lost to every sense of moral principle, as to be guilty of such a cruel, heartless destruction of invaluable literature. When I came to seek for light upon this point I was surprised to find that there was no historical reference to the fate of the Palatine Apollo Library, and indeed no historical reference in many scores of works to such a library, subsequent to the reign of Julian the A postate (so-catled by Christians) in the fourth century. I found references to the fact that the Emperor Augustus had erected a temple to A pollo on the Palatine Hill in Rome, and had founded a library in connection with it. This temple was burned in the reign of the Emperor Julian, on the same night that the Temple of A pollo at Daphne, near Antioch, was burned. It was further stated that it was with the greatest difficulty that the ,ilyyline books were saved. Whether the library shared the fate of the temple was not stated. I infer however that it was not burned at that time, but existed until it was destroyed by the order of Pope Gregory.
[It seems to be a disputed question among writers as to whether Gregory I, or Gregory VII, ordered the dentruction of the library Palatine Apollo. It is well known, however, that this library was wholly or partially destroyed several times. It is possible, in faet probable, that both of these Popes caused its destruction in the time of their varions reigns, and this may be the solution of the much discussed question, which arises from the fact that John of Salisbury is the only athority for the statement that the Palatine Apollo library was deat royed by the order of (dreqory, and eites his prochamation to that effect in his work, "The Policraticus." Who was John of Nalishury" A historian who was the private secretary of the Arehbishop of Canterbury, and through him ambasador to the Papal Fee, which wery fact gave him opportunitios to obtain knowledre, the nature of which is not to be carelessly estimated in considering his works, which even to-day, are regarded insabuable. Mon like (iregory I, and (iregory VII, whose whole lives were given to perpetating the pewer of their chureh, would cortainly not sof at the hurning of a library to acemplish the ir whace. Therefore, whether (iregory $I$, or (iregory VII, cathem the destruction of the valuable libary in question, the facts which rome down to bs show that it was destroved in the interests of the so-called Christian chureh.-Compiler.]

EUTHALIUS. A Greek Theologian.

"Good Evening, Sir :-My name was Euthalius of Alexandria. I lived in the fifth century and was a commentator on the Pauline Epistles. Those epistles are those which were brought from India by Apollonius, and obtained by the latter through King Phraotes of Tixilla. The Gospel according to Matthew is not original, but is of Armenian origin. The Gospel according St. Mark, was left by Apollonius with the Thessalonians according to the text of the epistle to them. The Gospel according to St. Luke is but a modified version of the legend of Prometheus Bound as remdered by Lueian and Marcion at Rome. The Gospel according to St. John was written by A pollonius of Tyana toward the later part of his life, when he was an old man, on the island of Patmos, where he retired to end his days, in isolation from the human race. That gospel is a blending with what the inspired seer hoped for, and the knowledge which he feared to impart in such terms as uneducated mortals could understand. The Acts of the Apostles relate the doings of Apollonius and his disciples, and this was fully understood by the Gnostics and Neo-Platonists up to the time of Eusebius of Ciesarea. Ammonius Saccas, Plotinus, and their followers, were Gymnosophists, Gnosties and Neo-Platonists combined. They had no idea nor intention of prommlgating anything but what they regarded as truth. Truer or better men than were Ammonius and Plotinus never lived. This was made plain to me by the study of their writings. Apollonius, Ammonius and Plotinus were the purest and best of men, and their only desire was to elevate the human race. Their teachings had relation to the Brahmanical and Buddhistic canonical narratives conceming the Indian Saviour Krishna. I now see an ethereal spirit of light which appears behind and over you [These words were addressed to us.] who says he is Krishma, of whom the story of his divine origin, persecution by the tyrant Kansa, and miraculous performances were exaggerations; and that his sole work was that of a moral reformer, and his only object to make the people of his country happy. For these services he was worshipped, and regarded as an incarnation of Brahma, or the spirit of the universe. He shows me the figure three repeated four times, by which I understand him to imply that he was born 3333 lB . C, in India, at the foot of a mountain near Mathura on the Juma. [We remarked we had always supposed Krishna to have been amyth.] No, he was a man, and the original of all the world's modern Saviours. The canonieal epistles as far as I knew anything about them, were all derived from the writings of Apollonius of Tyana, who, to conceal that fact, has been called Paul or Paulus. The names of James, Peter, John, and Jude, were attached to the other epistles sent to communities too insignificant to be mentioned. All these teachings were appropriated, either sucecssfully or unsuccessfully, by Eusebius of Caesarea, to make good his theological Christian scheme. But, he failing in his purpose to some extent, and I seeing that it was a grand upportunty for me to gain renown, aeknowledged their authority and set about establishing what Eusebius had failed to prove true regarding them from his standpoint. I put these Indian writings of A pollonius into my own shape and eliminated from them every mention of Apollonius or Krishna, and substituted therefor Paul, and the Christ idea. This work of Eusebins and myself became the better assured in proportion as the original writings and the traces of them became destroyed. What I have told you is the truth."

We refer to account of Euthalius, to Nouvelle Biographie Generale.

According to the spirit statement of Euthalius, it is very certain that the cospels of Matthew and John were both the production of Apollonius of Tyana. The former written at an carly period of his career, and closely in aceorlance with the (ismmosophie theology or philowophy ; and the latter near the close of his life atter he had matured his theological conceptions. There is no doubt that the theological and philosophical views of Apollonins underwent very material moditications ats he advanced in his realization of the spiritual department of natural forces and causes, and henee the spiritual nature of the later gosed as compared with the erude, and less spiritnally developed characteristies of the first or original gospel of his adoption. There is a singular analogy between the name of A pollonims and John. They are both designations of the Light that lighteth all men coming into the world, the Sun. The sum among the (irecks was alike designated Apollo and Ion ; Ion the (ircek natme of the sum etymologically speaking,
"I" the one, and "on" the being-the one being. Eusebius and his successors who have labored so hard to deprive Apollonius of the eredit of his theological labors, have substituted Ion or John for Apollonius. In view of all the facts we are led to credit the spirit statement of Euthalins, and to accept his statement that Apollonins wrote the Gospel of St. John, as it is called, on the Island of Patmos, where he also under spirit control wrote the Revelations.

The spirit of Euthalius tells us that the Acts of the Apostles relate the doings of A pollonius and his disciples, and that this was fully understood by the Gnostics and Neo-Platonists, up to the time of Eusebius, A. D. 325 to 350 . This is undoubtedly the fact, since Saul of Tarsus or St. Paul was no other individual than Apollonius of Tyana himself. Ammonius Saceas, Plotinus and Porphyry were undoubtedly Ginostic followers of A pollonius, and all were what Euthalius testifies they were, as good and pure men as ever lived. It is almost certain, that the divine incarnation in Apollonius's system of philosophy and theology, was Krishna of the Hindoo theologies called Kristos in the Greek language and known in the various other languages by still other titles, as will be found in other communications.

The spirit says that the canonical Epistles, so far as he knew anything about them, were all derived from the writings of Apollonius of Tyana ; and that to conceal their real authorship Eusebius attributed them to Paul or Paulus, which was but a modification of Pol, the abbreviated name of Apollonius. Euthalius tells us that Eusebius did not perfectly succeed in robbing Apollonius of the credit of his labors, and that he, Euthalius, completed that work. In view of the facts that Euthalius is acknowledged to have broken the Elistles, canonical and Catholic, and the Acts of the Apostles into chapters and verses, in order to add to the contents of the chapters, and as it is also admitted historically, on the testimony of Euthalius himelf, that he collated them with the copies in the library of Eusebius Pamphilus at Cesarea, there can be no doubt he was fully acquainted with the alterations that had been made from the originals by Eusebius. Indeed, he tells us that the Indian writings of Apollonius were at that time in the Pamphilian library at Cresarea, and that he modified them to suit himself, aud eliminated from them the names of Apollonius and Krishna, and substituted therefor Paul and the Christ idea.

POTRMON.

The Great Alexandrian Reformer.

"Sir :-There has never been a religions idea promulgated on earth in latter times, that has not had its counterpart in more ancient religious systems. The principal quarrels of the Christian church have been over the doetrines of the Trinity, or the eflort to make three out of one. This has been the occasion of a vast amount of bloodshed. In my day I tried to reconcile these credal ideas of all religions systems, and to amalgamate them torether ; but the same difliculties met my efforts that mect yours today. Eeclesiastics have but one means to keep their hold upon the people, and that is the encouragement of ignorance and bigotry. Wrest these from them and their power is gone. For trying to regenerate old ideas-for trying to make a better system or a more systematie religion, I was met be eurses, and I ended my life in exile. I was banished because I tried to purify the then existing religious systems. But you have a far better day to work in, hecanse you have the aid of the greatest art of modern times, namely, the art of printing, and you can scatter truth all over the land. Keep on with your work and although you may he perseented there is one thing they cannot do-they eamot banish you nor take your life at this day. All the goorl you moderns enjoy has been the work of men who were infidels to the prevailing ereeds and beliefos of their time. And in conclusion, I want to say a few words on the absolute proofs of spirit existener. We dare not as spirits give the mases of the present day absolute proofs of spirit-life, for shombl we do so they wond not perform their mission here. Once in possession of the absolute proof of the after-life you would time this people becoming a mation of suicides. First they mut umberstand the true duties of mortal existeme before they can safely receive the absolate prostis of *pirit existonce. 1 am Potamen."

On recoiving the above eommmication, and having no knowhelgo ouscelf of who l'otamon was, we concluded to look the mather up. With the expeption of a four-line mention of him, in the Amertion Enceronsedia, we could find nothing concerning him in either of the English or American Encyclopædias or Biographical Dictionaries. After a protracted search we found the following reference to this great Religions Reformer in the Nouvelle Biographie Generale, published in Paris in 1862, of which we give our translation :
" Potamon, a Greek philosopher of the Alexandrian school, was born at Alexandria and lived in the third century of the Christian era. It is true that, according to Suidas, who speaks of Airesis and Potamon, this philosopher should have been contemporaneous with the Emperor Octavius-Augustus, but Porphyry, in his life of Plotinus, (c. 9.), said positively that Potamon, according to his understanding, treated of a new philosophy of which he laid the foundation. Now Plotinus was born about A. D. 250, and died at the age of sixty-five, and evidently lived in the third century of our era. The same ought to be the case with Potamon. Now what was this new philosophy of which Porphyry speaks, and of which he represents Potamon as the founder, according to those descriptions of Plotinus? It is found contained in two works, one of which was a commentary on the "Timeus" of Plato, and the other, "A Treatise" on first principles. Of these treatises there remains absolutely nothing; but we know something of the second from a passage of Diogenes Laertius in the introduction of his book "On the Lives and Doct rines of Illustrious Philosophers." 'It is but a short time,' said this bingrapher, 'since an Eclectic school was instituted by Potamon of Alexandria, which selected from the doctrines of all the different sects. Two things,' Potamon explained, 'are necessary to discern truth : on one part, the principle that judges, that is to say, reason ; on the other, the exact representation of the objects of our judgment. As to the principles of things he recognized four-matter, quality, action and place; in other words, of what and by whom a thing is made, how it is made, and where it is made. He established as the aim to which all ought to tend, a perfectly virtuons life, without exchading at all times the needs of the body nor those things external to it.' The results of this passage from Diogenes Laertius, combined with the testimony of Porphyry, are, first, that Potamon was the founder of the Eclectic school, and that, probably, this school owes its name to him; second, that he adopted the Peripatetic doctrine relative to the principles of things; and third, that in ethies he had attempted a kind of conciliation between Stoicism and Epicureanism.-C. Maliet."

In the light of the foregoing spirit communication, it would seem that Suidas was right as to the time in which Potamon lived and taught Eelecticism, and that Porphyry, and M. Mallet, the French author, were wrong. Potamon undoubtedly lived and taught under the Roman Emperor Octavius-Augustus at Alexandria, and not in the third century, as erroneonsly claimed by M. Mallet, on the authority of Porphyry. It would seem also to settle the question as to the disputed age in which Diogenes Laertits lived and wrote. Speaking of the latter, M. Aube says: "We know absolutely nothing of the life of Diogenes Laertius. It can hardly be affirmed that he was born at Laertia, a city of Cilicia; in what year is unknown. We are reduced to conjectures as to the epoch in which he lived; and on this point eritics have widely differed. Some, by an evident confusion, made him live under the reign of Augustus; others, in the time of Constantine." Now, ats Diogenes Lacrtius stid, in writing of Potamon, that the latter had a short time before established a new school of philosophy, it becomes almost certain that Diogencs wats contemporaneous with Potamon, and that they both lived and wrote under the reign of the Roman Emperor Augustus, at or about the time when it is said that Jesus Christ lived and taught on earth. Is it not a most signiticant fact that so little is now known of those two great Eelectic anthors, while their teachings and writings have been surreptitionsly appropriated by the Christian priesthood and attributed to the fictitious man-god Jesus? In view of the impertance that we attach to the spirit return of Potamon, we cammot refratin from laying before our raders, the following translation of :a passage from M. Aube's sketch of the life of this great atuthor:
"The work of Dingenes Laertius has for its title, 'Lives amd Opinions of the Most Hlustrions Philosophers.' It comprises ten books, with a preface, which eontains some general eomsitlarations on the origin of philosophy, the division of the sehools, and the diflerent parties among philosophers. Diogenes combmanes hy opposing the opinion of those who place the eradle of philosophy in the East. (irecian phikephy, acoording to him, was atutochthonons (native to (irecee). The tirst period comprises the seven sages. The second, which is the age of development and maturity, commenced with Ansximater and l'ythagoms and ended with Chrysippus and Epionrus. It is embraced entiely in two schosis; the lonian selome, of which Anaximather, the disephe of Thates, is the ehief and ('hysippes was the last representation ; and the Italian sehoul, of which l'ythromas is the father, and which becalle extinct with Epicurus. Such was the plan of Diogenes as set forth in the preface to his work. It cannot be denied that this plan was extremely simple, but at the same time we cannot but be astonished that this historian made, so readily, an abstract of the most perceptible differences which distinguished the various philosophical doctrines; and that he mingled thus arbitrarily the most opposite schools of philosophy."

It will be seen from that extract from Diogenes' writings that as a historian he was governed by the Eclectic philosophy and sought to co-operate with his contemporary Potamon in promoting harmony among the rival religious partisans of their epoch. It is a sad outcome of their benevolent efforts that the Christian priesthood, who sought to turn their beneficent labors to their personal adrantage, should have succeeded in concealing from their fellow-men the true source of their stolen and corrupted Eelectic treatises. The reason why Diogenes Lacrtius had so little to say about lis contemporary, the greatest of all reformers, Potamon, is rendered very evident from the statement made in his communication, or the communication concerning him, that he was banished for his efforts to bring a religion of peace to his fellow-men. We would have the reader to remark, especially, that the communicating spirit has nothing to say about Potamon as the founder of a school of philosophy, but expressly claims that he sought to reconcile the varying eredal ideas of all religions. For this humane and benevolent effort he incurred the united animosity of the prevailing religious sects of his country; for which he was banished and died in exile. The parallel which, as a spirit, he draws between his own experience and that which he reminds us we are passing through, is not the least significant feature of that communication.
Time and space will not now admit of a more extended presentation of the incidents connected with the receipt of that communication. We will, therefore, point out a few things in connection with it, that seem to us of pregnant importance. There can be little, if any, reasonable doubt, that Potamon lived at the very time when it is said Jesus lived-that he songht to institute, als the communication says, "A better system, or a more systematic religion,"-that although the writings of all the other founders of religious systems in Grecee and at Alexandris, have been preserved and brought down to our time, with the exception of the brief reference to him and writings, by his contemporary Diogenes Laertius, there is not an authentie trace of his writings preserved-that he was an illustrious philosopher and worthy to rank with the founders of the other great Grecian schools, in the estimation of the Eelectic biographer Diogenes-that the latter should have ventured to say so little concerning Potamon and his writings, or if he said more than has eome down to us, that what he did say was suppressed by those who sought to rob this great religious reformer of the credit of his bencficent labors-that his teachings were condemmed by the more powerful of the great rival religious sects or schools of philosophy, as they were called, that then pre-vailed-that, as the communication says, he was bamished for his attempt to reconcile the contradictory ereeds and dogmas of the various religious systems of his day and died in exilethat the original writings from which those of the present New Testament, as it is called, were derived, were in the Greek language-that they are conceded to have been obtained from Alexandria, the native eity of Potamon and the seene of his great attempt to seform the prevailing religious systems of his time-that the ChristianFathers, so-called, should have utterly ignored Potamon, the great founder of the religions system that they appropriated and attributed falsely to (iosi, in order that they might the more readily and thoroughly ruld ower their ignorant and too eonfiding fellow-beings-all these and many other facts point most strongly, if not positively, to the conclusion that Potamon, a great-soulerd, leamed and benevolent Greck, was the true author of the religions sy:tem which, no doubt greatly modified and altered to suit the interests of ambitions and tyramical priests, has come down to his, ats the work of Jesus (hrist.

But hy far the most signifieant fact of all is the laboered edtorts of modern Christian sectaries and writers to show that Potamon did not found his Edectic system of religion until the third eentury, and mot at the very eperh at whid it wats satid Josus Christ lived and tamght, as Fiudats mated when he said "Potamom should have heen eontemporaneosts with the Emwor Octavits-Augustus." 11 is exally significant that the vame cflorts have been put forth to make it apmear that Diong nes Latertas did not live and write his bisgraphical work "On the Lives and Doetrines of Illustrious Philosophers" until the thind century or later ; the latter having, as before montioned, said, in speaking of Potamon, "It is but a short time since an Eclectic school was instituted by Potamon of Alexandria, which chose from the doctrines among the diflerent sects." The Christian plagiarists could not afford to have it known that the author whose writings they were stealing, lived at the very time when they pretended that their fictitious man-god lived. It is amazing that so monstrous and manifest a priestly fraud, as is the pretence that Jesus Christ was the author of the contents of the New Testament should have remained so long concealed. But for the fact that Potamon, the Grecian sage and reformer, at last found the means, through a poor, persecuted, and uneducated medium, to return after nearly nineteen hundred years and assert his place in the history of literature and learning, the great mysterious secet of the real origin of the Christian religion would have remained with the Catholie priesthood, the only Christian priesthood, in existence. The Protestant clergy of the various dissenting sects know nothing whatever of the religious system about which they claim to know so much and at the same time confess they know so little. Question them about what they preach for positive truth and they will tell you that it is all mystery-mystery-mystery.

How far the religious doctrines and practices selected by Potamon from all the prevailing religions of his day, have been retained by his Christian plagiarists may never be fully known, but that the latter have copied them largely seems very obvious. It is a conceded fact that The Gospels According to St. Matthew, St. Mark, St.Luke and St. John, as well as the Acts of the A postles, are but modified versions of some older writing or writings, the author or authors of which had been most unaccountably concealed. It has not been pretended that Jesus Christ ever wrote a line of the contents of the New Testament, nor can it be seriously pretended that such a founder of a new religion lived at the time the Christian writers assign as the epoch of his earthly career ; if it be once established that Diogenes Laertius lived and wrote during the reign of the Emperor Augustus, as we are ready to show was the fact against the world.
M. Aube has fully testified to the unprejudiced mamer in which Dingenes has presented the doctrinal tenets and creeds of the prevailing religions seets of that early age, and there eannot be a doubt that had any such founder of a religion, such as Jesus is represented to have been, lived and tatught the doctrines attributed to him, Diogenes Laertius would have induded him in his biographical list of illustrious philosophers.

Even Suidas, the Greek lexicographer, who stated that Diogenes Lacrtius, "should have been contemporameous witit the Emperor Octavils-Augustus," has shared the same fate as befel Potamon and Diogenes, at the hands of the Christian priesthood who, prior to the discovery of the art of printing, for fourteen hundred years monopolized the learning of the world. Some Christian authors have sought to make it appear that no such person as Suidas lived and that the name was assumed by the author of the writings bearing his name; others have sought to show that he lived and wrote as late as the fourth century, in order to remove him as far as possible from the time in which he actually wrote; but there can be little doubt that suidas lived and wrote in or near the reign of Augustus, but where he lived seems not to be known. Giraldi, the Italian poet and archeobogist, writing of Suidas, in the sixteenth century, says that it was under the reign of Augustus that he lived. Julging from the obscurity thrown over his history by Christian writers generally, we conclude that (iirabli was correct ; he deriving his knowledge upon the sulject from sullieient data in the Vatiean, at Rome, where Leo X , allowed him to resitle while visiting Jome with his pupil, Hereules, son of Count Rangone, afterwards known as ('ardinal Ikangone. For some reason, sumbient to his papal masters, Adrian VI, and Clement VII, he never aeruired a higher position than logical researehes, had learned too mueh coneerning the true origin of the Christian religion and hence he wats neglectet and presecuted. The simple fact that he had discovered that P'otamon, Diogenes Laertins and suidas, were contemporaneons anthors, buter the reign of Aughetus at the time Jests ('hrist was falsely alleged to have Iived, was enough to have (ens him his life, and modouht it would have dontere, only for his indluenee with the $\mathbf{1}^{\text {erpple }}$ in the prient-ridden age and eonntry. In view, therefore, of the eirema-tamee that we hate harrially thrown together in the eqeat presure of our general editorial lathrs, all tending so at rongly to corroherate lhe state the communication is authentically from the spirit of the founder of the Eclectic school of Alexandria, that he lived at the precise time when Jesus Christ is said to have lived, and that he attempted the greatest and noblest religious reformation that is known in the past history of the world. That Diogenes Laertius and Suidas, contemporaneous writers of that day, should have noticed Potamon as the founder of a grandly beneficent school of religions reformers, and that they should have made no mention of Jesus Christ, as engaged in such a work, at the only period when it is pretended he was so engaged, puts an end forever to the misrepresentation that the teachings and inculcations of the New Testament were the work of auy such human or divine being as Jesus.

Every rational person might have known that the writings of the New Testament, were the work of a man or a school of men who songht to blend such portions of the preceding creeds, doetrines, ceremonies, practices, and religious formulas into a single religion, that would serve to harmonize and unite mankind in one common effort to advance the welfare of all. No person can attentively read the New Testament writings, and not perceive the fact that there is hardly a paragraph of them which does not contain very clear evidence that it is but a slightly modified reproduction of some tenet or doctrine of some one or more of the various religious systems prevailing at the time of their production, or that prevailed in the reign of Augustus, when Potamon lived and founded the Eclectic school of religious instruction. The religions systems of China, India, Persia, Egypt, Greece, Rome, Palestine, and even the Druidical system of Northern and Western Europe, were largely drawn from to make up the Eclectic system of religion founded by Potamon; a religion which for a period of more than a hundred years after he died in exile, was suppressed, and then revived as being of divine origin, and attributed to "Ies," the Phenician name of the god Bacchns or the Sun personified ; the etymological meaning of that title being, "i" the one and "es" the fire or light ; or taken as one word "ies" the one light. This is none other than the light of St. John's gosjel ; and this name is to he found everywhere on Christian altars, both Protestant and Catholic, thus clearly showing that the Cloristian religion is but a moditication of the Oriental sun Worship, attributed to Zoroaster. The same letters I H S, which are in the Greek text, are read lyy Christians "Jes," and the Roman Christian priesthood added the terminus "us," making the name of the fictitions author of the Eelecticsystem of Potamon, "Jesus." This was a tub thrown to the Parsee whate by the suceessors of Potamon. To that name the latter added the name of the Hindoo deity Christau, thos, as the representative of the new system, making not Potamon its founder, bat Jesus Christ, the eompound deified myth of the Orientals and Hindoos, the nominal head of the chureh.

In view of what we have here submitted for the unprejudiced consideration of our raders on a topic of transcendent importance, if truth is ever to attain to its proper place in the estimation of mankind, we claim to have taken a position in relation to the true origin and nature of the so-called Christian system of religion that camot be shaken, and in order to test its value we challenge the Christian world to show that we are in error, in our claim that Potamon and his followers were the founders of the so-called ('hristian religion, and not Jesus Christ, as they elaim. We ask our readers to invite the attention of the Christian ministry, everywhere, to this fact and recuire of them in the canse of truth to explain, or like men acknowledge that the religion they are teaching is false.

We will ald in connection with what we have previonsly otlered bearing upon the history of the great religious reformer Potamon, that we have given such references to him as have come down to us, or rather such references to him as the Roman ('atholic priesthood have permitted to reath the publie. Whether there is not in the Vaticau library at Jome, amoner the seceret arehives of the Pontiticial chureh, wereh fuller information in relation to this remarkahbe man, we may never know. Enongh, howewer, has been diselosed to show that Potamon attempted to formulate a religions system ly taking the best portions of the rarions religions systems of his time, and bending them so as to make a system that would be alapted to take the plawe of all other religions systems.

We emarked that we were impressed he the fact that whike biogenes Lacertins, in the introduction to his inestimable work, "The lises athd (pinions of llhat rions Philosombers," mentions Potamon, and makes acemeral tatement of his views and tend to notice him in the body of his work. We inferred that Diogenes, had said so little concerning the teachings of Potamon ats is preserved, from fear of consequences personal to himself, Potamon, having, as he says in his communication, been banished on account of his attempt to found a new and more perfect system of religion. On further investigation, we conclude that Diogenes Laertius did set forth the personal history and opinions of Potamon, as he did the personal history and opinions of all the other celebrated philosophers of histime. In his work over eighty illustrious philosophers are treated of by Diogenes Laertius, all of them anterior to Potamon, and yet not one word in the body of the work in relation to this the greatest and most modern of them all. The fact that Diogenes makes especial mention of him in the introduction to his work, as the founder of a new sect, that selected its doctrines from all the other sects, and the great end of which was to develop a perfect and pure life, shows how far Potamon was before all the other philosophers of Greece. His school was established at Alexandria only a short time before Diogenes wrote, and yet l'otamon is not so much as mentioned in the list of philosophers, whose teachings he sought to embody in his work.

It will not do to say that Diogenes either intentionally or inadvertently omitted to give the life and opinions of Potamon. The probabilities are so strong as almost to amount to a certainty, that Diogenes did give a history more or less in detail of Potamon and his teachings. That this history of Potamon is not in the biographical work of Diogenes as it has come down to us, renders it most certain that it has been suppressed by those into whose hands that work afterwards fell. Who were the persons into whose hands the work of Diogenes fell? Most certainly they were the Christian priesthood, into whose hands the whole literary treasures of ancient times fell after the banishment and condemmation of Potamon. Then, it was the Christian priesthood who for some purpose suppressed that portion of the writings of Diogenes Laertins relating to Potamon. As in the order of arrangement alopted by Diogenes, in the preface to his work, he would have sketched the history of Potamon and his opinions last, it was an casy thing to eliminate that portion without in any way interfering with the biographies that preceded the biography of Potammen. Not so with the brief allusion in the preface to Potamon and his teachings. It would be impossible to crase or remove it without showing that for some reason a part of the preface had beell destroyed, and hence that precious remmant of the teachings of Potamon has been allowed to come down to us. These priestly foes to truth maturally thought that in those few lines of that preface, no one would ever perceive their relation to the origin of the Christian religion, and hence it dit not share the fate of the biography itself. But for the return of the spirit of Potamon, his declaring what he attempted to do, and his ostracism and banishment, therefor, through the influence of the rival religious sects, the wonderful significance of that reference by Diogenes to Potamon would have continued to escape public observation. In the light of his spirit communication its true significance is rendered plain.

What was there in the writings of Potamon that was so olmoxious to his religious and philosophical contemporates; and to those who have since sought to destroy every vestige of the religious system he foumded in Alexandria in the reign of Augustus? Can there be a doubt but that he souglit to blend with the metaphysical theories of firece and Rome, the ethical and theological systems of the other peoples of his age, and thus establish a new system that should contain and etleet all of grood that could be derived from each and all of them? This was the part of true wisdom, and shows that Potamon was ats far before the philosophers and priests of his time, as he wats before the Christian plagiarists who appopriated his labors uncredited, in all that can give lustre to a hmman life.

As before satd, we may never know exactly what Potamon tanght, but when we eonsider the care with which the Christian priesthoord have sought to conceal the fact that lotamon lived and taught at the very time when, it is satid, the man-god Jesus lived and tanght, we may naturally infer that the teachings and doctrines of Potamon were the same, or neady the same, ats these which they hase atributed fabely to dests. To give the weight of divine allthority to the ede detrines, it wats indieperasable to destroy as far as posible all trace of their haman origin, and henee su little has come down to us in the name of the trie aththe of thone denctrines, the fommere of the Batertio $\geq$ ystern of religion.

It hats heen the batat of Christime writers that there mever

the Christian religion, and yet there is not a tenet, dogma, doctrine, ceremony, form or prayer, fast or feast, title of deity, form of church government, official rank or religious observance of any kind, that is not identical with some prototype to be found in one or more of the more ancient religious systems. That being so, the originator of that religion was an Eelectic, whether Potamon or Jesus ; and as both must have lived at or about the same time, if the latter lived at all, and as Potamon is by all authorities conceded to be the founder of Eelecticism in religion, and as Jesus is not so much as mentioned by any one as having been a teacher of Eclecticism, it becomes more than a reasonable certainty that Potamon, and not Jesus, was the founder of what has been called or miscalled Christianity.
We have found access to information that we feel confident will show beyond all question that no such person, man, or God, as Jesus Christ, had anything to do with establishing the religion that has been taught in that name. We have at our command many incidental facts, all tending to show that the Christian religion is solely of human origin, and has nothing especially divine comected with it.

For more than a hundred years there was little or no trace left of the teachings of Potamon or of the Eclectic system of religion which he founded. About that time the books comprised in the New Testament, so-called, were brought to light, and were entitled the "Gospels According to St. Mathew, St. Mark, St. Luke, St. John, and The Acts of the Apostles," etc. Why they were so designated, and by whom they were so designated, no one knows, or if they did know, none have told us. Those titles show very plainly that they are not the Gospel (or God-spell) according to Jesus Christ. If they had been the latter, the Christian priesthood would not have hesitated to say so. We have just as much right to infer that those writings were different versions of the teachings of Jesus; and we have vastly more reason to think so, in view of the facts we have stated and those which we intend to adduce in detail in the course of this investigation.
The first follower of the teachings of Potamon who avowed his conversion to the Eelectic religion was Ammonius Saccas, of whom too little was known, or at least too little of whose teachings have been permitted to come down to us. Of this great teacher the Bingraphie I niverselle says:
"Ammonius Saccus, thus called because, it is said, he was a sack or hag hearer in his youth. He was a native of Alexamlria and lived toward the end of the seeond century. His parents were poor and Christians; they raised him in their religion. Disgnisted with his wearing calling, he left it to give himself up) to the study of Philosophy, in which it is beliesed he hat Pantienus as his master. After some years he opened a sehool and drew around him a great number of disciples of whom the most celebrated were Herrenius, Origen and Plotinns. This school is ordinarily regarded as the first of the Eelectic philosophy. This opinion, nevertheless, needs reetifieation. Eelecticism is the doctrine of those who, without embracing any particular system, take from each system that whieh is most conformable to truth, and of these various selections arranging a new system as a whole. It was in this mamer that Potamon proceeded. But it is impossible to give the name of Eclecticism to the philosophy [why not religion?] of Ammonius, a monstrous and singular collection of the most contradictory opinions. Indecd, not content with having amalgamated withont arrangement the fundamental systems of the different Greck serts, Epieuremism exerpted, he fell into the same confusion relative to religious principles; so that the chaos of his doctrines embraced alike philosophic opinions and saered dogmas. He ought then to be regarded rather ats the founder of Thensiphy or the Illuminated. Ammonius never wrote anything. He eonfided his principles only to a smatl number of disepples and under the veil of mystery. Meantime, some historians make him the author of an 'Erangelial Concordance,' which is tound in the seventh volume of 'Bibliotherge de Peres' and that others attributed with better reason to a bishop, Ammonits."
The Encyelopedia Britannica says of Ammonius:
". Ammonins, surnamed Saceas or 'sack Carrier,' from the fact of his having been obliged in the early part of his life to gatin his livelihood by acting as a porter in the market, lived at Alexamdria during the seeond century A. 1)., and died there $\therefore-41$ A. 1). Very litte is known of the events of his lite. He is said by Porphyry to have been born of Christian parents, and to have betonged originally to their fath from which he afterwarls apmotatized. Busebins (Chureh Mistory, vi, 19, ) denies this apostacy, amb affirms that Ammonius contimed a Christ ian to the cod of his life. It is clear, howerer, that Ensunus is referting to amother Ammonims, a ('hristian, who lived in andria. Among his pupils were Herennius, the two Origens, Longrinus, and, most distinguished of all, Plotinus, who in his seareh for true wisdom found himself irresistibly attraeted by Ammonius, remained his close companion for eleven years, and in all his later philosophy professed to be the mere exponent of his great master. Ammonius himself designedly wrote nothing, and the doctrines taught in his school were, at least during his life, kept secret, after the fashion of the old Pythagorean philosophy. Tius while all the later developments of Neo-Platonism are in a general way referred to him as their originator, little is known of his special tenets. From the notices of Hierocles, a scholar of Plutarch, in the early part of the fifth century A. D., preserved in Photius, we learn that his fundamental doctrine was an eclecticism or union of Plato and Aristotle. He attempted to show that a system of philosophy, common to both and higher than their special views, was contained in their writings. He thins, according to his admirers, put an end to the interminable disputes of the rival sehools. What other elements Ammonius included in his Eclectie system, and in particular how he stood related to the Jewish and Christian theosophies are points on which no information ean be procured. Few direct references to him exist, and these are not of unquestionable authority. He undoubtedly originated the Neo-Platonic movement, but it cannot be determined to what extent that philosophy, as known to us, through Plotinus and Proclus, represeuts his ideas. Eusebius mentions some Christian works by Ammonius. As Porphyry expressly tells us that Ammonius, the philosopher, wrote nothing, Eusebius must be referring to the later Christian of the same name. To this later Ammonius belongs the 'Diatesaron, or Harmony of the Four Gospels,' sometimes ascribed to the philosopher."

We here see another attempt, on the part of a Christian writer, to get rid of all trace of the teachings of Potamon and to prevent the diseovery of the great secret of the Roman Catholie priesthood that Potamon and not Jesus was the founder of the Christian religion. Both of the writers cited, concede that Ammonius Saccas was reared a Christian by his parents. The English writer quotes Porphyry to show that Anmonius apostatized, but admits that Eusebins in his "Church History" denied this apostacy and affirms that Ammonius eontinued to live a Christian to the end of his life. It is true he attempts to get rid of that testimony of the most erudite and thoroughly informed Christian Father by saying: "It is elear, however, that Eusebins is referring to another Ammonius, a Christian, who lived in Alexandria during the third century:" We are not, however, told by this very astute writer that there was any reason to believe that the Ammonius whom Porphyry alleged apostatized from the Christian faith was the Christian Ammonius of the third eentury ; nor has he pretended that the latter Ammonius was ever charged by Porphyry with having apostatized from the Christian faith. There can, therefore, be little or no doulit that Eusebius referred to Ammonius Saccas when he clamed that he continued a Christian to the end of his life. Now, it being a fact, according to Eusebius, that Ammonius Saceas was a Christian, and that the Christian doctrines which he taught were kept seeret while he lived, it becomes a matter of the deepest interest to know what those Christian teachings were which Ammonius kept secret. This English writer does not pretend that those secret Christian teachings were, what afterwards became known as the doctrines of the Neo-Platonists. It is true that the French writer above quoted says that the secret doctrines of the Eclectic school of religionists founded by Potamon, as the inception of what afterwards became Christianity were not the doctrines of Eelecticism; but we will show before we close this treatise, that Ammonius Saceas was a follower of the Eclectic system of religion founded by Potamon at the very peried when the Christian religion is universally admitted to have originated.

We hate again, in the case of Ammonius saceas, the evidence that his contemporaries songht to befog his history and teathings. Thanks to his followers, Herrenins, Origen and Ilotinus, this attempt at Christian eoncealment was less suceessful than in the case of Potamon.

There can be but little room for question, in view of all the facts which have been and which will yet be adduced, that the teachings of Ammonius were only kept seeret beealsise of the cortain destruction that would have awaited him had he pulbliely diselosed the fact that C'hrist ianity was not of divine origin, and that haman spirits held direct commmion with mortals. Those seerets are as carefully guarded to-day, ly the Christian pricethosel, as they were hy Ammonius simeats in the third fentury: Finding that they can no longer resist the light which Mondern fipitazlism is throwing into the dark chambers of mystery in which Gowl's living truths have been buried by impions prisatly craft, these sathetimonions swindlers ery ont,
"It is the Devil-it's the Devil's work-have nothing to do with it." We answer them and say, "It has been the Devil's work that these most important truths have been so long concealed." It will yet prove that the proscribed Potamon and his followers, have been the saviours of their fellow-men, and not the cowled deceivers of their race, who have stolen the garments of sanctity, the more effectually to accomplish the enslavement of the people.

VESPASIAN.

Tenth Roman Emperor.

"I Greet You, Sir :-I might as well introduce myself before I proceed to give my communication. I am sent here by A pollonins of Tyana, and my name was Vespasian. I commanded the forces at the taking of Jerusalem. I was afterwards an emperor. Amongst the Jews, at that time, there was no account of such a person as Jesus of Nazareth. But there were several Jesuses commanding the mutineers ; yet neither Greek, Roman nor Jew knew aught of what is now known as the Christian Saviour. There was there, A pollonius, who was what you would certainly term, at the present day, a great medium. By laying his hands upon a roll, upon which nothing whatever was written, communications wonld come from the spirits of our ancestors. In that way this man was of immense benefit to me in the reduction of Jerusalem. He was deified after his death. His features and hair resembled very much the stathes of the God Jupiter. He was looked upon in our camp as the reincarnation of the God Apollo. By reincarnation, I do not mean it in the sense in which yout understand it to-day, but that he was a god in flesh. The real truth of the whole affiair was, that this man was a medinm, and all his teachings were identical with those in the God-book of the Christians. He rebuked fevers and diseases, and they left those afflicted with them. Our idea of disease was, that they were the result of demonology-that is, that they were produced by spirits that were only elementary. But this idea was incorreet, for since I beeame a spirit, I have failed to find such elementary spirits. But I have fommd diseased spirits, who are attracted to mortals lyy their diseases, and they make siek, and hejp to kill those they obtain eontrol of. Another thing I eamot understand is, that with all my endeavors foget posesession of the old books of the Jews, I did not succeed in getting one; for the Jews dastroyed them rather than that they should be desecrated hy heathens. Now, how Christians can clam that they havir copies of the ancient Hebrew prophets, when I eould not ohtain one, I eannot understand. This is something I leave the present Christians and Jews to explain ; beeanse I searehed their dead, their houses, their captives, but could obtain nothing of them except the acknowledgment that the Jews had such books, and none of them were allowed to fall into Romsn hands. My main purpose in giving Josephus his lite was, to get through him those books; but I failed even in that ease. The reason why Josephus never mentioned this Apollonius was, hecause the Jews, and especially the Pharisers, would have nothing to do with a heathen prophet or philosopher. In fact the Jews were the lowest heathens of my time on earth. They worshipped everything they felt like worshipping. They had no especial corle or system of laws. The mon that sucereded in graining the most followers governed everything for the time ; and that was the reason wo lamans were so severe with them. If they eamght a Roman soldier by himself, they would cut his throat with as little hesitation ats they wond kill a dog. Von will reecive further partienlars from Felix, procurator of dulea. He says he wants to give his solemn spirit testimony that he nevor heard of one Sit. J'anl, who, it is said, pleaded his eatuse before him. I thank vot for wiving me this hearing."

We refer to the I'emy C'yelopaedia for acoonnt of Vespatian.
Such was the emperor who testifies as a spirit that A pollonits of Tyana wats with him at the siege of Jerusalem, and acted as his medimm for commmmication with the spirits of his ancentors. As shown in our remarks upon Apollonitus, both Vespasian and Titus admitted in letters to Apollonius that they wore mbler thr greatest obligation to him for serviees rendered to them ats ath orarie or medimm. The teatimony of this surit that there Was mothing kumwon at Jorusalem, at the time of its capture ly the Romatas, of athy surh persen as the ('hristian sationr, is most intportant as commative evidence that mos surh furson lived at the time elatured ats the perion of his alleged earthly tatching. That Apollonits was looked upon in the lomann camp as the reincarnation of the God Apollo or as an incarnated God, and the fact that he was a medium whose teachings were identical with the Christian Scriptures, affords the strongest evidence that A pollonius was the real origin of the Christian Saviour. His rebuking fevers and diseases, and driving then from the sick, was but the healing process so successfully practiced to-day by healing mediums. The suggestion or statement that spirits are sometimes diseased and that they are attracted to mortals, imparting to them disease and sometimes eausing death, is a startling fact that seems to be largely borne out by observed events. Especially is this the case with epilepsy, as we have had much reason to know. Who knows how the books of the Jewish scriptures came into the hands of the Christian priesthood? Nothing of them was known to the most learned of the Greeks and Romans as late as the time of Vespasian. That Apollonius had much to do with saving the life of Josephus there is little doubt from what Vespasian says; for it was the work of Apollonius's whole life to master the religions and mysteries of every people then known to civilization. He undoubtedly used all his influence with Vespasian to save Josephus in the hope that he would learn the secrets of the Jewish religion through him. Vespasian states that he spared Josephus on that account. This whole communication of Vespasian is singularly confirmatory of the communication of A pollonius. Thus facts accumulate, all pointing to the one result that there is nothing original in conucction with the Christian religion.

HERODES AGRIPPI II.

King of Judea.

"I Will Salute you, Sir, by saying:-Those who would obstruct these communications contirm the saying, 'Fools rush in where Angels fear to tread.' I was born into the mortal life about A. D. 30, and departed to the spirit life about A. D. 85 . I lived at the time of the great trimplis and renowned career of Apollonius of Tyama, a man and a medium who, (if people must have a God and a Saviour) ought to be the leading character in that direction, today. I most positively assert, that under the name of Patinus or Polionot, Apollonius was brought before me for disturbing the peace of the country; but nothing could be proven against him, except that he knew more about the Jewish religion than my own people did. In those days, the Jews gladly killed any Gentile who knew more of their religion, and who could expound it better than their learned Rabbies. As I could find no harm in the man exeept what I have stated, he was diseharged. He was brought before me a seend time about the time of the downfall of the Jewish state, which was about A. D. 67 or 6 , ${ }^{\text {s }}$, when he was again charged with disturbing the comstry, by advancing infeas that were derogatory to the Jewish Jehowah. But again his aceusers failed to prove their point. Apmllonius was, in fact, a disciple and initiated member of the school of Gamaliel, and so well did he argue with his acensers, that they failed in all their attempts to prove anything against him. That Apallomins was the st. Panl of the present Christian religion is planly proven, by reading the various epistles attributed to him. Those "pistles will show to any eandid inquirer or thinker, that Paul was not a Jew. Fverything therein goes to show that he must have been a person well versed in Greek, and just such a writer and thinker as was the great Cappadoeian sage, Apollonins of Tyana. The last time, during my mortal garer, that I met Apellonius, was in the eamp of Tinns, before Jertisalem, alxut A. D. i0, where I saw such spiritual manifest: tims ocenrring through his medimmship, or in his presemee, ats Jowphas relates as having oceured through Eleazer the Jow. Jonphas was in the eamp of Titns at that time. Those manifostations were similar to the varions phemomena now well known to be produced by spirits throngh modiums, and were such as to incite Vespasian and Titus to greater endeavors to overthrow the Jewish state. I have further to say, that there was no Jewish history or book, written in my time, that could prove my people to have a history extending over five hundred years before my time. The sacred writings all took their present shape in the days of Ezra the scribe. This communication is not from a 'Jew of the Jews,' but is from one who despised them because they would never submit to be properly ruled, and were always in a state of anarchy. They were bigoted on all points, and it was their bigotry that destroyed them as a nation. My name was Agrippa Herodes the Younger. I was king of Judea."

For account of Agrippa Herodes II, we refer to Smith's Greek and Roman Biography.

If the communication of Herodes Agrippa the Younger is authentic and true, then have we positive proof that Apollonius of Tyana was the St. Paul, or the A postle Paul, of the socalled Christian Seriptures, and the true nature of the so-called New Testament is clearly and certainly known. We do not believe that any untruthful spirit, however bent on deceiving, could invent a story so consistent with so many and widely variant historical facts. We therefore conclude that the whole communication came from the controlling spirit intelligence of him who was known as Agrippa Herodes II. The only other question that remains to be determined, is the substantial truthfulness of the communication.

That Agrippa lived, as he says, during the great triumphs and renowned eareer of Apollonius of Tyana, is very certain ; and, that he was thoroughly acquainted with the distinguished reformatory labors of Apollonius, is equally certain. Therefore, when, as a spirit, he comes back and testifies that Apollonius under the name of Paulinus or Polionos was twice brought before him on the complaint of the Jews, and was twice acquitted by him, he states what we have every just reason to believe was the fact. Agrippa was king from A. D. 48, until the conquest of Jerusalem, and the dispersion of the Jews, A. D. 70. It was during that time that $A$ pollonins was bronght before him, as he states. The complaint, in the first instance, was, that he was disturbing the peace of the country, which disturbance arose from his showing the people that he knew more about the Jewish religion than the Jewish priests knew themselves. As that was no offence under the law, Agrippa discharged him.

The charge in the second instance was that Apollonius was disturbing the country $\mathrm{l}_{\mathrm{y}}$ advancing ideas that were derogatory to the Jewish Jehovah. But, on this charge too, le was aeguitted. Why? Because ats the spirit tellsus, he, Apollonius, was a dieciple of the great Jewish philosopher (iamaliel, and an initiate of his school, and was thos enabled to confoumb and defeat his Jewish aecusers. This was, as the spirit states, about A.D. G7 or 68. At that time A pollonius must have been in his sixty-fifth or sixty-wixth year.

The spirit states that Apollonius was undonbtedly the אit. Panl of the present ('luristian religion, and ealls attention to the fact that the epistles attributed to the latter, were the work of a person thoroughly eonversant with the (ireck language and literature, and not of a Jew at all. This is mudoubtedly the faet, and hecause it is the fact, (hristian writers have habored so hard to break the force of it. Now in order to show our readers the positive identity of the Christian St. Panl and Apollonius the (appadocian sage and saviour, as he was called he his followers, we refer our readers to the account of the trial of the apostle laml before Agrippa. Aets xxir, xxy, xxvi.

As to the verion of the trial of Apollonius before king Agrippa, as set forth in the Acts of the Apostles, by what person, or when written, the writer did not dare to diselose. It is a well known fact that this fictitious book was not written until after all the other books of the New Testament, as it is ealled, were written; and that it was written to explain the combection between the sto-alled ('hristian (iospels alld the l'aline Epistles. Everything about that acoome of the arethsation of Panl by the Jews, his defenee, and of his being sent to Rome, shows that it was a concorted atlair, to get away from the fact that it was $A_{p}$ ollomius of Tyana, who ereated =neh an exeitement among the Jews; and who was the real anthow of the Pamline Epistles. This trial, about which Chrintians make such :an ado, is no where mentioned in Josephes's histories, which shows one of two things; either that it was considered ly doreghes as a matter of tox little aceotme to be worthy of montion, or the montion of it has heel dentroyed. That neithor Apollonin* nor Panl, who are said to have digurd so promimently at that "pech, shombl be mentioned he docephas or any writer of that time, in :ay connertion whatever, wond show that there was eome great reason for thise studied silence.

Apollonius was certainly in Judea while the Jewish war was in progress, and there made the acquaintance of Vespasian whose prophet and seer he became. It was just before the breaking ont of the war, that the trial before Agrippa took place, most probably not in A. D. 60, as has been supposed, but in A. D. 67 or 68, as the spirit states. It was no doubt this aceusation of Apollonius before Agrippa, and his discharge, that constitutes the whole ground work of the fabulous account of the same oceurrence in the Acts of the Apostles: It was most natural that a Greek, such as Apollonius was, who was a renarkable medium, and who created an uproar wherever lie went, on account of the wonderful spirit manifestations which took place throngh him or in his presence, should have aroused the deadly enmity of the Jewish priests; but it was most unnatural that any Jew, and especially any Pharisee, should have caused such a commotion, and caused so long a detention in custody, as more than two years. Besides, the writer of Acts, inadrertently no doubt, says, that one of the charges bronght against the accused by the Jews, was that he was " a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes." This charge could apply to no Jew of the sect of the Pharisees, as it is claimed that Paul was. It did, however, apply especially to A pollonius who was one of those persons whom the Jews, in derision, called Nazarites, who, about that time, assumed the designation of Essenes. Besides, it is very certain that Apollonius as a Nazarite or Essene, believed in the resurrection of the dead.

Indeed, however critically the statement of the spirit of Agrippa is compared with the account of this ocemrence in Acts, the fact will become the more clear that A pollonius, and not the Christian St. Paul, was the individnal to which the account in Acts relates. The spirit then tells us that the last time he met Apollonius was in the camp of Titus, before Jerusalem, about A. D. 70 , where he saw such spiritual manifestations take place in his presence as Josephus relates as having occurred through Eleazer the Jew. The part of Josephus's writings referred to by the spirit, is to be found in the Antiquities of the Jews, Book viii, chap. ii, Section 5.

What the spirit of Agrippa says as to the antiquity of the saced books of the Jews is certainly suhstantiatly eorrect. Whether none of them were earlier than Eza the Seribe, we do not know, and have no time to ascertain. Wo have only time and space to give the following facts concerning Eara the scribe. We quote from MeClintock and Strong's Encyelopsedia of Theological Literature, article Eara :
" Eara, the celethated Jewish scribe and priest, who, in the year 13. (. 459, led the secomol expedition of the Jews back from the Batylonian exile into P'alestine, and the ather of one of the eanonical books of seripture. * * All that is really khown of Eara is contained in the last four ehapters of the Book of Eara and Neb. viii and xii, 26. In addition to the information there given, that he was a 'seribe,' a 'ready scribe of the law of Moses,' a 'seribe of the words of the conmandments of the Lord and of his statutes to Isach,' 'a seribe of the law of God in heaven,' and 'a priest,' we are told hy Josephus that he was a high priest of the Jews who were left in Babylon, that he was particularly conversant with the law of Moses, and was held in universal esteem on account of his rightenushes and virtue."

These historical facts, if they are facts, would point to Earat and his time for the establishment of the Jewish canons, whieh were no doult largely derived from the Chatdean ammals. Whatever Jewish literature existed before that period must have amounted to very little. What Deva Bexihisatoua did for the Buddhist religion, and Pamphilusand Eusebius of Cesarea for the Christian religion, it would seem Eara did for the Jewish religion. In elosing we do not hesitate to say that we regard Agrippa's communication as true, and that it proves beyond all question that Apollonius of Tyana was the St. Patul of the so-called New Testament.

PLINY THE YOUNGER.

"Sir:-Time is nothing to a spirit. We never grow old; but we are cramped by our mortal conditions. I was appointed to the position of consul or procurator of Bythinia and Pontus about the last part of the first century of the Christian era, by Trajan of Rome ; and as I an an important witness in the settlement of the dispute concerning the reality of Jesus Christ, I come here to-day, by the invitation of a Persian sage, A ronamar. [The latter is the controlling guide of the medium.] One of the greatest proofs that the Christians bring forward to establish the historical existence of Jesus, is my letter to Trajan. I did write such a letter but the name Christian was not to be found in it. That word is a forgery. The word I used was Essenes not Christians. The cause of my inquiry into the nature and customs of the sect calling themselves Essenes was, they were what you moderns call Communists, and Trajan wanted to know whether they interfered with the rights of other people. I found them a very quiet and inoffensive class of people, holding everything in common; and I so reported to the Emperor. I had no knowledge whatever of the so-called Christian religion. I do not come here in malice to give this communication, but I do come because I wish to testify to the truth. As I hope for future happiness I affirm that what I have stated here is the positive and absolute truth. I have fulfilled my mission. Sign me Pliny the Younger."

If that communication is genuine, then the disputed points as to the letter of Pliny to Trajan are clearly explained and set at rest. That it is genuine I confidently believe. The letter to Trajan was by Pliny, but made no reference to a sect called Christians, but to the sect of the Essenes, from whom the Christian priesthood borrowed much of what they claim was divine and infallible truth. The Essenes were not Christians, having existed as a sect long before the alleged birth of their god-man.

Refer to Biographic Universelle for sketch of Pliny the Younger. For letter refer to Biblical, Theological and Ecelesiastical Encyelopedia, of Meclintock and Strong.

Who can read that letter attributed to Pliny, as set forth in the above work, and believe that he, the friend and proteonsul of the beneticent and gentle Trajan, ever wrote it. From beginning to end it lears the marks of the pions errors of the Christian priesthood, who sought to find or produce some phasible historical evidence that Jesus had an existence at some time and in some place. But they have manifested greater desperation of ever leeing able to produce such evidence, in seeking to make Pliny a witness for them, than we supposed possible. These pretended Christians of Bythinia and Pontus, Pliny is made to tell us, worshipped the image of Trajan and the statues of the Gools and that the 'Temples of the pagan Romans which had been almost forsaken began to be more frequented; that the sacred pagan solemmities, after a long interval, had revived; that victims for sacritice were bought up, whereas for a time there were few purchasers. What kind of Christians were those?

In the light of the above communication of the spirit of Pliny and the internal evidence of fraud and forgery in the letter attributed to Pliny, we may conclude beyond all doubt or question that the letter was a pions frand of a most unpardonable elaracter. It is no wonder that independent investigators of ('hristian evidences have regarded it as spurions. Pliny says he did write a letter to Trajan reporting the result of his investigation of the practices of a religions seet of communists calling themselves Eisenes, made at the request of the Roman Emperor Trajan ; and that he found them a quiet, inotiensive people. That this is certain the historical character of the Essenes will show. And out of these few facts the spurious letter was manufactured. Is there any limit to the baseness of the founders of the ('loristian religion"' We have failed to reach it yet.

Applied to the mystier-aserties, the Essenes, the letter of Pliny becomes most appropriate and intelligible, but as applied to the Christian sect, wholly irrelevant and absurd. But, in the light of the explanation eontamed in the foregoing eommanication, the true import of Pliny's letter becomes clear ; and that as late as the beximning of the seeond eentury, A. D. wo *hew the magnitude of the religions framd that mater the title of ('hristianty hat heen grate iead upon the eivilized work. In

ORIGENES OR ORIGEN.

Claimed to have been a Christian Father.

"Sir:-Many persons ask this question? Why do you and the spirits coming through this medium keep constantly agitating the question 'did Jesus Christ really live?' To those who are free from this, or at least to many of them, it makes no difference, but to the millions held in slavery to this soul-killing doctrine of redemption by his blood, this question is of vital importance. Centuries of time have elapsed since I entered the spirit life. I was reared a Pagan. I embraced this doctrine in my mortal life, but realized the foolishness of all its teachings before I entered spirit life. I regret that I ever wrote one sentence toward fostering and upholding the so-called Christian religion. The misfortune has been this. The Christian priesthood have been eareful to preserve everything that I wrote in favor of their religion, but they have been equally careful to destroy all my written denunciations of it, at least so far as they possibly could. I was young when I first learned of Christianity. It appealed to my ardent nature so strongly, that it subjected my reason to a passion for religion, and especially for that religion. But as I matured in years, I became perfeetly aware of the weak points of Christianity, and the more I studied it, the weaker the fabric became, and because I became an Intidel to that foolish teaching, I was accused by my eontemporaries of having relapsed into Paganism. By the great Divine, I heartily wish I had never had anything to do with it. I am ealled one of the Christian Fathers. I deny the statement, becalise I do not want to be understood as the father of any religion. All religions are founded upon untruths, and they must and will all go down together. I here declare that Christianity and so-called Paganism are identical, for the one is the outgrowth of the other. All the evidence I could collect in my mortal life about their so-called Jesus, convinced me that no such person ever lived, and turned me against the Christian religion. I could find no evidence as to the existence or place of the birfl of this C'lorist. There was not a scmap of anthentic willenee to be found as late as the yan 1s0 of the Christian era, that attorded any reliable information in relation to this so-called Jesus Christ. The whole of the narratives in relation to such a person, were derived from the Greek and Egyptian godmakers I believed as a mortal, and as a spirit, I now know to be the fict. There never has been, and there never will be, so far ass I can learnas a spirit, any interference whatever between God and man. But men and women have been interfered with by spirits; many of them with good purposes, but legions of them the devils of the spirit life. It is these poisoned and darkened human spirits that hang like a whip of seorpions o'er the earth to lash mortals for the errors they have made, and are still propagating. I have acquired a true knowledge of these things as a spirit, therefore I affirm that I have made this communication honestly, and have told the truth and nothing but the truth as I hope for eternal happiness. I was known when here as Origen."

Refer to Smith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Biography:
We think if our readers will carefally read the account of Origen's life ly the light of the foregoing communication from the spirit of that great and leanned man, they cannot fail to sce the vast importance of that spirit eommunieation. It makes plain all disputed questions in relation to the views and carecr of Origen. The statement of Porphyry that he was reared a Pagan, which can be found in the account of Origen given in Smith's Dictionary of (ireck and Roman liography, is positively attested by the spirit, and there can be no doubt of its truth. As he says at an early age he learned of Christianity, and during his youth and earlier manhood was ardently attached to that fath. This change in religious convictions in all probability contimed until his visit to (irecee where he attended the sehool of Ammonius Saceas, the follower of the founder of Edecticism, Potamon of Alexamtria, after which time he no doubt adopted the teachings of Ammonius, who was himself a spiritual medimm, and addressed his hearers while entranced, as do our modern mediums. From that time, wo doubt, dated the alienation of Origen from the doctrines of ( 'hristianity wheh were all shown to be untre ty the teachings of spirits. From that time forward Origen was no more a Christ ian than was Ammomins Saceas ; although ranked among the Fialhers of ('hristianity, For the ('hristian C'hureh to claim Origen as onde of its greatest lights is a desprate resenere, view the mather in any lirht we may ; but sum was the pancity of such writings of the excommunicated and heretical Origen as they could turn to their account, while all the rest of the volum-. inous writings of his mature life have been carefully destroyed or conveniently lost. The cat is, however, effectually let out of the bag by the spirit of Origen himself, who says he lived for many years an infidel to the Christian faith, and died so, after satisfying himself by the most thorough researches that there was no more truth in it than in Paganism, both being identically the same. His positive declaration that the writings concerning Jesus Christ in his time were unauthentic and untrue, ought to settle the question, especially when it is so fully borne out by all that has come down to us concerning the truly learned and steadfast Origen. That Origen did not know as much concerning the spirit life when on earth as we do to-day, his communication plainly shows. Space will not allow us to enlarge upon this subject. To do it justice would require a volume.

Abstract

"I greet you, Sir:-Centuries have rolled away since I passed from my earthly labors. There are things in the spirit life that are too decp for mortal comprehension. Away in the higher realms of spirit life there are prepared for you such stores of spiritual manna as you cannot conceive of, which will be poured down upon you as soon as you open up the conditions that will render this possible. The obstructions to this event, is not so much in spirit life as among mortals. On account of the density of your organism as compared with the spirit organism, you have the atmosphere around so psychologized that it is wonderful that a refined spirit can come to you at all. To do so, for such a spirit, is like a strong swimmer almost exhansted by buffeting a swift current. For a sensitive and refined spirit to force itself back to earth, and manitest through a medimn is in every way more exhansting. [To this point the control of the mediun seemed imperfect.] That is preliminary to what I want to say to you at this time. My life was an eventful one. I lived at the time of the final overthrow of the Jewish mation, which was foretold by our seers, clairvoyants and tramee medimus. I am here to-day, to testify in regard to a question which is of vital importanee to hanamity, and to untold millions of spirits also. It is in relation to the correctness of the doctrine of salvation through a saviour. It has been clamed by historians and writers, that I was an Ebionite Christian. I positively deny the trath of that statement. I was a Jew of the sect of Pharisers, and at no time leaned toward the Sidducees or to the doctrines of the Eissences. I lived to see my nation dispersed and seattered. At the time when I wrote my histories, there was no such man as Jexus of Nazareth-a doer of wonderful works ; and any person of ordinary comprehension, ean see that the passage in which it is said I referred historically to such a man, was fraudulently interpolated by some Christian copier of my history. First, it interrupts the narrative which I was writing at that time; and in the second place, I always gave all the facts that I could glean concerning those persons of whom I wrote, and if so important a person, as this Jesus has been represented to have been, had lived at that time, I would have given a full description of him. There were no C'hristians at the time of my retirement from public life, in the $y$ ear, 100 , in the reign of Trajan. Christianty was the subsequent outgrowth of all the mystical religious systems previously existing. If any person will attentively examme the four (iospels, it will be foumd that all kinds of pagan worships are there expresed to the understanding of those who were intiated intora knowledge of their trme meaning, and the final secee of the whole athar is to be fomm in the blue vant of heaven, being none other than a monditied sabaism, the worship of the אm, Moon, Plancts and Stars. The Jews were in many respects the same, and thair idolatry consisted in symbelizing the signs of the zodiac. So general was this kind of star worship, at the outset of the soreahed Christian mosement, that the fommers of that religions system, at first, but slightly deviated from the ohder religions teachings, hat as that sy* <ont struck deeger, they songht to disguise by chicanery and interpolation of new expressions in the writings of the ohler authors, the mature of their religion, in order that the masies should never know that important fact. There is no priest nor doreyman living to-day, who can deny what I have here wet forth, if they tell the truth. The only alternatise for those who still persios in this work of concealnment is, whether hary will contess his truth befor mortals, or whether they will wait to be fomed to confes it before the immental spirits. It is only a fuestion in time. Tonall theo soneathed spiritual leaders I will say, you will have to return to the only religion ever given by God to man, and that is direct communion with the spirit world pure and uncontaminated with pride and selfishness. This is the Christ-this is the Messiah-this is the light-that is to save all men. Yours for the perpetuation of truth, Josephus.

Refer to the Encyelopedia Britamica and MeClintock and Strong's Ecclesiastieal Cyelopedia.

We especially invite the attention of our readers to that most remarkable communication from the spirit of Josephus. Read it again in the light of what is said of him and his werks by Christian writers, and doubt if you can its authenticioy. It leaves nothing that has been doubtful concerning Josephus and his writings unexplained. To suppose it is the work of the medium's mind, or our own who took down the words as they fell from the medium's lips, is preposterous. The medium was insensibly entranced, and we were so busy writing as to have no time to think of anything else.

After nearly 1800 years in spirit life, after much preparation and effort on the part of high and learned spirits, who are cooperating with us in our efforts to get the naked truth before the world, this purified, refined and exalted Jewish historian's spirit returns, and through an illiterate medium, inparts the most important information that has ever come to mortals. The spirit of Josephus testifies most positively that for the first hundred years of the Christian era, nothing was known of such a person as Jesus of Nazareth, and nothing known of any religion called Christianity nor of any sect called Christians. In the face of that spirit testimony the authenticity of which can not be successfully questioned, we ask what earthly reason there can be to cling to the idea that Jesus Christ had an historieal or personal existence.

The communication settles the question as to why Josephus wrote nothing concerning Jesus of Nazareth. That reason was that no such person lived in the only period of the wordd's history in which such a man could have lived. The charge, therefore, that Josephus was governed by prejudice in taking no notice of Jesus and his alleged history, falls to the gromed. Josephus fully confirms the astro-theological nature of the four goipels and the astronomical origin of the Jewish, as well ats the Christian religion. We regard the communication of Josephus, as a whole, as most important.

FLARVIUS PHILOSTRATUS.

The Biographer of Apollonius of Tyana.

Abstract

"I Salute you, sir :-I wrote the life and adventures of Apollonius of Tyana, by the order of Julia Domma; and no reasonable person would suppose for an instant that she would have desired an adept in Oriental languages to have transeribed them for her, if the character to whom they related had not been of great note. Whoever denies the statements of critics, that Apollonius of Tyana was a great man in his day and generation, denies the truth. Among the first and most remarkable discoveries of the Empress Julia, was the identity or striking resemblance of the semptured features of the faces of the Roman deity, Apollo, and of Apollonits of Tyana, as they were then represented at Rome. I took the facts of my history of Apollonius from the Memoirs of Damis, (the St. John or beloved disciple of that great man) from his birth to the beginning of the second eentury; and from Moragenes to the time of Eutsthencs. All these men were biographers of $A_{\text {pollonins }}$ before my time, and from their works I wrote my history of him. But every aflort has been made by snceeding popes and emperors sine the reign of Constantine the (ereat, to destroy what I wrote of Apellonius. But it is a fact that he, $A$ pollonins, was, by the Romans, worshiped in the days of Septimus Gevorus as the great Promethens or the saviour of men, and this continued up to the time when I wrote his history. The feats in honor of him were always celebmated, in wonnection with a certain star (such as the star of Bethleheme), and this star was in the constellation Aries or the Lamb. Ite was worshipped as the rentre of (ionl's cternal circle. Ender the idea of propitatory samerifer, mankind had sacritiow wery :mimal from a frog to a horse, and timally ended with hmman beref oflerimgs ; and this was deemed a neressity in my age to purjey a sonl. This was roneurrent with the puritication related by Euxanes. From his days to my time there was just as muth of sureritiee ohserved as in previons times. The presest virgin of Rome had to die in homer of the god Apello, and heresent passed to Apollonins in laradise. Now I will say in conclusion,

I saw hundreds of persons kissing the Greek cross and offering up that last dying prayer of the Promethean saviour, accompanied with the burning of myrrh and frank-incense as incense, the same as yon see this done in the Christian churches at your approaching Easter festival. The Catholic spirits are so shut up in their earthly acquired dependence upon their priests that they camot ascend as spirits out of that condition, and they are forced back to the earth. No ascent is possible for them, while thus held, and they react upon you mortals with disastrous force. There was no such religion as the Christian religion in my day. There was a sect who worshipped the Hindoo Christos. Their religion was a mixture of Buddhism, Platonism and Greco-Gymnosophism ; and their first and most important rite was circumcision. But they were not very numerous or widespread. They resided mainly at Ephesus, Cairo and Rome. The chief symbol of their religion was a circle within which were represented the human sexual organs. They were very secret in their movements and their teachings were very obscure. No one knew of such a person as Jesus of Nazareth at that time. The Nazarites were held in the greatest contempt by the Jews, and it was for that reason the Christian priesthood chose that obscure village of Judea for the scene of Jesus's abode. I am Flavius Philostratus."

Refer to Smith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Biography.
It is not a little singular that this most invaluable work of Philostratus has never been wholly translated into English. It is very evident that the scholars of English speaking peoples, have too much regard for their popularity to venture to give their patrons an English translation of this Christianityannihilating narrative of the life, adrentures and teachings of the real author and founder of that ecclesiastical fraud. It is impossible for want of space to give all the extracts which seem important to get a true idea of the value of this communication. To those of our readers who wish to pursue the investigation of the subject of this sketch in connection with Apollonius, we would say that if they will refer to the account of Apollonius by Benjamin Jowett, M. A. Fellows and Tutor of Baliol College, Oxford, England, as published in Smith's Dictionary of Creek and Roman Biography, they will there find in connection with the life of A pollonius, a brief discussion of three very important questions, namely: I. The historical gromendwork on which the narrative of Philostratus was founded. II. How far, if at all it was designed as a rival to the Gospel History. III. The real character of Apollonins himself. These discussions will show how ('hristian rrities flounder fruitlessly abont to reconeile umbloubed historical facts with the framblumt pretences of the "(iospel history," as they are pleased to dexignate their string of theological fatbes. It is a fart that must end all persibibe controversy as to whether Philostratus borrowed any part of the "general story of our Lord's life," or whether the latter was not bodily stolen from the life and writings of Apollonins of T'yama, that Philostratus does not mention Jesus Christ, or his twelve apostles, or either of the so-called Christian gospels, as having furnished him any of the materials for his biography; lat that the man source of his information was the memoirs of Damis and Maximus of Nege, of the life doings and teachings of A pollonits the beloved master, written while yet $A$ pollonius was living. It is certain that when Philestratus wrote his biography, Jesus of Nazareth had never heen heard of. That there is, therefore, any striking analogy between the life of Apollonits and the life attrihuted to the Christian Jesus, is suflicient to show that the latter is hat a bungling parocly, on, or phagiarism of Philostratus's Life of Apollonius. Of this fact we have now in hand ample spirit and historical testimony to fully establish. We also call attention to the thitd chapter of ('harles Blomat's English translation of Philostratus's (iroek text, where will be found the soures from which Philostatus drew his materials for the hiography of Apollonits.

Aceording to Charles blount it appears that whike in his work, Philostratus speaks disparagingly of Moragones as a reliable athority, he mentions him in his communication, as his athority for the facts appertaining to some portions of his work. On the other hand, he mentions Maximus of Eque as one of his anthorities in his work, while in the communieation he does not montion him, hut mentions Fbasthenes. Why he does not mention the Testament written by Apollonins himself, in the commmication we do not know, muldse he made but little use of it in compesing his hiography. All the facts would seom to indicate that Damis did not eommener his Momoirs or Commentaries on the life and lathers of $A$ pollonius, mitil after he met the latterat Ninewh, when he wason his way to Intia. At that time, Apollonins was past forty years of age. It sembs that Maximus, had made a reend of the events of his life while at Digar, in the Tomple of Asculapims, where, yomg as he then was, he gained the greatest renown as a healer and philosopher. After leaving ※gre, there seems to have been no record kept of his doings, until he determined to set out on the wonderings in the search, and in the dissemination of knowledge, which only ended with his great old age. Prof. Jowett says there seems to have been a gap in his history of nearly twenty years. That is true so far as historic records go, but not true so far as the spirit testimony of Apollonins is concerned. After his wanderings through the comentries of Asia Minor, fulfilling his Pythagorean probation of long years of silence and contemplation, he went to Antioch and opened a school where he taught the modified Essenian philosophy which he had conceived, and which it was to be his life's mission to give to the world. It was there he held fellowship with the great Essenian patriarch Ignatius of Antioch; and in time gained the highest name for learning and wisdom of all the philosophers of histime. Espeeially did he gain renown as a healer of all human maladies by virtue of his sympathetic and magnetic nature. At that period there secms to have been a great outpouring of spirit power upon the people of southwestern Asia, and especially upon the people of Judea. Hearing of the wonderful doings of A pollonius at Antioch, the Jews became importunate that he should appear among them, and at length prevailed upon him to visit Jerusalem for which place heset out. A polloniusin hisspirit communication recounts the incidents attending his entrance into Jerusalem, and the result substantially as is related in the gospels of the Christians concerning Jesus of Nazareth, The jealousy of the Jewish priesthood was so aroused against him, on account of the popular excitement occasioned by his wonderful work of healing among them, that he was compelled to seek safety by flight. Returning to Antioch, he resumed his teachings there, and continued them until he decided to start for India. There is no doubt some good reason why that portion of Apollonius's life work is not forth-coming at this time, which will be disclosed in the future. It is by no means certain but that the copy of Philostratus's work that has been permitted to come down to us, has been largely suppressed by the Christian pontiffs or their kingly tools. That gap eovers the precise time when it is said Jesus of Nazareth was performing those mirades of spiritual power, for performing which he has been worshipped as God. In this connection we are led to notice one pasinge in the Gospel According to Matthew, which shows that the hero of that Gospel was not a Galilean, but quite another person. Mathew iv, 23, 24.
"And Jesus went about all Galilee teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people.
"And his fame went throughout all Syria; and they brought unto him all siek people that were taken with divers diseases and torments, and those which were possessed with devils, and those which were lunatic, and those that had the palsy; and he healed them."

Now so far as Syria is concerned, that was eertainly the case with Apollonius, who at Antioch, the capital city of Syria, was overwhelmed with his labors as a medimnistic healer. That Apollonius, who had for many years been performing his miraculous cures in the very heart of Syria, shoukd have aequired fame in that extensive country was natural, but that Jesus of Nazareth of whom no one had heard until then, should have had such an extensive fame in so short a time was perfeetly absurd. We venture to say that that brief mission, attributed to Jesus of Nazareth in after centuries as having been performed in Galilee and Judea, was nothing more nor less than a parody on the aceount of the journey made by A pollonius from Antioch to Jerusalem, and his stay among the priest-ridden and superstitions Jews. He would naturally have gone hy way of (ialilee, and no donbt proached and healed as he went, creating the very excitement among the Jows that he ereated wherever he went afterwards, from India and ligypt, to the most polished eities of ancient (ireece and Rome. Reader, is not this a most natural and unawodable inference? It is just this part of the grand and unprecedented eareer of A pollonins that has been blotted out. Is it not most signilicant that it is during the period of this journey of $\lambda_{\mathrm{p}}$ pollonius to Jernsatem by way of Danaserns and (ablilee that the only part of the life of Jesus Christ our Lord that amounted to abything is fixed?

But more than all ckse, is the testimony of the spirit of Philostratus important, when he tells nis that in the third century at Rome, the especial and original seat of the ('hristian Churdh, that Apollonins of Tyana was worshipped as the Saviour of mon, at the very time he, Philostratus, wrote his homraphy. Is this not a most signitieant fact, for fact it is, ats Christian writers are foreed to admit? Had Jesus of Nazareth been so worshipped at that time, what sense or reason would there have been in the Emperor Severus and his subjects to have worshipped Apollonius as a saviour? But this is not all, the star dedicated to Apollonius, was a star in the zodiacal constellation Aries or Agnis, the Lamb, in which the Sun crossed the equinoctial line, at the vernal equinox, thus identifying A pollonius as the crucified lamb, whose crucifixion redeemed the world from the desolation and death of winter. The sacrifice of the purest virgin of Rome to A pollo, the Sun-god, and the supposition that her soul passed to Apollonius in Paradise, shows the reneration in which the memory of the latter was held, at least oue hundred and fifty years after his transition to spirit life.

We know from dear bought experience, that the spirit of Philostratus is correct when he says that Roman Catholic and other Christian spirits are the curse of humanity on account of their spiritually but voluntarily enslaved condition, and their earth-bound purgatorial despair.

It is certainly true that there was no Christian religion at Rome until more than fifty years after Philostratus's transition from earth. The religion relating to the worship of the Hindoo Christos was not openly taught and the sect was without influence. Their symbol, the phallic cross, showed the Indian origin of their belief. No such person as Jesus of Nazareth was then known, and the great probability is that Apollonius was the Nazarite who went through Galilee to Jerusalem. He was undoubtedly an Essene, and the Essenes were called Nazarites by the Jews as a term of reproach. It is impossible for us to dwell more fully on this most valuable communication, but we have adduced more than amply enough to show its substantial correetness from beginning to end.

Abstract

"MAY WE BE BLESSED IN THE SERVICE OF TRUTII :-I lived in the sixth century and I was a travedler. I am known in comnection with what is called the Adulian Marble. It is chanmed that this marble has inseribed upon it the life and career of Ptolemy Euergetes. Such is mot the fact. I wats the first one to call this to the notice of the learned of my diy. 'The real facts of the case are these. I did not know them as a mortal, but I now understand them as a spirit. Upon that marble are the keys of the Christian religion. That is, the symbols are there. The learned of to-day treat this marble as if it were the history of a single king, when in reality it contains all such things as the doctrine of the trinity-the commmion-the blood of bacehus-the feast of the goddess Ceres, and other things analogous to Christian docerines and ohservances. But the Christian priesthood are blind to things which they know to be true. They will never read inscriptions right, that are dangerous to their infernal superstition ; but light will be thrown upon these things. If mortals do not stand up to their duty, truthful spirits will. We want no interference by priests with the truth. Even now, in the excavations that are being made for ancient ruins, they are continually manufacturing plates, in imitation of ancient ones, to support the Old 'restament, and their operations shonld be cosely watelsed by spiritmalists and Materialists. No tricksare too dark for them, that they think will help them to prolong their power. If this ©ommonication is thomght upon and acted upon, it will do a Vast amomnt of good. My name here was Comats Indieopleusters.

For account of Cosmas Indicoplenstes we refer to dincyelor pardia Britamniat.

When Cosmas tells ths that "the Christian priesthenel are flind to things which they know to lay true; that they will nevor read inseriptions right that are dangerons to their infernal supx painly implis that, they have acted upon that policy in regrad (0) the Adalian inserighton. ('osinas tells us that even now, that priesthood under the pretence of honestly searching for the buried evidence of the truth of the Old Testament, are engaged in counterfeiting relies to bolster up that foundation of the Christian Scripture. But it will not avail. The truth is to be found, not buried beneath the mouldering ruins of mortal, and perishable antiquity, but in those realms of light and truth where dwell the truly great, and good and wise of all the ages. Brethren, sisters, look up into the beaming sky above you, if you would enjoy the sunburst of living light-not adown the dark vistas of the still lingering gloom of the dying and dead past. "Let the deal past bury its dead," and let us seek light and guidance from the teachings of true, good, and wise who are before us; not from those who insist on groping backward into the darkness that grows deeper and deeper, the further it is penetrated. At least this to me seems the true way of wisdom.

Abstract

"Goon day, SIR :-The great difficulty that an antiquarian and searcher into the mysteries of the past has to contend with is the opposition to anything that will throw light on the origin of the Christian religion. In the first place, you are all more or less dependent upon persons who subseribe their money to help you, in various ways, in your researehes into the mysteries of the past ; and you must be eareful, no matter what you may discover, of not trespassing upon their religious beliefs. But no anticuarian that ever lived has fated to diseover that the whole of the modern Christian religion, under the different forms of symbolic worship, is written upon all the temples and tombs of antiquity. But not being able, when I lived on carth, to do as I pleared, J left a key for those who desired to use it, or who had the means to show up the subject of the Christian religion in its true light, and this was called the Alphabet of Palnyra, by means of which certain inseriptions upon the ruins of the temples of that ancient city eonld he used to throw a flood of fight upon all the ceremonies of Christianity. There, is set forth the doctrine of the Trinity; there, is to be found the censor; there, is represented the eucharist in the feast of bacchus; there, are the priestly robes; there, are the mitre and other insignia of popes, cardinals and bishops; there, are ofliciating priests, all paraded before you on those ancient ruins; and on other ruins in Kartoum, Egypt, and in what is known as the Abyssinian desert, these things have been frequently seen. There, also you will find the identical head that is to be found engraved in Christian bibles, as the representation of Jesus of Nazareth, carved as the object of heathen veneration. On tombs especially this may be found. It was my belief at first, from the knowledge I obtained, that this face or head was the representation of Ptolemy Euergetes; lint I have found out, as a spirit, that it was of much later origin, and represents the likeness of the revicwer of ancient symbolism- $\lambda$ pollonius of Tyana. I have also, from the examination of drafts made by Sir Warren Hastings, of the cave of Elephanta, in India, found that instead of the Jews wearing the role or dress that is set down in history as having been worn by Iterod, that it was worn by the tyrant Cansa, representing the slaughter of the innocents, in the cave of Elephanta. I am also satisfied that the Adulian marble represents the life, adventures and miracles of Apollonius of Tyana and not of Ptolemy Euergetes ; because the characters that are there engraved or cut do not belong to the time or age of that king, but they do belong to an age about three hundred years later, which would bring then down to the death of Apollonims. Besides, I know that there were to be found in bassorelievo, on tombs and temples, the face and etligy of that extraordinary man. Another fact bearing on this point is this: In our antiquarian researches we accuire the faculty of distinguishing differences of character and style between the antiguities of diflerent ages. I might possibly, after controlling this man for a certain length of time, be able to show you what we antiguarians understand as to theme ditleremeer of face, form, symbols and signs, and thus distinguish those of one age from another ; but to do this upon the tirst control of this medium would be impnsible for me. I wat to say furt her, that there may be seholars who come here from the spirit world who will conver their ideas mone clearly and explicitly than I have done; for under the eiremmstaness, it is with the greatest diflienty I have been able to fore this communieation through the medimm. My mame was Jem Jacmues Barthelemy: I pased to spirit life in 17as. I was the athom of the travels of Amacharsis the Vommer."

The spirit of this learned antiquarian and reader of inscriptions that returns and confesses that he did not dare to disclose what he knew to be the truth in regard to them, doubtless gives us a true account of facts as he knows them. As a spirit he congratulates himself that he at least left behind him in his essay on the language and alphabet of Palmyra, the key by which what he left undone may be attained. But the fact of greatest significance is that the monuments in Upper Egypt and Abyssinia that have been supposed to have been erected in honor of King Ptolemy Euergetes, are in reality the monuments erected by the Gymnosophists of Upper Egypt and the regions still higher up the Nile, in honor of the great philosopher, medium and teacher, Apollonius of Tyana. It is a historical fact that Apollonius travelled all over those regions after his famous interview with Vespasian at Alexandria and made a deep and lasting impression among the meditative and philosophical religionists of those distant regions.

In relation to the Adulian inscription, in view of all the facts, I conclude that the throne or monument at that time was erected by Ptolemy Euergetes about 200 B. C., and that a part at least of the inscription upon it relates to that Egyptian king. But when Apollonins visited Adulis three hundred years later, his followers, who were then in control of affairs in that eity, made an inscription upon it, commemorative of the doctrines and religious observances inculcated by A pollonius. In noticing the communication from the spirit of Cosmas Indicopleustes, I searched the works of various writers for information in reference to the Adulian inscription and found that a part of the inscription had disappeared. This is, to say the least, very significant. Is it not more than probable that some pious Christian priests have recognized the importance of erasing that tell-tale portion of the inscription? I do not hesitate to say, from my large experience in testing spirit communications, that the statements coming from Cosmas and Barthelemy are true. It is a fact, amply attested by truthful spirits, that they have vastly more opportunity of knowing what is true, even as to the aftairs of earth, than they had when they were here in the mortal form; and having nothing to lose by telling the truth, and everything to gain by doing so, their statement may be depended on when not inconsistent with probabilities or known facts. The positive evidence of the truth of these spirit statements is within reach, and they will doubtless be fully verified in time. According to the Pemny Cyclopatelia the inseription may be found in Montfancon's C'ollectia Nova Patrom, also in Fabricus' Bibliotlreca Greeca, and Chishull's Antiquita Asiaticae.

HENRY SALT. An Eminent English Traveller.

" GOOD DAY, SIR :-There is noantiquarian-noinseriptionist -no linguist, but absolntely understands that all historic religions, either through relies, monuments or serolls, hatse their origin in the sum ; and that afl the ancients, although their religions may be diversified, started on that central pivot, the Sun. And after a most laberious ellort to come here to-day, and through an uneducated man to state what I know, I timi it most diflicult (as you mortals cannot and will not know, until you become spirits, to cary out my purpose. We will commence with this, (what has been said being only preliminary.) 'Abrasax.' You will find that this worl wherever written or carved, is clamed to have been derived from the Hebrew Ab Ben, and hat been sald to dexignate what might be termed in Hebrew-'father ;' but in mo case ean the learned clam that this is true, for in reality it relates to the Persian god Mithmas; and the Abraxas or Almasax, means the ammet worn by the ancients ; and in all cases is traced to Mithras, as typieal of the Sum. I will next referto(i. Belzoni’s great diseovery at Thehes, where hasenerelieve cover the sides of a tomb that no antiqnarian can claim to moderstand in any other light than ast romenniral. Also in the works of Edwand Ruppel, and his diseoveries in Exypt, Nubia, and Kordofan, it will he found that all the temphe inseriptions and tombe, are, ith every case, eithor built acording to the aneient system of astrology ; or, they areso somptured, outside and in, as to rember their astrologieal refations apparent. The first thing that strikes the attention of an antiquarian, are certain symbols ahway kanwn as reperenting the sum, or the wentre of the solar system. Vou will also timd in the writinge of BMzoni, conceming the onsis of .Inpiter Ammon, that the whole aneient system is a combination of the sum with the first sign of the zodiac, or with Aries, the Ram or Lamb. The same kinds of basso-relievos, only of a ruder character, are found in the bases of the temples of India; among the principal of which are the caves of Elora and Elephanta. And that this principle is just as much obscred to-day, in these ancient countries, I am prepared to prove, by the temples of Shomadoo near Pegu in Birmah, called in English, the Golden Supreme; also by the temple near Rangoon of the Shoe Dagon or Golden Dagon. These temples are built upon exact astronomical principles. This last modern Dagon throws a full light upon the nature of the temple of the Philistines, spoken of in the Hebrew text, where Dagon fell down before the ark. No learned commentator can deny the identity of the modern Dagon with the ancient one. And now for my final effort through this man, to show where, from inseriptions and ruins still existing, I think it will be found that true civilization began; and to do this I shall have to go back before real history begins, and show that man having left his rude home upon the Asiatic plains beyond the Himalayas, made his descent into the fertile plains of India, with all his rude barbarian health not yet enervated by luxury. There, finding the soil to yield him the necessaries of life without labor, and everything that goes to make up material happiness, he naturally became mentally developed. And in those regions, I think, between 12,000 and 15,000 years ago, was invented and introduced what is termed by the learned, the Sanscrit tongue, the language of the real Sun worship; and which has governed every system of religion since. If there is any religion without the symbol of the sun in Aries, or in the first sign of the zodiac, I have failed to diseover it. All kinds of life that have taken on form have been worshipped, simply as types or way-marks to the great material god-the Sum. In writing they almostalways, of as nearly as possible, wrote from East to West. It is a well known fact that all the early Christians worshipped, or manifested their adoration; by bowing toward the East-the counterpart of pagan Sun-worship. And, in Palnyra and Thebes, the prineipal object worshipped by the forerumers of Christianity, was Aries the Ram or Lamb ; and the Therapeute also worshipped the same symbol. You will find this proven in Sir William Jones' Asiatie Researeles. I am sorry, as a spirit, that I allowed Christianity to blind my eyes to the truth. As I did so, I owe it to my mortal brethern here on earth to set them right. If this succeeds in doing what I intend it shall, (and I have no donbt it will if properly followed up, I will have done my part toward retrieving my mistake. Ant now I have this to say to you, that whilst I leave yon to withstand the concussion of error, I as a spirit will always be with you in what I have here uttered. Yours for the publie good, Henry Salt."

Refer to the Biographie Universelle for account of Henry Salt.
Such a man was Henry Salt, whose spirit, after a haif century, returns to inform the world as to certain points of ancient history which his Christian prejudices prevented him trom acknowledging when in the mortal form. Reader, think of what the world has been deprived of though the Christian training of this truly learned and accomplished antiquarian. If Henry Salt had, in 1809, when the result of his investigations into the antiquities of Hindostan, Abyssinia and Egypt was first published, then asserted what he now positively asserts, to wit: that all religions had their origin in the"stu," from which they all started as from one pivotal point,-it would not be necessary for me to draw down upon myself the opposition and emmity of religious bigots, in laying lare the truth in relation to those time-honored delusions, called Christian truths. That he should have found it most diflicult to use the medimm as well as he did, I can well understand, aithough he thinks that cannot be possible. I have not a doubt of the correctness of his interpretation of the Abraxas or Abrasax, which has been so clearly misunderstood. It is undoubtedly a Persian, and not a Grecian symbol, as has been erroneously supposed, and no doubt had relation to the sun in its anmal revolution.

For account of Wilhelm Ruppel and Belzoni, we refer to Thomas's Dictionary of Biography.

The spirit of sait no doubt recalls what he was perfectly familiar with in his earth life, when he speaks of the astrologicotheological discoveries of Belzoni and Ruppel. He must have been personally acepuainted with both, and they no doubt roncurred in opinions as to the astro-theologieal origin and chararter of Christianity. No well informed antiguarian will fuestion the asertion of this spirit, that the temples of Imdia :and Eigypt eorresponded as to their respectivesymbols, and the signitieation of them. That the Buman Dagon of moxern times is identiend with the fish-gex of the Philistines, there is no doubt. They represent, atike, the Sun in the sign of the Fishes, and becamse of that ficet the former is called the (onden 1):aron, everything lefing eonsidered golden that expressed the solar light. But hare we have the spirit of one of the most learned men of the beginning of the present century, in the light of his mortal and spirit knowledge, asserting that the first written language was the Sanscrit, and that it had its origin between 12,000 and 15,000 years ago, in the elevated plains of Southern and Central Asia, among a people themselves fresh from a barbaric state; and what is most significant of all, that that language was invented to express the worship of the Sun by that rude and early people. Even at that early period, the Sun, in the sign of Aries, was a leading feature of the religion of the primitive Aryan people. It was on account of the fact of the Sun's apparent movement from east to west, says the spirit of Salt, that the Asiatic peoples usually wrote from right to left instead of from left to right as we do. It is equally certain that the Essenes, who were the primitive Christians, worshipped the Sun, and always bowed or knelt toward the east in adoration of the Sun. It is equally certain that the principal object of worship by the Palmytans and Thebuns who were the people from whom the Christians derived their religion in great part, was the Sun, in the sign of the Lamb. This spirit frankly confesses that he allowed himself to be blinded by Christianity, and comes to us, he says, to make amends so far as he may for his error, by disclosing what he could of truth. leader, could you know the labor of testing the truth of these communications, you would regard them as more precious than gold, as sources of the most reliable knowledge as to the affairs of the past.

Abstract

"I salete voe, sie:-All the Christians that ever lived, or ever will lise, will find their ideal Jesus but a phantom-a myth. They can chase it as a child would a buttertly through a meadow on asmmmer's atternoon, and it will elude theirgrasp. The Christian Jesus is nothing more than the Chrisha of the Hindoss ; the Beal or Bell of the Babylonians ; the Apollo of the (ireeks ; and Roma or Romulus of the Romans; modilied in forms and ceremonies suited to modernsuperstition. All this I have learned in spirit life through the desire to be historically correct. When here I was a historian. As a spirit my inciinations leal me the same waty. All the kings and princes of ancient times were worshipped at the same time the Christian Sisiour was saill to be on the earth. Now, 1 am here to tell the truth. There were no ('hristians nor 'hristianity in the time of Nero, from A. 1), 45 to (6s. We knew mothing of such a religion, nor was it in existence at that time. And I want it expresely materstood that I was a historian, at that time gathering all the farts I rould. If there had been the slightest evilence of it, I would have acknowledged it. But in my day, nobody knew anything of the (Shristian Saviour nor his aposthes. There wore two religions in the time of Nemothat hed supremaes, one was the 'sun' and the other the 'som.' You may ask me what was the ditlerence between them. I answer the first was the sum worshipuod in a material sumse, and the serobl was the same solar ort spiritually or symbolially worshiperel, in the Ahmitm of Zormater of P'ersia. These were the prefominating religions, athe all the prieste understerad them as I hate stated, My hame wats M. servillins Nonianms. I lived akent from A. D. 50 to 70.1

Nothing whatever is said in the hiography about his historical works, from whichwe may inter that they shared the fate of the labersofother historians wholivel and wrote at the time whent

the world. That this communication is genuine we cannot doubt from the circumstances under which it was given. Here is another spirit who mast have known of Jesis and his doings, if what is related of him was in any respect true; who comes back and positively denies that there was any such person, prior to A. D. 60, ats Jesus Christ, or Jesus the Christ, or Jesus of Nazareth, or the Nazarene, or the Saviour of Men ; or any A postles who taught the religion of such a being.

PTOLEMY PHILADELPHUS.

" Good DAy :-Humility is one of the attributes of true greatness, therefore I come here to-day, after the lapse of centuries, to try to bring to you as much light as possible under the circumstances. I was horn and brought up in a way that developed in me a taste for literature. I was absorbed by a passion for books, and through my library-keeper Demetrius, I succeeded in securing about 250,000 rolls or books. What did all this vast mass of learning do to benefit humanity? There are no religious systems existing to-day but what obtained the principal parts of their creeds and tenets from the Alexandrian Library: Learned men of all nations and religions resorted to Alexandria, and from them I bought the principal works relating to their religions. In the course of time those men after investigating the works on religion in the Alexandrian Library modified and remodeled their respective religions. If you examine the ancient Egyptian coins of the date of my reign you will find myself and queen represented as divine brother and sister ; for in order to preserve the east of features of the royal family unaltered it was regarded as necessary to marry your own sister; and Arsinoe was my sister. I always desired to receive the truth, come whence and from whom it might. I intended, had not my life ended too early to accomplish the work, to have founded a system of morality and spiritnality, to eomprise all that was good, trine and valuable in the religions of every people that I coukl reach. I would have saved untold numbers of human lives, and wouid have led the development of mankind to a point far beyond that which has been reached to-day: Sjiritual mediumship has been the light of all natious and all peoples through all time. The nation or seet that seorns mediumship may flourish for a time, but they will som perish beneath the wheels of progress. I had another olject in making the vast collection of beoks before mentioned. I expected to le able to furnish to the world a legal code that would have established justice and abolished human slavery. It wats this that caused me to liberate 100,000 Jews. But to aceomplish this Herculean task, a mortal life was too short, amid the higotry and ignorance of my age. Since passing to spirit life, I have been seeking mediums and have manifested myself through them, but never before have I found a medium I could control so well as the present one. You are absolutely correct in the stand you have taken regarding the Christian religion; and the more you seareh out and investigate the matter the more positive will become the conclusion that the Christian religion is the outgrowth of the library of Ptolemy Philadelphus. You can then throw down the gauntlet and challenge the world to an investigation of the facts. I will also say that your chronological tables are not correct. Perhaps at some future time I may be able to return and again communicate with you, when I will prove to you by comparing the works yet in existence that you are not living in the nineteenth sentury of the Christian era, but in the twenty-second. The originators of the Christim religion were many, each contributing something to the aggregate of what it represents. Potamon, in the reign of Augnstus, more than two hundreal years after the enterprise of projecting a new religion that should take the phace of all previons religions that had been begm, arranged the ineongruons matoriak in what he called the Eedectie system of religious ohservances and maxims. I am I'tolomy Philadelphus.

Refer to Biographie Universelle for necount of letemy Philadelphus.

When this communication was received, we had no knowldge of the history of such a king, beyond the fact that he reigned in Egypt at ewme period of history: This commmaniattion semen to settle the disputed fuestion as to whether Dembtrins was really the keeger of the Alexamdrian Library under Phomy Philadelphas a fact which has been stromgly questionesl, and which is another example of the manner adopted ley these ancent spirits to correet history as it has come down to ns, and give information to be obtained in no other way.
[The value of thin eommmatation, is not to be extimated lightly. We call the attention of our radere to the neconats mow extantof that vast library, bearing upen the historyof antiquity.

When we realize the difficulty attending the collection of books and manuseripts in ancient times, compared with the present, we can readily understand what a valuable collection it was for that period. Three times this vast acemmulation of literature was destroyed, but not before many learned men had risited it and founded new systems of religion upon the knowledge there obtained. The library was considered the most valuable in existence, and even to-day scholars bemonn its destruction, although not giving eredence to the report that it was destroyed by Christian vandals in the interest of their religion. To-day the world is agog because of the discovery of a few lines of ancient manuscript in Egypt. (We refer to the manuscript lately diseovered by Mr. Petrie, found in the sands of Fayoum, along Western Egypt. Some of which are to be seen in the Egyptian Collection of the University of Pennsylvania.) In these manuscripts reference is made to thirty-five lines of Iliad, five of which it is elaimed by scholars are not in existence in the copies which have come down to us, after being copied and recopied by the Alexandrine and Byzantine seribes;also with the four or five pages of Plato, found at the same time the discovery is made that Plato's text as we have it was touched up to suit the taste of the different crities and writers. If scholars admit these facts, how much ground it gives to the statements of these ancient spirits that their manuseripts have been mutilated and interpolated in copying in the interests of the Christian chureh by its writers, until they have entirely lost their original meaning at many points. Yet how little the information contained in the above mentioned and recently found manuscripts by Mr. Petrie is, compared to what has been obtained through these spirit communications which if accepted, will bring knowledge to the world of the greatest importance, and settle once for all, the truth, as to the source from whence the Christian religion sprung.-COMPILER.]

PONTIUS PILATE.

Procurator of Judea.

Abstract

"My (irberina ro you is This :-I was appointed Procurator of Judea in the eommencement of the reign of Octavius Augnstus. At that time the Jewish mation was in a very turbulent state. Many men were brought before me on all kinds of charges, for these Jows were the most bitter sectarian bigots in regard to their religious views that I have ever met with as a mortal or spirit. There never wats brought before me stieh a man or so-ealled (iod as the present Christian system elaims. There was a Jesns Onanias who was tried before me for highway robbery and wats crueified by my soldiers ; but of the now renowned Jesins I know nothing whaterer. In their Jewish eoremonies, conducted at their own temple in Jerusatem, they were just that kind of element to control as are the Jews of the present day, They were divided into three or four different sects, and each of these was striving to beeme the master of the others. It required the whole military forees under my command to prevent them from murdering each other in their own temple. At the time of my procuratorship in Judea, there was eg great influx of visitors from all over the East-wise men, so-ealled, who came there for the purpose of trying to understamd the Jewish rites and ceremonies; but they were so strictly garded in their worship that they would allow none to enmmmicate the secrots thereof. You know from history that it wat the Ikman policy to conoutar and rule all nations by allowing them to enjoy without interferene their rexu-tive religions systems. Whe did this simply beeallese we foum that religions ideas hat become so rooted in the minds of diflerent people that they would be subserviont to us just so fong ats we would allow their religions freeseope. Now 1 want to enter into further particulars. There was a sect of Jews called Fixsones. They wore what you moderns call fommunists. They bedieved in having everything in eommon. They were also gnided ly the satme principhes that now govern the shakers. The whole ('hristian story was concerved amd framed among the Essenim hathorhsed, who were hermits and lived apart from socioty. ('hristimato-day eannot prowe anything about their man-fod; and all their hopes world have leen overturnma amd destroved but for the destruction, by the Mahommedans of the Alexandrian library. Christianity would not to-day have any foothold if it had not been for the Mahommedans. They can thank the bigotry of the latter for the success of their own religion. I was Procurator in Judea in the fourth year of the reign of Augustus. I held the position nine years. In the latter part of nyy life I was banished for participating in a revolt at Rome, and I died at what is innown to you as Trieste, in Austria, on account of being banished. This is the whole sum and substance of my carcer. As I hope for a happy spirit life, I can say I know nothing of any person, Jew or Gentile, of any Jesus, excepting the one mentioned in this communication. I am Pontius Pilate." [This communication from Pontius Pilate is positively confirmed at the present time by the gifted and learned "Rabbi Wise," who recently journeved to Jerusalem ostensibly for the purpoze of ascertaining if the Gosipel account of Christ's trial before Pontius Pilate, and condemmation to be nailed to the eross was true. The learned Doctor says he searched diligently the records of Pilate's Court, which are preserved, for the trial of Jesus, but it was not recorded. He found the record of all sorts of eriminals, both of a high and low degree, but the name of "Jesns of Nazareth" was not there and never laad been. Thus it appears that this most important spirit testimony as to the trial, is confirmed by one of the most gifted minds of our day, who personally investigated the records of the court of Pontins Pilate, only to find that what is taught in the Christian elurches to-day relating to the so-called personage Jesus Christ, is entirely without foundation. This testimony from Rabbi Wise comes to us almost ten years after the spirit of Pontius Pilate had roiced through the medium his important statement, viz: that no such person as. Jesus of Nazareth was ever tried before him as set forth by Christian writers. Rabbi Wise $n o$ doubt after making the long journey to Jerusalem earnestly and truly investigated the matter to learn whether the Christian Gospels were correct. This testimony is disinterested but goes far to prove that these ancient spirits are coming to earth for the sole purpose of bringing light to mankind who have been misled and are groping in darkness, mystified by these false teachings. Day by day and Sunday after Sunday, according to what is termed the "Apostles'Creed." millions of Christians repeat in their religious exercises "Crucified under Pontius Pilate," ete., yet in this nineteenth century, evitlence which cannot be set aside reaches us, not only from the spirit of Pontius Pilate, who, above all others, should know the truth pertaining to the question under consideration, but from a distinguished individual on the mortal plane who unknowingly corroborates the spirit's testimony. We can readily infer from the investigation by the leaned Rabhi Wise that other clams of the so-ealled Ciristian religion if fully investigated would prove to be myths also. In view of these remarks we leave the reader to his own reflections, believing that the key we have furnished, is sufficient to umavel the mysteries hitherto concealed.-Compruerr.]

CYRILLUS LUCHAR.

Greek Patriarch.

"Sin:-The vicissitudes of life are great both in the mortal and spirit condition. No more ardent follower of Jesus C'Irist ever appenared upon this planet than I was, but my prospectny lopes-my realization, as a spirit, have all been blated. By what? By the non-realization of what I expected. All this is sad to think of ; and, far hetter is it for me to return from the spirit world and state my actual realization of spirit life to all people, so that none can be deceived. Vain is that hope that rests upon another's merits. Cultivate the purity of your own mortal spiritand rely upon nothing but a determination to do right. Oh! sir, if I had to-day 1000 tongues, and as many transmigrations as the Buddha of old, I should ever aim to toach the trath and realities of a spirit life as I know them to be. Honesty in religion is $n o$ proof of its truth. ('hristianity hats callsed mare blowd to flow-more widows to werp-and more children to be fatherless, thath have all other religions on earth tomay. I ask, can intinite lowe conerive deeper infany than Christimity has brought to this phanet? Millions on millions of rumed sonds in the after-life and mitod mumbers on (athle werp, when they reach the finality of commom semer ame reaton, over what they have reaped from the tearhings of (hristianity. Oh! my heart is sad to-day: I feel the weight of the geas that have elaped sine I heft the mortal state, and would ask mankind to pause and reflect, now ; for the time will come when it will be far more diflicult to act as a spirit than it is now for them to act as mortals. Christianity is not from the Jews, but from the Greeks. It is a combiuation of the Platonic and Alexandrian doctrines, with the doctrines of Apolonius of Tyana, the Syrian Christ, about thirty-t wo years after the birth of the alleged Christ. Out of these, together with the forged letter to the Roman Emperor Trajan, from Pliny the Younger, A. D. 103, has grown Christianity. Deny these facts who can. In the British Museum, Library Department, you will find that I, Cyrillus, Patriarch of Alexandria, sent a copy of the scriptures, known as the Alexandrian manuscript, by Sir Thomas Rowe to Charles the First, King of England, and that manuscript was transcribed from the writings of Potamon of Aleatandria, about the year 475, by Thecla, an Egyptian lady, and out of that transcribed copy, has their celebrated Alexandrian manuseript grown ; as any one will find to be true who will examine into the historical facts of the case ; and they are indisputable by the advocates of Christianity. I would say in conclusion, let the light of truth shine and let it drive away all darkness from the human mind. Cyrillus Luchar, Patriarch of Constantinople."

Cyrillus Luchar was a Greek Patriarch of Constantinople, noted for his efforts to introduce into his church the doctrines of the Reformed (Calvanistic) churches. He was born about $156 S$ in Candia, which at that time was under the sovereignty of Venice and the chief seat of Greck scholarship. In 1602 Cyrillus succeeded Meletius as patriarch of Alexandria. After the death of Timotheus, patriarch of Constantinople, he was elected his successor by a manimous vote of the synod. His life as patriarch was full of vicissitudes. The Jesuits, in union with agents of France, several times procured his banishment, while his friends, supported by the ambassadors of the Protestant powers in Constantinople, obtained by means of large sums of money, his recall. His attempt to Protestantize his chureh created many enemies against him in the Greek Church, and in 1638 a synod convened at Constantinople to try him. But, before sentence was pronounced upon him, the Janissaries arrested him by order of the government, carried him to a boat, strangled him and cast the corpse into the sea. Some friends found the corpse and buried it on an island, and ten years later a solemn funeral was held at Constantinople.

In view of the facts connected with the communication of C'yrillus we deem it one of the most remarkable and important that has ever eome from any spirit since the dawn of Modern Spiritualism. The positive identifieation it affords of the origin of the so-ealled Christian Bible is so nearly perfect as only to require such collateral facts as are within reach to remeler it absolute and beyond question. The source and nature of the Alexandrian Manuseript of the British Musemm is so clearly stated by the spirit of Cyrillus as to leave not a doubt that he had positive knowledge of the truth of his statement in regard to Potamon the Alexandrian having been the anthor of the original writings of which the Alexamdrian Manmseript was a transeribed eopy. It therefore becones more and more elear that no man, nor man-god, such as Jesins Christ ever had anything to do with the "IDoly Bible," as has been erroneonsly supposed and wrongly insisted on.

Refer to the Encyelopadia Britamiea for the history of the echebrated Alexandrian Mannseript which will show the material correctness of the commmication. It is no wonder that the giving of that commmication was so cunningly resisted by interfering priestly spirits throngh the earlier part of that sitting. The same Jesuits who, in the interest of the Roman Catholic Chureh, songht the ruin and death of Cyrillus, because he was possessed of the dread seeret of the entirely hmman origin of the Christian religion, might well fear the diselosure of that returning spirit. Hence their manifest attempt to prevent its loeing given, or toso conple it with deeeptive eommuniations as, to eanse it to he diseredited. But in spite of all opposition the great secret is out and recorded.

After reading the history of the celehrated Alexandrian manuseript in the Encyelopedia lbritamion, we ean readily understand why the Christian critict of the Chureh of England in this age, seek to eoneeal the somere of the Christian IBible. Why did not the learned 'regelles tell us how the name of Therela, the martyred Egyptian haly came to be associated with the Alexambran mamuseript, by being placed upon the margin of the condex: Who placed it there? Why was it placed there? When was it plaed there? 1s it there in characters execoted bey diflerent hand than the berly of the condex? Is the iak dillierent? Is there any apparance whaterer of difference in the age of the writine of the name Therla, and the writine of the benly of Mis. Who wat Theela": When didele live? Why was she martyred? Who martyred her? Why was she canonizea by the Greek Church? When was she canonized by that church? When these most natural questions are answered it will appear that, "that shrewd conjecture" of Tregelles is an absurdity ; and that the Latin inscription of Cyrillus is certain to demonstration. But apart from these unanswered questions, we have the spirit Cyrillus coming back and communicating through an almost unlettered medium, not only that Thecla, the Egyptian lady, transeribed the Alexandrian MS. but that she did it about 475 , the period which paleographical criticism and analysis assign to its production, making known the most important fact of all that this noble Egyptian lady transeribed that manuseript from the writings of Potamon. It is hardly possible, if Spiritualism be true, that the spirit of Cyrillus should not have met the spirit of the canonized Egyptian Thecla and thus learned beyond all peradsent ure the nature of the writings that the latter transcribed. Those writings were, then, undoubtedly those of Potamon.

In view of the fact that Cyrillus, in his Latin inscription on the codex, mentions that Thecla Jived shortly after the council of Nice, and that she transcribed Potamon's writings, we can readily understand the cause of her martyrdom. She knew that whicl the Roman Catholic priesthood could not afford to have the world know, and that was that Potamon was the author of the teachings that they had corruptly attributed to a deific man called Jesus who had nothing whatever to do with them. Thecla, the learned and noble woman, paid the penalty of her erulition with her life.

QUINTILLIAN.

A Latin Grammarian.

"My best gremenag to sou:-When here, in mortal life, I was known as Quintillian, the grammarian, and lived at Rome from about A. D. 40 to A. D. \%. I was the master and teacher of Plany the Younger; and it is by his invitation that I an here to-day: I an glad to bear witness to the truth. I was a teacher at Rome at the time when there was not a single man of any education but that was engaged in making proselytes to some religions views of his own. All of their religious views had a pantheistie tendency: In fact Pantheism had set men crazy, eath and every one desiring to and another god to his houschold idols. In such a state were the religions of my day. In regard to that celenated permonge, whom the Christians clam once lived in Juden, there was no aceount of such a personage in my day; nor hase I been able to find a single honest, umbiased spirit, in his or her religious views, who knows aught of Jesus ('hrist. Another thing that oecurs to me in relation to the story of Jesus. It is my clear and positive convietion that the real Jesus was Apollonitus of 'Tyanas. While in mortal life [ saw Apollonins. I was young then, amd I heard him spak at Antioeh. He preached the very same fermon or matly so, that is called (hrist's semom on the mount. Beiner sothg then I thought his sermon womderfin, hut when I had grown older, and had seen other philowophers at Rome, I heard from them just as much truth expressed more elearly and in fewer words than ever fell from the lips of Apollonins. I ann also char in this, that the crose has been the symbel of vapions combtries and religions since the days of Ramese II., of Eyspt. There is not a timgle rite, form of haptiom, ceremony or prayer hat what has been stoben alment bratily from (hina or India, which any traveller in thone combtries can sex for himself. As the ancent phitomphers only tamght as mad truth as they conk comeejere, eo yom should examine everything submitted to you by the light of ravon and abalogy. If you do this no ('hri-tian teacher will dare tobleng the facts which we spirits are hemping forwats, from day to day. There -pirit woms will make all false religions bow at the slirine of eternal truth. This will finish my diseourse."

Refer to the Encyelopzedia Britamnica for account of Quintillian.

It was this amiable and aecomplished Roman whose spirit returned and, through a medium communicated the important facts which we have given. But for that communication we should never have heard of such a person. It would seem from his communication, that he was neither born in Spain nor in Rome, as has always been supposed, but in Syria, as he says that when quite young he, at Antioch, heard Apollonius of Tyana preach, and this before going to Rome where he heard the transcendent oratory of the Roman philosophers. His mention of the fact that he came at the invitation of his old friend and pupil, Pliny the Younger, very fully accounts for his finding his way to us, Pliny already having communicated several weeks before. If this communication is genuine and to be relied on, then it is very clear that nothing was known of such a historical personage as Jesus Christ or Jesus of Nazareth, as early as the middle of the first century of the so-called Christian eria. It is equally clear that although the learned Quintillian has been in spirit-life for eighteen hundred years, he has never met a spirit who knew aught of Jesus Christ. His opinion that the real character or hero of the Christian story was A pollonius of Tyana, he having heard that remarkable man preach, is most significant ; and his testimony that the Sermon on the Mount, is substantially plagiarized from the preaching of A pollonius, leaves no reason to believe that there is anything original in the Christian scriptures, especially so far as its ethical and doctrinal features are concerned. It would seem equally clear that the cross, the forms, ceremonies and chureh ordinances, practiced and reverenced by Christians, are not original, but borrowed from the religions of China and India, throngh Egypt after the reign of Rameses II. one of the greatest sovereigns of that country ( $1300 \mathrm{~B} . \mathrm{C}$.$) . Truly, in view of such spirit testimony$ as this, "These spirit voices will make all false religions bow at the shrine of eternal truth."

JULIUS LUCIUS FLORUS.

A Roman Historian.

" I arent you, sur :- My mortal life came to an cud abont A. D. 130. In the time when I lived on earth all was confusion. Mankind was struggling for more light. Thespirit of progress was strong, but it afterwards became buried beneath Christianity. To that religion we owe the long dark night of mental slavery. This religion was in its infancy in Rome, in my day; hat I think I can truly atlirm from what I pontively knew, that not only did the mian ealled Je-us Christ never live, hut this-that none of his apo-tles, sor-alled, were known ot at Rome when I lived there. I was engaged in writing a history of the Roman emperors at that tine, atad all soure of of information were ogen to me, so that I could invertgate all existing evitence and write a correct history of what 1 had taken in hand. Only a portion of my writings have heen preserved and are in existeme to-day. The reatom of this was that there wee three page devend to denomacing the (laristian religion,

But all that a true progressionist can do is to fight the good fight for iruth inere, and then become translated to spirit life as a missionary on the other side. In this work you cannot fail to attain intinite happiness. My name was Julius Lucius Florus, a Roman historian. I was in the height of my work about A. D. $125 . "$

Refer to Smith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Biography for account of Florus.

We feel assured that our readers will not begrudge the space we have given to this account of Florus. The remarkable analogy existing between the spirit account of himself and the fragmentary facts which have been permitted to come down to us concerning him, constitutes a most important proof of the power of spirits to return and correct the historical, as well as the religious errors of the past. This communication fully confirms Joubert's conjecture which will be found in the account of Florus written for the Nouvelle Biographie Generale as to the fact that but one and not three Floruses wrote concerning Roman history. The name of that Florus was Julius Lucius, and not either of the names that have been attributed to him. Here we have another historian, writing at the very time when Christian theologians claimed that the Christian Scriptures were beirg composed, and who had access to all sources of information oi that period, who declares that there was nothing then extant in relation to any man Jesns Christ or his alleged apostles. He admits that the religion that afterwards was called Christianity, was then in its infancy at Rome, but its Scriptures had no existence then. He says that he devoted three pages to denouncing the Christian religion, which was then taking shape, and for that reason a part of his writings were destroyed by one of the popes, he thinks by Urban IV. The Joman Catholic Church authorities, had a much better reason than that for destroying or mutilating the writings of Florus, and that was the fact that there was no reference in them to any of the events which are clamed at historical in the Holy Bible. To get rid of the damming fact that there is no bistorical basis for their theological tictions, the Christan priesthood have been guilty of the heinous crime of destroying nearly all tace of the eonemrent history of the first two centuries of the Christian era. What little of it they have permitted to come down to ns, they have so altered and changed, as to destroy its historical value. Thanks to beneficent and all powerful spirits the way is rapidly opening to restore to the world, the knowledge which those religions bigots thought they had forever destroyed. But precions festimony is that truly, when Florus, the Roman historian, returns from spirit life, and attests the fact that religions bigotry is as rife in spirit as in mortal aflairs. He speaks truly when he says that state of aflairs must continue, so long ats we contime to manufacture religions bigots, and send them to swell the bigoted spirit hosts. No greater curse ever scourged hmmanity than religious bigotry.

URBAN VIII.

Roman Pontiff.

" (Goon Day, my sos:-I was known when here as Uhan VIII., and I want to say this, that as a Pope and having been educated fully in Catholieism, I am able to give facts in regard to the mingling of paganism and Christianity: As Pope l took from the lantheon at Rome, 450,000 prounds of bromzes to deerorate st. Peter's at Rome, and the bronees were used with little if any atteration in their ornamental derigns. There you may see the grods of antiquity eonverted into the Christian sathts. Let those who have charge of that edified deny this if they ean. To my ertain knowledge most of the charehes at Rome are built on the ruins of heathen templesam of the material of the latter. (hristianity has borrowed everything from paganism; and there is no (athotie priest who hokle any other of emseftenere in the Catholic ('lurelowhodoes not kow the common idnutity of a cermony of the Elensinian mysterias in (ireores amb the Lord's supur. 'They will mot admit llis as mortals, thet there will eome a time to them in the spirit life when femorse for their matruthfuhes will lash them intog giving the truth. 'Why,' ask these milk and water peophle, 'dn you so ronghly attack ('hristianity?" Beceanse it elams for jtedf divine powers, and it has none. There is only one religion, and that is the religion of rasom. There never wasa spirit on this phand that i:1 the end will posiess any more power than another. So they can rely, that each one will get their just deserts exactly. You can make the road long and tedions, or you can have the light. It is for you to choose, both in the mortal and the spirit life. I will close by saying, I hope for the success of truth and the banishment of error."

Refer to Chambers' Encyclopredia for account of Urban VIII, - There are many points of great interest and importance in the communication of Urban. His emphatic testimony to the fact, that Christianity is only another name for paganism, is one. But of especial interest is the declaration, that in St. Peter's at Rome, the bronze statues of the Greek and Roman gods now figure as the Christian saints, where some of them were placed by Urban himself. Not less significant is the declaration, that the ceremony of the Lord's Supper is identical with a ceremony performed in the Eleusinian mysteries, and that the Bishops, Arehbishops, Cardinals and Popes of the Catholic Church, have always known this great fact.

AQUILA.

A Cappadocian Philosopher.

"I have been set down in history as a Jew-Afterwards as a Christian. There has been a great mistake. I was neither a Jew nor Christian. I was a Cappadocian, and they say I wrote a Greck version of the Old Testament. I did nothing of the kind. I combined extracts from the alleged teachings of the God Apollo with certain alleged facts in relation to Jove or Jehovah, but how these men succeeded in tacking my name to a Greek Testament I have been unable to find out even as a spirit. I lived in 129 A. D., and kept philosophieal schools in certain portions of Judea and Cappadoeia. In those schools I tanght a mixture of Egyptian, Grecian and Judean doctrines, by which I gave great oflence to the Jews, and on being summoned before a Jewish tribunal refused to recant anything that I had tanght. The Jews, in consequence raised a sedition, and I was put to death by the Romans to appease them. But, as a spirit, I am no better or worse off for having taught my theology than the Jews for teaching the doctrines of their Jehovah; or the Christians for establishing the religion of their myth-god Erroneous teathings are not immortal. It is true that some are longer lived than others, but they all die of the dry-rot. Killed in the end by "old Father Time." Good and kind actions form the ineense that is eternal in its freshness, and wafts the spirit who performs those actions upward and onward toward the great Infinite. My name was Aquita-no Jew nor Christian, but a Cappadocian philosopher."

Refer to the Biographic Universelle for account of Aquila.
Who can read that commmieation from the spirit purporting to be Aquila, and the accounts that have come down to us eoncerning him, and not be impressed with the identity of the communicating spirit? No one has attempted to tell us, what was the mamer or time of Aquila's death. He, however, explains it. He wats neither a Jew nor Christiam, but a Greek teacher, of a mixture of the doctrines of the Eqgytians, Jews and Greeks, which were so ollensive to the bews, that they compelled the Roman authorities to put him to death to stop their serlitions eommotion. Is it not most eneouraging to know, that the lost or concealed farts of ancient history, are being hrought to light by these ancient philosophers and learned men of old, even at this late day?

SYMMACHUS.

A Grecian Statesman and Orator.

"Weld, sin :-You have, I think, a paper among you Spiritmalists called 'Light for All.' That ought to be my salutation. In mortal life I was an orater, also a writer, and I wrote against the Christians. Now when a man writes against athything it is a proner question to ask: What are your reasons for doing sa)? In my (:are they may be set forth mader three heads. First, becamse I knew there was nolazaned Christian hat who must hatw known, on invertigation, that the religion calledraristian is tmat a duptiation of the Elensinian mysteries, and that those remowhed lye. Smmonius saceas, anc! that the doctrines that the Christians were teaching were not the doctrines of their Jesus, but were the teachings of Ammonius Saceus; and were Therapentic doctrines. Thirdly, Theodotius, a Christian emperor or Pope, after my time, had $2 \overline{7}, 000$ rolls of papyrus destroyed that contained the very doctrines that prove that those mysteries of ancient Greece were the original parent of the Christian religion. Fear was predominant-truth was not considered then. Spies and informers were set to watch your houses at all hours of the day or night, and if they could eateh you reading anything contrary to the prevailing faith your life had to pay the forfeit. I have nothing to do as a spirit with those who were in this bond of iniquity, when I was in mortal form; but I think it is no more than my duty as a spirit to enlighten you as to the acts of priestly forgery in my day. There are three things that govern a spirit's happiness, as far as I have learned-love, charity, and justice to yourself. You sit in judgement upon your imperfections and becoming enlightened seek to correct them through your own inward consciousness of what is best for you. I lived about 220 A . D. They have classed me as an Elionite Christian. To define my true position I can come no nearer to it than to say I was what you are-a Spiritnalist, to all intents and purposes. As it is hard to express our ancient names through the medium I will spell mine as one of the versions of the Old Testament was attributed to me; but it was a forgery. I had nothing to do with it. It was Lysimachus, who lived at Constantinople about A. D. 270 who was the author of that version."

Refer to the Nouvelle Biographic Generale for account of Symmachus.

Here we have another spirit returning and correcting the historical account of himself. He says he was not a Jew nor a: Ebionite Christian, nor yet a Pagan, but a Spiritualist, and that he wrote against the Christians. There can be little doubt he was a Therapeutic follower of Ammonius Saccas, and if not himself initiated in the Eleusinian mysteries, had learned from the writings of Ammonins Saccas the facts that he sets forth. Truly, the key to the mysteries of all religions has been placed in our hands from the spirit world, and secret chamber after seeret chamber is being opened with it never to be closed again. We decply regret that time and space will not admit of a more extended notice of this undoubtedly genuine and truthful commmication.

POMPONIUS MELA.

A Roman Geographer.

"I was a geographer, and lived at the time it is said the Christian saviour lived. I travelled in and examined many countries. There was none of those countries but what had their saviours at that time. I think that the tendency of religion was then from the ofd to the new, but I camon say that the new was an improvement on the ohd. It had, to me, more the apparance of retrogression than progression. I caved not for religion, but valued truth wherever 1 found it. What was good in religion I acerpted ; what was good for nothing, or insented by prients, I had nothing to do with. There was one thing that embaced all my religion, and that was my conviction that God was the universal life and that I was hat one expression of that life. Therefore, I did not far the consergences to myself. I knew I wobld get exactly what I desorved. When I hecame a spirit I fonnd that action, with a real purpose for impowement, is the motive power to spirit progression. In spirit, if you stand and bewail your fate, you suffer the same as you would as at mortal, under that mode of seeking happiness. It yon are up, active amd doing, then the spirit life is a life of happines. I met with ome strange thing in my travels, and that was the fact that the grodlese Diama, A. D. At, was worshipperl as the prevailing (iod at Antioch, and that there were no ('hristians there at that time. I spent three monthe there, and found mone; and I know that meither at Antioch, nor at Ephesas, nor at Athens, nor at Rome was there any person who knew anthing about the man ealled lean, at that time. As a spirit, I have investigated the sulyeret, to timd who this Pathl was, and I fomed him to be nome other than the (appadoe ian saviour, Apollonins of 'Tyans. Apoltonius has tohl me himself, in spirt lite, that be wrote the sorealled ('hristian Epistles to his followers. I ask mo man to arept this heranso it conne from myself, hat I know, this generation, it will he in the next. I died about A. W. bian I wata native of spain, at that time a prowince of the Remata "mpire" for :womm of Pompanins Mola.
'Thas tostitios :mother spirit, a buted writer who lived and thoroughly observed and investigated all subjects of general interest during the very time that it is said that Jesus, the Christian Sariour, was on the earth, and that related to the scenes of his fictitious efforts. Especially did he note the matters relating to the religions of the various countries in which he travelled and of which he wrote. He tells us that as late as 44 A. D., he spent three months at Antioch, where the goddess Diana was the only deity worshipped and that there were no Christians there at that time. He testifies equally positively that he knows that, when he lived, there was no one at Antioch, Ephesus, Athens nor Rome, who had ever seen or knew anything about the man named Paul. Now it will be remembered that the first mention made of Paul, as a hisiorical character, is in the book called "The Acts of the Apostles," Chapter VII, 58. It is not said who he was or why he is there introduced. This is exceedingly strange if Paul was truly a historical character. From that time he is made the central figure of what is called the New Testament, Jesus himself being put in the shade by him. He is first made to figure as a terrible persecutor of Christians. Why no mention of any Christians as existing at that day, nor of Panl their terrible persecutor, was made by contemporaneous writers, no Christian writer has ever explained. Miraculously convinced of his error, as is alleged in "The Acts," Paul became the foremost Christian in the world, not even excepting St. Peter, the rock on which the Christian Church was built. In Chapter XIII, of The Acts, verse 1, it is said: "Now there were in the chureh that was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers * * As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, separate me Barnabas and Saul, for the work wheremnto I have called them." This was the source of Paul's authorization to speak for the Moly Ghost. If there was no Christian Chureh in Antioch at that time, then the Christian mission of Paul is without support. The spirit of Pomponius Mela says that there was no such church, as late as 44 A. D., at Antioch, and his statement being in accord with contemporary history, is turdoubtedly true. But still more significant is his statement that no person at Antioch, Ephesus, Athens or Rome ever heard of Paul, who is represented to have figured so prominently, at the time when he lived and wrote, in those centres of religion of that period.

CARDINAL STEFANO BORGIA.

"Good Mar, sir:-My name was Stefano Borgia, Cardinal at Rome from 1806 to 1 sion , is one thing before which everything else must bow, and that is truth. Any religion-no matter what its power may be here -if not founded on truth, in the spirit life mmst fail. The atonement of the Roman Chureh is approaching, and its power will go down in a night of blood. As I can see this with a spirit's eyes, I feel it my duty to say that those persons or eharacters spoken of in the New Testament never had an existence, and this is well understood by us priests. I was the leader or head of the Catholic Chureh at Rome, at the time of the entrance of the French into that city. The first and principal thing done was to hide all the works of the Latin Fathers. Why? Because Christianity camot stand the bazing light of the originals when placed in the hands of scholars and free-thinkers. A child could ahmost see how the Epistles have been interpolated and changed to suit the views of the writers, and the foolish ceremonies these writers are advocating, show this. They fight about the communion ceremony-whether they should wee water or wine-whet her the bread was the real body or Christ or not. There has been more boodshed, more spirit dammation on aecount of these follies in regard to these ceremonial laws than on aceount of all other things put together. This communication is yours for the canse of truth."

Refer to the American ('yclopedia for accoment of Cardinal Bergia.
The importance of this eommunication may be moderstood from the fact that the learned Cardinal borgia made it his epeetal business to eolleet the manuseript evidence of the writings of the Fathers of the Christian ('hurch, and all that related to the anterior religions systems of the world. He therefore no doubt tells the exaet trath in relation to the fact that the loman Catholic ('hareh conld not aflord to have the manneripts of the christian fathers fall into the hands of the hearnel erities of the begimning of the present eentury. What the Roman lierarehy were able to secure from the French in Innis, is likely to beome the world's property through the confessions and admissions of returning spirits, who can no longer bear the load of guilt of concealing the truth from their mortal brethren. To these spirits we say, come one, come all! It is not yet too late for yon to win the thanks and sympathy of awakening humanity.

CARACALLA.

Bishop of Nicomedia.

Abstract

"I salute you with my best wishes:-It is astonishing to me in one way, and yet not in another, when, as a spirit, I look upon you mortals and see you in this liberal, enlightened and educated age, bowing before the superstition that such men as myself, during our mortal lives, endeavored to perpetnate for our own benefit. I do not believe that there were, at the Comncil of Nice, three persons present who believed in the truth of what was set down. If there were, it was on account of their ignorance. There was one thing that took place there that I think has not been reeorded for the benefit of humanity. It was agreed among the bishops there assembled, to destroy all books that threw any light upon the mythological origin of the Christian religion. The resnlt of that agreement, it is easy for you to estimate, since you have been receiving these communications from the spirits of the priests who flourished in that day and since; as youmust have seen for yourself that this has been carried out as thoroughly as possible. I cannot even plead in my own favor that I agreed to this through ignorance. I was governed by the desire for earthly advancement. In fact, onc-half your priests, ministers and bishops, are to-day materialists at heart, and they only adrocate the Christian religion because it is popular, and yields them a happy temporal condition. Even in my day we resorted to bibliomancy to decide questions of church policy. That is, we opened at one puge, then at another, reading the first verses our eyes met, and by that means decided who should be bishop and who not. But this was only subterfuge to cover the real object, for the priest who had the most gold to pay to the bishops, bought the best bishoprics. I will add, there was at that time nearly one hundred different versions of the gospeis, so-called, and each writer interpreted them to suit himself, as did the bishops likewise. Therefore, enlightened persons, to-day, must be fools to follow the teachings of such dishonest barbarians as we were. If this commmancation calses one person to reflect on what I have said I am amply repaid. I was Caracalla, Archbishop of Nicomedia."

Refer to MeC'lintock and Strong's Cyclopedia of 'Theological Literature, for "Bibliomaney."

Here we have a spirit returning, and testifying not only that bibliomancy was practiced by the Christian prelates of his day, himself included, but that it was only a subterfuge of Christiam prelates to barter away bishopries for gold, and to conceal the rile and corrupt object of those in authority as Christian prelates. Still more than this, that in the Commeil of Nice, it was agreed among the prelates there assembled, to destroy all writings that could show the mythological origin of the Christian religion. A pretty religion this to dominate the interests of humanity here and hereafter. We do not wonder that this spirit should feel contempt for the superstitions veneration of such a religion in the light of modern civilization and progress. How long? Oh ! how long, must humanity be governed through superstitious fears? How important are thesespirit disclosures of the soul-debasing origin of a religion, impiously taught in the name of the great God-soul of the universe as infallible truth!

HEGESIPpUS.

A Greek Theologian.

Abstract

"My best greetings to you:-There is only a fragment of my mortal life now extant. I travelled through almost all the countries at that time accessible. My life was an eventful one. 1 am set down in history as a converted Jew, when in fact I was not a Jew at all. I was a Greek, and lived in Athens. As I travelled over all those countries, I found the idea of some God saving the people, who was to be born into mortal life, or in fact, as the speaker said, to-day, a reincarnation of some older God or Gods who would effeet this. And upon this tradition the Christians have interpolated the small fragments extant now of the works of my mortal life. In reality it was nothing more than the teachings of the pupils or disciples of the Alexandrian school going out and spreading this idea, which they receised from India through Apollonius. This I positively know to be the fact, because I talked with them, and was initiated in some of their secrets myself. But I found that a great deal of it was lost, and while they had some somud moral and philosophical thoughts, they had only one object in view as the basis of their teachings and that was to gain power. At the time I lived-A. D. 170 -there was a great desire to gather together these traditions, and to gain possession of ancient manuseripts, in order to patch up a new religion, out of the old ones. At that time, it was a fight between the power of learned scholars and the power of pagan priests. The priests bitterly opposed those who were regarded as learned men. My name was Hegesippus. You will find me mentioned, if anywhere, in Tichendorf's writings, who was one of the best scholars in New Testament matters among modern authors."

Refer to McClintock's and Strong's Ecelesiastical Cyclopredia and Nouvelle Biographie Generale, for account of Hegesippus.

Such are the meagre biographical accounts of Hegesippus which may be found in the references. That there is hardly a trace of truth in what has come down to us regarding him seems very certain. That he was not a Jew, his name clearly indicates, it being evidently Greek. He tells us he was not a Jew, but a Greek; that he travelled over all the comintries then accessible to him; that everywhere he found the theological idea of some God saving the people that was to be born into mortal life, or the reincarmation of some older fiod who would efleet this; that in his writings he mentioned this fact ; and that this was the gromd for Ensebins interpolating the above cited forgery in his reference to him and his work. F"urther than this he tells us that this theological idea was especially promulgated ly the Alexandrian followers of Apollonins in aceordance with the Indian theology brought from India ly Apollonius. The spirit tells us that he knows this to beso, from the fact that he had conversed with him about it and was himself initiated in some of their secrets. Even at that early day the spirit tells us that a great deal of the teachings of Apollomins was lost, and their only object secmed to be to gain power. The spirit a?so tells us that in 170 A . D., when he lived, there was a great desire to gain possession of ancient manuseripts, in order to pateh up a new religion out of the old religions. There is little doubt that II aresippus was one who attempted that very thing, and that his work designated by Eusebius " Memorials of the History of the Chureh," was a compiation of those anciont mamuscripts, most prominent among which was the IEindoo mannseripts brought ly A pollonius from India. The reference of the spirit to 'Tischendorf's writings as the most likely piake to tind mention of him, is mot the leant signifieant feature of his communication, as it inticates that spirits are fully apprised of what is going on here on earth after their departure to the spirit life. That the work of Ifegesippus quoted loy Euschous wats mot preserved after it was msed hy Eusehins to suit himself, show that that framdulent writer:mid forger of Christian exidenere could not aflerd to have it combedown to us, as it wombl, heyond all question, have pert :an end to the fratud he labored an hard to perpetnate. It will be remembered that $A$ pollonins, in his communieation given werks before, stated the fact that Hequespphat had wopmod his version of the Hindeo groperls and epistles into the Samaritan tongue, from which enpy of Itagesipples, Thbhilas, bishop of the (inths, har translated the "Corlex Argentens." We regarsl this commanication as gromine and anthentice amb highly impertant, as emmatiave ceideme of the fact that Apollonins, and mot Jestas, is the real abject of Christian worship. And get thin (irenk heathen has beon mate as satint ly the Roman ('athenlie ('hureh.

ULPHILAS.

A Catholic Bishop.

Abstract

"I am here:-You may succeed for many years in keeping back the truth, but a time comes when that which is hidden must be revealed. I was a bishop in the fourth century: I was also a writer, and I translated a set of gospels and epistles from the Samaritan tongue. They are now in the University, at a place called Lpsal, and they are called the Codex Argenteus. It was written on what are called silver tablets. In truth, the fact is that I copied the gospel and epistles of Apollonius of Tyana, not originally written by himself, but brought by him from Singapoor, India, in Asia. That is he wrote versions from the originals himself, but these teachings of A pollonius hore, not the names that the Christians have given them. I nsed the names that the Christians wished to have at the head of their diflerent books. I was paid well for doing this, and managed to gain great popularity and preferment ly it, on this mortal plane; but my condition as a spirit has been one of torture. And know this; there is an influence amongst progressed spirits that forces all evil-doers back here to confess their sins, and show just where they lied and where they told the truth. This they are obliged to do finally, although they may defer it for a long time. I have stated here, as a spirit, exactly what I did ats a mortal, hoping that it will bring out the truth. I am Ulphilas."

Refer to Nouvelle Biographie Generale, Feller's Mistorical Dictionary and Historical Dictionary by Menard and Desenne, 1823.

We have giveu here several references as to where may be found, (as they have come down to us) the historical facts, relating to Clphilas and his Bible, in order to enable the reader to appreciate the unprecedented inportance of that communication. We challenge the Christian priesthoxd and clergy, as well as all who helieve in the trath of the Christian religion, to sucecsfully yuestion the truth and authenticity of the statements embraced in that communication. If they camot do this it simply remains for us to insist that this spirit has spoken only the trath in regard to the source from which he derived his Bible, or rather the copy of it, from which he made his tramshation. The spirit of Ulphilas testifies positively to that face, and not only deelares that the eanonical gospels and epistles are identically the same as those written by Apollonitus of 'Tyana, after the Brahaminical Gospels brought by him from *ingapoor, but at the instance of the Christian hierarehy, he in the fourth century translated them from the Simaritan original of $A$ pollonius, changing the names aceording to the wishes of his Christian employers. It was for rendering this detestalle service to the Christian hierarehy, none of whom were competent to translate the Samaritan originals of the books they sought to steal to consmmmate their selfish purpose, that Clphilas, the poor and comparatively manown reader in the Roman Catholic Clurch, was advanced to the dignity of a bishop, a promotion hardly paralleled in the ammals of priestly advancement. We will only notice one more fact in his remarkable commumication, and that is that sooner or later, every consecrated error and falseliood will have to be diselosed by returning spirits; and this, becamse the spirit friends of truth, justice and right, have at last acquired the power to compel it.

ABGARUS.

A Grecian Priest.

Abstract

"I salute you, sir:-Whether my name is recorded in history I care not; nor do I care whether it is disputed that I ever lived; but I know that I do live as a spirit, and what is more that I lived exactly at the time it is claimed that Jesus lived. Not only that-but it is clamed that I had correspondence with Christ. Now for the facts. My name was Abgarus. I was a priest at Abdera, in Thrace-afterwards a priest in Rome, in the reign of Tiberius Cæsar. I held correspondence with a Jewish priest who lived, at that time, in Jerusalem and whose name was Jesus Malathiel. This correspondence was taken advantage of by Felix, bishop of Urgel, in Spain, in the eighth century, in the time of Charlemagne, and was used by Christians after that time, to prove the real existence of Jesus Christ, when no such person existed; and I had no correspondence with any other person than I have named. The points at issue between myself and this Jesus was whether my god Apollo or his god Jah or Jehovalh was the older. There was at that time proof positive in ancient books then extant, that the Grecian god Apollo ander the name of Bel or Baal, was worshipped by the very father of the Jewish religion, Abraham, in Chaldea, before he became the so-called progenitor of the Hebrew nation, and therefore, I won the debate between this learned Jew and myself. And coucerning this controversy some of the apocryphal books, thrown out by the Council of Nice, contained accounts of my controversy with that Jesus; but the Christians have so mutilated the original argument, that it cannot now be understood. They have done everything they could to utterly destroy that argument. I have come here to-day, to throw what light I could upon this point, and I have done it honestly as a spirit. I care not whether history confirms what I say or not. I departed the mortal life about A. D. 60. This is yours for the truth."

We have thought this communication worthy of especial comment, in as much as it is esperially calculated to show that the commmications that have been given, and which have purported to eome from ancient spirits, ate what they clam to be. We will now give what history says of Abgarus, in order to call attemion to somme most signiticant points of this astonishing earrection of historical errons. We take the following aceount of Abgarus, from Mec'lintock and Strong's liblical ('yeloperdia:

"Algarus (Abagarins, Agharus; sometimes derived from the Arabic Akbar 'greater,' but better from the Armenian Avag, 'great,' :and air, 'man,') the eommon mane of the petty prinees (or 'Toparelas) who ruled at Betesea in Mesopotamia, of one of whon there is an eastern tradition, reombed by Eusebins, that he wrote a letter to Chriet who tramsmitten a reply. Euschins gives eopies of both letters, as follows: 'Algarus, prince of Edessa, to Jesus, the mereiful favionr, who has appeared in the eountry of Jerusalem, greeting. 1 hawe been informed of the protigies and eures wronght by you without the use of herhs or medicines, and by the elleace only of your words. I am told that you enable eripples to walk; that you force devils from the bedies prosesed; that there is no disease, however incmable, which you do not heal, and that you restore the dead to life. These wonders persuade me that you are some god desernded from heaven, or that vou are the sion of tiod. For this reason I have taken the liberty of writing this leteer to yom, beserhing you to eome and see me, and to erure me of the indieposition under whith I have so long latored. I understand that the dews persecente son, murmur at your miracles, athe seck vant deatroction. I have here a beatilal amb agreeahle rity which, thongh it be mot wery large, will be sullicient to supple you with everything that is merosary.'
"Touthis lefter it is sath Jestis (Christ returned himan answer in the fillowing terms: ' You are haply Abgarse, thas to hawe beliexal in me withont having seen me; for it is written of me, that they whe shall see me will mot leveree in me, and that with his subjects. The documents from which this narrative is drawn were found by Eusebius in the archives of Edessa. Moses of Chorene relates further that Abgarus, after his conversion, wrote letters in defence of Christianity to the Emperor Tiberius and to the king of Persia. He is also the first who mentions that Christ sent to Abgarus, together with his reply, a handkerchief impressed with his portrait. The letter of Clurist to Abgarus was declared apocryphal by the Council of Rome A. D. 494, but in the Greek church many continued to believe in its authenticity and the people of Edessa believed that their city was made unconquerable by the possession of this palladium. The original is said to have been brought to Constantinople. In modern times, the correspondence of Abgarus, as well as the portrait of Christ are generally regarded as forgeries."

It is to protest against such Christian forgeries as these in his name that the spirit of Abgarus returns, and to state the correct facts in regard to his letters to Jesus Malathiel, the learned Jew with whom he had the controversy about the antiquity of the Jewish God Jah or Jehovah. It would appear from the communication that Algarus was not Abgar, king of Edessa, but was a Greek priest in the temple of A pollo at Abdera in Thrace, and afterward a priest at Rome in the reign of Tiberius Cassar. It is therefore more than likely that Abgarus wrote letters to Tiberius, as Moses of Chorene states; but those letters shared the same fate as did the actual correspondence with the Jewish priest, Jesus Malathiel of Jerusalem. It would seem that the alleged correspondence between Abgarus and Jesus Christ, was declared apoeryphal as early as A. D. 494 ; or in other words, spurious.

The reason for that declaration was not given nor was there any attempted explanation, as to how so recognized an authority as Euscbins, had been inducel to cite the alleged correspondence ats genuine. It would appear that the Comeil of Rome in 494 only declared the letter of Christ to Abgarus as spurions, but did not pronounce the alleged letter of Abgarus to Christ equally -purious. Both rested on the same authority and both should have shared the same disposition at the hands of the Roman (atholie Clureh. It would further appear that after the discrediting of the eorrespondence in question, no further use was attempted to be mathe of it ats athording historical evidener of the existence of Jesus ('hrist until Felis, bishop) of (rgel, in Fatin, in the reign of Charlemagne, again attempted to use it as anthentic historical evidence of the existence and character of Jesus Christ. Now, who was the Felix, referred to in the eommanication: He was the bishop of Urgel, in Spain, in the latter part of the eighth and the begiming of the ninth century:

Refer to MeCClintock and strong's Ecelesiaxtical Cychopedia, for account of Felix.
; View all the facts as we may, this communication must strike the attention of thoughtful persons ats of especial signiticance in showing what the so-called Christian religion really is, and furthermore it points us to the truth as to this important item of history, exposing the falsehoods that were built upon the single fact that Algarus had corresponded with a Jew named Jesins. It becomes more amb more certain that the spirits of the learned and distinguished men of the past are perfectly conversant with the pious fratuds and errors that have heen perpetrated in their names, and that they have at last fombla means of setting themselves and the ocemrences of their times correctly before us.

GREGORY. Bishop of Constantinople.

[^4]It is known by every Christian priest, to-day, who knows anght of history, that A pollonius was the original Jesus; and the pagans in my day, in their answers to Curistian bishops, said that those bishops positively knew they were lying when they clamed any other Saviour than the Cappadocian Saviour ; and charged that, in their artfulness, when they couid not destroy the knowledge of A pollonius and his teachings they interpolated the name of Jesus, when by every principle of right the name of Apollonius should have been allowed to remain there. If you must have a Saviour I do not see why you should not have the right one. It is better to build on a reality than on a myth. A pollonits, in spirit life, has a noble school of philosophy for spirits who desire to be educated. One of the most consummate villains that ever lived, and one that has done more to retard learning the truth regarding this Christ than any other, was Eusebius, for he spent his whole life in interpolating, mutilating and destroying everything that was against Christianity. And the first pope was also guilty of a similar destruction of those books. I might go on further, but the power of control is exhansted. Sign me Gregory of Constantinople."

The spirit giving that communication must have been Gregory Nazianzen, so-called from the fact that he was a native of Nazianzus in Cappadocia. He was afterwards made bishop of Constantinople and hence gives himself that designation. See account of him in the American Cyclopredia.

It is the spirit of this Christian saint and church father who conferses that he was forced to come back and testify his knowledge of the fraudulent character of the Christian religion. It would appear that he was not the self-denying, unambitions man that history has described him to be, nor was he the ascetic moralist he feigned to be. Even more than this, he frankly confesses that he was a materialist at heart, and had no hope nor idea of the after-life. Gregory admits that he himself tampered with the books described by Ma-Ming, Hegesippus and Ignatius of Antioch, who had all communicated before him at that seance-that he altered the names they contained, and destroyed many of them in order that he might not be detected in his deceptions. It is this Cappadocian Christian who testifies positively that the Cappadocian Saviour, Apollonius of Tyana, was the original of the C'hristian siaviour Jesms. If we may credit this spirit, Apollonius is still engaged in his great mision of education in spirit life, and is now enlightening the epirit world as he dit this, by his vastly benerolent labors and profound wisdom. That Eusebius was the consummate villain that this spirit testifies he was, is very certain from the ummistakable footprints he has left of his dishonesty and untruthfulness, in almost everything he tonched. The first Pope who was engaged in the stme work of destruction of the books from which the Christian religion wats stolen, to whom the spirit of (ircgory refers, was Pope Sylvester I., who is deseribed in the Nouvelle Biographie Generale.

It is a well known historical fact, that prior to this epoch of the so-called Christian era, there was little unity of purpose and interest on the part of the Christian hierarchy. Then for the first time the present papal power took shape, and everything that was opposed to it was relentlessly destroyed or so modified as to assist in establishing this sacrilegious usurpation of the rights of humanity. It was then that men, wearing the garb of the votaries of divine truth, perpetrated falschoods of the meanest and blackest dye, and labeled them religion. Most prominent in this work were Sylvester I, and Eusebius, bishop of C'essarea.

EUSEBIUS. Bishop of Cæsarea.

"I yield under protest. I hate both my mortal and spirit life. I acted here, and still do act, a living lie. The prince of interpolators, forgers and plagiarists, now inhabits the organism of this man before you. Curse you and your book ; but I will have, I suppose, to get my name in it. I have fought these spirit powers during two long years before they got me here tonight. I am fast in the net of truth. I am not (bad though I be, ) the forger of the passage in relation to Jesus Christ, in Josephus. I merely copied it. Justin Martyr was the man who did that, in his epistle to Antoninus Pius, begging that he would not persecute the Christians, on account of the similarity of the Christian with the pagan God. In chap. ii of my Ecclesiastical history, you will find the sentence, as near as I can give it through this man, (Curse me if I was not watched, I would lie to you, that the Epistles and Gospels of the ancient Therapeutre, are the Epistles and Gospels of the present day. And another thing I was compelled to say in my history was, that the Gospel of Jesus Christ was neither new nor strange. There is a book extant that will settle this AntiNicene Library question, and what it is and where to find it will be told here to-night by a spirit who will follow me. There is no bishop, archbishop, cardinal, nor pope, that has not tampered with everything that could throw light upon Christianity. It had its origin with, and was founded by Apollonims of Tyana, and its prineipal exponent, or one who did most to spread it, according to the manuseripts that I copied from, was Ammonius Sacas. I think from my reading of them that he added the Egyptian (Alexandrian) element to the Hindoo originals. That is, he modernized them to suit the Egyptian schools of thought. All the Epistles and Gospels are, in reality, the creation of the Christian priests. Some were named as early as the sceond eentury and some not until the fourth century." [Here the spirit stopped to say :] "In the first phace I late to give this communication." [He was urged to do it without reluctance. He answered:] " It is a surrender of power. No man likes to give up power." [He then resumed his communication.] "All the Gospels and Epistles of A pollonius of Tyana were in what might be termed the syriac-Hebraic, or Simaritan tongue, and the (ireck writers translated them, in those early ages, to suit themselves. That Christianty and paganism were identieally the same, san be proven very easily by the feast in honor of Adonis or Adoma, which the Christians adopted-that is the Catholie C'hristians -and which is now their Easter festival, and you can see this at Rome on any Easter day. It requires very little learning to ste their identity. The original (it ever there was an original,) Jesus Christ was a Hindoo god, known under the name of Christos, or Krishna, the modern way of spelling it, to disgnise the real truth. Aceording, to documents that were extant in my day, this Christos or Krishna, was worshipped in the temple of Mathura on the Jumma, in the days of sumbhoniathon, 1200 years B. C. ; positive evidence of which I think is to be found in some mantscripts, of the time of Alexander the (ireat, still extant, $830 \mathrm{~B} . \mathrm{C}$. I do not come here to-night to confers anything willingly. I an caught in the web of cireum-stances-trapped by spirits who know more than I de. I have confessed only what their power mate me confess. I have had to do it. Yom know my name." [We replied, Eusebius of (besarea. He replied.] "I am Euschins of Ceesarea. But to me this is the worst experience I have ever hat to mbdergo. I wond rather have spent a hundred years in hed than to have acknowledged what I have done here."

At our request the spirit eonsented to allow is to make an appeal to him to reeonsider his past lite, as a necessary steptohis own happiness, as well as an ate of justiee to the thonsamelio of millions of epirite who have been kept in darkness, ignorance and misery, mainly through his dishoment and motruthful incukeations. He heard us with attention and patience, and in leaving the eontrol, promised to weigh well what we had said to him, and to return and make known the result. In view of the great impertane of that commanication, we will giversmeh fate comerning Finsehtins ats will serve to give it its due

He flourished chiefly under the emperors Constantine and Constantius. On account of his friendship for Pamphilus, he received his surname from him.'
"Eusebius, as is generally thought, and with some degree of probability, was born at Cæesarea, in Palestine, about the year 270 , or as some think sooner. We have no account of his parents, or who were his instructors in early life. Nor is there anything certainly known of his family and relations. * * It is somewhat probable, though not certain, that Eusebius was ordained presbyter by Agapius, bishop of Cassarea, of whom he made a very honorable mention. He had a long and happy intimacy with Pamphilus, presbyter in that chureh, who was imprisoned in the year 307, and obtained the crown of martyrdom in 309. During the time of that imprisonment, Eusebius was much with his friend. After the martyrdom of Pamphilus, he went to Tyre, where he saw many finish their testimony to Jesus in a glorious manner. From thence, as it seems, he went into Egypt; where, too, he was a spectator of the sufferings and patience of many of his fellow-Christians; where likewise he scems to have been imprisoned. And because he did not suffer, as some others did, it has been insinuated, that he procured his liberty by sacrificing, or some other mean compliance, umbecoming a Christian. But that is a general aceusation without ground. No one was ever able to specify any mean act of compliance in particular ; as appears from Potamon's charge in Epiphanius."
"Agapius succeeded Theotecnus in the sce of Cæesarea. And it is the more general opinion, that Eusehius succeeded Agapius in 315. This is certain, that he was bishop of Cesarea in 320 at the latest. After which we ean perceive that he was present at most of the synods held in that part of the world. He died in the year 339 or 340 ."

Speaking of Eusebius's Ecclesiastical History, Lardner says :
"Of all Eusebius's works the Eeclesiastical History is the most valuable, but, as it seems to me the least aceurate of all his large works, that are come down to us in any good measure entire. complained of Eusebius for not giving us at length the passage of Cains, concerning the Seriptures of the New Testament, or however, of St. Paul's Epistles. But he abridges that, and afterbards transeribes at length several passages of an anonymons writer of little worth, concerning the followers of Artemon. It may be reckoned somewhat probahle, that Eusebius's aversion for Sabdianism, and everything akin to it, led him to pay so much reapect for that author. 12. I add no mere at present. Many observations upon this author's works may be. seen in Joseph Saliger's Prokgomena to the Chronicle. Dr. Heumann intended to write rentarks upon the Ecclesiastical History; but I do not know that he has published them."

So wrote the learned and pious Dr. Nathaniel Lardner concerning the famed Ecclesiastical History of Eusebius. From what follows, it will be seen he was equally dishonest ant evasive as to the doctrinal views he entertained. Says Dr. Lardner:
"It has often been disputed whether Eusebius was an Arian. It may be proper, therefore, for me to refer to some authors upon this question. The ancients were not all of one mind here. Socrates, in the 5th century, inserted an apology for him in his Ecclesiastical History."
"Among moderns it is needless to mention Baronius, whose antipathy to this writer is well known. Petavius readily places Eusebins amongst Arians. Bull vindicates him. Cave and Le Clere had a warm controversy upon this head. Cave allows, 'That there are many unwary and dangerous expressions to be found in his writings.' 'That he has at best doubtfol and ambiguous expressions in his controverted doctrine;' 'and that he was reekoned to be an Arian by Athanasius, and divers others his contemporaries, as well as others in the latter part of the fourth century, and afterwards.' Still he says, he did not hold the peculiar doctrines of Arianism. Fabricius and Du Pin do not much differ from Cave. Valesius, too, was favorable to our author. C. J. Vossius says, his works would sufïciently manifest him to have been an Arian if the ancients had been silent about him. Of the same opinion was James (Gothofred. 'Tillemont is clear, that Eusebins showed himself an Arian hy his actions and his writings. Montfacon says the same thing exactly, and earnestly, and at large argues on this side of the question ; and that he showed himself to be an Arian as much in his writings, after the Council of Nice, as before it. As for his subseribing to the Nicene (reed, he supposes that Eusebius was moved by wordly considerations, and that he did not subscrile sincerely: Which is grievous to think; better had it heen, that the bishops of that council had never met together, than that they should have tempted and prevailed upon a ('hristian bishop, or any one else, to prevaricate and act against conseience."
such is the testimony of Christian writers as to the dishonesty, wordliness and unfairness of Eusebius as a writer and a Christian bishop. We quote farther from Smith's Dictionary of Greck and Roman Biography :
"The character of Eusebius, and his honesty as a writer, have been made the subject of a fieree attack by (iibbon, who aceuses him of relating whatever might redound to the eredit, and suppressing whatever would tend to cast reproach on Christianity, and represents him as little better than a dishonest syemphant, anxious for nothing higher than the favor of Constantine; and resumes the subject in his 'Vindication' of the 15 th and $16 \log _{1}$ chapters of the history. For the charge of syeophaney there is but little foundation. The joy of the Christians at Constantine's patronage of true religion was so great, that he was all but defied hy them, both before and after his death; and although no doubt Nicbuhn has sutliciently shown that Constantine, at feast up to the time of his last ilhues, can only be considered as a pagan ; yet, considering that his aceresion not only terminated the persecution which hat raged for ten veans, but ewen extablished Christianity as the state religion, it is not surprising that Ensebins, like ofhers, should be willing to overlook his fante, and regard him ats an especial favorite of heaven. As to the charge of dishonesty, though we would nesther expect nor wish a Christian to be impartial in (ibbon's sense, [Why mot, pray ?] yet, Eusehius hat eertaimy arowed, that heomits almont all aceount of the wiekedness and disiensions of the Christians, from thinking of religion, by reflectine honor upon the martyrs. The fat that he avows this primeiple, at oume diminishes our eontidenee in him as a historian, and acruits him of the charge of intentional deecit, to which he would have been otherwise exposed. But besides this, Euschins has written an chapter bearine the Hes at methosl.' Now at the first sight, [:mbl why not 2d, ad, thh, and any umber of other sights? there maturally rise in ('hristian in profision, could suppose that the nse of falselmod by the pions fratul- which are the shame of the early ('lumeh.

But when we read the chapter itself, we find that the instances which, Eusebius takes of the extent to which the principle may be carried, are the cases in which God is deseribed in the Old Testament as liable to human affections, as jealousy or anger, 'which is done for the advantage of those who require such methods.'"

We have given enough and more than enough concerning Eusebius, to show his real character. We may now proceed to analyze the communication, which purports to come from his unwilling and resisting spirit. That this captured spirit should hate to face his work as a mortal and spirit, with such a record of evil doing, was natural, and that he should make his confession under protest ought to surprise no one. To realize that he had lived and was still living a lie, was anything but a pleasant necessity. That he should curse ourself, and our contemplated publication, was equally natural ; and not less so his fear that his unwilling and truthful spirit testimony would be made known to the world. Some idea of the kind of psychological warfare going on in spirit life may be gathered from the fact that after two years of effort, this stubborn and powerful spirit, was compelled to yield to a higher psychological force, and become a passive witness to the truth.

We desire to direct the attention of our readers to the disavowal of the spirit that he forged the passage in relation to Jesus Christ in Josephus' Antiquities of the Jews. It has come to be a general impression among critics, that the passage or section referred to, of Josephas, was forged, as well as interpolated by Eusebius. This the spirit denies, so far as the forgery goes, which he charges upon Justin Martyr, who used it in his epistles or apology to Antoninus Pius. Whether this be true or false, it is a fact that Justin Martyr, did write an epistle to the Emperor Antoninus Pius. Speaking of the undisputed works of Justin Martyr, MeClintock and Strong's Cyclopredia says :
"Apologia prote upir Christianon pros Antoninon ton Eusebe, mentioned in the only two known manuseripts of the Apologies, and in the older edition of Justin is one of the most interesting remains of Christian antiquity. It is addressed to the emperors Antoninus Pius and to his adopted sons, Verrissimus the philosopher, afterwards the emperor Marens Aurelius, and Lucius the philospher, [we follow the common reading not that of Eusebius] afterwards the emperor Verus, colleague of M. Aurelius."

If there was any such language put into the mouth of Josephas liy Justin Pius, in his letter to Antonimus Pitus, we eamot trace it. But one thing is very certain, that Eusebins was the first to refer to such a passuge in Josephos, amd he was no doubt the interpolator of that fraud if not its tuthor. He, as at spirit seems to regard this forgery as worse than any he ever committed. Sor far as the moral guilt is coneerned, one "pions fratud," of that nature, is as bat as another. As will he seen in our extracts from Lardner's works, Fusebius did say, "that the ancient writings of Phils's Therapeute were our gospels and cpistles." Not only so but the spirit of Eusebius comes back and testifies that such was the fact. The statement of the spirit that he was compelled by the facts to state in his history, "that the Gespel of Jestis Christ was neither new nor strange," is borne out by the following extract from Lardner :
"The contents of the fourth ehapter of the Eeclesiastieal History is to this purpose: 'That the religion published hy Jesus ('hrist to all mations is meither new nor strange'
"For thomgh,' says he, 'without controversy, we are but of bate, and the name of 'hristians is inded new, and has mot long obtained over the word ; yet our mamer of lite and the principhes of our religion, have not been lately devised ly ne, hat were instituted and ohserved, if I may eo sily, from the beginning of the world by good ment, acerepted of (iod, from those matural motions which are implanted in man's minds. This I shall show in the following mamer: It is well known, that the mation of the Hebrews is not new, hat dietingushed by antignity. They have writinge containiner acoomts of ancient mon; few inderd in momber, hat very eminent for picte, ju-tiere, and wery other virtue. Of whom some lived before the flosel, others simee, sons and gramdsons of Nosals ; partionlarly Abraham, whom the Helorews ghory in ats the father and fommer of their mation. And if any one, asembling from Ahraham to the first man, should athirm, that all of them who were codsmated for virtue, were (hristians in reality, thoush not in name, he would wot spak muth leevide the truth,"

Now Eush hins lived and wrote thee hambed yats after the allecered death of heas Christ ; and yet we have hime dectaring that ther mame of christians was then mew, amd tiat ther roligion athe enstoms were of long anteocent date. Who tulferesthat Eusedius would ever have given such adeath bhow new relixion or :any meligion at: all, had he dared to face the facts that contradicted that pretence in his day? Who but the spirit of Eusebius would have recalled thoseannihilating declarations against Christianity made in his history of the Church? He well conjectured that those ardmissions on his part ought to be utterly fatal to the pretence of the originality of the socalled Christian religion. As will ba seen by the communication from the spirit of Sir Thomas Bodley, the fact of the existence of the Anti-Nicene Library to which Eusebius refers, is fully explained. The testimony of the spirit of Eusebius to the fact that Christianity had its origin with, and was founded by Apollonius of Tyana, as expounded by Ammonins Saccas, is not more important than it is true. That Ammonius Saceas should have given them an Alexandrian coloring was to be expected, and this the spirit of Eusebius testifies was the case. When he says the Christian gospels and epistles were all the work of priests, we understand lim to mean that the titles they bear, and their present modified forms, are the work of Christian priests. Equally important and truthful is the declaration of this spirit that the gospels and epistles of Apollonius of Tyana were in the Syriac-Hebraic or Samaritan tongue, and were subsequently translated into Greek by translators who construed them to suit themselves. The spirit testified truly when he said that Christianity and paganism were identical; and that the Christian Easter festival was but the feast of the Greeks and Phoenicians in honor of Adonis, which literally meant "Ad" the Lord, "on" the being, and "is" the fire, or One-supreme-fire Being-the Sum. The confession of Eusebius, that it required very little learning to see that the original Jesus Christ was a mythical Hindoo god calfed Christos, is a stinging reproach of the Christian clergy who have shut their eyes to that almost self-evident fact. And here Eusebius states a most important and significant historical fact, and that is, that in his day there were documents extant that showed that Christos or Krishma was worshipped in the temple of Mathura on the Jumma, in the days of Fanchoniathon 1200 B. C. We find the following concerning Mathurat in Johnson's Universal Cyclopredia:
"Mathura, or Muttra, a town of British In lia, in the Northwestern Provinces on the Jumna, is a decaying and disagreeable place, but as the birthplace of Krisna, it is highly venerated by the Brahmans, and risited by a great number of pilgrims. The shores of the river are provided with gorgeous flights of steps, and the city contains an immense temple, from which, however, foreign conquerors have earried away the itlols of gold and silver with eyes of diamonds. saced apes are kept here; they are fed at the public expense, and allowed to do what mischief they like; swarms of holy parrots and peacocks are also maintained."

As Mathura was the reputed birth place of the Hindoo myth Christos, it is more than likely his worship had its rise there, and the statement of the spirit that Christos was worshipped there as early as the time of Samchomiathon, the oldest of all known authors, 1:00 B. C., is confirmed by known facts. For any one to pretend that the medium, an almost illiterate man, ever concocted that remarkable communication is preposterons; and yet there are people who are so prejudiced or lost to all reason as to make that pretence.

" I saldete you, sir:-I lived while in the mortal form at Athens, Rome and Alexandria, about A. D. 175. There are numerons letters of mine extant to-day, on vations subjects conneeted with all the atlairs of life, but they have been very carefal to let none come down to the present gencration, that cond in any way invaldate the Christian religion. If they hat done so, the whole secret of the 'Wise Menof the East,' emming to worship the young child would be known to yon. 'The story was brought from India to Alexandria by the (iymmosophists. There were four gexpels then extant conneced therewith, mater the tithe of "The Jncarnation of Budhha.' Aho, in my day there camb from Singapoor, India, to Alexamdria, seven wise men, who came to compare notes upen the subjee of religion and philosophy ; and from the holy eity of Bemares they hromght for similar acomuts of a great many Figytian, fireciam and fomall soms; and as far as I real their works, I think they wore worstel in the exchange, for more lazy, grob-for-mothing nothinge than the priests of Eerypt. (ireece and Rome have never been upon this phanet. They were even worse than the priests of to-day, for the latter work to cover up their tracks, while the pagan priests were openly licentious. I will say further, that I have seen at Alexandria books such as, if they were extant now, would overthrow the whole Christian fabric. My name I will spell-Alciphron."

Refer to Smith's Dietionary of Greek and Roman Biography for account of Alciphron.

This graceful Greek writer comes back to say that some of his most important letters have been suppressed, especially those which could in any way invalidate the fraud of Christianity. In view of such frequent testimony to the vandalism of the Christian priesthood it becomes a question whether there are any of the ancient writings that have not either been suppressed, destroyed or mutilated to such an extent as to conceal the true nature and bearing of them. The communication of Alciphron settles the question as to the time when he lived, and shows that he was a contemporary of Lucian and Aristrenetus. We have his positive testimony that the story of the wise men of the East coming to worship the young child was an Indian theological legend brought to Alexandria by the Gymnosophists of the former country, and related to the incarnation of Buddha. Of the truth of this statement I have no doubt whatever. That the Gymmosophists, of whom Alciphron speaks, were the originators of the Essenian religion we may very reasonably infer. Such testimony as this cumulative and consistent with recorded facts, must serve to eonvince the most prejudiced ignorance that truth is at last finding its vindication and approaching its final triumph.

SIR THOMAS BODLEY.

" Good evexing, str :-I might as well give my name now, so as to be sure of it, for my control maty get weak toward the end of this commmication. I was known as Sir Thomas Bodley. I wats the foumder of the Bobllem Library, attached to the Oxford University, at Oxtord, England. In the IGth century, I eoflected manuscripts, and particularly those of a very ancient date, and I know that there was a collection deposited therein be me, called the 'Controversy against the Council of Nise.' It embraced writing of the Controversialists previons to and for a century after that Conncil, that are known to history ; but how far the dergy have tampered with them sinee, I know not. I say this, beeathee in the lfith and 17th centuries, if a priest saw a bo:k or mamuseript that was damgermas to Christianity, lue did one of thee things, stole it, brught it, or mutilated it. At Cambitige, you will tind what is termed the ('matridere manuseript, of which sixty leaves wore miseing, ten of which have since heen supplied. Suppled by whon, I would like to know : The marginal motes of ameient seribes were damming evidence of the anthenticity of the originats from which they eopied; and those lansered priceste could mot atlosed to let them come dwon to posterity. But if the mamseripts of this Ami-Niereme Library, or conges of then are now extant, I think you will tind them in Robert Watt's Bibtiotherat Britamisea, pubhished in 14:3, 4 gto volse, as it is the tinest abalogere in the English object of my coming bere to-night. As them are others here to spessk I dose and thank you tor this opport mity."

 tions, we wert surpriad th mexpertedly timat mention of :

Library," which comprised a number of works controverting the aetion of the Council of Nice. Not thinking at the time that any one would ever think of questioning so well authenticated it fact, we made no note of the matter, and thought no more upon the subject, until a writer who thought he was well informed, publicly denied that such a collection of works ever existed. When we songht to find the reference that was so distinetly impressed upon our memory, to our surprise we could not lay our hands upon it. Failing to find it, we resorted, as we lad done many times before, to the guide of the medium for assistance in our search for it. He promised to refer the matter to the Band of Spirits who had been using the medium, and this communication was no doubt the result of their action in the premises. In any sense in which the commmanation purporting to come from the spirit of Sir Thomas Bodley may be viewed, it would seem to be authentic. It was given immediately after the communication that purported to come from Eusebius Pamphilus, Bishop of Ciesarea, and was referred to by the latter as about to be given.

It will be seen that the spirit states that in the 16th century, he collecied manuseripts, and particularly those of a very ancient date, and that among those mamuscripts, there was a collection of them deposited by him in the Bodleian Library called, "The Controversy Against the Council of Niee," and that that collection embraced the writings of the Controversialists previons to and for a century after that Council was held.

It is equally a significant feature of that commmmeation, that the spirit should so elearly testify to the vandalism of the Christian clergy, Catholic and Protestant, in the 16th and 17 th centuries, when the flactuating aseendency of one or the other Christian faction was from tine to time secured. No one knew better than Sir Thomas Boxlley, the learned bibliotheke and critic, the extent of the destruction and mutikation of all then existing ancient works whether in manuseripts or in print. We have no doubt that the marginal notes, on many an ancient manuseript, scaled its domm. Asclirected by thespirit we sought the work of liobert Watt, a work we had never before heard of, and found it to be just what the spirit said it was, a work of four 4ato vols., published in 1804, which is truly "the fincst eatalogne in the English language, and a work of vast research." We have no doubt that that invaluable work contains the mention of all the works ever embraced under the general designation of the "('ontroversy Arainst the C'ouncil of Niee;" but as Watt catalognes each work under its special title, we had nothing to gruide us in our search. We have no doubt that this commanication is athentic and true.

MARCION.

The Father of Christianity.

"I salette you, sir:-For my own benefit and personal aggramizement, 1 brought to Rome the Patine Epistles. I obtained them in Antioch. I changed or interpolated them to suit myself; becanse, being a schobar, and understanding those epistles to contain facts that were not known by the world at large, I thought that they presented a rare opportanity to make myself great. These epistles were written or eqpied from the originals ly Apollonitus, Apollos, or l'aulus; and in order to diseruise the identity of their anthor, Apenlonius of Tyana, I interpolated that deseription of F'al that was atterward copien hy Lacian. The principat foundation of thase epistles was the sign of the zodiate knewn ats Aries, the Ram or Lamb. The early Christians, as will be proven by one who comes after me to-day (Lucian), all worshipped at lamb instead of a man on at eross. Those epistles were written in the ('appadocian or samarifan tongue. It is my duty as a spirit here to-day, to state positively that I was the first person to introduee these (phet les to public notiee, in A. I). 1:0, and in the manner 1 have deseribed. This commanisation is given for the bedetit of all thinkess who wish to be entightened upon the truth. I was a natiow of Cappadseia, the combtry of Apollonins of Tyan: ; and my n:ane was Marem."

Lefer to the work of Dr. Lardner for :acount of Mareion.
Who ean real the analysisof the the ohgieal hatorsoot Mareion by Dr. Larduer, is the light of the spirit commontation of Mareion, amd fail to reogrize its complete demonstration Hat the cpisthe attributed to st. l'an by (hristians, were nothing more nor lose than mertain "pistles of Apollonite of Tyana, timad some thirty-two yoars after his chath at Antioch, by Marcion, who copied them, he making such alterations as would conceal their real authorship and object, and that they were taken by him to Rome, about A. D. 130, where he hoped to become the head of the Christian religion by establishing a new canonical scripture. This spirit testifies positively that he was the first to introduce those writings to the public, and this fact seems to be amply sustained by indisputable historical evidence. According to Dr. Lardner, Mareion rejected three gospels of the Christians, the Acts of the Apostles, and other books now claimed to be canonical. This is simply absurd. Those books were then not in existence. The probability is, that A pollonius had never made public these writings, and as they were written in the Samaritan tongue, as Apollonins, Ulphilas, Hegesippus, and other spirits have stated, they were not available to the Greek and Latin scholars of that time. Nothing was more natural than that an educated and influential Cappadocian, whose native language was the Samaritan tongue, should have found those writings of Apollonius in Antioch after the death of that great medium, oracle and prophet, and copied or translated them, from the Samaritan, into the Greek and Latin tongues, with both of which languages he was familiar as with his own.

But we have these matters set perfectly at rest by the priceless researehes of our comntryman, Mr. Charles B. Waite, in his "History of the Christian religion to A. D. 200." This fearless and indefatigable searcher for truth has shown, beyond all question, that the Gospel of Marcion, is the original from which the four canonical Christian gospels have been fabricated by Christian plagiarists. We will therefore refer our readers to his invaluable labors in order to prove the importance and truthfulness of that startling communication from Marcion, entithed by Christian writers, St. Mark.

I ask the reader, whether in the light of the spirit communication from the spirit of Marcion, there can any longer be a question that there was a Gospel of Paul, and that the writer of it was none other than Apollonius of Tyana? This Gospel of Paul, was a Samaritan version of the Sanserit gospel or gospels of Deva Bodhisatoua, obtained at Singapoor by Apollonius, and modified by him in accordance with his philosophic views. It was this Buddhistic gospel of Apoll nins that was still further modified by Marcion in the gospel which he took to and preached at Jome. It was still further modified by some writer thirty years afterward, and labeled the (iospel aceording to St. Lake. The anthor of the Gospel of Marcion, the Gospel of Luke, and the lanline epistles being one and the same person and that person none other than Apollonius of Tyana, the only Apollos or laulus or Patal, that ever had an existence. This shows the absolute truth of the spirit conmmaneation, for Marcion had propagated his New Testament in Pontus before going to Rome, and at least twenty years before Justin wrote. In spaking of the loss or dest ruction of evidence, Mr. Waite speaks of the writings of Mareion in the following just and forcible manner, which we camot refrain from quoting in this eonnection.
"Pure Christianity has suffered no greater lose, than that of the writings of Mareion, the great theological thinker of the second century-the compiler of the tirst comptete gospel-the collector of the epistles of Paul-the editor and pubtisher of the first New Testament. While the elahorate work against him, written by Tertullian, who called him a 'homed,' has been preserved, and the work of Epiphanius, who hestowed upan him the euphonins appellation of 'beast, the writings of Mareion have perished, exeept such ats are fomad in the references and citations of his adsersaries. His works haveshared the eommon fate of those of the hereties of the serond century, none of which, in their original form, have ben permitted to come down to us.
" Mardion was an educated man, and a profound thinker, and mo relie of Comistian antionity, next to the EDpistles of Pan, would torday be more valuahle, than his writues. Being him-writings upon those sulyeets wonld forswer set at rest the question, as to what goipels were then in cireulation."
('an there be dombt any longer as to what the fiosere of Mareion was, in wiew of all the facto of the case? Throurh an malettered man, who never heard of Mareion, a commmaieation is given, whirl makes known the faet that the lamb of the ('hristian serptures was $\lambda$ pollonins of TYanat; and that the sare, writton in the samatitan tongur and by himsiff promem :and tran-lated into (irack. Mr. Waite hats demenstrated that that A pollonius of Tyana was that author ? If you do, then what is yet to come, and now in hand, will settle that point beyond all doubt.

LUCIAN.

A Greek Satirist.

"My salutation shall be, Death to Falschood, whether in religion or in political affairs of spirits and mortals. The man who preceded me (Marcion) is the one from whom my description of St. Paul was taken, although never known to me by such a neme. He was known to me as Apollos in the Greek tongue ; as Paulus in the Roman ; and it was maderstood by all scholars at the time I wrote, as relating to the life, travels, and miracles of one A pollonius, the oracle of Vespasian. In fact I merely followed the statements of Marcion, although I knew his statement was incorrect, never for an instant thinking that my description of this person would be seized upon by Christians, in after ages to perpetuate their frand. I was of a satirical disposition of mind, and it made no difference to me if what I wrote was true or false. It was with me as with your dramatic writers of to-day ; and it mattered not what events I sought to use, whether sacred or historical, so I could make them suit my purposes. All men are selfish so far as securing the necessaries and conforts of life are concerned, and gaining prominence over their fellow men. This is not so bad at quality of human nature as might be imagined. To attain prosperity and avoid adversity is a necessary incentive to human effort. At the time of the writings to which I refer, there was anew element introduced into religious affairs at Alexandria and Rome, as was told you by a spirit last week of the Gymnosophists, who, by comparing notes, with Grecian, Roman and Samaritan authors, found that one and the same jdea ram through the religions of all nations, as to their gods having been born of virgins. In fact, in some countries, in Sicily, for instance this idea had become so common that death was imposed upon women who clamed to have been overshadowed or impregnated by fod or Cods. That is all the light I can at this time throw upon the subject; and as a truthful spirit I want to assert nothing but what I know to be true. Lucian."

Rafor to MceClintock and Strong's Ecclesiastical C'yelopedia, and Dr. Lardner, in Chap. xix, of his "Testimonies of Ancient Heathens," for aceount of Lucian.

Who ean read the above communication and not feel impresed with the insigniticant measures used hy the writers of that time to formulate the Christian Gospels. Judging from the writings of Lucian as they have come down to us, we can glean very little of their true inwardness, they hearing evidence of the mutilation they have suffered at the hands of those who wished to make use of them for selfish purposes. This is especially true of the narrative of Peregrinus or Protens, which the learned Dr. Lardner commentsupon at length in his works, though not to his entire satisfaction, it seens, as he says after guoting a paragraph from Lucian in his work on "Testimonies of Ancient Heathens:" "I have rendered this paragraph as it stands in Lucian, but those titles seem not to refer to Peregrinus and it may be suspected that something is wanting hereabouts." Tanaquil Faher, in his motes conjectures that there were some expresions injurious to our siviour, which a Christi:an Copyist more pious than wise left out." Dr. Lardner also seems to think that the mistakes are owing to ignorance or dexign or malice at the same time trying to explain them away in the interest of the Christian Chureh. To which we reply mont certainly "something was wanting hereabout;" and that something was the absence of the interpolation of the word ('hristian, which was not in the original of Lucian. Unless Mareion was a Christian and his gospul was trae ('hristianty, Lucian never would have used the term Christian in connertion with Apollonits and his teachings, his ohjoct being to ridicule the attempt of Marcion to lameh a new religion mate吅, of the materials left hy Apollonims at Antion so lamely diserised as not to weape the keen observation of the great (irecian satirist. Lactan makes known the fat that Protelus, neknamed by him Peregrintis, (who was mone other than Apoilonits of Tramat, the - tpposed sin of the grod Protens.) "interpreted and explained sotne beoks athl others he wrote." What honki were those he explatined, ath what were those he wote." They were umbunterlly books that his religions followers regatal as of divine athority, for lamian sitys, the "(hristians" spoke of himas a god and tork lim for a lawgever, amb honored him with the title of" Master." All this is historically true regarding Apollonius, provided always that the followers of Apollonius were Christians. That those who aceepted the teachings of Apollonius, after they were attributed by cheating priests to Jesus of Nazareth, were called Christians there can be no longer any doubt among well informed persons.

It is this narrative of Lucian concerning Peregrinus or Proteus that the spirit alludes to when he says "Marcion is the one from whom my description of St. Paul was taken though never known to me under that name." He also claims, which is undoubtedly true that all the scholars and writers of that day knew he referred to Apollonius, when he wrote of Peregrinus. The name Peregrinus being only a nickname applied to A pollonius, and Proteus being the name sometimes given him, tradition making him the son of the god Proteus. This is good evidence that Lucian did not try to conceal the fact that he was writing of A pollonius or he would have made his character different. The fact is Lucian ridiculed every thing in the shape of fraud and imposition that came in his way, accomplishing much by his raillery against superstition and false teaching. This has been taken advantage of by Christian writers who manipulated his manuscripts to suit their purposes and behold, he steps forth into the Christian Church as one of their greatest saints. This spirit who admits that he wrote to suit himself and who, even Dr. Lardner has to admit, had so many inaccuracies in his writings, is the one whom we are taught to revere as a Christian saint. He is the untruthful author of one of the four Christian gorjels. And I strongly surmise that Marcion's name, transmuted into that of St. Mark, was given to the third Christian Gospel, to disguise the fact that he was in reality the introducer of the Gospel of St. Luke. As Apollonius became the St. Paul of the Epistles, so Lucian, the Greek satirist, became St. Luke, and Marcion, the copier of Apollonius, the St. Mark of the New Testament. Thus, through spirit suggestion, we have been enabled to discover with considerable ceriainty who Luke, Mark and Paul were. That which no Christian has discovered or dared to disclose for the last seventeen hundred years.

Reader, I regret to be compelled to pass the commumications of Marcion and Lucian with so brief a notice. They are worthy of a special treatise. There is, however, so much pressing forward for recognition that I must move on.

CONSTANTINUS POGONATUS.

" God save the trutiu !-We have had redeemers enough. It is time to wake up to the fact that the true redeemer is a char conscience ; and it is in order togain that, that 1 ann here to-lay. I presided at a council of prominent men, holding the highest positions in the Christian Church in A. D. 650; and What was that council assembled for? Simply becanse mankind had begun to progress and had done so to such an extent that a chamge of base had become necessary in order to veil the truth. Written upon ancient tombs in Egypt, Phonicia, Greece and Rome, was the worship of the lamb, and it had becone necessary to change this symbol. We tinatly adopted, ather long debate, a religions symbol that we then thought wats the least known, and that was the figme of Prometheus dying on a cross instead of upon a rock, which we thought would disguise the origin of it. But the form represented was really that of Promethens-the head and face we adopted were those of Apollonins of Tyana. Aud from that time on, that symbol has been the badge of the Christian Chureh. The spirit who spoke first here this afternoon (Narcion) is the one through whose efforts I am here to-day. He made this ofler to me: " If you will return and tell all you know of Christian symbolism I will do the same in relation fo what I know of its origin and meaning.' We have done so beente we know what we have satid is the truth, and at most we could only delay these commaniations for a few years. My mane was Constantinus Pormatus."

There is mothing therein said about the substitution of the (rucitix for the lamb at the symbel of Christianity: bet we take the following concerning that matter from Ncelintock and 'trong's ('yclopadia of Eeclesiastical Literature:
" Among the many symboh which the carly Christians usal to repreacht ('hrist as the central ohject of their fiath, the lamb was the most perdominant. In the bergiming of the sixth century the lamb, hars a trimmphal eross: then it is

THE CRUCIFIED LAMB.

THE CRUCIFIED MAN.

The above engraving of the lamb nailed to the cross represents the Christian symbol prior to 680 A. D., though this fact is not generally known At the Sixth Ecumenical Council held at Constantinople in that year, it was ordained that in place of the lamb, the figure of a man should be portrayed on the cross. This has been known and recognized since that time as the Christian symbol. After the decree of the council in 68o A. I)., the representation and worship of the lamb on the cross was prohibited, and that of the man was substituted in its place. By these items of history, we learn how and at what period the story of the so-called crucifixion of Christ was formulated. (See communication of Constantinus Pogonatus, Page $\mathbf{1 6 0}$ ). The decrec of the council prohibiting the representation and worship of the lamb as the Christian symbol, as translated from the Latin, is as follows:
"In certain representations of the images of the saints, a lamb is portrayed, etc. We, therefore accepting the old forms and shadows as signs of the truth and as traditional symbols of the church, prefer (irace and Truth, which we accept as the fulfilment of the law. So, that which is perfect, let us place in pictures, even before the eycs of all, We have decreed that that Lamb, which taketh away the sins of the work, Christ our God, ought to be portrayed henceforth in human form in place of the Lamb." - In the Roma Sotteranea of Antonio Bosio Dell, concerning the image of Christ under the figure of a lamb.

lying on the altar at the foot of the cross; then it appears with blood flowing from a wound, in its side as well as from its feet ; and finally, by the end of this century, a lamb is painted in the center of the cross, where the body of Christ was later phaced. On the celebrated 'cross of the Vatican,' on which this lamb thus appears, are fwo busts of the Saviour ; one above holding a book in his left land, and giving a benediction in the Latin manner with his right, while the one below holds at seroll in the right hand, and a little cross in the left. The sixth Ecumenical Council ordered that Christ should be represented with his proper human body rather than under the symbol of the paschal lamb, and in the following century crucifises multiplied greatly throughout all Christendom. The way to this decision had evidently been prepared by several intermediate steps, by which the aversion and horror of death by the eross, though abolished as a mode of execution by Constantine, were gradually overcome in the minds of the Christian world."
We have in the foregoing communication beyond all question the real object for which the sixth Council of Constantinople was called together, which was nothing else than to get away as far as possible from the fact that for five hundred ycars, from the time Marcion took the epistles of Apollonius from Antioch to Rome, A. D. 130, down to the time that Constantinus Pogonatus convened the sixth Council of Constantinople, the object of Christian worship was a "lamb" and not a "crucified man." It was to conceal the heathen origin of the Christian religion and its purely astro-theological character that those high dignitaries of the Christian church convened at Constantinople; the result of their deliberation, after long debate, being the substitution of the dying figure of the heathen god Prometheus, extended on a cross, with the head and face of Apollonius of Tyana, to represent Jesus Christ, instead of the "bleeding lamb of Culvary." The fact had become known that upon the tombs of Egypt, Phenicia, Grece and Rome, was depicted the stme worship of the lamb, and to get rid of this positive proof that Christianity was but a plagiarism of older religions, the crucifix was adopted as the badge of the new religion. I give the commmication as it came to me. I do not feel warranted in questioning its anthentieity. It is beyond all doubt a spirit communication, and the reason assigned for giving it most reasonable. I infer the spirit intended to make a distinction between those prelates who represented large ('loristian constituencien, and those whose dioceses were small and of less importance.

EPAPHRODITUS.

A Greek Grammarian.

"I areet you, Sir:-I might as well state who I am, and what my name was when in the mortal form, in order that we maty understand each other more thoroughly. I am the man to whom Josephus wrote his two books in answer to Apion. My name was Epaphroditus. I was not, as history supposes, the freed man of Nero, nor was I Domitian's seeretary at Athens. My country was Idumrea. Josephus and myself corresponded a great deal. We both belonged to the Order of the Initiated-the Free Masons of the first century. We were mainly interested in investigating oceult sciences; and to prove to you that Josephus was not only interested, but a believer in Spiritualism, I will refer you to his account of Solomon, in which he sets forth that Solomon was initiated in the art of exorcising or driving out demons. Solomon received this gift fromspirits under the mistaken idea it was from God. You will also find in his description of solomon, that one Eleazer, a Jew, drove a demon out of the obsessed individual in Vespasian's camp, and the test was this: that the eup of water should be set a certain distance from the obsessed man, and the demon would upset it, as it passed out of the man. The only object I have in introducing these things, is to prove that Josephus was a Spiritualist, and that the Society of the Initiated was made up of investigators of what is termed mediumship to-day. I can also inform you why there is no reference to A pollonius in Josephns's writings. It was owing to the obligation assumed by those who entered into the investigation of these mysteries that they shond never manifest any conscious knowledge when they saw a brother of the order performing any of those miracles, as they were called, for fear they would be charged with conspiring; as the scepties then living would have done everything they could to ruin themin the same way they now seek to ruin medimms. Therefore, while they recognized and helped each other secretly, they never acknowledged each other openly. I know that Apollonius obtained, in India, the gospel of one Deva Bothisatoua. I want to say, also, that sll the writings among the leamed, that is, the translated writings, were written in those days in the Samaritan tongue, and it was not until the second century that there was any amount of those writings translated into the (ireek and Latin lamquges. In the time of Trajan, the ancient arts were somewhat revived. He being a student of astrology and philosophy himself, allowed a freer discussion of the merits of diflerent religions. In fact my age was the age of comparison, and we eompared notes, and the materials that were thus collected, served as a basis for mambacturing that great frand, Christianity: That is about all I ean say. I pased to spirit life at Smyrna, A. D. 110."

Refer to Smith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Biography for account of Epaphroditus.

The spirit of Epaphroditus tells us that Josephus and himself knew that the powers attributed toshomon were derived from spirits and not from God, as the ignorant, and even kolomon himself supposed. But the greatest revelation of all, is the fact that the Order of the Initiated, to which Josephas and himself belonged, was composed of persons who were engaged in the insestigation and practice of spiritaal mediumship and spirit commmion. It appeare that $\lambda$ pollonins of Tyana, was also a member of that secret order, and that it was well known by the members of that order, Josephns among the rest, that the miracles attributed to A pollomins were only the result of spirit power exerted throngh him. It has already been very platily shown hy these spirit testimonice, ats well as by the strongest corroborative proofs of historical farts, that Apollonius of Tyana, and st. Paul are one and the same pervon. Now as Epaphroditus and Apollonins wore follow mombers of the Order of the Initiated there can hardly be: a dombt that the latter addreses the fomer (Philipplians ii, ejo, in these words: "Yet I supposed it neersany to send to yon Epaphroditus, my brother, and companion in labor, and fillow soldier, hat your mesemger, and he that ministered to my wants ;" and again (lhilipp. iv., 1s.) "But 1 hase all aml abound: 1 :an full, having reecised of Epaphorditus fle things which wereson from yom, ath odor of sweet :medt, as sorifice ac"eptable, well pleasing to (iexl." Whether the Epaphroulitus thus spoken of by Spellomins or l'ani, was the friend and fellow -thdent of Josphas, or some of her Epaphroditus we masy not certainly know ; but this muth is certain, Apollonitus, Josephns amd Epaphowlitus were leyond doubt contemporarics fellow Order of mysteries, out of which-shbsergently developed the Christian hierarchy a scourge to the human race, the effects of which will not be wholly obliterated for centuries to come. It is such spirit testimony as that of Epaphroditus that settles the authenticity and truthfulness of these communications.

[There were several reasons why Josephus did not mention Apollonius in his historical works besides the fact that they both belonged to the Order of the Initiated, as referred to by Fimphroditus and other spirits. A pollonits in his communication gave it as his opinion, that Josephus failed to refer to him in his history on accomnt of the intense prejudice existing between the Jews and the Gentiies. Josephas, as is well known was a Jew of the strictest type, and historian of his country, while Apollonius was a Gentile of even greater distinction as a leading character of his time. In this, history fully concurs, hence it is reasonable to conclude that Josephus could not well have given such an historical account as would have done justice to A pollonius, without speaking of the great Gentile and sage, so favorably as to offend the Jewish people, it being against their policy to favor the Gentiles in word or deed. Furthernore, Josephus was jealous of A pollonius, for the reason that Eleazer, his friend, who was also a Jew, (as well as a medium for casting out obsessing spirits) could not manifest superior, or even equal power to Apollonius in his wonderful manifestations, (or as they were called in ancient days miracles) and by this means becone the oracle of Vespasian in place of Apollonits the Gentile. Notwithstanding both these great minds were members of the same order, their oaths evidently did not bind them as to their religious or political views, hence this fact may point to the reason why they could be closely allied in the order and yet powerful opponents on religions grounds. In conclusion will add, that in view of all these eonsiderations, we have what is deemed, good and natural reasons, why Josephus did not record in history any account of Apollonins. It also appears from all reasonable deductions drawn from these ancient spirit communications, as well as from history hearing upon the snbject under consideration, that Apollonius of Tyana was the character which formed the basis and framework upon which the history of Jesus of Nazareth was constructed. Notwithstanding it is claimed that Josephens referred to Jesus of Nazareth in his history, he emphatically denies the allegation in his spirit testimony and states that it was interpolated by Christian writers, and made to appear as evidence that such an individual lived and tanght at that time. Even eritical Christian scholars are compelled to admit the reasonablenes of this statement as to the interpolation. Therefore we also, must conclude that it is montrue that Josephus alluded to Jesus of Nazareth, from the simple fact that such an individual did not exist at that time as represented by Christian writers-C'OMADLER.]

Abstract

"I salite you, sir :-My communication here to-day, will be a continuation of what the previous spirit set forth. I was a soldier under Tiberius. I was also a historian, and during my campaigns wrote most of the notes, from which I constructed the history of Rome and Greece, after my time as a soldier had expired. In my travels from A. D. 25 to 36 , I closely observed the forms and ceremonies of the religions in each country I visited, and also took great delight in examining the ruins of antiquity; and I found upon those ancient temples and tombs exactly what I found at Rome, the religion of the Sun. Upon the oldest ruius in Phonicia and in the Palmyrean desert ; also in Sicily, Egypt, the Isle of Cyprus, and Greece; and throughout the then civilized world, all religions could be unlocked by one key, and that consisted of the signs of the zodiac. He who understood how to use this key rightly could confond all the priests who were then living. This was the leading idea of them all; but, of course, as each one of these signs had some particular symbol to represent it ; so each one of them had their followers or worshippers. In Egypt I found principally two signs which seemed to be the leading ones-they were what are called Taurus and Sagittarius-the Bull and the Archer; in Greece, the Ram or Lamb and The Fishes secmed to be the leading signs; in Rome the sign of the Lion for which was substituted the Eagle, and Aquarius or the man potring water. All these signs were to be found upon the tombs and temples of my day. There were also a great many representations of the Goddess with the wheat (by some called (orn). These I found in all comntries. Soldiers were all tyrants. There was a great appearance among them of worship of the gorls, but in reality there were very few who believed them. A god was only of aceonnt as long the prospered their affairs. When he failed to acomplish anything useful for them, they did as the C'hinese of your times do, burned him or knowed off his hear. I knew Apollonims of Tyana. I knew aleo his disciphe one bathis. I saw them at Alexamdria. They there tanght in the different temples, but I was so busy as a soldier, that I had not much time to listen to philosophy. This was about A. D. 36 . Tiberius dying the next year, $: 37$, I returned to Rome and there compteded $m y$ history, of which only tragments have been allowed to come down to yon moderns; and the reason of this suppresion of what I wrote was, that in it was a full description of the workings, of mirates by Apollonius, and the Christians could not atherd to let this be known. It would hase ruined their seheme. It also contained a complete deseription of the doetrines and teachings of the Essenes, who had three colonies at that time, one at Antioch, one in fimaria, and ond in the lsle of Cyprus. I have now stated all I ean that will be of mueh benefit. I will have to spell my name, Velleils l'aterenlus."

Refer to Smith's Dietionary of Greek and Romam Biography for accomet of Paterculus.

Against the imputation of his lack of fidelity as a historian, in the history which eomes down to us, the spirit of Patereulus returns to confound his traducers by stating that it was not until after the death of Tiberius, in A. 1). 37, that he left his military ocenpation in Egypt, and went back to Rone to write the history whid mainly gave him his historical fame. That history, he tefls us, contained a full recital of the miraches performed by Apollonins of Tyana, and a complete exposition of the dogmas and teachings of the Exsenes; and that these portions of his work, the most impertant and valuable to pestterity, were dest royed by the (hristians to save their monst rons sheme of deeoption. I do not lasitate to declare my convidet ion that this commmaication is anthentic and trate in cerer particular. ## GREGORY.

Bishop of Neo-Cæsarea.

"I Greet you, SIR :-I was a collector of manuscripts, and besides, a bishop of the Christian Church. But I was by no means a destroyer of such manuscripts. I did however interpolate them. My whole collection of manuscripts fell into the hands of Eusebius who destroyed all of them that he could not use. These manuscripts made clear the fact that Apollonins, the Cappadocian, was the true Saviour, and was even worshipped in the temple of A pollo. The statue of that god was worshipped as if erected to Apollonius. As I was a resident of the same place as Eusebius, I know that what I have herein stated is the truth. I was known when here as Gregory, bishop of Neo-Cessarea, about A. D. 266. I feel that this communication should be some compensation for the injustice I have done to mortals. One of the two most important manuseripts destroyed by Eusebius, was "The History of the Initiated," the other was "The Syutagma."

Refer to Biographic Generale, for account of Gregory, Bishop of Noo-('esarea.

It was the spirit of this Christian mystic that returned and contessed to the destruction of the manuscripts that would have proven the fraudulent mature of the Christian religion. Nothing is said of the collection of manuscripts made by Gregory, or that they afterwards fell into the hands of Eusebius, Bishop of ('esarea. That such was the fact, I have not a doubt, and that the most important and valuable of them were deatroyed loy that greatest of Christian writere, seems equally certain. Where would ('hriatianity be theldy, eould "The LIistory of the Initiated," have heen naved from his intermal duphecty?

UMMIDIUS QUADRATUS. Governor of Syria.

"I AM HERE TO-DAY IN THE INTEREST OF TRUTH:- My name when here was Ummidius (Qutdratus, sometimes called

But this wats not the ease. The coplese in those languages were an after orearrence, and took pate betwern the second and third centuries. All the Jewish writings that were extant in my diy, from A. D. 50 to (it), were written in the Samaritan tongue. 'They were the production of Iudian philosophers and medinms, and were titst bronght tomy notice by a king natmed Agrippe, who satid he reecived the eopies of then from a follower of Apollonins. These eopies were nothing more than ath aceount of somberod who was born of a virgin, which event took place some nine hmmbed vars before my time, in India. A froml datal of this wat H:Atural, lotit muth of it Was fored thromgh the use of druss, somefhing similar to the moslern ('hinese opitm smokers. The most remtarkable rate of ateal spirit materialization witnessed by me, took plare at Abtioch, where aman who refused togive his namm, hat whose name I have fommd out af a pirit wat the satme as my own, to the room where this manifestation took place. There was no one present except King Agrippa and myself, and the building was surromeded by Roman soldiers. This I was satisfied was an actual demonstration of what 1 temed the manes of my ancestors. But as a spirit, I know that it was nothing more than the manifestations you have in your seances of today. The Jews were a very sensitive people-exceedingly nervons and irritable-ever ready to fight, the moment they thought that their religion was assailed. They were mad, fanatical bigots, and it was in vain to reason with them; so we were compelled, in order to keep them quiet, to kill a few of them at every festival, to compel their respect. After reading those writings or copies of the teachings of Apollonius of Tyana, I went to Jerusalen, about the time when the Jews had their feast of unleavened bread, and from the light thrown upon that ceremony by the teachings of Apollonius-by the teachings of the Rabbis of Jerusalem-and the teachings of their sacred books; I found that the feast of unleavened bread was nothing more than a revival of the feast in honor of the goddess Ceres, as practiced in the Eletsinian mysteries, and as taking place in the Honse of Corn, or in the season of harvest. And I found also, that the old Testament which the Jews clamed was the foundation of all the others, was in reality nothing more or less than a copy of the Greek and Egyptian religions. These religions were all of the astrological order ; and in the Jewish temple all the signs that were known to astrologers, were engraved or cut upon its doors or walls. For my part I could see no difference between the priests of Jehovah and the priests of Apollo-the one class was simply a copy of the other. In relation to the unleavened bread, the Jews clamed that they ate it in commemoration of a hasty departure-in some event which caused their ancestors to leave a country in so great a hmrry, that they had not time to supply themselves with leavened bread ; but I think the real reason for the observance was to prevent, at that season of the year, incurring the taint of leprosy, and that it was a blood purifying ceremony. This idea has crept into the Roman Catholic chureh, and they have their consecrated wafers instead. [This explanation was given in reply to my question, why the bread used by the Jews at that festival was unleavened?] But to return. I was allowed to examine into matters of religion while sitting as a judge, and to learn seerets that none others were allowed to know, exeept the hioh orders of priests. In that way I foum a religion something similar to what is known as (hristianty, among the Fsemes or Commanists. I know of no modern people more like the Exomes than the shakers. They hat their own god, after the idea of the Indians, and that was that a god always dwelt in the flesh, and he was known to them ly certain marks口иon his persom, said to have been born upon him. But they had also amother ged, in the persen of a woman who presided over the female portion of the Essents; and I remember, since I tome to compare them, (that is since I became a spirit) with the Christian teachings, that one of their teachers inculeated something that was almost word for word like the "Sermon on the Mount." That the latter is taken from the Essenes, I ats a spirit now testify. Of this I am just as sure as I am of happiness. I might communicate a great deal more, but it is necessary for me to give way in order that others may speak."

Few eommunications have preceded this one that possessed greater interest and importance than this. It is strange so little is known of the man whose spirit gives that communication ; and yot not strange when it is remembered that he knew and understood the great secret of the origin of the Jewish religion. We refer to smith's Dietionary of (Greek and Roman Biography for aceount of (2uadratus.

The greatest amd most significant point of this umbsually intelligent communication is the testimony of (Quadratus, that by reason of his julical position in Syria, he hat been enableal to become aequainted with the most caretully eoncealed seerets of the E-senes, who were especially numerons in that conatry when he governed it. He tells the these Escenes hat not only dess) as well ; and that he knows that the "Sermon on the Mosme" is almost word for worl at eoper of the teachinge of one testimony is most rmphatic. ('an we read that commmatation of (Quadratus in conneetion with the historical reforence we have given athl wot conte to the eomelasion that the Jewish feasts of the Pasomer, Pentarost and Tabermader, were hut enpin of the ohler religions observances of the larsese, Eigyp tians:and Ithdos:' Thas another historical truth is bronght to the light, deppite the care that has then taken to conceal it, and that is that the dewish religion is hat wer lithe obler than the C'hristiath ofli-pring. Thus mystery after mystery is patime away hefore the all rompering light of the world of epirits.

Abstract

" I salute you, sir :-There may be many communications attributed to me, but nevertheless there has been a great deal in my name, that I have had nothing to do with. I have other work than coming here to mortals to deliver an eulogy over fallen greatness; and I should not have come here had I not an important object in view. That object is, to speak, as far as I am concerned, in relation to a passage in my works that the Christians wish to make out, refers to the Nazarene. Who were the Nazarites from whom the title of Jesus, the Nazarene, was derived? They were the people who were afterward called the Essenian Brotherhood. That sect originated at a place called Nazarita, a small village near Gaza. It was looked upon as the most contemptible place in all Judea or Syria. This seet shaved their heads-wore a kind of loose garment girdled at the waist and made no distinction as to their teachers. I also, at three different times in my life, saw spirit manifestations occur through that great medium Apollonius of Tyana. [ saw him in the camp of Vespasian, where he was known as the oracle. A Jew named Eleazer was a medium and attempted to show what the spirits could do through him in the presence of Vespasian. He wanted to supplant Apollonius in the confidence of that emperor. A witness of this attempt was one Flavins Josephus. The countryman of the lafter was defeated. He could get no manifestations in the presence of Apollonits. The manifestations occurred through Apollonius without hindrance. This is one reason why Josephus makes no mention of Apollonitns or his work. Jealousy and diseomfiture rendered Josephus silent ats to him. I lived from A. D. 52 to the begimning of the seeond century. During most of that time I knew almost everything that was taking place, and especially in Jublem, hecanse of the wars that were going on there. But I never heard of the Christian desms mor of Christanity. I did, however, hear of the Nazarite sect, who changed their name about A. D. 66 to that of the Essenian Brotherhood. My name was C. Cornelius Tacitus."

Refer to American Cyclopedia for account of Tacitus. For aceount of Nazareth refer to MeClintock and Strong's Cyelopeedia of Ecelesiastical Literature and for the term Nazarites refer to Chambers' Cyclopiedia.

This spirit gives a very different version of the performance of the Jewish medium, Eleazer, or rather of the spirits who attended him, before Vespasian in his camp, from that which Josephas gives, (Antiquities of the Jews, Book viii, chap. &, Section 5.) It appears there was a rivalry between this Eleazer and Apollonius, as to which should be the oracle of Vespasian, and that there was a trial of mediumistie results through them, respectively, to determine that point. That Josephas and Tacitus were present at that trial there is every reason to believe; and that Apollonins was trimmphant is equally certain, for he remained the ehosen friend and adviser of Vespasian until his death. There cannot be a doubt that among the testroyed historical writings of Tacitus, there was an aceount of that remarkable contest of spirit forces; and because of its destruction the spirit referred to it. It fully explains why Josephus, who was with Vespasian, at the same time that Apollonius was his attendant oracle, has never mentioned the latter and his wonderful medimnistic work and prophecies. I regard this commmacation from the spirit of Taciths of the highest signifieance and value, in unravelling the tangled web of so-called sacred history.

MANETHO.  An Egyptian Priest.

"Let us believe in that light whieh lighteth every man that cometh into the world. Centuries have come and gone since I became a spirit. My spirit knowledge may be sunnmed up in a few brief sentences, among which the principal are, that Wisdom is the guide of Experience, and, by analogy, Experience is the father of truth. During my mortal life I was a priest of Heliopolis. That temple was built in the service of Osiris-the God of the Sun. Our religion was represented by the Zodiac, and was altogether of an astrological origin. This was known only to the initiated-the outsiders receiving the cmblems as the real facts-to impress upon their minds the obligations of our religion. All the people were itolators, because they knew no better. It has often been asked, both by the learned and the unlearned, "If a man die, shall he live again?" I wish to say this: there is a desire that is universal in the breast of every living ereature, and that is the desire for life. The desire must and will be satisfied. Out of every living creature there grows a life that is spiritualized-that never dies. What you moterns temm materialization, was understood by us ancients to mean mothing more than this: that the medium contained within himself, or herself, that element whieh admitted of the veil, that eoneeals the spirit body from your sight, to be drawn aside. You all have a spirit body, as the development of the material body, which, under favorable eireumstances, become visible to nortals. The Osiris of the Eryptians acted in the same capacity of intercessor between mortals and God, that the Jesus Christ of to-day does. God-the I AM of the Egyptians-was not aceessible to mortal pravers or eries-as in Christian teachings ; therefore a physieal spirit-one that lived on this plane, acted as a pleader for them. All this was the preparation-the sehooling-that chabled after generations to establish C'hristianity. And here $I$ wish to remark, that during my long sojourn in spirit life, I have never met an enlightened spirit that elamed any preminence over his or her feltows ; for the common result in spirit life is, that the more learned, the more comprehensive your views, the more you become clothed with the mantle of humility. There are none great in the kingdom of heawen-all desiring to learn that they may teach. In my ( Greek history, the greater part of which is now extant, I haid bare the foolishmess of priests, and the ararice of kings. It was a struggle between these, as to which should be the most atmired by the ignorant. Life, although progresive, retains the same principhe in almost every age and generation. There is no (iod, and no sawiomr, other than your highest conception of wisdom ; and with this remark I will close, by thanking yon for this hearing. My name was Manetho,--before the socalled Christian era, two handred and sixty-one years."

Refer to Nouvelle Biographie (ienerale for aceount of Manetho.
The spirit of this learned Egyptian priest, comes and contirm the testimony of so many other ancient spirits, that the common oljest of Worship by the votaries of Osiris, and other ancient deities, was the sun, the great central orb of our planetary system, and the great governing power of all that appertains to the welfare of the haman race on our globe. This sun personified with hmman attributes, has been the revered saviour of men in all ages and among all mations. He tefls us that the spiritual nature and destiny of mankind was as well understood by the learned men of his time as it is today. The crime of these learned men was that they had not the honesty to impart that knowledge to the people. The same criminal poliey is athered to by the Roman (atholice pricethood, whostop at mothing to still conceal this mot important of all knowladge, in order to prolong their umholy domination over their fellow hang-. Manctho, returning ats a spirit, tells us that the mythical falsehomets and flmmories of the Egsptian pristhood prepared the way for the subsequent cotablishment of the mythical falselogets and flmmeries that constitute the essential feathres of the Christian religion. Better, far better, wonld it have heen for comethes mmbere of hmman somb, if mo surh prequation had ever been mate by Figytian or other priesthosiz. Aanctho does well, wern at this late day, to return and make known the falsemest of his (arthly teachings. How far he attempted to bay hare the foolishases of prieste, as he elatios to hase done, we are not permitter to know; bat trust, for the peate of his spirit, that he dide all that was then presible. In the face of the undoubted spirit testimony of :o many learmed and intlumtial departed ones, bow can the religione errors, dexptions and frauds of to-day endure? They cannot. The resistless rays of spirit light are forcing their way into the darkest and most despairing recesses of the human breast, there to kindle the latent embers of divine truth, that have been so long smothered beneath the ashes of the dead past; and they will ere long burst into a flame that will consume those who, in their blind folly, may persist in their work of smothering the blazing light from the spirit world.

Abstract

"I GREET you, SIr :-In my day there was no man living who had access to all kinds of information as I had myself, and none who wrote more than I did; and yet, there is so little of it extant to-day. I say this in no spirit of egotism, but state it as a fact. My works were on all subjects-most of them historical-and they have been destroyed because of that great curse of mortals-too much religion. It is impossible, it seems to me, to be religious without being bigoted. My book, "The Key to Ancient Keligions," showed that religion has been the governing power in all civilized nations, and the hasis of all religions has heen Sm worship. So well was this understood by a man, whose spirit was forced here to communicate that he destroyed my works to conceal that fact. That spirit was Constantine the Great. All of the most celebrated literature of the ancients has been destroyed by the Christian Hierarchy, and this was done from the third to the fourteenth century. They could not afford to allow this adverse evidence to exist. It would have been fatal, as soon as the art of printing eame in use. I travelled in almost every civilized country, and found, everywhere established, the religion of the Sum. All the gods that were worshipped were nothing more to the initiated than typical personations of the Kun, and all were the cration of men. In order to hold the masses of the people, they were compelled to lave something tangible to wor:hip. They, therefore, embodied their ideas in all shapes -gods with all kinds of headz, animals, etc. But to the initiated, everything was understood as referring to the Sun and Stars. Any thorough investigator of Christianity will find the sim idea therein. During my mortal life I wrote at least four hundred and tifty serolls, or books, of which only two are now extant. Yon can judge of the extent of the vamdalism of Clhristians, by this wholesale destruction of my books. My name was Varro. I lived B. (. 2s."

Refer to Chambers' Cyelopedia for aceount of Varro.
The spirit of the "most learned of all the Romans," hats returned, and through a medium who never so much as heard his name, gave that ecrtainly authentic and most intelligent communication. He tells us that most of his works were on historical subjects. What has become of these, that no mention whatever is made of them? His "Book of Antiquities" was only one of a nmmber of books of the greatest historical and ethmological importance. Varro, as a returning spirit, tells us that they were destroyed becanse of religious Christian higotry. Oh, what a loss was that! when the "Kry to Ancient Religions" wat given to the flames by that impions impurial villain, Constantine the Great! Who whld have known better than Varro, the librarian chomen by (a-atr, tac trone nature of all the ancient religions? They were in every instance, says Vares, nothing more than the workip of the kim, and well underitood to be so by those initiated in the seeret mysteries of every form of religion. Thare is especial significance in the reference to the foreed presence of Constantine, which was shown in the communication from him already given.

IGNATIUS.

Patriarch of the Essenes.

Abstract

"LET US WORK IN THE INTEREST OF TRUTH:-I lived about A. D. 75. I ann set down in history as the Patriarch or Bishop of Antioch, but I held no such position. I was what would be termed in modern times patriarch or leader of the Order of Essenes, who were what you moderns designate Communists. Oar ideas were given to us through a medium whose name was Bela, about one hundred years before the time I have named. Almost all the ideas that are embodied in the book called the Christian Testanient were taught at Antioch, but not in their present form. The highest and purest man amongst us, who was endowed with spiritual gifts, wat looked upon as a godthat is, as if the divine emanations were collected in a hmman form. Among us Essenes such a man was all powerful. I know of no instance now on earth exactly like such a person ; but there is one who approximates nearly to it, and he is the Grand Lama of Tibet. So pure was this man regarded to be, that none were allowed to cone into his presence, except his own chosen followers. Now, although I was a patriarch of this society, I did not come near to what they called this perfect man. We had four names for him, but I ean only give two, which were simple and equivalent to Alpha the begiming, and Onega the end. The others were names that I cannot force through this organism. Our sacred books were made up of events from the time of Bela to the time of the sixth perfeet man who was then ruling. They contained extracts from the best moral precepts that we could find in the sacred books of all nations. I have no doubt, since I have seen and conversed with Apollonius, who came to Antioch to learn our system, that he blended the contents of a copy of our sacred writings, which our people gave him as a mark of the highest honor, with the sacred books that came into his possession in India. My name when here was Ignatius of Antioch."

Refer to the Nouvelle Biographie Generale for account of Ignatius.

In the communication of Ignatius we have the fullest confirmation of the truth of the commmaication which we have heretofore published from the spirit of Pliny the Younger, in reiation to his letter to the emperor Trajan regarding the Communists or Essenes of Bythinia. Our readers will remember that in his commmoneation, the spirit of Pliny said, that in the year A. D. 100 there was no religious seet known in Bythinia as ('hristians. It is equally eertain that there were no such religionists at Antioch at that time, who were called or known as Christians or worshippers of Jesals Christ. This issettled beyond all question by the fact that the fyriae version of the elpistles attributed to Ignatius of Antioch, contaned nothing that would strengthen the elerieal or episeopal power of the Christian hierarehy, or that would maintain the divinity of Jesus Christ. That such passages were interpolated to effeet those purposes, three hundred years; after the death of Ignatins, shows the utter groundlessess of the Christian pretence that there wats any such religion as Christianity or any such church as a Christian chureh prior to the second century. It is, however, an undoubted faet that the Essenes, a eommmonistic sect of religionists, were thoroughly established in the A siatic provinces of the Lomion Empire at that time, the patriarchal seat of which was tocated at Antioch. Ignatins was therefore an Esenian, and not a Christian prelate. It would secm that Ignatins was himself at the head of the Fisimen at the very time when Apollenins mate his thital and lat vixit to Antiorh. ## TITUS LIVIUS.

A Roman Historian.

"Let us unite in the hastening of the downfall of Superstition. I doubt if any person ever had a better opportunity than myself, for ascertaining whether there was any truth in Christiallity, being contemporary with the alleged Jesus Christ, and intimately acquainted with Pontius Pilate. I have never been able to discover, either as a spirit or mortal, any positive, or, I may say, any negative evidence of the existence of Jesus of Nazareth. I am certainly one of those spirits that Christians may call a devil, because I violate the precepts of their sacred books (manufactured by priests), and deny that Jesus Christ was ever in the flesh. My reason for this denial must be given. First, no learned Jew-and I have conversed with many such, that I have net, knew aught of his existence. I have also seen and conversed with many of the governors of Syria, and with those of them who then ruled syria, none of whom knew tught of this person, nor of any other person that seemed to approximate to the descriptions of him. But after my decease, there was a man who fulfilled all that has been elaimed for Jesus, and that man was Apollonius. All Rome and Judea were in excitement, at that time, over the conquests of Augustus Cesar in Egypt : and many Egyptians were brought to IRome, and taught their doctrines there; and these were of an astrological character. They taught that ditlerent stars represented the birth, life, death, and resurrection of a person of the remote past, known by many ditferent names. This legend was first promulgated or taught to his students by a Hindoo philosopher called Ma-Ming; and the Christian legend took its rise some where in the vicinity of the Nepaul mountains, and was afterward transferred to Singapore, whence it was carried to Anticeh by Apollonias, where he was met by a seet calling themselves Nazarites, known after my death as the Essenian Brotherhood. Any one reading the life of Jesus Christ, can at once see that he was a communist. This sect was seattered all over the different parts of Syria, extending into Plœuicia and the Isle of Cyprus. In their teaehings there was this resembhanee to Jesus. There was a perfect man among them, to whom all confescel, who was neverseen, and by these confessions this nan becane:a great reader of human character, as are the ('atholic priests of to-day. These, by taking adratatage of the dillerent emotions that anmate the human breast, pased the way amongst other generations for that curse of humanity-a pope. The books I wrote, when here in mortal form, have been tampered with; first by Euschius, afterward hy Innocent fll. ; and ahmost utterly destroyed after tho Council of Baste. Otherwise there would have been no mistake by moterns in regard to the origin of Christianity. I was known, when here, as 'Titus livius, A. D. 17."

Refir to Ameriean ('yclopedia for account of Livius.
The wholesale destruction of the historieal writings of Livius shows very clearly that the Christian chureh could not afford to have it known that Livius had made no mention of those historical fietions, that nearly two hundred years after his death, were woven into the religious legend concocted hy Christian ecelesiasties. And furthermore they could not allord to have it known that Livits had recorded the fact that the Egyptian captives hrought to Rome by Augustus Casar, thirty years before the alleged birth of the Christian Jesus, ham taught in that city that the diflerent constellations of the stary heavens represented the birth, lif", death and resurrection of a person in the far past, known by many mames. It was to conceal the fact that Jesus Christ was but a new materialization, or incarnation of this "person of the remote past" whose hirth, life, death and resurrection, was only to be read correctly, by the passage of the sun, in its amual eourse through the constellations of the Zodiate; having his birth in the sign of the (ioat, the Angean stable of the (ireeks; his batpism in Aquat rius, the John the baptist in the heavens; his trimmph when he beemes the Lamb of (iod in Aries; his greatest exaltation onst. the Christian priesthood, it is hardly likely that he should have failed to find them ; and that he did not do what he meant to do, destroy them utterly. Those that were allowed to remain were not calculated to expose the fraudulent nature of Christianity, and hence were allowed to escape destruction. It is such spirit testimony as that of Livius, that must, in the end, bring retributive justice upon those who have committed such wrongs against humanity, as the destruction of the ancient literature of the world, to conceal their vile deceptions. We tell you, priests, prelates and pontiff's the end draweth near.

Q. VERANIUS.

Governor of Britain.

Abstract

"I greet you:-I acted as governor of Britain, under Nero, in A. D. 60. I found in Britain the same principle that governed almost all nations of antiquity-that is, they had a God who acted as a Saviour. The antagonists of this system were what are termed Druids. There seemed to be a continual warfare between that order of priests and the Britons. These Britons had a god, who was nuch older than he is set down in history, called Odin. This Odin, it is claimed by moderns, was brought to Britain, two or three centuries later than he was, by the Norwegians. But that is simply a trick of priests, to throw inquirers off the scent. It came about in this way; Odin, in his teachings, characteristics, and forms of worship, was identical with the God of the first Christians; and this is admitted by all really learned commentators; but as they have heen principally Christians, this fact has been concealed. Friga, a woman, in the teachings of Britain, instead of being the wife of Odin, was a virgin mother; showing that the idea was established among barbarous peoples, of being saved by a man born of a virgin. All this I studied, and compared their teachings with those of the Roman priests of the temple of Apollo, and I found that those harbarians had established a religions system identical with that known amongst the Greeks, and Romans. Although a military man, I am not here to-day to saty anything about the confuests of that time, but tell you what I know of Christianity. I was governor of Britain fron 5is to (60. They (the Britons) elamed that their god lived wor years before that time. My mane wats Veranius."

Refer to smith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Biography for aceonnt of Veramius.

I regard that communication not only as perfectly anthentie, hut as stating the truth in relation to the fact that the fundamental religions doctrines of Christianity were thoronghly established among the Britons for hundreds of years before they were promulgated as divine truth by the Christian priesthood. That the Drnid priests were hostile to the open and meoncealed doctrines of the priesthood of the ancient Britons, was owing to the fact that it wats a fundamental principle with them to eonceal everything that was tanght as religion ; and like their Christian suceresters, to render ewerything of a religious nature as mysterious as possible. Nothing was more natural than that Veranius who had been invested with priestly dignities by the Roman Pontifex Maximus, should have studied and observed the andagies between his own religion and that of the people, over whom he was apmeinted to govern. We guestion whether it is generally known that there was a more amient system of religion than that of the Druids established in Britain, and whieh the priests of the latter religion were doing all they could to supprese, when the Romans invadded and conquered britain. It wats but retributive justice that Druidisut had, in its turn, to suectumb to the higotry of Christian priesteratt. One step further in the diecetion of retributive justice will be taken, when (hristian priesteraft shall in its turn go down with the withering and comsmming light of Madern fpiritualistu, which is to dose the eaterer of primithod on the earth.

PORPHYRY.

A So-called Heathen Philosopher.

"Good Day :-Many persons may question the conduct or language of spirits who are trying to uproot Christianity. These persons may say: "These spirits deprive me of my Lord-what have 1 left :"' Oh! foolish mortals ; to rely so implicitly on that which never existed. We spirits are constantly bringing forward more and more proof that Christianity has no basis in truth. It is nothing more than the mistletoe on the oak of ancient religions. The first question to be answered is ; did Jesus Christ, so-called, ever have a personal existence? To this I answer he had not. I come to set forth such facts as I know to be absolutely correct, that will conclusively justify that answer. None of the early Christian Fathers were Cliristians. Any person who will attentively read their works will see that they did not know whether Jesus ever lived or not, and this was the case immediately after hils alleged death. Those early Christian fathers never thought of establishing such a gigantic system of frand as is practiced by the Christian priesthood today. In all the earliest books and manuseripts of the so-ealled Christian era, there was no mention of this Jesus, except as a kind of sun-god. Out of astronomy or astrology, the gods of all religions have arisen, one after another. These Christian fathers wherever they could alter those manuseripts, during the first one hundred and fifty years of their era, didso; and they then began to shape their religion as you now find it. To do this they made use of all classes of writers, by them called heathen and paran, to plant their religious fraud upon the earth. All this will be brought to light by thoroughly informed spirits. We are now forming a band in spirit life that will bring forth such proofs as will convince the world, or point out the sources from which those proofs may be obtained. There is not a priest in Rome or elsewhere that is fully initiated in the secrets of his clureh, who does not know that Christianity is a fraud; for in the Library of the Vatican, at Rome, is the evidence that mak's that point certain. The eecle-iastical custodians of that evidence, will have to prodnce the documents that contain that evidence. It Rome are most of the writings of the first three centuries of the 'hristian era, embracing the works of all of us, su-called, pay:in weiters. These have been mutilated but not destroyed. Why have they not been destroyed? Simply because there is a power in the spirit wordd, that popes and eardinals fear. They know that spirit communion is all there is to religion, and they heed the warnings of materialized spirits who come to them. The priesthood know that the people have berome too intelligent to be any longer blinded, by rites and ceremonies, to the simple fact of spirit eommunions. There are writings of Seutonius-there are writings of the emperor Trajan -in the possession of the lapal chureh, that would settle forever the question as to the personal existence of Jesus. It has also the possession of letters of mine, in which they have altered the word Gnosticism into Catholicism, and on the strength of that have clamed me as a ('hristian. At the time 1 lived there was nothing but contention and strife; but there was not one-half as much contention about Josus, as there was about who should attain ecelesiastieal precedence in the new religion. All this was the onteome of each individual philosophizing and theorizing for himself, and giving these thoughts different forms. In fact it was at a later day than that in which I lived on carth, hat Christanity fully setted down in its present shape. This voice of mine is a spirit voice that priests do mightily fear. I am not done with them yet. But there is a shape in which I desire to get my communieation that will compel these men to hear me. They will be made to hear me. Whenatman's eitizenship is ehatlenged, then it behooves him to prove his eitizenship, so I ehallenge these priests. I have spoken longer than I intentid. I was known when here as Porphyry."

Refer to MeClintozk & Strong's Bibheal, Theological and Ecelesiastical (velopmedia.

We deeply regret that space will not allow of giving the particulars of his philosophieal doctrines, as these show most elearly and eonclusively that Porphyry, one of the ablest and most learned men that ever lived, was a spiritual medium, and tanght the grand truths now being brought to the kuowledge of mankind, through humble and uneultivated mediuns, sixteen hundred years after those truthes were rejeeted and trampled muder foont ly the ('liristian priesthood.

Wie have never received or known of a spirit pommunieation which seemed to the to be more impertant than this communiration from the spirit of the great Eedeetie and Ner-Platonie

MARCANTONIO DE DOMINIS.

A Heresiarch and Apostate.

"Good day:-None can throw as much light on Christianity as the Catholies. Christianity is a Catholic institution, and not a Protestant one ; and yet, all the paraphemalia of both are the same, except that Protestants have somewhat modified them. During my mortal life I was a Catholic prelate, and held the title of archbishop. I was a man of science, and never allowed my religion to interfere with my reason. I knew the identity between Christianity and Paganism, and that the former was only a copy of the latter. In faet, in the Library of the Vatican at Rome were all the documents necessary to prove that the old Roman gods, rechiselled by the sculptors, are the apostles of the Christian religion; that the Christians robbed the Pagan temples of all these old myths, in the shape of sculptured forms and basoo-relievos; and that all the rites and ceremonies and vestments are copied from the observances of the priests of Apollo. The mitre had, originally, twelve points, representing the twelve sigus of the Zodiae; but as Catholicism increased, it was necessary to conceal this fact in such a way that the astrological significance of it would not be too apparent to the public eyc. If there is a "Prince of Lies," spiritually speaking, his home is in the Catholic Chureh. Some persons may think I am hard upon them, but I do not fecl so. It cost me one hundred and fifty years of misery, as a spirit, to get rid of a lingering desire, developed in me in mortal life, that held me to that myth of centuries-Jesus of Nazareth ; and I speak plainly here to-day, because I wish my mortal brethren to steer clear of any faith or hope in any redemption but their own strength of character, their own love of truth, and to discard all worship of any book, except the book of uature. Be natural in everything, and you will ohtain not only happiness and bliss, but you will be enabled to help others to that point where we shall all he united in the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. I was located, in lien), at Ravoy in the Strand, Lomdon. My Itatian mame Kefer to Nouvelle Biographie (iencrate for aceount of Mareantonio de Dominis.

Was Antonio de Dominis, Arebhishop of Epalatro. In England I was ratled Mareantonio de Dominis."

'The foregoing commonieation is beyond any reasonable question, both genuine and atuhentic. This man was fully connpetent to know just what he testiftes to as a spirit. That he Was a man of mansually keen perceptions, is manifested by his diseovery of the catnses of the rainbow, which destroyed forever that pretty fable about that covenant between (iod and man. It will be seen that for twenty years he was a member and honored and trusted agent of the fociety of Jesus, and was undoubtedly fully informed of the facts to which be testifies in relation to the robbing of the I'agan temples of their mythical ohjects of vencration, and that all the appliances and paraphernalia of the Roman ('atholic priesthood were eopied from the priests of $A$ pollo. Well might this well informed ('atholie spirit locate the Prince of Lies in the C'atholic Chureh. Notwithstanding he understoral the deceptive eharacter of the ('hristian religion, he tells ms that it took him one hundred and tifty yours, in syirit life, to get away from the earth-formed desire of lefogr saved by Jesas of Nazareth. Comld any spirit give wiser connsel than does the spirit of Jominis, when he says, "Be natural in everything, and yon will ohtain not only happiness amd hliss, but you will be able to helpothers to that peint where we shall all he united in the fatherhome of (ioxl and the bootherfooxd of man?" This spirit fomm himself alike drhaded, whether identified with Resman ('atholic or Protestant ('hristianity. Both phases of that grand delasion ate madoubtedly alike destructive of spirit haplyitess, or the testi1Hony of spirits is worthless as an element in the store of hmman expericures.

SEJANUS.

The Favorite of Tiberius.

Abstract

"I greet you, sir :-I have a word to say to all who seek for that which will give them physical enjoyment. I gained my success in mortal life, and also my death, through flattery of those in power. My main object in coming here to-day, is to throw what light I can upon the disputed point of the reality of a man, or so-called god, named Jesus. I am set down in historical accounts as departing this mortal life in A. D. 31, but it was in A. D. 34, one yeur before the death of one whom I acknowledged my master, Tiberius Cæesar. I travelled a great deal with him, and was very intimately acquainted witl the Jew who taught philosophy-Grecian philosophy, not Jewish philosophy, (the elder Hillel); ant I conversed with him upon that sulject which now agitates modern thought-spirit com-munion-and in no case was he able to identify any of the alleged leaders of Christianity. He knew nothing of their lives, and as he lived at Jerusalem, engaged in teaching philosophy, (and Grecian philosophy, for Hillel was a follower of Plato) from A. D. 10 to A. D. th, he must have known of them had they lived. Here is a Jew, who lived contemporary with the great facts that are chamed by Christians, and yet he knew nothing of them. The only thing that he knew of, that came any where near what the Christians clam, was that a Jew, Jesus Malatheel, wats erucified for highway robbery, whose brother (not father) was one Joseph, who begged his body of one Simon, but this was not Joseph of Arimathra. The last named character was a pupil of Hillel, and told him of this transaction privately: As the Jesus who was crueified was an Essene, they were afraid his body would be deseerated, and as this was repugnant to their ideas, they stole it in the night time. If an extract from the Alexandrian Codex, which has been obliterated by means of chemicals, and which if now rubbed with certain compounds known anong modern chemists; or could the latter be placed over this obliterated portion of that Codex, you would reeover the proof of the trath of what I here state. In my great desire to atone for a life of senswality, I come here to-day, and I have made all plain that the concentration of power allows me to utilize. My name was Fijanuls."

Refer to Nouvelle Biographic Generale for aceomit of Sejanus.
It was the spirit of this man who, in his desire to atone tor his vile and corrupt life, comes back and testities as above. llis introduction of himself is fully borne out by the recorded facts of his earthly career. He denies that he was put to deat? in A. D. 31, as history has recorded ; and says it wats in A. I). 36. This is ly far more probable, for, if it is true that the latter part of the reign of Tiberins was Iittle else than a succession of executions, it is not likely this execention of the friends of scjanus continued for six years. A year wats ample time to dispose of all of them, and this is the period during which, it is most probable, they were devoted to destruction. This correction of a historical error is, under the ciremmstances, a sufficient proof of the truthfuhess as well as the authenticity of the conmunication. The spirit of Sejanus tells us that he was intimately aequainted with Hillel the Elder, who tanght philosophy at Jerusalem from A. D. 10 to A. 1). 45, and that he had consersed with him on the subject of eommanion of spirits with mortals.

While the gexpel story of the erneifixion hears the marks of fiction from beximning to ent; mot so the statement of the spirit of sejanus. The latter is perfeelly emsistent with prohability. But there is ond eseretal peoint in it that seme to show that not only was Jeans Malatherl, an E-senian eupprit, who suffered for his erime, hat that he furnished the grombl-werk for the gospel legend. It will he sern that it was one simon, the (erenian, who was the person asigned as the exeeutioner of Jests: ;ath whom the Jews compelled to hear the crons on which he was to be exemed. Aceording to the statement of Sigame, after the death of Jestre, his hother Joseph, lexered the herly, not of Pilate, hat of Simon, wher no doubt hat the "ustody of the leols: That simen should be mentioned in the least toprovide the eroses, and that the - pirit shomblhave:tated that it was tos Simon the application for the besly of Jons was made, is one of tho er coimedenees that gives mortanty to lat which it relates. There is also at singular signiticanaer in tas fact that withont any previons mention why it wat done, or how they came to be at (iofgotha, the gripel story salys:
"There were two thieves crucified with him ; one on the right hand, and the other on the left ;" and then says: "The thieves also which were crucified with him, cast the same in his teeth." That crucifixion, whatever it was, was certainly a crucifixion for a criminal, and not for a religious or political offence.

I have dwelt more at length upon the suggestions of the spirit communication of Sejanus than I otherwise would have done, because it offers the only rational clue to the true explanation of the real nature of the gospel narrative regarding the crucifixion of Jesus. I trust the readers will not think the time and space occupied in doing this wholly thrown away. Sejanus, you have nobly atoned for your misspent earthly life by your contribution toward the enfranchisement of the minds of those, who have discernment enough left to them, to profit by the far reaching suggestions that you have thrown out.

Abstract

" I salute you, sir : I lived in mortal form about 1550, and was employed on the calendars by the popes and bishops of my time. They had been so much tampered with that I did not know whether I lived in 1550 or 1350 . There appeared to be about two hundred years so mixed up that it was almost impossible to rectify it or set it right. The different eras had become so mixed, one with another, that great confusion in regard to time prevailed. I was set at the task of trying to make things straight. On entrusting me with the books which were necessary for that purpose, the first thing that struck me was the fact, that the adventures attributed to Jesus Christ were nothing more or less than a legend in regard to certain stars. In fact, that the whole Christian story wais derived from astrology, and the gods who were supposed to have lived before Jesus was said to have lived, such as Brahm, Buddhat, Jupiter, Jehovah, etc.; and that the doctrine of the Christian trinity is based on the pagan trinity, which was nothing more than fire, water and earth, aceording to those old books and manuseripts that were given to me at that time. No pope, bishop, or man of learning, knew when Jesus did live; and when they were alone to themselves, they freely admitted that the whole story was mythical and intended to gain power for themscives. A great many of those books and manuseripts are still at Rome, but they are kept hidden from the work; but the tine will som come when they mast beeme known ; and I, for one, am doing all that I can, as a spirit to bring about the dostretion of christianty and the trimmh of reasen over higotry. My name wats Aloysins Lilins."

Refer to Thomas's Dictionary of Biography for account of Aloysiuc Lilins.

We regard this commmacation as in every respect most important. That it is anthentic there can be no reasonable donht. The task at which Lilius was set by the papmatherity must, as he saly, hatre necesitated the putting of books and manuscrijts in his hamds that are not areosible to any but the highest and most trusted orders of the Callowie priesthood. That those books and mamuseripts should have diselosed the astrolegical origin and my thical nature of the adsentures attributed to Jesus. Christ is so highly probable as to render it certain that such was the fact. This spirit salys nothing about having met with foul phay at the hands of his priestly employers, but unless he wats more cautions about concealing what he diseovered as a mortal than he is a spirit, he mast have dropere hints that prohalhly cost him his life as som as his task was completed. ## POMPAEIUS SATURNINUS.  A Roman Writer.

"I salute you, sir:-Centuries in spirit life seem to pass with as much rapidity as one year in mortal life, because you are not subject to that fatigue of body that you experience on earth. I was, when on earth, more of a miscellaneous writer than a writer on any one subject. I was a generalist-not a specialist. During my time here I became neither an advocate of religions of my day, the politics of it, nor of the social condition of affairs ; for I saw much in each of these three departments of hmman interests to excite my contempt rather than my love. To see men of noble talents appealing to mythical gods seemed to be a waste of the real purposes of life. In politics the greatest flatterers were the grandest courtiers ; and in the administration of affairs, althongh administered by the emperor, yet justice was ever biased and even controlled by a plausible tongue. In social matters, in my day, one of two things occurred-man was either woman's master or slave. Between these two extremes there was no intermediate. In such a state were human affairs at the time of my abode on earth. There was only one consolation that I enjoyed, and that was the secret counsels of the Sons of the Sun or the Initiated. There, with our mediums, we enjoyed for a few hours that higher spirituality that our spirits called for. But our meetings had to be secret-covered from the eyes of the priests and priestly spies. No one suspected of belonging to the order eculd escape from the ruin sooner or lates. Those Pagan Roman priests were just as powerful bigots as are the Roman Catholis: Christians, and hesitated at nothing to increase their temporat power. As late as A. D. 150, at Rome, at Alexandria, at Antioch, and at Jerusalem, these Sons of the Sun receiven the teachings of the Gymunsophists, who were combined with the Therapente, and their main doctrine was spiritism. We met at Rome and compared notes every six months; but the embassadors to these meetings were all disguised as traders engaged in mercantile pursuits; and in this way we were able to learn the progress of the cause. No Jew by the name of Jesns Christ was known at Rome in my day ; nor did I ever hear from any of the embassadors of the order the name of Christians mentioned. I knew nothing of Paul, but I knew as a mortal and know as a spirit, that Pol was one of the names conferred upon Apollonits of Tyana. I have every reason to believe that the Paul of the Christian Seriptures is $A$ pollonitus of Tyana. I have had this view of the matter from one whom I knew in the mortal form, as the rosult of his investigation. I mean Pliny the Vounger, with whom I was intimately acquainted. My name was Pompeius Saturninus."

Refer to Smith's Dictionary of Biography for account of Saturninus.
"Pompzeius Saturninus, a contemporary of the Younger Pliny, is praised hy the latter as a distinguished orator, historian and poet. Several of Pliny's letters are addressed to him."

Refer to Thomas's Biographical Dictionary for account of Saturninus.
"Saturninus, or Saturnilus, one of the earliest of the Syrian Gnostics, flourished about 125 A .1 ."

It would seem from the commmaication of saturninus that in the latter part of the first and fore part of the second centur-, there was a seeret association or order known as the "soms of the Sun," who were Spiritualists, who had their mediums, who held their secret cireles, and who held communion with the spirits of the ascended dead ; but this secert order was under the han of the Roman priesthood, and its members hanted and watehed by priestly spies; that at Rome, Alexandria, Antioch, and Jerusalem, the Initiated, or "Sons of the Sinn," were taught by the Gymmosophists and Therapeute, whose main doctrine was Spiritism ; that these carly Spiritualists had semiammal secret meetings of spiritual embassadors at Rome, where reports of the progress of the Spiritual movement were made from all quarters of the eivilized word ; that ats late as A. D. 135, no such person as desus (hrist had been heard of, nor hatd the name of 'hristians then been used to designate any religious seet ; that no such person as St. Panl was then known ; and finally, that there is every rason to believe that Apollonius of Tranat is the l'anl of the Christianseriptures. It appears that אaturninus was of the (inosties, who were (iymmonohists as well ; that he was a contemperary and personal friond of Pling the Yomger, what was himself no donbt one of the Jnitiated; and that he was a writer of versatile aceompishments. There was therefore an Ancient as well as a Modern Spiritualism, hat it was hitterly opposed bey the Roman priests, and finally crushed by their successors, the Christian priesthood. It behooves those who value Modern Spiritualism, to profit by this communication from the spirit of Saturninus, and see to it that no sectarian opposition to its growth, whether from without or within, shall again bar the progress of the teachings of a more advanced Spiritism, as this spirit calls it. Let those who seek to sectarianize Spiritualism, know that it cannot be done and must not be attempted. These spirit testimonies are not given to go unheeded.

CARRA.

"Good Afternoon:-I lived, and was well acquainted with Jean Jacques Barthelemy, and he succeeded me in the National Library at Paris. We had many consultations together about his alphabet of Palmyra, and the inseriptions upon different ancient ruins; and he goes with me in spirit. He is with me to-day, to say that in a town called Said, there is an inseription which defines what is meant by the term Essene. "Es" means "fire," and "scne" means "worshipper," or passer through, and in modern language would be termed worshippers passing through purification by fire. The inseription was on a flat stone covering a vault, about two miles from Port Said, and in the Samaritan tongue. And from other writings, as well as being so assured by one Ignatius of Antioch, in spirit, who was an Essene, both Barthelemy and myself have come to the conclusion that all converts had to pass through fire-termed fire baptism-in order to be initiated into Essenism. He has also to say that the inseriptions on the Adulian marble, after the first clause, ended by two arrows, one pointing toward the north and the other south, relate to the life and miracles of Apollonius of Tyana. [I here asked whether the obliterated portion of the inseription had reference to that subject. He replied :] It seems to have been chipped off so as to conceal its purport. Apolfonius is nearer to earth, at this time, as a spirit, than he has ever been, and will probably, in materialized form, be enabled, before long, in person to claim to be the true Messiah, and in this way make a final end of Christianity. Not that he claims any Messiahship, but he was a superior medium.-Carra."

Refer to Nouvelle Biographic Generale for account of Carra.
It was the spirit of this man, the friend and predecessor of the erudite Jean Jacques Barthelemy, in the oflice of Librarian of the National Library, that retums and commonicates the interesting information above given. I doubt whether there has ever been any snecessful attempt to give the etymology of the term Essene, prior to this spirit exposition of it. That it is correct there can be little question. It would seem that Barthelemy's discovery of the inscription at Said that explains the meaning of that term, has been made since he became a spirit, thus showing that if the way is once fully opened to the learned in spirit life, they have it in their power to umavel and correctly explain every historical puzzle, concerning even the most remote past. It is a fact that parification by fire baptism was a common thing among those people, the olject of whose worship was the sun. Will not some traveller to the Orient remember this spirit statement, and test its correctness, by visiting Said and searching for the inscription deseribed? Doubtless there are those of the inhabitants of that old Syrian town, who have seen the stone and the inseription upon it. Ignatius of Antioch, to whom the spirit of Carra refers as having confirmed Barthelemy's interpretation of the Samaritan word Eisene, was not only an Essene but he was the patriareh of that seet, and one of the most learned men of his age. The spirit's statement, on behalf of Barthelemy, that the inseription on the monument at Allulis, after the first clause, related to the life and miracless of Apollonius of Tyana, is undoubtedy eorrect, and hence the oblitcation of it by some emissary or entisaries of the Christian chureh, whose piety far outstripped their honesty and truthfulnes.

CLEMENT ALEXANDRINUS.

Abstract

"I qreet you:-I always taught when seated. Too much religion has been a curse to me as a spirit. I knew of the writings of one Mareion-not that he was the author of thembut he substituted a myth for a reality. That reality was A pollonius of Tyana. I received copies from him, and I followed his text as far as it suited me. But there was one great desire that animated me as a mortal. That was to establish a fraternity of monks; and in this I suceeeded, but I did not dare to let them know the light that I had received; so I used the name of Apollonius, which after my time was erased and the name of Jesus Christ substituted by Eusebius of Cresarea. All his translations of my writings are, in the main forgeries. He took my communistic doctrines and used them to found a church. That is, the leaders of the Roman Catholic Church were to be Communists, but their followers were not allowed to become such. At Alexandria, the most renowned priests of the East and West, over the then civilized world, assembled to compare notes; and as has been before stated by a spirit who communicated through this medium, they formed that idea, which was afterwards put in operation by Constantinus Pogonatus, of the borly of the god (Prometheus) to which was attached the head of Apollonius of Tyana, but whieh the ancient Christians would not accept, but continued to worship the first sign of the Zodiac, Aries, the Lamb or Ram. The former idea did not find its proper place until the sixth century. But the whole account of the decision of the Gnostics, the Gymnosophists, and othersects, who met in Council at Alexandria in A. D. 161, was written hyme; and I hope that my writings, of which true copies, as they originally read, are now in the possession of the Maronite monks, of MIt. Lebanon, Syria, may yet be forthcoming. These once in the possession of moderns, and the whole fabric of Christianity will be stamped as a forgery. I am quated as a father of the Christian Chureh. I deny it. I was a father of a socialistic community, of whieh celibacy was the principal tenct. My name was Clement Alexanhrinus." Refer to MeClintock & Strong's Cyelopredia of Eeclesiastical Literature; also to Dr. Lardner's works, for account of Clement,

What has become of Clement's "Institutions," which Dr.

Lardner refers to, but which he says has been lost, and why are we allowed to know so little of its eontents? Let the spirits of Eusebins and his abettors in his pions fratuds, appear and answer, for upon them rests the heasy responsibility of the concealment or destruction of that important ancient brok. It will be observed that there is no historic:al mention that Clement of Alexandria ever founded or attempted to found a fraternity of monks; but who can read the symopis, given in Mec (linteck & Strong's ('yelopedia of his writings, and not see that his lators were all in the direction of monachism, and an ascetic and self-denying life ; and that so far from being what is now regarded as an orthodox Christian, he was what orthodox Christians now designate a heretical (inostic. For a Christian writer to speak of "the true (inostic" as synonymons with "the perfect Christian," as does the Christian writer I have quoted, is to resolve Christianity into (inosticism. What then is (inosticism? Fays a writer in the American ('yelopat dia: " (inostics; (fireek '(inosis,' knowledge,) : name given to various heretical seets, in the early Christian chureh." [A pretty Christian chureh was that, when heretical dinostits were its exponents and dominant rulers.] "We know them," says this writer, "mainly through their opponents, almost nothing remaining of (inostie writings, exept the fragmentary guotations found in orthodos anthors. (inosticism was a matural result of the contact of ('hristianity with ()riontal and (ireek philomplay, and was the carliest attempt to emstruct a philosophical system of fath. It undertook to answer the most diflicult questions, surh as that of the origin of evil, and emon became extravagant, and met the opposition of the leading (hristian writers."

Not the least signifieant declaration of the spirit of Clement is, that in A. I). 16is, the mast remowned prieste of the East and West, thromghon the then civiliand word, asembled in commel at Alexambria, embracing (ino-tic, (iymmosophists and other acto, at which the ithat was formed to adopt, as the symben of atemmon worship, the bedy of the (irecian get, Jromethens, sullering for mankind on the E.y. y hian (rage to which should beattacheolthe head of Apollonitus of Tyama. Whether ('lement Was himalf a member of that (onneil of finostic, (iymmo mophist and other pricets, he does not tell us, but he does monst plainly tell ns that he wrote a full aceorat of the deevion they came to in regard to the common religious symbol they determined to adopt. Nothing was more natural than that these Greek Gnostics and Gymmosophists should have adopted that especial emblem; and nothing more unnatural than that Christian prelates assembled in A. D. 680, at Constantinople, by Constantinus Pogonatus, should have adopted that identical symbol as the emblem of the Christian religion. Who has ever seen a crucifix, or statue, or picture, representing Jesus of Nazareth, the alleged Jew, that had not every lineament and physical attribute of the highest Greek ideal of human perfection. To combine the ideal beauty of Prometheus, the Greek saviour, with the real beauty of the sage, the seer, the benefactor, the teacher-the renowned Apollonius-was indeed, to unite, in one emblem, all that was divinely and humanly perfect and adorable. That Christian prelates should have deliberately adopted this compound effigy of a heathen god and a heathen philosopher, as the emblem of their religion, was to confess the heathen origin and heathen nature of all that is connected with it. To-day, in every Christian chureh, the people in their ignorance, are worshipping the same objects that received the adoration of the heathen Greeks and Romans. If they desire to worship a Christian Jew, as they claim to be doing, let them at least diseard an emblem that relates only to the theology concerning a Greek god, and the life and acts of a Greek philosopher and teacher of men. Who will earn the thanks of unborn generations of men, by searehing for the writings of Clement, as they were originally eomposed, among the Maronite monks of Mt. Lebanon? That they are there, I feel confident. Well may the spirit of Clement say: "These, once in the possession of moderns, and the whole fabric of Christianity will be stamped as a forgery." I regard this communieation as of extraordinary importance in every way it may be viewed. It is beyond all question, a spirit communication, and there is no valid reason for questioning its authenticity.

HERMOGENES.

The Great Essenian Rival of St. Paul.

"My salutation shall be, Let us shed the light. I lived in mortal form in what is termed A. D. 122-that is, I was in full exercise of my mortal fowers at that date. I ammentioned in the New Testament, second T'imothy, chap, i., 15, as I Iermogentes, and ant there set down ats a heretie. In orrler fonet myself squarely right before moderns, I am here to-day to fell the whole truth. The original laul, and the man whom I followed as a mortal, was Apollonins; amd 'Tinotheus was a hishop, or ath apositle, of the Nitzarite, Esisenian, or Therapeutic seet, for these were one and the satme. He was acting ats an apostle ; and an apostle, in those days, meant a promulgator of some religion. Until that seet began to abose the commmantic idea-that of having all things in eommont-I was a member of it. But the bishops and leading men began to monopolize the enjoyment of the grod things of this life. Apellonius himself had the same weakness that tinges the actions of modern mediums. Ju beathe dexirous of eontrolling the moneys athd the tongras of his followers ; and "pon this peint he athl my-temon the good things of this life; but put them in al gosition where they ean monopolize them, and they cathont resist the lemptation of their sumomading e eiremmstances, Apolloniths is the real hero of the ('hristian legerot). We is also the Pand of the ('Indistian seriptures: and what was revealed to hime, hy at voluntary xpirit control, sut the like of l'atmos, makes him the John of Revelations. 'That bosk of Revelation, as mblerstood by the atmontte, is to be explathed entime hy astronomay, or the movement of the starry hosta tpen the demme of havelt. The key to Fisenianism the key to the lamernere of the Theratbeutar -and the key to all that the somalled A ponlle wote, is to In fomme in the elatacelor amd life of Apollonins of Tratas ; Hot as these wore excmplitiod hy his mottal eareer, hut areorditus tothe:meient acoumbte of that eareer, after his death, ats his most faithful followers. But, when he became carnal minded, and grasped after the good things of this life, withont regard to either principal or justice, I refused to be one of his adherents. By spirits who will come after me, at this sitting to-day, testimony will be given, in the face of which no mortal now living, or yet to be born in the course of coming generations, will dare to deny the astrological and astronomical origin of all religions. It was so understond by us-the initiated. And I would say this, on all my hopes of future happiness, that, if ever mortals wish to comprehend the symbolism of Christianity, they must become readers of the stars. The Essenes, Nazarites, or Therapentr, and all sects in the first and second centuries, owe their religious ideas to that Hindoo trance medium, Deva Bodhisatoua. If this causes any one or more persons to think upon these points, I will be amply repaid for the obstructions that have been thrown in my way by opposing spirits, to prevent me from communicating what I knew, to mortals. You have my name. Good bye ; and may God bless you for your efforts to promulgate the truth."

I regard that communication as containing, within itself, all that is necessary to prove the fact that the spirits of men and women who lived in the far historic past, can return and communicate with mortals, and that many of them have so returned, and through their medium, have disclosed facts and truths of the greatest importance to the welfare of humanity. The only positive reference to this Fermogenes that is anywhere recorded, is in the 14 th and 15 th verses of the first chapter of the Second Epistle to Timothy, which are in these words:
"That good thing which was committed unto thee, keep by the Holy Ghost which dwelleth in us."
"This thon knowest, that all they which are in Asia be turned away from me; of whom are Phygellus and Hermogenes."

Remember, that all other mention of this Hermogenes has either been lost or destroyed. Not a word is said as to why "all they which (were) in Asia (were) turned away from (Paul) ;" nor are we told who Paul was, or who Timothy was, that their religious or doctrinal views were diflerent from the views of Phygellus and Hermogenes, "and all they which were in Asia," and formerly of the same religions sect with Paul and Timothy ; nor are we told what the sect was called, that Phygellus and Hemogenes turned away from. All this is fully stated by the returning spirit of Ifermogenes, and in a mamer, and by means, that bear the strongest possible appearance of truth.
The only possible historical reference to this heretical Hermogenes may le found in Smith's Dictionary of (ireek and Roman Biography.

In that most unexpected communication of Hermogenes, we behold a light that discloses the most important clae to the source of the sacerdotal or hicrarehal features of the Christian religion that has ever been revealed. It has ever been a puzale to thoughtful and well informed persons outside of the Christjan priesthood, to discover how a chureh of the most arbitrary and autocratic character, could have been built up on avowed principles of common equality and perfect fraternity on the part of its constituents. The communication that I am commenting upon, makes this as elear as the noonday. Christianity hadd its souree in the religions sece known as the Essenian Brotherhood or Fraternity. That organization was purely communistie, and perfectly demoeratic in its fundamental principles. It so continued, at it now appetrs, until Apollonius of Tyama, who became a member, and prominent Apostle of its religious doctrines, madertook to sulwert the governing prinriples of that then well extablished seet ; and to substitute tor them the anti-emmonistic and anti-fraternal principles of sacerdotal and hiorarehal gradation. Then hegan at stuggle for unity, fraternity and equality, against priestlo dogmatism and acgrandizement, that was sesumed when spirits of light and wiolom lamehed the pasent Spiritual Movement, after a lapse of eighteen handred vears. The genius of mental free dom had not then sutheiently penetrated the mints and souls of men, and the old cloud of saterdotal usurpation rolled, again, ower the star-lit dome of haman aspirations. Hermogdones, the great demoeratie leader of the Eisenes, confronted, amb, for a time, drowe back the friends of priesteraft, led hy Apmonius, or lamb, the Eisenian Apestate, hut in vain ; amb the latter berame the suceresful fonmer of a bastarl bisenian-i-m, which after his death, one Mareion, of Pontas, put forth muler the alise of Christianty. Apollonins hoft his lessenim bantling at Antioch, the great enntre of Jisenianism, where Marcion fomal it in the shape of a (andel and eleven Fpiatles, and this -purime bathling of the apostate Fisenian, Apollo-nitu-, hemm the adopted waif of the ('hristian priesthont.

Abstract

" Good day :-This mortal life is one of uncertainties; and little did I think that I, who had devoted myself to the interests and advancement of all, should end my life on the guillotine. There is a fate that seems to hang over you, and you know not the hour when its fulfilment will oceur. In my mortal life I was an astronomer. No astronomer that now lives, or that ever did live, but knows the identity of all religions with that science. But there are Materialist astronomers; Infidel and Christian astronomers; Arabic, Jewish, Egyptian and Chinese astronomers, both ancient and modern. As another spirit has said, individual actions on this mortal plane were afterwards transferred to the stars above, and it is there, and there only, that the key to all religions is to be found. Excavations are now being made, amid the ruins of ancient Babylon, which will prove, by the planispheres upon burnt bricks, the whole story of all the gods that were then known, and who are all to be found nursed in the lap of the constellation Virgo. But it is not even in Babylon that the finality of the zodiacal problems is to be found. The most ancient of all historical evidence that will prove that Christianity is nothing but a fable borrowed from the stars, is to be found at ancient Tyre; as the Phœnicians, 2700 years before the Christian era, had the most correct ideas upon the solar system -analogous to what is known by modern astronomers. It is in that sunken city by the sea, whose secrets are to be brought to light by your modern divers, that the final and conclusive evidence is to be found which will give the death-blow to Christianity. For further particulars, and for points that I think will throw some light upon the subject, I would like our brother [myself] here, to obtain a French work written by me when living in the mortal form, the title of which is, "C'hristian Fables Astronomically Considered." I departed this life in the Freneh Revolution, in 1793. My name was Jean Elvain Bailly."

Refer to American Cyclopædia for aceount for Bailly:
Such was the learned man whose spirit came back and gave that remarkable and characteristic communication. The work which lie requested me to procure, was doubtless the first of the two last namerl publications. Of that work, "Essay on Fables atm their Jintory," the Nouvelle Biographie (iencrale says : "It wats printed in the year vii., ( 2 vols., in 8vo.,) and wats a posthmmous work that the aththor had composed in 1881 and 1782; a ropy of it was presented as a token of respect to the legislative borly, and two deputies, Batudin and Rewhell, took that oceasion to pay, from the trilmane, a tribute of homacre and regret to the memory of the savant and patriot. That so innortant a work should have remaned unpublished in his hands for eleven years, is sufficiont evidence of its searching character and the dangrer of making publie the truths that it containcel." I hate read the "History of Astronomy," by bailly, and can well understand the importance of retting a cops of that work, as the spirit sugqests. If it can he had, I will procure it, and erve the publie the benefit of the discovered truths which I know it must contain. I do not know to what the spirit alluder, in regard to excavations going on atmid the ruins of ancient babylon, and the astronomical discoveries that are being made, of that will be made there ; but this I well know, that all theological grobls of every pooske, not exerpting the ('hristian world, were the allegrorical legends of the sinn's career in his ammatl route through the heavens. There is not a dombt whatever that the Phemicians had a very advanced science of astronomy long -very long-anterior to the christian (rat. Bailly makes this most phan by the proofs he adduces in his treat " IIistory of Astronomy, Ancient and Morlern." shombd the diseoverias foretold hy the spirit tre yet fomand leneath the seat, at the site of ancient 'Tye, they would mot only give the death hlow to ('hristianity, lut the death hlow to the insensate opposition that spiritualism now eontends agails-t.

CARDINAL CAESAR BARONIUS.

"I salute you, sir:-I was known as Cardinal Cæsar Baronius, or Baronio, as sometimes called. I was the author of an Ecclesiastical Annals, and librarian of the Vatican Library. In my search for information amongst the books and papers of that library, I was sworn that I would disclose or publish nothing that did not agree with the Roman Catholic creed. In my investigation of the old manuscripts there deposited, I found that Christianity did not have a begimning until the first half of the third century. These manuseripts all show that one Papius, who was a priest in Syria about that time, was the originator of that religion. Christian writers have made it appear that he lived much carlier than he really did. The Christian story, as borne out by the facts, was derived from a Grecian tragedy the hero of which was a dying god, and the first man who tanght such a doctrine was Apollonius of Tyana; and he, according to his own manuscripts, got the idea in India from the narrative regarding the Hindoo god Chrishna, which is in reality the Christ of the Christians. In fact you have, through the spirits that are coming to you, the key to all that relates to the Christian religion, in the fact that A pollonius was the Apostle Paul. These documents to which I allude, although opposed to their religion, the Catholies have not destroyed. Whatever originals they possess are in the hands of the Order of Jesus, and no priest is allowed to read them unless he takes the oath of eternal secrecy. There is not a learned Catholic to-day that is in the priesthood, or that has ever been at Rome, but that knows that Christianity is nothing more than an old pagan idea revived, but as it gives them power their lips are sealed. I might speak for an hour, but I could not tell you more than I have done because I have condensed what I had to say. I was librarian of the Vatican prior to A. D. 1607, when I died."

In reply to our question whether he knew that the supposed date of the four canonical gospels was from A. D. 160 to A. D. 185? He answered, "Yes, but they were none of them earlier than A. D. 200 ." When asked how he could feel absolved from his oath of secrecy, he answered, "No oath, however solemn, is binding upon the human sonl when it operates to the injury of the human race." We refer to the Nouselle Biographie Generale for account of Baronius.
The spirit of this learned and honored Catholic prelate has come hack to reveal facts concerning Christianity that should astound the wordd, and set mankind about discarding a religion of which the whole effect hats been to conceal truth, and its whole purpose to propagate and perpetuate fallsehood. In the light of that commanieation, we are indined to believe that Baronius had a much better reason for his hesitancy to undertake the great task (that of preparing the Ecclesiastical History for publication) imposed upon him by St. Philip de Neri than his humility ; and that reason was, that in undertaking it he was compelled to make bath to perpetrate one of the worst crimes of which amy learned man can be guilty-that of eoncealing truth and fortifying error. Baronins well knew that this was demanded of him, and being a great-souled, honest and good man, he shrunk from the performance of so wicked at task. Thanks to the great ruling mind and power of the miverse, time, which rights all wrongs, has opened the way for the return of this fearfully wronged spirit, and enabled him to undo the injury which he was foreed by cireumstances to intlict upon his fellow-men. Nothing could more planly show the unwillingness with which that injury was intlicted than the mareserved testimony of this truly conscientions spirit. Ye Spiritualists who would sadde Modern spiritualism with ('hristianty, think of it! Cardinal Baronias was made to take a solemm oath that he wouk make known or publish mothing that did not agree with the Christian ereed that existed in the ( atholice ('hureh, And why? Becanse that creed was fatse and would be spurned be all people of sense if he mande known the truth concerning it. He tells the that Christianity did not hegin until the time of lapins, who lived in the third and not in the serond century, as ('loristian writers, including himself, had mathe it appear. We refer to Me(lintock destrong's Eeclesiastical Encyclopadiat for aceome of Papius.

It is further testified hy the spirit of Baronins that the manuseripts extant and in the Vatican collection when he wrote, Hhowed that the ('hristian story was hat a moditieation of a (ireek tragedy, the hero of which was a dying god. More than this her testitics that those mantarerpts showed that the tirst aceording to his cown writings, got the idea in ladia, from the which is the original of the ('hrist of the C"ristians. And even more than this, Baronius testifies not only to the fact that Apollonius was the Apostle Paul, but he says, in that fact we are in possession of the key to all that relates to the Christian religion. In the face of that aceusing testimony of Baronius, confirmed as it is by volumes of corroborative evidence, have we not a right to demand of the Roman Catholic chureh, that it shall plead to that fearful indictment of one of its most honored and shining lights? Do you or do you not know, ye Catholic priesthood, that the Christian religion is but a revival of paganism? How say you, guilty or not guilty?

RUFUS QUINTIUS CURTIUS.

" I salute you, sir, in the name of Truth triumphing over Error. I was intimately acquainted with Vespasian; I knew A pollonius; and I saw Flavius Josephus at Rome about the middle of the reign of Trajan. I come here to-day to say, that Titus, the son of Vespasian, brought to Rome some of the Hebrew scrolls that were recovered by Judas Maccabeus, after the destruction of the Temple of Jerusalem by Antiochus Epiphanes; and that the most, if not all, of the Jewish legends are borrowed allegorical recitals taken from the Persian and Egyptian mythologies. Their identity with the latter was understool by the learned or initiated. And here I wish to introduce a word, which is clamed by modern scientists to express an existing force-Odic. This force, which is termed by same modarns Psychic, was merely the preparatory conditions for answers, discerning some physical representation of future events. All augurs, or what are termed mediums amongst moderns, when inquiring into future events, drew a circle around them at the time; and any interference with them, or any crossing of that circle, unless summoned by the angur or medium, brought death to the intruder. This circle was drawn, by thoze called the ancients, to keepout all evil influences at the time these spiritual influences were in operation. All religions known in my day, whether of India, Persia, Greece, Rome, Judea, or Egypt, were understood astronomically; but this was disguised from the masses, beeause all who had any learning whatever knew they had but one common basis to rest upon, and that was communion with spirits, whether brought about by invocation, or trance, or this odic or this psychic force physically manifested. But sueh manfestations were always called up by virtue of the mystic signs of the zodiac. These signs aceompanied every circle. The breast-plate which Flavius Josephus wore, and in which he wats diseovered in the eave, when his life was sated by Vespasian, was none other than a representation of the Chatdean signs of the zodiac. That breastbate has not been destroyed, but now exists, and is to be found in Paris, where a priest presented it to Charlemagne. It was among the spoils obtained at Rome by Alarie, king of the Hims. It has a mission in this world, and until that is aceomplished, it cammot be destroyed. That mission is, to prove that the Hebrew teachings and writings are nothing but a copy of Chaldean, Persian and Egyptian writings that preceded them. How much better would it have been for priests, in the past, to have been honest with their followers, than deluding them with gods and faney gods into the way of error? For the paths of Truth are pleasant, and all its ways are peace. My name was Rufus Quintius Curtius."

Refer to 'smith's Dietionary of Greek and Roman Biography for account of Iufus Quintills C'urtius.

It was the spirit of the Roman historian, rhetorician, and poet, -the intimate acrpaintance of Verpasian and Titus, who knew Apollonims, and who had seen Flavius Josephos at Rome as late as the middle of the reign of Trajan, about A. 1). 107,who returns and communieates. That he spoaks from personal knowledge of the truth of what he says, is manifest in a remarkable degree in ewory part of his spirit testimony. There (amonot be a douht, from the historical and reitieal notiees in relation to his earth life, eonsidered in the light of the communnisation, that ('urtins lived fom about A. I). .̈t motil A. 1). 107. If we may regard the communication as reliable and truthful, it would sem that Titus bromerht from Jorusalem to Rome, foverex :after the destretion of the Temple of derusatem by Holdew sorolls that dowephas obtaine his aceont of the Maceathers. bat the mont signiticant fate is, that those serolls showerf that mont, if mot all the Jewish legends were horewed allegerical reditals, taken tom the Persian and Egyptian my-learned and thase initiated into an mblerstanding of their astrological and astronomical meaning; while on the other hand, this was eoncealed from the ignorant masses, in order the more readily to lead and control them. It is wonderful to see how perfectly modern priesteraft has followed in the tracks of its ancient progenitor. One of the means of preventing a spread of the true knowledge of the true basis of all theological dogmatizing to wit: the commmion of mortals with the spirits departed from earth, was to appeal to the superstitious fears which were the resuit of astrological inculcations. Mediums were in those days surrounded by a circle, in which were represented the signs of the zodiac, to invade whiel brought death to the transgressor. None but the priests who emplored the augurs or mediums were allowed to approach or cross this mystical enclosure, and thus an cffectual monopoly of all spiritual intercourse was secured to the designing and initiated few. I feel perfectly warranted in accepting the truthfulness of this spirit statement, inasmuch as it is corroborated by the most ample number of historical facts which time and space will not admit of introdueing here. I think there is much food for thought furnished ly the spirit mention of the identity of what is respectively called odic or psychic force, and its operation in producing the phasieal manifestations that attend the operation of that force, and its action as reflecting conning events.

Whether the breast-plate worn by Josephus, at the time of his capture at Jerusalem, in the cave in which he had concoaled himself, at the time of the eapture of that city by Titus, is in existence, or not, is of less importance than to know that it was a representation of the Chaldean zodiac. If this was the fact, it is of itself sufficient to show that the Jewish religion was but a formulated astro-theology, and would leave no other question to be decided than to determine whether it had any feature asentially original about it, or whether it was a literal or substantial eopy of sone anteccdent astro-theological system. For aceount of the breast-plate of the Jewish high priest, of which office Josephus was the incumbent, we refer to MeC'lintoek and Strong's C'yelopeedia of Feclesiastical Literature.

Abstract

"I salute you, friends :-I was consut for the Roman Empire in the first l'unie war. I an here today for a mission. That mission is to unveil what priests have attempted to patm upon humanity as religion. All religions, in my day, were eopied from the Egyptian ()siris, with this great light that shines atwe your head-the sint-as the central pivot; which Sun has been corrupted into son, and this becanse prieste, tinding that the masses would not worshipnor adore anything that was mot eovered by a veil of seerecy, resorted to gools born of virgins, as the fundamental principle in nearly all the religions now existing on this mortal phane. In my time there was a canstam struggle lxetween the learned polliticians and wily priests for supromacy ; and aory an I to say that the priests almost always trimuphed. There never would have been that Necline in the Roman Empire, and its Dinal absorption by the Catholie chare! to-day, if the Roman people haw tistomed to the vase of its prliticians and orators. twenty-one hundred years of spirit life, there is any doctrine or teaching that would impress me, or lead me to give up my individuality, for all the happiness of an eternal quiet. My name when here was M. Atilius Regulus, 251 years B. C."

Refer to Smith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Biography for acsount of Regulus.
It was this beloved Roman martyr whose spirit returned and testified as set forth in his communication. His testimony is only cumulative as to the fact that the Greek and Roman religions were but copies of the Egyptian religion of Osiris, or the sun personified; and that the dogma of a belief in gods, the sons of virgins, was common to all religions in his day. It would seem from the testimony of spirit Regulus, that the rivalry between the priests and temporal rulers of men to obtain supremacy, was as desperate two thousand years ago as it has been ever since-the priests managing always to trimmph in the end. It is an undeniable fact that Prometheus, dying on the Seythian erag, was regarded by the Greeks and Romans, hundreds of years before the alleged lirth and death of Jesus, as being as much a saviour of mankind, as the latter Christian myth is now ly Christians. We are told by this, unseifish Roman spirit, that of the so-called gods that are claimed to hase existed, he had seen but one as a spirit-and that one, Gautana IBuddha. His deseription of the spirit sphere of that great and good spirit, is perfeetly consistent with the teachings of that renowned religions leader. The conmmication is perfectly consistent with the historical facts regarding Regulus, and I believe is perfectly anthentic.

ROBERT II. Of France.

"I am here to-day to help to spread the light. There was one fallt in my earthly career that follows me as a spirit. I was too pious. liety carried to an extreme length begets higotry, and you become so absorbed in it, as a leading idea, that any one who does not agree with you, you regard as an enemy of truth. At the time I lived in mortal form, Catholic ('hristianity was in its darkest period. Nearly all light had become extinguished. Altars, priests, wafers and tapers created a kind of dim rehgions awe, which curses all spirite, that become enwrapped in that kind of religious folly. No religion that excludes the light of free inguiry will fail to produce, in your minds, a dim uncertainty which gradual!y hrings yon to that point that you throw over all the things of the mortal lite to live in that religious work of your own imagining. As a mortal I believed too much. As a spirit I wish to undo that. I have fonnd throngh inquiry and work in spirit life, that the (ireat Infinite has marked ont no set of religions rules for men to be gowerned by; but there are rules that we may learn ly experi-ence-that which beemose a truth, morally eertain to us. Ribt priests have perverted the truth by meansof dying rams, lambs, (roses, virgils, and latin jareon. I know now an apirit what I newor knew as a mortal, and that is, that ("hristianity is an astrological leqend, and every true ('hristan who has his cers (rien to the truth, acknowledges it to beso, in spirit life. No ond who exer lived was more earnest in propagating ('atholi(eism than mysedf, and the priests conferredon matitle which hats been a come tome spiritually, that of "lions." That tithe, as bestowed hy priests, has corsed every spirit that it was evor confered men. There is blood attablacd to it, and untold shffering : and many men whon the pricets excommunieated, are owaly ing to-day, in spirit life, higher pusitions and anjoying greater happines, than the so-alled pions one of history: 1 know pusitively, from consersations had with that great phitit, Apollonius, that every hest or thast or pieture now held alike, is the head of Apollonits of Tranat. 1 allonlinow, from what I hawe learnecl from the eonelabe of mamepated spirits, and their aremmte of their arthly experieners, whelt they hate disumed epenty in the spirit world, that the desas of the Scriptures, the Paul and John, are all derived from the life of A pollonius of Tyana. The days of truth are upon you, and that which is crooked shall be made straight. The age of reason, now dawning, needs but one redeemer, and that is the effort of each person to be hisown saviour. This is a guide-board that will never lead you astray. All are gods, provided their conditions and environments are god-like. I feel much relieved in coming here to-day. It is a duty I owe to the misguided. I lived in A. D. 997. That was when I was in the height of my power. I was known as Robert the Pious of France. Goodbye, sir."

We refer to Biographie Generale for account of Robert the Pious.

This spirit returns and testifies as above, after a lapse of more than eight hundred and fifty years. The one draw back to the spirit happiness of this remarkable man, was the fact that he was a bigoted votary of Christian Catholicism, or of Catholic Christianity. He testifies positively, as the result of his inquiries as a spirit, that the great Infinite has prescribed no set of rules for the government of men, and that experience is the only sure guide to follow. His testimony as to his positive knowledge as a spirit, that Christianity is but an astrological legend, while nothing new to those who have inpartially sought to know the origin and nature of the so-called sacred scriptures, shows that they who were the most earnest and sincere Christians, in their mortal lives, have, as spirits, become awakened to the true nature of the terrible delusion which so completely held them in the vassalage of ignorance and superstitious fear. What an important truth he utters! when he says: "Many men whom the priests excommunicated, are occupying to-day, in the spirit life, higher positions and enjoying greater happiness than the so-called pious ones of history." We have heard much of the assemblies, bands, conferences, congresses, and other deliberate meetings of spirits, who are seeking to effect their respective parts in the great work of limman regeneration; but we have never before heard of the "Conclave of Emancipated Spirits," of whom this great and renowned Catholie king speaks. The use of the term conclave, to dexignate the nature of that spirit assembly, shows that emancipated Catholic spirits are working to defeat the continuance of the religious delusion from which they have themselves escajed. How long will the walls of Roman C'atholie ecelesiasticism, in spirit life, withstand the pressure of these workingemancipated spirits from without? Not long, we opine. The trath is becoming rapidly and widely known, and the fear and dread of it is fast becoming a thing of the past. The butwark of ('hristianity-the l)evil-is overthrown, and with him, the idohatrous veneration of consecrated myths and fables. The purely human origin and insention of the whole seheme of (hristianty can be monger suceessfully denied, and the glamour that arose from its supposed sacredness, is being dissipated by the light of truth, as the mists of night tefore the morning stm. I hail this amouncement of Robert the Pions with the assurance of eertainty: "The days of Truth are upon you, and that which is crooked shall be made straight."

PYTHAGORAS.

The Samian Sage.

"I gimest you Ahb: It is just exactly six months that I have been fighting my way through adverse eonditions to reach you here. Tob be a sage and philesopher in ancient times wan mot a very diffeult affair, becanse it was always a spiritual attiar. All sages, in ancient times, were more or less mediums. But in your day they are more learned, materially, becanse of the diflerent opportunities that you have to acopire knowenge. I received from a spirit the doct rine of metempselosis, and I timd that there is something in it, that is the spirit envelopment of the medium. I also devoted myself considerably to Euclid's work and was the first, in the firek history at least, to find the properties of the hypothemose, or femeth clement ; and it has Laxell revived a grat deal spititally in the theory of the fourth dimension of space. [Kolluer's theory] at lame attempt to timb ont spiritnat thinge by theory There is atmother point that is to momeramed the popertios of life in matter. Wie can understand the materialized demonstration of it, but we cannot understand how it combines, and how surrounding atoms coming together produce thought. There are spirits in my splere who understand this thing; but the knowledge of it eamot be forced upon the matter of this planet as long as there is such a determined opposition to spiritual things. All the spiritual things of the present day, as felt by the majority oif mankind, are nothing more than adhering to all myths and stories of antiquity. There is no way to find out the elements of mind in any better manner than by seeking the God principle within yourselves. In that way you draw to yoursel ves a combination of the brightest intellects from the spirit world. All morality, as taught by me in my "Golden Verses," was simply the result of observation and experience, and I received many of my precepts from the poets before my time, Homer, Hesiod and others ; and all of the sages in those days taught their own doctrines to certain schools of men, who retired into their caves or gardens, and there all such minds were moved in trance, in the same manner that I move this man to-day. fonnetimes they were conscious, and sometimes when the deepest thoughts were given, in a deeply unconscious state. All gods and goddesses have grown out of names, to signify certain qualities that exist within the human body, such as patience, perseverance and all other virtues; and even the passions are represented in Grecian mythology, and were so understood by the learned of my day. And, as the cross is the symbol of the Christian religion ; so these gods and goddesses were the symbols of certain appetites, passions and virtues. There is an approach of the noblest, highest and purest intelligences in the spirit world towards this earth, but between you and these spirits lies the magnetism of ignorance which hampers every intelligent spirit and keeps it from expressing what it really wishes to, when it does control a medium, and this magnetism is thrown off daily by mortals, and intereepts progression ; and although you stand forward in the strife, you will find few at the present day with intelligence enough to comprehend what spiritual phenomena they get. And why should they care for more, when they will not understand what ean be demonstrated. At my time it was just as diffieult to make a man understand truth, as it is to-day-that is we labored unter the dithiculties of superstition. Priesteraft always stands in the way of progression. The more ignorant the hearen of a priest the fers work he has to do ; and the more enlightened they beeome the more difficulty he has to maintain his pmition. Therefore you will always tind these teachers of superstition, enemies to progression. The ancient nations of the worla, at my time, hat more interesurse with each wher thath yent womld suppese ; and, livint ats I did, almost at the simbe time, as (oufucias the (himese philosopher, I met with state of his disetples and conapated with them our resective teakhings; and you will timd that the "Goblen Verses" of P'ythagoras, and the "WValon Jrecepts" of ('onfuritus have a sableness in their leachings. Vou will alst find that the first froat ieachers living more natural lives-nearer to bathre-tial not expres themselves with the clegatme of sonne of the younger peets and philosephers ; but in the very beanty of simplicity Instead of using learmed womls to cxpress your thomghts, it is best to put your ideas in the simplest fom possible. You will herehy avoid miserneeptien ; you will, also, be better unterstood. It bas grieved the spirits of my day to look from their sehools of philosophy in spirit life, and see the progress of those sulperstitions that kill the soul, all over this great planef. It is almost impossible to uproot them, unless you conmmeme with the chilal in the mortal form. 'There is another great dimbenlty with all spirits, ('hristian, Mohammatdan amd l'agan, they are so imbuch with superstitions, that "voll if thoy reason themselves out of them at maturity, when they combe to what is termed death-the earliest impresions being the most vivid, and matred the deepest upon their spirits, loolde them in the meshes of superstition for long years after in spirit life. so there is nothing I know of that will

who can discuss the ethics of the Christian and Pagan religions, better than any man or spirit that I know of, his name is Ammonius Saccas. He can throw more light upon the Christian superstition, because he is one of the founders of it. And, therefore, with my blessing to you all, you can sign me P'ythagoras."

Refer to Thomas's Dictionary of Biography for account of Pythagoras.

What is found in the work above referred to is substantially all that is historieally known of the Samian sage, one of the most remarkable men that ever trod the earth ; but, read in the light of the above communication from his spirit, after twenty-five hundred years above in spirit-life, how wonderfully do they display the secret of his undying influence over the gencrations of men who have succeeded him since upon the earth. We would call the reader's attention to the spirit's statement, that for six montlis his purpose had been frustrated, by the infernal influences which had overcone the medium, and taken him from the control of the intelligent and sage spirits who had been and were using him to give the truth to the work.

Important indeed is the assurance that in ancient times all sages were medimms, and drew their inspiration and profound knowledge irom the exhaustless fountain of Spiritual wisdom, now so ireely pouring forth its limpid waters of truth to cleanse and purify a priest defiled and grovelling world. To those calling themselves Spiritualists who would if they could, drag Spiritualisn down to the level of Christian superstition, and make its Jesus-myth its cap-sheaf, we would say; if we must gro back to ages of spiritual darkness to find a suitable character to lead or head the modern Spiritual movenent, there would he some sense and reason in adopting Pythagoras as that leader or head, but none whatever in adopting the mythical character, Jestr, whom no one ever heard of until nearly a thosand years after Pythagoras, was worshipped by the leamed and polished Greeks as the Saviour of mankind.

What the epirit says of the almost ineradicable effects of the ermonens religious trating of children upon the ensavement of spirit in the after life, is what has heen confirmed by thonsands of retuming spirits who hate come back amd testified thereto. Spirits whose intant minds were pusisucd with every kind of superstitious training have, with one accord, borne testimony to the ruinons eflects of their early training, of a religions mature. If there is such a thing an an munardonable sin, that sin is the one which every priest, minister, clergyman, and theirmistaken followers, commit, when they inculeate in the minds of children of tender yenrs, the theologieal falsefoods invented for the enslavement of the minds and eonserionces of mankind. To suth an extent has this crime beem perpetrated, that in the earliest embryotic stages of individual human development, the seed of superstition is implanted in the being to grow, develop, and eurse it, not only through its existence in its mortal body, but to follow it beyond the grave far into its spirit life. It is such important truthes as these that the spirits of the ancient sages and benefactors of the world, are latoring to loring before the present and future generations of earth's inhabitants.

AMMONIUS SACCAS.

"May the rays of the sun of Truth never he ohesured ly Ignorance. At the time when 1 lived at Alexandria, in ligypi, there was a general inguiry into the religions of all mations, and the presentation of their dillerent ereeds and beliofs; and the objeet of this was to aremmatate the umost wisdom pesible in the smallest space. Therefore Brahmans, Buddhishs, and folfowers of A poltonius of Tyana and D'otanom, and all lle It man ecy of coming events, but was simply a combination of the teachings of the Brahman and Buddhist orders of priests, to express a kind of Masonry well known among themselves; and was destroyed by St. Cyril at Alexandria. (That is, the copy that fell into his hands, one of the only two copies that were extant in my time.) And I taught concerning these mysticisms, calling myself and followers Mystics. Potamon was my teacher; and he taught directly from the books of Apollenius of Tyana. These teachings were a combination of all the religions then known, ont of which all the Christian gospels have been compiled. Christianity was not tirst taught at Antineh, nor was it tanght in the first or second century, but about 225 A. D.; and was taught at first under the name of Gnosticism. I do not know whether I will have power enough to finish to-day. [Will you come again and finish what you wish to impart?] I will try to, but to sum up all these deceptions, and errors through a man who is entirely ignorant of them, is rather diffieult. Gnostieism was taught by a Gnostic named Basilides, nearly similarly to what is contained in the Christian Gospels. He lived in my time, and his books came into the hands of those named, as the first Christian bishops, by Eusebius. But you need give no credit to Eusebius, or very little, except as to what relates to his time and fitty years previous. Apollonits of Tyana called his revelations by different names, in order to be understood in the different tongues of the mations he taught amongst. But his writings were altogether written in the Syriac-Cappadocian tongue and not in the Greek, as the translators of the Christian Scriptures pretend they were. It is diflicult to sum all these things up on account of not being able to give you corroborative evidence of the truth of what I say. There are numerous hooks extant that cannot be reached, and we do not know how you can get at them, because the priests, both Catholic and Protestant, have them hidden in their libraries. At Alexandria, in my time, there was a great deal of eontention-some saying I am a follower of Potamon-others, I am a follower of Ammonius, and so on; and the eontentions of these schools resulted in the destruction of a great amount of valuable manuseripts amongst themselves and their descendants. But I have stated enough here to-day to make plain the origin of Christianity. [You were a Greek, were you not?] I was a mixture of Greek and Cappadocian. That is, I was born of a Greek father and a Cappadocian mother at Alexandria; and in my early life 1 was nothing more than a common porter. [Were yon yourself a medium, and did you write and teach as a medium ?'] I tanght under spirit influences at times. [Were yon conscions then?] At times I was, atndat other times I was not. A great deal was written hy my hand that was not dietated hy my brains. [Wime your written teachings not destroyed, for they say yon heft mothing written?'] I left at half dozan serolls containing a deseription of these teachings, of diflerent bodies of menn, such as the Bralhuatus, Buddhists, Gymnosophists and the Eeleeties muler Potamon; and commented upon them, writing my opinion as to how far they were correct, and how far they were erroneons. These writings were not all destroyed; some of them are extant, hut they are kept ly leamed seholars fer their own bencfit. [How is it that you ancient spirits are engnizant of what has been done since your time, and what is in existence of those ancient books? How do you keep track of that?] We see the motives of those who come after us, and we wateh them. There is ant attinity between us and our writings, and the eonseguence is, we watht to see their efleet for good or evil, becaluse we feel that these eflects are a justification of our opinions while living on eartlı. Adient."

Lefer to Meclintock and Strong's ('yelopsediat of Eecelexitati(al Literature and 1)r. Lardner's work for accome of Ammonins Sileras.

It is truly amusing, hut pitiful, to read such theological flomateriags as that of the learned Dr. Lardmer, to argue away the fints that Ammonitus saceas, the Alexambrian philosopher, and the fomder of the Neo-llatenice arhose of theolugy, was the aththor of the "Fvangelleal (:anons," which Euschius of (:asarea afterwards followed; and that Ner-Platomi-n or the Eefectic system of theology and philosophys, not ouly antedated Christianity, but was the gromud work upon which the Christian system of superstition was erected.

If buschits, whe is the almos sole athority for the earliest

ian at all, but simply an Eelectic philosopher. The contradiction between these claims is only apparent. The Eclectic or Neo-Platonic, or Alexandrian School of philosophy, flourished more than a century before, the Christian designation was attached to, or substituted for, the philosophical canons and tenets established and taught by Ammonius saceas, and fo!lowed by Eusebius of Cæsarea. The protracted struggle for supremacy between the Neo-Platonists and the Christians, was to all intents and purposes, between those who honestly sought to show the mythological and philosophical origin of the socalled Christian Scriptures, and those who sought to conceal that essential fact by falsely pretending that those scriptures were a divine and new revelation of God's will to the human race. As, what is called Christianity, is nothing more nor less than the teachings of the "Heathen" philosopher, Ammonius Saccas, it was entirely proper for Eusebius, whose labor was directed especially to conceal the pagan source of Christianity, to call him a Christian. It was equally proper for Porphyry to insist that Ammonius was a "heathen" philosopher, who was willing the truth should be known as to the source of his. system of philosophy, as contradistinguished from the Christians, who in his time were seeking by every means possible, to conceal the heathen origin of their religion. What Ammonius wrote in the way of "Evangelical Canons" we can only infer, for they have been concealed, lost or destroyed; but as they were followed by Eusebius, and as Eusebius was most prominent in the Council of Nice, ( $325 \mathrm{~A} . \mathrm{D}$.) that established the Canonical seriptures of to-day, we may inter that the Evangelieal Canons of Ammonius and the Canonical Christian seriptures are the same. Thence, it becomes of the greatest interest to know what the "Evangelical Canons" of Ammonius. were. This we clam, the above communieation from his spirit through an uneducated medium, fully and satisfactorily settles.
space will not admit of any further collation of facts, all tending to show the substantial correctness of the statements made by the spirit, and identifying the spirit in a way that is incontrovertible. We can hardly overestimate the value and importance of the statements of this learned and truth ful spirit.

In closing we would call attention to the following corroboration of the correctness of Eusebius, in attributing the "Eran-gelieal Canons" which he followed, to Ammonius Saceas. The spirit says: "I left a half dozen serolls containing a deseription of these teachings, of different bodies of men such ats the Brahmans, Buddhists, Gymmosophists and the Eetecties under Potamon, and eommented upon them, writing my opinion as to how far they were eorect, and how far they were erroneons." What reason is there to question that the writings referred to hy the spirit ats left by him were the "Evangedieal ('moms." followed by Euschius? We can see none, and for the present must leare the subject there.

Caius Valerius Maximianus Galerius.  A Roman Emperor.

"T salite you ald:-However new this may be to moderns, (I mean the demonstation of the fare of a departed spirit manifesting itself through the physical or matural form of another) it was ohd when 1 liverl. I fought the Persims amd fought then fearlessly, but of all the people that I ever met whilst in the material form, there are none whom I inwore the goth to curse more tierely, than thase things called Christians. Why shombl I hate them so fiereely: Youshath haver my testimons. Oh! yo gods, what a patehwork his Christianity is. It is made up of the theories that they stole from all Pagan methology and ragan preepts, and combined them to construet that dammale refuge of theirs, to throw their sins upon :m innocent person-that is they erected a myth, amd them cheated their fellownen with their gexl-man. In spirit life, wheresent you tind in all the spheres of all religions that existed, sull a nest of hyperites, as the so-called (hristimes. It was myralt who, through my powers as a gemeral in the Roman army, mate lioctetian issue his fanmote ediet against the ('hristians. Because, thet ope to controversy, like the pagan prieste, they shideled themselves behime that dammable mambate: 'Thus saith the Lord,' and wanted to combine chareh and state. I fonght ior my lamrels I gatined thom hy overeming the chemies of my combtry, and I wanted no meddling priests between me and laritimate power, wou ly my own grood right arm. The destruction of Rome was achieved through Christianity, and I, a Roman Emperor, feel it my duty to say that these scoundrels, the Christians, were begging favors for their religion in every court where they could get an entrance. For all men of intelligence knew the story of Jesus Christ was nothing but the old story of Christos or Chrishna of India revived. And when called upon to show what they believed they could show nothing but the writings of Marcion and Lucian, Romans who stole the writings of Apollonius of Tyana. The Gospel of Marcion, in my day, was stamped with the name of Marcion's heirs in a direct line. For at that time, be it known to you, when a man died and there was no name attached to the writings he left behind him, they were designated by his name. In fighting a Persian general and capturing his camp, I captured the writings of Zoroaster, and Diocletian submitted them to a comparison with the writings of the Christians. The Christian writings were declared to be fraudulent, and therefore his bloody decree against them. There is now an infusion of Spiritualized matter in the air you breathe upon this planet that foretokens the destruction of Christianity. I gave my name through the controlling guide of the medium in order to utilize all the powers possible in this control-Caius Valerius Maximianus Galerius."

Refer to Thomas's Dictionary of Biography for account of Galerius.
Such is briefly the account of the man whose spirit returued after more than fifteen centuries, to explain what has been so carefully concealed by the Roman Catholic and Protestant priesthoods, the true reason of Diocletian's persecution of the Christians through his edict of 303 A . D. In order that the reader may understand the wonderful significance of that communication, we refer to McClintock and Strong's Cyclopredia for aceount of Diocletian.

The communication of the spirit of Galerins, throws a fiond of light upon the real cause of the issuing of those exterminating edicts of Diocletian against the Christians. It seems it was not until after the clefeat of Narses, king of Persia, by Galerius, that the edicts in question were issued. It is admitted that Galerius was instrumental in bringing about the issning of them. It is admitted that Diocletian submitted some propositions of Galerius, concerning the Christians, to a comncil of military and judicial oflicers, ant not to the pagan priesthood as he naturally would have done had the question been one of religion. And finally, it is admitted that the result of the deliberations of that council, was a judement that the selomes of the Christian priosthood, included the destruction of the Roman institutions, political is well ats religrious.

No one can thoughtfully read that commmmeation, by the light of the admitted facts of history, amd not be struck with the great prohability of its truthfulness, and authenticity. It Wats natural that (ialcrius should have felt so bitter a hatred towarl a class of men, whom he helieved to be the encmies of the IRonsan civilization. When, as he states, he captured the writings of Zoroaster in the eamp of the Persian king, and discovered their analogy to the Christian writings, he determined to use them to expose the fraud of the Christian priesthood, in bolding out this plagiarism of Persian paganism to the Roman people as the word of Gool. It would seem that the fraudulent mature of the Christian teachings were fuhy made out ly the eonrparison instituted hy Dioeletian, of the Zoroastrian and christian tencts, clogmas and doctrines, and henee the wise deeree of I ioseletian against the monstrous sebeme of deeption. It wouldalsosem that the ('hristian priesthood bave umbergone but listle ehange in all the centuries that have since rolled away; for we have them torday plotting to overthrow the repuhlican and liberal institutions of this conntry, as they did the then most advanced and benetieent institutions of the Fomman Empire.

Abstract

"I ADDRESS vou, monsieur :-I first made the acquaintance of one Edward Gibbon at Lusame, and we associated in a book which was a failure, called "Memoires de la Britagne," and afterwards I speak of him, in my Research into the Rise and Progress of Clristianity, and it called forth a work from Gibbon and myself called Eneas, The Lawgiver, in the Elensinian Mysteries ; and I was just as well convinced as a mortal, as I have since become as a spirit, that the Eleusinian Mysteries, helped to make up Christimity as at present set forth ; and those Elcusinian Mysteries were composed of books commemorative of the Grecian harvest home, and at the harvest time they ate or drank the blood of Bacchus in the juice of the grape in conjunction with eating the bread or body of Ceres, the Goddess of Corn ; and here you have the real foundation of the supper of Jesus. An investigation jnto the ancient Greek will satisfy any person of the truth of what I here assert. In the mouth of this Eneas are put the words that signify; "I am the bread and the life." He acts as the hero in the tragedy or affiars of life. This book is one that the Christians have done all they could to suppress. Ques. What was the title of the book? Ans. "Eneas: the Lawgiver of the Eleusinian Mysterics." Ques. Is itextant? Ans. Yes; but it is very rare. It is one of Gibbon's works, but difficult to find it. The clergy, after the death of Gibbon bought up all copies but what were in the hands of a few individuals, to prevent it from becoming public. Christianity as I find it in spirit-life, is a combination of Indian, Persian, Egyptian and Grecian mythologies ; and all that they set forth as being accomplished by their godiman Jesus, can be found in those ancient mythologice. Such Messieurs, has been the result of both my mortal and spirit investigations. I thank you, because I wish the truth to be known. [You are a thousand times welcome. It is for us to thank you spirits who come back here, to give this information about things that have been so covered up or destroyed.] It is just as necessary for us to give you the information, as it is for you to receise it ; because it is a law of recompense for the mistakes of those who have lived before you. M. Deyverdun is my name."

Refer to Biographie Universelle for account of Deyverdun.
Perhaps the time has come when those "Critical Observations" of Gibbon, will be of greater general interest than they were when the Christian elergy bought up that work, overthrowing W'arburton's hypothesis as to the divine authority of Moses as a lawgiver. It may yet be our privilege to ohtain that work, and give it to the warld, in a new edition, with such notes and comments as the work undoubtedly menits. Sut the striking feature of the commmnication of Deyverdun is, that our attention should be directed to this subjeet at this time and in this comnection.

Abstract

"I salete you, myNheer:-Has it ever crossed your mind that in all these communications that have been riven to you in regard to Christianity, that there is one gospel about which very little hats been said-namely, that of sit. Matthew. You have had commmatations in relation to the Gospels of sit. Luke or St. Lucian, of St. Mark or Sit. Marcion, and of St. John or Apollonius, but you have had none about the (iospel of sit. Matthew. As a student of the soralled soriptures, when in earth life I was struck by the fact that I could not find an original Goopel of st. Matthew. The other three gospels I found accomoded for in the way they have been explaned to yon. The ramon of this was that the Gospel of st. Mathew was a very different grosel from the other there, and originally. was written in the Hobraic-samaritan tongre. It is of Phenician origin and emboties the Plannician ideat of a god-andont, and in that tongue was known by the title of Matineag. 'The "ma" meant -pirit or life as it exists in the haman form ; the "thieu" is analogrons to the (ireek "thens;" and "o" is the evernating circle; and the whole word Mathiemo meant the spirit of (forl working in an cernal cirele. And it was so maderetond in the days of Basilides the Gaostic, about ? (x) A. 1)., whone writing were extant in the days of Famst of Fimstus, :ath were pablished he him. Inded this was one of the reasons why the prient-incareerated himathd levied ugen his  howewer, are still extant, one of which copies camm th my notiere. The whole of that work was aseribed to the action of the Buddhist council-of Zaiska I think it was called-held under the authority of the Hindoo ruler or king, Ardilua Babekra, a Buddhistic priest and king. It was the digest of the sisteen gospels of Deva Bodhisatoua, all teaching of gods or god-men who were regarded as saviours of mankind. This Mathieuo claimed to be the principal disciple of Deva Bodhisatoua, or supporter of the doctrine of Christos, in connection with one Arjoun; and that while the first was the St. Peter, the secnnd was the St. John of the Phœenician gospel of Mathieuo. This Phœenician version of the life adventures and career of Christos was accepted as sacred, and applied in their worship of their sun-god or god of fire, by the Phoenicians. There is a passage that you will find in the Christian Scriptures, of letting your seed pass through the fire to Molech. This Phœenician St. Mathieno accomnt of Christos fell into the hands of the Armenians, and became their sacred gospel as far back as the days of Abraham, and continued so until A. D. 350 , when it was adopted by the priests and ruters of Catholicism, who in order to get the Armenians to agree with or follow their doctrines, inserted in it the sacred seriptures, and this is the origin of the gospel of St. Mathieuo as I read it in the Armenian tongue. In my life I was what might be termed a Unitarian, or one-god man, and it was the knowledge of the facts I have stated that made me an opponent of the New Testament. The Armenian gospel which came into my hands I obtained from a Greek, Constantius by name. He had obtained it at a town in Armenia near the foot of Mt. Ararat, and he showed me that it was of Armenian origin. I tried to get it translated, which I found most difficult, because it was written before the time of Attila, the Hun, and was in a very ancient text. After a great deal of trouble I found an Armenian at the Hague, in Holland, who understood the ancient Armenian alphabets as they had been handed down from his ancestors, who explained their meaning to me. Faust had the same Armenian gospel of Mathieuo translated by one Joannes, but this Armenian copy was nearly the same as the Gospel of St. Matthew now. But I undertook to find the whole matter out for myself and through the assistance of the Armenian named, translated it into German. But it was never published, on account of the opposition of my children. I think the original and the translation could still be found by applying to one of my relatives, who has them in possession at this time. I died at Heidelberg in 1851."

Refer to McClintock and Strong's Cyclopredia of Eeclesiastical Literature for account of Paulus.

In view of the unanimous ancient testimony that the Gospel of Matthew was not originally written in Greek, and was written in a syro-Chaldaic tongue, it is marvellous that modern Christian priests should have committed the fatal blunder of claming that there was also an origimal Greek version of that (iospel. That the Greek version of the first Gospel should only be a tramslation of a Syro-Clabldean original, is a fact that settles the question for the other three gospels ats well. Being all of the same nature, as they appear in the Greek, they are equally eopies of translations of ofder originals in some other tongue. Being in Greek, they are the work of Mareion, Lucian and Apollonits, who were all educated Greeks, and who doubtless used the same original or originals in giving their repective versions thereof. The dam that Mathew ever wrote a Greck Gospe! is preposterous, for being a Jew, as is claimed, he could not have written in (ireek, being meducated even in the learned Hebrew tongue. It must not be forgotten that it is not elaimed that the original of Mathew was in the Hebrew of the learned priesthoos, but in the eommon tongue of Syria, ('appadocia, Messopotamia and I'alestine. It is known that Apollonius wrote in that conglomerate or mixed SyroChaldaic tomgue.

Thus do morlern Christian divines labor against truth reason, and common prodenee, to conceal the fact that the (iospel of Mathicuo, of the Buddhistic camons, afterwards adopted be the Phomicians, and still hater be the Armenian prosethex as their saced gocied, wats the original of the eomparatively modern (ireck camomical Gospel, acoording to st. Matthes. We have cited more than emough of christian ahnis-ions, to show that what the spirit of l'anlus clames in relation to the origin and nature of the canomiend (lhristian (ionel of St. Mathew, is not only prisible, but most probally, if wot certainly true.

From what drome has testitied in relation to a Nazarene or Fryangounel, as being identical with the (ionel of Matthew, as found in our reference to Dee 'lintoek and Sitong's ('Yelopsedia of Eeclesiastieal Literature, there is litthe dombt that :lome 2.5) 1. I)., as the spirit of lambes stater, the ('atholie priesthood semght to win ower the Armenian worshipers of the llindoo (Thrivos, ly ramonizing and adopting the Buhdhistic-A menitn gonel of Mathims. Fhomat the ropy of the Amenian movel of Mathieuo be found of which the spirit of Panlus speaks, it will be hardly worth while for the Christian priesthood to continue to insist that the first gospel, or the original one, has any claim to be regarded as a saered or divine book, and with its downfall, the other gospels, and the epistles will have to slare its fate. Bold, fearless and independent as was Paulus, the acknowledged leader of German Rationalism, and much as he wrote throwing doubt upon the authenticity of the New Testament ; he never made known his weightiest reason for impeaching the sanctity of that compilation of ecelesiastical plagiarism and deception. As a spirit he comes back and discloses that reason in the clearest and most satisfactory manner. From a learned doctor of this city, we have learned the fact that Paulus was opposed by his family and relatives without exception, which accounts for his suppression of his translation of the very ancient Armenian gospel of Mathieno,

The spirit's reference to a Latin or Greek translation of the Armenian Gospel of Mathicuo by Jomnes, for Faust or Faustus, and hisincarceration, and the confiscation of his book, can have reference only to the following fact as mentioned in the American Cyclopedia, article "Faust."
"At the sacking of Mentz, in 1462, by one of the two rival archbishops, Adolph, of Nassau, Faust's workmen were scattered, and the printing process, which had been kept as a secret in Mentz, was divulged by them in other countries. A short time afterwards, however, Faust was enabled to resume his operations."

Be that as it may, there is good reason to question the truth of the spirit's statement that he saw a copy of Faust's published translation of the Armenian gospel of Mathieno-confirmed as fully as his conmunication is by general historical facts in all other essential respects.

SIGEBERT HAVERCAMP.

"(GOOD) MORNING, SIR:-Let us not darken counsel with many words. It is this sentence that has caused the present chaos of heliefs. All truth is simple, and possesses the beanty of symmetry, whilst lying words need good memories to substantiate them. No man that ever lised, or perhaps who will live after me, devoted more of his time to the close analy wis of the Greek and Latin classies than myself. But after all the study of the manners and customs of the East, I find that there is nothing in Christianity but what existed before that word was even introduced ; and my anthorities can be found in any library without proceeding to the trouble of looking for more proof upon the real identity of such a mad ereation of mortal man as Jesus Christ. I knew it when here. I was false to my trust. Why? On one hand stood honor and preterment ; on the other hand stood disgrate and despair. The further I went into the investigation of the clains of Christanity, the more I became convinced that it was a dammable imposition. Finst from the writings, as translated, of a follower of Apollonius of Tyana, called Damis, and which wats extended at the Court of Tiberims ('esar, and was there written by one who has no historical name, called Allosius. This man had it direct from Damis himself; and this was in the postession of the socicte Bingraphipue, and it was submitted to me at Leyden by the Fremeh Embnsador. I examined it and returned it to them marked in (iomnan with this sentence that "Nostronger proxi could he had that Jesus Christ was Apollonins of Tyana, and ahast. P'an andsi. John, than isset forth in this manuserint," and I never saw it afterwards nor any one elso; but it was suhmitted to me simply berause I was the only one at that time, that held the key to the writiugs there expresed or set forth. [Was that writing the manusiripe of Apollonims:?] It was the writing of his disejple Damis. Now, I haw no donlt Gut that this manuseript exists, for I think that the one that was entrusted with it was of such an ambitions chatacter that he held it and left it to his heirs. [100 you remember who that was:?] I do not know whether you will tind his mame extant or mot, but he was knownas Perre Duramb, he kept it to extort money from the ('hristians or C'atholie elergy. [What porition
 the diphomatic corgs; and he was a mesemger. He was a good scholar himself, and understood the points that I had made there, and it was necessary to buy his silence. All those annotations of mine upon the characters in the Hebrew Bible, (the Old Testament) were muniticently paid for by parties interested in the propagation of Christianity. That is they bought me, to make them clear as possible, in order that they might be a standing reference to future gencrations. All these notes and comments have been a burden on my shoulders as a spirit; and I wish to add that I have something further to say, but I cannot get the proof, and I want to furnish you with the absolute proof. On some future occasion I think I can give you direct information that will tend to make all priests, both Catholic and Protestant think, to use an old-fashioned term, that "A hornet's nest has broken loose." But you see, in the first place, I have to feel my ground through this medium. That is, to be able to force my ideas in such a clear and lueid manner, that they can never be disputed hereafter. This is only an experiment for me, for what I shall do leereafter at a fitting opportnuity. You may sign me Sigebert Havercamp, Professor of Rhetoric in Leyden University. Died in 1742."

Refer to Biographie Generale, for account of Havereamp.

From the above account of Havercamp, it may be seen that he was a very learned man, in all that appertained to antiquadian literature or numismaties. He was, therefore, the person of all others who would have been likely to have been sought to explain the nature of the manuscript of which he speaks. It is this truly learned man's spirit that tells us, through the organism of a medium, who never heard of him, that his study of Op̧iental namuers and customs, convinced him, when on earth, that there was nothing whatever original about Christianity, so-called ; and that everything relating to it existed before the word Christianity was known. Yet such was the tyranny exercised over even the most learned men of his time, by those interested in propagating that superstitious delusion, that Havereamp did not dare to divulge the truth in relation to it, as he knew it to be. What but a curse has the Christian religion been to humanity? Rightly does the spirit of Havercamp characterize it as a "damnable imposition." But the great diselosure made by this spirit, is the fact that as late as the eighteenth century, a translation (we presume in Latin,) of the writings of Damis, the beloved disciple of Apollonius of Tyana, made by one Allosius, at the Court of Tiberius Casar, was still in existence. The spirit tells us that Allosius, the translator, had the original manuserijt directly from the hands of Damis himself. This translated work, it semms came into the Societe Biographique, of France, and was smimitted to Havercamp for examimation, as the person best calculated to determine its character and value. The spirit tells us that after examining it, he returned it to the French embasey with this sentence written upon it : "No stronger proof could be had that Jesus Christ was Apollonitus of Tyana, and also St. P'and and St. John, than is set forth in this manuscript."

CHARLES DE BROSSES.

" (ioob nay sir :-I was the first president of the parliament of Burgundy, about from 1760 to 1760 ; but it is not of that I wish to suak. It is in relation to my literary labors, rather, that I woukd speak. I wrote a work called The Worship of the Fetich (inds, the principal olyect of which was to show the belief of the African tribes in spirits. la-tead of intdividualizing them, they generalized them, suef at tho spirits of the air, of fire, of water, of lightning, stomms, eathothakes, ete, all of which they beliove ate evil spirits trying to ruin them through their destructive agencies ; the power of wheh they so well knews. But it is not of this beok particularys that
 ing myself, ever makertook to collect the writings of sallust.
 be him, and tried to put them in l lace, in order to stmply the missing parts. In puranime this work and examining the history of his times, the firs thinge that struck my attention was the matifest samenes of all religions. That is, I disomerend hat ('hristianity was a mixture of the premeding religions, and that it misered into the word mothity that was new, or mothing but what pagan martyry had died soores of times for mathtaining, before there wate ever a Christian martyr. And a most simenlar feature of those writings was the simple chanmes that hat berat mate in names. Fir-t there was a Brahm, then the Jutan Ahraham, then the Fegptian Hraham; all of these secoued to be the hero of the same talde. Then, in reformine to the writims of the prehistorie sanchoniathon, I foum that this same Brahm flourished as a god among the Phœnicians. Then we find, with a little alteration of idiom, the Grecian Bacchus, who was undoubtedy the same. And the striking analogy to the same original, of several other deities, can be traced by any patient student. If he proceeds further, those writings of Sallust will show him that the Christian religion was first put into its present shape by the librarian of Ptolemy Philadelphus ; I fail to recall his mame. [The ppirit doubtless refersed to Demetrius of Phalerus, the learned friend and librarian of the two first Ptolemies, who died after 283 B. C.] And that work was utilized by Apollonius of Tyana first, and Ammonius Saceas afterward. Ptolemy Philadelphus being a great scholar for his time, offered rich rewards for all kinds of manuscripts, or papyrus rolls; and learned men from all nations, impelled by their desire for the reward, came to Alexandria; and these, comparing their various religious books, found that but one religion ran through them all; a leading point of similarity being some doctrine regarding a trinity. This struck Ptolemy as strange, and he inscribed over the doorway of a temple this sentence: "Experience is the god of all morality:" If he had used the word guide instead of god, it would have been better still. But I never finished my work on Sallust, on account of disease; and after my death, in 1:i7, the Catholics were very careful to appropriate all my writings; and to keep them from the public, resorted to the mean subterfuge of pretending that they were destroyed in the French Revolution. Charles de Brosses."

In the Biographie Universelle will be found the only account we can find of historical facts bearing upon this commmication, there being no English reference to Charles de Brosses which contains any of the particulars referred to in the spirit's statement. But one reasonable conclusion ean be reached; and that is, that the spirit of Charles de Brosses, and no other spirit intelligence influenced that communication. In relation to the spirit's statement as to the nature of his treatise on fetich worship, how fully it is bone out by the historical account of it. The reader may see the mature of his researehes and their extent, and can form some judgment of his qualifieation to know whereof he speaks as a spirit. The fact that the writings of Sallust were so mutilated and scattered, shows that those who were engaged in that randalism had some special reason for that destruction. The wonder is, that the destruction had not been total instead of so partial and general. No doubt the Christian elergy, into the hands of whom the learning of the whole ancient world came, on the decadence and final suppression of anti-Christian learning, saw in those writings of Sallust just what de Brosses diseovered there, the fact painly diselosed, that their boasted Christian religion was but ancient paganism in a modernized dress, and that it had been put in shape by Demetrius, the Alexandrian librarian of Ptolemy Philadelphos, more than 293 years before the socalled birth of Jesus Christ. In relation to Sallust, Johnson's Universal Eneyelopredia says:
"Caius Sallustius Crispus, born in 86 B. C., at Amiternum, in the comntry of the sabines, of a wealthy plebeian family; was elected tribunis plebis in 52 ; expelled from the Roman senate by the censors on aceount of the dissipated and seandalous life he led ; reinstated in the senatorial dignity in 47 by being elected prator, probably by the aid of Caesar, to whose party he belonged, and whom he aceompanied to Afriea in 46 ; was appointed proconsul of Numidia, and returned to Rome loaded with riches; formed the magnificent lforti sallustani (garden of Gallust) on the Quirinalis, and lived in Iuxurions retiremont, devoting himself to the stady of history: Died at Rome 3 t B. C. Of his Historiarmm Libri Quingue only fragments are extant, but his Bellum (atilinarimm amd Bellum Jujurthinum have been preserved, and are much "ppreriated."

It will be seen, therefore, that if that history, by Gallust, in tive books, emataned the record of fouts, made before the alleged birth of Jesus Clurist, that showed that the religion now tanght in his name was substantially eompribed and arranged nearly three hundred years before that time; that its destruction as a history was a neeessity to the ('hristian clergy who were taching the Christian religion as original and new, as well ats divine.

CHRISTIAN THOMASIUS.

Jurist and Pietistic Philosopher.-Lecturer at Liepsic and Halle.

GOOD DAY, MYNHEER:-I have had my name announced, in order to save time, which is precious to us spirits while controlling. We want to say all that we possibly can, bearing upon the subject we intend to communicate about, without exhausting our forces in giving lames. After a thorough study of the Latin and Greek classics, I determined that the German people should have the benefit of reading these in their own language, and I was the first that really brought this about. But I was struck with a copy of Luther's revision, or a copy from the Latin which I read. Now, Martin Luther was a great priest and philosopher and none knew better than he, in spite of his exhortations to the contrary, that Jesus Christ was a myth, and that Apollonius of Tyana, was the saviour of the Christian New Testament; but as the century was dark in which he lived, he shaped a reform as best he could, under the circumstances. For if he had acknowledged the truth, he would have been instantly sacrificed to popular fanaticism; and at his death, he left papers certifying to what he really did know, in regard to the Christian Scriptures; and it was these papers that made the various schisms after his death. But from the days of Eusebius this Christian myth Jesus had such a hold upon the popular mind that it was impossible, for fear of death, to ofler any fact in relation to that myth; or in rebuttal of the lite, adventures, and character of Jesus. These reformers, seeing very little difference between Apollonius of Tyana and Jesus the myth, said it made no difference whether the myth was accepted or the other-it would all be rectified in the future spirit life; and this has been a fatal mistake for centuries, and one which will require all the gigantic eflorts of materialists of the present day to free themselves from, because they have been cheated, defrauded and deluded by those who ought to have been the true friends of mankind-namely the priests. But I, in my day, could not state to those who came under my instruction, what I really knew in regard to the astrological formation of all religions; and therefore spoke, at several times, with the hope that it would be understood in an allegorical sense; but there were few who had the patience to follow out what I suggested to them. As a spirit, I would say, that the German materialistic orders of to-day, would never have met with the progress they have, if Jesus of Nazareth, the myth, had been set hefore the people in the real life and adventures of Apollonius of Tyma. They woukd then have had a sulstantial historical hasis to point to, whilst to-lay, they, (the Christians) have none ; and therefore they throw themselves open to the opposition of materialists and the destruction of true Spiritmalism. This much for myself, with the hope that it will do good."

Refer to the Biographie (ienerale for aceomnt of Thomasius.
'The spirit speaks of Luther's revision of the Bible which was translated from the Latin, and testifies that in that work there was evidenee of the face that Jests Christ was a myth, and Apollonius of Tyana the real Saviour of the Christian New Testament. More than this, the spirit of the learned thomasius testifies that Luther left writings eertifying to the same fact among others which catused such a contlict of religious views after the death of that great reformer. The spirit further tells us that Luther and his followers said that they saw so little ditlerence between Apollonius of Tyana and Jexns the myth, they did not feel warranted in undertaking to destroy the Christian delusion which was set on foot by Euselius, in the leginning of the fourth century, and was continued until the time of Luther, when it became so tirmly rooted in the popular mind, that even the sturds and fearless lather did not dare to give what he knew to be the truth to the world, and satisfied their consedences by remitting to the spirit life the correction of the erross of the mortal life. This the spirit tells us was a mistake; but is it not a mistake that is being repated hy those persons whe, clatuing to be Epiritualists, are just as realy nows, as was Martin Luther and his fellow reformers in the lath eent tury, to cling to the ('hristian myth, against fact, reason, and truth: Thomasins teils us that, one humetred vears after the time of Lather, he could not state what he knew in relation to the astrologieal formation of all religions, but wats compelled to be ce.ntent to hint at that fare, and to hope that the time would fombe when the allegerieal meaning of them would he unter--tomel. But the most signiticant statement is where the spirit rmind the Christians that hat they set hefore the peophe It ant of Nizateth, the myth, in the real life amd adeentures of Spollonins of Tyana, they would have sitenced the prevalent Matorialiam of (inmatay.

SATURNINUS.

The Essenian Philosopher.-The Pupil of Ignatius  of Antioch.-The Master of Basilides, the  Founder of Gnosticism.

Abstract

"Peace and happiness be with you all. I lived and taught at Antioch from about A. D. 50 to A. D. 125 . I am set down by moderns as a Gnostic; and this mistake has been made purposely, in order to hide and destroy my real teachings. In reality I was an Essene, indoctrinated and taught by Ignatius of Antioch. At the time I lived and taught, the Essenes were the Christians, and the only Christians that existed at Antioch. I met and conversed and exchanged philosophies with Apollonius of Tyana and Damis his disciple. We were Communists, and all that you find set down as the teachings of Jesus of Nazareth were taught by me. They were obtained from Apollonius, who gave them to me in exchange for what I knew of the Gymnosophists, about A. D. 65. It was the revised statntes or mixture of Brahmism and Buddhism, as established at the great council of Asoka in India (the Brahmanistic and Buddhistic comneil of Nice) ; and it took place before my time about two hundred and fifty years. All of my writings were not original, but simply a review of the doctrines of my friend, in spirit, Stilpo, and of, what might be termed, Platonism mixed with Brahmism and Buddhism, whieh were in reality the fonndations of Gnosticism; and the man who built up (inosticism the year after my death, in A. D. 125 or 106 , was Basilides the Egyptian. He was of my school, and he fell heir to all my writings; and he completed or laid the foundation of (innsticism ont of these writings. But Gnosticism was unknown to me. I was an Essene, and once upon a time I visited Gallata and also Corinth ; and at both places I found Apollonius teaching under the name of Paulus or Paul. [Do you mean that lie was there teakhing at the time you were there teaching? I did not teach, myself, but I merely went there on a visit. A pollonins was teaching there then, and always accompanior his discourses with spiritual phenomena that you often see amongst your modern mediums, such as magnetizing a handkerchief for the eure of the sick; and euring eases of paralysis by laying on of the hands; and at the time when he whs in what they ealled the glorified state, forms used to appear like misty fates looking over his shoulders at the andience, similar to what the spirits are now trying to perform under the name of etherialization. This Apollonius was met at the Temple of Diana in Ephesths by the priests of that temple, who atsed him to hokd forth there, athd he dide so; and he tanght there with sttch power that the priests grew angry for fear of losing their power, and he had to quit Ephesus in the night-time for fear of being naturtered, or losing his life in some way. Becoming dissatisfied with the slow progress of my teachings, and all Syra being in an upror over the apmonthing War of the Jews, and many of my people being Jews, some of them left my societs. Fiome returned to it honored. I found throngh them that the Jewish Rabbi Gamaliel had introduced the philosophics, both of myshand of Apollonitus at Jerusalenn ; and that he had attributed them to the lewish prophet Hagrai, amd he called it by a mame similar to his, Hagiographa, which meant the sayings and doings of this Jewish prophet ; as if he had sain, that they were given through him ats a medime by the spirit of A pollonits. If: did this in order to give the credit of this p!alesophy to the Jews; lut the real truth in relation to all thes writines, athd all the story of Jeant of Nazareth, as now handed down to moderns, is the mixed systems of the Brathmonic, the Buddhistie, the Jewinh, the E-senian, and the (inastic teachinge. And these varions syatemsall tanght that every fistr handerd years a philosopher arives who combines the highest ageromeration of intelligenee or his day and generation by obscure individuals, and are very hard to find. I left a document translated from the Syriac-Cappadocian tongue that I translated verbally as it was given to me by Apollonius, at the time of my meeting with him at Antioch. [Translated into what language?] A mixture of Hebrew and Armenian was the language used at Antioch in those days. [You say you translated it from the Syriac-C'appadocian language ?] I took it down as it fell from his lips, in that tongue. He, A pollonius, through his superior spiritual insight, held direct communication in my presence with the spirit of Gautama Buddha. [Do 1 understand yourightly? You were present when A pollonius was controlled by the spirit of Gautama Buddha?] Yes. [Please state what the nature of the communication was?] This Gautama went on to say, through his instrument, that all that he received was given through the spirit or the overshadowing of the spirit of Krishna; that this Krishna said he received it from Zoroaster the elder; and Zoroaster the elder said that he received his notions of Ormuzd, the light, and Ahriman, the devil or evil, from a spirit who had lived, and was a king in Messopotamia, two thousand years before his time, but that all their followers had corrupted their sayings, and claimed that they received them from God himself. And, so there was a connection in the control of this Gautama Buddha with ancient spirits occupying 16,500 years. [Rumning lack through all that period?] Yes. [Buddha said this?] Yes. Through Apollonius ; and these systems or spirit teachings were all cases of originating religions in isolated civilizations-that is at the time of their being taught, they had reached their height of grandeur, and then came on their decay, and their writings were stolen by barbarians. And thus the one history of aflairs run through all the ancient nations. And now I must bear witness to the principat point of my coming here. I knew of no Jesus who lived at that time and was killed, with the exception of one who was run through with Roman javelins for being it bandit : and I am certain that he knew nothing of philosophy. There were other men named Jesus, but they were not killed. [You lived during the time when it was said Jesus of Nazareth taught, which was about from 32 A . D. to 36 or 37 :'] I lived shortly after that. I commenced teaching at the age of twentyone. I lived until A. D. 125. I met but once only, and that was at Alexandria, the great Jewish historian Josephus. IHe mentioned to me in the course of our conversation, which was altogether about spiritual thing:, he having been initiated with the Essenes, nothing about Jesus of Nazareth. He said he had learned that Gamaliel had appropriated my philosophy and teachings, but that he was too proud a Jew to attribute them to a philosopher then living, and so he phagiarized my philosophy in the name of Haggai. He said he did not think that it was doing me justice. I sad I eared little how the truth survived, so it only did survive the then turbulent times. The apostles of this Jesus I never met. If they had existed at all, I certanly should have met them. But this Damis, the disciphe of A pollonins, had seventy follow diseiples then seattered through (irece, Syria, Ammenia and the Roman provinces, teaching the life, styings and doings of Gatatama Buddha, as explained by Apollonius of Tyana; and the anabog between the teachings of Jesus and Buddha ean be found to be very plain by reading even the modern Buddhist book called the "lath of Virtue," but which has been so tampered with by ('hristians, that they have destroyed a great deal of its real purpert, as it comes to you to-day. But if you were in India, and would ohtain from a Buddhist, the real "Path of Viatue," and have it translated by men who are not afraid to translate it, you would find that the morality of Jesus is the morality of Buddha. And I have one word more to say. It is a reflection upon a man now living, in whom the greatest trust is placed as to what he says; and whose transations you can challenge with perfect impmity, and that man is Max Muller. He is too much identified with the Christianity of to-day, to give the ancient religions a fair chance of being understood. Fours for the truth, saturninus. [Let me say to you, betiore you leave, that by that communication, you have plated this word mader an obligation greater than any returning spirit ever phaced it under, in the past.] I hope you will suceed in ridding the world of my earthly teachings, and the erroneons teachinge of others. Still out of the rough conditions of the present, will come the smooth conditions of the future."

 pertant truth than thal saturninus, when hesaid: "The real truth in relation to all these writings (the ('hristian seriptures) :ath all the story of dent of N:atareth, as now hamdel duwn to moxterns, is the mixed ystems of Brahmanic, Buddiotic, Jew-

 We may safly clam that sand an array of evidnay wat never presented to settle any point of human inquiry, that was more conclusive and unanswerable.

Another interesting point of the testimony of Saturninus is the fact that it was taught as a common doctrine of all the ancient religions, that every four hundred years a philosopher arises who combines in himself the highest agglomeration of the intelligences of his day and generation. This rule seems to have been sadly disproved after the establishment of the Christian religion, which seems to have been established for the sole purpose of preventing all further human progress. For want of time and space, we cannot dwell upon what the spirit of Saturninus says about the Christian destruction, mutilation and concealment of ancient manuseripts bearing upon all these important points. Nor is it neeessary we should; for every one who has sought for the truth as it was in ancient times, must have been made painfully aware of that Christian vandalism. We must hasten on. But how can we over-estimate the value of the spirit's statement, when he says: "I left a doeument translated from the Syriac-Cappadocian tongue, that I translated verbally as it was given me by Apollonius, at the time of my meeting with him at Antioch." What would not that translation of the writings of Apollonius be worth to the cause of truth, could it be had to-day? To have the assurance of the spirit that it onse existed and has been destroyed or concealed, is enough to show that it was too important to the perpetuation of falsehood to be allowed to be preserved.

ROBERT BELLARMINE. Roman Catholic Cardinal Archbishop.

"My salutation to you, my friend, to-night shall be: Death is the great avenue to truth. During my mortal life no one did more to maintain the power of the popes in temporal atlairs than myself; and I was a most ardent Catholic. I will here state that if you can hold out here to-night, a veritable Catholic pontifl will follow me, who lived in the sixth century, while I lived in the Sixtemti century. He will give you some prealiar views and light that I camot give; and he will come here because I have prepared the way for him ; for the stronger the materiality of a spirit is, the better able it is to demonstrate itself to mortals. The less material it is, the less it can do so, unless supported by spirits of a more material nature. [Here the spirit pointed to a remarkable oil painting, hanging in the rom, on which was the following writing: "The Nazarene, painted by Raphacl. Medimm, N. 13. Starr." [epresenting Apollonius of Tyana.] That is the Charistian's saviour. Fou ought to have a hundred thousand photographic copies of that picture made, to show the people who the real Jesus was. I wrote aganst the ent croachments of the temporal power upon the rights of the popes, by reason of which I lost my power and became what yom may term an exile. After two hundred yars in spirit life, I can mee a part of the Mohammedan ereed, and saly : 'There is no (iod and mo one is his propliet. liy that 1 me:n, that all mortal thesh mas, at times, be imbued by the spirits; hat that no particular spirit, when weighed in what may be temed the philosophers scales-that is, the scales of reason-hats any advantage at the timal reckoning, over other -pirits. Whateror your condition in mortal life may be, it is only a thetion of changing comditions and enviromments, and you beame : dilferent peran. While on the mortal phase yon may le able to command succese, but change to the spirit state, and wit will hate to lean upon some other spirit for suceosis. I internded, when I :ame here, simply to sty, that throngh mething a latin work, written hy a monk, (who will spatk heme, if he has a chaner), 1 knew that ( Chintianity, in the tirst, second and thitd centurise rested solely upon the doctrines of $A$ pellonits of Trana :mal banildes the (inontic. interningled with blatoniam.

But, as well might the solid rock, standing upon the shore of the ocean, attempt to keep the mighty waves from beating against its breast, as for a mortal to have attempted to tell the truth about Christianity in the sixteenth century. This I say here to-night, and I say it under compulsion. [Here the spirit made the medium rise from his chair and in seeming agony of conscious wrong-doing asked.] Under the compulsion of whom? Under that of no single spirit, but by the disappointed hopes of millions, who believed and trusted in Christianity. It is by them I am compelled to come here to-night."

Refer to McClintock and Strong's Cyclopaedia for account of Bellarmine.

It was the spirit of tlis learned and influential Roman Catholie Jesuit priest, both bishop and cardinal, that returns and testifies that he, as recently as the latter part of the sixteenth and beginning of the seventeenth centuries, knew that Christianity in the first, second, and third centuries, consisted of the doctrines of Apollonius of Tyana, the doctrines of Basilides the Gnostic, and the doctrines of Plato; but that he did not dare, cardinal as he was, to make known what he knew about those matters, when in the mortal form. The Latin work to which he referred was a work written by a monk, John of Damascus, or Joln Danasceuns, as he was called. In relation to the spirit's defence of the papal rights against the encroachments of the temporal power, we cite Chambers's Encyclopædia:
"In his work, 'De Potestate Pontificis in Temporalibus,' (On the Pope's Power in Secular Matters), he introduced the doctrine that the pope must be held as supreme over all kings. On this account the book was held as treasonable in Paris, Venice and Mentz."

It is to this condemnation of his teachings that he refers, when he speaks of having become, as it were, an exile. It would seem that the main purpose of the coming of this spirit was to prepare the way for the coerced communication of Pope Hormisdas, who will follow. Surely the battle for truth has been won, when such learned spirits as Robert Bellarmine are compelled to return, to thus bear testimony for truth, and against error.

HORMISDAS. A Roman Catholic Pontiff.

"Well, as Lord Bacon says I must come here, I suppose I must ; but may the devil take you all. [This was said after a terrible resistance on the part of the spirit, and after much persuasion on our part.] If you had hed power for thirteen hundred years, you would not feel like laying it down here tonight. If what I labored for and consummated, had been followed up by my successons, your infidels would not have dared to send your bold, daring and vindictive spirits over here to tight us. I united the Greek and Roman Churehes after they had once separated. And I lay all the folly of these intidels to the fools who afterwards broke that mion. ('urse the truth ! Damm the truth! I would lie to you, but I eammot. I am fored to tell the truth hy two spirits who stand wateln here-A pollonitus of Tyana and Lord Bacon. I knew that Eusebins was a forger upon the writings of Apollonius of Tyana. I know that Eusebins was a seoundrel. I know I was a sooumded myself. Oh, spirit peyehology ! how great is thy power! I was one who hedped to destroy Marcion's Epistles, known in my day at the Pabline Epistles, whieh were mothing more than eopies of the writings of Apollonius of Tranas, under that name. They were entitled, to the (abatians, Thessalonians, Corinthians and also Revelations. The Fpistle to the Romams was considered spurions heym. In my day Jeans ('hrist was worshiped in the form of a Lamb; and shortly after my time this symblel was altered ly (onstantins Pogonatus to the ('rose, to conceal his astro-theological origin. Romaniom is Paganism (-hanged into (hriatianity. I knew this, and I helpeal to demtoy many copies of the writings of Apollonins, and of his dis(eppe Damis, and also of the writings of Basilides the (inostio. And I destroyed them for the worst of all reasons, namely, te secure power. I haw todd all I know. [17 me the spirit made a great efliort to break from the control, but he was formal to whose ancestors had known and convered with Apellonits of Ty:mat when the latter was living, and therefore hat ponitive evidenee that Apollonitus not only lived, hut that he wrote the ('l.ri-tian (an-pus; just as you have positive evidenee that yonr feorer. We did what we could to make this spirit feel that he had done a righteous act in diselosing what he had done, and assured him that it would redound to his own good as well as the good of humanity. We asked his leave to take his hand, which he granted; and with our hands clasped, we again appealed to his better nature, and at last succeeded in bending his iron will. With great emotion he said: "I came cursing you, and cursing truth. I leave, blessing you for your patience and fraternal assurances."

Refer to Biographie Universelle for account of Hormisdas.
The spirit of this ambitious and politic pope was most reluctantly foreed by the psyehological power of liberal and advanced spirits, to come back and testify to his mortal knowledge of the spariousness of the Christian Scriptures ; and his obstinate reluctance, after 1300 years in spirit-life, to confess that faet. So completely had his love of power possessed him, that notwithstanding that long probation in spirit-life he was as ready to conceal his soul-corroding seeret, as when in mortal form he wielded the power of the Chureh of Rome. The spirit speaks wisely when he says, the division of the Christian Churches of the East and West, after he had united them, had hastened the downfall of the Catholic power in spiritlife ; and reduced it to sueh a state of abject helplessness, that the spirit of one of its proudest and shrewdest pontifts was brought a helpless captive to the eonfessional, there reluctantly to be forced to confess his ecelesiastical offences. Had the union of the Greek and Roman Churches been preserved, there is no knowing how long the advent of Modern Spiritualism would have been delayed, and the reign of Christian superstition and bigotry have been maintained.

Hormistlas tells us that he knew Eusebius was a forger and a scoundrel, and admits that he himself was as dishonest as was Eusebius. He states the fuet that the Epistles of Mareion were in existence when he lived A. D. 525 , and that he knew them to be copies of the writings of Apollonius of Tyana, Basilides and Plato, and that he helped to destroy those writings. He tells us that Jesus Clurist was worshipped in his day, as a

Lamb, and to conceal the astro-theological significance of that Zocliacal symbol, the crucifix, or crucified man was submitted in the reign of Constantias Pogonatus-all of which is certanly, historically true. No crucified man was thought of by Christian pricets and prelates until the latter part of the seventh ecntury, when the Sisth Council of Constantinople substituted the erucified or erossified equinoctial Lamb, by a erucified man to symbolize the Cliristian worship. This substitution took place A. D. 680, fifty-seven years atter the death of Pope Hormisdas.

Another undoubtedly true confession of Hormisdas is, that he helped to destroy many copies of the writings of Apollonius, of Damis the disciple of Apollonius, and of Basilites the great Alexandrian Ginostic. It therefore seems highly probable that as late as A. D. 525, there were still many copies of the writings of those true and real Fathers of Christianity; those pagans, as the Christian Clergy of later times have been pleased to call them.

APPIAN.

A Roman Historian.

"To searel for the truth persistently will always, in the end, bring sucess. That will be the prologne to my commmane: tion here to-day. In my mortal life I aeted as a collector and manager of internal revenues, mader Trajan Hadrian and Antonims litus, at Alexandria. Duriug that time I conversed with all elasies of people from all the Roman provinces and all the combtries that the Romans hat contured and hedd; and 1 fomm that the religion that was the most in antagoni-m with the religion of the Roman prienthood, went under the name of E-anhanism. Thim religion was formulated by Imatins of Antioch, Apollonius of Tyanaz athd Basilides, the Alsexatrian (inestie. This religion interfered only with the interests of the proses. As far as the mimprors, Trajan, Hadran, und Antonimis Pint were eonerned, they cared little or nothing for either refigion. They leaned toward the philosophy of Plato. In fact they were followers of Platonism, and cared very little for the priests who adhered to the pagan gods, Jupiter, Mars, ete. But in my time I never heard the name Christian mentioned. It is true there were followers of the Hindoo Christos at Alexandria at that time. [Why was the Hindoo god called Christos and not Krishna?] The religion I mention was a mingling of the doctrines of the Hindoo Gymmosophists, with the teachings and doctrines of one Apollonius (not Apollonius of Tyana), He was of Alexandria and the Greek modification of the name Krishna, made it Christos. During my life I wrote twentyfour books upon Roman history, about half of which are now extant, covering the time from the earliest history of Rome to the days of Augustus; and I added thereto by way of suffixes the annals of events in each country, from Augustus to the close of Antoninus Pius's reign. And because these latter writings embraced the time during which it is clamed Jesus Christ lived, and the Christian church was founded, and because I found no occasion whatever to make mention of either of them, these writings were destroyed by Christians in the days of Constantine the Great. All those destroyed writings can again be produced, provided I can find a medium whose hand I can control to write. Through such a medium I could reproduce these writings, and I intend to do it. I am seeking for such an opportunity. I also want to say, that in those days there were many persecutions of the followers of different sects and isma, and those who suffered the most were the Essenes. They had brought the modified doctrines of the Hindoo Gymmosophists to Alexandria and Rome, and they were persecuted for the reason that their teachings disturbed the eren tenor of the pagan priesthood by their consersions. When they abstained from the propagation of their doctrines they were not persecuted under the reigns of the three emperors under whom I ofliciated. I met with a man whose name I cannot now recall, who wrote a biography of Apollonius of Tyana, but who was not Damis his disciple; he showed me some of his manuseript, and we conversed upon this subject. [The spirit most probably referred to Moeragenes who wrote a Biography of Apollonius.] He said, at that time, that at Rome he would show me that what he said was the truth; and this he did through a Dacian slave, who became controlled in my presence, when I satw this Apollonius of Tyana, and conversed with him as a spirit. I never disputed any of these things, but 1 was more of a stoie philosopher, than anything else. [How late did you live on the earth?'] I lived until about 161 A . D., and during my life managed the affairs mentioned for the three emperors I have spoken of. 'There were four sects of the Essenians. One of them sprung from Ignatius of Antioch, who at times ealled themselves Igmatians. These differed from the other sect chiefly in relation to the communistic life, where all things were possessed in eommon; but Apollonius was the man who created the greatest ferment in matters of religion in those days. [You have mentioned four sects of the Exenians. Who were the others:] They were the Jewish Essencs and the (iymmosophists proper, who beeame the Ginostics of later times. It is hard to express all you have to say in so short a time. Essenianism took the shape of Gnosticism about A. D. 200, forty years after my time, and was fully established by Ammonius vaceas. He was the real father of what sou now call ('hristianity-that is, he placed it in the shape, or very nearly so, that it now occupies. I might finish this communication by saying that these books of mine-I mean my historical books-were written without any prejndice in regard to any religion then existing. I simply noted down impartially such events as were authentically attested, or observed by me; and for that reason what I wrote has not been allowed to come down to you, and to bring to you the real light and truth in regarl to Christianity. I thank you for this hearing.

Refer to Smifh's Dictionary of (ireek and Roman Biography for aceount of $A$ ppian.

The epirit tells us that he was informed of the nature of the life and labors of Apollonins of Tyana, by Moemgenes, or some other writer of his biographer, who proved the fact that Apollonils was aspiritualist, by having him to materialize before him as a spirit, through the medimmship of a barian slave at Rome. Appian did not tell us whether he published that fart in any of his writings; but if he did, it sealed the fate of the book in which it apreared.

Now, it is eerfatin that Fisemianism was the (ireen-syman outcresth of the (igmmosophism of India; it is certain that it was modified by Istatias of Antioclh, Apellonins of 'Tyana, Saturninus and basilites, matil it tow the tom of (inoticisum at Alexandria; it is rertain that (inosticism was moxlitiod hy Potamon, Ammonins the Peripatetie, amt Smmonins sareas, matil it lexame merged in the parely spiritual teachinges of Nom-llatoni-m ; and as such, for more than three eenturios, it is certain that it mantaind a deanerate struggle thromgh Flotinus, Porphyry and their tianiples, agamet the meremary the help of ome of the most crued and eriminal rulers that ever wielded the Roman sceptre, Constantine, at last gained the ascendeney, and the spiritual religion of the Neo-Platonists, was swallowed up by the Christian anaconda, which from that time, pretended to be identical with its swallowed victim. Such was the inception of that mighty ecelesiastical reptile, the Christian Chureh, that has so long and eruelly coiled around the suffering souls and bodies of earth's children, through so many generations.

We close by notieing one other point of this rery important spirit testimony. We allude to the mention of the fact that the Gymmosophist religion in relation to the Krishma of India, wasmodified by Apollonius of Alexandria, and thus the Hindoo Krishma became the Greek Christos. It is interesting to know who this Apollonius was. We take the following concerning him from Smith's Dictionary of Biography:
"Apollonius, surnamed Dyscolos, that is, the ill tempered, was the son of Mnesithens and Ariadne, and was born at Alexandria, where he flourished in the reigns of Hadrian and Antoninus Pins. He was one of the most renowned grammarians of his time, partly on account of his numerous and excellent works, and partly on account of his son, Aclius Herodian, who had been educated by him, and was as great a grammarian as himself. Apoltonins is said to have been so poor, that he was obliged to write on shells, as he had no means of procuring the ordinary writing materials; and this poverty created that state of mind to which he owed the surmame of Dyseolos. He lived and was buried in that part of Alex:mrlia which was called Bruchimm. Bat maless he is confoumbed with Apollonins of Chalcis, he also spent some time at Rome, where he attracted the attention of the emperor Mareus Antoninus."

This Apollonius of Alexandria was not only a contemporary of Appian but his fellow townsman and author. The spirit therefore speaks of what he knows personally when he states that this Apollonius treated of the religion of the Gymmosophists and modified them to suit his Greek views. Sueh incidents as these serve to confirm the anthenticity of this and other communications from ancient spirits in the most remarkable and striking, if not unanswerable manner.

In these biographical references are found ample matter to show who St. Bonaventura was, and what was the nature of his literary labors. It must be manifest to those who attentively read those biographical references to him, that this learned Catholie prelate had a very clear understanding of the Oriental origin of the writings known as the New Testament, and the mystical and allegorical, if not the mythological and astrotheological nature of the Holy Scriptures, as they were called. If the communication which purports to come from the spirit of this sainted Christian is authentic, and the statements it contains are true, then it is certain that Apollonius of Tyana, the pagan philosopher, was the Saint Paul of the Christian Seriptures, and the religion he taught was that of the Hindoo Krishna, by the Armenians, C'appadocians and Syrians called Christos. That St. Bonaventura had such writings placed in his hands for examination, is certainly not in the least improbable, for it is a well known fact, that many ancient works remained extant down to the time when the discovery of the art of printing threatened to disclose to mankind, the truth as to the pagan origin and nature of the Christian religion. From that time both Catholie and Protestant priests, exerted theraselves to destroy or conceul everything that would betray the seeret on which their hold on power over the human mind depended. From the writings of Bonaventura, it is evident he understood the true nature of the Christian religion, and it is admitted that he sought to ameliorate the intellectual and moral condition of the people of his time, a most unusual phase of priestly desire. View the matter as we may, and the authenticity and truthfulness of the communication becomes more and more plain. It is nardly possible to overestimate its significance.

After six hundred years, the spirit of Saint Bonaventura, comes back and makes a disclosure, which it would have cost him his life to have made at the time he was on earth. We would be reereant to a most solemn duty did we not at whatever eost, give these too long erushed amd hidden facts to the world at this time. To the spirit workers, who secm to have chosen the for the discharge of this duty, we must saty you shatle be leard. In relation to the valuable deposits of literary treasure anong the Maronite Christians of Mt. Lebanon, we have every reason to know, that they are there. The time may come when they too will be forth coming in the interest of truth.

A Learned Dominican Friar.

Abstract

"I know not whether to statue you in a dozen different tongues or not. But to use a blending of Italian and English: Bellisimo the Truth! the beautiful Truth. I was known in a priestly way as Amins of Viterlo, a Dominican Friar, in the latter part of A. D. 1400 or the begiming of 1.500 ; and by vote was seleeted to an offiee which I falthed honestly and consei(antonsls, and which proved my death warrant. All the manusoriptic contaned in the Colbertine Library were stimnted tome, to see what I eouh obtain from them tor the strpert of the ('atholic: religion. Although mg history is not given as fully as I shali now explatin it. I eome to do grom in aceordathe with spirit direntions amd with what it i-me de-ire to tultil. But enongh will be foumd to subatantiate what I suy to rontorday. What were those mann-eripts in the collorthe dibrary that were submitted to me for trathation " is the question; athl it shall be answered by me as a opirit, defintely, as 1 hane for foture happines. Thes were the remains of the Whexandrian Library, ats tirs appropriated by ionstantine the drat, and afterward in the sixth cotatery, of somewhere after that time, by (atiph omar. Those mannsoripts wore all fombladon the doetrime of another spirit, who, howeerer mush her may be di-puted in the ammals of history, or howewer math Lue may be forked upro :ast myth, laid the fommation of the sreat facts which I hall state here todas. Ha lived before Mizraim, thed he started ont with this pmorent asertion ; that mo life (an exist withent hat. Hat is the gevernine 1 timeiple of exi-tence, and it comses tront that ghorions light-the sum, that lighteth every man that cometh into the world. And again these manuscripts say: "As I find a decline of virtue in this world, I shall raise up an individual to reinstate it. [What was the name of that ancient writer ?] As set down by Zoroaster it was Sumni or Ormuzd. But Sumni was the god of at least three dynasties before the time of the edder Zoroaster, of whom I an now speaking; and the spirit who will follow me to-day, Mizraim, who is set down in history as the founder of the Egrptian government, will tell how false it is. It is necessary that our communications shall interlock, in order to be understood. After a careful analysis of all these gods, and godsystems, I found that the principal point upon which they all centered was about 280 B. C. at the council Asoka in India-a Buddhistic council ; and that out of the proceedings of that council, Ptolemy Philadelphus, some thirty-three years later than that conncil, had them translated by his distinguished librarian, Demetrins of Phalerus, who was the real collector of the Alexandrian Library ; and that at the court of an IndoAssyrian king, [Plaraotes no doubt.] Apollonius of Tyana, blended the full and clear doctrines of the Brahmans and Buddhists with the books of the Platonic doctrines, both of the East and the West ; and in this combination of doctrines, he taught an ideal character, almost similar to that of the modern description of the Jesus of Nazareth. His (Apollonius's) teachings, however, were a combination of the systems of all religions known to him, from the days of Mizraim, down to the time of Ptolemy Philadelphus, when it first took shape. Plato received the impressions, and taught those doctrines through his mediumship. [Was Mizraim his spirit control?] I will explain it. You must know, that there are thousands of millions of spirits on the other side who had been taught the doctrines of Brahma and Buddha, and who existed in the past. These spirits in mass overshadowed Plato, and produced in Greece a kind of reform on the Indian philosophies. Now all these things that I here mention I published in seventeen books of antiquities; and the consequence was, I was poisoned by Ciesar Borgia for doing so. He destroyed my life and confiscated my works because I proved too much for the place in which I was situated. I first took an oath that I woukd fulfil all the requirements asked of me, and as I was considered one of the best linguists of my time, I performed the work faithfully. The result was that my life paid the forfeit. [Now let me understand clearly, for it is very important I shoukd do so. You say the manuscripts of which you speak are in the Colbertine Library, and that they demonstrate and prove the facts to which you have referred?] Yes. [What language were they written in ?] At the time I translated them they were in the Egyptian, Syrian, Samaritan, and other ancient tongues; and there were some also in the Armenian and cappadocian languages, copies of the older original writings of Alizain. That is they purported to be so, how truly I to not know, but they were dated in the first Egyptian dynaty. These Egyptian mamuseripts 1 transated by the aid of the key that I saw at the entrance of the ameient temple of Apollo at Rome. That inseription key was covered at one time with a thin conting of phaster, but had become bare in my time. The signs there given ats relating to Osiris and [sis of the Egyptians, I found nsed in those mannseripts. And it lookedas if the Egyphians had really built that temple for the Romans, instead of the Romans building it for themselves. I died through violence in the way I have stated in 1502 A. D."

Refer to the Nouvelle Biographie Generale, and for works of Amins of Viterlo to the Biographie Universclle.

We have given these references to Annius and his works, so that the reader may judge for himself the inconceivable intportance of spirit return, in establishing the truth in relation to the history of the hmman race prior to the time when the Christian priesthoed obtained possession of the literary treasures of the more ancient world, and begsan their work of destruction, concealment, alteration and perversion of that anciont literature. Who can read that commmacation by the light of all the eollateral facts, and question the anthenticity of that commanication? When it was given, we had not the fantest conception of its vast impert, and queried as to its probable value. Jubge then of own amazement when its great and inappreciable importance beeame manifest as the result of our subsempent insestigation of the collateral corroberating facts! This spirit tells us that the manuseripts he tramslated into the Latin tongre are now in the coblertine hibrary, which, if a fact, menst settle the trathfulnes not only of Annins as a spirit, but as a mortal as well. In order that the reatior may know what the Library of collort is, we will refer them to the article "Libmaris," for history of Collort's work, to the Encechomedia Britannica.

Wi. hase gonde to considerable trouble to look up the historical references piven above, bearing upon this important testimony, so that our readers will be able to readily turn to them and examine for themselves what is extant in history that they masy get an adequate dea of the nature of the undenbed genuine works of ancient authors which Annius has preserved in his inestimable work; and which the Christian Chureh and Christian writers have vainly sought to discredit and render useless. It is too late for these Christian slanderers of the learned, honored and trasted Amnius to make him appear a eredulons fool, and one who was so little fitted for the diseharge of the great trust imposed ${ }^{*}$ upon him by the most distinguished and learned men of his time, as to be little less than idiot, it what they say of him is even partially true. How men of any discernment conld have been hoodwinked into depreciating the learned labors of Annius, as Christian writers have done, can only be aceounted for on the seore of mental and moral imbecility, resulting from their desire to escape the logic of facts which militate against their preconceived views.

The spirit of Annius tells us that after a careful analysis of all those ancient writings he found that they all centered upon the labors of the Council of Asoka held in India, about 280 B . C., and that it was the proceedings of that conneil translated into Greek by Demetrius of Plaalerus, the great Librarian of Ptolemy Philadelphus, which were afterward blended by Apollonius of Tyana with the doctrines of Platonism, out of which the ideal character of a saviour, similar to that of Jesus of Nazareth was first formulated. It appears that Plato was a medium, and was influenced by the spirits of more ancient sages and philosophers, to promulgate the teachings he did. If it should prove that there is among the Colbertine manuseripts a manuscript of Manetho in the Egyptian, and not in the Greek language, it will be useless for any one to question or deny the authenticity or truthfuhness of this communication of Annilus. That there is sueh a manuseript there, as well as a Chaldaic version of Berosus, we feel confident. It seems certain that if in $1 \approx 20$ to 1230 there is positive mention of the manuseripts of Berosus and Megasthenes, it shows that the probabilities are that they eame into the hands of Annius and were translated and published by him. We eannot dwell longer on this most interesting and important subject at present. It must sutfice to say that we have not a donbt that the histories of Berosus, Megasthenes and Manetho are correctly published in the Antiquities of Amnins of Viterbo. Thus another proof is given that through the poteney of spirit power, all error is being burnt up in the light of eternal truth.

MIZRAIM.

The Chaldaic King of Egypt.

"Out of ail I have searched for in the languages of earth to exprest what I feel in coming here today, I will say Vox Dei, vox pepuli. I was horn two thousand and a little more than two hundred years before your myth Jesus, in a town called ('hion, in Chaddea. I was brought up to understand the Chaldean astrobabe. I, with the same earnestness that you ask the people of today tolseliere in Jews, asked the people then to believe in lbaal. At the time I lised, the chief seat of the divilization of the word was about the junction of two rivers. These two rivers ran together, and the intermediate comntry was known as Edna, Eden, or Edina. I koww mothing of Abrahaur ; but I did know of Ibraham, "Ib" meaning the whole and "Brahm" the world in whieh we live. At that time, the following circunstance gave rise to what is ealled the contusion of tongues and the tower of Babul. There was a numerons colony that had gone ont from Chaldea towart the opposite shore, or toward Earope, as I might call it, where they aephired a different hangage from what we had, and we could not unterstand each other correctly ; and they came back with the Ugh story about how they hat been contomeded ly a gon, Tsphon, who they described as the ruler of winds and waves, storms, the dements, ete. He was represented on the altars ereeted to him, as a huge smake, and wats worshipped fander that shape. I becoming dissatisfied with the state of things in ('hahdea, moved sonthward from where I was, and reached what was ealled Eyget. At that time 1 found that there had beot four dyantios in Eignt, covering a period of mearly sisty-tive lmmedred years ; and I hawe mo douht, but that the Moses of the Eraclites, and their exolus from Fiovpt, rame from the story of myself, Mizraim, travelling into beypt. I think that the two are parallel, from my examination of history after my time. Tpon rathing the Eisyptian eivilization, at that time, I found that there was a great insasion of that eonutry by a king from the East ; and to show you the conflusion of moderin chronologe, I will saty his nathe was Mahalahed. Tamadern chromology yon will tind himset down as the ohda matimext to Methmedah, hat he was simply a killg in hia day and an ins:ater of Eyght. Although a strager in the country, I, having so large a concourse of people with me (somewhere about thirty thousand warriors, and a proportionate number of them unable to bear arms), and they being very important to the Egrptians at that time, they oflered mes a position, in which I beat this Mahalaleel; and therefore 1 was set down as the first ruler of Eyppt, historians losing sight of the four preceding dynasties through the dissensions of men after my death. You will find that all Egyptian history, following my time shows that what I have told you is the truth; and upon this ground, that in place of the god Baal of the Chaldeans, which was represented by a human head with the horns of a bull, the Egyptians afterwards substituted the god Apis. You can see the reason for confounding the two religions, at a subsequent time. [How was the god Baal represented originally?] As a snake with the head of a man; but I left the snake part off; and replaced the buman head by that of the Egyptian ox; and after that time Baal was worshipped in that shape. And then, again, during the time of my ruling there, there were large numbers of Arabs, from the various Arabian tribes, coming into the country and living there, similar to the exodus of the Israelites out of Egypt. In my opinion it is this portion of Egyptian history that makes up the whole of the so-called Ismelitish history; because there were no such people as the Jews, in my day. You will find this Baal-Apis in the article relating to the priests of Cybele, in the ceremony where they stand under a grating itl white robes, while Apis, or the sacred ox, has his throat eut, and the blood descends upon the priests, baptizing them in the blood of the redeeming god. I think you will find this ceremony described in some of Havereamp's works; it is certainly in the works of some of those writers who consment upon the seriptures. After the performance of that ceremony the blood-baptized priest was held to be sacred, and any persons who touched the hem of his garment would be cured of any disease they had. [When these priests had been baptized in the blood of the sacred ox, Apis, they became healers of the sick?] Yes. The priest, after he came out from those eonditions, was kept apart from the people, and no one was allowed to enter his apartment, except for some very innportant reason. He spoke for the oraeles of Anubis and Iddo. Iddo was an Egyptian priest of one of the dynasties before my time, and set forth the idea of a great central power in the sum, out of which all life originated; and this Iddo taught the same doctrines as those attributed to Confucius, Jestes, and all the rest, on far as morality was eoncerned. I found his temehings so deeply engrafted in the minds of the Egyptians and their religlous system, at the time I became identified with it, that I allowed this to stand, as one of the things it would not do to tritle with. And then, again, those bood-haptized priests were acting as Iddo did, who was supposed to have berell overshadowed by the divine spirit, and that all that he said was the truth; and he was said to ranish, as you see in the l'salme, when he sad Selah. I used the word loulo, which afterwards became Apollo, It was the same as saying Amen or Ammon. This Apollo grew out of that system, and he bectume a gom aflerwards in the reign of Pammetticus. But the Chaldean, Egyptian, and all other priests in $m y$ day had, particularly, the signs of the Zodiac as a part of their worship; and those signs were nine in number-not twelve as you have now. Each of these signs covered a period of what you call a month, extended so ats to divide the year into nine parts insteat of twelve. All these signs were indiated by the conjunction of certain stars, which enabled the priests to mulerstand (iod's commands as given to us on the earth. By this I mean that one group of stars was made to designate ach sign of the Zodiate, and these were used to exphain eortain things. These changes in the position of the stars relative to the sun were afterwards interpreted by persons called Augurs among the Romans, hut in our day were ealled Celestiaie. These priests wanted to publiwh a great nany facts and ciremostances, in my day, which 1 , as a rational man, thonght was dereiving the people, and I forbade. All the religions tanght before my time, had for their begiming, the dhat of man being placed in a garden of beatye, and surromded with all the neeessaries of life, and that there was one thing in that garden that he shond not tondh. But in the religions systems tanght in my day, there was this one remarkable distinction. 'They dial not pretend that the woman was the betrayer, hut man was represented to lese ; and that he tempted the woman, and the woman yidding to his entreaties, bronght forth all the tromble that thesh has bern heir to, sinm that time. That was tanght as a fimdamental principle; bith there were very few, 1 leathed, whon hedd to that doetrine. A majorty were thone who wor-hiperel Apise :and followed those of his diserighes, or prophets yom minht term them, who hand been haptizel in his homel. iny sidured sarroll :and wen in my day (I lived 2eto years hefore the ('hristian time, this was se. At the time I went to epirit the Lamb or first sign of the zodiac for their sacrificial Saviour as the Christians did, they cut the throat of a bull and baptized the holy prophets in his blood. The sacrificial idea, as set forth in the first Egyptian dynasties before my time was cammbalistic, and men were sacrificed instead of the bull, Apis, and later Anubis the saced dog. At the time in which I lived, it was understood that sixty-four hundred years before, under a certain king, the Great God had driven the first man as a transgressor, from a condition of pleasure, and that he, for bringing all the trouble he did upon his posterity was crucified by them, by running an arrow under the jaw through the neek, which was supported by posts coming up from the ground, thus suspending him, with his hands tied behind his back, and that gave rise to what was afterwards known as the cross. It puzzled astronomers who lived after that time, to know what that meant, and they took it to designate the sign of the Areher; and therein commenced the confusion in religious beliefs. [Can you tell me which were the nine signs they had in your time?] They had only one fish; they left the other out. They left out Leo or the Lion, and also the Goat. These signs were not known in my day as they are known now ; or if they were known, I was not conversant with them. But the other nine signs were used. [Have you any idea at what time the twelve signs were adopted ?] I think about 565 lb . C., in the days of Amaximander. I think he was the one who first divided the zodiac into twelve signs. [Some think that Aries or the Ram was one of the original signs?] It was always represented by some cleft-footed animal. Sagittarins, half man and half horse, was represented differently in my day. That sign was represented by a combination of half man and half fish. I listened to those astronomical priests with the greatest devotion, and found them tanhing the same thing that is cited in the Hebrew Scriptures about Elijah. These visions used to come through my organism, and I seemed to hear still small voices describing certain things to me, and I followed their directions. [Were you a priest of the Chaldeans.] I was what you would call an Assyrian, but was really from Chaldea. I was both a priest and a lawgiver-that is, I either preached or fought, according to the circumstances in which I was placed. The Zoroaster known in my day was the original or older Zoroaster, who lived sixty-five hundred years before my time. This Zoroaster, through the letter $O$, which is the initial letter of Ormuzd, represented the Great God I AMr. The Egyptians afterwards adopted it as the emblem of eternity, and as including all that took place in nature. I have said more than I expected to be able to say ; but I found the control easy, and I like to talk."

If that eommmaication is gemmine and substantially correct, then it is very certan that the time is fast combing when a true history of the ancient word will have to be written. Mizraim is maknown to extant history as a personage, and his spirit diselosures are all we have to guide us in critically followings the wide range of information embraced in his commmoniottion. Inclining strongly as we do, to the belief that the communication is anthentie, we will give our reasons therefor. Under the title "Mizrain," Smith's Jietionary of the Jihle says:
"Mizraim, the usual name of Egypt in the Old Testannent. * * Mizraim first oceurs in the aceount of the Hamites in (den. x., where wo read, 'And the sons of IIsm; C'ush, and Mizrain, and Phut, and Canatan,' * * If the names be in order of seniority, whether as indicating elibdren of Hann, or ohder and younger branches, we can torm no theory as to their settlemonts from their places ; but if the arrangement be geographical, which is probable from the ocetrrence of the form Mizrain, which in no case can be a man's name, and theorder of some of the Mizraites, the placing maty aflord a clew to the positions of the Ilamite lamds. ('ush would stand first as the most widely sperad uf these peoples, extending from babylon to the "pper Nile, the terifery of Nizaim would be the wext to the north, embracing Eisypt ant ita colonises on the northWest and mortheast. Phat as depermbont on birypt might follow Mizraim, and ('anatan as the northermmost would end the list. Esypt, the 'lamd of Hann,' may have been the primitive seat of these from stocks. In the embmeration of the Mizrates, though we have tribes extending far beyond Egypt, we may supposie they all had their first seat in Mizram, and spread themee, as is distinctly sabl of the Jhilistines. I fere the order secmas to be grographical, though the same is not so clear to the ('smatanites."

It will thas be seen that the critical learning of post-Jewish times has been exhatotod in vain to dind wiyy berypt is fromerhy all investirating eritics, has leen that they starteal ont with the. thery that Mizrain rould not low the name of :a 1m:n ; :and hance the rathes mate of confusion into which they were

"Mizraim therefore liku ('ush, and perhaps Ifam, woorraphi-
cally represents a centre whence colonies went forth in the remotest period of postdiluvian history. The Philistines were originally settled in the land of Mizraim, and there is reason to suppose the same of the Lehabim, if they be those Libyans, who revelled according to Manctho, form the Egyptians in a very early age. The list, however, probably arranges them according to the settlements they held at a later time, if we may judge from the notice of the Philistine migration; but the mention of the spread of the Canaanites, must be considered on the other side. We regard the distribution of the Mizraites as showing that their colonies were but part of the great migration that gave the Cushites the command of the Indian Ocean, and which explains the affinity the Egyptian monmments show us between the pre-Hellenic Cretans and Carians, and the Philistines."

All this gocs to show that Egypt was at an carly day dominated by a Saracenic race, and they had become quite populous when the Philistine migration took place toward Palestine, the land of the Israelites. The Philistines were undoubtedly of Asiatic lineage, and not of African origin, and this fact is amply sufficient to show there was an early Assyrian dominattion in Egypt. When or how, or by whom that domination was brought about, history, neither (so-called) profane or sacred, throws any light upon. The statement of the spirit is very clear and consistent with every conceivable probability. He says he was born a little more than 2200 years, before the Christian era, at Chion or Chiun in Chaldea. The mention of this name incidentally leads to a singular correction of a sad misinterpretation of the word Chiun, (as it is used in Amos re, 26.) by Christian critics. The Jewish Jehovah is there made to suy :
"2.5. Have you offered unto me sacrifices and offerings in the wilderness forty years, O house of Israel ?"
"26. But ye have borne the tabernacle of your Moloch and Chiun your images, the star of your God which ye made to yourselves."
"27. Therefore will I cause you to go into captivity beyond Damaseus," ete.

Now, all this is perfectly intelligible, if it is addressed to the Asyrian Star worshippers, who, leaving Chion, in Chaldea, bore the tabermacle of Moloch and the star of their gorl (perhaps. Aldebaran, the bright ant royal star of the zediacal eonsteflation Tamras, the symbol of Baal the (ireat cion of the (haldeans) towards the west and leyond Damascus. It is certainly preposterons to suppose that this threat had anything to do with the then inhabitants of Judea. And yet this is the stupid hlunder into which so-called Biblieal crities latwe fallen. Finding the word Chiun conpled with that of Moloch, which was undoubtedly the Sun-gend or Fire-god of the Chaldeans, they supposed also that Chitu must be a Jewish god, than which no mistake could be more stupid. The book of Amos is undoubtedly a plagiarism of some Chaldean writings. Chinn, must be a Jewish change of the name Chion (as it was most probably spelled in the Chaldean) was undoubtedly the name of a city or phace, and not that of an ind, either worshippeed by the lsmelites or by any other people. The translation from Chadean into Hebrew, and from Hebrew into English, hats not sufliced to obseure the real meaning of the passage of Amos, above quoted. We thas discover that even by the Jewish seriptures so-called, the correctness of the spirit communication is singularly borne ont. That there was such an Asyrian or Chaddean city as Chion or Chiun we have no doubt, even if no other mention of it than is mate in that pasage of Amos, ean be foumbl. Just as the C'batdaic Moloch wats changed into the Moloch of the Old Testament, so the name Chion wats elanged into Chiun.

The spirit tells us that he knew nothing of Abraham ; but that he did know of Ihraham-" [1)" meaning the whole and " Brabim" the world. We have no doubt that the et ymokery is correct, and the Jewish plagiarist subtituted the Ab for the Ih of the Chaldeans, in order to comecal the literary fram that was being perpetrated, to be pahmed upon humanity for sacered truth. The etsmology of the word Brahm is undoubtedly. fonret, and meant the whole mivere amb the soul primeiple or foree which amimated it. If " Ib " in Sanserit or ('hatdaik mant the whole, then it is not diment to understand whosum what the moditied Sanserit or ('hahkean Horaham was ; thel we may know it meant no homan being, as Jews and Christians hate pretemdel, but the universal life, soul and boty of all known :mal manown thing.

But a fant that rembers the athenticity and frathtulnos of this remarkable commanication apporent, is the statemment that when la liver, while the piesthents of the dillionet re-progress annually through the signs of the Zodiac, they divided the zodiac into only nine signs, instead of into twelve, as was subsequently done. It is a fact well understood and known, that the more ancient astrononical priests divided the year into three seasons of four months each, to wit: Spring, summer and Winter. The Autumn season was absorbed in the ofler three ancient divisions. In reply to our question as to which of the signs were not included in the original zodiac, the spirit answered the Lion, the Goat and the Fishes, or one of them. Whether that is capable of being confirmed we cannot say. It is, however, very remarkable that the spirit should suy that in his time, the astronomical priests was called Celestiaie, which would indicate that the Latins borrowed their word Celestis from the Egytians.

Mizraim tells us that they had the same story of Eden, and Adam and Eve, in his day, but that instead of saddling the responsibility upon the woman for the sufferings of humanity, they were laid at the door of her male seducer. Little weight, Mizraim tells us, was given to the story, although it was the starting point of the religions then prevailing. It seems it was only the later times of the Jewish and Christian periods when the cosmogonical fiction was considered a matter of so much theological importance.

The religion of the Christos of India, the spirit tells us was well known in Chaldea and Egypt in his day. The sacrifice of human victims to the Chaldaic Moloch was anterior to the time of Mizraim, ( $2: 200$ B. C.)

We will here add that the spirit tells us that the division of the Zodiac into twelve instead of nine signs, was in the days of Anaximander, the Ionian philosopher, and pupil of Thates, about 565 B . C. It was about that period that Anaximander - flourished, and it is well known that he devoted much attention to Astronony, and the measurement of the diurnal time.

The spirit tells us that the astronomical priests taught the same thing that is eited in the Hebrew Seriptures about Elijah; and more than this that he himself had had similar visions, and heard still small voices deseribing certain things to him. It would appear that Mizraim was a clairvoyant and elairationt medimm, as well as a Chaldean priest and hawgiver. As to the leng historic perionls of which the spirit speaks, we have no means of judging of the correctuess; we therefore let them pass for what they are worth, in the estimation of each reader. That Mizraim was a historical personage, and not the name of a country or people, is very certain. It is a Chaldean and not an Egyptian name, and therefore we may know almost with certainty, in as much as the Jews designated ligypt by his name, that he figured so prominently in that comutry, as to warrant that designation of Egypt, by the Jews. As in the case of Odin the Founger, we have here an instance in which we are warranted in believing that there hats been an extension, through spirit channels, of ath hentic history, to nearly one thousand years before the oldest authentic historical period heretofore known. If it should be found that Mizraim is mentioned by either Berosus, Manetho, or Megasthenes, in their, or either of their histories, the value of that spirit communication cannot be overestimated.

The first year was analogous to the period of innocence and childhood, during which the philosophical aspirant tried to forget all previous ideas, impressions and conditions, by which his previous life had been attended ; and to lose his individuality so as to commence a new life, like that of a newly born infant. The sceond year was devoted to a total silence, or voluntary abstinence from all acquisition of knowledge, except what the candidate conld think out for himself. In other words, it was devoted to silent meditation. In the third year he was chabled to begin the contemplation of the facts of his pre-existence and the after existence, in their relations to his then existence, and to understand the true object of existence as a whole. In the fourth year the aspirant to philosophical wisdom purified himself from every contamination of the use of food that the Sage (Pythagoras) had set down as unfit to be eaten. In the fifth year, having purged the mortal body, he began to sit, lie down, or stand as directed by his spirit attendants; in order to develop his mediumship for the occurrence of spiritual phenomena through it. In the sixth year the phenomena that occurred were divided, as you divide them, into two classes, to wit: mental and physical. The purpose of this was to determine whether the most striking phenomena that occurred through each candidate were mental or physical. In the seventh year, test experiments were made to ascertain whether the aspirant was best qualified for the occurrence of the mental or physical class of phenomena ; or whether competent for the occurrence of both classes combined. Apollonius of Tyana was found to be remarkably qualified for the ocenrence of both mental and physical phenomena through his mediumship, and thus being futly developed for both classes of phenomena in the equal degree, he was authorized to act in both eapacities, those of mental and physical medimmship. Thus duly initiatedinto the Pythagorean Order of Philosophy, he began to teach; bat like most sensitives, he desired to teach his doctrines in seclusion. The teachings which fint made Apollonins of Tyana known will be recounted to you by the phirit of King Phraoctes of Taxila. He will tell you when and where it occurred, for these communications are given under the control of spirits who can and will explain everything so exactly that no learning can overthrow what is herein given. Now, Apollonius of Tyana was, as I know from persomal observation and knowledge, the Jesms of Nazareth of the Christians, and this was fully established by the subsergent writings of saturnimus of Antioch, Basilides of Alexaturia, :and Vakntinus of the same rity, all (imo.tice, and those who followed them in the seomel and third conturies. These writings, if in existence, will prove that Apollonius was the Jesus of the Christians in after times. I have no intention to prove to you that truth is greater than falsehood, for the time has come when truth must and will assert itself. What 1 have told you is true, and this will be established beyond all doubt ly the evidence yet to be given, if not already so established. Oh ! how 1 have longed for and desired the time to come when 1 could obtain the chance to testify that A pollonius of Tyana, whose memory and renown were killed through Eusebius at the Council of Nice, was the real Jews of modern Christianity. I was Euxenus of Heracleia in Pontus."

Having said this the spirit asked to take our hand, and in the most pathetic and earnest manner thanked us for the work we were doing to enable the spirit workers to get the truth before suffering and deceived humanity. We can find little historical mention of Euxenus ; for, although the Pythagorean preceptor of Apollonius of Tyana, undoubtedly the greatest spiritual medium the world has ever known, his memory and services have been buried in the same obserurity that has prevented the true merit of his great pupil from being known to atter :ages.

Refer to Smilh's Dictionary of (ireek and Roman Biography for account of Euxemus.
This mention of Euxenus is taken from the Life of Apollonins, by Philostratus; and but for that mention of him no one would know that such a man as Enxemus of Heraclein ever lived.

Refer to Biographie Universelle for aceount of Apollonius.
Such was the philosophieal system of Enxomms the teacher, and Apollomius the prpil, of the sehool of Pythagoras, in the carly part of the first century of the so-e:alled ('hristian era. Tha spirit of Euxemus of Heracheia tells has that in the tirst ontury before the supposed birth of Jesthe, that Platomism, and what was afterwards called (inosticism, werealmost idenfienl in their teathings. This wats undoubtedly the case, ats tans impartial ingurer into the doctrines of the Oriental and firecian philosophies will be foreed to admit. They were, as the spirit thlls us, scientific religions as eomtra-distinguished from thenderieal spernbative religions; and bot the metaphysi(:al :astramions that mondon infopmeters of their literal meanime, womblat their tollowers to believe. The writines as the carly part of the third century, and were regarded with religious veneration by many of the brightest minds of that early period of the so-called Christian cra. When the scheme was tormed to established the Christian church, as a representative of an entirely new and original religion, it became necesstry to destroy his writings and suppress his teachings, and this the priesthood sought to do, and did, by every means that was in their power. The spirit is therefore correct, in all probability, when he says: "The doctrines of Apollonius, as they appeared in his genuine work, perished in the first crusade against the contents of the Alexandrian Library." On this point, a writer in the Encyclopædia Britannica says :

"In 389 or 391 an edict of Theodosius ordered the destruction of the Serapeum," (the remaining Library at Alexandria,) "and its books were pillaged by the Christians. When we take into account the disordered condition of the times, and the neglect into which literature and science had fallen, there can be little difficulty in believing that there were but few books left to be destroyed by the soldiers of 'Amr."

Will any Catholic or Protestant prelate, priest or clergyman tell us why the Christian emperor, Theodosius the First, should have ordered the destruction of the Serapeum Library of Alexandria, if not to destroy the evidence it contained of the spurious nature of the Christian religion and its heathen philosophical origin? We venture to say they dare not attempt a public answer to that pregnant question.

If, as the spirit tells us, he was licensed by the emperor, Augustus Caesiur to teach the Pythagorean philosoply, it would seem that that great Roman ruler was himself a follower of Pythagoras, and not so the Roman priesthood. The latter, the spirit of Euxenus tells us, did not attempt to discuss with him the respective merits of their teachings, nor did they dare to question the truth of his teachings.

The most significant part of this testimony of Euxentes is the statement, that Apollonius of Tyana was "remarkably qualified for the occurrence of both mental and physical pheuomena through his mediumship, and thus being fully developed for both classes of phenomena in an equal degree, he was authorized to act in both capacities." And that, "doly initiated into the P'ythagorean order of philosophy, he began to teach." The reference to Phanotes, king of Taxila, as eognizant of the carliest renown of Apollonius, has relation to the following circumstances. While Apollonins was on his way from babylon to India, he visited king Phaoetes, of Taxila. "That prince," says the Biographie Tniverselle, "overwhelmed him with kindness, and gave him a letter to the chicf of the philosophers, or Indian (iymmosophists, which wats couched in these terms:
"The king Phraoctes, to his master Iarchas, and to the sages who are with him: 'Apollonius, a very wise man, who thinks you are wiser than himself, comes to see you to derive knowledge from your wisdom. Share with him freely all that which you know, and be assured that your instructions will not be lost. He is the most eloxuent of men, and has an excellent memory. His companions ako merit your good welcome, since they know how to love such a man.'"

Euxenus who resided at Nge cluring the time when it is said Jesins wats on carth, tells nes, that he know's from personal knowledge, that Apoilonins, his contemporary and pupil, was the same who atterwards was considered the Jesus of Nazareth of the Christams, and that this faet was fully established by the subseguent writings of אaturninus, Basilides and Valdentimus, the (inostic followers of Apollonitus. We have already so fully treated of, not only the analoge of the teachings of A pollonite with the teathings of the Christian seriptures, so-called, but of their substantial ldentity one with another, that we need not repeat one reviticims mon that point. We ean well materstand how Euxemus shond have so long and strongly desired to combe back to earth to vindicate the name and fame of his great mediumistie pupil.

JEAN BAPTISTE COLBERT.

Prime Minister of France.

"Good evening, sir:-Speaking without arrogating anything to myself, I do not think that any person of modern times was more deeply absorbed in antiquarian lore than myself. You will find in August Wilhelm Von Schlegel's tragedy of "Arion," all the mythological allusions made by Eschuylus in his "Prometheus Bound." He was one of the greatest Sanscrit scholars that ever lived, and was thoroughly versed in the nnalogies between the Sanscrit and Greek languages. He demonstrated clearly that the ancient Egyptian virgin, Isis, with the infant god Horus on her breast, and the symbols of the Isiac religion were identical with the Christian Virgin Mary and the infant Jesus. Much of this 1 have learned in spirit life. This I give you now. What I learned in the mortal life will follow afterwards. In the library called after me, the Colbertine, about one hundred and forty miscellaneous mannscripts bearing upon the first knowledge concerning the Gymmosophists of India, in the times of Alexander the Great and Ptolemy Phiiadelphus. These go to show that the Gymmosophists were fire worshippers. Among them are manuscripts relating to what will be communicated to you by a spirit who has not yet controlled the medium, whose body was burned at Athens in the reign of Angustus Cesar. After the teachings of the Gymnosophists, the Fssenes and Guosties composed the originals of the Christian Gospels and Epistles, which were afterwards parodied as composing the New Testament. This was demonstrated to you by the spirit of Euthalius, [see Euthalius, page 61.] He lived at Alexandria in 485 A . D. The next point I shall mention, as demonstrated by those manuseripts, dates about 560 to 580 A . D., and is contained in the writings of Moses Chorensis, who first became popular in Armenia, and who fully proves that, in his day, the Armenians were Parsees or fire worshippers, and that they adhered to the doctrines of the Gymmosophists combined with the Platonic and Pythagorean philosophies of Apollonius of Tyana. And he shows that about A. D. 280, and perhaps before that date, these Armenians inseribed upon the marble throne (not chair) at Adulis, their doctrines and belief, in contradistinction to those of the people known as Abyssinians, the latter being the doctrines attributed to Ishmael, the supposed son of Abraham. 'They made that inseription at that point in order to eonvert the Abyssinians to the teachings of Apollonins, which proved fruithess. There is a paragraph still extant, of the writings of Moses Chorensis, that shows that all the learmed have mate a mistake about the nature of that inseription, but its suppres-abn Wits ordered by the Comncil of Nice. It is still in the Vatiean Library at lome. This paragraph shows that the throne or judgment seat at Adulis had no relation to l'tolemy Eutergetes, but was erected to eommemorate the exploits of an Asiatie king mamed Hannes or Jannes. Yon will not find him mentioned in any English biograplyy, and if at all, it will be in some other tongue. Following this we will have to skip from the sixth to the twelfth eentury, to the days of Cyrillus Lucaris, patriarcl of Constantinople, and there we find the comsmencement of the Targums in the Codex Alexandrinus, mow in the Royal Library in London. The mamuserigt to which I alluded, shows that Euscbius of Cissarea fully understood these various tongues, and the eombination of the Targums of Jonathan Ben Uziel, Aquila and others, with the writings of Apollonius of Tyana, called the Panline Epistles, about A. I). 20j5, to eonceal their origrin. These matters were fully dwelt Hon hy Eusehius, which shows that the Armenians eonstructed, out of all these, what is now ralled the C'orlex Alexandrinns. The proof of this fact is still to be fommd in some of the towns of fammatia and Mesopotamia, in the Vatiean Library at Rome, in my collection of manneeripts in I'aris, amb in the paintings of Murills, who painted a Josns aceoreling to the Ahysinian idea of that food, and represented hinn as ant Africath. By: thorongh invertigation of thr facts rolated hy Belzoni, coneerning the statues of Apollonius that he som in Epper Eigyt, yon can reath a demonstration that $A$ polhonias was the deats ('hrist of to-day. I examined all there things thomerghy : and acoordine to a modern writer, Lamantine, yon will find the most pesitive proof that the ('hristian religion is a fratul. Vou will also find proof of this among the Maron-researehes of 大ir William Jones. $130 t$ I rest mey statemante mainly upon what I have harnerl from a man with whom I hase beoone acquainterl in spirit life. I mean Vonseblearel. Howill eomplete what I have left unsaid. I tan Joan Baptiste ('ollorer."

Refer to Chambers' Einevelopasdia for aeeount of ('olbort.
That (ollsert was a very learmed math as well as a groat one his valuable roblertion of ancient mantuscripts, mow in the Royal Library of Paris, sufficiently indicates. The reference of this spirit to the literary labors of Von Schlegel is especial ${ }^{\text {y }}$ pointed, in relation to the analogies between the Egyptian virgin Isis and her child Horus and the Virgin Mary and her child Jesus of the Christian Church; as also the analogies bet ween the emblems of those two religions. As to which was the imitation and which the model, the great antiquity of the Isiac religion leaves no donbt. As we have never read the works of Von Schlegel, we do not know how fully he treats of the questions to which the spirit refers. But when we come to what he says about the one hundred and forty manuscripts in the Colbert collection which relate to the doctrines and philosophy of the Gymnosophists of India, from 400 to 250 B . C., we come to a matter that admits of positive historical proof. The Gymnosophists were undoubtedly worshippers of fire, as the emblem of the Sun, which was the central foundation of all religions.

As we have fully shown, in our previous criticisms of other spirit communications, the Gymmosophists gave rise to what was known in Syria as Essenianism ; Essenianism was merged in Gnosticism; Gnosticism was merged in Neo-Platonism ; and Neo-Platonism was finally merged in Christianity, thus we may readily see that Christianity, so far from having any origimality about it, was but the latest modification of Oriental nature-worship, and no more divine than the source from which it flowed through so many modifying chamels. But, so confident are we that the spirit of Colbert states what is the fact in regard to the import of the mamseripts to which he alludes, as treating of Gymmosophism and Gnosticism, that we do not hesitate to challenge the refutation thereof. Wheu he refers to Euthalius as a spirit who will confirm what he says about those manuscripts, and the fact that the Christian Gospels and Epistles are nothing but parodies upon the more ancient Gnostic Gospels and Epistles, he leaves no room to doubt that what he says of those manuscripts is true. At this writing Euthalius has communicated and testifies positively to that fact.

Even more significant is the reference of the spirit to the manuscript writings of Moses Chorensis, as establishing the fact that as late as 560 to 550 A . D. the people of Armenia were Parsecs or Sun worshippers-their religion being a combination of Gymmosophism and Grecian philosophy. But most significant of all, is the spirit's statement that the writings of Moses Chorensis, show that the inscription that has been obliferated on the marble throne at Alulis, phaced there abont 250 A. D., or earlier, was inseribed therenn by Armenian priests, to record the doetrines and teachings of $A_{\text {pollonits of }}$ Tyana, to which they adhered. It is little less signifiennt that on the authority of the manuseripts of Moses Chorensis, that the spirit of Colbert should state the fact that the historical portion of the inseription of the Adulian marble does not relate to I'tolemy Euergetes as has heen almost universally supposed ; nor to an Ahysinian king as some suppose; nor partly to Ptolemy Euergetes and partly to an Abyssinian king ; but that it relates wholly to an Asiatie king mamed Hannes or James, as the spirit gave it. We have examined this part of the spirit's statement with the greatest care, and feel justified in maintaining its suhstantial correctness against the most searching eritieisms of the learned world.

GODFREY ARNOLD.

A German Mystic.

"I thank rou, sir, for this opportunity of communieating with yon. What I eome to say to you to-night is combered with, and is a eomdemsation of, what Euthatins of Alexambrat, Whe lived about A. 1). 4ith, has sad to you. Our commmeneations must necesarily owerlap, and support each othor. [Sive Euthallas, page 6il.] The (loristian moriptures from Alts to Revelation are hut phagiarisms of the doctrines to that great saint of antiguty, Apollonins of Tyana. I knew proitively, from what is satid in Belzoni's misedlaneme article, No. 1, now in the liritish Mre-um and in the Florentine Librars, that on anciont :anthority Pam of Tarsas was abonlutcly Apollomitus of Tranat. As for meself, after a careful review of all the grometh that have heen trawered hy Dr. Nathanid Larduer and other learned commentators, whon were engaged amb paid by the (lameh to tind some proof of the truth of chrisisanity. I fonnd, from the 'Targume of Jonathan Ben Ľziel ant Adnila, that Christianity was a fraudulent imitation of the ancient doctrines of the Trinity, of which ancient trinities the generative organs were the most prominent representative symbol. All this was perfectly apparent to me; but as I was an ecelesiastical adoptionist, I merged all that I knew in the Christian religion. What was contrary to it I ignored; for which dishonesty I, as a spirit, am ohliger and eompelled to here tell you what I knew about these things. (iodtrey Arnold."
Refer to Biographie Universelle for account of Godfrey Arnold.
The spirit of this thoroughly informed writer comes back to earth and discloses the fact, of his knowledge, while in earth life, that the Gospel of John and Canonical Epistles of the New Testament were nothing else than plagiarisms of the writings of the great sage Apollonius of Tyana, and that Paul of Tarsus, was absolutely Apollonius of Tyana. How far any writing of Belzoni confirms this fact, we have no means of knowing at this time; but it is impossible, in view of the utter want of historical status of Paul of Tarsus, and the perfectly historical status of Apollonius, to question the statement of the spirit of this thoroughly infornsed man. It scems equally certain that what he says, as to the Claristian plagiarism of the ancient doctrine of the Trinity, is substantially correct. Whether the Targums of Ben Cziel and Aquila contain anything to prove this, we do not know, but think it more than probable, if not certain. The nature of Arnold's investigations and literary labors were just sucls as would have led him to the discovery of the Christian frauds that he claims to have made. He no doubt, with all his desire to do nothing to impede the growth of Christian piety, too clearly intimated the heathen source of Christian theology, and hence the bad odor into which he fell as a Christian writer. The spirit of Armold has done well, in seeking to atone for his earthly insincerity, by the above diselosures. It will be well for all spitits who were once engaged in the same work of concealing and suppressing truth, to follow his example.

August Wilhelm Von Sehlegel.  A German Philologist and Orientalist.

"He who exposes errors must expect to be opposed by an army of fools. I know this was true in my day, and I know it must be true in yours. Born into the mortal life with a certain sense of the mystical-knowing nathot of the far pastI was fortunate to strike that tine of intelligence which was of great advantage to me; namely, antiquity; and I wrote my description of lon on the same principle that Eschylus wrote his l'rometheus Bound. My principal business here thrnight is, to prove to you that the Tamil language of India is more ancient than the sanserit ; and that while you now find it in Madras, Ceylon and southern India, its outlines and structure prowe it to be more ancient, in India, than the sanserit. The principal belief of the Tamils was the divine nature of the male and female human organs of generation, the symbel of which was the phallus. They hal their Trinity in the father, mother and ehild, which eonstituted their trinity in umity. These religions ideas can be traced in the Tamil languge, traces of which are still formd at the foot of the Himatayas in northern Intia, where the Tamil people dwelt before the Brahmans eroseve into India from Thibet with their god I-brahm. Inthed this I-hashm was merely an eastern oflshoot of the Batal or Bel of the (haldeans. The (hatdean divilization is the whlest that we spirits ean start with. That

Refer to Chambers' Encyclopædia for account of Von Schlegel.
If our readers will look up carefully the reference we have given to Von Schlegel they may be able to form some idea of his qualification to judge of the true nature of the Sanscrit language and its relation to the Tamil tongue. The general idea has been that the Tamil literature is of recent date as compared with the Sanscrit literature. This the spirit of Von Schlegel denies, and refers to its less complex structure in proof of this. In this connection, it would also prove interesting to the reader, to look up the account of the Tamil people and language which may also be found in Chambers' Encyclopædia.

It must be very evident to the reader of these references that the Tamil language is not a Brahmanical or Sanscrit dialect, but an independent language which had its origin in a distinct region or centre of civilization from that which gave rise to the Sanserit and its kindred Aryan idioms. As such it has an especial historical importance, and this the spirit of Von Schlegel fully understood when he thus called attention not only to the difference between the Tamil and Sanscrit languages, but showed that the Tamil was the more ancient of the two. The Tamil language was of Semitic or Chaldaic origin, and no doubt existed in Northern as well as Southern India before the Aryan Brahmans invaded India from Tibet, and established the Sanscrit language there.

In the light of a number of similar assurances given by other spirits through other mediums, we regard the reference of the spirit of Von Schlegel to Deva Bodhisatoua, and his spirit labors to unite all the spirit friends of Spiritualism, and through that union of spirit forces to open the way between the two worlds, so that the history of all the past may be revealed to mortals, is the most hope inspiring assurance that has come to mankind from the spirit life. Deva Bodhisatoua was the 13 th Buddhist patriarch, and some two or three centuries before the Christian era established the Reformed Buddhistic canons which still prevail in India. He was, in other words, to Modern Buddhism, what Eusebius Pamphilus was to Christianity, its founder.

RODHISHORMAH.

A Buddhist Priest.

"I greet you, sin :-As the Butdhistic religion, its writinge, precepts and morals, have been given to modern readers, they have not been allowed to show the inflnence they exerted in forming what is called the Christian religion. Everything that would show this has been suppressed, first by the Christian fathers Jerome, Chrysostom and Eusebius of Casarea, and afterwards by the Cluristian writers who followed them. All these learned Christian commentators have done all they eould do to veil the commection between Buddhism and ('hristianity. I am here to-day io say that the I'entateneh, P'salms and Proverbs of the Odd Testament, and the New 'restament from the (iospel of John to Revelations, were originally in the hands of the Buddhists, and were taught to the followers of that religion, in my day, about A. I). :30. But Christian authorities have set me down as about A. D. 495 , in order to eover what I had of Buddhistic writings then extant, and to make them appear to be eopies instead of authentie originals. I want to show that the religion of ladihat was not an offisoot of Brahmanion. It was derived form the teachings of Zorositar in the tirst phaer, and the teachinge of ()-iri of the Exyptians in the seromb place [. Wan I to maderatand that Bumdhism was not of lmbian origin:'] V'es ; and now for the proofe of this. At the little village of Pang in Bombay, on the road from (inzerat to Malioa, are the fise subterrame:an whmbers which represent the five momatains of baddhat, and they are called the l'anch P'andou. It wats there that I tatyht in my homberd yars before that time. The geat tronile with (hrist ian eommontators is, that they want to bring all religinis within the Mosaie period ; and that hianes their judgun at and leald them astray. I want to may, here, that the f'anch l'anfon and the fomplo of Boso bach, as it was called by us, wer. the sonrees from whirh the eivilizations of Mexieo, (entral Amerian and lera orjanated; for the same kind of eroses that are foum in the l'anel Pandou, and in the temple of bome bamo, ate identioal with those to be fomm in the Aztere templas of Mexion, the temple of (entral Ameriea, and the tomptes of Porn. The three getels of Mathew, Mark and

Luke were derived from, and were part and parcel of the Ancient Gymnosophic religion which Apollonius received from Phraoetes, king of Taxila. Apollonius was a medium for spirit control. I was also a medium among the Chinese. I taught amongst them at the foot of the celebrated Mount sung. [Was that region celebrated as a place of learning?'] Yes; and also for learned hermits to congregate and die. I am satisfied that if you will follow the clews that I have given you, in this communication, that you will find that San-worship was identieal with Buddhism, the latter oaly being a reformation of the former. These things have been ignored by modern archrologieal seholars, because they woald conflict with the teachings of Christianity. [Have the gospels of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John been modified from the original writings, other than in the change of names and the scenes of the events related? ? The idea of Jesus is rather Egrptian than Indian. The most virtuous, holiest and prest mu of his generation, became the object of the veneration of th: people, and was held up as an example for after generations to follow. They deified them and eertain stars were dedieated to them. These eelestial personifications were talght mystically by the priests to heighten the efleet upon the minds of their ignorant followers. If you have any other q'uestions, I will answer them if I can. [We know that the Gospel of St. John varies from the three symoptical gospels in essential particulars; and we have much reason to believe that while the Guspl of John, the Pauline Epistles, the Catholic Epistles, and Revelations, are of Buddhistic origin, that the gospels of Matthew, Mark and Luke, and the Aets of the Apostles, are of Brahmanieal origin, and relate to the Findoo Chrishna is that conjeeture correct?] The books, from the Gospel of John to Revelations, in the New Testament, were borrowed from the Buddhistic visions of Deva Bodhisatona. [In what respeet did the Buddhists and Gymmosophists diffor?] The Buddhists, in my time, were what you torm spiritualists. The Nirvana or heaven of rest, as it was originally taught, neant simply a place where the spirit regained its power after leaving the mortal form, and after a longer or shorter time, having recuperated in strength, it passed on throurh those spheres of spirit existenee that you Spiritualists talk of. On the other hand, the Gymnozophists were more of the perfectionist belief, and tanght that the relensed spirit of the righteons went straight to fod. That was the essential difference between the two teachings. My name was Bodhishormah."

We can find no mention whatever of Bothishormah, and can therefore only judge of the authenticity of the eommunication by the collateral facts that bear upon the matters testified to loy the spirit. But these are so mumerous and so pointed as hardly to leave rom to doubt its anthenticity. That the medium could have invented such a commmication, no reasonable person can suppose ; for apart from the signifieance of the several statements therein contained, the general tenor of the commmaication establishes the distinet individuality of the communicating spirit.

It is to be hoped that the time is not far distant when the true and perfect teachings of the Brahmanical, Buddhistic and (iymnosophic religions of India, will be given to the people of Europe and Ameriea. When that is done, the Christian phat giarism of those teachings will be lad bare and the Christian delusion at an end. For centuries the Christian priesthood monopolized the learning and knowledge of the world, but that monopoly no longer exists. Untrammelled seholarly thinkers have gone to the front in antiquarian, areheologieal, philosophical, and scientific researehes, and the truth in all these directions, is leing brought to light with resistless foree. Neither the Christian Fathers nor modern Christian commentators or their deluding performances, can stay the resist less force of the on-coming flood of light from the aneient world.

It will be seen that this Buldhist spirit clams the Buddhistie origin of six of the chiof borkin of the ohd Tostament, as well as the more important parts of the New Tentament. This Claim lats neverlefore heen presented, so far as we know ; and yet it is consistent with much that is positively known. Not one of the books of the Old Testament is of Hebrew origin, ats it hat been elamed they were. They are, heyond all goestion, of Eastem origin, having only leen parodied by the Jewioh pricethood, ath put hefore their followers as Jewish originals, as the varions Targums plainly show. The lealms and Prowerbs of the Old Testament are in their nature, construction, and use, so similar to the Buddhistie books now watant, an to show that they are cither varied versions of one origibal, or variod versions, the one of the other. In efther rase it is impesible that Judea should have beon the cometry of their oricination. There is just as math historical certainty that neither of the fospels aceording to Mathew, Mark, Lake and John, of the New Testament, originated in Judea; and it is in the highest degree probable, that the country of their origination was India. The spirit says he knows that this was the faet so far as the Gospel aceording to John, the Pauline Epistles, the Catholic Epistles and the book of Revelations are concerned. That he does notinclude the synoptical Gospels and the Acts of the Apostles, grows ont of the fact that they were of Brahmanical rather than of Buddhistic origin.
The spirit says that Christian authorities have set him down, chronologically, as having flourished about A. D. 495, instead of A. D. 340, to conceal the nature of the Buddhistic writings in his possession. Of this we have no means of judging, not having been able to find any historical reference to Bodhishormah. The truth of the matter may be yet established.

But now, we come to a portion of the eommunieation that is as important as it is new to us. The prevailing impression has been that Buddhism was but a schismatic offshoot of Brahmanism, and merely amounted to an attempted reformation of that Aryan religion. The testimony of Bodhishormah is the first denial of that supposition. He says that Buddhism had nothing to do with Brahmanism, but was derived from the Zoroastrian and Egyptian systems of Sabaism or Star worship. As proof of this fact the spirit tells us that at the village of Bang, in Bombay, India, on the road from Guzerat to Malioa are five subterranean chambers, which represent the five mountains of Buddha, and that they are called the Panch Pandou, that it was there he taught Buddhism ; and that the inscriptions in those ehambers showed that Buddha had flourished 900 years before his time, ( $340 \mathrm{~A} . \mathrm{D}$.)
It is with stinging satire that the spirit says: "The great trouble with Christian commentators is, that they want to bring all religions within the Mosaic period, and that biases their judgment and leads them astray." The spirit is more than charitable to suppose that the learned, among those enmmentators, do not know that in taking that course, they are not seeking to find, but seeking to avoid the truth.

This spirit confirms what was testified to by Deva Bodhisatoua. The latter claimed to lave been a mediam, and while in a state of trance wrote the books which were obtained by Apollonius at Singapoor. This spirit refers to the visions of Deva Bodisisatona as the source of the parodied Christian writings, from the Gospel of John to Revelation, inclusive.

The spirit no doubt makes a correct statement as to the difference between Gymmosophism and Budhlhism. The Buddhists were certainly spiritualists, while the Gymmosophists were perfectionists, and held that there was mo necessity of progressive advancement in spirit life. The importance of the light this communication throws upon many points of historical doubt, camot be too highly estimated.

SERVIUS SULPICIUS GALBA.

A Roman Emperor.

"I girbet you':-There is but one way open to all spirits to progrese, and that is, to study to tell the truth, as far as they knew what it was, whon they lived in mortal forms. That is the only recompense they can make to mortals for the wrongs they have done. 1 was born B. (. $\mathbf{Q}^{0}$ ) at Rome. I died or paried away in A. quitted Apollonits, and he was allowed to return to Antioch, or to go where he pleased. The next time I met him was in Carthage, in Africa, in A. D. 45. He was again arrested-this time by one Publius Ælius, who was his accuser and his judge -because he did not restore his daughter to health. It was proven that A pollonius had received from him something like twenty talents of silver, but he had given it to the poor. He, however, had restored the sight of the son of this Publius, although he could not cure the daughter. He was going blind, and Apollonius removed the cataract from his eyes, thus restoring his sight. [Did he do that by a surgical operation?] No; he did it by magnetic power. Under its influence the film grew thimer and thinner, and finally disappeared from his eyes. I did not see Apohlonius again until A. D. 53, when I was again at Rome. This man, at that time, had grown into great favor. He was looked upon as the incarnated representative on earth, of Jupiter, or Apollo, or both. From the time when I began to understand things, about B. C. 5, until the time of my death in A. D. 69, I never heard of but four different kinds of religious doctrines that then prevailed, and I will name them. First, the Pythagorean or Platonie; sceond, the Gymnosophic ; third, the Essenian ; and fourth, the Apollonian. Those at least were the four prineipal religions, outside the worship of the Greek and Roman myths of my day. As fir as I was myself concerned, my individual belief, wonld be more likely to correspond with Mahomet's. That is, I was a fatalist, and believed that whatever happens must be, and I submitted to that neeessity. I do not claim to have been an ambitious man-I do not claim to have been a virtuous one; but as a spirit, sir, I do claim to be an honest one. [Have you any knowledge as to whether Apollonius of Tyana, did or did not go to Jerusalem about the year A. D, 33?] Two years later than that, in A. D. 35, I heard of it. [What did you hear in relation to it?] I heard from Pontius Pilate that a man, whom he told me was A pollonius, rode through Jerusalem on an ass ; and beeause he had cured lepers outside the gates of that eity, the people gave him a great ovation. [Did the Jewish priests have him punished?] He left the eity very suddenly, becanse of the uproar he created among the Jews, which ever took place when anything threatened to interfere with their religion. Servius Sulpicius Galba, onee emperor of Rome."

Refer to Encyclopredia Britannica for account of Calba.
This spirit tells us he was born in B. C. 20 instead of in B. C. 3 , as the date of his birth has been supposed to have been. There are some things that would go to show that the date given by the spirit as the time of his birth, is more nearly correet than that which is assigned by historians. If he was born in B. (. . 3, he would have been only thirty-six years cill at the time he was consul in A. D. .3.3, or in 31, as is the date fixed as the time of his appointment to the eonsalship he Tiberins. It is harelly possible that one so young shoabd have attained that rank. Besides, it is mentioned hy Suetonius, that Augustus, who died irs A. D. 14, predicted the future rise of Gallat. If that be so, then Galba must have been then only 17 or younger. For that reason this statement of Fuctonius has been questioned. But if Galba was then old enough to have shown his fitness for official promotion, he must have been born about the time he stated (B. C. 20.) He had no doubt been called to official position before the death of Augustus, and thus clisflayed his qualifieations for publie service. Still further than this, it is almitted that very little is known of the carly life of (ialla. This is beeatuse it has been found convenient to place the date of his birth several years later than the time of its oeeurrence. The spirit eartainly understool what he was saying, for he not only mames the year B. C. 20 as the time of his birth, but he satys that in IB. (. 5, he was oth enough to understand and remomber the eurrent erents of that period. We regard this variation from the supposed date of his birth ats one of the strongest proofs porible that this commumication is as authentie as it is true. (ialba is spoken of as an aged man when appeinted, by Nero, gevernor of the province of Spain, and his admanistration as that of a man worn out by age or governed ly fear. If ( fallat was only in his seventr-second year, at that time, it is hatdy likely that he would have heen greatly disunalified from manifesting his usual ahility as a gemeraland fowernor of provinces. W゙・ therefore incline to believe that (iallat was a mueh ohler man at that time.

This eommmancation, if it may be eredited, throws muelt light unen the suppressed portions of the Life of Apollomins ly. lhiletratus, and in the most surprising manner eonfirms the commankeation given hy the spirit of Apolkonins. Fee commmatication, Apoilonins pare 17 .

If the statement of the epirit of $\lambda$ pollonins is eorreet, he mant have heren thirty-me or thirty-t wor vars of :ge when he Went from . Wa, so Antioch, and if he was taken to Fonte to be tried ly (iatba the consal, at that time, he was in his thitiysecond year. It is true that Apollonius did not say anything of the commotion he had created at Antioch, but he did expressly state that he went to Antioch, and from there to Jerusalem. This would indicate that A pollonius returned from Rome, after his release by Gaiba, and no doubt finding the disaffection towards him still existing, was all the more willing to go to Jerusalem, where his renown as a medium of spirit power had preceded him. At all events, it is just this part of the history of Apollonius that is missing. It is hardly likely that Damis his disciple, who wrote aunals of his life, and Philostratus who wrote his biography, should have said nothing of these most striking and important events in his life. It is certain that none of the writings of Damis have been permitted to come down to us, and the oldest copy of Philostratus', Life of A pollonius does not date earlier than the tenth century: The wonder is that any part of the latter work was allowed to cone down to us.

It is a historical fact that Galba was consul in A. D. 33 , and if Apollonius was apprehended at Antioch, as the spirit states, it was before him that Apollonius would have been brought for judgnent. It was about that time Apollonius must have gone to Antioch, and his advent there, after the wonderful things related as having occurred through him at Agge, while with the priests in the temple of Asculapius at the latter city, no doubt would have caused the greatest consternation among the Greco-Roman priesthood. We infer that Philus of Antioch was a Roman priest. The details of the result of the hearing of Apollonius at Rome, are entirely consistent with the wonderful manifestations of spirit power that are known to have occurred through Apollonius, not only before, but for more than sixty years after that period.

It is also a historical fact that Galba was by Nero appointed governor of the province of Africa in A. D. 45 , and that he was then at Carthage. It is also a historical fact that having been driven from Rome by Nero, that Apollonius went from Rome to Gaul and Spain, and from the latter country went to Africa, and was at Carthage, at the time the spirit of Galba states he was there. We may therefore infer that the incident referred to by the spirit, the arrest and discharge of Apollonins in Carthage actually took place. From Carthage he crossed to Italy, and from Italy set sail for Greece, and from that country went to Egypt where he was when Vespasian was declared emperor, on the death of Nero.

The spirit tells us that the next time he saw A pollonius was at lame in $50 \mathrm{~A} . \mathrm{I}$., when he wats again in that city. This must have been before the seend ediet of Nero against the philosophers, and not afterwards as has been supposed. It is a well-established historical fact that by A. D. 50 , Apollonius had become greatly renowned, and exerted a powerful influence over the minds of the ruling clases as well as the common people. We have thus the facts which go far to eonfirm, if not to extablish, the positive truth of the detailed statements of the spirit.

The spirit tells us that the four principal religions that prevailed in his time were the Pythagorean or Platonic, the (iymmosophic, the Exsemian, and the Apollonitn. He further telle us that these were eombined in a tifth eatled the Eelectic. Whether (atbat was or was not what he clams to have been, a fatalist, we have no means to determine, and most therefore take the spirit's statement on that point for what it is worth.

But what the spirit says in regard to Apollonits's visit to Jernsallem is of the greatest interest, if true; as it shows who the Jesus of Niazarth was, who ereated sumbla a confusion athong the Jews of Jernsalemin A. D. 34 - -35. The spirit tells us that two years after Apollonins was at Jernsalem, that Pontins Pilate tohl him of the entrance of Apollonitas into Jerusitlem riding ont an ar-s, and that the Jews gave him a grand wation on : acome of his healing lepers otwide the gate of the city. Now it is historically true that (athat and Iontius libate wereat lome at that time, J'ilate havingheen summene to Rome to answer for some actso of misalministration ats prorarator of Judea. Nothing could be more probable than that Galba and Pilate met at that time, and it is hardly less probable that sum a conversation was hath, or that such a atarative on the part of biate was pisen to (iallas.

We do not hesitate to say that we eredit this eommmacation, it beingeoremsistont with historical prohahilities, and so entirely comstemt with the eommmatations that have been before kixen relating to the same diremastanes. Thans the tostimony of spirit atter spirit is pilad up, all temaling in the 16n-t -uy ri-ing matner to -how that Apollonins of Tyana and his hatore, are the eohe hatin of the su-rathed (hritian religion; and thas the iramblent mature of that religion is being demonstrated beyond all reasomable doubt.

JUNIANUS UUSTINUS.

A Latin Historian.

"I sAlute you :-In coming back here I am like a whipped school boy, who has a tale to tell. Although I have studied for many years to give a clear and definite explanation of the history of my time, yet I have never been able to strike the conditions and circumstances to enable me to do so, until you prepared the way for me. [I assure you I amonly too happy to have had it in my power to do it.] You may rely upon the fact that you are doing a great work for us spirits and for humanity. [My most earnest hope is that I can do more.] But our power is not great as against the arariciousness of mortals at the present time. The more perfect you can make the conditions for us to come, the stronger the spirit friends can be united with you, and the more they can do for you. But it seems as if Hades itself had broken loose on the mortal plane. I was in my mortal life a historian, and I epitomized or copied (about half of which has been permitted to come down to you) from the history of my friend Pompeius Trogus. The whole of his history of universal aflairs down to B. C. 28, was in my possession. I use your Christian names and dates, because they will be better understood by your readers. Trogns said that in his day that the two great governing powers, amongst the ignorant, were Jupiter at Thebes and Apollo at Rome. But mark you, he said that amongst the enlightened, the Pythagorean religion of the Greeks was blended with the Christos religion of India. [That was prior to the Christian cra?] les, sir. I copied that portion of 'Trogus' history which related to Christos, who was later than the elder Zoroaster. That portion of my history that related to Apollonitas, later on, was allowed to stand, but the name of Apollonius was changed or dropped, and the Christos of whon Trogus wrote, was altered into Christ. In my day the name was IIesu Christos. In the days of Eusebius it was made Jesus Christ. At that time the only religions that prevailed, beside the worship of the Creek and Roman gots, were the Pythagorean, the Hesus Christos, the Gymmosophic and Gnostie systems ; and what was called the Eclectic system, a combination of all the religions sustems then prevailing in the East or in the Roman Empire. I wrote these facts down faithfully, but the Christians have never allowed anything that I wrote tostand as it was, exept what sustaned their own seheme of deception. Basilides and Valentins tanght the doctrine of three gods in one, or the Trinity of the (inostics. The male and the female principles in mature, and their product, the universe or the chikl, represented the trinity in all ereated life. This was the trinity that all the Gnosties, in my day, tanght. The false trinity was started by Eusebius, and was made to assume its present Christian form some two or three centurics later. The especial reason why the founders of Christianity destroyed so many mamseripts written prior to A. D. D60 wats beembe they threw too much light upon all these matters, and showed that the Pythagerean first, the Platonie and Essenian next, the (iymmosophic and Gnostic next, and finally the Eelectic system, which combincel the principles of all the others ; together formed the actara basis for Christanity ats it now is. This is as wedl as I canstate these matters as aspirit under the ciremmstances; but I an afraid I have performed my oflee pooll. I hase, howerer, done the best I could. I hope you can get at the facts from what I havestated."

Refer to Kmith's (ireek and Roman Biography for aeeonnt of J'ompeins Trogus and Justinus.

In the work above referred to will be found under the title of Justims the acerpted aceount of the literary laborsof Pompeins Trogns, and Jumian. J Jistims. The reader may readilyperecive the magnitude of the priestly erime, that deprived the world of the literary treastre contaned in the great Cnisersal History of 'l'rogus. It was fortumate indeed that Justinus should have duly appreciated the inestimable impertance of that now destroyed history. Indend we regard it as providential that he should have been prompterl to write an rpitome of its most important contonts, for only in that way hats any portion of thembeen permitted to come down to us. But these priestly chemies of truth, it sems, have hot even permitud the excerpts of Justinus, taken from that treasury of historical information to come down to us intact. Sat a portion of them hate eseaped the destruction of those ememies of hamanty, the fommater of the su-called ('hrivitan chureh: and Justint: hat bern censured by moulern erities for "the slowenly" manamer in which he exeolted what they are pleatied foronseon the mutilateat and frarmentary condition in which his historical compendium had been allowed to come down to us ; and they would have reserved their censure for the moral miscreants who, in the name of the Christian religion, had mutilated the work of Justinus.

Just here we stop to call the reader's attention to a point that seems to have received no attention from general critics. It was made manifest by the communication given by Euthalius. (See page 61.) It is historically known that Euthalius broke the Acts of the Apostles and the Pauline and Catholic Epistles into verses; but the reason for this has never been rightly understood. Originally those books of the Bible were continuous, and did not admit of interpolated sentences, without the interpolations being manifest to critical readers. When broken into distinct and separate paragraphs, it was much more practicable to interpolate paragraphs without detection. Euthalius told us that he set about completing the work of theological deception which was begun by Eusebius of C'esarea, and made such additions and omissions in his versions of these books as he thought would serve his purpose. It would seem that to the fact of Justinus's work being only an epitome of Trogus's great work, is the preservation of any part of it due. The Eusebiuses and Euthaliuses into whose hands the compendium of Justinus fell, found they could, without certain detection, eliminate a large portion of it ; and as much of it was calculated to make plain the Christian theological fraud in which they were engaged, they, instead of destroying the whole work, as they had done with the Universal History of Trogus, concluded to destroy the obnoxious parts of it, and allow the remainder to come down to our time. Only in this way can the destruction of the whole of Trogus's work, and the destruction of only a portion of Justinus's, be accounted for. Otherwise the whole of the latter would have shared the same fate.

It has been seen that the time when Justinus lived and wrote has been a matter of historical and critical doubt. This doubt need no longer exist, for the guide of the medium, in announcing the presence of Justinus, said that he was a Latin historian in the reign of Titus Pius Antoninus (A. D. 161.) It would therefore seem certain that the words of "Imperator Antonine " in the preface of Justinus's history, were rightfully there, and were not "an interpolation foisted in by some of the earlier editors, &e." Pitus Antonints reigned from A. D. 138 to 161, and it was undoubtedly within that period that Justinus wrote his history. Now, the spirit of Justimus says he had the whole work of Trogus in his posession when he wrote his own. It would, therefore, appear that it must have been after that date (A. D. 161) that the work of Trogus was destroyed, ats it was then extant and in the possession of Justinus. It wats th eonceal the fact that 'hrogns' history was in existence at so late a day, that any question was raised as to the period in which Justinus tourished. But that concealment will no longer avail. By that strange fatality that seems to attema the perpetration of erime against humanity, the words "Imperator Antonine" have been preserved agatist all priestly efforts to arod them, in the extant mopies of the preface to Justinus's historg. Those words seem to have been providentially preserved to atuthenticate the spirit testimony of Jumianus Justinus; ats has ako the premomen Junianus, abont which there lats been the same douht. The corrections and explanations of historical facts, such as these, in so many instanees, throughout this muprecedented series of communications, are most comvincing proofs, not only of their authenticity and truthfulness, Dut of their inappreciable value.

Pompeius Trogrts, through the gride, clamed to have written history in the time of Julins (:estar, whirh must have luen prion to B. C. 44, when the latter was assasinated. It is not improbahbe (hat he smerived (iesar, and also flesurished in the reign of Angusthe, who died in A. 1). 14. Tndeed the spirit of Justimas says that the history of Trogus came down to I. 1 …es, threw vears after Augustus attaned imperial power.

The compliment which the spirit of Justinns patid to ns, in attributing to our hamble efforts to adsance the truth, his ability to give his insatuable spirit teatimony, is one that we highly apperiate; and nerves us with strength on persesere in the work we have in hand. In view of the opposition, misrepresentation and persection that we have had to endure amb overeome, we think it must hase been tothat that the spirit referest when he said: "But it semas 1tades itself had boken hose on the mortal phate."

Justimis tefls us that the history of Pompeins Tromens mate manition the fact that hefore the Christian era, among the harmed (emeks, the Prthagerean religion blewhed with the Christos religion of India, was the accepted religion. And further he tells us that he copied those portions of Trogus' history that related to the Christos religion, but that portion of his history that related to $A$ pollonius was permitted to stand with the name of Apollonius suppressed and the name of Christos changed to Christ. We have no means of judging how far this is correct, as we have been able to find no trans:ation of Justinus's History, but from the fact that the seholastic writers of the Middle Ages made frequent quotations from Justinus's History we may infer it is in the main correct, as they wrote to please the Christian believing world. From the testimony of this and other spirits, especially Plotina Pompeia, it would seem there was a worship devoted to a Christos Hesu or I Iesus Christos at a very early period, and hefore any unthentic historical mention of Jesus Christ was ever heard of. If such was the fact, it is not difficult to determine whence the name Jesus Clarist was derived.

It was unquestionably true that the Gnosties, Basilides and Valentinus, who not remotely followed the trinitarian doctrines of the Cymmosophists, based their whole theological system upon the natural trinity of father, mother and child. The Christian divergence from that true trinity has been the eause of more bloodshed and suffering than any other theological error that was ever promulgated.

This spirit certainly speaks the truth when he says that the reason why the fomeders of Christianity destroyed so many of the works that were written prior to A. D. 260, was that they threw too much light upon the real sources from which they borrowed their religion. It is a recognized fact that the doctrines of Pythagoras, Plato, the Gymmosophists, the Gnostics, and the Eclectics, as well as nearly all or most of the Brahmanical and Buddhistic doctrines of India, and the Magian doctrines of Persia, are blended and conglomerated with groundless personal fietions, in the Christia: Bible. No one can read and eompare the Christian doctrines with the doctrines of all those ancient religions and not see, at every step, that the former is not a spurious version of the latte:.

As we have been able to confirm the truth of somuch that the spirit testified fo, by the most unexpectedly peoserved collateral facts, we camnot see how those portions of it, the diacet or collateral proof of which cannot be reacherd, cata be reasomably questioned.

PLOTINA POMPEIR. Wife of the Roman Emperor Trajan.

Abstract

"I salute you, sir, in the interest of truth. I lived, that is, in a prominent way, a very short time after the death of Apollonius of Tyana. I saw him when I was a young girl, but never had any acquaintance with him, he dying betore I rearhed womanhood. Of the Jews of my time, that is, in the reign of the emperor Trajan, the Pharisees and Essenes were the two principal seets. The saducees did not believe in the resurrection. They were very few in mumber and exerted but little inlluence. It was believed throurhout the Roman Empire, at that time, that A pollonius of Tyana was the haman representative of the ged of Apollo, on the earth; in fact was regarded ats his son. There was no Jesus Christ known of in my day. There was a Christos 1 testh, which was a embination of Indian and seandinatian goxds. This combination of gods was brought about by the slaves that had been hoonght from Asia and Northern Europe into Italy. There was a womihip of this pombined god mader the designation of the Christos Hesmian religion. I myself received divine homors atter my death, and I wats comsidered as being taken from the hasamiof ony motal lite to be the ermpanion of the god Apollo in the epirit life. I took a great interest in all claness and prades of demann citazens ; and did my bent, in all kimdness, fios them. I had mo prejodiee againet any religion. The religion of ludia was made to assume a ditlerent shape from that which anciont manuseripts ret it forth tob.e. Anong all the letters addressel tomy hasbabd, the emperor Trajan, up to the time of my death (A. I). 1:3), rating to roliginus matters, I mever sam any that did mot relate to the redigions of ('hatistes Ifens or Apoiloniths. [1)id yot ex.er se the lettor of Pliny the Younger to the smpere 'Tajan:']  ther instaneo of Apollonins of Tyana and lgnatins of Antimen to the omperor. It was forwarded to Trajan from Pliny ly the hambe of one Pambus of Thesealonica. Pathe travelled into  prefect of Bythinia at that time. Panlu*, who was a (irek Juw, wat morly the mescenerer or hearer of the letter to kome. Put Play -aw nothine wrone with the F-arems, and reported that they wern quict and innffentive eitizens. There was no antagonism at that time between the Platonic and Eelectic philosophies. The Eclectic philosophy was an offshoot from the doctrines of the Gymnosophists, but they had gained but little headway in my day. The principal religion of that time was the worship of the ancient Grecian and Roman myths. Essenianism was, in almost all its practieal features, communism; everything was held and enjoyed in common. I want to dwell partieularly on the Christos of India, as he was understood in my day. He was regarded as an incarnation of deity, and was worshipped as such. His religion had been brought through the intermediate countries to the Mediterranean sea, and had become modified from the form it hat, at Singapoor, where Apollonius terminated his eastward journeying. As A pollonius moved westward from Endia, he came to be regarded as the ancient Christos. There were no miracles performed by him. What he did in the way of healing was through his mediumship. But the greatest part of the change in the religion of Christos was made by Apollonius himself. The Revelation written by the hand of A pollonius on the isle of Patmos, was considered in my time as one of the greatest and most mystical manifestations of mediumship, and was read as such by the learned. [Was there any reference to Jesus in that mystieal commmication?] There was no reference to Jesus whatever. I belonged to the mysties, or secret inquirers into what you would consider spiritual phenomena. We had our meetings or circles for that purpose. [Was the emperor Trajan also a nember of the mysties?] He understood that such phenomena occurred, lat he was more of a Materialist in his views. I leand more to the spiritual and he more to the materialistic view of things; but as long as he lived I was never interfered with in my rescarches by him. In the year A.D. 85, Apollonius tanglit at Rome under the name of Paulus or Paul. [Do you know that to be the fact personally ?] It was a well known fact in my day. He received divine honors after his death, as the son of Apollo. In liishiograplyy he is represented to have been the incarnation of the (iod Iroteus. That was simply the work of Philostratus who wanted to claim Apollonius as a Greek. In my time, when any man made his mark in the wordd, all Greek writers wanted to claim him as a Greek. Although I had no personal acquaintance with Apollonins, I eonversed with those who were acquainted with him, and who receised all knowledge of hint from Damis, his diseiple. I also knew many Jews who were followers of A pollonius. They beeance so from what oecurred through Apollonius when he was at Jerusalem. The acount that they gave of his journey to that city, was precisely the same as the modern account of the same events, attributed to Jesus of Nizareth. The Nazarites of my day were the same as your modern monks. They shaved their heads as the crowning act of their initiation. I never visited their settlements, but those of them who were sent to us, always had their hemds shaven. [Did they get their mane from a phace or settlement?] Tlaey came from (iaza. The Nazarites of my time were the same in belief as the C nitarians of your day-that is they were the worshippers of one (iod, annd did not acknowlodge an intereessor. But they changed their viows, suhsernently, and united with the (inosties, with whom they heceme identilicd. I think this will le made plain besculptured inseriptions on the ruins of ancent Inicrapolis. I think if the ruins of that ancient eity could be properly explored, the truth of my commmaicat tion can be catablished. I felt that I eonld give my commanication, to-day, and I have therefore acompanied the medium here for that parpose. [The medium told us that the spirit that wanted to control him, had been with him for several hours previously.] I think if you will carefully examine the most ancient conies of the letter of Pliny to Trajan, you will lind in what resuets it has been changed and interphated. I am informed that the twomost ancent copice of it are in the Vatiean Library at Rome, and the Royal Library of Berlin."

as the human representative of the god Apollo, on the earth, and was in faet regarded as his son. She testifies with equal positiveness that no sueh person as Jesus Christ was then known. She admits that there was a god, known as Christos Hesus, which was a combination of Indian and Scandinavian gods, which was bronght about by the meeting of the Eastern and Westem slaves transported by their Roman conguerors into Italy. The spirit tells us that this combined god was worshipped under the designation of the Christos Hesu religion. Of the truth of these statements we can only inferentially judge. It is known that Apollonius received divine honors more than two hundred years after his death, from a large part of the Roman world. It is also known that it was a common practice of the Romans to make captives of their prisoners of war, and to carry them in triumph to Rome to swell the honors of the conquerors. It is reasonable to infer that those captises would adhere to the religions of their respective countries. It is not unreasonable to suppose that these various religions should become blended as they met in Italy, and espeeially since the Hindoo Chrishma and the Druid Hesus were one and the same god, or personification of the sun, and both had undoubtedly the same source or origin.

We have every reason to feel that the testimony of this spirit is in all essential particulars correct, and being so, it is most important as collateral confirmation of the testimony of many other spirits who have preceded her. But no points of her testimony are more important than those whieh relate to A pollonius's visit to Jerusalem, and to the fact that he preached in Rome in A.D. 85, during the reign of the emperor Domitian, under the name of Paulus or Paul, thus identifying Apollonius with the Jesus and Paul of the Christian Bible.

FACILIDAS. Negus or King of Abyssinia.

"I greet you, sik:-I reached the height of my time in 16t?. I hat to deal with the Jesuits of my time. They attempted to force their religion upon my people. I was Negus of Abysiniatin l6t2. I want you to notice partionarly that the Adulian inseription was found within the borders of Absssiniat. We were not worshippers of the Jehovah of the Jews, now of the Osiris of the Eyryptians, but were a chanacteristic and distinet perple. You will find in the representation of the earliest age, a monkey with his tail curled upon his back, and as age after age sneceeded, the tail of the monkey was represented as shorter and shorter, until there was only a stub; and in the latest age of development, the tail was represented as altogether gone, thus by thous:mds of years anticipating the Durwinism theory. #### Abstract

"A Jesuit, sir", has very little right to come into your sanctum. [Certainly he has. You are very weleome.] I must of necessity come here to-day. [We are very happy to have you come.] At the time I left Europe for China, I was led to think the devil had put his sorvants in the livery of heaven. No man can to-day visit Canton, Hong Kong, Pekin, and other parts of China, and not discover that the further he ean get away from the contaminating influences of Christianity, the more he will find that the Buddhistic doctrines and sacred observances are identical with those of Christianity, even to the eucharist. This much I diseovered, and I said: The servants of fod have given the devil power to duplicate their service on earth. But, tas a spirit, it is my duty to come here and my, that Christ ianity owes its orgin to Buddhism. It i.s useles for peudo-philoso-

The spirit repudiates all deistical ideas, as inconsistent with the laws of life and the organization of matter. In this he takes a position with the most advanced thinkers of the present age. He tells us he was led to that conclusion by his intercourse with spirits of vast antiquity. The spirit seems to have gotten bravely over his subserviency to the papacy, when he pronounces that institution a miserable failure. We venture to say the ntterance of that truth was the signal for his spirit emancipation. Surely time is fast making an end of the mummeries of priesteraft, and the slavish fears of its vietims. Stand firm ye friends of mental freedom and human rights, and you will ere long see the reign of enlightened freedom.

Abstract

"I salute you, SIR :-The man or woman who originates or introduces anything new in this universe, is one of the saviours of mankind. In my mortal life I was a Greek seholar, and wrote some two hundred and fifty to two hundred and eighty dissertations in the Greck, in the French, and in the German tongue. Throughout my researches, I found that the Greek tongue and the sanserit idioms are very much alike. I was well informed in regard to all the Greek ideas of Eelecticism, and in the Gospel of Apollonites of Tyana, as presented by his disciples Potamon and Ammonius Saceas. Youhad a communifation given you that is mised in its character. The spirit had not the power to tell you just what he wanted to say. [The communication referred to was that of Fucilidas, the Abyssinian negus.] I claim to know what he intended to say, from my knowledge of the (Greek, and especially from some Pethagoren manuseripts, written either by Pythagose, or his followers, corroborated by Diodorns Siechlus, which mannseripts were extant in Viema, and had heen obtaned from the Same sumed as the Manuseript (ireek copy of the Testament of ('yrillus Lucaris, (The Alexandrian Codex). They were part and parce of Mss, that I preserved when at Constantinople. Diodorns, by his comments upon it, and by the comments of other historians before his time, shows that the primitive letters of signs of the sanserit language, are to be found in the Gheez language of Ethopia. Facilidas wanted to testify to that fact, thut he failed to do what he intended. It is easy for spirits to take control of the medium, but it is not se easy to say just what they want to state. [1s it on account of that resemblanee between the letters of the Sanserit and the Ethopian langrages, that there is so strong a resemblance between the letters of the Greek and Coptic alphabet?] Yes, and according to all I ever learned, either through the Latin or Greek in relation to the Ethiopianand Sanserit tongues, I eoncluded that if there was any one phace where man first attained to eivilization, that phace was at or near Samatar in Abyssinia, now ealled Nubia, hat at the begiming of this century, it was all embraced under the designation of Abysinia. In the school of Ammonius Saceas, the two principal mystic symbols or signs were the phatlie eross and Aries or the Ram. And those symbols ean be seen upon the ruins still existing about tive miles from where (osmos Indicopluestes discovered the Aldulian inseription. [What was the name of that place?] I have the name at the end of my tongue, but I cannot speak it. You will find it mentioned in the Cyelopedia of Aneient Ruins, under the title of Ancient Architecture. It was very foolish in the that I did not write about these facts; but I didso as much as I could, in exactly the same way that the spirit of Cornelius Agrippa told you be did in his time-that is, I symbolized or parableized them. There is no class of men so deep and subtle as your modern priests and religious teachers of all kinds. The truth with them, must ever vield to the demands of the stomath. I only come to prepare the way for the next spirit, Hewnins, the contemporary of Plotinus, who will now procered to enlarge upon what I have stated, as the facts were known to him in his day. I thank you for this hearing. [Had yon the writings of Heremnins before yon?] Yes. [Ware they anmeng the papers yon found at (oonstantinople? Yes, and from realing his writings I maturally formed an attarhment for Iteremins. Indeed, I have been informed by him, in spirit life, that he wat my controlling ghide. [Then you were Frandei* Alter. I lien at Viemna in 1804.,"

Charles Francis Alter was just the man to make the philologieal discoveries of which he as a spirit speaks. There is no historical mention made of his researches in relation to the Eclectic philosophy of Potamon and Ammonius Saccas, but we venture to say that among those two hundred and fifty dissertations there will be found much to confirm this statement of the spirit.

The explanation given of the failure of Facilidas to completely say what was intended, is consistent with the experience of many spirits. From the communication it would appear that Alter was sent to Constantinople, but whether upon a literary, a religious or a diplomatic mission, does not appear in the current mention of him and his labors. If it should prove true that the oldest known written language had its origin in Ethicpia and not in India, and that the Sanserit alphabet is almost identical with that primitive Ethiopic alphabet, then will the whole of the theories in relation to ancient history, and especially in relation to what is called sacred history, have to be abandoned. We are not yet prepared to put forth a theory to substitute them ; but, if what is pronsised by spirits in the way of information is ever fulfilled, it will be no longer necessary to theorize at all. It is unfortunate for us, and most fortunate for those who would conceal the truth about these matters if they could, that so little is known about the history and antiquities of Ethiopia.
-The spirit tells us that in the school of Ammonius Saccas, the two principal mystic symbols were the phallic cross and the Ram, and that these symbols are found with, if not derived from the inlabitants of Ethiopia. The spirit frankly admits that while he knew these things, he did not feel that he could afford to more than hint his knowledge of them. The spirit's explanation of the relations existing between himself and the spirit of Heremnius, is perfectly consistent with probability, as we have every reason ourself to know by many experiences.

HERENNIUS. A Contemporary of Plotinus.

"My salutation to you, sir, shall be: By the combination of the efforts of spirits and mortals engaged in the service of truth, we will demolish all error. My name was Heremilus, and I wat the contemporary of Plotinus. [Then in my estimation you were the eontemporary of one of the greatest and best men that ever lived.] There were some thinge, about which he and I eould not agree. He leaned too mueh, or too entirely towards the purely transcendental-that is, he wats like too many of your modern lecturers; he lived in the elouds, I prefered to live here below. That was the ehief difference between us. To make my position clear to youmodern people, I will say, I was a materialistic Epirituatist. That is, while I believed in spirit life and spirit return to earth, I wanted to gatin all I condd here. It was well known inmy time at Alexandria, and to Ammonius Sacets himself, and to others, that the origimal or finst writings or tablets of man's history, were foum in lithiopia and not in India or Tilet. Such was the tatheng of my time, and as far as 1 eould find they were well supported liy the decending line of Neguses in Abyesinia. The people of that comory were taught ly Jewish Rahbis in the third century, and their religion then became mixel with Judaism. Thase Juwish Rabhis went there about A. 1). exth, amd wanted the Ethiopians to aceept their rites of cireumeision, cte. Sut lefore that time these people had a clate and pmoitive record that will yet eome to light, extemding batk 14, (1)(1) gears. This will show that the rivilizations of Imbia had its wrigin there, of whieh the Buddhistie went weatward hy way of the continent that then existed, and extemed far to the westward in the Parifie orean, but which is now sumk heneath the sea, exeept its higher portions, which form the islands of that ocean. Fron the extremity of that land, it pasial to the Wiatern Continent, striking it near the lathmus of lamama. This aecount of the current of eivilization has adl lowe exphaned to me in spirit life: otherwise I would not he able to mive yon this. Sut the farts firat mentioned were idea we had of brilliant mentality and untarnished honor. [Will you please state what was done at your circle meetings?] The neophyte, after he had undergone the probation preseribed by Apollonius of Tyana, a part of which was the seven years of silence prescribed by Pythagoras, was admitted to membership. All candidates for admission did not fulfil the whole of it, but as far as they could. On being admitted to the circle, the neophyte was seated on a kind of centre piece, and the rest formed a circle around him. In a short time spirits atcepted him, by taking control of him in some way. [Did you not regard Plotinus as an extraordinary medium?] Yes; but he was gloomy. He could get external manifestations of spirits, but he was like a great many of your modern mediums -he was peculiar. If the neophyte was not accepted by the spirits, and was not controlled by them to produce manifestations of a positive character, he was put out of the circle until such time as they could control him. That was the way we operated. There was, about that time, great disputing at Alexandria and Rome. Circles continued to meet in those cities, and the spirits produced their manifestations at them as best they could. The party showing the greatest mediumistic power won the most favor for the time. And that is why there were so many changes before the dawn of Christianity. Just as Christianity began to take its present shape, there was a grand assembling of all the learned men of the world, who came from India under the name of Gymnosophists; who came from Singapoor under the name of Buddhists; who came from Abyssinia as Geezaleze ; and from about syria and Judea as Esenes, who mutually compared their religious systems to see which was the best. And these learned men set about formulating what would have been one of the highest and noblest religions that was ever conceived by the minds of men. But it was orerthrown by that consummate scoundrel Constantine; and ever since then you have been made to carry a weight that almost crushes you to the earth. There is no sense in the religion founded by Constantine. It contains all ceremonies of the ancient pagans combined with a god that never existed : and therefore I hope that the time will come when througt your efforts, and the man I am controlling, and through others who think and act, that we can overturn this gigantic Christian fraud. I thank you for this hearing."

AMELIUS.

A Disciple of Plotinus.

"I gREET YOU, SIR:-That the sun of eternal truth may shine through the elonds of ignorance that now obscure the reason of the majority of mankind, is my prayer. I was a disciple and follower of the sehool of Apollonias, Potamon, Ammenitus Faceas, and Plotinns; and wats the friend of Porphyry. I fooked upon Plotinus, my master, as the God of my time. It is true that at times he was gloomy, and what you might term ascetic; but for all that, the manifestations of spirits through lim, and the grand developing power he possessed on those who were mediumistie, were of such a character that for athotred years after my time his disciples were murdered becamse they would do no sacrifice at the dietation of either the followers of Jupiter or Jesus. Why, Eelecticism was checked in its infoney, no one perhaps understands more elearly than myself. The pagan prieste preferred to see their evemonials kept up through the ('abolie ('hareh than to allow them to die out hefore the eonsmang eflicte of the light of eternal truth. But the ahsurdity of thase ceremonials is now very phan. The encmachments of the (hristian pricthood upon the domains of the andent religions, such as limhamanism, Buddhism, lamecei-m, dudai-m and all the other ancient religions, kave them -nth pewer an to sumereede all of them; but the priesthome of all these ane ient religious systeme have now heconde preparell to unite to strike a blow :at that fratd on humanity ealled ('hristianity. The initiation of pros-lyte, inny day, was difleront mater difternt materes. The initiationinatiinstated by Potamon, atthonk they reamblal ench other: and Ammonims Sactar, Plotinns and Pophyry dittied in the toll with yom, [lis, he did, and Plotinu- tom, ] and he ask- me
 hii manter, Plotinu* tarly : and that lay :ppopriated his bekes, altering them to shit his own motions. . Ind le de-ires mer- -ay to yon, th-lay, that it his work cammot he motton, he will wontol : medime and pewrite them thromgh his of her hathl ; for he will hate justice done to Plotinns ath himself.

He too highly appreciated and loved Plotinus to have misrepresented him. That is his declaration. The proselytes of Plotinus were initiated with the sacred cord of the Brahmans; and as soon as they were initiated, they declared that they would renounce all their former life-that it should be a blank to them-and that they would always wear that cord and proteet it with their lives. And for one hundred and fifty years after my time, they were sworn upon.their sacred cord. It was to them their Bible. I know, and positively assert, as I hope for happiness in the spirit life, that the statutes of my master and of Apollonius were privately worshipped by Alexander Severus. These statues stood by each other in his temple, and they were so much alike that you coukd hardly distinguish the difference. In faet it was really taught in my day by some of the disciples of Plotinus, and especially by Porphyry, that he (Plotinus) was a reinearnation of Apollonius of Tyana. He, Plotinns, did not so believe, but thought he was controlled by the spirit of Apollonius. And now I wish to testify to another point, and that is, that the initiation was performed by reading from a scroll written in the Geezaleze language, which was ehamed to have been written by Marabolalek in the temple erected by him. This writing was said to have been written about five hundred years before the time of Ptolemy Euergetes. But this ancient people had begun to decline in civilization, and they were overrun by the Egrptians and other mations, which tended to destroy their fommer ascendency. Like other successful nations, they had grown luxurious, and were overun by conquerors, pretty much as were the Jews. [Are any of this ancient race now in existence?] The Copts of Eqypt are the nearest to them, unless there is a purer type of them in Kordofan. I have now stated what nceurs to me at present; but shouk I hereafter think of anything beside, which it is desirable or important to mention, I will, like Porphyry has done through me to-day, get some disciple of Ilotimus to commmicate it to you. [I hope you will do so, for the spirit testimony that relates to Plotinus and his followers is of the greatest interest and importance.] It is cortain that he was the only perfect follower of Ammonius Saceas. By that I mean that his teachings were not blended with the philosophicat doctrines of Plato and Pythagoras, as were the teachings of A pollonius of Tyana and his followers."

Refer to Biographie Universelle for acenunt of Amelius.
Dr. Laumaye the Cyclopaedist in the Bingraphie Universelle to which we direct the reader's attention for account of Amelius, states that Amelius composed nearly a hundred treatises of which none have come down to us. Here we ask, why have nome of those humdred treatises that Amelins wrote and published, been permitted to come down to us? Wi:answer, beeathse the fombders of the religious or theobegieal fratud called Christianty conld not attord to let it be known what the Edectie philowophy was, as they were seeking to fornd a false religion hy engratting it upon that philosophy. The whoke literature of the Eelectic anthore and philosephers has been destroyed or conceated, exeept such perverted portions of their writings: as their Christian enemies have sem fit to preserve, in order to mislead their followers as to the trae teathings of Eelecticism, and the manifest Claristian corruption of those teachings. The simple fact that every trace of Edecticism, or Nen-llatoniom, as Christian writers have ealled it, as to the the theologieal mature of that philosophy, hats been obliterated or eomecaled, show that the originators and developers of the ('hristian seheme of human enshavemont he pricstcraft, saw that this was a necossity if they were to suceed; and thus the faet of their eonseious guilt is made manifest beyond all question. some of our readers may remmber, that the spirit of Pope (iregory VII., or the (ireat (ifegory, came, and eonfersed, through the medimu that, about A. I). 107s, heordered the Library of the Pabatine Apollo, at Rome, to be burned, in orker to deatroy the vast eollention of writings by : tuthors of the Alexamtrian sehool which were there deposited ; and which if they became known to the world at latre would hawe made ath end of the loman ('atholice power. In the commis-ion of that awfor erime against the rights and interests of hamatnity, the writings of Amelins no doubt perished with those of his predecesors, contemporaties, and sheresors, in the promulgation of the Felectic religion, or philomphy.
ly this commanieation from the spirit of Amelins, it would appar that Potanom was mot the orivinator of the belectir philowphy, even if he was the tirst toratalioh it as a divetimet *- then designated the Ahexambrian edow. The originator lose of the dosmas, doctrines and ternets of Brahmathi-m, and Roman philosophy. Amelius seems fo have siared with the learned Porphyry, the religious venemation with which the latter regarded Plotinus, lis great master. The statement oi the spirit that Plotinus was an extroodinary mediun for spirit control, is fully borne out by historically weordes facts, and to this fact he owed his great distinction as the leading diseiple of another extraordinary medium, Ammonius Saceas. Indeed, it was to his wonderful gifts as a merium, that Ammonius owed his great distinction as a teacher of men. Ite was an molearned man, having been in his earlier life a common porter in Alexandria, and his teachings were given in his private circle while in a state of ecstacy or trance. These ancient mediums naturally incurred the hatred of the ruling priesthoods, as do our mediums of to-day, and their followers, who refused to bend to the Roman and Christian superstitions, were subjected to torture and death by the priestly propagators of those superstitions.

From what spirit Amelins says, it would seem that the Christian and pagan priests united and combined in crushing the jufant Spiritualism of that early period, just as the Roman Catholic and Protestant Christian priesthoods are combined and united to-day in erushing the infant Spiritualism of today, by the social, religions, and political ostracism of all who stand up in its defence. But the time has come in the progress of events, when the triumphs achieved by Christianity are to be the means of sealing its doom. Not only has the homan mind on earth outgrown the conditions which enabled the priestly tyrants of Christianity to fasten that delusion upon it, but the human mind in spirit life, which has slumbered in listless indifference through unknown ages, is awakening to the realization of its inherent power, and is moving with united and resistless force against all the obstacles to human progress, the most formidable of which is the Christian superstition, with its sixteen centuries of unquestioned domination.

It is not the least significant feature of this communication that the spirit declares that the statues of Apollonius and Plotinus stood side by side in the imperial temple of Alexander severus, and that they bore a striking resemblance to each other. That they were held in the highest vencration by Severus is very certain. Plotimus was a contemporary of Alexander Severus, they being about of the same age ; but Ploti-nus survived him thirty-five years. As a disciple of Ammonius Saceas, Plotinus must have gained great distinction at an early age, if what the epirit says is true, for Alexamder died in A. J. , 23F. The veneration of Alexamber for Plotinus must have arisen from the fact that the later was the inearnation of, or was controlled amd inspired by, the spirit of $A$ pollonins of Tyana, who was especiably venerated by Alexander. Amelius fells us that Porphyry requrded him as the re-incaruation of the spirit of Apollonius, while Plotimus believed himself to be only the medium for that venerated spirit.

STRABC. Historian and Geographer.

Abstract

" 1 will salute you by saying: The truth must be unveiled. We camot longer aftord to have any 'Holy of Holies.' I will commence by saying: If the records of the past had been allowed to stand, there would have been no ('hristianity to-day. It was known and fully understood in my time, and it was taught, that the doetrines of l'ythagoras, Pato, and the Gymnosophists, together with the deretrines regarling the gods and goddesses of (ireece and Rome, were to be fonnd in the most ancent inseriptions and writings, whether on stone or papyrus, in Nubia, where there were evidencesof a civilization sormente that we ancients, ats you would term us, had lost all know ledge of it in the obsempty of tince. I wote upon this subjeet and put my work in shape; but I know not whether 1 (ann give you the title of it correctly throngh this medimm. It meant 'Ancient Relies." I wote a book with that title, and it is now in the posesesion of the (ireck ( $h$ hureh, athe I think, in the hamde of at Crew patriard, at Moseow, husia. It was samed by the Caliph Omar, bexame of the eingabarity of its cower, which  Thic cover was that of a book then extant, and I wed it as the cover of my book. Aftor my death it was sent th Aloxamdria, where it was eaptured. It was on theprain dyedred. About the la rimuing of what is called the Christian crat the we was at great revival amours a clase of people similar to your modern Shakers, who went by the name of Essenes; but they did not become a distinct people until about from A. D. 60 to 75 . Ignatius of Antioch was the first to bring them into prominence; but their teachings were nothing new, and were almost the same as you will find in the Pauline Epistles to the Galatians. But let me return to the point I want to make. Both in Sennaar and Abyesinia, and among the ruins seattered throughout Nubia, you will find inseriptions which aresimilar to those to be seen in the temple of Chrishna at Mathura, on the Jumna, in India. If you will compare the oldest inscriptions of the Temple at Mathura with those in Africa, to which I have referred, you will find that nearly all the letters of the ancient Sanscrit can be found in a pre-historic form amid the ruins of Sennar and other ruins of Nubia. During the last years of my life there was an extruordinary young neophyte who was preparing himself, by close conmmion with the spirit world, to become the god of his time; but I died too soon to see him commence his ministry and the performance of his miracles. He then went by the name of "The Son of Apollo," or A pollonitus. The nearest likeness of this man that you can obtain, is the one which was painted in 1874, by the artist medium N. B. Starr, who was inspired by Raphael. The next spirit who will communicate is Phraotes, who was king of Taxila. I passed away in A. D. 24."

We take the following account of Strabo from the Encyclopædia Britamnica:
"Strabo, an illustrious geographer, was born at Amasia, a eity of Cappadocia. The time of his birth cannot be aseertained but he is known to have flourished during the age of Augustus and Tiberius. Some writers have fixed his birth about B. C. 60, and Clinton makes it occur not later than B. C. 54. He studied grammar and rhetoric under Aristodemus, at Nysa, in Caria; philosophy under Xenarchus, a peripatetic; and he took lessons with Tyrrannis of Amisus. Influenced by the authority, probably, of Bethus of Sidon, who had been his preceptor, he adopted the tenets of the Stoies. He obtained the friendship of Cornelius (Gallus, governor of Egypt. Strabo composed a history in forty-three books which unfortunately is now lost. In order to collect materials for his great work, he travelled in many different regions, and after much toil and research, completed his geography, which is justly regarded as a very precions relic of antiquity. It consists of seventeen books, all of which are not, however, entire."

Strabo was one of the most remarkable of ancient writers. In this bricf account of him and his vast labors, we can sce the tracks of those (hristian devils who hestroyed an mucin of the literature produced letweon 13. (. Sio :and A. 1). sus), and especially everything during that prexiod, of a historical character, which showed the falsity of Inobew and Christan theology: The great work on which htrabo expended all the reourees of his mature and most active years, hats been dostroyed, while his geography, which was entirely fragmentary and uncomected, has been allowed to come down to tis in a more or less motilated condition. Why was the one destroyed and the other motilated: Have we not a right to infer that it was becaluse it was mot posible to have mutilated the connected historical narrative without the design and ohjeet of the mutilation being elearly manifest ; while such mutibation of the fragmentary work was posible without the true olygeet of the mutilation being diseovered. This course has been fursued in somany instances, that it will be fomb to have been a canonized rule of Christian dealing with ancient literature.

Well does this spirit say: "If the records of the past had been allowed to stand, there wonld te no Christianity to-day." The onte fact, that those records are not in existence, is sufficient to show that the anthors of the religions fabrication called ('bristianity, were compelled to destroy them to conceal the monstrons erime against their fellow-men in which they were engaged; and the pertinacity with which this work of suppresson amd concealment is kept up ly their shecosors, down to the present time, makes the grilt of the ('hristian clergy, in endeavoring to perpetuate that imposition, as great as was the gnilt of those who originated it and imposed it unn h homanity. These people givestrato the tithe of geographer, but for no better ratan than that theirgnity consereneres prompted them to eonceal the fact that he wats a historian of the nose profomed erwdition and of the highest anthority. In view of the mumerons probabilities that this commmatation is aththentieally from the spirit of strabo, the information it gives beeomse of the highest interest.

It has leen the gemerally receivel opinion that the sanserit lamgatge is the ohlent written langlage of the worth. In the light of the spirit diectesares that are being made in these miprexedented phit theseages, this ram will have to he given up; and, inderd, the whole history of the ancient world will have to be rewritton. The spirit of sumbe tells us: "It was known, and fully understood in my time, and it was taught, that the doctrines of Pythagoras, Plato, and the Gymnosophists, together with the doctrines regarding the gods and goddesses of Greece and Rome, were to be found in the most ancient inscriptions and writings, whether on stone or papyrus, in Nubia, where there were evidences of a civilization so remote that we ancients, as you would term us, had lost all knowledge of it in the obscurity of time." If this statement of the spirit can be made good by still existing evidence, as we are strongly inclined to believe will be done, then Moses, the Jews, and Christianity, must all be climinated from the world's history, or be elassed among the myths of the past, for they must stand or fall together.

It is a conceded fact that Strabo went to the confines of Ethiopia, which then included all the country beyond the southern borders of Upper Egypt. He is conceded to have been a singularly intelligent and keen investigator and observer of facts, and must have observed what Preseott referred to in his Conquest of Mexico, when he wrote concerning the Ancient Toltecs of that country :
"Their shadowy history reminds us of those primitive races who preceded the Egyptians in the matreh of civilization; fragments of whose monuments, as they are seen at this day incorporated with the buildings of the Egyptians themselves, give to these latter the appearance of almost modern construction."

If the fragments of such monuments of a pre-Egyptian civilization are to be seen at this time, they must have been equally, if not much more apparent nincteen hundred years ago, at the time when Strabo travelled over Egypt to its farther confines. It is hardly likely that those traces of a civilization, compared with which Egyptian civilization was then recent, should not have attracted the special attention of so close an observer of men and things as was strabo, who was in Egypt with the especial view of inguiring into all such matters. The spirit tells us that he wrote a work upon Ancient Relics, treating of that and other analogous matters. He describes that work with singular minuteness; says it is still extant, and explains how it came to be saved at the burning of the Alexandrian Library. If what the spirit says is true, it is very apparent that he took a special interest in following the travels of that work ; and fully explains the positiveness with which he speaks of the Ethiopian orgination of the philosophies of India, ( ireece and Rome.

What the spirit says respecting the foumbing of Fssenianism is true, beyond reasonable doubs. The ('hristimn witers hase claimed Ignatins of Antioeh as a diseiple of Kit. Peter, who :hbut A. D. G9, ordaned hime as :t ('hristian bishons. It is hardly necessary to say that this little piece of Christian history is the purest fietion, since St. Peter was mothing more nor less than a stone or rock, which was suplesed to support the Roman Catholic ('hristian Chureh. Ignatins of Antioch was not a Christian at all, hut an E-sene, who orqanized that sect of religionists, and hecame their first gatriareh about A. 1). 6 ( The spirit tells us that their religions doctrines were not new, and weresimilar to those contained in the Epistle to the (ialatians. This is not only true, but the other Pauline Epistles contain much doctrinal matter that was derived from the Essenes by Apollenius, the St. Pand of the Christian Erriptures, and was incorporated hy him in the writings taken ly Mareion, the Ginostie, to Pome, about A. I). 140, from Antioch, where he obtained them. At that date the Esenian seet had merged into that of the (inostios.

But the rpecial intarest of the commanication centres in the point mate concerning the identity of the simecrit alphabet with a much more ancient alphahet to lo found soupptured on the ruint existing in Abswinia, Nubia and the neighboring comentries of $A$ frica.

The reference of Strabo to Apolionitus of Tyana, is very important, in as math as it shows, that an carly :a A. I). :5, the renown of the latter hat herome gencral, althongh he hat mot then begum his great medimmist ic miswion. His medimmship tand permanal and mental rhatacteristics mast have hen wers remarkable, to havereecised the tithe of Apeltonin* or "The son of Apolle," the (ifecian promilication of the somere of all liatht and life一the" (ilorious King of Day "-the Sum.

The referenee of the spirit to the remarkable spirit painting of $A$ pollenins, is not the leat ingortant feature of this comimunceation. 'the piature is an oil patinting likencos of : man of thirtw-there or thirty-fomr vears of age, the expresem of Whore features and attitude indicates the greathot purity of liti, bencoolener of heart, and strength of mind and eharacter. It is ap picture that fixes the attention at onere, and grows in interest the more it is examined. It was painted by the hand of the venerable artist medium, N. B. Starr, and it is inscribed "The Nazarene, painted by Raphael through N. B. Starr." At a materializing seance given at the residence of Col. - , in Philadelphia, a spirit purporting to be Raphael, appeared in materialized form. We asked permission to speak with him, which was granted. On going forward to the cabinet, we saw before us the materialized form of a man who bore a strong resemblance to a picture purporting to be a likeness of himself, which stood on an easel beside the cabinet, to which he directed our attention by pointing to it. We then inquired of him if he knew of the picture painted through the hand of Father Siarr. He answered, "Yes." We then asked him whose portrait it was. He answered: "Apollonius was the Nazarene." From these spirit statements, and the fact that spirits through several other mediums have made similarstatements, we infer that we lave a speaking likeness of $A$ pollonius at least as he appears spiritually to spirit eyes.

PHRAOTES.

King of Taxila.

Abstract

"May the Sun of Truth ever shine upon your head! I have been more than six months fighting my way here. The corroborating evidence that I shall give you to-day of the mediumship and exalted character of Apollonius of Tyana, is such, that millions of Catholic spirits would rather cease to exist than I should give it. I am Phraotes of Taxila. [Is the name not Plraortes.] No. It is Pliraotes. I belonged to what was termed the Diamond Circle, by interpretation the Mountain Cirele, and was sworn to help to propagate the truth to the best of my knowledge. I recognized bat one master on earth, whom I was expected to lisien to, and he was enigmatically ealled "The Sun of Truth." He was the ehief of the Gymnosophreste, and his name was Iarchus. The laws of the Gymmosopheste, required all princes, in those days, to take a journey to a sacred shrine upon a mountain in Northern India, and there they were instrncted in all the virtues they were expected to practice. On leaving Bahylon and Nineveh, for Taxila, the coming of Apollonius was announced by couriers, who had preceded him, who represented him to be a good and wise son of the Diamond ('ircle; not hecause he had been acepted and initiated, bat becanse he performed all the signs required of a member. In other words he showed that the spirits were with him in great penser. When he arrived, I introduced him to the learmen of my const, and sent him forward to Iarchus. The place where he (harchus) resided was called in our time the Somataln of the Wise. There he was initiated : and received many theurgical rites; and afterwards returned to whence he hand sot out. I think he was at that time atout forts-seren vears of ace. He receded and earried back with him the sarfed Thestament of the Mountain of Light ('irele. He rexeised all the evangelieal books same one, athd that one he fated to gent, simply heramse it combl not he had at that time at the Mommtan of the Wise. It hat been taken gouth ley way of (eygon on Singapoor. It was komen in these days as the IFamadan. It was afterwards called the Book of Mathew, hecamse it was written by a follower of Buddha, Whese Hindor nathe was something like that. This hook was ohtainal he Armenian traders from Singapoor, two homdred years before the time I peak of : and they womble never retmrn it. It is therefore in Armenia that yoummet seek for the true version of Matthew."

Such was the emmmmication of the pritit of Phrantes, the ble to question the gemminenos and anthenticity of that eommaniation, as our rembers may readity see, if thoy will read the Life of Apollonills by Philostrathe, It is stratore, hout frace, that the only historie mention of phatotes is fomm in (e) Hection with the acosunt given by Damis, tha disciple of Apollonims, of their matual journey into ladia ly the way of Nimeveh, batoyon amt Taxila. 'There is in that biography quite : detailed aceomb of what oeremed at the cont of Phatace during athere days visit of Apollonims. This accothet we are indebted for to Philotratus, the hiographer of Aphlonime. The following later of introdaction ath recomthembation of $A$ pullonime, to the (iymmonphists or wise men of Thmia, will show how lhamen of Taxila wemem him. It.

"Kibis Phraotes to Iaternds his Master, athe the Wise Men that are with him, sendeth greeting: Apollonius being himself a very wise man, but thinking you to be wiser, is coming to you, that he may be aequainted with your discipline. Send him therefore away from you instructed in whatever ve know, as being assured that none of your leaming shakl be lost. He is the most eloquent of all men, and hath an exectlent memory. Let him also see the throne wheron I sat, when you, Father Iarchus, gave to me my lingdom. Furthermore, his companjons deserve much praise, in that they love such a man. Farewell."

The spirit of the King who gave that letter to Apollonius, returns and testifies that for more than six months lee lad been fighting his way through opposing spirit influences to give lis commmication. Phraotes tells us that he himself was a member of the Gymmosophic association, called the Diamond Circle or the Mountain of Light Circle, and that as such he was sworn to propagate the truth to the best of his knowledge. As a member of that high circle, Phraotes tells us that its chief was mystically called "The Sun of Truth," and that his name was Iarchus. He tells us that as a prince he was sent to a saered shrine upon a mountain, in Northern India, where he was instructed in all the virtues that shotild adorn the character of a ruler. Phraotes tells us a f:ect which Damis failed to record, that the coming of Apollonius to Taxila from Babylon, was announced by Babylonish couriers in adrance, who represented to Plumotes, that A pollonius was a good and wise son of the Diamond Circle; not becanse he had been accepted and initiated, but because he performed all the signs required by a member. Could anything more strongly indicate that $A$ pollonius was under some Hindoo spirit influence, if not under that of Gatama Buddha himself. Phraotes tells us that on his arrival he introduced him to all the learned people of his court, and sent him forward to the Mountains of the Wise, to Iarehns, his Master. Ife testifies that Apollonins was initiated in all the mysteries of Buddhism or of the Gymmosophestae, and then returned to Antioch from whence heset out, a fully authorized Buldhistic teacher or preacher. Phraotes tells tes that Apollonins was at that time about forty-seven years of age.

But the most important and significant part of this spirit's testimony, is his statoment thast Apollonius carried with him from India the sacred Testament of the Momatain of Light ('ircle; and that he received all the evangelical books save one, which one he failed to get beeanse it was not to be had at that time at the Alountain of the Wise. Phraotes tells us it had then been taken by way of Ceylon to singapoo: Whether or not there was a Buddhistie gospel called the Damadan we do not know, nether do we know of any follower of buddra whose name resembled Nathew. Thesearematters we mast let pass for what they are worth. But that Amenian traders brought a Buddhistic gospel from Singapoor, into Armenia, and that that grospel related to the Hindoo saviour Christan is certain. This aceounts for the fact that one of the oldent copies of that grospel was found in India ly Pantemus in the second century: On that print, Mec'lintock && Strong's Cyclopadia of Theologrical Litemature says:
"Pantemns, a ('hristian philosopher [in other words an Eclectic philesopher, of the stoice seet, flourished in the second erentury. He is supposed to have been a mative of Alexandra, and to have tanght philowopy and meligion there, about A. 1). 1so. He went on a mission to Ethiopia, [the (Ereeks called the combtry of India, Ethiopia, ] from whence the is said to have brought the (inepel of it. Aatthew, written in Hebrew: (Euschins Mist. Eecles, v, 10.)."

From the comulative testimony pouring in upon this sulyect it is quite evident that the Hebrew writing part of the store is the work of EBs-bins, who did not dar- to let it be linown that Pantemas had fomm the (iospel of Mathew writach in the s:anserit or lali tomene. It is thereme highly pobable that what Phrates says about the singapoor Buddhistic Hambanh, and its being identienl with the (hristim (ioterel of st. Mathow is substantially, if mot litorally truc. It is this vast acemmulation of spirit teatimony, all tending to cotablish the faet that the so-talled Christian Foriphures are

 ath. .....ntial truth. Well dial ther pirit of Jhantes say that there wete milliont of Cotholier spirit who would rather ceate to exist than this truth should become known to mankind.

JOHN FREDERICK GRONOVIUS. Critic of the Seventeenth Century.

- "I am very happy to have the chance of giving testimony. My name was John Frederick Gronovins. I occupied the chair of belle-letters in the University of Leyden. I was the transLator of Sallust, Livy, Pliny, Sencea, etc., and I must say, in all truth, that the translations of these works are not very correct. I must also say that the manuscripts from which those translations were made, were very much changed from the originals by Christian priests and professors, in order to conceal the real origin of Christianity. It was worth as much as your place would bring you pecuniarily, in my day, to show up the truth. But I here declare that the real text of the letter of I'liny to Trajan, proves that he was not speaking of the Christians, bat of the Essenes of that time. And a great many other passages have been interpolated or suppressed. You will never get the truth as long as Christians till the professorships in your colleges and control your libraries. But the spirit of free inquiry which is being aroused by writers of your time in relation to ancient literature, will soon obtain the proof that what these spirits have stated through this medium is true. It is astonishing to me that any Spiritualist writer, or one who claims to be such, would try to show that the Christos of India, on the authority of Bently, a Christian bigot, was bom about A. D. 600, in Arjourn, when the real facts of the case, on an ancient authority I have seen, are, that he was worshipped by the soldiers of Alexander the Great, and that at that time that worship was nine hundred years old. I read in that ancient authority that the soldiers of Alexander the Great, when they arrived at Theles, in Upper Egypt, they found their god Chrisna, and fell to worshipping him. It is therefore preposterous to pretend that Chrisna was born 600 years after Jesus of Nazareth. The great trouble has been, and ever will be, with Christian writers, that they cannot get over the identity of the name Christ with Christos; and it will always be a (aluse of grief to them, because they cannot escape from the truth of what I here state."

Refer to the Biographie Universelle for account of Gronovius.
We are grateful to the deeply learned man whose spirit gave that important testimony to the fact that the letter of Pliny to Trajinn did not relate to the followers of Jesus of Nazareth, but to the Essenian followers of the Hindoo Christos. In the light of these spirit commmaiations, ('hristian writers could have made no greater blunder than to elam their identity with the Essenes of the Asiatic provinees of the Roman Empire; and especially, that Ignatios of Antioch, the very originator of the Essenian hame was a Christian bishop. By taking this insensate course, they have forever made an end of their theologieal and ecelesiastical framd. The Esemes were beyond all question, the followers of a blended Hindooand Magian philosophy or religion, the great central object of their worship being the most pure and mediumistic member of their seet, who, (as the (irand Lamat of Thibet, was supposed to be amimated ly the spirit of Gautama Buddha), was supposed to be amimated hy the spirit of Christos, the Hindoosaviour. They were in no sense followers of Jesus, and had been swallowed up in the Pathlitesect founded by Apollonitus, and the smbserqent (inostic and Neo-Platonic sects of philosophy, at least two hundred years before the name of Jesus of Nazareth was ever heard of.

Gronovius especially testifies to Christian tampering with and eorrupting of the text of the various ancient aththors who Were eriticised or transhated by him. He admits that gecemiary eonsiderations pevented him from disclosing what he knew to be the truth upon that point. He well says: "You will never get the truth as long as ('hristians till the profesorships in your colleges and wontrol your libraries." Men who have been so loher trabed to cover up athd conceal truth, will never soruple at amy measure that is necessary to that emd. It is mow, ats it Wats in the fime of (iromovits, bectulary considerations that (ontrel them.

The rebuke of the stupid attempt of superficial writers, to Hras down the IVatoo ('hrisut in order to exalt the Christ ian Jesus, shows that spirits are takingerornizather of what is goming on, in that department of literatare, at least. A= the spirit sass, the worship of ('lorishat was an old religion when Alexan-Cimonovius righttully says that the grost catise of ('lristian grinf has leent, and ever will be, that they rammot art wrer the identity of the name ('hri-t with ('hri-tes whon was the ohjext of divine worship ly the suldiers of Alexamder, more thath three eventuries lectore it is preterded Josts C larict was horlo.

ABULPHARAGIUS.

Bishop of Guba.

Abstract

"You have had here, before, a German Jesuit priest, (Charles Franeis Alter), you shall now have the testimony of a Roman Catholic bishop. A variety of testimony, all bearing upon one point, is always calculated to strengthen it ; but the direction of my studies was a little different from that of the other spirits who have commmicated here. Mine reaches in the direction of the Armenian writers, Moses Chorensis and Meisrob. (That was the way the name was spelled and not Mesrob). After a close examination of the Armenian, Greek and Latin Testaments, I came to the conclusion that the Armenian version combined with the Coptic, was from the original Gheez, which showed a mixture of the idioms of Upper and Lower Egypt as they were found at Alexandria. The whole secret of what is called Christianity, is made plain by the New Testament, and one book of the Old Testamentthe book of Damiel. This Daniel is represented as teaching the doctrines of the New Testament, less the miracles ; and is said to have lived at the courts of Darins Hystaspes and Cyrus, and he was there known as the younger Zoroaster. He tanght the religion of the Sun, a modern version of which are the shastras. All this I read and studied, but the commentators of my day led me astray, becanse my mind was prejudiced in their favor. But you are getting more knowledge than then existed-you are getting deeper into the meaning of all religions than you think for. These ancient spirits are gathering their forces, and they are determined to show that Christianity is a fraud. I left this mortal life in 128t, and five hundred years passed away before I was willing to seek for the truth. All that time, in spirit life, was wasted by me in trying to propagate Catholicism there. The spirit who helped me out of my condition of ignorance, and to whom I am much indebted, was Apollonius of Tyana. Therefore in justice to him I promised I would retarn here and tell all I conld possibly think of to set things right. I now belong to the spirit organization, known in spirit life as "The Illuminatii." I would say to you, sir, that your enemies and opposers will resort to subther and more desperate measures to obstruct you, than they have heretofore done, and you must be on your guard against them. Their proceedings will not le so apparent, hat more dangerous. So I hope yon will kepall your lights burning on the watchtowers of truth. The fact is, the Jesatits of the Roman ('atholic C'hurch, are supplying the opposition to yon, with money to impede yon, and are paying so-called spirthatistie journals to throw back the truth despite your efforts to adsance it. The spirit poydological power which was phrided for this reance, is expended. Having posesesed great peychological power when here, and still retaining it, I was chosen to close this sitting. It may sem a poor satisfaction to comb hack and give a communication after your earth! work is emded ; but, still, it is a great consolation to know that the truth will live despite one's earthly errors. I wats known as Abulpharagius, bishop of (iuba."

Refer to MeClintork and 'rirong's ('yelopaedia of Theological Literature for aceomit of Abulpharagits.

The spirit of this Armenian soholar comes hack to testify to his long and wotse thath useless Christian delusion; and his conversion to the truth at last through the wowl oflices of the spirit of Apollonius. The testimony of this spirit to the fact that the Ammenian Version of the seriptures (Christian son (alled) was from the Coptic version, of the still mere aneient (ileerg verson is exemedingly suggestive if not important. Not lose aggerotive is his statement that in Armenia, as late as 1206 A. D. there were extant proofs that the Daniel of the OHd Testament was known as Zoroastor the Younger at the conets of Darius Hystaspes and ('yrus. The spirit telle us that he tanght the religion of the sim, a modern version of whieh are the Persian Shastras. Aceorling to Abulpharagits the erect of ('hristianity is, that it is cesentially the sum worship taught at bahyon by Zoroater. This, we have adduced a vast :mount of tacts to demonetrate, and the spirit well sitys that thone that seek are retting more kowsheder of there thinge that was to he had in his time. Wi. have every reanon to eredit this -pirit tosthmony, for it is entirely consistent with all humat probability.

When Chri-tian bi-hops, patrateds and priests, join the army of progrose and turn in to help wado the croos of their pat lives, as -pirite, it is athont time for their montal followers to heed this mose minous sign that the time has come for them to do likewior.

MINUCIUS FELIX.

A Montanist Patriarch.

Abstract

"Some evidence must be foreed, others give it because they are on the side of truth. I am neither a Jewish Ginostic, a Cappadocian, nor an Eelectic. 1 am simply a Naturalist. I think that you will find some evidence in Gibbon, that I helped to create, or that I endorsed a thing called Christianity. I knew nothing of any such thing. I was a Montanist ; and the most correct itea I can give you of Montanism is modern Mormonism. I advanced nothing in regatrd to the life of mann, woman or child on this planet, but this: We are all gods to a certain extent, and Pantheism is true Spiritualism. 'The point I have tomake in controlling this medium is summed up in a brief sentence. All ancient and modern civilization originated, not upon the elevated plains of Asia, but upon the waters of the Blue and White Nile. There are spirits who will cons here and prove that all the learned archeologists of the present day are wrong, in supposing that Indian civilization is more ancient than the civilization of Ethiopia in Africa. It is there you must look for the true Sun-the true God-the Great Light, and you will find that Christinnity is an outgrowth from Buddhism. Sun worship, from Zoroastrianism and the Egyptian Osirianism of Hermes Trismegistus, to the origin of Christianity, are at bottom one and the same thing. I would say in conclusion it has been alleged that I was a bishop. I had nothing to do with any chureh. I was the pataiareh ot a tribe."

Refer to Sinith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Biograpliy for account of Minucius Felix.

Whether Gibbon speaks of Minucius Felix in his relation to Christianity we cannot say ; but certainly he has been very generally credited with having been a Christian and a Christian writer. Felix, as a spirit, testifies that this was not the fact, and that he was a Montanist and a patriarch of a tribe of followers, we presume in Africa, where he was born, and where he no doubt taught Montanism with Tertullian. His "apology" was written in defence of Montanisn and as muth against the Cinostic Cluristianity of Marcion as aganst the persecuting decrees of the Roman govermment against Montanism, or Tertullianism, as it was also called. To show how Tertullian and Minueins Felix regarded the ('lnistianity of Marcion, we need only cite Mer'lintock destrong's 'yclopaedia :

" Montanism, it is apparent, then, must be treated as a doctrinal development of the third, rather than of the second century ; for though the history of the sect may be dated back to the middle of the second century, it remained for Tertullim to give definite shape to Montanism, and it is as a separate seet that we ean first deal with the Montanists (or Turtmlianists as they were called in Afriat), in the thind century, continuing to flomish as a sect montil the chose of the sixth cemury, and atl this time, being the sulyeet of legal enactments under all the suceessors of (onstantine down to Justinian (A. 1). 530 )."

Think of it ! This Montanist sect of Anciont Spiritualists continued for more than two hundred years to withstand the continued persecutions of the ('hristian and Pagan emperors of lome, who, it sems, made eommon canse against the spiritmalism of their time. Great indeed mast have been the spirit power behtud those Momtanists, to have so long borne up against such a protmeted, unbroken and heartless persecution, loy the Christian and Pagan tyrants of Rome. The influence of Tertullian and Minueins Felix, must have heen great indeed with these Ancient sipiritualists, to have inspired them through so long and desperate at strugge, 10 sustain the great truth of spirit commmon with mortals.

The testimony of this spirit in relation to Africa and not India being thesene of the most ancient known eivilization, at leas of the Old World, would indieate, that in the third cenfary, it was maderstood and known that the worship of the Truesun-the 'True (iod-the (ireat Light of the world, originated on the waters of the Blue and White Niles, and that the ofler redigions of the wordd, including Christitnity, or what is now ealled *o, were in substance but the same worship of the sum. We ate mot aware what gave rise to the idea that Minmdill Polix was : distinguished lawyer, but :as Tertultian, his contemporary atd tellow advocate of Montaniom, was aton said (1) have been the same, we take it that they distingmialed at it is, it-imprortane rammot be werestimatted, ats a meathe of rathhing long conceated truths.

JOHANN JAKOB GRIESBACH.

"Good morning: - I will begin this communication by saying, that the translators of manuscripts from the time of Euscbius of Casarea, transhated to suit themselves. Yon can thron this in the teeth of the learned world and defy them to dispute what I herestate. There are five ancient Testaments. First, the Brahmanical Testament of Christos to his diseiple Arjourn, the Gospel of St. John of after times; second, the Zend Avesta of the Parsees, devoted to sun-worship, but intermixed with the sacred writings or Testament of Christos; third, the Testament of King Ardelos Babekar, a revision of the writings of Gautama Buddha made at the Council of Asoka; fourth, the Testament of Apollonius of Tyana, the Greek Version of the latter, with explanations, issued at Antioch, about A. D. 56 ; and fifth, the Testament of Jesus Christ, originated by Ensebins of Cesarea. Busides the five Testaments named, there was a Gheez franslation of the two first named Testaments, made by one Arsaces, a brother of a king, made about 450 B . ('. This last was tramslated into the Coptic of Upper and Lower Egypt, and this Coptic translation of Arsaces' Persion was used by the great Armenian theolowian Mesrob and those who followed him. These varions Testaments hegan with passages which When translated are nearly the same as the first chapter of the (dospel of John; and that chapter contains the key to the zodiacal interpretation of all religions. When in my mortal form, I knew of two (ireek Testaments-the Greek Testament before the time of Eusebins P'amphilus, and the Greek Testament after that time. The Greek Testament before that time speaks only of Apollonius as the great Saviour of mankind and the great incarnation of the Deity, known by various titles, such as "the Redeemer of Men," "the sim of Truth," "the Kight of the World," and "God Expresied in Flesh." The title "Above All" was applied to Apollonits. The Greek Testament was submitted to me in the manuscript which wat forwarded from England to me at Jena. I translated it, but not correctly. I made it to conform to what we believed. seventeen pages had been torn ont of it, which were renlaced by interpolated matter. This Greek Testament of Eusebius wats afterwards greatly interfered with by Greek scholars, in the fourth century, and Cyril had a good deal to do with shaping it toward its modern form, as the Testament of Jesus Christ.

Even in the days of Constantine the Great, it was necessary to bring a terrible pressure to bear upon the pagans in order to supplant $A$ pollonius b Jesus ; and so futile did this endeavor of coustantine prove, that it amounted to mothing more than substituting one name for another. All the doctrines, ce:emonies, athd forms of religions exereises, were retained, which aceunts for the entire want of novelty in the ('hristian Scrip)tures, and their similarity to all previous Seriptures. 1 am well satisfied with what I have done to-day. I was known in earth life as a very positive man, and no interference could asail to defeat my tectimony."

As this is a communication of the highest value and importance, we feel it our duty to give sur readers reference ats to where may be found a full and critieal aceount of the intelligence from whom it purports to eome. We therefore refer them to Mce 'lintoek &Strong's Cyelopedia of Theological Literature for account of the life and theological labors of (iriesbach in order that the reader may understand the full import of his testimony as a spirit. In our estimation, no more important information was ever given by a returning spirit. He sets out with a statement that the most superficial investigator of biblical and other ameient literatare, camon hejp bat know to be true, and that is, that the tramslators of mannseripts, from the time of Eusebius of Cesarea, translated to shit themselves. At the Council of Niesa, in A. D. 3.5, the plan was consummated of eatablishing the dogmatieal camon of what was called the (hristian religion. Perhaps no one had atmore prominent hathed in that work than Eusehins. On this point we ghote from Mer'lintock & Strong's ('yelopaedia ats follows:
"The part taken hy Ensebins in the Comecil of Niezea, is deseribed by Valesins as follows: 'In this greatest and most welebated comber, Ensehius was fir from an unimportant person ; for he had the tirst seat on the right hame, in the name of the whole syod addressed the empreror ('onstantine, who sat oll a golden chair, letweon the two rows of the optemite
 mon. Afterwards, when there was a considerable conte-t amonget the lingops relative to a creed or form of fath, Finsehins propench at formula at onee simple and orthedox, whith rewivel the general commendation hoth of the hishop ath of the emperor himself."

After that extabli-htment of the (lyistian cered or form of faith, which had mo existemee, tommated or oherwise, 们 to that time, the whole business of the Christian priesthood was to destroy or conceal, or oppose everything which did not agree with that impious and infamous sacerdotal preseription. This is manifest in the wholesale destruction, of by far the greater portion of the literature of that period ruming from the time of Alexander the Great to the beginning of the fourth century of the Christian era, and especially of everything that bore upon the subjects of theology and history. The fragmentary mamer in which any part of the literature of that period has been permitted to come down to us shows that it must have contained much that was inconsistent with the interests of the Christian clergy, who, after the time of Constantine, and until the 15th century, monopolized the literature, "profane as well as sacred," of the world.

The spirit tells us that such a hold had the name of A pollonius obtained upon the publie mind, that the most terrible pressure was brought to bear by Constantine the Great, in vain, to supplant Apollonius by Jesus, in the hearts of the people, and that the only change he could effect in that matter was the substitution of another name for that of Apollonins. All the doctrines, practices, and teachings of Apollonins were retained, says the spirit. Such was beyond all successful refutation the fact.

We can well understand the cause of the panic which the eritical theological revelations of Griesbach causel the Irotestant as well as the Catholic Christians of his time. He no doubt was honest and fearless enough to go to the very verge of the domain of payan C'hristosism. We can well understand why this spirit, who has been compelled for seventy years to keep silence regarding the great secret of which he was the possessor, should say: "I am well satisffed with what I have done to-day." Well did he say that, for it was the signal of his emancipation from the errors of his earthly theological carcer. He was, no doubt, what he claims to have been, a sery positive and fearless man ; but even he, dared to diselose but a part of what he knew.

It is to his immortal eredit that he proclaimed the result of his investigations, in his "Symboke Critice," "that the manuseripts of the Alextadrian and Western reeensions, on which his system is founded, were grossly corrupted in the age succeeding that of the Apostles; that those which he held in the highest esteem were corrupted in every page by marginal scholia and interpretations of the fathers, and contained innumerable and very serious errors." It is also a most significant fact, that in the same treatise, Giriesbach said, "that no reliance can be placed on the printed editions of the works of Origen, on the fidelity of his diflerent transeribers, on the accuracy of his quotations, or, flatly, on the eopios of the Seriptures from which he quoted." Having done this, Dr. Nolan very maturally and logically said, "we have only to take his own account of the state in which he finds the best part of his materials to diseover the extreme insecurity of the fabrie which he has raised on such a foumbation." Deciderly so, Itr. Nolam, say we; but it was, as Griesbach well knew, on preeisely that "extreme insecurity," that rested the fabrice of Christianity in the construction of wheh he was acknowledged to be one of the most competent theological artizans. It is this concatination of corrupted and falsified ancient literature that is called by the Christian world "The Holy seriputures of their Lord God, Jesus ('hrist." For the sake of common honesty, why not drop the sanctified frand ; and allow mankind the the chance of leing honest and consistent? Why not!

HAICO.

The Great Armenian King.

"My arraignment of Christianity here to-day, may be very severe, but mot more so than it deserves. 1 was known when in this mortal life as Hation. I am regarded as the fommer of the Armenian nation, or at least called so ; but in reality the Armenians existed as a people fifteen hundred years before my time. Aly sperial otliee here is to make elear some important peonts in corrohoration of the testimong of other -pirite who (athe fefore me. There are two spirits who have beot partionlarly instrmental in having me come here, athomph the hathe of this medimm assised them and myself in bringing it ahom. ()ne of thon two spirits was Ardilua Batokra, and the other Apollonins of Tyana. When sou come to insotiatate the truth concerning what I say here to-day, hey the light of history, you will bx struck by the singubar fact that all Armenian history, from the day of Meisrob Madoza, about the 4 th century, A. D., when the Armenians embraced Christianity, or most of it, remains intact. But hardly a word of their history, before they embraced Christianity, has been permitted to survive. Thank heaven! through controlling this medium I tm emabled to-day to set before you some facts, which, if not supported by absolute proofs, all can see and understand the justice of. Before the Christian era, between 2100 and 2200 years, I existed in mortal form. I was the contemporary of the great Bel or Belus, the founder of the Assyrian empire. The Armenians of my day were worshippers of what is, in your day, called the Parsee religion, but in my day they were known as the votaries or followers of Zarathustra. They worshipped Sol, or the Sun. The reason why the Christians would not let our ancient manuseripts survive, (those prior to A. D. 400), was simply because what they called their Old Testament belonged to myself and people. It is Armenian and not Jewish ; and its historical characters are all nothing more than altered names and accounts of Ammenian kings and heroes. Let the most learned ethmologists of to-day be called upon to point out the difference between six Armenians and six Jews who are dressed alike and not allowed to speak, and I defy them to successfully show the difference between :an Armenian and a Jew. Their forms, features and all their physical characteristics are the same in both; and sothoronghly have the Christians attempted to cover up or diswuise it, that they have made a Joseph a Jew, sold to the Islmaelites or Midianites, in the so-called ancient Jewish Scriptures. It was to the Armenians that this Joseph was sold. He was a Midianite sold to the Armenians, and this whole story was set forth in old Armenian manuseripts, while the Armenians weresinn worshippers, and long before they became C'hristians. The Armenians had, as have the Hindoos of to-day, a sacred or literary language and a spoken language. [Here the spirit hesitated for a moment, and then said.] No one can know but myself the buoyancy of my spirit, and its tendeney to bear me upward, and the effort of will that it requires to hold me here to allow me to make these facts known. The famons legend in the Hebrew Scriptures in regard to Solomon, grows ont of the history of an ancient king, who was worshipped in my day as Solomonna, literally meaning the Sun horn into limman mortal life, of a virgin named Momna. Almost all of what is called the Hebrew Testament before Eara has been stolen from Armenian sacred writings, history, or general literature. It was this Solomonna and not Moses who wrote what is termed the Decalogne long before my time. So it was set down in my day, partly by deseriptive signs and partly in legemdary lore. It is well for me, that with all their literary vandalism, they have not been able to conceal the name of Haico, and that there was the Haiken philosophy and teaching. They were too indelibly stamped upon the minds of the peot phe, prior to the adsent of Christianity, to be obliterated. It has often been sad that the temple Belus or the temple of Bed, was the original Tower of Batbel. I will make clear to you what the purpse and use of that structure was. It was simply intended to store the king's tribute, which, in thome diays, was largely derived from the farming population and paid in grain. That temple or tower was used to store away the grain paid as tribute to the king. The Assyrians of my time ditlered from the Armenians in this one particular. They were great astronomers, and they modelled a serpent deity after the great dragon in the heavens, and wershipped it as the symbol of the all-pervading power. It is clamed that Meisrob Medoza inrented an Ammenian alphabet. This is a Christian untruth, for his Armenian alphabet was old when 1 lised. In the sixth dynasty after my reign, an Ammian king, Atharavin, phaced the worship of the samaritan got, Jehovah, in the Armenian manuseripts, and this was the origin of the dewish Jehovah. And, now, 1 am particulaly desired ly my friend Ardilaa Babekra to give you a chare ly wheh yon ean find ont this Chriatian duplicity. He was the great reformer of Buddhism, hat these Christians, in order to set investigators astaly, have placed him in Per-ia instead of India, and represemted him ats a reformer of the Zend Avesta ; and they ealled him Ardshir Babegam, the reformer of the Zend or Patace religion, when in reality he was a reformerot Buddbism. The spitits I have namme sent for me to right these two points; tirst, in regard to Babrkat heing all hodian and wot a Persian king; :and, seromb, in regaral to Moisob inventing the Amenian alphatet. Both of those spirits were intermpted ly interfor ing influencer when here to communteate. Refer to Biographie Universelle for account of Haico.
Well does the spirit say that his "arraigument of Christianity may be severe, but it is well deserved. That the name of the spirit was Haico, as he gives it we have no doubt, and not Haig as the French writers give it. The spirit speaks of his spirit mission, which was to corroborate the testimony of other spirits who had preceded him. This would indicate that, in spirit life, there is a systematic and organized effort being made to establish the ancient history of the world, and to correct the many errors into which mankind have been led, concerning it, by Christian and Jewish writers, either intentionally or otherwise. We need not be in doubt as to who leads in this movement, when we find such disciples of Sakya Muni or Buddha, as A pollonius of Tyana, and Ardilua Babekra, calling lack the ancient Armenian King Haico, to aid in their glorious work.

The spirit with great emphasis points to the fact, that from the time that Christianity obtained a footkold in Armenia, in the fourth century, the history of that country has remained almost complete; but that harlly any of the history of that people prior to that time, has been allowed to come down to us. This is true, and leaves little doubt that this striking fact is owing to the unwillingness of Christian and Jewish writers to latwe the history of Ancient Armenia, and its religion and literature known. The reason for this will become apparent, as we proceed. Moses Chorenensis, to whom we are indebted for all that is historically told of Haico, flourished in the 5th century. He was an Armenian, and was appointed to the bishopric of the Christian chureh at Bagrevand. It is very evident from the very little that he says in regard to Haico, that he did not care to go any further into his history than he could help doing, in writing a history of Ammenia. It is, however, much to be thankful for that he mentioned him at all ; amd thus enabled us to authenticate the commanication of the spirit of Haico. It is undoubtedly true that Haico flourished in the twenty-second century B . $\mathrm{C}^{\circ}$., that he wats the contemporary of Belus of Babylon, king of Asyyria, and that he was a most distinguished Arnenian king, whomudombtedly reigned when the Armenian mation had reached the zenith of its distinction and power. How any one could have sungosed that the Irmenian kingdom or empire originated with him it is ditlient to imagine. Haico says that the Ammenians had wisted as a mation fifteen handred years before his time, which would have given that people an antiguty of three thousand six humdred and twenty-five years B. C. He says that the ancient Amenians were the religions follovers of Zarathust ra, and were worshippers of Sol, or the Sun. From the statement of the spirit, it would appear, that the Armenians, even as early as the time of Haico, had a very perfect literature, and that is borne ont by the fact that an Ammenan grammar which he, Haico, highly prized has come down to us. What has beeome of that very ancient literature? Haico twls us it was stoken ly the Jews to make up their Bible. Through this spirit diselosure, we are enabled to advanee much nearer to the great seret facts upon which the Jewish and Chrisitat theobgiaal systems reat, and which obre fairly maderatond, will put an end to their antigutated religions imfrextions. Heretofere the stiphosition hats been that the Jens inorowed laryly from the Chakdans and Exyptians, in construting and compiling their sto-alled saced books. It now appats that they were vastly more indehted to the . Amenians, who were eron a more adsaneod people, in literatme at least, than the Asstians. Indeed, from what the spirit silys, there is moll reaton tw hedieve that the Jews were nothing more ner less than Armenians, who for some reason besamu sepatated from their fellow . Amentanc. Haico tells the that the Jowish his Dethrem, was derived from the fact that Joseph, whe was : Midianite, was soht to the Armentans-1 he whote story having tuen ret forth in old Amenian manmoripte long bufe (ley absmbental their womplip of the sim.

But we here come to a more interesting diselosure which bears truth upon its face. Haico tells us the legend of King Solomon, grows out of the history of an ancient Armenian king, who was worshipped in his day as Solomonna, whieh literally meant the Sun, or Sol, born into hmman mortal life of a virgin named Momma. This Armenian Solomonna has been made to figure as the Jewish king. But more than this, Haico tells us, that what is called the Deealogue, was written by folomonna, and not by Moses or his Jehovah. These matters the spirit tells us were in his day known, partly through written, and partly through legendary tradition. He disposes of that Jewish fable about the Tower of Babel, and the confusion of tongues, in a very simple and effective manner. It appears it was constructed as the great granary or garnerhouse of Belus, king of Assyria, to store his colleeted tribute of grain, which must have composed the great bulk of his receipts er income.

Haico then tells us the great point of difference between the Assyrims and his own people, was entirely a religious one. He says the Assyrians were great astronomers, and adopted as the emblem of their religious faith, a serpent deity, modelled after the great Dragon in the heavens. On the other hand, the Armenians worshipped the Sun, a much more advanced religion than that of Dragon or serpent-worship. Haico, testifying from personal knowledge, is not only correct, but he is fully corroborated by facts preserved in the undoubtedly Chatatic Book of Daniel.

It is a valuable fact to be informed that the great pyramid of Cheops was in existence in the time of Haico more than 2100 years B. C., and the spirit statement that it was crected to serve as the king's cotler, as well as an observatory, is the mont rational explanation posible of those pramidal struetures of which the so-called Tower of Babel was one.

We have no doubt that in the secret chambers of the pyramits of Ethiopia are the treasures of knowledge of which this phitit peaks; and we, from the depth of our heart, say, may the day soon come when Christanity will so far have lost its prestige that the pirits will disclose those long buried treasures to waiting humanity !

MONTANUS.  The Phrygian Ecstatic.

"I salute you, sir :-Brave eomrade in the war for truth, led as fight to the last. In my day myself and people knew mothing of halfway measures. When we embraced a catuse we were hot, impetuous, and fierce in our demmeiations of those who did not agree with us. It is not by feeding on the milk of condescension, and apporing of errors, that you may expect to climb the rugged steeps where truth dwells; but by eating of the meat of strength-giving reason and self-reliance. 1 regarded my chemies as fools, becanse they would not be convinced of the reasonableness of my enmenations. By adopting this course, even if yon are wong yon will gain followers. First learn the truth and then deny it not, no matter what the consequence. And now for my commmication. The Montanists were the predecessors, or founders, of the Eclecticism of Potamon, Ammonius Saccas and their followers, which was a blending of P'atonism and Pythagoreanism. One of the so-called Christian fathers, Origen, became a follower of mine. We had those phases of spiritual phenomena called trance, healing, physical appearances, and other manifestations of spirit power. Maximilla was a healing medium. Priscilla a medium for materialization and other physical phenomena, and I was the trance medium, and taught in a state of cestacy. There was one phenomenon that was very impressive. We mediums became transfigured and illuminated, so that the people could with difficulty look upon us. I taught from the revised Buddhistic canons, of the reign of Ardelos Babaker, which Apollonius brought from India. It was translated into the Phrygian dialect by a priest of Cybele."

Refer to McClintock and Strong's Cyclopædia of Theological Literature for account of Montanns.

We have in this commonication of Montanus another of those surprises that have become so frequent in the course of these astounding spirit disclosures. There need no longer be any question that Montanus was an actual personage, and that he was the founder of the sect known as Montanists, of which, the so-called Christian Father, Tertullian, was a prominent and influential advocate. Neither need there be any question as to who and what he was; nor as to the nature of his opinions and practices. We have no more doubt that the spirit of Montanus gave that communication than that we are now consciously peming these lines.

Montanus tells us, that at the time he lived everything was undergoing transition ; that he was led to reflect on the question that was put into the mouth of Job, and that having met with a little work called the "Analysis of Pythagoreanism," he was led to follow its adrice in order to establish communion with thespirit world ; that hisexperiments were successful ; and that himself, Priscilla and Maximilla became developed as mediums, and went forth to prove to the world, in the 2d century of the so-called Christian era, the truths which are being demonstrated by Modern Spiritualism. It was this attempt of intelligent and beneficent spirits to give the truth to the world, at that early day, that was defeated, mainly, no doubt, through the misunderstanding of Montanms and his fenale eotworkers in the medimmistic tield, as for the real mature of the phemmena that occured through them. This is not surprising, for now, with all the light and experience in the way of spiritual phenomena that has been enjoyed by the present generation, we have people who imagine they are the mortal or momatan agents of the divine supreme intelligence, called (iosl. 'The spirit tells us that the book called Job was the work of a Chaldean maned Jovinns and was not a Hebrew book at all. This is very eertanly correct, in the main at least. We are told that Montanus and his followers were rigid asceties. This, we take it, meant nothing more than that they followed the precepts of Pythagoras, who, by the way was the great spiritualistie teacher of philosophy among all the Greck philosophers.

It will be seen, by attentively reading the communication, how consistent it is with Tertullian's deseription of the opinions, doetrines, and practices of the Montanists. But for his testimony, which the advocates of Christianity could not dispense with, every trace of Montams and his medimmistic work would have been destroyed. Hat the work which heset on foot been fally carried ont, Gpiritatism would not have had to wait until 1848 to find a foothold on the earth. Sut it was uot to be. The interests of priesteraft were ton weighty for the truth to be permitted to weigh against them, and henee the velemenereat vindictiveness with which every gowned humbing, of the priestly class, has followed it, down to the present hour. Montanns is certainly right when he says that Montanism was the fomblation unon whieh the Eelectie or Alexamdrian selool of Jotamon, Ammonits Saceas and lotinns was fombled. 'They were all medimms, and were embtrolled to thath while entranced, as is sumbermly evident from the fatis that the ablent and most inthential of the priens conlat thet of He: after life.

But onf of the most signilicant features of the commmateration is, that Grigrel, aswollas Tertullian, Was: Alomtaniot, or ia wher words a merlium for spirit control. 'Ilatit either of them mittod that Apollonius of Tyana was a Christian, athl his which, he might have added, were the original books from which the Christian Scriptures were derived.

Who can question that but for the dishonesty and selfishness of priests, Christians as well as heathens, Spiritualism, with all its momentous and inextinguishable truths would have been the common possession of all mankind, long before the present time. There has been more than enough Christian misrepresentations concerning Montanus, his teachings, practices and disciples, than would suffice to overwhelm a thousand frauds such as that of Christianity.

AҚIBA.

A Jewish Rabbi.

" I greet you, sir, by saying: The Sun of Truth never sets. It may be obseured by clouts of ignorance and error, but it will finally burst through these clouds and cheer the whole world by the brilliancy of its light. I was a strict Pharisce; but you must not think that a Jewish Pharisee was of the ridiculous character that he is represented to be in the modern New Testament. While I allow we were rather too much inclined to ceremonial law ; yet we were the true Spiritualists of our time, though not without a great deal of supercilious eqotism. [Have we not a grod many of these Spiritual Pharisees to-day?] We were the party or sect who in those days were opposed to all idolatrons mummeries, in so far that we hat but one God, Jehovah, and Moses as his prophet. All this was well enough for us while here on the earth, bat we have found as spirits that our views of Spiritual things were ton marrow and contracted. And now, having prefaced my remarks, I wat to speak of Jewish history as known to me when on earth; and upon this subject I will be as clear and explicit as I possibly ean. At that time there was a great struggle between ditlerent nations to prove their respective religions were more ancient than any other ; but there was no leaned Jew of my time who did not know that our religion, as founded upon the Old Testament, antedated my time by only ahout fonr hmudred and thirty-two years ; and to disguise this fact we resolted to all kinds of chronological forgeries. The Jews having become pretty well scattered, at that time, we introduced into the Old Testament the sum worship of Zoroaster, and even one of his books which is known to you in modern times as the Book of Daniel. It was the gomger Zoroaster who, as a Persian Marian, figured as Danied is represented to have done at the courts of Darius and Cyrus, where he was mon respeeted and highly honored. But in the origimal book of Zoromater, or the Book of Daniel, there was a table, or what you term an abmanate, of the time in which he lived. This oceupied the plate of :an appendix to the book; but it was destroyed hy Rabhi samdias (iann, for fear that the Jews would take to astronomy, he claming that they were forbidden to do so by Moses. That my pupil Aquila ever had anything to do with Tangum writing I know to be utterly false, and that the Targmestribut to him, and placed in my time and in my school, by Eusebius, were but versions of the writings of Apollonins of Tyana made by a copier, and that ropier not Aquila, hut Plotinus. Things have been so mixed by designing men, that it is very dithoult to set ancient history in its proper light. When I was about twenty years of age I knew Apollonins of Tyana. I met himat smyrna, where I listened to his teaching, and became a proseIste to some of his ideas, but mot to all of them. While he delivered his diseomses he underwent that wondrous phenomenon of modern times, transfigmation of fare and form, as it is deseribed to hawe oreured with the so-ealled desths ('hrist. Rays went out from his garmente and his face herame so bright that the eye eond not endure it. Venem mowne into spirit lite, I herame very anxions to seek ont Mores, hut with the very worst of results. I found that the anment Fhahdeans, mader the mane of seth, and the Moabites, mader the name of Mo, were the pexple from when we .tews had been rexiving our traditions and worshipping the hero of them, muder the name of a prophe whe never existed. This is what I have diseovered as apirit. There are many spirits who reme here to von who wish to chen up painte in their lives, hat they in a meature fail when they get here. They cambot withataml the carthly eombitions againet which they have to contend. Theme pirit= bexine tohl that their mames antertained, when they come here to tell the trath to the leat of their ability, -pirit and mortal influemereser to cather thom to say the montrary of what they wanted to say when they came. Therefore, if yourereive mixed emmmoniation- at any time, and the -pirite only make themertere only patially mater-text, they -hombl hate the atrantage of the dombt. I think hae epirit of Agnila was in that eombition when her eame to commanieate to yon. Ife tells me that he berame mentally befogged, and he tells me to say this to your, so that there need be no discrepancy between his communication and my own. One thing more before I am done, and that is, there are learned Jews, who are almost beggars, in Jerusalem to-day, who know where there are concealed priceless manuscripts, which, once in the possession of the learned, would prove the falsity of the whole Jewish religion. But these Jewish custodians of those treasures are so bigoted that they would rather starve to death than let the world know the truth about their religion. Perhaps this communication may indirectly be the means of opening their eyes to a different course. I thank and bless you for this hearing. You have my name."

Refer to Biographie Universelle for account of Akiba.

In the work above referred to will be found the historical and traditionary account that has come down to us coneerning the acknowledgedly learned and distinguished man, whose spirit gave that startling conmunication. If the statement it contains ean be verified, it is very evident that the Jewish religion and Scriptures were not a whit less false and deceptive than are the Christian religion and Scriptures, which have been tacked on to the former by Eusebius and his suceessors.

The spirit of Akiba tells us that in the beginning of the Christian era, there was a great rivalry between the priests of different nations, as to which one of their religions was the most ancient one among them. This was the fact then, and it is in a measure the fact to-day, so far as the antiquity of Buddhism and Christianity is concerned. All religions that have ever prevailed have been but copies of one original religion, more or less varied, to suit the diflerent states of civilization which they were modified to suit. It was a souree of mortification for classes of men who elaimed to have the only truth, in the way of religion that have existed, to find that other people had substantially the same religion, and hence the rivalry to show which was the oldest and original. Especially has Christianity found itself confronted with this perplexing difficulty; for, being the youngest of the modilications of the old heathen religions, and having borrowed or stolen its every garment from the back of heathen vietims, its priesthood are driven to their wits' end to know how to conceal that mortifying fact. Especially are they driven to desperation, to show that the Buddhistic tatters, in which their boasted, only true religion, is compelled to figure, were not stolen and appropriated by their predecessors dishonestly: In order to do this, they have irrationally sought to show that Buddha did not live and teach his religion until six humdred years after the alleged life, sayings tabl doings of Jesus ('hrist ; and that Buddhism is but a heathen corruption of the religion fombled by, and in the name of this Jesne Christ. There was a time when the ignorance of Oriental literature made it sate for the Christian priesthood to put forth such a falsehood; lout what was safe for many hundreds of years, has beeome fatally ruinons to those who had not the diseermment to know that time would bring out the trutio. To have acknowledged that the analogies existing between the Buddhistic religion and Christianity were suflicient to establish the fact that the one was but the corruption of the other, as the Christian priesthood have been forced to do, amounts, now, in the light of known and indisputable facts, to an acknowledgement that ('hristianity is nothing more than a corrupt version of Buddhism. Buddhism certainly ante-dates Christanity by more than a thousand years, for Christianity had no existence until the begiming of the fourth century.

The spirit of Akila tells us that in his time there was no learned Jew who did not know that the Jewish religion as set forth in the Old Testament, did not anterate the seeond exntury of the Christian era more than about 43 : years ; and that to disguise that fant that himself and the Jewish priesthood resorted to all kinds of ehronological forgeries. Akibatherther thlls us that the Jewish priesthood introduced inter the old Testament the smo worship of Zoronster, and exen one of his books, the book of Damiel. He tells us that this banicl was the younger Zoroaster, who tigured as a magician at the coturts. of Darins and Cyrns, where he was rerpected mad hishly honored, [and he might have added, at the conerts of Nehmeladnezzar and Belshazzar as well.] Further he tells us, that attachal to the original luok of baniel or toromater, there wats appended a chronological table or ahmanne ; hut that this table wat destroyed hy satalis (imon, for fear the Jews wond takn to ant ronomy, he claming that the Jews were forbidden to do st by Moses.

The spirit tefle wis that when he was about twenty years of age, he kime $\mathrm{A}_{\mathrm{p}}$ ollonitas of Tyanta, and that he met him at Smyrna where he listened to his teachings, and became a prosdyte to some extent of his ideas, but not to all of them. This is in the highest degrec probable, for Apollonius was in Smyrna, teaching his religious and philosophical doctrines about the time when Akiba was twenty years of age. He further tells us that when A pollonius delivered his discourses, : $t$ that time, that a wondrous transfiguration of his face and foras took place, and so radiant did he become that the eye coulid not endure it. There is not a doubt that Apollonius was sucli a medium as Akiba describes him to have been. It was undoubtedly, on account of these outward manifestations of his mediumship, that the influence of Apollonius was so great, widely extended, and long continued; and from this fact, no doubt, the same or similar manifestations were attributed to the mythical personation of this great and justly renowned heathen philosopher and medium, by the Christian priesthood.

The spirit tells us that in his fruitless search for the Jewish myth, Moses, in spirit life, he found that under the name of Seth, the ancient Chaldeans, and under the name Mo, the Moabites, were the people from whom the Jews had received their traditions, and that they had been worshipping a prophet who never existed. We have no doubt whatever in regard to this statement of the spirit. We find the word Sheth, the equivalent of Seth, treated of as follows in MeClintock and Strong's Cyclopredia :
"In the A. V. of Numbers xxiv., 17, Sheth is rendered as a proper name, but there is reason to regard it as an appellation, and to translate, instead of, 'the sons of Sheth,' 'the sons of tumult,' the wild warriors of Moab, for in the parallel passage (Jer. whiii, 45), Shaon, 'tumult' occupies the place of 'sheth. Rashi takes the word as a proper name, and refers it to Seth the Son of Adam; and this seems to have been the view of Onkalos, who rendered 'he shall rule all thesons of men.' The Jerusalem Targum gives 'all the sons of the East ;' the Targum of Jonathan ben Lzziel retains the Hebrew word sheth, and explains it ' of the armies of Cord who were toset themselves in battle array against Israel.'"

There can hardly be any doubt that the whole of the Jewish Seriptures were derived from the Chaldeans, if not the Moabites and Ammenians. There is certainly every reason to regard the Chaldeans as the sons of Seth, as they no doubt so regarded themselves, rather than of Abraham, the undoubted Patriarch of the Hindoos, called I-brahm in the origimal signification of that name.

LUCIUS APPULEIUS. An Ancient Satirical Writer.

This spirit was amounced by the guide of the medium, as Lucins Appulecius, who lived in the latter hatf of the second century. This was a mistake as the communication will show:
"I wildsatute you by sayinc: - Let us unite our efiorts to kill that curse of modern times, called Cimistianity. I may introluce myself as at satieal philowinher and a follower of Lucian. If the works of Lucian had not been interfered with, there would hase been no necessity for the spirit communications that you are now receiving. For, in the dramatization of his great work "Prometheus Bound,"-Lucian prefaced it by expresty saying that he drew his material, not only from Aselyylus, bint from the gorls of all nations that he knew of ; and that he did this becanse of thesmilarity of the teachings. He was ako, to a great extent, the writer of the (iospel of sit. Luke, which received his mane at the hambls of the (inosties, after his death. the controlling influence in your case ?] He claimed to be the Jewish historian Flavius Josephus; but as a spirit, he tells me he most frequently used one of his disciples in that way. By being developed for spirit control, I came to the knowledge that I was myself a spirit. But my Spiritualism was of a materialistic order. In the books I have spoken of, I set forth the doctrine that Apollonius of Tyana was a reincarnation of Gautama Buddha; but I have learned differently in spirit life. A pollonius was simply controlled by Buddha, to keep alive his teachings. In the time when I lived, every effort was made by the active followers of Apollonius, to promulgate his teachings, as they contained all that they thought good and useful in all religions and philosophies, then known. Their idea was to promulgate a religion of peace among men ; and this was most ably forwarded by Potamon, Ammonius Saccas and Plotinus. The two last, after my time; I was a sontemporary of Potamon. I never met him, although I read his doctrines. The only improvement that he made upon the teachings of Apollonius, was that he adhered more closely to the Platonic doctrines than did Apollonius, who leaned more to Pythagoreanism. The mythical gods of my time such as Jupiter, Orpheus, Osiris, etc., were but substitutes for Chrishna, Buddha, Pythagoras, Hesus, etc., all of them being supposed to be the sons of God here upon earth-which meant nothing else than that they were mediums for the control of spirits. With the most earnest regret that the works of my time had not escaped Christian destruction, I will have to give way to others. But it seems to me that I am absolutely myself, while controlling this medium."

After the spirit yielded control, the guide of the medium stated that Appulceius, as he called him, was born at Carthage, but went to Rome, Atheus and Alexandria. For account of A ppuleius, we refer to Chambers' Encyclopædia and Smith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Biography.

The spirit tells us that in the two books concerning the teachings of religions, he set forth the doctrine that Apollonius of Tyana was a reincarnation of Gautama Buddha; but as a spirit he had learned his mistake, and that Apollonius was simply controlled as a medium by Gautama Buddha, to keep ahive his teachings. We have here the undoubted secret of Apollonius's visit to the Wise Men of India, and the distinguished honors conferred upon him by the learned followers of Gautama Buddha. When we recall the wonderful mediumship of Apollonius, we can well understand the influence he would have with those devout worshippers of Buddha, when they found him to be the chosen mouthpiece of their divine master. We can almost picture in our mind the seme that attended the outgivings of that venerated spirit through his beloved and most favored metium, Apollonius the ('appadoeian (ireek. It is to the immortal honor of those proud and supercilious Hindoo priests, that they were willing to aceept the teachings of the spirit of Buddha in their own most saered retreat, through the mouth of a stratiger to their race and country. Such spiritual toleranee as this should forever stand as a micat worthy example for all time, to all people.

And now we come to notice a fact, mentioned by Appuleius, which furnishes the key to unlock the mysteries that attended what has been called the Christianity of the three first centuriss of the prevailing era. Ife tells us that when he lised, every cflort was being made ly the followers of $A$ pollonins to promulgate his teachings, as they contained all they thonght good and nseful in all religions and philosophies then known. He tells us that their idea was to promulgate a religion of peace among men, and that Potamon, Ammenius Saceas and Plotinus worked grandly for that end. Oh, what at misfortune it was that the efforts of these great, good and benevolent men were neutralized and defeated by the founders of the prerailing Claristian religion! Appuleins tells us in what respect the Eelectic religion of Potanon differed from the Escenitn religion of Apollonias; and that it was mainly to be seen in the greater leaning of the latter tor the Pythagorean doetrines, while Potamon followed more closely the doetrines of Plato. This is hegond all question the fact, as any one comersant with the toselhings of the different philosophie sehools of (ireere well knows.

Appulefos tells us that the fireek and Viryptian divintios were identical with Chrishan, Butdha, l'ythagoras, Ilaws, © © , all of whom were supposed to he the sons of (iod upon the earth : and mant that they were mediums for the control of departed spirits.

ARDILUA BABEKRA.

The Famed Buddhistic Reformer.-Miscalled,

King Asoka.

[^5]of the Council of Asoka itself, and of its object. This Council acted the same part in Buddhism as the Council of Nice did afterwards in Christianity. I designed to discover by the aid of the priesthood, how much of their teachings were genuine and how much false, in theiraccepted Buddhistic hooks. I, as a spirit, know that with the exception of the moral precepts of Buddha and his parables-called "Illustrations from Nature" -that all the remaining Buddhistic writings were by the priests, after Buddha's death. Among the Buddhists of ('eylon and of the kingdom of Asa, or Birmah, you must look for the evidence of the truth of what I here assert, that is, that the rolls and books of reformed Buddlism, found among the people I have named, are almost a counterpart of your Christian New Testament; and more than this, you will find there, that the dresses of the priests of this modern Buddhism are identical with the dresses worn by the priests of the Catholic C'hureh. At the Council of Asoka, there appeared a chief or priest who had journeyed in a boat, similar to a Chinese junk, all the way from the coast of what you now term Peru, who claimed that his ancestor had been sent out as one of the seventy disciples of Gautama Buddha, and had planted that religion in the country of Peru. There were others at that Council who had letters or writings coming down from their ancestors, who had founded the Panch Pandu. The ohject of constructing those subterranean temples was, that those who did so might we secure in the enjoyment of their worship from the surrounding savages. At the temple of Boro Bodo, is cvidence of the truth of what I have said here to-day; but which evidenee will not to placed before the public until the day, which is now rapidly approaching, of the junction of the two worlds, spirit and montal, which desired day no one is helping to forward more rapidly than gommolf. Apollonius of 'Tyana reeeised from larchus, the Reformed Buddhistie Testament, and that Testament was the one that has been followed by Christians, thry altering it to suit themselves. lant Christian sholars are dong everything they can to prove that Buddhism is later than Claristianty. Thanks to tho great arehitectural works of our ancestors we have at our eommand hat which willever confond them. We had at that Council of Asoka, what Apollonins (called sit. laul hy the ('hristitus) describes as a Pentaenotal shower. This, in fact, took place at Asoka. The billions of Buddhistic spirits who congregated about this cometil were so ghad that their religion was about to be pureed of its corruptions and perversions, that they eansed the most wonderful manifestations of their presence, at that time and place. In conclusion I would say, for the many buddhistic priests who were at the Council of Asoka, from the Geez country in Africa, that they claimed that the oldest stone works on this planet are to be found in the ruins throughout Abyssinia, Nubia and Kordofan; and that the oldest civilized inhabitanss of those countries worshipped the Suin. And their signs can be interpreted, using the stm and its movements as the explanatory key. They want this elain inquired into, and promise to aid in the search to that end. They claim that any experienced archæologist can easily prove the facts to be as stated, by examining the still existing ruins of those countries." [Where was Asoka, at which the Council was held, located ?] "It was very near to Bombay I will only add that many of the priests who attended the Council of Asoka, assembled previously at Singapoor, and came thence to the Council."

It is rarely indeed that a communication has been given that has been of equal interest and importance to the one by Ardilua Babekra. We refer our readers to Major Alexander Cunningham's most interesting and valuable work, "The Bhilsa Topes, or Buddlists Monuments of Central India," London, 1854, (chapter viii, page 87), for a full account of the ruler who has been regarded in history as Asoka, King of Mahada.

This spirit seems to have fully appreeiated the importance of his communieation, when he said in opening his remarks, "I want every sentence I utter to tell on behalf of truth." His very first statement is not only undoubtedly true, but of inappreciable importance to those who want to know the real origin and nature of the greatly misunderstood Buddhistic religion. He says: "I will begin by saying that the great mistake of modern times is, the supposition that Buddhism is an offshoot from Brahmanism, and that Buddhism stands in the same relation to Brahmanism that Christianity does to Judaism. It is true that Gautama Buddha was an Indian prince, and also a Brahman, but he was not a reformer of Brahmanism." This is so directly in oppositlon to what is the common opinion of Orientalists, that it comes upon us with startling force; and yet, there is so much to support and sustain it, in Brahmanical and Buddhistic literature, that it seems like an axiomatic truth. The spirit then goes on to define what was the fundamental difference between Buddhism and Brahmanism. He settles the fact that Buddha did not live in the sixth century of the current era, but nearly eight hundred years before the supposed birth of Jesus Christ. He says that at that early age, Buddha began to teach a Spiritual Universalism, while Brahmanism was essentially a Trinitarian religion. By this we understand the spirit to mean that Brahmanism was a formalated, creedalized, sacerdotalism, while Buddhism was what Modern Spiritnalism is to-day, an monomulated, moreedalized, moral and spirithal teachine This is made very platin by what the pirit adds on that poins. He says: "ife [Buddha] hed that as no man bromght anything into the world, and comblake nothing out of it, that if people endeavored at all to live a pure life, they reached the sphere or heaven of rest, suited to their individual natures and conditions." This, as the spirit so emphatically says, was identieal with Modern Spiritualism. But here he declares the great essential difference between Brahmanism and buddhism. He says that instead of being a religion, it was a moral cole, in the blessings of which, all mankind could paticipate, by practicing of virtue, as Buddhataght it ; and that the great doctrine of Brahmanism was that of catst and of the elect or chosen few, hoth as related to this work and the next. Here was begrn a struggle not malike that which is going on to-day between spiritual Univer. salism and the creedalized Christian sectarianism of the varions churehes. We question very much whether the most skilful eritics of our time conld have more distinctly and concisely stated the relative positions of Brahmanism and Buhdhism, than the upirit of this Indian king did through the lips of the mulearmed mediu:n.

but here we come to the knowledge of the real object that the king of Maghada had in view, and which he seems to hate acemphished to a smrprining extent. He tells us that "all religions are subject to levelaes in the person of prieste, and that these priests, by their mistaken zeal, and cupidity in regrard to this world's goorls, corrupt and detile all religions," which is truc. He tells that "Buhlhats teachinge, in their earliest form, did not constitute a religion, they eonstituted merely a momal philosophy." This was modoubtedly the fact, and womh have continued so, if the popularity of Buddhats spiritual teachinges had not appealed to the empidity of politie Brahman priests, whos saw it their interest to attach themselves to, and to sacerdotalize the berneficent teachings of the sood aml benevolent hold on the poppular mind which it is rapidly doing. The friends of Spiritualism will do well to remember the fate that befell this ancient Spiritual movement, at the hands of trained and unscrupulous priests. Set your faces as a wall of adamant against everything of an ecclesiasticising, sectarianizing, or sacerdotalizing tendency in Modern Spiritualism, for therein lies its safety and its utility to the human race.

The spirit of this Indian king tells us that about B. C. ©50, finding that the teachings of Buddha had been corrupted by the priesthood, who had fastened themselvesupon it, he sought to bring Buddhism back to its primitive simplicity and purity, and that it was for that purpose he convened the Council of Asoka. And here we have one of the most surprising diselosures that we have met with in all our varied and extensive spiritual experiences. The spirit tells us that his name was not Asoka, as has been generally supposed and believed; but that Asoka was the name of the place at which the Council was held that was convened by him. He tells us that his name was Ardilua Babekra. He further tells us that if anywhere mentioned, his name slightly modified will be found in the writings of Abel Remusat, where it is given as Ardelos Babeker.
The spirit of Ardilua Babekra says that according to the history of Buddha, extant in his time, Buddha was born five hundred and fifty years before him, or in the 9 th century B. C. The facts set forth by Major Cunningham absolutely confirms the statement that the teachings of Buddha were not a religion, but a system of moral philosophy, and that it had been perverted by priestly interests from its original object. It was to place it again in its original position that Babekra convoked the Council of Asoka, andbroke up the sacerdotal administration of Buddhism. It appears that so beset was he in effecting this object, that in inscribing the moral edicts of his reign, he says nothing about Buddha as a god or man, but substitutes the word "Dharma," especially meaning "Virtue" as the great aim and object of Hindoo veneration and obedience. Asoka regarded Budtha as not only the great teacher of virtue, but as the embodiment of all virtue or ethics, and so designated him as Dharna, the human teacher of and embodiment of virtue, wather than Buddha, the divine embodiment of wistom, as the priests tanght the people to regard him. The edicts attributed to the king of Maghada, do not emanate from the priesthood, but from the civil department of the state, as is evident from the careful manner in which everything of a sectarian or sacerdotal nature is exeluded from these edicts. Indeed we are amazed when we see how fully this communication is confirmed by the collateral facts that in any way relate to the matters of which this great Indian ruler speaks. He was undoubtedly a Spiritualistic Universalist, and so detested the Brahmanical theory of special election and reprobation, that he seems to have been unwilling to tolerate anything that had the appearance of priesteraft. What Ardilua Babekra undertook to forever destroy through the Council of Asoka, Constantine the Great, six hundred years later later, sought to revive and perpetnate through the Council of Nice. As to the respective merits of these Indian and Roman rulers, it is hardly worth while to inquire. The heathen ruler stands forth as a radiant sun, when eompared with the Christian saint. As to Asoka being the name of a place we have no certain means of knowing beyond the fact that it is connected with the great council of Buddhist priests held in India about B. C. 250-241. Asok:t is certainly known to be the name of a flowering tree indigenous to India and is infinitely more likely to have given its name to a place than to a king. It is admitted that the name Asoka, no where characterizes the king in the inscribed ediets of that rejgn, the king being therein designated ats "Priyadarsi, the belowed of the Devas," (or beloved of the (iods). It is therefore almost certain that the spirit tells what is true when he says Asoka was not his name and Ardilua Babekra was. The spirit tells us that with the exception of what he ealls "The Atoral Preecpts or Illustrations from Nature," Buddha left no beroks behind him; and that all the other booksattributed to him were the work of priests, in which Deva Burlhisatous, whose emmmanieation is given on prage 48 , seems to have had the greatest and most influential part. There is especial significance in the statement of Babekra, that the reformed Buddhism of his time, will he found in Ceylon and Burmah, as it was in that direetion especially, that the reformations instituted by Babekra, took root and flourished; and especially signitieant is the spirit mention of the elone similarity between the saced buddhistio writings of those comatries, and the so-e:alled Christian (iosipels.

The spirit tells he hal tmong those who came to the Council of Asok:1, a priest from the Buddhists of P'ra, those from among the direct descendants of the constructors of the cave temples of the Panch Pandu, and from Ethiopia in Africa. We are told that at the temple of Boro Bodo, in Java, revelations are to be made which will confirm the truth of all that this spirit has stated, but it will not be given to mankind, until the day when the two worlds shall be united, which he predicts will soon occur. As to this great spirit's statement, that we are prominently helping to bring that day abont, we can only say we will never do a tithe to accomplish that end which our soul desires to do.
Babekra tells us that Apollonius received from Iarchus, the chief of the Wise Men of India, the reformed Buddhist Testament, which he, Apollonius, altered, and which has been followed by Christians. This is being demonstrated conclusively by an array of facts which admit of no dispute.

That gathering at Asoka, was perhaps, the greatest spiritual circle that was ever assembled on the earth, being composed of one thousand or more fully developed and acknowledged spiritual mediums, for every Buddhist priest was required to pass the test of mediumship. That there should have been a Pentacostal shower of spirit impartation was natural, but that we should have the long concealed fact that the pentacostal gust took place at Asoka in India, and not at Jerusalem, made known from the spirit world, is certainly a curious coincident, to say the least. The spirit undoubtedly refers to the following portion of the New Testament. (Acts ii, 1.)
"And when the day of Pentacost was fully come they" (the apostles, " were all with one accord, in one place.
"Suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting.
"And there appeared unto them cloven tongues of fire, and $t$ sat upon each of them.
"And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the spirit gave them utterance."

We find this in Acts, but the spirit tells it was also in the writings of A pollonius, from which the writer of Acts obtained it. It is an admitted fact that the Book of Acts was the last book of the Christian Scriptures written, and is made up of odds and ends thrown together, to account for the connection of the writings or epistles of the Apostle Paul with the Christian Gospels. As Apollonius of Tyana was beyond all question, the author of the Epistles attributed to St. Paul, it was no doubt from some of his lost and destroyed writings that most of the Aets was compiled. That there should have been such a rushing storm or "holy gust," and spiritual fire at the Spiritualist Council of Asoka was very nataral, but that any such event took place at Jerusalem, there is no evidence whatever. The Book of Acts is the work of an unknown anthor who did not dare to refer to a single authority to show the truth of any of his narrated events.

The testimony of the spirit as to the claim of the Gees Buddhists, that the oldest proofs of eivilization are to be found in Nubia and Kordofan, is in accord with the testimony of several other spirits who natmally knew the truth of what they said.

But the extreme length of this review of the matters relating to the great Indian reformer, forbids that we should prolong it. We must, therefore, reluctantly close it at this point, leaving much unsaid that we ought to say if time and space permitted.

Rabba Joseph or Joseph the Blind.

"I will salute you by saying: There is no God we can serve that will do us as much good as the truth. I am claimed to have been the writer of the Ketubin, called by others the Hagiographa. I was at the head of the school of Sora, in the third century. I was not the transeriber of either of the classes of writings mentioned. They were put into their present shape, in the ninth century, by a Greek Jew named Georgius. Whether you will be able to corroborate this I cannot say. But I did put in shape the Jewish writings of the Minor Prophets. I also wrote a great deal upon the teachings of Gamaliel ; but the real Jewish records, before the time of Ezra the seribe, are all plagiarized from ancient sacred Armenian writings. The whole of the Pentateuch really belongs to the time of an Armenian king, who was contemporary with Pammeticus the Egyptian, and was extant in my day. By this I mean that these Armenian writings were in the library of the academy at the head of which I was. The actual writings and teachings of Gamaliel have been very much tampered with by Christians, and this was known in after times, as shown in the writings of Moses of Chorene, who is clamed to have embraced the Christian religion, but who in reality was an Ebionite follower of Krishna, (as the name was spelled in Armenian); and when you read about Josephns having been an Ebionite Christian, you must understand it to mean the same as when the term was applied to Moses of Chorene. I think that the most that I have said here to-day can be corroborated by that celebrated Armenian spirit, Haico, who has commmicated with you before. I mean corroborated by the history of Haico. The Ebionites of the time of Gamaliel and Josephus were all tainted with Gymmosophism. They were Jews who had become acquainted with that Indian philosophy through Apollonius of Tyana. It has been one of my most imperative obligations as a spirit, in conjunction with many spirits of the sixth century to bring to light the Armenian, Prythagorean, Judean, Gnostic and Eclectic systems, the writings, concerning which, are sufficiently extant to overthrow the purpose of the Christian priesthood to conceal or destroy them. I will be with you, with all my spirit power, to crnsh this gigantic superstition-Christianity. I was known as Rabba Joseph, sometimes called the Blind."

The spirit guide of the medium remarked that this spirit must have been a Gymmosophist himself, as be came almost maked. We have been unable to find any historial reference to such a person as Rabba Joseph or Joseph the Blind, of the third century, and yet we emmot divest ourself of the inclination to regard the eommunieation as genuine and true. The spirit who gave it was thoroughly informed upon many points of history on which he has touched, and we camon conceive what motive any spirit eould have in deceitfully inventing it. The spirit sets ont hysaying that he has beensupposed to have written the Ketubim, called by others the Hagiographat ; and says he did not, but that he did transeribe the Minor Prophets. He supposes that the former writings were put in their present shape by a freek Jew, in the 9th centmry, mamed Cieorgins. And further says he was at the head of the Acancmy of Gors, in the third century. What was the School of Fora? We copy what is said of it in MeClintock and strong's ('yclopedia, under the head "schools."
"Sora, called also Matta Mechassia, a town on the Euphrates, about twenty-t wo parasanges south of Pumbadithat, is fanous in Jewish history as the seat of a renowned academy, which Was inangmated A. D. 219, by Abha Areka, more commonly known by his schohastic title of Rab. Rabdied in 2.47 at אom where for twenty-dight years he had presided over the sormie sehool, remarkable for the pleasanthess of its site and aceommodations, and mumbering at times, from a thonsand to f wedve humdred stulents. Rah's sumeessor in sora was R. Huna, (born about 212 ; dien $\mathrm{in} 2(2)$, a disthguished wholar of Rab's. His larning contributed to shatain the reputation of the school, which could, moder him, yet mumber eight humdred students. After an administration of forty vears Huma died, and the rectorship was fitted by Jehudah, bar Jeches kel, who died in we9."

We can tind no historical reference to this pereonage in :any of the biographieal eollections, and are inelined to think that the spirit who gives his name as Rablat Joseph is this Rahba Jehmah. Why there should be this variation in the name, we know not. If this comjeeture is correct, it is more than likely that he transeribed the Minor Prophets, he was aloe suppead to have transoribed the Ketubin or Hagiographat. What wern the latter? Wre give the defintion of the tem from the Ameriean Ceropuedia:
"Hagiographa (Greek agios sacred, and graphein, to write), or Holy Writings, (in Hebrew Ketubin, writings), the name given by the Jews to their third division of the Old Testament Seriptures. There are various suppositions concerning the earliest arrangement of this division by the Jews, founded on contradictory statements, in Josephus, Philo, Jerome, the Talmud, de., including a passage of Luke, (xxiv, 44: 'the things written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the psalms.' According to the arrangements now general among the Jews, the Hagiographa includes three divisions: 1.-The Psalms, Proverbs, and Job. 2.-The Songs of Songs, Ruth, Lamentations, Ecclesiastes, and Esther. 3.-Daniel, Ezra, Nehemiah, and the Chronicles. These books received the name of 'Hagiographa' or 'Holy Writings,' because, though not written by Moses, many of the prophets, strictly so-called, were nevertheless regarded as inspired."

As to which were the Major and which the Minor Prophets, we cite McClintock's and Strong's Cyelopadia:
"We have in the Old Testament sixteen prophets; that is four greater and twelve lesser prophets. The four greater prophets are Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Daniel. The Jews do not properly place Daniel among the prophets, becanse (they say) he lived in the splendor of temporal dignities, and led a kind of life different from other prophets. The twelve lesser prophets are Hosea, Joel, Amos, Obadiah, Jonah, Micah, Nahum, Habakkuk, Zephania, Haggai, Zechariah and Malachi."

We may therefore fairly conclude that the spirit of Rabba Joseph not only knew what he was saying, but that he spoke the truth. He says he did translate the Minor or Lesser Prophets, but not the Hagiographa. As head of the Aeademy of Sora, nothing was more probable than he should have tone so. He also tells us that he wrote a great deal upon the teachings of Gamaliel. This he certainly would have done as the head of the School of Sora. Gamaliel was a learned doctor of the law, a Pharisee, and member of the Sanhetrim of the Jews. He was grandson of Hillel, the remowned teacher of the Mishnat. He held a seat, and probably the presideney, in the Sanhedrim, during the reigns of Tiberins, Caligula, and Claudius, being succeeded by his son Simeon. He was the aulthor of many religious and civil reforms, and remarkable for humanity, eharity and tolerance. He was the first to be distinguished by the title Rabban (our master).

The respect with which his opinions are always guoted by the Rabbies is irreconcilable with the tratition that he was converted to Christianity. It was the writings of this learned Jewish teacher upon which the spirit says he wrote. Ilat none of the writings of labhat Joseph have come down to us, except in the Minor Prophets, should smprise no one ; for hardly anything that could throw light upon the origin of the Jewish seriptures hats been spared, either ly the Jews or by the Christians.

But we are now ealled to notice a statement, which if true, will necessitate a moxlification of the eommonly supposed origin of the Jewish seriptures. The spirit says, that the Jowish records, hefore the time of Eara the sicribe, are ath phagiarized from ancient sacred Armenian writings; and that the whole of the Pentateuch really belongs to the time of an Armenian king, who was a contemporary of Psammetiens the Egyptian, and was extant, and in the library of the Academy of Lora in the 3d century. Psammetients was king of Eqypt about B. ('. 670, and the Ammenian King who was contemporary with him was perhaps his predecessor of Hataka [1., wholived from 607 to 56:) B. ( 4 . His name we cannot fix. But the king refered to may be Haikak If., himself; for it is historieally stated Haikak II., joined Nebuchadne\%zar in his expedition :gainst the Jows, and hought into Ambenia : Jewish noble named shambat with his lamily, From this Shambat deseemded the Ammenian royal fanily of the Bagratides or Bagradites, some of whom still hold high ofliees in Russia." It will thas be seen that there was an intinate and influchtial conneetion between the Jews and the Amenians, just about the time that the dewish seriptures were first published, that is IS. (. Jof). It womblherefore seem that the Armenian peot phe were older as a mation than the Assyians, amb as the spirit of Haien testified, they had a mume more anciont lite rature.
The spirit of Rablat Joseph tells us that the writings and teachings of (amatiel have been very much tampred with by Claristians ; and that this was shown in after times in the writing of Anses of (horente, who is clatmed to hase been : ('hri-tian, hut who was in fact an Ehionite follown of Krish-it. ('hristian, you man mederstand it to mean the same as When the term was apliad to Moses of 'horence Fon the first time since the Christian priesthood gained an ascendency over the learning of the world, more than thirteen hundred years ago, has a ray of light been thrown upon the nature of the Fbionite religion. In their efforts to conceal the fact that the Ebionites were worshipgers of the Hindoo Saviour, Krishna, and not of Jesus Christ, everything relating to them :ts at see: has been throwninto the greatest confusion. But now that : thoroughly informed Jewish spirit returns and testifies to that fact, all confusion and difficulty disappears ; and the erroneousness of the Christian statements regarding them becones plain and unquestionable. The most condensed, yet, at the same time, comprehensive account of the Ebionites, we find in Chtmber's' Encyclopredia, It is as follows:
"Ebionites (Heb, ebion, poor), a name probably given originally by the hierarehical party anong the Jews, to those of their countrymen who professed the Christian faith, and who generally belonged to the poorer and more ignorant class; (John, chap. vii, 4S, 49). Subsequently, it would seem, the Gentile Christians, who were ignorant of Hebrew, employed it in a distinctive sense to designate their Jewish co-religionists, who, in addition to their belief of Christianity, oheerved the Mosaic law. Irensus is the farst writer who makes use of the name. It is highly probable that the Ebionites first became an organized body or seet, at Pella, a city in Peran, on the eastern side of the Jordan, whither they had betaken themselves on the breaking out of the Roman-dewish war in the time of Hadrian. Here, indeed, a strictly Jewish-Christian church continued to exist down to the fiftly century: Among the Ebionites, however, there was by no means a unaminity of religious feeling, or uniformity of opinion. Two great divergent parties are clearly recognizable-the Ebionites proper and the Ebionitic Nazarencs. The former were little diflerent from Jews; their conceptions of the Siviour were mearer and unspiritual. They believed that Jesus wats simply aman distinguished above all others for legal piety-preminently a Jew, and selected as the Messiah because of his superior Jodaism. Of course they denied his supernatural hirth, yet not his resurrection; for 'they lived in expectation of his speedy return to restore the city of (God (Jerusalem), and to re-estal)lish the theocracy there in surpassing splendor.'-Neander. They were the gemane descendants of those Judaisens who phagned the church in the time of the Apostle Pathl. The Ebionite Nazarenes, on the other hand, who at the elose of the fourth eentury seen to have dwelt ehiefly about Berwa in lower Syria, but at an earlier period may have heen more widely diflused were Jewish ('hristians, in the better sense of the term. They eonceived it to be their own duty still to cir(rmasise, keep the sabhath, de., but they had no wish to impere the peculiarites of Judaism on the (ientile C'hastians, They did not believe that ('hristianity was merely a ghomitiontion of Judaism, but a new life eome into the work, in which the (ientiles might at once particinate, without madergroing at Mosatic ordeal. Like the stricter Ebionites, they uscol a (iasel of Matthew ; but it eontaned what the other did not -an account of the supernatural ronception and birth of the Saviour. According to Neander, whoh has very thoroughty investigated the question, there were a great many varieties of opinion tmong the Ebionites, springing out of the differences alove spoken of, which it would be tedions to record. It is sufficient to say that Essenism modified Ehionism greatly, through the introduction of a Jewish mysticism, which reeognized in Moses and Christ an inward indentity of doetrines, and regarded them as revealersof the 'primal religion,' whose teaching, however, had been sadly eomupted. It is extremely probable that an Essenic Ebionite wrote the Clementine Homilies."

We may here reach several rational eonclusions. 1st. That the Ehionites were in wo other seluse ('hristians, exerpt that they regarded the Hindon Krishna with religions vencration. This, is made very apparent hy the atmission that Essenism "modifien greatly" Ehionism. ERtoniom was mathifestly only a modified (igmomsophism older than the Nitatrite Ebionism. 2d. Wemay rationally condude that the Fbimites, the Nizarites sum the Essenes were hat (itareised versions of the (iymmosiphism of fadia, and had nothing whatever to do with Jesas ('hrist or Christianity. Brd. We may conclude that the priestly fomblers of Christianity eond not atoisl the neeresity of elaming the Fhionites, the Nazarites and the Fisernes and (hristians, beeathe they were the only ferents in existance who during the first one handred and tifty yours of the Christian ema, cond with any show of exeman or raton lo (athed ('hristiaths ; athi they were mo letter ofl wholl for the forepart of the fourth century. 4th. We may conclude that the Ebionites were not Christians, but followers of the Hindoo teachings attributed to Krishma, the incarnation of the spirit Brahma, the Hindoo Saviour of men. It is just this that the testimony of Rabba Joseph shows. He says the Elionites of the time of Gamaliel and Josephus were all tainted with Gymmosophism. They were Jews who had become acquainted with the Indian philosophy, through Apollonius of Tyana. We hope yet to be able to find some direct reference to Rabba Joseph, or Joseph the Blind.

The spirit says that he has felt it his duty in connection with many spirits of the sixth century, to bring to light the Armenian, P'ythagorean, Judean, Gnostic and Eelectic systems, the writings concerning which are sufficiently extant to overthrow the scheme of the Christian priests to conceal or destroy them. From which we infer that it was in the sixth century that the wholesale destruction of the literature of the philosophies named was entered upon; and further, that those who were engaged in that destruction are yet to testify in corroboration of what spirit Rabba Joseph had said.

MOSES MAIMONIDES.

The Learned Moorish Jew.

[^6]In Cordova, in my time, abont A. D, 1200, our investigation of alchemy and science, althongh not interfered with by the govermment, could not be openly exposed. There is one peint on which I want to enlighten you. There are thousands of spirits who would kill me this instant if they conld prewent what I am about to tell you. It is this. The Augian Codex, which is clamed to have been writen in the 9 ht century, and which is now in the C'ambridge Library, affords the clearest and most positive proofs that Apollonims was St. Paul. Another thing I want to tell you is, that the Alexandrian Codex was well known and read among the Noors of my time, and was helieved hy many of them. That will have to close my contmunication."

Refer to Chambers' Encyclopedia for account of Moses Maimonides.

The spirit of this learned Jewish Spiritualist returned, and under the most adverse circumstances, suceeeded in giving that most valuable communication. That the spirit knew whereof he testified is evident, and hence the vast innortance of his testimony. Ife tells us that his teacher was A verroes, and that he hecame derply interested in what his master showed him in writings that were then extant. Now, it we know who A verroes is, we may have some idea of what it was he pointed out to Maimonides which so interested him. For account of A rerroce we refer to American ('yelopmedia.

In the work above referred to may be fomm a historical aceome of this distinguished man mader whose instruction Mamonikes became acequinted with the (ireek philosemphat sy:tems, and laid the foumbation of that vast knowledge whith he displaged in his later life and labors. We are led to infer from the testimony of the spirit, that A verrece, in professing the Aristotelian philosophy, did so to disguise his still at romes. attraction to the philosophical syem of Apollonims of Tyanas. This wat the course taken in Jtaly some two humdred and tify. yars latar, hy (ieorgitu (icmisthe amd Cosmode Mediri : and there is motason to believe that the batter adopent hat comese from the example of Averoes and Mamonides. That all fowr knew and malerstoge its true relation to what was ealled Chrixtianity.

The suirit tells us what is umdoubtedly true, but what hats not been known for several centuries; that is, that there were two A pollonian systems, one of which took root in the East, the other in the West; and that the Western system was modified by Potamon, Ammonius Saccas, Plotinus, and others of the Alexandrian school. The natural inference is, that the Apollonian system of the East was more nearly what Apollonius tanght. It was no doubt owing to that divergence in the respective Apollonian systems that ever since it has been impossible to reconcile the Greek Catholic and Roman Catholic churches, and unite them under one theological system. Maimonides, as a spirit, tells us that he was an adherent of the Western Apollonian system, or that system that underwent the Eclectic modifications of the Alexandrian school. He states that he taught the Apollonian-Eelectic doctrines privately, as the Mohammedans were at that time very intolerant toward the people of other religions, in Spain. He compares his school to our spiritual circles. While the philosophy of Aristotle served to conceal the A pollonian doctrines, alchemy and seience served as an exeuse for the experimental investigations of spiritual phenomena by Maimonides and his followers.
That Maimonides was a Spiritualist is evident from the whole tenor of his literary labors, in the direction of spiritualizing Judaism. That the Jews should have come to regard Maimonides as sceond only to Moses, the great law-giver of the Jews, shows how nearly Maimonides came to leading the Jews from dead materialism into the living light of spiritual truth. That Maimonides should have endeavored to explain by the light of reason, the Bible, and all its written as well as implied precepts; and that he asserted that all alleged miraeles, whether Jewish or Cluristian, could not have been wrought in opposition to the physical and everlasting laws of nature; show how fully he had attained a position not a whit behind the most adranced Spiritualists of to-day. We ask the reader to re-read and ponder upon the account of the religious and philcsophical views of Aaimonides, as given in Chambers' Encyelopedia, if they want to know what the most advanced spiritual philosophy embraces. We are simply amazed to sce how, under the disadvantages which then prevailed, Maimonides should have taken a position more than seven humdred sears in adsance of his time. But for the return of his spirit, this most interesting fact wondl never perhaps have been known to mortals. The spirit then tells us that there were thousamels of spirits who wouk destroy him, if passible, to prevent him testifying to the one fact that seems to have been his main oljgect in returning, and that one fact mothing less than that "the Augian Codex afforts the clearest and most ahsolute proofs that Apollonius was Sit. Panl." In relation to the Angian Codex we refer to Mcc'lintoek and Strong's Cyelopedia of Biblical Literature.

The spirit tells us that the Alexandrian Codex was well known and read among the Moors of his time, and wats believed ly many of them. If this was the fact, as we have no doubt it was, it only shows that it was regarded ly the Arabian Moors, as an Eastern and not a Judenn production. Thus do the facts accumulate, all minting to the $A$ poblonian origin of the "Ioly Seriptures," as they are called. But we must here rest for the present. Words, however, fail to express the astonishment we feel at these spirit revelations of long concealed and important historical facts.

pROCOPIUS.

The Greek Secretary of Belisarius.

Abstract

"I arese yov, sir :-My name when on earth was Proeopius. I was the Greck secretary of Belisarius. The principal period of my life wate, from A. 1), 544 to 5 (i5. I wrote a history of the emperor Justinian, and this is the only fart of my writings that has not been coneealed or destroyed. But 1 abo wote on many religions topies. I was a follower of the entproror Julian, that is 1 was a Pothagereat or Platonist, thense two fratoms of philosophy being matly the same. I did mot feed inclined to embrace either of the other religions of my time. There were nome that seened so sensible as the writings of Prthagoras and Plato. I think the Belentios ly their anmagamation of religious and phikesophical deretrines, ruined the beanty of the text of Plate. I had now sympatliy witli cither of the parties in the rentention that was earried on ty Fu-hiu- Pamphilus and others of the disputants of that and shberpuent times. The Krishat of Imbla wheh had been Wor-higned before the time of Elactime, was a black mam, Hindoo. He thought that more followers could be obtained for a white Christ than for a Hindoo one. But prior to that time, in all the temples erected for the worship of Krishna, he was represented as a Hindoo. The words pat into the mouth of Julian in relation to deifying the Judean Saviour, in his dying hour, are not true in any sense whatever. He defied all the gods. He wats in fact a Deist or believer in one overruling power, or God. But in my time gods were not looked upon ths spirits. The god idea meant something great-immeasurable; something that mortals could not comprehend, and with whom only spirits eould converse with. 1 knew that mortals could converse with spirits. I conversed with them myself, when in the mortal form ; and I was told many things by them that were both true and false, as I have found as a spirit. But it is due that I should say this for many spirits; they dn not lie wilfully-they know no better. When I lived everything relating fo religion was in a fearful chaotic state; and many spirits were as much confused as mortals, especially in relation to such matters."

Refer to Smith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Biography for account of Procopius.

As the testimony of this spirit is in several respects most valuable, we will add some comments upon his literary attitude in respect to religion. We cite what is said of Procopius in MeClintock and Strong's Cyelopedia :
> "As a historian Procopius took Herodotus as his pattern, and even renembers his master's fatalism in the material conception of history. Procopius assumes the role of a seeptic, and ats such regards himself as above all positive religion and dogmatic disputes. On acenunt of the cold, unsympathetic manner in which he writes of Christianity, some have not helieved him a Christian, but a deist, Jew, or even a heathen. He was, however, at least in outward confession, a Christian, as appears from his second work, Peri Ktismaton, De Edificiis, which contains a history of all the churches, convents, and other public buildings reared under Justinian at the publie expense in the Roman empire. Another of his writings, entitled Anekdota, or Sacred History, in thirty chapters, is a sort of complement to the books De Bellis. Justinian and Theodora are here painted in the darkest colors. Proeopins says that he wrote it heeause in his first work he could not, through fear of torture and death, speak of living persons ats they deserved. Some grosly obsene passares concerning Thoodora, who was evidently a very bad woman, have been expunged in most editions. There sems little doubt that Procopius was the author of the work."

As Justinian is regarded as one of the great lights of the carly Christian ages, it may not be amiss, in this comnection to know who the Theodera was, whom he choser as his associate in the govermment of the Roman Empire. It will serve to show the just grounds Procopius hat for exposing the corruption that reigned at the court of Justinian. This is all the more required, because English Christian writers have made such eflints to conceal these evidences of the monstrons nature of a Christian religion that would tolerate such moral turpitude. We translate from the French of La Lalle, in the Biographie Universelle:
"Theodora, Empress of the East, wife of Justinian, was celebrated at once for her deportment, the lowness of her origin, her ambition, her intrigues, her beaty, and for the force of character that she displayed on some oceasions. Her mother, a eourtesin of the lowest stage, placed her in a theatre, with her elder sister. Unpossessed of talents or education, Theodora only suceeded in low comedy; but she became distingnished amone the prostitutes, by fore of inmorality. Applated in publie by the vilest populace, she soon excited general contempt. A eertain Eecbolus twok her to Egypt. Driven from town to town hy the magistrates, who saw with indignation her eorruption of youth, she returned to Constantinophe, when Justinian allowed himself to be sedued hy her attractions and the vivacity of her wit. Heat first made her his mistress mader the reigen of Justin, haished riehes thenther, which she inmediately disipated, and sem anmonaced his intention of marrying her. It that time Justini:n was invested with gowning powes The empress Fuphemis, annt of Justinian, and Vige lanee, his mother, opposed this dishomomate marriage ; but from thated cmperor, wherwen revoked the Roman laws, in virtue of which the principal wheres of the empire were bot with Justinian in A. D. for ; and the death of Justin, whidh took pame shortly after, feft him free, at his will, to diejuse of the soverign :athority, which the hlimhess and weatheron churches or other public monuments to be constructed. * * A modern German jurist, touched with the fact that she had favored the work undertaken by Justin and Justinian for the reform and compilation of the Roman laws, has souglit to vindicate her memory, but his hypothesis is not sustaned in the face of so much unanswerable testimony and uncontested facts. Theodora died of a cancer, in the month of June, 548. Justinian was the only one who mourned for her. He gave her name to several cities and to a province. After having traced a horrible picture in his Anecdotes, Procopius praises her in his history."

The reason why Procopins withheld the truth concerning Theodora, in his public history, is very evident. Procopius wrote for the pernsal of the emperor Justinian, and did not dare to make known in that history, facts which would have cost him his life; but, like the true friend of humanity that he was, he took care to record that truth for the information of after generations. We are thas enabled to know something of the eharacters of those people who were the most concerned in fastening the curse of Christianity on mankind. The shameless and degraded courtesan becomes the empress of the Roman Empire, converts the palace into a brothel, and while living a life of profligaey and shame, becomes the builder and endower of Christian churches, and the beloved and flattered patroness of the Christian priesthood and religion. Can a religion thus established ever be anything but a curse to all who, through the systematic perversion of their mental and moral natures, become its deplorable victims.
If what the spirit of Procopicis says is true, then for the first time the fact becomes known that many, if not most of his writings, have been concealed or destroyed; for he says that in addition to his history, he also wrote on many religious topics. Nothing is more probable than that such was the fact. As to the doubtfulquestion of Procopins's religious and philosophical views, the spirit leaves no doubt whatever. He tells us that he was a follower of the Emperor Julian, (the "Apostate," as he is called) ; in other words, a Pythagorean or Platonist, which he says were nearly similar. We have here a clearer exposition of the philosophical views of Julian than can be fonad in any extant acconnt of him. His writings certanly show that he was even more of a P'ythagorean than a Platonist. In other words, he was a Spiritualist, if not a developed spiritual medime for leythagoreaniom was nothing less than a very thorough knowledge of spirit intereourse with mortals and the seeret propagation of that knowledge and its proper uses. Procopits tells us, through a medium who never heard of him even by name, that he did not feel inclined to embrace either of the other religions of his time, Christianity being then the most prominent one at Constantinople, where he resided. Ife tells us that he had no sympathy with either of the parties to the Christian controver:y, in which Eusebins took so prominont a part. All this goes to show that Procopius had no leaning to Christianity whatever ; and sets at rest all questions as to the religious views of this very learned, accomplished, and able man.

Procopins, speaking of what he had every opportunity to know, says, that the Krishna of India, who had been worshipped in the Roman provinees before the time of Euschius, was a black man, and that it was Euscbius who changed him into a Jew; beeause he, Eusebins, thought that more followers could be ohtained for a white Christ than a IIndoo one. If this ean le shown, by existing antignities, to have been true, ats we believe it ean be, then have we very certain data to show what pro-Euschian Christianity was, and what its post-Eusebian spurious imitation is.

The spirit explains what it was, that Julian, in his dying moments said. The spirit refers to the allegation that Julian in the agony of a violent death recanted his philosophicald views, and acknowledged the truth of Christianity. The spirit of Jrocopins admits that Julian did make a dying utterance of his contempt for all the gonls, thas showing that he was neither a C'hristian nor a pagan votary of superstition, but a self-poized philosopher in thenmost trying honr that a man was ever ablled to endure. Julian fell mortally wounded at the buad of his troxps, while repulsing the assathe of the lersian army, on his rear gatard, on the phains of Maramqu, while retrating hefore it. He had held imperial power only for the short period of one year atml s.ven months; but in that time lee hat griven evilenee of the transerndent greathes athl groblues of his elamater. II died at the tex early age of thirty-two years. II: hal heen

the night of ignorance that settled over the world with the fall of Flavius Claudius Julianus. This accomplished man died as he had lived, a true philosopher, and with a clear perception of immortality.

Proconius, who was a follower of Julian, says that he not only knew that mortals could converse with spirits, but that he, himself, had conversed with them when in the mortal form. He tells us, that, in that way, he was told many things that were true, as well as many things that were false, as he since found them to be as a spirit. He adds what is equally true and just, when he says: "Many spirits do not wilfully lie-they know no better." It is, however, none the less unfortunate that there has been and still is so much of spirit testimony that is the result of the ignorance, prejudice and dishonesty of subservient and bigoted spirits. The spirit makes the further plea for the untruthful spirits of his time, that everything relating to religion, was then in the greatest confusion, both in the spirit and the mortal life. Opinions are equally unsettled at this time, and it is to be hoped they are destined to become greatly more so in the near future ; for in our opinion, a settled condition of the human mind is the death of the soul. In nature, change is the universal order of things, and man, mentally, morally, physically and socially is not such a monster as to have immunity from the operation of that blessed natural law.

We camnot pursue these thoughts further now. But we truly hope that the time is not far distant when we mily meet and converse with these ancient friends face to face, and hear from their own lips, the recitals, of the events of the respectivetimes in which they lived. It is, however, none the less gratifying that under the present imperfect conditions they can so perfectly convey their thoughts to mortals. Our gratitude to them cannot be expressed in words.

EUNOMIUS. The Great Arian Leader.

The guide of the medium, introdued this spirit hy saying: "This spirit seems to have great trouble to give his name. He is very mueh opposed by spirits that are unfriendly to him, and to his purpose in coming here. He was an Arian. His name is Eunomins, and he wants me to say this to yon."
"I will salute you, sir, by saying, that there can be no peace while Christianity exists, for it is the religion of persecution and death. Instead of Jesus being entitled to the designation, 'The Prince of Peate,' he should have been designated 'The Prince of Errors.' But all this is as nothing. It was only the doctrines of Apollonius of Tyana, promulgated in his day as the highest morality that men conk eonceive of. But tortay, thetore the light of alvaneing knowledge, it sinks into utter insigniticance. Moral prineiples ean lx utilized under such eonditions an they meet. When I lived on this mortal plane, 1 was a rabid Arian. What foms we mortals were to 'ight own the reseretive temets of our ideal ereeds! for there is no creed now extant, but is haselupenideal preamption. Allthat I have to comfort me in spirit life is this, that I tow the course I did, thinking that I was doing right. Yoummat remember that it is a strictly spiritual prineiple that if you are enthusiastie and honest in what sout terch, you are never eondemmed in spirit life for it. In relation to my mortat contests and eontentions with the bi-hops of my time, I have simply this to saly, that we mever foneht about Jestis. The Arianamd Athamasian eontrowery was simply a fight ower the Kristos of the East and the Itwas of the West. This was the real subject of controbersy betwern Arins and Athanasius."

Here the commumication abruptly terminated, the gruide of the mediam stating that the spirit was an opposed that he andil hold the medium no longer. We refer tosmith's (ireek and Roman Biographical Dictionary for awount of Bunomins.

In the acount of Eunomins as refored to, is related that all his work were deatreyed hy imperial ediet. Is it mot at most of Eunomius? Not only were the works of Eunomius destroyed but also the works of those orthodox Christian writers who attempted to answer his reasoning against the so-called orthodox Christianity. Why were the latter destroyed, if not because they disclosed just what it was that Eunomius was contending for? The boasted established Catholic Christian Cliurch, as late as the begiming of the fifth century, could not afford to have the Arian views of Eunomius, even remotely understoot; and so, by decree, the imperial and priestly rulers of Rome sought to destroy all trace of the great secret that the writings of Eunomius disclosed. What was that secret? Nothing more nor less than that orthodox Christianity was a monstrous sacerdotal imposition, which was being forced upon the ignorant masses of the Roman empire by the combined power of the civil and priestly rulers of that mighty mation. Little did these artful and selfish foes of truth dream, that in spite of their efforts to conceal their infernal work and silence the able mind of grand old Eunomius, that the time would come when his outraged spirit would return and expose their villainy to the gaze of all coming generations of mankind. Justice may slumber long, but at last awakes, and retribution follows. Truth may be buried beneath the accumulated error of ages; but the time comes when its light bursts forth with resistless might, striking terror to the hearts of error's minions. Soin this instance, when the spirit of Eunomius, after nearly fifteen hundred years of anxious and fruitless waiting for an opportunity to vindicate his memory, finds that he is beset with these myrmidoms of bigotry and error from the spirit side of life, up to the last word he uttered ; but in vain. Eunomius disclosed the real issue in the controversy between Arius and Auathasius and their respective adherents and followers. That issue, Eunomins tells us, was not about the heathen doctrine of a triunegod, nor about the inferiority of the Son to the Father God, as the Christian hierarchy have sought to make the world believe ; but it was whether the Christos of the Armenian and Cirecian Gymmosophists, as worshipped by the Ebionites, Nazasites, Essenes, Ginosties and Eclectics, should prevail as the theologieal representative of a universal religion, over the Scandinavian, Germanic, Celtic and Gallic Hesus.

It was undoubtedly to settle this great and essential point, that Athanasius prevailed upon Constantine to convene the first general council of so-ealled ('hristian bishops that wasever held, at Nicae, in A. D. 325. And by this communication of Eunomius we are made acquainted with the reason why no record was kept of the proceedings and diseusions of that moot important and memorable (hristian council. It has ever heen a puzale to modern Christian writers and eritics why there was no record preserved of the details of the ation of the commeil of Nice. That sueh a reeord was made seems certain, but for some reason that eould not be awoided, it has been destroved. Refer to Dr. Nathaniel Lardner, in chapter lxxi of his work treating of the Council of Nice.

In the work of Dr. Lardner above referred to, our readers will find all that has been permitted to come down to us concerning the oljects and actions of the Council of Nice, as collated by the learned and pious Dr. Lardner, in order to show that the facts have never been permitted to become known to modern Christians or to the world. Dr. Larluer very justly admits that it is preposterous to suppose that the Meletian controversy, or fixing the time of celebating Easter, hat anything expecially to do with the convening of the council of Nire, and that the determination of the Arian controversy was the great objeet for which that Council was ealled tegether ty the Reman Emperor, Constantine the (ireat. The question therefore comes up as to what the Arian controversy was ; amb Dr. Lardner cites the eeclesiastical histories of sorrates amd Sozomon to show that it consisted simply of a dispute ats to whother the word consubstantial was or was nest propery applicable to the relations of the bread and wine used in the Eucharistie ceremonial, to the body and hoon of "the son of alleged action of the Council of Niee, shows how trivial : mattor he considered this absurd point, as agromed for convening a general emucil. In view of these concessions on the part of se learmed and eritieal a Christian writer as Des. Lardner, we fed warranted in concluding that in its origin, what is calleal the Arian controversy, was something very difterent from what it Enctame after the merting of the Cometh of Ni.e. It is trie that atter the time of Arins, ame the momenting and murderons decere agath-t the concealing of his writinge, and their miveral destruction, his opponents atal rimemies narrowed it down to the doetrinal question which has heen med to cover up and conceal the real question raised by Arius. It must never be forgotten that the Arian controversy began at Alexandria, in Egypt, in the early part of the fourth century, at a time when the learning of the world had met at that great literary centre, through the commercial intereourse between Europe and Asia by way of Alexandria. Prior to that time, while there is frequent and general mention of Iristos and the worship of that Hindoo deity throughout the provinees of the Roman Empire, by Jew as well as Gentile writers, there is no where to be found any authenticated mention of Jesus, Jesus Christ, Jesus of Nazareth, Jesus the Son of God, Jesus the Son of Mary, or any such person as the Christian's God. It was not until after the meeting of the Council of Nice, that the name of Jesus was given to the god, who up to that time had been known to the Armenians, the inhabitants of Asia Minor, and the Greeks as Kristos, and to the Latins as Christos. Why is the name Jesus coupled with Kristos or Christos, from that time forward? That is the question which the communication we are considering solves.
Eunomius, whose spirit purports to gise that communication was a most decided and persecuted Arian, who lived and adhered to the opinions of Arins, so ably and renownedly, shortly after the death of the latter, and must have known just what the difference between Arins and his enemies was. If the communication is authentic, we cannot see how its truthfulness can be questioned, for it is so entirely eonsistent with all the collateral facts. Is the communication authentic? If not, what is it? We positisely know that neither the medium nor ourself had any conscious agency in its production. The medimm was, as we know, unconsciously entranced when it was given ; and our own mind was so entirely occupied in recording the words as they fell from the medium's lips, as to have no time to think of anything else. The communication cannot be, possibly, otherwise than from some spirit intelligence. Wias that spirit intelligence Emmomius? Why not? We can see no good reason to question that it is from him, and every reason to question that it came from some spirit personator of Eunomius. The spirit is entirely frank in admitting his folly in wasting his mortal life in a useless fight about ideal ereeds; aud says that his only consolation for that folly, as a spilit, is, that he was sincere in what he did. It is this spirit who says:
"In my mortal contests and contentions with the hishops of my time, I have simply this to say, that we never fought about Jesus. The Arian and Athanasian controversy, was simply a fight over the Kristos of the East and the Hesins of the West. This was the real suligect of eontroversy between Arins and Athanasins." It is true this is too brief an explamation of that great theologieal controwersy, but it serves to explain it in a marvellous degree. The spirit intended to proceed, but he whas so beset ly adverse spirit forces that he was eompelled to yield the control withont finishing what he intended to siy ly way of further explanation. That the spirit was thas interfered with hy spirits, who were hostile to the truth being made known, is sultieient proof of the importance they attached to the spirit testimony of Eunomius.

Who, thea, was the Kristos of the East? Ite was the incarnated spirit of the Hindoo god Brahm, who in course of time became the Abraham of the Jewish and Christian Scriptures, the name signifying Father Brathm, or Father God.

We must add some facts that will show that, in truth, up to the time when Euselius wrote his Ecelesiastical Jistory, between A. D. 325 and 340 , the name of Christian, was little known, if known at all, and the religion called (hristianty was much ohder than either the Jewish or Christian religions. We cite the following from the seventy-secont chapter of Dr. Lardner's Works. He silys:
"The tithe of the fourth ehapter of the tirst beok of Feclesipurpose: "That the religion pmbished be desu- ('hri-t to all nations, is neither new nor strange.' 'For though,' says he, 'whohout eontroversy, we are of late, and the mane of 'loristians is indect new, and has not long obtained over the world; yot our mamer of life and the principles of our religion have not been lately terised hy us, but were instituted and oberred, if I may so stay from the begimning of the world, hy grat men, acepted of (iosl, from thome natural motions, whith are implanted in men's minds. This I shall show in tha follow it or manmer: It is well known that the mation of the Jtomene is not new, but distinguished hy its antiguty. Thes hate writingr eontaning acount- of ancient men ; few inder in munbre, lat very eminent for piety, justice and every other virthe. Of whom some lived brofe the flowh, others sinee, soms abd grandson- of Noah : particularly Abraham, whom the Heherews ghory in ats the father and fombler of their nation. And if any one, ascending from Abraham to the first man, should affirm, that all of them who were celebrated for virtue, were Christians in reality, though not in name, he would not speak mueh beside the truth. For what else does the name of Christian denote, but a man, who by the knowledge and doetrine of Jesus ('hrist, is brought to the practice of sobriety, righteousness, patience, fortitude, and the religions worship of the one and only God over all. About these things they were no less solicitous than we are ; but they practiced not circumeision, nor ohserved sabbaths any more than we; nor had they distinetion of meats, nor other ordinances, which were first appointed by Moses. Whence it is apparent that that ought to be esteemed the first and most ancient institution of religion, which was observed by the pious about the time of Abraham, and has been of late published to all nations, by the direction and authority of Jesus Christ.' "

We have here the admission by the originator of what is called orthodox Christianity, that the Christian religion did not originate with Jesus Christ, and that Christianity, as such, was new as late as three hundred and twenty-five years after the pretended birth of Jesus Christ. In that admission, Eusebins concedes that what he called the Christianity of the proceding three hundred and twenty-five years, was the religion that was instituted before or about the time of Abraham, the Ab-Brahm or Father Brahm of the Hindoos. Here we have the founder of orthodox Christianity conceding that the Christianity attributed to Jesus Christ, was not the religion of that Jesus Christ, but merely adopted and promulgated in his name by Eusebius and his Christian coadjutors, at the time, or after the Council of Nice. Is it any wonder that the teachings that were attributed to Crishna, more than thirteen hundred years before that time were called Christian teachings; and that the Ebionite, Nazarite, Essenian, Apollonian, Gosostic, Eelectic, and Neo-Platonic followers of the Hindoo Crishna should be regarded and treated by subsequent C'hristian writers as heretical Christians ; as it it were possible for the originals to be the heresies of that which, at a later period of the world's development, grew out of those original tenets and doctrines ! But there is one thing that must never be forgotten, that it was the Hindoo Christ who was a shepherd, tund not the Jesus Christ of Judea, who was the son of a carpenter, and who, as is alleged, worked at his father's trade.

We may therefore very well understand to whom the following portion of the tenth chapter of St. John applies:
"Then said Jesns unto them again, Verily, verily, I say unto you, I am the door of the sheep.
"All that ever came before me are thieves and robbers : but the sheep did not hear them.
"I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find out, and find pasture.
"The thief cometh not, but for to steal and kill, and to destroy; I am come that they may have life, and that they might have it more abundantly.
"I am the good shepherd: the good shepherd giveth his life for his sheep.
"But he that is a hireling, and not the shepherd, whose own the sheep are not, seeth the wolf coming, and leaveth the sheep, and flecth; and the wolf catcheth them, and scattereth the sheep.
"The hireling fleeth, because he is a hireling, and eareth not for the sheep.
"I am the good shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of mine.
"As the Father knoweth me, even so know I the Father; and I hay down my life for my sheep. And other sheep I have, which are uot of this fold; them aloo I must bringe, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold and one shephert."

Now those words pat into the mouth of Crishan hy his disciple Argoun, had some analogy and mmistakable meaning; for Crishat's business in early life, it is said, and by his followers helieved, was that of a shephers, whose duty it was to ghard the sheep under his care against thieves, robhers and wolves. But when they are put into the mouth of a earpentor's son, who never was a shepherd nor anything to do with taking care of sheep, they are sadly ont of plater. A rjoun, the treloved diseiple of Crishma (or Crishtan as a learned bralman informed us was the real name of the Indian Saviour) might well and truly make his master say and repeat it, " I am the gend shepherd;" but for St. John to make the Jew, or the alleged J.w, Jesms, say, "I am the grod shepherd," is manifestly to admit that st. John's Jesthe was the Hindow, atm mot

 Jusas of the ('hristians was the Hindoo Crishat or Christatu, for in Hebrew xiii, so, we read:
"Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead, our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant."

Now, this language applied to the great Brahm, the serene God of peace among the Hindoos, and to his incarnated Son, the true and only "Great Shepherd of the sheep" that figured as a god, in any such sense, had a consistent and direct meaning; but when applied to the carpenter's son of Judea, it is simply absurd. The Christian Jew Jesus was never in any sense "The great Shepherd of the sheep ;" while the Hindoo Crishtan was in the strictest sense the "The great Shepherd of the sheep," if he was anything at all.

We will add in this comection a word in relation to what the Hindoo Crishtau, who slew so many monsters (as did the Greek Hercules) was. Sir William Jones tells us that Col. Vallancy, who was thoroughly conversant with ancient Irish literatmre, told him that in Irish, Crishna means the Sun; and "we find," he says, "Apollo and Sol considered by the Roman poets as the same deity," the Sun. In this undoubtedly true statement of the learned and pions Sir William Jones, we have the key by which to solve the whole riddle concerning the so-called New Testament The whole story of the life and labors of the Hindoo Crishna, from whom the Irish derived the name and its meaning, laad relation to the Sun in its yearly revolution, as its track was marked by the constellated stars throngh the sidereal heavens. Apollonins who brought the religion of the Hindoos into the Roman empire, was known by a name that meant the Son of Apollo-A pollo in turn meaning the Sim. The name Apollo meant the same as Sol, and was frequently abbreviated into Pol. In the book of Aets, these names are changed in the spelling, by the author of that fietion, into Saul and Paul, both those names being this modified to conceal the fact that they were of the same meaning, and related to Apollonius, the great propagator of the religion of Crishna in the first century, and beyond all question, the writer, expomnder, and advocate of the Hindoo theology, set forth in the so-called Christian Scriptures, no part of which has any relation to any Jew whatever. But we must not delay further upon this point. We have shown clearly enough who and what the Kristos or Christos of the East was, of whom the spirit of Eunomius speaks.

Now who was the Hesus of the West? So particular were the pricstly founders of the present Claristian religion to conceal everything relating to the grod Hesins of the Cedtic Iruids, that we ean find but little mention of him, and that little in that learned and invaluathe beok, the (eltic 1)ruids by (iodfrey Higgins, London, 1826. At page 150 under the head "The Druids Adored the Cross," he says:
"Having shown that the eross was in common use before the time of Clirist, by the eontinental nations of the world, it is now only necessary to show that it was equally in use by the Celtic Druids in Britain, to overthrow the arguments used to prove certain monuments, Christian from the circumstances alone of their bearing the figure of a cross. The very learned Shedius, (in his treatise de Mor. Cerm. xxiv.) speaking of the Drnids, contims ail that I have satid on this head. He writes that they (the Druids) seek studiously for an oak tree, large and handsome, growing up with two principal arms, in form of a cross, beside the main stem upright. If the two horizontal arms are not suffieiently adapted to the figure, they fasten a cross beam to it. This tree they consecrate in this mamer. Tyon the right branch they cut in the hark, in fair characters, the word IEESCS: upon the middle or upright stem the word aheve the going off of the :ams they cut the name of (iod, THAU (The Tall of Ezekel ix. 4.); under all, the same repated I'IAAU. This treeso inscriben, they make their kehba, in the grove eathedral, or summer chureh, foward which they direct their faces in the olliees of religion, as to the amber stone or the cove in the temples of Abury ; like as the Christians do to any symbo or picture at the Altar."

We deeply regret that sehedius did not inform us from whence he derised the information he therein sets forth. But we camot doubt that, as he was a devout Christian, he had the mont eonclusive anthority for making it. But here the fact is rombered pain that the Druts of (iomany, fatal and Britain, hatd a divine trinity, of which Than was the superme gox itesus the haman executor of the will of the first, and Belemes, the solar light and heat through whieh all life w:as originated and preserved, were the three personitiod beings of the Divine Trinity. In that trinity we have the inearnated seemal prome, in the Druid (iod and saviour, Hews, the Hashs weenping the sume position, and representing the same theological functions, ath the ('rishma of India in the Hindon Trinity, and Jesas in the Christian Trinity. This is not all; but we have this Druid Hesus connected with and attached to a natural not an artificial cross, so muel nearer were the Druids to the worship of the True God-the God of Nature-than the Christian idolators who bow in adoration before the carved crucifix. There is every reason to believe that the Druid religion was derived largely if not solely from India, whether by way of the interior of the continents of Asia and Europe, or by way of the Mediterranean, or both, we will not undertake to decide. The god Than of the Druids is in all probability derived from the God Thot of the ancient Egyptians; the god Belenus, to whom the Beal, Baal or Bel fires of Bealtine, (or the day of Belan's fires) were lighted, was the Chaldean or Phomician god Baal, or the Sun in the sign of the Bull; while the god Hesus was almost certaintly derived by the Druids from the Phœnician god IES or JES, the Phœnician Bacchus, or the Sun in the Season of the rintage and harvest time.

There are an infinite number of known facts which all concur in showing that there was an intimate commercial intercourse kept up between the people of Western Europe and the highly civilized nations of the east, which was largely if not mainly carried on by way of Gaul, Africa and the Mediterranean, by the Phœenicians, long before the Romans overrun Africa, Greece and Asia Minor. It was through that commercial intercourse that the religions of Asia and Africa became transferred to Western and Northern Europe, long before the Roman conquests of Gaul, Germany and Britain, and long before any Christianity was taught in that country. This adopted Oriental religion was everywhere prevalent when the Roman legions first invaded those countries, and the influence it exerted upon the minds of these children of nature was so great and lasting, that it has never been entirely eradicated, but is kept up by the uncultivated masses, in ceremonies and observances, the origin of which but few of the edneated classes understand. Who then, was the Hesus of the West, of whom Eunomius speaks? He was the Saviour of the Celtic and Gallic Drudd, for Itesus was a god especially venerated by the Gauls as their protector and preserver as Mr. Higgins says in the following words:
"The Gauls had a god called Hesus; was this from the Greek worl zoo, or the Hebrew word isn, or both? In the IIehrew, if the e were the emphatie article, then the word would be literally The Preserver. He was also often the destroyer: in (ianl, Mars."

W'e would suggest in reply to Mr. Higgins' question, that the word was not derised from the (ireek nor the Hebrew, but from the Planician word ies or jes which meant the אun and wothing else. Strong as is the temptation to protract these comments, we must hasten to a eonclusion of them. We find, then, that at the time of the Roman eonquests of Britain, Germany and Gaul, that the Drud gexd Hesus was the great object of worship thronghont those vast regions of the world. It was ever the policy and practice for the all conquering Romans to allow the eonutured people to enjoy their religions, whether in aceordance with the Roman religion or not. Never did this policy serve the loman rulers to a better purpose than among the ronguered nations who were under the religions leadership of the Druid priests, for, but for this toleration the Roman sway over then ennld not have been manataned; as it was for three humdred and seventy-five years, from the time of Julius Casar to the reign of Constantine, in the first latif of the fourth century. Up to that time there were almont comstant local rebellions, which wouk hawe beeme general hat for the tolerance of the Romans in the matter of religion.

For some time the Roman Empire lad beon divided into the Eastern and Western proviners ; governed respectively by independent rulers, at Rome and Niecomedia; when Constantine the (ireat having overthrown his imperial colleagues, beeame sole master of the Romath world, and estahlished the seat of empire at byzantian, the name of which he changed to (onstantinople. Prion to that time A. I). :323, the rival worship of the Roman mythology, thromghont the (ireck speaking provinees of the Empire, was the serts which adhered more or lese tenacionsly to the (iymmosiphie thets and doetrines of the IEindoo theolegy, of which the life and teachings of the Indian saviour, ( rishna, were the main fommation. By the (ireck grommozophist sects he was called Kriatos, amb his followers were ealled by vations names such as Ehionites, Nazarites, Essence, (inosties, de. Little if anything had been known, up to that time of the gex Heats of the Druids of the Western Empire. Comstantine was with his, father, Constantius Chlorus, at York in Britain when the latter died, and he succeeded to the government of Gaul, Germany and Britain. He was fully acquainted with the popularity in those provinces of the god Hesus, the second person of the Druidical Trinity. He conceived the iden of conciliating the subjects of his Western provinces, by adopting their god as well as the Kristos of the East, and with that view, no doubt, broached the subject to some of the leading Guostics or Eclectics, at Alexandria, then the centre of the learning of the world. Among those to whom he submitted his plans were Alexander and Arius. The former desiring to curry favor with the emperor, readily lent himself to the plan and became its strenuous supporter. Arius on the other hand set his face firmiy against the impious suggestion, and hence the breaking out of a controversy which has never ceased to create disturbance in whatever shape it has been revived. To carry his point, Constantine summoned the recornized leaders of various sects of the worshippers of Kristos to meet at Nicas, where he assembled them in his palace, to the number of more than 300 and submitted his scheme of adopting the Saviours of the Eastern and Western sects, in the person of one god, to be called Hesus Kristos, who was to take the place and combine the characteristics of the Kristos of the East and the Hesus of the West. Under the lead of Athanasius, who was made bishop of Alexandria next year for his services, the assembled bishops (so-called) voted to adopt the scheme of Constuntine, at the Council of Nice. Arius and a few others who refused to submit to the theological scheme, were excommunicated and banished. This, the spirit of Eunomius tells us, was the real issue between Arius and Athanasius, and this was the question which was settled in the first Christian comeil that was ever held; for Eusebius was forced to admit shortly thereafter that the name Christian was then (after A. D. 325), only recently known.

In view of the facts collated, can any one doubt that the Jesus Christ of the Christian Scriptures was nothing more nor lessthan the combination of the names of the heathen gods. Hesusand Kristos, that combined name being substituted for that of Kristos, which up to that time had been the name ly which the Crishna of India was known by his Greek followers. As a further proof of this fuct, it is only necessary to say, that while there is frequent historical mention of Kristos and the worship of that (iymmosophie god, in Greek and Latin authors, prior to the Council of Niee, there is nowhere to be found a single mention of Hesus or Jeshs Christ. This is of itself sufticient contirmation of the statement of Funomius as to the nature of the Arian controvensy. Here we must close. We hope, however, that we may have some future opportunity of going further into this sulbect.

It was a master stroke of governmental poliey on the part of Constantine to seek to blend the prevailing heathen religions of his time into one heathen system, that would reconcile the warring interests of the various priesthoods who kept the Roman perple in one constant secne of turmoil and contention. Üntortmately he was only tox suceesful, ansl fastened mon the eivilized world the most irrational, inconsistent, and neeurad form of heathenism that ever held the homan mind in thrall.

CARNERDES.

A Greek Philosopher.

The puide of the medimm ambounced the presence of (':rnea-interes in mumblate matiors, that it was with the greatest ditioaulty he conld remain to give his commanication, and so, to histery.

 my twimony, on areont of my :pirit having lithe or ma aflinity for the prosent mortal life. Therefore, what has been satid liy the ghide of the medium, mast =mitioce for me in-per of I'romethelas, and the lifis, "hatater and earee of Prometheus were almost identical with those of the Cliristos of India-the story of Prometheus being nothing more than it plagiarism by the Greeks of that relating to Christos. The Platonic philosoply was derived from, and was a combination of, the doctrines regarding Christos in the East and Promethens in the West. As far as I was concerned, I knew that all the god-systoms, or Christs born in the flesh grew out of the heathen idea of sacrifice as a propitiation for sin. Man in his primitive state, first offered up the lowest reptiles for this purpose ; in time he substituted beasts as offerings; and finally ended by homan sacrifices as the noblest oflering to offended deity. I so instructed the imner circle or school of my philosophy: After I was transferred to the spirit life, I found that Christosism was changed into Christianity between the 4 th and 5th centuries by different bishops of the Christosite churches. The reason why they made this change was to meet the wave of western doubt which flowed upon their teachings through the Hesus element of Western Europe, the two teachings meeting in Rome and Alexandria, about A. D. 250. I have made mys statement as clearly as I could under the cireumstances and thank you for this hearing."

Refer to Smith's Greek and Roman Biograplyy for account of Carneades.

What our readers may find in the work above referred to is what has come down to us of the philosopher, Carneades, and his New Academic doctrines. We have herein a specimen of the manner in which the theological views of the ancient philosophers have been buried under their polemical speculations, and abstract reasoning on metaphysical and ethical topics. While it is admitted that Cleitomachus, the intimate friend and pupil of Carneades, eonfessed that he never conld ascertain what his master thought on any subject, we have modern writers who assume to know all about it. These wiseacres have never taken into aceount the possibility of these ancient philomphers finding means to return, and making known just what it was they labored to areomplish. It would seem from the furegoing communication, that Carneades hats attained as a spirit a most adranced stage of development, and that it was with the greatest difliculty he could return to set himself right as a teacher of philosophy.

If it is true that the Grecian doetrines concerning Promethens were derived from the beahmanieal doetrines comcerning Crishna of Imetia, and if it is further true that P'ythagoras was a worshipper of Prometheus, this of itself would be suflicient to aceount for the similarity of P'ythagorean and Brahmanical doctrines. It it not experlient here to gointo a critical comparison of what is known eoncerning those philosophies, respetively; but we cannot forego noting the further facts, that Apollonits of Tyama was a follower of Pythagoras, who at the mature age of fifty years went to India to perfeet himself in the Pythagorean philowopy and that from that time forward he regarded the Indian philosophers his masters; and not I'ythagoras, who like himaself was hat a reeciver and teacher of the Indian philosophical doetrines. Facts like these, that are brought out by these astomnding spirit disclosures, etablish their anthenticity beyond reasomable doubt.

But we have another surprise in the statement of the spirit that the philosophy of l'ato was nothing more than a eombination and reeonciliation of the doctrines concerning (liristos in the East and Promethens in the West. It is very eertain that the philosophy of lato was an essentially spiritual system, as contradistinguished from the more or less materialistie philosophical systems of (irecee and Rome. No one hatd at better oppertunity to know what the philosophieal system of Plato was that ('arneades, and we therefore are inclined to aceept his construction of it as correct.

Carneades framkly admits that he aecepted neither the doetrines concerning the Ilindus wionr (rishan, nor the (irecian saviour Promethens, and tells us that he knew that both those divinities were the result of the sumerstitions incea that there could be a vicarions oflering for sill. As to this he is undoubtedly right. This was the error of primitive man, and it is as rigidly adhered to by the Christians of to-day, as it was adhered to by the naked savares who firs fell into that lamentable crror.

The pepirit of Carneades tells us that the ('laristosisan of his time, ats he had learmed as a spirit, had been convertad inte the ('hristianity of Constantine ant Exsebnes, in the fourth entury. He tells us that the Bi-hoghe of the (hristerite churehes fonnd it neressary to maker that consereion of ' 'hristosism, to resist the wave of Hesusiom from the West. This is very errain, it being a neressity to Constantine to reooncile the warring clements of (hristovish athe Itesusiom in his dominions, :and bence he joined the politie biohops in blending the opposing waves of interest and thought in one Hesus Christos, which has been imposed upon the nations ever since, by the combined power of tyrannical rulers and impiously selish priests, and which has come down through the centuries to us modified by Christian writers to Jesus Christ. It is very certain that about A. D. 250 this was the great question of agitation throughout the Roman Empire. We regard this communication not only as authentic, but as showing the Hindu origin of Christianity, beyond all reasonable doubt.

SOTION.

The Teacher of Seneca.

This spirit asked us to take him by the hand. We did so, when he thos addressed us.
"We meet in peace only to prepare for war. In my mortal life I was a philosopher and grammarian, in the School of Alexandria; and was the teacher and preceptor of Seneca. I was of the sehool of Potamon, althongh I lived before his time-that is, I helped to begin that which he carried out. I was engaged in the active affairs of this life, principally from between A. D. 15 to A. D. 40. I am here to-day for a special purpose, and that is, to prove that before the time of Eusebins, Christianity was Christosism, and that Christos of India was the god known as the Saviour of men throughout the period I have named. You have heard it said that, "Great was Diana of the Ephesians.' This Diana, in my time, was supposed to be the Virgin who brought Christos into the world. The advent of this belief in Greece took place after the Indian conquests of Alexander the Great, and after B. ('. 325. Diana Was supposed to occupy the same relation to the incarnate god (rishma, that the Virgin Mary oceupies in your Roman Catholie C'hureh, of to-day, towards Jesus Christ. But, as for myself, I was not a believer in such doctrines. I was a Peripatetic philosopher, and a follower of the great Gymmosophist Calanus; and if you will read the moral essays of my pupil Seneca, you will find them full of Gymmosophie doctrines.

The learned men of my time all believed about the same as do your Mollern Spiritualists; lont with the fatal mistake that they supposed they walked and talked with (ionl, and not with human spirits. This has been fatal tospiritualism in all past ages; and even to-day, through the machination of epirits, some of your most trusted liglits are likely to ruin jour catuse by thinking they have a special mission to enlighten the word. Special missions have been the curse of spiritualism in all cotmtries and in all ages. I was known as Sotion."

The guide of the medium deseribed this spirit as being the opposite of the spirit Carneades, who preceded him; and esid, that while the latter was so spiritual that he eould hamdly enter and rematin in the dense atmonphere of the earth, that gotion had retmoned with almost the facility of mate riality: On leaving he took our hand and assured us of his spirit eoroperation. We take the following eoncerning Aotion from Finith's Greek and Roman Biography.
"sotion. There appen to have been three or four philesophers of this name. The following alone are worth noticing: 1. A native of Alexambria, who flourished at the close of the third rentury B. C. (Clinton, Fasti Hellen, vol. iii, p. ienf.) Nothing is known of his personal history. He is chicely remarkable ats the anthor of a work entitled biadowhia, on the sueressive tewhers in the different philosophical solhools. It is quoted very frequently by Diogemes Lactins, and Athemans. It eomsisted of at hast twouty-three books. He was also, apparmatly, the anthor of a work, proton Timmons sillon, and of a work entitled Dioklena elegelani. 2. Also a native of Alexambia, who lised in the age of Tiberins. Ite wat the instrutor of semeat, whenderived from him his almitation of Who was the anthor of a treatise on anger, quoted hystabents. Platarol abo qumtes him, as the anthority for cortain statio ments resperting towns fommed by Alexamder the (ixeat in India, which her had harard from his contemperary lotanm who in quoted hy Trotges as the anthority for some wherstate ments relating to Julia, which he pmodaly drew from the tane sonmer. :3. Tine lerjpatetiephilaspher, mentional he A. (ictof the preacelitig."

In the historid dobbta concraing these soweral philosophers, coincidental surprises that we have met with in inquiring into the authenticity of these most remarkable and important communications. The spirit of Sotion, by a single statement, clears up every doubt concerning himself and his labors. He does not mention any other philosopher by the name of Sotion, which he would certainly have done if there had been a philosopher Sotion previous to himself. We therefore incline to believe that the first Sotion, mentioned above, was identical with the second. If it is true, as the spirit stated, and we have no question of it, he sought to reconcile the various philosophical systems of his time, in the spirit of the Eelectic school of philosophers. There can be little, if any doubt, that he was the author of the work entitled Diadochai, on the successive teachers in the different philosophical schools, as well as the other two works attributed to the same author. The third supposed Sotion is undoubtedly the Sotion who was the preceptor of Seneca, and has only been supposed to have been a separate and distinct person, because he is spoken of as a Peripatetic or Aristotelean philosopher, while the preceptor of Seneca was a great admirer of Pythagoras and his philosophy.

The spirit tells us that he, as a philosophical teacher and writer, anticipated the Eclectic system of Potamon of Alexandria, or in other words, he sought to combine the philosophies of the various schools in one philosophical system. It is not a little singular that Sotion is mentioned as the contemporary and personal friend of Potamon the Lesbian; and that he should speak of having anticipated the Eclectic philosophy of Potaman of Alexandria. We are therefore led to believe that the latter Potamon was a descendant or relation of Potamon, the friend of Sotion. It very naturally accounts for the later Potamon taking up and completing the work begun, prior to A. D. 40 , by the friend of his ancestor or relative.

The spirit speaks of himself as having been a Peripatetic philosopher, and a follower of the great Gymmosophist, Calanns. This would show that Sotion was what he claims to have been, an independent philosophical thinker, and that he was a teacher of philosophy, as early as A. D. 15, fully acquainted with the Gymmosophie teachings of Calanus, as well ans with the Aristotelean, P'ythagorean, and other philosophical systems of Circece.

But, the spirit, after taking the method he did to identify himself, states that the special object of his return to earth was to show that Christianity before the time of Eusebius, was Christosism, and that Christos of India was the god known as the Siviour of men throughout the Greek provinces of the Foman Empire during the period from A. D. 15 to A. D. 40. If any one was likely to know this fact, it was Sotion, who, as a student of all known religious and philosophice, tried to reconcile them one with another. He significantly speaks of Diana of the Ephesians as the supposed Virgin who had bronght Christos into the world. It is certainly the fact, that "Diana of the Ephesians" was a very diflerent divinity from Diana of the Romans, who was considered of no great account, on account of her being the godiless of the plebeians.

From the aceount of the goddess Diana of Ephesons and her temple, ly Rev. Frank S. Dobbins in his False (iods or the Idol Worship of the World, page 171, it is very plain to see that she was regarded by her votaries in precisely the same light as the Frega of the Seandinavians, the Isis of the Eryptians, and the Virgin Mary of the Claristians, or ats the mother of the incarnated god and saviour of mankime. Why she was called Diana we do not know, but from the fact that the pillars of luer temple were fumished by 127 kinge, shows that her worship wat very extensive, and wo doubt extended over all the combtries of the East. That she was regarded as the virgin mother of Christos has not been permitted to be known to us ; but, since that face is communicated by so well informed at follower of the great (iymmosophist Calanus, as Kotion, when taken in "ommection with the collateral facts of history, which all tend to eontirm it, there can hardly be a dowbt of the fact. At Mathura ou the Juman, in India, the suppesed hirth-place of ('rishas, there is a representation of this same goddess, suckling the infant (rishas, on the watls of the Lomphe, ereeted long ages before the allegen birth of deation linist, in that suced town, in homor of the Hindus:aviour 'rishati. In view of all the facte, can there be arearohable doubt that the worship, of the Himblu (hriatos was the only (Chri-t worship) of the time of which spirit sotion -peake, and for three lumdred yeats afterwarls?
Fotion tells us that he was :a follower of the teanhing of Calams, hut that bee did mot betieve in the Brahmanieal theeloge. He allude to the fart that seneca, his pupil, wats also a great admirer of the precepts taught by Calanus, and that he, Seneca, ineorporated many of Calanus's ideas in his writings. He tells us that the learned men of his time were all Spiritualists.

SEPTIMIUS GETA.

A Roman Emperor.

"I will salute you, sir, by saying: You are a man after my own heart. I loved my friends and opposed my enemies. I was known in my mortal life as Septimius Geta, son of Septimius Severus. I was murdered by my brother Caracalla. There is one thing that I now know, and that is that my brother would never have murdered me had it not been for the meddlesome priests of my time. About from A. D. 200 to 212, there was a fight between what the spirit who proceeded me (Sotion), calls Christosism and the worship of Apollo the pagan God of Rome. The followers of the tirst using the word Maia to designate the mother of Christos, which was afterwards by the Christians changed into Mary. The followers of Apollo, regarding him as identical with Horus the Egyptian Saviour recognized the great Isis as his virgin mother. I said, when appealed to decide between the two parties, during my brief reign, that they were both too ridiculous to be worthy of any official recognition. In doing this I sealed my fate. I gave offence to both parties. And finding my brother a more pliable tool in their hands, the priests helped him to murder me. As far as I was myself concerned, I was a fully initiated member of what was called in my time the Diamond or Mountain of Light Circle. I was a believer in and a follower of the Eelectic system of philosophy. I think that one Photian wrote a history of my life. It is now in the hands of the Maronite Christians of MIt. Lebanon in Syria."

Refer to the Biographie Universelle for account of Geta.
The spirit of Geta mentions the fact that the worshippers of Christos in Rome, at the commencement of the third century, used the word Maia to designate the mother of Christos which was afterwards changed in to Mary by the Christians. In relation to the name Maia we take the following from "A Dissertation on the Mysteries of the Cabiri," ly George Stanley Faber, A. M., (Oxford, 1S03. Vol. i, page 29S):
" Atlas, the allegorical astronomer, At-El-S', the solar god; and Mata, who was feigned to be one of his seven danghters, borrowed her name from the ancient word Maia, a mother. If we rectur to the Brahnanical theology, we shall learn, that the mother of Buddha, the Hindoo Mereury, was called MahatMaya, she was feigned to be the wife of the rajath Sootah Damah; but this rajah nevertheless was mot the father of Buddhat, who was estemed on the contrary to te an inemmation of the god Vishan. Maha-Maya is literally the great mother, and she was no doubt the same mythological character as Crbele, or the Ark, the magna mater of classical antifuity: Her husband Damali I take to be the (irecian banaus, or Dat-N: aw, and consequontly, like Buddha, the great diluvian patriarch; for Noah, as I have alrealy intimated, is indiflerintly deseribes, as the father, the son, or the hushamd, of the vescel which he comstructed; the father, as having hailt the Ark, the son, as having iswed from it, and the hashand as bring elosely eommected with it. As the allegorical parent of Moreury was demominated Maia, amd that of Buddha MahaMasa, sothe mother of the Chinese Fohi was called Move, or Maia. Ratramms mentions, that the Brahmins beliwed Buddhat to have been born of a virgin. This is morely the connterpart of the ('hinese tradition, that Fohi was horn without a father, and of the (ireek legend, that a virgin was the mosther of Penselts."

It is true that Faber sals, on the aubority of Maurice's History of Imdia, that Bublha was esteemed an intarnation of Vishme, but he was expally extemed at the latter atater of Brahm, and as an incornation of krishat or (rishan. It would serom that the (ired (immosephists worshipped lese the Paddla inearnation of (rishnat than the (iend himself, and hence insteat of elaming to be the followers or wor-hipere of Buddha, as did the budhlists of Iulia, they elamed to he or Kristos. As Buddhat was regaded ats the son of MahtaMaya, hererat mother virgin, the (irecksernamged that mame into Maia, and the Indian virgin mother of the incornated that sen that the - tory of a virgin hegothen divine man is not original as attributed to the fabulous Jesus Christ and his equally fabulous virgin mother, Mary. The whole theological fiction was borrowed from the Hindus, names as well as ineidents, as all the facts plainly show.

Geta tells us that the Romans regarded their Apollo as identical with the Egyptian god Horus, and recognized the virgin goddess Isis as his mother. It would thus appear that the Greeks and Romans having no religion, but such as they stole or borrowed from India and Egypt, divided among themselves as to which system of those foreign mythologies they would adopt, and they fought over the matter until a third element of dissension was introduced in the mythological systems of the Scandinavians and Celtic Druids, which after the Roman conquests of Germany, Britain and Gaul, were brought to Rome and Alexandria. With these widely divergent priestinterests in full play, there must have been lively times in the Roman Empire during the first three hundred years of the socalled Christian era. Poor Geta was made aware of that at the cost of his life and his empire.

As proof of the truth of the statement of Geta, that the worship of Isis and other Egyptian deities were worshipped by the Romans, we take the following item of news from the Catholic Standard of August 18th, 1883. It says:
"The excavationsstill in progless in the rear of the Chureh of the Minerva, have brought to light a portion of a magnitieent column of Oriental grey granite, probably forming part of the portico of the temple of Isis and Serapis. The lower end bears, in demi-relief, figures of exquisite workmanship, and life size, representing priests seated on a speeies of stool, holding each a bundle of lotus flowers. This interesting fragment has been successfnlly raised and placed beside the obelisk, stil awaiting its final destination on the square of the (ollegio Romanus."

That there was a Temple of Isis in Rome upon the columns and walls of which were portrayed the worship of Isis, the Egyptian virgin Mother of the Sun-god Horus, and the rival for Roman favor, of Maha Maya the great mother of Buddha, the incarnation of Crishna, the Sun-god of India, called by the Greeks Cluristos or Kristos, is ample confirmation of the statement of Geta, that the Maia of the Romans, MabaMaya of the Hindus, and the Mary of the Christians were one and the same mythical personifieation, and was allegorically intended to represent the Constollation Virgo, which among all people was regarded as the mother of the sun personitied.

There seems to have been some dispute as to whetber ficta hatl the prenomen of Sucius or Publins. The spirit gave his mame simply as septimius (ieta, and therefore we think that he had no other surname than Soptimins.

The spirit tells us he was a fully intiated member of the Diamond of Mountain of Light C'ircle. If this was true, (ieta was no donbt fully posted as to what all these religious squalbbles were about, and despised them aceordingly. The fact of the matter was that the (iymmosophists were the only portion of the Hindus who understood the fictitions meture of the Brahminical and Bubdhistical theralegical teachinges, and it was no doubt owing to this faet that their religion spead so rapidly over the Roman Empire, after Calanus imparted this great philosophical seeret to Alexander the Great and his generals.
There is no mention of any history of the life of (ieta hy any Phocion or Photian, and whether such a work is in existenee we camot say ; but it is not improhable that sone of the Diat mond ('ircle may have commemorated the all too short career of this pronising young ruler. If such was the case, it was no doubt kept a secret, and may have in the course of time found a sametnary in the convents of the Maronite Christians of Mt. Lebamen.

JACOB JOSEPH VON GORRES.

"GOOD DAY; SIR :-It seems to be the misfortunc of Germans that they have names that are very hard to force through mediums who speak a foreign tongue. My name was Jacob Joseph Von Gorres. Although I wrote on all the topics of my day, the principal point of my communication will have relation to my work Die Christliche Mystik. It is upon this that I wish particularly to dwell. I was a mystic follower of Boehme, Agrippa, and such writers on mysticism; but I tried to reconcile the mysticism of the 16th century with the mysticism of my time, about all of which I would have told the truth had not prejudice prevented me from doing so. All mysticism of that and previous times, centered in the teachings of Hermes Trismegistus and Christos of India. I use the Greek word Christos instead of the Indian name Crishna or Christan. Now, that was the central or commencement point of all modern Christianity, as it was tanght by Apollonius of Tyana, Potamon, Plotinus and the Alexandrian School in general; but afterwards it was greatly altered at the Council of Nice, to suit the views of Eusebius and those of his school. There is only one direction in which you must look for the evidence that will substantiate the truth of these communications, and that is among the Catholics, for Protestantism is only a bastard Catholicism. The bishops and priests of the Catholic chureh know that what I here assert is positively true ; and they have, in different parts of the world, the documentary evidence to prove what I here assert. But they have thrown the responsibility of most of their sacred writings upon the Jews, because they claimed to be God's chosen people, and that their prophets had direct communication with the deity, Jchovah; and as none but the leamed few could read their Hobrew text, so Eusebins and his followers thought it a sharp stroke of poliey to conceal the fraudulent proceedings in which they were engaged, in founding the Christian chureh. Ahmost the whole of the books that make up what is called the Bible, or the ancient Jewish history, is taken from the writings of the elder Zoroaster, and were taught by the Armenians, Chaldeans, Moubites and Samaritans. There is no Jewish Raboi of any learning, to-day, who could prove from any works I met with, that they had a literature extending beyond the Baby-lonish captivity of the Jews. All tradition prior to that time shows that the Jewish narratives were taken from the legends of the people I have named. As a spirit I have investigated all kinds of sectarianism, and I find that the one common mistake of mankind in all ages has been in mistaking the eommmatations of spirits for the outgivings of (iod. If they will, now and hereafter, correctly understand this, all sects will come together in the fatherhood of truth and the brotherhood of men. Other spirits here may have something more important to say to you, than what I have given. I thank you for this hearing. Farewell."

Refer to Chambers' Encyclopedia for account of Von Ciorres.
The spirit properly expresses the relations between Catholio and Protestant Christians, when he designates the latter as bastard Catholics. It is amazing that people of intelligence camot see and moderstand this fact. But for the bastard Protestant Catholicism that prevails to-day to such an irrational extent, the Roman Catholic Chureh and its morighteous mental and moral tyranny conld not stand in the blazing light of the spiritualism of the nineteenth century. We have no doubt that the spirit testifies to what is true when he says that there is to-lay in the possession and control of the Roman Gatholic hierarehy the docmentary proof of the truth of this, and the other eommmanations which have beeng given by spirits bearing upon the same points of theologieal hiverys.

It has cere been an mexplained history how the fommers of Ioman ('atholic Christianity eame to base their theological framl upon the theological fram of the .Jews, and to make Judea the souree from which the former framd was derived. This spirit explatins this in a singularly clear and satisfactory mamer. In substance he tells us that the Jews were a peenliar people in the one particular, that they clamed to be the ehosen people of fion, and that the language in which their religion was explatmed, the Hebrew tomger, was litte known ontaide of the Jewish priesthesel, or the territorial limits of Judea. Tor tack the Roman ('atholice Christianity neon this (iorres, was considered by Eusehats and his followers as a sharp stroke of policy in lannching their new seheme of eorlosiasticism. Hener the amomaly of having the bigoted, intelarant, and motorionsly immoral inculeations of the Hebrew feriptures, or Old Testancont, as it is called, bended with the peaceful, tolerant, benevolent, humanitarian and ethical inculcations of the Gymmosophical teachings of Apollonius of Tyana, in the so-called New Testament, compiled by Eusebius in the beginning of the fourth century. The so-called Christian religion is the one anomalous religion, the traditions or seriptures of which are a mass of the most irreconcilable contradictions. In all other religions the leading objects, whatever they may have been respectively, are consistently maintained throughout, and this was even the case with Judaism, with which the founders of Christianity so inconsistently and fatally connected their heirarchical as well as ecclesiastical schemes. But Eusebius and his Christianizing followers had another object in view than that which the spirit of Von Gorres mentions, and that was to divert attention as far as was possible from the source of the Gymmosophic oriental teachings of Apollonius of Tyana which Eusebius sought to appropriate as the basis of an original religion, or a religion that would be so regarded. Thanks to the spirits of those who lave lived in the past, and who made these matters an object of special attention, the scheme of those mental tyrants is destined to be brought to naught.

The spirit tells us that, "Almost the whole of the books that make up what is called the Bible, or the ancient Jewish history, is taken from the writings of the older Zoroaster, and were tanght by the Armenians, Chaldeans, Moabites and Samaritans." That so learned and competent a witness as Von Gorres should testify so positively upon that point is of the greatest siguificance.

There is a strong array of authorities in history to sustain the correctness of the testimony of the spirit of Von Gorres as to the plagiaristic nature of the Hebrew Seriptures, so-called. Being so fully sustained in his statements that the Old Testament was derived from the teachings of the Armenians, Chaldeans, Moabites and Samaritans, we can neither doubt the authenticity or the substantial correctness of the communication. Hence we may conclude that the spirit was fully justified, from his mortal as well as his spiritual knowledge, in claming that there was no such thing as a Hebrew literature until after the Babylouish captivity. A rast array of facts alrealy adduced show that such was the fact.
The concluting statement of the spirit, that all religions sectarianism had arisen from the one mistake, that in all ages mankind had mistaken the communications of spirits for the voice of (iod. Sueh is undoubtedy the fact ; th the events of Modern Spiritualism, as they multiply and their true import is understood, will amply demonstrate.

"I will salute you, sir, by saying:-Fools always oppose the truth, and as the fools are in the majority, and those who are willing and trying to learn the truth in the minority, yon may get mothing but kicks for trying to enlighten mankind. It Wanso in my day, and, as a spirit, I see it is the same in yomrs. The Ifebrew languge is nothing more than the ancient (Chatdean tongue. I know this as ts spirit, and I knew it when here. The proof of this may be had by a comparison of ('hatdean and Hebrew alphabets; and in making such a comparison, to use one of their seriptare terms, the wayfaring man though a fool canmot er therein. The whote of the Jewish trat ditions in the Ohd Testanent were revised and plamed in their present shape, about B. (. Moses, that they regarded the Jews as the lineal deseendants of Abraham, or Ibrahm. But Moses was only a combination of two names, Moab and Sesostris; Mo meaning the man, and ab meaning the father, or Moab the father man; and the other, Sesostris, a king of a people, known in ancient times as Sethites. This seems to have been the derivation of the name Moses. These people looked upon the eombination of those names, and the traditions connected with them, as showing that they were lineal descendants from Ibrahm, or Abraham, as the name has been called by the Hebrews; so that, when Apollonius disputed with the learned Rabbies, when he rode into Jerusalem on an ass-and when he discoursed with them about their traditions, and defeated them in arguments, he had to fly from Jerusalem to Tarsus, where he became the celebrated Paul of Tarsus. My communication needs no other corroboration, than the penetration of a critical scholarship and clear sound sense, to determine the truth of what I have here set forth. My name is Frederich Heinrich Wilhelm Gesenius. [We will do what we can to corroborate your testimony by the facts of history.] I think wou are the man to do it well. You may rely upon my help in your efforts to get the truth before the world."

Refer to Chambers' Encyeloprdia for account of Gesenius.
It was a learned and justly distinguished Hebrew and Oriental scholar and author, whose spirit returned and gave that, all too brief, communication. He certainly testifies to that which he knows to be true, in that communication. His appreciation of the unwillingness of fools to seek for, or to receive the truth, is as just as it is lamentable. This learned spirit tells us that the Hebrew language is nothing more than the ancient Chaldean tongue, and that he knew it to be so while in the mortal life. Having been the author and publisher of a Hebrew and Chaldee Dietionary of the Old Testament, he must fully understand the relations of those languages to each other. He tells us that the proof of their common identity may be seen by a comparison of the Hebrew alphabet with the Chaklee alphabet. This is beyond all question the fact, as was fully admitted by the learned Thomas Astle, F. R. S., F. A. S., Keeper of the Records in the Tower of London, in his work, "The Origin and Progress of Writing," page 37. (Lond. 1803.) He says:
"The Chaldaic letters are derived from the ancient Hebrew, or אamaritan, wheh are the same or nearly so, with the old Phonician. The prophet Ezara is supposed to have adopted the old hebrew eharacters, for the more beatiful and commodious Chaldee, which are still in use."

Here is sumbent proof to show that the Chaldee, Hebrew, Sumaritan, and Phenieitu letters were so analagens, that their common origin was umboubted. The only question that remains to be determined is, whiel of these alphabets was the original or oldest of the four? It is true that Mr . Asthe thought that the Chaldatic letters were derived from the Ancient Hebrew and sumaritan; but he gives bo reason for that opinion. He does, however, state that which shows that his opinion was the reverse of correct, for he says:
"Though the ensmogony of the Chaldeans and Babylonians is deeply involved in fables, as is the eave with all ancient nat tions, yet they erine that they cultivated the serences in the most remote times."

Not only were the soiences of arithmetie and astronomy ealtivated by the Aneient Chaldeans but they carried them to such at state of perfection ats to astomish the learned of mondern times. It is mot pretemded that the aneiont Jews were a seinentilic or a literary peophe. That the Jews damed their descent from a C'haldean, Abraham of ['r, is as the spirit suggests, an ummistakable ahmission on their part that their written langutge, as well at their orgin ats at distinet nation, wats derived frem ('haddea. We, therefore, eonelabe, without wereing other proof, that the Wehew language is mothing more that the

tion of the Supreme Intelligence, Ibrahm, the etymology of which was I the one, and brahm the soul, or the one soul of all things, and that this was taught at the courts of Nebuchadnezzar, Belshazzar, Darius and C'yrus, by Zoroaster the Younger, who was called Daniel by the Jews. By these explanations of the spirit, we have the matter made plain that the Chaldeans were an older people than the Jews ; and that whatever was held in common by them, was derived by the latter from the fommer, and not by the former from the latter. This was the case with the Chaldean traditions, the Chaldean alphabet, and much of the Chaldean literature, which the Jews undoubtedly adopted, when they sought to establish a history and literature of their own.

We have another most curious fact explained, and that is, why the Book of Daniel varies, as between the version of it adopted by the Greek Church, and that adopted by the Romish Church. The first is the original Jewish version of the Chaldean Daniel, while the latter is the modified Jewish version of Ezra the Scribe. This, no doubt, is as consistent vith all the collateral facts as the other statements of this most intelligent and thoroughly informed spirit; but time will not admit of our looking the evidence of it up.

The etymology of the name Moses, as being made up of the two names Moab and Sesostris, or rather the first syllables of those two names is certainly very astounding, as it is so foreign to any heretofore suggested etymology of the name Moses. We can very well understand how the first syllable Mo would be derired from Moab, the supposed Father of the Moabites, as their vicinity to and relation with the land of Canaan, would intimately comect them with the Jews; but the ses which terminates the name, is in its derivation much more ohsemre, and hence the surprise with which we found the ifentification of Sesostris as a Sethite, instead of an Egyptian king, as we atways supposed him to be.

We will close this critique by briefly noticing what Gesenitus says in relation to Apollonius's visit to Jerusalem. It appears that the oflence that he, Apollonius, committed, was to demonstrate to the Jewish priests that he knew the fraudulent and deceptive nature of their su-called sated writings. It wis for this oflence lie was tried before Felin, Fentus and Agripha, as Patus or loolonus. As this wats a religions, and not a civil offence, and not prohibited by the Roman laws, he was finally discharged, when he no donbt fled to Tarsus, ats (iesenins states. We feel it proper to say, that during the most of the time we were engraged in making this investigation, we were mate sensible of the assistance of a spirit or spirits, who aecompanied us.

ST. CHRYSOSTOM.  A Christian Father.

"Good-DAy sm:-Are ecelesiastics and theologians of any benefit to hmmaty, whatever? This is the question that is uppermost in my mind to-day. After thousands of years of contention about the truth of their respectivesstems, whether Pagan, Jewish, Mohammedan or Christian, what real bemetit have those varions systems of theology conferred upon manKind? To me, all those systems blend together and amome to one thing, and this is misumbertond spirit-control. Mentand women of all nations of the world, have, thronghont all time, been mediums for spirit control, but their minds wereso confused with the superstitions of their day, that they conth not give what the eontrolling pirits really intended to give to the word throngh then. it, that the real Jesus was Apollonius of Tyana. This I know, and I will at some future time write a pamphlet, any one of the statements, of which, I will challenge the Christian Church to disprose. In it, I will prove conclusively, that there was no Jew named Jesus Christ, nor any such person as Jesus of Nazareth. The document that will prove this, is the Epistle sent to the Emperor Trajan by Potamon of Alexandria, which is in existence today, in the Ambrosian Library at Milan, but the Roman Catholic priesthood are far too emnning to let its existence be known. Why then, you may ask, do they preserveit? I will tell you why. Every pupil of the Roman Catholic Church that becomes a priest, is catrusted with these secrets of that chureh, and is sworn to keep them with strictest good faith, under the penalty of death if he betrays them. By such means they compel them to cling together. I come here to-day, only because I want to do something toward emancipating mortal man from superstition. I lived at the time the Christian religion first took shape, and helped to found it. I think I am a competent witness as to its merits, if it has any, and as to its demerits which are many. I passed to spirit-life in A. D. 406, and my name was Chrysostom.
Refer to the American Cyclopredia foraccount of Chrysostom.
Underlying all religions, the Spirit of Chrysostom tells us, was the fact of spirit control of meditmes, and then says, in terms not unworthy of his high reputation for eloquence : "Men and women of all mations of the world have, throughout all time, been mediums for spirit control, but their minds were so confused with the superstitions of their day, that they could not give what the controlling spirits really intended to give to the world through them. You will never obtain the unadulterated truth through medinms whose minds are prejudiced. If the nediums leaned toward crror, no matter how wise and truthful the controlling spirits were, their utterances becanie tinctured with their own thoughts, as the thoughts of the spirit flowed through their brains." In that paragraph we have the secret fully laid bare, of the canse of so much foolishness and error having been tanght to mankind in the names of revelation and religion. The sensitives through whom those revelations came were not less sensitive to mortal surroundings, conditions and tendencies, than to the spirit influences who sought, through their mediumship, to impart a knowledge of truths that were necessary for the growth and progress of hunanaty. Hence such a jumble of truth and error in every religions system that has fombl a foothold among men, the (hristim religion not exepted. This very experieneed spirit imparts a knowledge of a fact which seems to have been tox little ohserved and considered, by those who are soceking fo determine the laws governing the spirit control of mediumistic sensitives. It is, that the spirit eontrolling the physieal organism of an entranced medim, is compelled to make use of the brain of the medium to materialize, in words, the thoughts which they desire to convey to mortals; and, that in doing this, they find it impossible to entirely overome the effeets of the mental habits of thought to which the medimm's brain has been sulpjeeted. That this is a great and important truth which should be fully considered in estimating the value of any spirit communication, necels no demonst ration which common experience doss not aflord. With enlightened and murejudieed mediuns, through whom to work, the wise, good and loving epirits of earth's noblest, hest and greatest departed ones, would long since have banished eror from the earth, and truth would now have a thiversal reign among men. Let it be the especial object of those who desire fo promote so desirable a contition of lmman affairs, to encourate in every prosible way, the attaimment of "chlightened medimmship" in order that the salvation of hmmanty may be rendered possible. As if to give weight to this point of his testimony, the spirit says: " bat here and there, among the metimms of antiquity, there have been minds that were unbiased, and it hats been throngh thase medimms that you have raedver the gems of truth that emstitute your treasures of knowleglge torlay." ISy "mblissed" mediums, the spirit refers to such prophets, the midst of which they had lived, and thas wore rembered suseptilh to the more pertere influener of wise athe gome -pirits, who erer seck to enlighten mortals, and hand them from the deeply worn highways of erpor wer which they are journeying, anconsedons of the nearness of the better way into which ppirits of light and truth seek so persistemty anch lowingly to lead them. In spiritualishn at lanst, aw:y with all projulier, seltishmes and higotry, in urder that mambleqated tmat maty dwerend from the superasl realms of wishom and lowe.

ostom had to pass, the reader will see how vividly the returning spirit recalled them when he said: "In my mortal life all was confusion and strife, and the conflict was fierce and heated -not as to how much truth there was in religion-but upon such useless topies as the Trinity, Baptism, &e., which I call foolish by-paths." No one can read the accounts of Chresostom's earthly career, and not see that he eared little if anything about the theological dogmas which caused such fieree contentions among the prelates of the Catholic Christian Church, not only in the time of Chrysostom, but long after that time. We have seen with what reluctance he was forced to become the archbishop of Constantinople, and how, against the imperial power of Arcadins, and the corrupt influences of Eudoxia, he insisted on the practical observance of the moral precepts of the Christian theology, rather than upon the observance of the doctrinal speculations which were put forward as the more essential requirements of the Christian Catholic Church. It is not at all surprising, that his great benevolence, purity of life, unselfishness and love for humanity, should have been so little appreciated by the people of his time, who were so completely besotted by the effects of unknown centuries of spiritual ignorance, superstition and bigotry that the unusual virtues of Chrysostom should he regarded by them as eriminally antagonistic to their hoary and cherished prejudices. As a spirit, Chrysostom returns to earth the same great, fearless and steadfast friend of truth and humanity that he was when he was on earth, and points us to the great need of the hour, enlightened and unprejudieed mediumship.

How modestly and apologetically the spirit introduces his testimony in relation to the history of Jesus: and with what impressive asseveration he says: " Cpon all my hopes of at immortal life and the happiness to come from it, I will say that the real Jesus was Apollonius of Trama. This I know, and will at some future time, write a pamphlet, any one of the statements of whieh, I will challenge the Christian Church to disprove. In it I will prove conclusively that there was no Jew mamed Jesus Christ, nor any such person as Jesus of Nazareth." The spirit says he knows these things now, and leaves us to infer that he knew them when he was ereating such a commotion among the Christian prelates of the Eastern

Church in the latter part of the fourth century. But this is not all, for he tells us that he had knowledge of the Epistle sent to the emperor Trajan by Potamon of Alexandria, which eontains the absolute proof, to whieh he refers, that no such man as Jesus of Nazareth everexisted. More than this, he tells us that this Epistle of Potamon to Trajan, is in the Ambrosian Library at Milan, at this time, having eseaped destruction at the hands of the Christian priesthood. If this beso, it shows very phanly that the spirits, or some of them at least, know just where the proofs of the truth of their testimony may be found by mortals, and gives us reason to hope, if not to expect, that some day the truth in relation to all these ancient matters will become known to the world generally. In order that the reader may be able to judge of the probable correctness of this very positivestatement of the spirit of Chrysoston, I eite the following in relation to the Ambrosian library from the Encyelopedia Americana:
"This collection of books at Milan, f:mons in modern times, on aceonnt of the discoveries mate hy Angelo Maio, was opened to the publice, in 1699, by ('ardinal Frederick Borromeo, a relation of st. Charles Borromeo. The eardinal archbishop of Milam, a lower of knowledge, eamsed the books to be purchased by leamed men whom he sent through Earope, and evon Asia. At the opening of the libary, it contained about 37, , (R) printed books, and :thoit $1 \overline{5}, 001$ mathuseripts in all tanghages. It now comtains (i), 000 printed books (acoording to Millatt, 1 if000.) It was ealled the Ambrosian Library, in honor of 心. Ambrose, the patrons saint of Mitan. Angelo Mato, in his preface to the firarnments of the Ilian, which he ohtamed from the trasures of this libary, has shown how the eollention has been improwed, particularly by the addition of the linellian mamseripts."

It is to this precious repository of atheient literature that the spirit of C'hrysotom refers, as contataing the proof powitive that of the gexel and benewent ('hryenstom wonld insent stre') : statement matruthfully. It is uodombt es far cormet, as it was pmisible for the spirit to eommmateate the itformation themeh of hi- cotmmanic:ation, to make known the fater, that lontamon of Ahex:mbliat wrote an epistle to the emperor Trajan, in which hedisclosed facte, which showed that Apollonitus of Tyanta was the real author or founder of the Christian religion, and that Jesus of Nizareth was not. It is not a little significant, in this comection, that the whole book of Diogenes Laertius, in whieh he gave an account of the life and teachings of Potamon of Alexandria, has been suppressed intentionally, while the history of all the Greek Philosophers, down to the time of Potamon, by the same author, have been preserved intact. Indeed, but for the fact that Diogenes Laertius mentioned, in the preface to the Lives of the Philosophers, that he had devoted a special book to the treatment of Potamon and his philosophical teachings, we would not have been permitted to know that such a man ever lived. Notwithstanding the time when Potamon lived and Diogenes Laertius wrote concerning him has been concealed, and the impression has been promoted, that he lived late in the second century at the latest. If what the spirit of St. Chrysostom says is true, and it be a fact that Potamon wrote a letter to the emperor Trajan, who was himself a philosopher, he must have flourished in the reign of that learned and liberal emperor, which extended from A. D. 97 to 117. Now, it is a well known fact, that Potamon, in his Eelectic system of philosophy mainly followed the spiritual teachings of A pollonius of Tyana, and was in all probability a contemporary of the latter, who died at the adranced age of nearly a hundred years in the beginning of the reign of Trajan. It is therefore in the highest degree probable that Potamon did write just such an epistle to Trajan as Chrysostom says was extant in his time on earth, and which is still extant in the Ambrosian Library at Milan. As Diogenes Laertins closed his Lives of the Philosophers with that of Potamon of Alexandria, the probability is, that he was his contemporary, and lived and wrote in the early part of the second century,

If there are those who think that the spirit of Chrysostom would not have given that testimony asa returning spirit, let him or her remember the reason whieh the spirit, in closing, assigns for his sotestifying. "I come hereto-day," says he, "only because I want to do something towards emaneipating mortal man from superstition." Is it unnatural, that a spirit, after nearly fifteen hundred years in spirit life, who knew the evil effects of propagating religious errors, should seek to undo the evil to which he contributed when in the mortal form? Would it not be most unnatural and cruel if he did not seek to do so? The brevity of the commmication shows how inadequate the opportunity was, that he availed himself of, to do himsedf full justice. Let us all the more appreciate his eflort, and be grateful that undar the cireumstances he was enabled to give has so much instruetion.

ANANIAS. A Jewish High Priest,

"I salete you, sik:-I was born in Jernsalem, in the year 2 B. (., as it is now called. I was the highpriest of the Jews, from A. D. . 5 to A. D. (6). My name was Ananias. You will timd a brief account of my doings in the twenty-fourth chapter of Aets. I was one of the accusers of Apolloniths before Felix. The name ourht to have been Apollos, instead of Panl. The eharge that wats there set down against him wat, that he was a seditious and pestilent fellow. That was not the charge made against him at all. The eharge was that he had attempted to enter the Holy of Ho!ios, elaming the divine right todoso. When the priests amd propulate attempeded to restrath him, and keep him trom entering there, such was his pewer that he entered the Ifoly of Holies, and nome present could stop him. Wre called this power, the pawer of (iosl, but you peophe eall it medimmship). It was for this 1 acernsed himberore Felix. He had violated and protand the temple, and 1 are consed him of it. Asaspirit I mont confess that I wis more governed in this by feeling of jeatonsy than anything else. The Jews had sworn to destroy him, hat he hat proselyded a great momber of them to his fath. [What taith was that:] It was the fath of Christos or ('hrishat. Voum read of l'an or Apollos having been lat down from the walls of Damatatis, in matter what hiz or her nationality. This Apollos or . Dpoltonins, w:ts stmmoned hetore Felix and his wife Dra-illa, where he promened such extraordinary spirit manifestations, that as he [Felix] could not let him go, not having the power to do so, he did the next best thing for Apollos, and kept him in prison until his successor arrived, when he was sent to Rome, where lie was liberated. I am Ananias son of Nebedus. I am particular in telling you this, becanse there was another highpriest of the Jews about that time who was named Ananias."

Refer to Nouvelle Biographie Generale for account of A nanias.
The spirit who gave the above communication represents himself to have been the pontifical accuser of Apollonius before Felix, the procurator of Judea, and says the story of that event is to be found in the 24 th chapter of Acts. If this statement is true, and the facts are such as to demonstrate it to be so, then all pretence that there is anything especially divine about the alleged outgivings and teachings, of Jesus Christ and St. Paul, must fall to the ground and the whole religions system that has been erected thereon must also fall to the ground, never again to furnish materials for any similar structure of error and imposture. In this connection, the first point to be considered is, that outside of the Book of Aets, and the Pauline Epistles, there is no historical mention whatever of such a person as Paul, the Christian convert from Judaism. No one knows who wrote the Book of Acts, nor is it known just when it was written, but certainly not until long after the four Gospels, the Epistles and Revelations, and in all probability, not until the early part of the fourth century. The anthor of that book, whoever he was, does not refer to a single author or book as authority for any of the statements herein contained. Why this should have been so, if he desired to have the truth of his statements known, I cannot well conceive. I can however see very clearly why, if he was not recording the truth, he would write just as he has done, without giving a clue to the real nature of his production. Through the communication under review, we are enabled to show just what the Book of Acts is, and what purpose it was written for. That purpose was to conceal the fact, that the real anthor of the Pauline Epistles was no other person than Apollonius of Tyana, the Apostle of Essenianism to the Greeks, Romans and Jews, who was born just at the date fixed as the birth time of the founder of Christianity, and who for fully three quarters of a century from A. D. 25 to A. D. 100, devoted his life to propagating the doctrines, which in a modified and corrupted form were made the foundation of Orthodox Christian Eeclesiastieism. In the account of the accusation of lanl before Felix, which begins in ehspter twenty-four of Acts, to which we refer our readers, we find Paul represented to have been a Jew, and in his defence before Agrippat he is made to say that which will be found in Acts xxvi, 4-32.
such is the aceount of the haring alleged to have been given to Paul betore Agrippa, Bernice and Fentus. At that hearing it is not pretembed that Pand was reatired, aceording to the Roman law, ats previonsly adjuderd hy Felix, to meet his Jewish aceusers face to face, and to justify his actions in their presence. The whole aftair seems to have a star chamber one, and intended to provide an excuse for sending l'aul to Rome, where he would be safe from the murderous intentions of the Jews against him while he should remain in Cesarea. There can be little doubt that, at that one-sided learing before Agrippa and Festus, Pand used the same means, whatever they were, to gain their favor, that he had used when taken prisately before Felix, two years previonsly, to gain the good will and protection of the latter. It is, at least, vers evident, if Paul made any such defence of himself hefore Agrippa as that pat intolismonth in Acts xxvi, when there wat no one present to confront his mis-statemems, that he did not say one word of any of those things when he was contronted by his Jewish aceusers before Felix. [n order that the reater may see the contrast between the publie hearing before Felix and the private hoaring hefore Agrippa, we will here refer them to Actexxir, 1, 4-27.
Such is the story of the accusation hey the Jews, under the lead of Anamiat the high priest, arainat l'anl, Inefore Folix. A greater faree than the trial was, as it is deseribed in .lets, combl hardy b.e imarimed. That it is a bungling acomot of a rat occurrence we have reason to infer; but what that oemprrenee was is a question that is hey nomems senthed hy the marrative itself. Viow it in any light wo may say it is a hanglang attenpt to eonceal the real oecenreness, to which, whatever that w: "ןneration, is very elear. Lysias, the chicf captain, tomk him ont of the hamb of the atherities of the Jewish relimion, on the grombl that lec, J:anl, was : Roman amd not a dow ; and this claim Paul himself made in his defense before King Agrippaa claim that Agrippa regarded as conclusive. Now, if Paul had been a Jew, and had "gone about to profane the temple," the proper tribunal to have adjudged him, would have been the Jewish Sanhedrim or council, from before which body chief captain Lysias took him by force while he was being tried. In his defense before Felis while he is made to appear to have denied that he attempted to profane the temple, he in the next sentence confessed that he did so, according to the Jewish definition of what constituted such profanation. He says: "But this I confess unto thee (Felix), that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and the prophets." But he went further and admitted that he had been found by his accusers "purified in the temple." If, purified according to Jewish worship, he had been found in the temple, it would have constituted no ground of accusation against him ; but he claimed to be there, purified by some heretical observances, which was necessarily, in the eyes of the Jewish authorities, an offence against their religion, and which it was within their jurisdiction to try, to condemn and to punish for, and especially if the offender was, or had ever been a Jew. Again, in his hearing before Agrippa, he stated his defence to be that he had called upon the people of Jerusalem and all the coasts of Judea, "that they should repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance. For these causes the Jews caught me in the temple, and went about to kill me." That Paul had committed some great crime against the Jewish law, and one requiring death, there can be no doubt. The only question is, what was the crime? If we now turn to the communication of the spirit of Ananias the high priest, who was the official accuser of Paul, we will find the whole matter explained in a remarkable manner, and so conclusively as to leave no room to question the substantial truth of his statement, in regard to this whole affair.

In the first place the spirit tells us that the person whom he accused before Felix, was Apollonius, a Greek Essene, or Nazarite follower of Christos or Chrishna, and who was called A pollos instead of Panl. If this be true, it is very evident that the intention was toso change the name of the accused, in the Book of Acts, as to prevent the real person from being identified.

This will be shown to be the fact by all the circumstances as they are therein related. Anamias tells us that he did mot charge $A$ pollonius with being a seditious :and pestilent fellow, as alleged in Acts; but that he did charge him with profaning the temple, and committing, what was in the eyes of the Tews, the crime of all crimes, that of invading the Holy of Ifoiies in the temple. The truth of this statement is singularly sustalined by Philostratus's Life of A pollonius of Tyana, which lite wats largely devoted to making himself acquainted with all the secret doctrines and ceremonies of the various religions and mystical systens of his time. Philostratus relates that when at Ephesus, Apollonius sought admission to the mysteries of the Ephesian goddess, which was refused him ; and on his insisting upon his right to be admitted to them, his life was threatened by the Ephesian priests, so that to save himself he was obliged to flee by night, but before doing so he predicted a fearful pestilence that was to come over the Ephesians, when they would be glad to invoke his healing powers. As Apollonins predicted, the pestilenee did oceur, when he was sent for, and by his influence over the afflicted people, he soon banished the pestilence. On his again demanding initiation into the mysteries of the Ephesian temple, he was weleomed by the Ephesian priesthood to their most interior secrets. With the exception of the refusals at Ephesus and Jernsalem, Apollonius found no difliculty in being intiated in all the religions mysteries of his age, not exeepting the mysteries of Persia, India and Eivpt. It is, therefore, in the highest degree probable, that on Apollonins going to Jerusalem, and knowing he would tee rufused almission to the Ifoly of Holles, by the Jewish atuthorities, that he watehed an opportunity to ohtain a knowledge of the secerets of that saterdotal humbug-that fiuding such an opportunty he attempted to enter the Holy of Holies, in which attempt he was oppoed by those who were present, and that having overenme the resistants, he had entered the earefully eonealed phace, and discovered the fratud that was there conceated. The latugage of the charge which Ananias, through Tertullu*, made against latul was "Who hath gome ahout to profane the temple." This is just what opirit Anathiat tella us, that Apollomins, called Apollos, did at Jornsalem. Antaita admits that he was amimated more lye jealonsy than bey sectarian hatreat, in his deadly hostility to Apollonius ; and very naturally so, after such a display of "the power of God" as A pollonius had manifested, in foreing his way into the Holy of Holies. In this A pollonius certainly had profaned the temple; and, aceording to the Jewish law, merited death at the hands of the Sacerdotal power.

Ananias says that Apollonius had proselyted a great number of the Jews to his faith, and in reply to my question, stated distinctly that his faith was the faith of Christos or Crishna; and subsequently he adds: "He" A pollonius, "belonged to the Essenes." Here we have three points repeated, that had been testified to most positively by other spirits who had previously communicated. Ananias says that A pollonius was an Essene, this was undoubtedly the fact. Now on the other hand, Tertullus, when arraigning Paul before Felix, charged him with being a "ring leader of the Nazarenes." Who then were the Nazarenes? There was certainly never any seet of the followers of Jesus Christ who were called Nazarenes. In the Old Testament, there are but two mentions made of Nazarites, who were distinguished as a religious seet; and, in the New Testament no mention is made of them whatever, while it is certainly known that there was a sect of communistic asceties, who were known to be especially hated by the Jews, who were called Nazarites. It is also a fact, elearly ascertained, that the Nazarites, in their religious doctrines and ceremonial observances were very analogous to the Essenes, who seem to have swallowed up the older sect about the middle of the first century A. D. The worl Nazarite was manifestly changed to Nazarene, for the same purpose of concealment of the identity of the person alluded to, and in the same manner that A pollos was changed to Paulus. Now, Apollonius, heing an Essene and a ringleader of them, as was the fact, Tertullus no doubt, charged him with being a ringleader of the Nazarites, the name by which their opponents, the Jews, designated them. Now, no ohe has ever pretended that the Paul of Acts was a Nazarite or an Essene and such a charge against him would have been preposterous. The person accused before Felix was no doubt a ringleader of the Nazarites, as he does not appear to have made any denial of the charge. It is therefore rendered almost certain, even from the account in Acts itsolf, that the person there aecused, was A pollonius of Tyana, as Ananias, himself testifies positively was the case.

The spirit testifies to another point, in relation to the Essenes, which is undoubtedly correct; and that is that the Eisenes were, in no sense, a Jewish sect, as theological writers have supposed and clamed. They included in their number not only Jews, but the people of avery nation who adopted their rules and monles of life. But a still more impostant point is, that the Nazarites or Fsiones were followers of the ('hristos or Chrishnat of the Hindoo (iymmosophists, and not of Jesus Christ at all. 'This seems entirely eonsistent with what is known of their religisus doctrines and ceremonies. Like the Handoo Gymmosophic followers of Chrishat, they lived a commmmistic and aseetic life, and excluded from the people around then, who were not of their fath-like them the Essenes reverenced the sun, as the emblem of light and life, and like them they were leelievers in the life of the spirit after the death of the body, and sought spiritual development, and spirit communion through the cultivation, of spiritual mediumship. In a worl they were the Spiritualists of their time, and as such were at much hated and persecuted hy the priests of their day, as the spiritualists of to-day, are by the priests of every religion now in existence.

The Spirit says: " You read of Paul or Apollos, having been let down from the wall of Damasents in a hasket ; but that oecurved at Jeru-alem, and not at Damasems." 'The spirit refers to what is said in Aets ix $19,20,21,22,23,24$, $\mathbb{2} e$, to which we refer our readers.

Now there certamy was no occasion for this spirit, it he had a purpase to deceive to contradiet the alleqation that the escape of l'aul or Apollos by the ba-ket was wot correctly stated, as having taken place at bamasals, but that it orcurred at Jernsalem. If it was not true, or eould mot be shown to be so, it was risking the selt-impeadment of his veracity. but let us ser which is the most pobably correct. 1 bamaselt was mot a Judean city, and mot mathe the control of the dews at the time in question, and it is hardly Iikely the J.ass would hateremtemplated so dangerons an oflenere : the murber of satal for wo wher canse than that he preached doce trimed that were offorive to them. It is mot pretemed that lews with the bratal murder of ('hrint. The story is eotahly very improbable in any view we may take it. Now, at Jernat lem the situation of affairs was very different. The Jews were there the prevailing portion of the people, and they would naturally be greatly incensed at any such effort to proselyte the Jews ; besides it is admitted, in the same comnection, that Saul had to flee from Jerusalen to save his life, and he was assisted to do so by the brethren. [Who were the brethren ?] That was the especial desiguation of the Essenian or Nazarite brotherhood. But we are not obliged to confine our questioning of the correctness of the Damascus story to onjecture for the same Saul under the name of Paul tells the same story hinself in 2 Corinthians xi, 32,43 , as follows:
"In Damascus the governor under Aretas the king, kept the city of the Damascenes with a garrison desirous to apprehend me;
"And through a window in a basket was I let down by the wall, and escaped his hands."
Now there is something very contradictory in these two statements. In Acts it was the Jews who threatened the life of Saul, and to avoid whose vengeance he escaped in the manner stated, while in 2 Corinthians, it was the Syrian governor who was desirous to apprehend him, no doult for some civil offence, and not for a religious one at all. At any rate it is most improbable that either King Aretas or the governor of Syria were Jews, or governed by Jewish hostility to Saml. The natural conclusion is that the author of Acts has largely contributed to enhance a simple statement put into the mouth of Paul, in 2 Corinthians; or, on the other hand, that the two verses last quoted were afterwards interpolated in the 2 Corinthians epistle, in order to give some authority to Acts on that point. It does indeed look very much as it the latter conjecture is the true one; for those verses close chapter xi, and have no connection whatever with what precedes or follows them. Such is the muddle in which these Testament makers have involved the simplest and most easily ascertainable and reconcilable matters. To blunder constantly seems to be the ine vitable fate of all who seek to conceal the truth or to propagate falschood.

I now come to the consideration of the last point of the spirit testimony, which is in every way a most important disclosure ; and that is the secret of Paul's alleged mysterious influence over the minds of Felix, Festus and Agriplm, as well as over the minds of Drusilla and Bernice. Ananias tells us that when privately in the presence of these intluential rulers in Judea, he, Apollonius, produced such extraorlinary spirit manifestations that they were convincer of the truth of his teachings. As it was, Apoltonins, the ringleater of the Nazarites, who wrought these spiritualistic marvels, and not any sanl of Tarsus, or Jewish consert to Essenian Christosism, we need have no dilfienty in aceepting the spirit's statement as true, that Apollonins of Tyana, and Sun of Tarsus, afterwards eatled Patul, were one and the same historical pervonage.

Having thas fairly extablished the anthenticity and truthfuhness of the communication, we cannot too highly estimate the importance of the spirit testimony of Ananias to the fact, that the only ('lurist that was preached in Judea, from A. I). 85 to A. D. ( 00 , was the Christos of Apollonills. Now the ('bristos of Apollonits was not the Judeat ('hristos, and had no relation to any Jesth; Christ whaterer. It is beeanse the latter Christ is chamed loy Christian writers to be the Christ of the Fisunes, that bis iclentity with the Hindoo ('hrist, of the temple of Mathura, on the Jumbs, beromes an ineontrosertabe fact. Somatuy facte, all attested by the kestimony of the spirits of those who hat personal knowledge of them, and all (oncurring in womarkable at mamer in leating ns to one and the same condmion, remder it certain that the work has been held for deeades of erenturies in the meshes of religions deeeption of the most high-handed and iniguitents character.

Abstract

"I WILL SALUTE YOU BY SAYING:-I hope the truth will frimmphalthough it has many opponents. I was a warriornot a priest. I an known as Charles Martel. I was the grandfather of Charlemagne, and secretly-not openly-a materialist in my belief. I overcame the saracens in battle; for which I am heartily sorry as a spirit, for I believe that my victory over then kept Spiritualism back, for a thousand years. And what a singular army it was that I commanded! It was in three divisions, each of which lata to be kept entirely separated from the others, or they would have killed each other about their different religions beliefs. The iirst division was composed of troops drawn from what you tem Italy, Greece, and in fact from all the countries along the shores of the Mediterranean Sea. Their religion was the worship of Jupiter and their standard an imitation of your plow. The second division was drawn from Gaul and Germany, and they were worshippers of Christos. Their battlestandard bore the figure of a lamb. The third division came from Britan and Seandinaria and their standard had upon it a pine or some other evergreen tree. They were worshippers of Hesus. Those were the principal religions of my time ; and there was much similarity between the last two mentioned. The followers of Jupiter were distinguished for their multiplicity of gods, as every force in nature and every lmman passion had its presiding god or goddess. You may imagine the difficulty that I labored under to have to control these three hostile forees and to use them without allowing them to intermingle. Their religions hatred of each other would have overcame them much sooner than the enemy could have done it. The spirit who will follow me, will be Rudbod. We always fought agrinst each other when we happened to meet; but as spirits we are endleavoring to pave the way for a true knowledge of the past, in relation to the Christian Church. As I before said, as aspirit, I have one grand regret, and that is, that I ever stop)ped the advance of the Saracens. - Fraternally, Charles Martel.

Abstract

"I GREET you SIR :-It is strange that the Catholies of today claim me as having been one of the expounders of their doctrines. They are wide of their mark. I was a pricst of Christos. I was born in 680 A . D. and died abont 734 or 736 . I had three disciples. One of them went to Britain, another through Germany, and Swivert, the third, went to Friesland, with what success the king of that country (Radbod) has informed you. The other two met with falures. I had a good deal to do with influencing the zeal of the Christosite division of Charles Martel's army. In fact my position in that matter was similar to that of Peter the Hermit toward the Crusade in after years. I belonged to the religious faith which I called reformed Cbristosism, and, as it was taught by me, it was set forth in the books that were rejected at the Council of Nice. In that way I was at war, spiritually speaking, with the teachers of the original Christosism-my position being about the same toward them as Martin Luther's position was towards Catholicism. About the only remmants of my teachings now extant, as they were before they were changed and interpolated, are to be found among the Maronites of Mt. Lebanon. I believe, and in fact I may say that I know, that the books rejected at the Council of Nice were of more importance as truly defining Christosism, than those which were adopted. My original name was Winfred. It was afterwards changed to Boniface. I was a Briton. I was born in the vicinity of what is called Durham."

Refer to Encyclopedia Americana for account of St. Boniface. In the three communications of Charles Martel, Radbod, and St. Boniface, we have a concurrence of testimony such as is most rare on any point of ancient history: The first of the three spirits to communicate, Charles Martel, tells ins that the army he collected to drive back the satacen invaters of France, wat composed of three divisions, two of which, he stays, were made up respectively of the followers of Christos, and the worshippers of Hesas. And further, that there was much similarity between those two classes of religionists. If this is frue, then it is certainly a fact that as late as A. D. it1, when Charles Martel, died, the followers of Christos were not worshippers of Hesus, nor the worshippers of lesus the followers of Christos, and that these two classes of religionists of ( 'harles Martel's army were so hostile towards each other that if they had been allowed to eome together, they would have set to cutting eachother's throats. More than this it becomes very evident that Christianity ats it was established by the (ouncil of Nice, hatd no place in any of the commtries whence Charles Martel drew his forees to drive hatek the saracen Mahommedanism that advaneed upon France from Spain. This is absolutely eorroborated by the testimony of lanlbod, king of Friesland, who, through the spirit interpreter of his messatge, fells us that llesusism was the religion of his conatry as late as A. D. 700 , and that ('hbito-ism was not only not aceepted ly the Frisiths, but its introduction was rexisted even to a resort to arms, to prevent it. The spirit testifies ingon this point with surpriving elearness. Ite states that he drove out from Friesiand a disciphe of Bonificer, who was sent there to name of this disedple wats swivert, no doubt the swidert who is montioned ath having beens sent, or who went from britan to Friesand to consert the heathen wor-hippers of Itesus of that comutry. As Bonifuer gave the nameswivert, as well as the interpeter for Radmen, I infer that the corrert name wats swivert and not swidrert, or if the latter it was pronothe swisert. Radbed tells us that twallowed swivert to fully expomed his religions dextrines to him, and thas bexame convine dhat Swiverts religion, which the spirit calls. ('laristom-i-m, wat ouly an offloot of Hesusism, his own religion :and that of his comatramen. Ife tells us, however, that as a - pirit he latal dimonered that the reveran of this was true, and that

two religions differed and in what respects they agreed. It would not be a very difficult thing to surmise the truth in relation to these matters, but I prefer to wait for fuller spirit testimony upon those points. It is enough for our present purpose to know that Hesusism and Christosism were regarded by their followers as being not the same religions faith, however analogous they may have been, and that they were so far antagouistic to each other as to justify war to prevent the one religion from overcoming the other. It would seem to have been merely a conflict between priestly factions who were unwilling to blend their interests and thus have ended their bloody strife. Radbod tells us that upon his driving Swivert from his dominions, the latter went to Charles Martel, and enlisted him in his favor which led to a war, the object of which was the establishment in Friesland of the religion that was taught by Boniface.

I stop here to ask the reader's attention to two points of thls most interesting and valuable communication. Radbod tells us that Swivert was a disciple of Boniface, and does not make any allusion to either Boniface or Swivert being Roman Catholic Christians. Again he tells us that his war with Charles Martel was not about Roman Catholic Christianity, but about the religion of Boniface. There is a volume of meaning in those twice repeated references to the religion of Boniface. It is not pretended that Boniface consulted the Roman Christian Chureh about his scheme to convert the heathens of Germany, Friesland, Scandinavia, etc. nor that he had any authority from that Church to take the measures he did. It is very evident, therefore, that the movement of Boniface was one entirely independent of the Roman Catholic Church. As the reader will see in the biographical sketch of Boniface to which we refer when Boniface failed in converting the Frieslanders to his religion, he did not report his failure to the Roman Catholic authorities, nor did he complain to them of his treatment at the hands of Radbod. These facts all point in a very conclusive mamer to the fact that Boniface did not regarl himself as a Roman Catholic Christian at all, or as in any especial way related to the Orthodox Christian religion. Boniface went back from Friesland to England, where we are told he was an abbot, but as abbot of what, or by whom created we are not told.

We are told, however, that in 718, Boniface weat to Fome where Gregory II authorized him to preach the gosipel to all nations of Germang. It seems that after the visit to Rome he resumed his attempt to convert the Frieslanders to his religious views. It is not pretended that he preached to the Germons and Frieslatuders, Jesus Christ and him crueified, nor that he preached the paramount Christian authority of the Roman Chureh. It is, therefore, almost certain that Boniface was not a Rominn Catholic Christian, as he distinctly tells us he wats not. It is more than likely that be went to Rome in 718 to get the Roman ('hureh to use its influence with Charless Martel to induce the latter to support him in his scheme of proselytism in (iermany and Frieslamd. It is hardly likely he went to Rome to obtain a consent to a scheme which he had undertaken and carried on without any such consent or authorization; his object must have been one independent of Roman Catholic authority. This is rendered almost certain from the fact that two years later he was invited to Rome, where he wats made a hishop, we are told, by (iragory II, This may or may mot have heen the case, but if it was done, it was beramse the Roman Chureh sought in that way to appropriate the mis-ionary labors of Boniface among the worshippers of Hestus, $A$ s Boniface was invited to Rome, ant not cited to apmen there, it shows that as late ass A. D. $2 \boldsymbol{2}$, when Boniface was in his 4 :id year, the Roman Chur, h did not clam to have aty theological or eeclesiastieal anthority over Boniface and his missionary labors. This is a point to be specially remembered in combetion with what the spirit of boniface saysin relation to his religion and the nature and olgece of his proselyting seheme. In the meantime I will return to what the spirit of Radlood satid throurh his spirit interpreter in relation to Hesus and the religion that was tanght on his :unthorits. This is a matter of the greatest moment in eombeetion with the correct history of the religions state of Western Europe prior to the estahlishment of the Roman ('atholie 'Inristian religion in that portion of the workd.

He tells us that leathe wat not worshipped bey the Frisians combucted in his name. Ite sisys, he, Hesus, acted in ther same eapacity in relation to that religion that Apohlomins did in relation to the Jimion gexpels which he preached to the Gireeks.

In other words he was the introducer of the religion of Chrishna of the Hindoos among the barbarous people of Western and Northern Europe. Radbod, through his very intelligent spirit interpreter, tells us that he, Hesus, broug'at the same gospels to Marseilles, about B. C. 800. It would thus seem that many centuries before Chrishnaism or Christosism obtained a foothold in Grecee or Rome, the religion of the Hindoo Chrishma had been carried into Western Europe by way of Marseilles. Whether by a person by the name of Hesus or not, may admit of reasonable question. It is known that the Phœenicians, at a very early period, had established extensive commercial relations between the cities of Tyre and Sidon and India and the East, on the one hand, and between those cities and Western Europe, by way of Marseilles, on the other. It would appear from the spirit testimony of Radbod, that in the course of this commercial intercourse between India and Western Europe, some learned man among those Phœnician merchants, who being conversant with the languages of India and of the Europeam barbarians, conceived the idea of introducing among the latter the religion of the Bralamins of India, and with that view procured and conveyed to Marseilles the Hindoo gospels in relation to Chrishna. This religion was one in which the Sun, the great centre of light, heat and life, was the main object of veneration, as it had been of every religion that was ever formulated or taught, not excepting the most orthodox phases of Christianity. It was, without doubt, at the time of the introduction of the Hindoo gospels at Marseilles that Druidism took its rise as a theological organization, in as much as it is a historically known faet that Hesus was, with the Gallie Druids, especially a venerated character, and it was, no doubt, from the Gallic Druids that the worship of Hesus spread over Germany, Scandinavia, Friesland, Britain and Ireland. I am of the opinion, however, that Hesus was not so much a man, as a general name of the Phœnician worshippers for the Sun-god, by the Greeks called Bacchus, and by the Phœenicians called Ies, Yes, or Jes, which may have been modified by Greek transmission into Hesos, or by the Latin transmission into Hesus, as the name was written or spoken by the Gallic Druids. In the course of so many hundred years the belief may have become general that Hesus was a merchant or trader who abandoned his business to become the founder of the Druid worship of Hesos or Hesus. This is a point, however, that isofno material importance in this connection. It is enough to know that the Ifesinsism of the (atllie Drnids was essentially an offliont of the Oriental religions of India and Phenicia, in which the Sun, under the persomifications of ' 'hrishma and Ies, or Jes, was the central object of veneration. But the spirit did not stop, there, hat says: "The look from which he ' $H$ esur)' taught was called Arjouna after Arjm, the disciple of Christos." He then adds: "As the name of the Patuline Epistles was given to the writinges of Apollonins, so they gave the mame of Hesus to similar writings which were given to his disciples and carricd all over Northern Europe." Whether this is true or not as to the facts, it is suffieient for us to have so much reason to believe that such was the general belief in relation to the origin and nature of the worship of Hesus, in the time of Radbod.

It is hardly likely that such a history of Hesusism prevailed at that time without cither a more or less relable historical or traditionary basis existed for it. Indeed, it is wonderfully in accord with all historical probabsility. If Hestrisin had been so long eatablished in Western and Northern burope as fifteen hundred years, under the management of the Druids, at the time of Iadberl, it was natural that this Frisian king should have regariend it an moth ohder than the Christosi-m whieh found its way there, alll just as matural that as a spirit he shouhd have found that Hesusisu sprang from ('hristosism, in as murh as it was certanly sereral hamdred years younger than the Brahmanical religion of Chrishatism, from which it was almost eertanly derived. It hatd long leen known that there were remarkable analories betwern the religions of the Bralnmins and the Gallie and C'eltie Druids, but why this was se has never been explaned pmblely, in modern times, matil returningspirits throughthismedium, made thest :istomudingly valathle diselosures in mation to these long low facts. Monern writers have leen ked to comelade that the Druids had no written works and that they tanght their religion oratly and traditionally only. In the light of theo ₹pirit ustimonies, it is ahmost eertain that this is a mistake, Druid shomes were almost motatuly establizhed in (iank, Britain and Jedand, and were flourishing as late as the eighth emtury, :ath ferhaps later. 'That Sl. F'atriek wasa Druid, and hiswehool at Armagh a Druid school, is a fact testified to by the spirit of St. Patrick himself. We cannot dwell at greater length upon this telling anti-Christian testimony of Radbod, king of Friesland, and will proceed to the still more important testimony of St. Boniface, as he has been called, in relation to the same subjects of that period of the world's history.
The spirit Boniface opens his testimony by expressing his surprise that the Catholies of to-day should claim him as having been one of the expounders of their doctrines; and then says: "I was a priest of Christos." At what place, he does not tell us. But we may infer, at some place on the continent of Europe, as he speaks of having sent one of his three disciples to Britain. It is not pretended that Winfred, or Boniface, attempted to convert the heathens of Britain to his theological views, nor is it pretended that he made any movement of a proselyting character until after he had left his native country. This is all the more strange, if after leaving that country, he felt it necessary tosend a disciple to that country to propagate his views and doctrines. The great probability is that he was educated in Brittany, France, where there were numerous schools, and then decided to go out and preach what, as a spirit, he calls reformed Christosism. Prior to this time he may have leaned to the Hesusism of the Druids, but meeting with evidence in his course of studies of the fact that Hesusism was but a corrupt or altered Christosism, as the spirit of Radbod testifies he knows to have been the fact, he decided to reinstate Christosism in something like its original purity. The probable correctness of this conjecture is greatly strengthened from the fact that the Christosism of Apollonius of Tyana, came into contact with the Hesusism of the Gallic Druids, in what now constitutes the northern provinces of France. It was in the schools of that part of Gaul where such bitter and unrelenting controversies took place in relation to theological subjects in the earlier years of Christianity in that country. The spirit names only one of the three disciples of his theological teachings, and that one he calls Swivert, who went to Friesland. It is much to be regretted that he did not mention the other two by name, as it would have enabled me more fully to have corroborated the communication.

It seems that all three of those pioneers, in teaching the Christosism of Boniface, failed, notonly as these spirits testify, but as history shows. Why they fatled, is stated by the spirit of Radbod, when he said that Swiwert eonvinced him that the ('hristoxism of Boniface was but a later and corrupt version of the Druditical Hesusism which prevailed in his dominions. These followers of Hesins were unwilling that their ancient religion should be superseded by a gounger version of the same religions doct rines.

Here the spirit of Boniface lets us have a glimpse at a porion of history that has been enveloped by very thick fors. It is nothing less than to show us very clearly the relations whieh Charles Martel bore to the contending religious controversies of his time. Spirit Boniface says: "I hada good deal to do with intluencing the zeal of the Christosite division of Charlos Martel's army. In fact my position in that matter was similar to that of Peter the Hermit toward the crusade in after years." Boniface, who wats a man of great foresight and ability, no doubt saw with dread the resist lese adrance of the saracens, and the imperial aseendaney of the ('resent over the people of Western Europe, and used all his intlumee and energy to arouse a spirit of detemined resi-tance among the rmde and eonnaratively ighorant mases of Western Europe, and no doubt did enable Charios Marte to gather that heterogeneous army, with which be met the Samens on the platins of Poitiers amd made it prssible for (bhristianity toplant itself permanemty in Western Europe. It was fior these sorviees ber doubt that lanifaceobtained the fricondship and support of ' 'harles Martel, the saviour of Europe from Moh:mmedan sway.

But let us now eome to the spirit's testimony in regard to the religious doctrines he tatugh. He sugs: "I belomged to the religions fath which I ealled Reformed ('hristosism, amh, as it was tanght by me, it was set forth in the begks that were rejected at the Council of Niee. In that way I was at war, spiritually speaking, with the teachers of the original Christ osism-my position being about the same toward them that Martin Luther's poxition was toward ('atholicism." If this is trat then the real history of Bomifaer has beon low, of dewignelly comeraled. Why is it mot tame? It the spirit of Boniface inflomeed that communisation, its truthtuthes is hardly to be dostated. What eresel restan is theme todoubt that he inthemed it? It is preposteronse to pretend that it is of mortal insention. The mortal does not lisw who conk in that remarkable manner have successfially personated that earnest and able religious leader. It is equally impossible to believe that any other spirit could have untruthfully personated the "apostle of Gemany." We have the strongest possible reason to believe that Boniface was not a Roman Catholic Christian. Indeed, he tells us that he was not, but an active and zealous opponent of its teachings. The Roman Catholic Church has had its revenge on Boniface for his opposition to it, for they have not only suppressed all trace of his teachings, but have represented him to have entertained theological views the very opposite of those he did entertain, and unscrupulously appropriated the credit of his labors.

The spirit then throws a blaze of light on the Orthodox Christian doings of the Council of Nice. Bonifuce tells us that he knows "that the books rejected at the Council of Nice, were of more importance, as truly defining Christosism, than those which were adopted." What were those rejected books? Why were they rejected? In what did they differ from the books adopted? Who roted their rejection? These and scores of other questions that force themselves upon us, the Orthodox Christian Church has never answered, nor have they allowed Boniface or any other person, who adhered to them to answer any one of them. If those rejected books could be reproduced, (as they may be if the power of spirits continues to increase as it has done) the religious fraud called Orthodox Christianity would soon be a thing of the past never again to be repeated in any other form. Boniface thinks there may be some fragments of his teachings, as a priest of Christos, still extant, but if so, they will be found among the Maronite Christians of Mt. Lebanon. This is most probably the fact for the Maronites are the nearest approach to the Essenian Christosites of the first century that are anywhere to be found on earth at the present time.

Here must close these comments. The rastness of the import of the testimonies of Charles Martel, Radbod and Boniface, it is impossible to over-estimate. They furnish in themselves the materials for a special essay of considerable extent. We cammot more than skim orer the ground that they open to the view, and must leave elaboration for a more fitting opportunity.

LUCIUS OF CYRENE.

The Secretary of Damis or Demas, the St. Peter of the New Testament.

"Peace be witif you:-My name, in the mortal life was Lucius of Cyrene. I was the disciple of Apollonins and one of the greatest propagators of the Apollomian Christosite religion. I had three diflerent names, owing to the diflerent Janguages in which it was written-Lacins, Lucas and Luke. I was the writer or transeriber of the Life of Apollonius, as dictated by Damis or Demats. It was I, who helped him to write all those epistles in the New Covenant. The four (iospels were translated from the sanserit by $A$ pollonius, and they were sent out ly him in four diferent linguage-the (ireck, the Roman, the Amenian, and the syrac Hebrace. The Apocalype was written hy Apollonims himself. Theother books were in the form they were dictated to me by Damis and as transeribed hy me. I eopied then in the ('appadocian tongne, which was a mixture of (ireek and Syriac. I am referred to at first ats Lucins of 'greme, in Aets xiii, 1. The serond plare I am refermed to is, in Rom. xvi, oll. I am also referrel to in Col. iv, 13, as, "Luke the belowed physician," and Phil. verse 24, at lanas. I have been ealled by those different mames. It was Lacian the satirist who afterwats paced these thinge in their pesent shape. Lucian and Mareion were the st. Luke aml st. Mark of the Christian Seriptures. Apoltonims was deitied by the Romans and his stathe wats set mp in the Tomple of Jupiter. That is all I ean now say: 1 thank you for the privilege."
 Literature for aceonm of Lucius of ('yrene.
I- it not a most signiticant faet that, if there was: 1 cotablished ('hristian Chureh from the erat callacl the Apmother ane, that nothins eertain shonld be known he the diterk and lionan fathers of that charelt about athy of the perenhe who were sail by them to have ham athand in fommbine that elmeren; and is it mot :an erpalty significant fare that therere is mot a single version of what is called the New Testament that is older than the latter half of the fourth or the beginning of the fifth century? If there were older versions of it, what have become of them? That the oldest versions now extant were derived from an earlier source is evident, but how nearly they follow the older versions from which they were derived we may never know, unless the spirits of the men who, so many centuries ago, produced the latter will be able, as returning spirits through some medium or mediums to reproduce them. Through this means, as these spirit testimonies very plainly show, such spirits have found the means to throw such a flood of light upon that which remains of the original Scriptures, Jewish as well as Christian, that little will be unexplained in the end. Until the communication of Lucius of Cyrene, was given we had not been permitted to know just what the Memoirs of the Life of Apollonins of Tyana were, which came into the hands of Julia Domna, the wife of Septimus Severus, and which Philostratus used so extensively in writing his Life of Apollonius of Tyina.

But in view of what this spirit says, in relation to the matter, it would seem that those Memoirs of Apollonius were written by Damis, after he was ordained or consecrated by A pollonius as "the rock" upon which he was to build his church. What that life of A pollonius by Damis was, we cannot know, for even those portions of it which Philostratus used, have not been permitted to come down to us. While there are evidences of suppressions more or less considerable in extent, all through the work, there is a gap of twenty years, in Philostratus's Life of Apollonius, which covers the part of it during which he was most active and acquired most of his great renown as a prophet, preacher, and worker of miracles. And most significant of all, this gap covers nearly the whole of what was called the period of the teachings of Jesus Christ, which the Apostles continued.

Had the Memoirs of the Life of Apollonius by Damis, and the biography of Apollonius by Philostratus been permitted to come down to us as they were written, there would not be a vestige of the Christian superstition in existence to-day. The one has been entirely destroyed or suppressed, and the other mutilated in the most diabolical manmer, in order to hold the human mind in the thrall of a delusion that has prevented mankind from rising above the phate of heartless selfi-hness, despairing ignorance, grovelling debasement and inhuman tyramy. Despite it all, the sun of truth is rising from lehind these clouds of mental and moral night, and its all conquering rays are dissipating them as the mists of a June moming hefore the rays of the summer sun. The reader may wonder why these communications are so hrief and heave so much mexplained that the world needs to know. As we have pemed these testimonies, ats they have fallen from the lips of the medium, we have had an almost irresistible desire to question the spirit witnesses, in our eagerness to know all that is to be known concerning these matters, but we have been kept too busy as an amanuensis to lave time to frame intelligible questions, and in nearly every instance the power of the controlling spirit has been exhausted. We have, however, been in a great measure eompensated for the delay, hy receiving through subsequent spirit witnesses the information we so much desired, and in a more complete and satisfactory manner than if ealled out liy questioning of the spirits as to the matters about which we wanted to know.

From what the spirit of Lueins says, we may readily understand why there should be somuth eonfusion of opinion among erities concerning the writings comprised in the New Testament, and especially eoncerning the epistles. When they were written, to whom they were written, why they were written, and what they mean, no Christian writer seems to have any certain knowledge of. Why? Becanse they have started out with the fatal error of supposing them to be what they are not, and persistently close their eyes, rars and maderstanding againat exerything that will not square with their erromeons a-atmptions. How long they will be able to persevere in this folly we may mot certanly know ; but not long, unless the (anemits of truth shouk prove stronger than the friends of trath who ar* identitied with it. We have an abiding fath this will meveragan be.

Lateins tells us that Apollonins translated his four gropels from thes samerit, and remberd them in form langaters, ferels. Romath, Armenian and Syrimeldmatie. If thiv is trae, then it is very vertain that these tramslated samserit gomplo were the oriminals from which the (iospels of Sit. Mathew, Sit. Mark, sit ample evidence to establish his identity. He was the contemporary of A pollonius and Damis, their friend and follower, and indeed a most intimate and trusted friend of those founders of Christosism at the very time when it is admitted that Christianity first took its rise among the Greeks and Romans. Unless some sufficient reason to question the authenticity of this commmination can be given, we certainly have good ground to conclude that what the spirit says is true. The communication is in remarkable accord with the testimony given concerning himself and his labors, by Apollonius and also with all the other testimonies of spirits who have testified to events of that period.

The spirit says, "The Apocalypse was written by Apollonius himself." What Apollonius said upon that point was, that while on the Isle of Patmos, where ne went to seclude himself from the world for a time, he was entranced, and his hand was made to write that production by some ancient oriental spirit. We therefore understand Lucius to mean that the Apocalypse was written through Apollonius.

We may infer from what the spirit says, that Damis, after he became the Petra, or rock on which rested the system called by these spirit witnesses "Apollonian Christosism," had a version of the New Testament as it then was, rendered into the Cappadocian tongue, by Lucius of Cyrene, and it is not at all unlikely that it was this version which has been alluded to as the Gospel of Peter, which, as is suppossed, came into the hands of Marcion and Lucian, or St. Mark and St. Luke, as the Christians have designated the Gnostic Heretic and heathen Satirist. It must not be lost sight of that one and the same person is meant under the several designations of Damis, Petra or Peter, and Timothens, the latter name being equivalent to master or patriarch. It is the fact oft repeated, that one and the same person has been designated by several diflerent names, and rarely by the real one, in the New Testanent, that has thrown that whole compilation into inextricable confusion. If this is not what was designed by those who helped to do it, it is singular how they could have so completely eflected it.

The spirit very clearly shows that he was not the Evangelist Luke, or the Luke who wrote the book "Acts of the A postles," and in this his statement is confirmed by Christian critics. How long will it be lefore every barrier will be swept away betore it? Not long we opine.

SEVERUS.  Patriarch of Antioch.

"I ghent you, sir, by sayixg:-Our efforts are directed towards such points as we think will be likely to attract attention and canse thought. In this mortal life I bore the name of Severus. I was the founder of a sect of Monophysites-a foolish sect, continually in my time and afterwards contending about the Trinity. We were then trying to shape the Christian religion as it now stands. The greatest difliculty that I found at Antioch was when we undertook to make Hesms C'hristos a Jew. When we taught that, we were frequently mocked and ridiculerl. Even the most ignorant people of those times had their traditions and it wats diflicult to make them relinguish the feachings of their forefathers. When in the mortal form I never thought that this C'hristian system would gain the foothold it has to-day: I used it in my earth litesimply heeause I thonght it was better than the religions of the numerons grods that were worshiped by the people. There wats one Jacob, a Syrian, who did much more than myself to plate the Monophysites in power ; but they lost all they had gainel in a short tine attor his death. One Felix II, a popeor bishop, 1 thank, finally exter:nimated them. Ame so ended, when my sect conded, my connection as a spirit with this mortal plane. Since that time 1 have never returned to this earth until yon see me here to-fay. Nyself and all my followers now belong to the sohool of lototims in the spirit life. We are spiritualisto in this way: Wir dor not think spirits have any risht to medde in mortal allairs for evil, and try to interept all meddling spirits Whobring nothiner but (onfusion to carth's perphe; ;and inthis way we hope to helpyon. There is mothing worse for mortals than babhling and fooli-h spirits. That all of us may he hifesed with the smalight of trmb is my greatest hone and most *armest destre."

to come down to us concerning these interesting subjects. Read by the light thrown upon them by the foregoing communication, we can well understand why so little has been permitted to reach us concerning Severus and his times. It is questionable whether Severus could properly claim to be the founder of the doctrine of Monophysites, as he says he was. It is, however, very certain that he was the founder of that phase of Monophysitism which refused all toleration of the orthodox Christian doctrine. It is an important point of the testimony of Spirit Severus when he tells us that, at Antioch, as late as A. D. 513 and perhaps as late as 538 that the idea of Hesus Christos being a Jew was ridiculed by the Syrian descendants of the Phœenicians who were worshippers of IES or JES, the sun god. This was no doubt the fact, and it shows that such a thing as orthodox Christianity had not at that late date been firmly established. The pretence that it had prevailed five hundred years earlier i.s wholly untenable.

AGABUS.

A Supposed Christian Prophet.

"I salute you, sir :-My name was Agabus. In Acts xi, 27,28 , you have an account of me as fortelling a fanine in Judiea. In reading that chapter you are lead to suppose that I cante from Jerusalem, which was not the ease. I was an Armenian and a proselyte to the doetrines of Apollonius the Cappadocian. I was won to that fath through the logic or tetchings of Damis or Demas. Our meetings in those days were simply for the bretiren to give way to the spirit ; and you will notice that after all those meetings, some who attended were sent in one direction and some in another, but in all cases the most powerful mediums were sent to the most skeptical people. In this laid the success of the Apollonian reigion. A pollonius, as well as Damis and his other disciples knew that snceess was to be wont by evidence. Apollonius learned this from the Gimmosophists of Indiat and for that reason, in the first and second centuries, they used medimms to popagate their system. The followers of the religion of A pollonius, treating of Christos or the Indian Christ, was made up) of nearly all the nations that he could then reach, and in fact had very little to do with the Jews, who are made to appear, hy the Christian books, to have been the priseipal wherents of that religion. The tiet is that the most powerfin propagators of it were direeks and Romans: and that is why you find most of the epistles written in (ireck or Latin. These two nations and those tributary to them were the most powerful alherents of the ('hristosite Apollonian system. You will notice that I do not call any of these movements religions, but only systems, because there can be no religion, as I have found out as a spirit, hat that which is founded on the scientific book of mature. This intea of a descent of God among men, or of men being god-made, is something that all homanity will have to get riol of, and the sonner they do it the better. I passed to spirit life in about A. D. $97 . "$

Agabus deemed it unnecessary to say more than that he was the person mentioned in Acts $x i, 27,2 s$, in order to identity himself. He does not say whether lie did or did not make the prediction, eoncerning the famine therein mentioned, but he expresely denies that he went down from Jerusalem to Antioch at that time. He tells us he was an Armenian, and had lown converted, not to faith in Jesus ('larist, but to fatith in the dostrines of Apollonins the ('appadocian, and this through the logic of Damis or Demas. The spirit leaces us to infer that at that time a meeting of ('hristosite modimme was held at Antionh Which he as a medimm attended, and that he did then and there make a predietion or rather his spirit eontere, called the "Holy (ibost" in Acts xxi, and the "thespirit" in Aets xi, not molike that mentioned. It would sem that thesermedimes meetings ware not unfrugent :and were held to assign the work of proselyting to each of those who were entrusted with the puhlic work of demonstrating the power of "the spirit" or "Holy ( fhest" through them. From the fant that Agrabus is spectialty montioned among the medimme whe :sezembled in Antion (ahout A. D). to we may infor that he excelled ats a medimm for propheres. The -pirit tery wwll stys that it wats intherextensive use made of medimm-hip, inthe first and serond sage established in the Roman world. It was only after A pollonius returned from his visit to the Gynınosophist followers of Christos in India that he set about founding the system which the Christian hierarchy and Church fraudulently appropriated in the fourth century, as something that specially belonged to them, and not to Apollonius, the real creator of that system.

Agabus certainly states what was the fact when he says that the Jews were least of all concerned with the Christosism from which Christianity was borrowed or stolen. We prefer to say stolen, because the efforts which have been made by the Christian Church to deprive Apollonius of the credit of his theological teachings, show that the appropriation of his labors was dishonest and criminal from the outset. Agabus has manifestly learned the folly of religion as a means to spirit happiness; and we fully agree with him that the idea of a god descending among men, or of any man being god-made must be abandoned, aud the sooner it is done the better for all humanity.

JOHN BIDDLE.

An English Theologian.

Abstract

"Good DAy, SIR :-During my mortal life I was a Socinian writer. My nume was John Biddle. I was many times in jail for denying the truth of the Trinity; and I timally died in - jail, of what is termed jail fever, and all because I could not raise one hundred pounds sterling. To convey to your mind any idea of the indignation I feel at the way I was treated by the Christians would be utterly impossible. They knew; as did President Bradshaw, my most bitter opponent, that what I asserted was the truth. My doctrines were founded upon the same facts that your Modern Spiritualism rests upon, with this exception that what you call spirits, I called angels. All this drew upon me the hatred and malice of the priests of my time, who petitioned parliament and the king to have my teachings suppressed. My writings were burned. But since I entered spirit life I gathered around me a fore of congenial spirits, and if I donot snceed in making my mark upon the C'hristian ('hurch before long, it will not be because I have not tried hard enough to do it. I would say to you, foster skepticism wherever you can, for it is the axe that will cut down the tree of superstition. I am sorry to see your ditficulties, sir, and that you find so few helpers in your battle for truth. I was thrown into prison in May, and died there in September I662."

Refer to Biographie Universelle for account of John Biddle.
Who ean say how far the Spirit of John Biddle has not had a hand in setting on foot and maintaining the movement known as Modern Spiritualism. He explains how it was that at the risk of his life, and all that a man bohts dear, he defied the power of the priestly, bigoted Christians of his time and denounced doctrines of the Holy Trinity as untrue. He satys his doctrines were founded on the same facts which support Modern Spiritualism, to wit: The spirit life, spirit seturn, and spirit communion with mortals, with the exception that he regarded those returning spirits as angels. Under such inspiration he was made bold to defy the whole power of the English priesthood. There is no mention of Biddle having been contined, at the time of his death for the non-payment of one hamderd pounds sterling. With that exception the commanication is in remarkable aceord with what has been recorded eoncerning him. It is a demonstrated faet, that by their perseentions in the past, the Christian ('hmehes, ('atheolic and Protestant, have been filling the spirit work with enemies who will set see the utter over throw of the power that they have so cruelly and unserupulonsly labored to perpetuate.

ST. FRANCIS DE SALES.

A Bishop and Priest of Geneva.

"I greet you Sir :-When here, I never hesitated to preach the truth in the presence of heretics. I wish to ask you how you, a small body of people and in so small a minority, expect, successfully, to beard the powerful Catholic Church? What does it matter, even if you know the truth in relation to Apollonius of Tyana, or in regard to Crishna Hesus, or the other gods? You forget that all the valuable manuscripts concerning them are in possession of our church. You will need proof to show that your standpoint is correct; and like many of the Protestant Churches (all of which are nothing more than bastard churches) it will appear that it has nothing more to support it but the sayings and doings of a techerous monk. You may know, when I tried to convert the famous Theodore Beza, on his death bed, to the Catholic faith, that I was in earnest abont propagating my religion when here, and I am yet so in spirit life. The priests of my church have hidden their tracks well, and it will cost an immense outlay of time and money to prove that these apostate spirits have been communicating to you the truth. You cannot do it, and I challenge you to the trial."

By way of consolation to this spirit, we assured him that he was widely mistaken in supposing, that in nearly every instance, the testimony of those apostate spirits had not already been proven true, and that his own spirit admissions would furnish the best possible proof of their truthfulness. Even this bigoted and admitted enemy of truth found himself incapable of falsifying in our presence, knowing, as he did, that the information we had received and disclosed, to be what he desired most to conceal from the world.

Kefer to McClintock and Strong's Cyclopzedia of Theologieal Literature for account of St. Fancis de Sales.

The spirit of St. Francis de Sales could in no mamer have more pointedly identified himself than by giving an account of hisefforts to win the aged Beza to the Roman Catholic Chureh. St. Francis evidently considered that partieular service as being the most meritorious of his zealous and certainly most remarkable efforts on behalf of his religion. Even he could not deny the eorrectness of the spirit information whieh had been given to us in relation to Apollonius of Tyana, the (iod Christos of the IIindoos, and the God Hesns of the fiallie Druids. His lame attempt to take comfort from the fact that so muld of evidence in support of those things had been destroyed, or was in the prisate keeping of the Ronam (hureh, showed most elearly what a desperatestrait hats been foreed upon the spirit defenters of Christianity by these remarkable spirit testimonies. I will only add that the mame of this spirit was given hy the guide of the medium, or we would never have known from what spirit it came.
[The character, purposes and unserupulous mature of St. Francis de sales as an individual, are fully set forth in his characteristie commanieation. The admissions he makes as to the priestis of his church covering their tracks well is true to life, also to the fact that the valuable manuseripts bearing upon the true history of so-called Christianity are in the possession of the Chureh, except what have been destroyed. This Spirit is a fair representative of the Church at large-Complaber.

SILAS OR SILVANUS.

A Disciple, not of Jesus, but of Apollonius of Tyana

[^7]those vices that are named in the other epistles. The reason for this is very simple when understood. It was because the Thessalonians were Chrestus-Christosites, Thessalonica being the capital of ancient Macedonia, and he, Apollonius, had made a few converts there. He had to write to them very kindly, fearing that they would go back to their old teacher, Chrestus. The propagation of the Apollonian system of Christosism was opposed by the Greek Promethean system, and by the teachings of Chrestus concerning Christos; and also by an Ethiopian version, of which you will hear more hereafter, from the spirits. I think I have said all that can be of benefit or that I can now recall this morning. Yours for the truth, Silvanus, surnamed Silas.

Refer to McClintock and Strong's Cyclopædia of Ecclesiastical Literature for account of Silas.
We refer our readers to the passages in which Silas or Sitvanus is mentioned in the New Testament in Acts xv, 20-41.

This passage of Acts shows very clearly, that Silas, whose real name was Silvanus, was the chosen and, no doubt, intimate, if not the most intimate friend of Paul, whose real name it appears was Apollonius. The next passage we refer to is A cts xvi, 16 , where we read:
"And it came to pass as we went to prayer, a certain damsel possessed with a spirit of divination, met us, which brought her masters much gain by soothsaying.
"The same followed Paul and us, and cried, saying, these men are the servants of the most high Gork, which show unto us the way of salvation.
"And this did she many days. But Paul being grieved turned and said to the spirit, I command thee in the name of Jesus Christ to come out of her. And he came out the same hour.
"And when her masters saw that the hope of their gains were gone, they catught Paul and Silas, and drew them into the market-place to the rulers.
"And brought them to the magistrates saying, These men being Jews, do exceedingly trouble our eity." &e. &e.

If this story has any truth about it, it appears very evillent that, whoever Paul was, he did not profess or want to be known as the "The servant of the most high God" who showed the way of salvation to the inhabitants of Thyatira, and especially to Lydia the seller of purple. But what in the mane of common sense could have made Patul so angry at that diviniug spirit? If Paul was what the Christian priesthood have insisted he was,
"a servant of the most high God," that divining spirit was only divining the truth, and Pablonght to have had the honesty to own up to his truthfulness. Bat instead of doing that, he jerks this truthful spirit out of his chosenmerium. It does look as if Panl, ats he is represented to have heen in Acts, was a "verg bad" Christian "egg," view him which way we will. In Acts xif, e5, we are toh that silats was thrown into prison with Banl, and we read verse 26 :
"And at midnight Paul and Silas prayed, and sang praises unto (iod : and the prisoners heard them.
"And suddenly there was a great earthouake, so that the foundations of the prison were shaken : and inmediately all the doors were opened, and every one's bonds were lonsed.
"And the keeper of the prison awaking out of his sheep, and seeing the prison doors open, he drew his sword, and would have killed himself, supposing the prisoners had been fled.
"But Paul eried with a loud voice, saying, Do thyself no harm: for we are all here.
"Then he called for a light, and sprang in, and came trembling, and fell down before I'alland silas.
"And brought them out, and said, Sirs, what must I do to be saved?
"And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house."

Now it strikes us that Paul amd silasidd not reward the Lord Jesus Christ as "the mont high (iod" ; fire if they hand they would not have professed to be the survant of the former and denied that they were the servants of the hater, wheh they virtally did in resisting the allegation of the divining spirit, in that very commetion. In Aets xvii, 4 , we read :
"And some of then "the Thessalonians) helieved, and consorted with Patal and silas; and of the devont (irecks, a great multitule, and of the chicf women not a few."

This verse is perfectly emsistont with what the spirit of silas said about Apollonins having made some convert - it Nu Nedonia where the Christosisill of Chrestus wats the most genemally aerepted. In verse 10 we reat :
". And the brethren inmediately sent away Patand silas hy night into Berma."

In wrepe 14 :and 15 we read :
"And then immediately the brethren sent away Paml, to go as it wore to the stat ; butsilas and l'mothella abote therestill.
". And they that conderend latul bronght him mito A thens; and received a commandment unto Silas and Timotheus for to come to him, with all speed they departed."

In Acts xviii, 5, we read :
"And when Silas and Timotheus had come from Macedonia, Paul was pressed in the spirit, and testified to the Jews, that Jesus was Christ."

In 2 Cor. i, 19, we read:
"For the Son of God, Jesus Christ, who was preached among you by us, even by me, and Silvanus, and Timotheus, was not yea and nay, but in him was yea."

In 2 Thess. i, 1, we read:
"Paul and Silyanus and Timotheus, unto the Church of the Thessalonians, in God our father and the Lord Jesus Christ."

In the First Epistle general of Peter, addressed to the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia, chapter v, 12, we read :
"By Silvanus, a faithful brother unto you, as I suppose, I have written brietly, exhorting and testifying that this is the true grace of God wherein ye stand."

Reader we ask you to read these portions of what is called the New Testament, by the light thrown upon them by the testimony of the spirit who called himself Silvanus, but who said he was surnamed Silas, and question if you can the truthfulness of that startling and momentous revealment of what the so-called Christian Seriptures really are. He tells us that he was one of the most intimate disciples of Apollonins of Tyana, who was sometimes called Paulinus, Paulus and Apollos in the different countries which he visited. He expressly claims to have been the person called Silas, in the Acts of the A postles; but who is rightly called Silvanus in 2 Cor. i, 19 ; in 2 Thessalonians i, 1 ; and in 1 Peter $v, 12$. If this is truc, then it is certain that those three epistles were written by one and the same person, and that person Apollonius of Tyana, also called Paulinus, Paulus and Apollos. It is a circumstance strongly indicating this, that the chosen friend of Paul, was in all those epistles called Silvanus, while in Acts he is in no instance called Silvanus, but always Silas. It is true the spirit said he had the name of Silas, but we have a right to infer that he had that surname given to him long after those epistles were written, by some person who had a reason for substituting the name Silas for Silvanus ; and it is not a very violent presumption to presume that the object was the same that led the writer of Aets, to sulstitute the name of Paul for Apollonius, in those stories concerning these two intimate Christosite friends.

The spirit then proceds to throw a new light on the respertive dates of Acts and 1 Thessalonians. He says: "The book of Aets is set down ly the best commentators as having been written about A. D. 59, while the Epistle to the Thessalonians is set down for A. D. 52." Both of these statements" he says: "are wrong. The First Thessalonians was written about A. D. 40 ; and portions of Acts about A. D. (i0-other parts of it later. It never assumed its present shape until the time of Lucian." This, so far as Aets is concerned, is most probable; and affords the only way of accounting for the confusion that has prevaled concerning it. The whole of the diflieulty seems to have arisen from the fact, that moch of what is related must have been written by an eye-witness of the events described; while other portions of it were manifestly related to events that oceurred subsequently to what is called the apostolic age. Another mistake has been that Lacian or Luke, who was its real compiler, (as we have the book now) was a contemporary and travelling companion of the person ealled Patul in Aets. No greater mistake conld have been made, for that compiler of Acts was the contemporary of Mareion, or Mark, as he is ealled, and did not live until after the reign of Trajan, and did not compile the lrook of Acts until A. I). 150 when he and Marcion were rivaling each other in treing to rob Apollonits of Tyana of his theological habors by appopriating them to their respective theological solomes. That Larcianus the (iroek Satirist andst. Luke of the Now Testament were one and the same person, is most probable if not absolutely certain. It is true he has hal the credit of having satirized the ('hristian religion; but if this waste, hen the (hristianity which he satirized wats the ('hristosisill of Cherethe, if not also that of Apollomins of Tyana as well. In our comments upon the eommunication given ly Lacian, we eiten from I)r. Lardner's works, his satire upen Perewrints whom We elearly showed to be no other peran than Apollonins uf Apollonits of his theological writines, to apmar to hitterly antaronize them, white he emght to give them:a the teathings of his mythic:al son of (iond. At all events there was mo other ('hristianty known prior to the time of Mareion and

Lucian, or Mark and Luke, than the Christosism of Chrestus and Apollonius of Tyana, and perhaps an Ethiopian version, and that Christosism was based solely on the doctrines concerning Christos which were taught by the Brahmans and Buddhists of India, many hundreds of years before the socalled Christian era. To show that Lucian has been connected with Christianity, by his writings or otherwise, we refer to McClintock and Strong's Cyclopredia of Theological Literature, article "Lucian," Vol. 5, p. 539.

We do not hesitate to say that it was Lucian, and no other person, who wrote the dialogue entitled Philopatris, as will be found in the reference to Lucian above given, for being the writer and compiler of the Gospel according to Luke, and the Acts of the Apostles, he of all other men would be most likely to know just what he meant when he wrote and composed those canonical Christian books. At any rate I have adduced more than enough to show the probable correctness of the spirit's statement, that the book of Acts was not put into the shape it now has until the time of Lucian, which was not until towards the middle of the $2 d$ century or afterwards. But in what the spirit says about the date of 1 Thessalonians, we have another even more surprising proof, not only of the identity of the spirit witness, but of his personal knowledge of the truth of what he says upon that point. He claims that that epistle was written by A pollonius of Tyana, his friend and master, about A. D. 40 ; and that it was the first epistle that he, A pollonius, wrote. In corroboration of this statement, he refers to the fact that the tome of that epistle is milder towards those whom he addresses, than is the tone of any other of his epistles. Says Spirit Silvanus or Silas, he does not therein "Charge the Thessalonians with those vices that are named in the other epistles." If any one will carefully read the First Epistle to the Thessalonians he will see that at the time it was written, the persons to whom it was written had not yet been incorporated into an ecclesiastical body, with a fixed policy of government and a set of established doctrines, but to people whom the writer was preparing for both these requirements of a religious or sectarian organization. In all the other Pauline epistles, and even in the Catholic epistles, the people addressed had passed beyond the stage which the writer's converts in Thessalonica had reached at the time the epistle to them was written. In this respeet, therefore, the 1 Thessalonians fully confirms the spirit's statement. But we come to something evea more strongly contirmatory, when we come to consider the reason which silvanus assigns for the anthor's particularly and untsually tolerant tone towards his Thessalonian followers. He tells us it was because the Thessalonians were Chrestus-Christosites, meaning that they were Christosite followers of Chrestus, the Macedonian (iymmosophist, who, with his followers, was expelled from Rome by Claudius, some time between A. I). 42 and 50 . He says at the time A pollonius wrote that epistle to the Thessalonians he had hat few converts or followers there, and he wats afraid to write dogmatically to them, lest they should go back to their old teacher Chrestus. This statement is fully borne out all through that epistle, as the following passages of it will show. In 1 Thess. ii, 14, the writer siys:
"For ye brethren, becoming followers of the churches of ( fod which in Judea are in Christ Jesus: for ye also have suffored like things of your own countrymen, even as they have of the Jews:
"Who both killed the Lord Jesus and their own prophets, and have persecuted ns, and they pleased not God, and are contrary to all men;
"Forbidding us to speak to the (rentiles that they might be saved, to fill up their sins alway; for the wrath has come upon them to the uttermost."

Now, it mat le remembered that the people of whom the author of that epistle was speaking, lived in Macedonia in the reign of Clandins. Who were they? Certainly not worshippers of the (ireek and Roman gods ; for hat they been, what "sins did they fill upalway," and what "wrath" was it "that had come upon them to the uttermost?" ( landins eertainly did not visit his wrath npon the worshippers of the hathengests, for they were but following the konnan laws. He certainly had reforence to some other clase of Nacedomian or Theszatonian subjects of Clantins. Who then were they who incurred the wrath of Clatulins? 'suctonius, the Roman hi-torian, has revorded the fact that chronths and his fotlowers were driven from Rome under an edict isolded by (lathdins, Why: Becaluse we are tohl he wat engaged in exciting his followers to disturb the public pace by the propagation of his religious doctrines. Those religious doctrines were not heathen, nor yet were they Judaical. For we are told that Aquila and Priscilla were followers of Chrestus, and were driven from Rome by that decree of Claudius against Chrestus and his converts. It was to find Aquila and Priseilla, the banished followers of Chrestus, the Macedonian, that Paul or Apollonius went to Corinth. Why would he have sought them out if they had been Jews? and still more, why would they, if they were such fanatical Jews as to suffer banishment on account of their religious zeal, have been so ready not only to adopt the Christosite (or Christian if you please) doctrine of Apollonius or Paul, but to assume to expound them, as we sce in Acts, xviii, 26? The fact is they were not Jews, as any one may see by their purely Greek names. They were Chrestosites, or Chrestians, when Apollonius or Paul converted them to his Christian views.

Remember that the people in Macedonia, who persecuted the followers of Paul, were the same who, at Antioch, troubled similar followers of Paul and his apostolic brethren, to whom Judas and Silas were sent (Acts xy, 22 and 24.) Now, who were they? They were not adherents of the Jewish faith, nor yet adherents of the Greek and Roman religions; but certain which went out from us. May we not ask: Certain who? Certain what? As the compiler of Acts has not permitted us to know, we are not rash in inferring that they were certain teachers of Christosism, who had gone out from the A pollonian or Pauline party of Christosites. Who were these Christosites or Christians, if not those of the Chrestus-Christosite party? We leave this for Cliristian theologians to answer. In all these cireumstances we have strong corroboration of what the spirit of Silvanus or Silas says about the opposition to the teachings of A pollonius or Paul in Macedonia by Gymmosophic Chrestosites, of whom Chrestus was the acknowledged leader at that time. Those of our readers who carefully read the communication of Chrestus, will take note that in reply to our question as to whether he knew ought of Damis, the intimate friend and trusted companion of Apollonius, his reply was that he had not met him, but had received threatening letters from him, commanding him to cease preaching his Gymmosophic Christosism in Dtacedonia. Damis, himself, as a spirit, testified, as the reader may remember, that he was called Timotheus, by the Thessalonians, that being as much a title as a name. The Macedonian opponents and persecutors of the converts of Paul or A pollonius, in that country, were, as spirit Silvanus or Silas states, followers of Chrestus, and those converts of lanl or Apollonits were from a rival sect of Christosites, ant mot from those adhering to the Jewish fath, or who had been followers of the Greek or Roman religions. It is only on this supposition that we ean see any analogy between the opposition to the doctrines of Paul or A pollonius in Thessalonica, and the alleged opposition to the teachings of the same latul or Apollonius in Judea by the Jews, supposing wrongfully, that he, Paul or Apollonius, was a Jew and not a Greek. View the whole matter as we may, we reach the natural conclusion that what the spirit of Silas or silvamus says about himself, and the beok of Acts and the First Epistle to the Thessalonians, is true in every essential particular. That being ss, the identity of the satul or Paul of Aets with A pollonius, the Nizarite-Esenian teacher of Buddhistic Christosism in the Roman Empire, from A. D. 30 to A. D. 102, is made indisputably plain and irrefutable.

The spirit then eloses his communication with a diselosure which, until that moment, we had not looked for ; and that is, that the opposition to the Apollonian or latuline system of Christosism was threefold, and not dual, ass we had been led to inagine and believe. Not only was it oposed ly the (iymmosophic or IBrahmanizing Christosism of Chrestus, and by the (ireek Jupiterian and Promothean systems of theolory ; but, from what the spirit of silvanus says, it was also opposed by an Ethopian (lhristosism. We have hat many intimations from time to time, that we now ser point to such an Exhiopic ('hristosism, hat which when they were given we did not perceive cond have any relation to an anti-Apollonian ('hristosism of that nature.

We cho not know how these things appear to those who real them; but to myself, to whom they eome thromeh the lipe of the unconseions medimm, are astombting. Wie know, at rertainly as mortal man emb know angthing, that these reve lations come from the spirit world ; and have every posible reasm to believe they eome from the learnem, intuential and thoronghly informed spirits, ancient as well as modern, from whom they purport to come.

FRUMENTIUS.

An Abyssinian Bishop.

"I salute you, sir:-My name is Frumentius. I was an Abyssinian bishop in the fourth century, and the original writer of the Ethiopic version of Christosism, as contained in the four gospels received by a pagan priest of the sun, not historically manted, from Calanus, in the days of Alexander the Great. I was a sun worshipper myself and so menderstood the matter that I regarded Christos as the Child of the Sum. In my day it was a common thing to believe that all the pure spirits of the dead upon this earth passed to the sun. Conscguently, I wrote this Ethiopian version to show that the god of the sun, in his kindness, sent his son here, to die for the sins of mortals. If my version had been left intact this would clearly have appeared to those who read it; but as will be explained by a spirit who will come after me, and by tricks well known to Christians, they left just so much of my record stand as suited the propagation of their own faith. The rest was destroyed ; how, will be explained by a spirit before these sittings are ended. Bless you for the good work you are doing; but you will find that none are so blind as those who will not see."

Refer to McClintock and Strong's Cyclopedia of Theological Literature for account of Frumentius.

This reference will suffice to enable the reader to judge of the probable authenticity of the communication. It will be seen that what the spirit of Frumentius claims or alleged, in relation to his Ethiopic version of Christosism, is borne out by a "tradition" that "ascribes the translation of the New Testament to Frumentius." The spirit tells us he was the original writer of the Ethiopian version of Cluristosism, as it was contained in the four gospels received by a pagan priest of the sun, not historically named, from Calanus, in the days of Alexander the Great. This Ethiopic Version, therefore, had nothing whatever to do with the religion of Jesus Christ, but related to the Hindoo or Gymnosophist Christos, of whom Calanus the Gymmosophist friend and teacher of Alexander the Great, was a follower and disciple. Frumentius tells us he was a sun-worshipper, which is perfectly consistent with the fact that he was a Phonician and a native of Tyre, where the worship of the sun was the universal religion. He says, as such a sun worshipper, he regarded Christos as the Child of the Sinn. This l:e very naturally did, for the (iymmonohic Brahmans regarded the sun as persomated in the Christos of their astronomical religion. In this, Frumentius acted with perfect consistency ; and it is a very significant fact that the founders of Christianity, as it is now taught, elamed that this Solar (hristos of Frumentius in his Ethiopic Version was identieal with their Jesus Christ. It shows very elearly that their Jesus ('lorist, was, like the Christos of Calanusand Frumentius, nothing more nor lers than "the child of the sun," or the solar myth, a fact which these spirit testimondes have established bevond refutation.

Frumentins tefls us that in his day it was a comamon thing to believe that all the pare spirits of the dead upon this earth pasedtothes:an ; and that consequeatly he wrote his Ethiopian version to show that the grod of the sma in his kitainese, sent his son here to die for mortals. This was a doetrine that prevailed antong the sun worshippers of Periatand Ihamicia, and the (ireek wo:shippers of Promethens, the sacrifiecd saviour, in all of these sy-tems le ing none other than the sm pereonified; as any ore rath readily perceise who will look bemeath the forms, cerononies and obervanees which presald danong all athen al to combe down to had it heen permittel to do :or, the sma-worshippitg heathen origin and meaning of what is callet orthodox ( Paristianity would be materstoxd, and the presailing singerstition in megard to it would twe brought to at epeoty emd. Frumentime refored (1) Ephatan, hishop of (hesea, as the epirit who would explain the method heal to suppres those pertions of his Ethiopie version of the New Testament, which were in the way of the eation ats we maty and it will stand every teat as to its atuthenticity and truthfulness.

CHRESTUS.

The Rival of Apollonius of Tyana.

At my weekly sitting with the medium and before the communication from Chrestus was given the guide of the medium took control and said-"Mr. Roberts, the spirit who is here to communicate is one who has something very important to say to you, and Aronomar is so anxious that you should understand this, that he will take control of the medimm himself for a moment." Aronomar through the medium, addressed me as follows:

[^8]stop all progress in the direction of my teachings, Apollonius, Pautinus or Apollos, went and stopped with Aquila and I'ris(illa, and workel with them, while his agents or followers worked against me at lame. At the time this agitation occurred, there was an ediet issued thy the emperor Claudits which ordered the expulsion of all Jews from Rome, as suetonins has bern made to record it ; but this is an interpolation by ('hristian writers to conceal my historical identity. This pasage in suetonius has greatly bothered your modern theologians, Adan Clark, Dr. Lardner, and other commentators, to know whether Christ, so-called, was ever at Rome. I wats the man who was at that time in Rome, and 1 was the oppoment of Apollonius. Aly name was Chrestus, and it seems stamge that with such a name, learned theologitus should ever have mistaken me for a Jew. In their zoal to find mome evidence to prove that their Christ had an existence, they are realy to acept anything, however irrational and improbable. I was a Macedonian, and a slave to Claudins, but was set fre ly him on the aceount of the appeals of $m y$ friemds and followers. At length I acguired such power and influcnce ty my breaching and teaching the deretrines of Christos, and by my mediumship, whieh was manifested in support of my teachings, that ('latudis expelled myself' and all my followers from Rome. It is important that yom should thoronghy kiow what the name Chrestus meant. I was named after what I taturgt. In the contest between myerlf and Apollonins, he hat more friends than I had ; and mainly among the pat rician order. II 6 being a freeborn ditizen and I having then a slave, of comece the whole patrican order worked agatist me. In order that you may thoroughly maderstand the import of this commonication, I will say that Apollonius received his gopels fom India throwsh larehns; I reeded mine directly from ('alams, the teacher of Alexamder the cireat. When I say I reseised my gexpels directly from Calams, I mean they eame down tome through my ancestors from the time of Alexather, one of whom was with Alexander, and was per-onally acymanted with (:alams. I wats bom about A. I), fi, and lived until. A. 1). te. [Where did you go on being expelled from Jeme'?] I went back tomy home in Maredoniat. [lid] you ex.r met 1):anis, the friend and disciple of Apellonins? I never met him, hat I knew of him. Hesent me threateming letters cembmanding me to coase teaching my doctrines. He was then in Thnesalonica. [What was your ocenpation in Manelonia? ] I was a serite to the Macedontan prieste, hot 1 was not a follower of the Macedmian religion. I adtured to the 'hristos religion, as did my ancestors before me. [What was your Macedonian name?] I will have to spell it for you. Ruthalia. ] want further to say that the edict against myself and followers was said to be issued against us as Jews, but that term was applied to all persons who we regarded as vagrants or disturbers of the peace and good order of Rome, and not as desiguating the followers of Judaism. That is why the interpolator of Suetonius chose the term Jews for those people against whom the ediet of Clandius was issued. You will find me ealled Chrestus in Suetonius."

Here the communication ended, the spirit being unable to hold the control longer. Curious to know whether Suetonius had made any reference to this man, I went, immediately after the elose of the sitting, to see whether that author's writings contained any such passage as that to whieh the spirit had referred. Judge of my surprise when, on turning to the "Life of Claudius" by Suetonius, I found this sentenee: "Judaeos, impulsore Chresto assidue tumultuantes, Roma expulit."

The sentence which immediately preeedes it, and that which follows it have no eonnection with it, and it has every appearance of being an interpolation, as the spirit thought it was. In order to show what eonfusion this brief sentence in Suetonins has oceasioned, I here quote the following account of C'hrestus from MeClintock and Strong's Cyeloptedia of Theological Literature :
"Chrestus, a person named by Suetonius (Cland. 25) as having incited a sedition among the Jews at Rome, which led to their expulsion from the eity (eomp. Acts xviii, 2). There have been two different opinions as to whom Suetonius meant by Chrestus (see Kuinol, ad Act. in loc.) ; whether some Hellenist, who had excited political disturbances, as Mever and DeWette suppose; (see Conybeare and Howson, St. Panl i, 386), the name Chrestus (Greek, Chrestos, useful) frequently oecurring as borne by manumitted slaves: or whether, as there is good reason to think (Lipsius on Tact. Annals xv, 44; Grotius on Acts, xviii, 2; Neander, Planting and Training, ii, 231.) suetonius does not refer to some actual dissension between Jews and Christians, but confounds the name Christ, which was most musual, as a proper name, with the much more frequent appellation of Chrestus (see Tertullian, Apol. 3; Lactantius, Instit. is, 7, 5; Millman, Hist. of Christianity, i, 430). Orosius (Hist. vii, 6) places Claudius's edict of banishment in the ninth year of his reign (i. e, A. D. 49 or 50 ) and he refers to Josephus, who, however, says nothing about the matter. ln King Alfred's Anglo-saxon version of Orosius, however, this reference to Josephus does not onecur; the register simply eonnects the expulsion with a famine. "In the ninth year of his government there was agreat famine in Rome, and Clatulits ordered all the Jews that were therein to be driven out" (Bosworth's Orosins, p. 119 of the Faxon and 179 of the translation. see this statement of Orosius commented upon by Fealiger, Animads: on Eusel) ('hron. p. 192). On the contrary, Pearen (Aun Paulin.) and Vogel (Gabler's Journal) without, however, giving decisive grounds for their opinion, suppose ('laudius's twelfthyear (i.e. A. 1. 52) to be the more likely one. With Anger (De tembermm ratione in Act. Apost. p. 118 one might, on negative grounds, assert that, so long as Herod Aerippat was at Rome with Claudius, the edict of expulsion would hardly be published; that is previous to the year A. D. 49. Dr. Burton, however (On the Chronology of the Acts, $p$. 26), puts the date of the edict some time between A. D. 41 and 46 , supprorting his opinion by the fact 'that no mention is matle of Clandins's degree in the Amals of Tacitus which have come down to us ; and that since the last hooks of the Amals weetpy the tirst six vears of the reign of Claudius, it is prebable that Tacitus mentioned this decree in one of those books. The year referred to in Acts x viii, 2, is A. D. 49."

Who ean read that contlict of opinion, and mot see that the real nature and canse of the ediet being issumbly Clandins has been suppresed, amt in all haman probability, by the author of the book of the Aet- of the Aponthese. Upon this point I will have something -pecial to saly further om. Dr. Latrduer in his ('redibility of the (iosel History, says:

- I eonelude with the hamishment of the dews from Fomme. 'After these things band departed from Athens, and camm to Corinth. And foum a certain Jew, named Aguila, born in Pontus, lately come from Italy, with hiv wif- Prisillat, hematise that 'lamblins had commanded all dews to depart from Iome, Aets xviii, $1, \ddot{2}$.
" Dios:sys, that (lamdius did mot hani-h the dews from Rome, but only prohibited theirasermblies. DButsetonime wholiced mearer the time, stys, 'He apelled the dew from Rome, who were monstantly raising disturbances, ('hrestus being their |entre."
"It is disputed hy learned men whether hy ('heretus, Sucton-here. 'This parane prove what I bring it fors.
"Josephus has no where particularly mentioned this event. This edict of Claudius seems not to have been long in force. That may be one reason of this omission in Josephus; another reason may be, that it was not an agreeable task for him, to mention any disgrace cast upon his people. If some disputes bet ween the Jews and the followers of Jesus Christ were really the cause of this order, that might be another reason; Josephus having been very reserved, if not altogether silent, about the affairs of the Christians."

So says Dr. Lardner. It is not perfectly manifest that what the spirit says concerning the cause and nature of the edict issued by Claudius is true, and hence the confusion that afterwards arose, as to who the real disturbers of the peace of Rome were. Dio was certainly right in saying that Claudius did not banish the Jews from Rome; nor is there a particle of evidence outside the passage of Suetonius, which we have cited, that says any thing about the Jews having been driven from Rome in the time of Claudius; and it is more than questionable whether Suetonius mentioned the Jews at all in his reference to the edict. He no doubt did mention something about the decree against Chrestus and his followers; but the term he applied to them has no doubt been changed by some transcriber of Suctonius who doubtless had more than one object in view. There was an absolute necessity for that transcriber to conceal the identity of Chrestus and his theological doctrines in relation to the Brahmanical Christos, if he was a Christian zealot; and at the same time he no doubt sought to disgrace the Jews, the hated opponents of the Christian religion, by making them appear to have been the enemies of peace and good order at Rome. The absurdity of such a pretence is apparent, in as much as the number of Jews at Rome was very inconsiderable, at that time, and they would not have been allowed to raise a single disturbance without a liability of being exterminated instead of being expelled from Rome. How would the interests of Roman subjects have been adranced by sending such lawless people to other parts of the Empire? The pretence is inconsistent with all probability. That there was something not fully elucidated as to this question is made very certain by the mention of Dr. Lardner that, "It is disputed by learned men whether by Chrestus, Suetonius means Christ," and it is not a little laughable to see how complacently the learned Doctor evaded that very important question. Says he: "I need not coneern myself with that point here." He forgot to add "Or anywhere else," for he never alluded to the matter afterward. As the spirit suggests, it never necurred to any of these learned men to reognizo in the Latin name Clarestus the Gireek Christos, which no Jow ever bore. Even if the Greek Jesul could be traced to the Jewish Jeshua or Joshua, the Greek Christos can in no manner be tated to any analogons Jewish name. When therefore, the founders of Orthodox Christianity eonpled the (ireek ('hriston with the Latin Jesus, as having any relation to any Jew whomsoever, they eommitted a blunder from which they can never escape. But the Latin Jesus was not derived from the Jewish name Joshan at all, but from the Phonician Jes, the designation of their smogrod, Bacehas; and thus it becomes plain, that, in no other than a sun-worshipping sense, were the two names Jesms and ('hristos ever applied to the same olject of worship, whether god, man or myth. The spirit tells ns he was ealled Chrestus by the Romans, because he taught the Brahmanieal doctrines eoncerning the Indian god Christos. The truth of all the points we have been examining will be strongly supported by what we will adduce hereafter in ent neetion with what the spirit says of himself.

Besides, it is not amiss here to recall the etymology of the name ('hrestus, speculated about by Meyer and DeWette, as guoted above from Meclintock and strong's C'yelopadia, de. It is there satid that "the C'hrestus (Greek ('hrestos, useful) freguently oceurting bas borne by mammitted slaves." Wiare not told where the name (Cheentus so frequentlyocents, as borne by manmitted slaves, lat it is not a little significant that the Chrestus to whom sinctonius refors ats a retmraing spirit, festifes that he was a mammitted save. We incline to believe that both Meger and DeWette met with otber referenes to the (hrestus of suetonius in some eonnection that showed that he, Clorestus, was a manamitted slave. It is very odd, if Chrestos in (ireek meant useful, that ('hrestus on that aceotat would be apphed to the momumitted staves. It would he simgulaty ont of place in that connection. It womble be meh more appor priate to have applied that name to atoond shave as they would be math more uncful to him who held him, then if set free. A single fact like this goes very far to extablish the atuthenticity and trathfuhess of the eonmmatation. But this is not all.

In showing that Chrestus was a manumitted slave, we have very strong reason to believe tlaat Chrestus was not a Jew, but a slave of some other nationality. The spirit tells us that he was a Macedonian, and not a Jew, and that his followers were Christosites, who took the name of Christians two centuries or more later. We have a singular confirmation of the truth of this in what is said in MeClintock and Strong's Cyclopredia, under the head of "Claudius." It is there said :
" Indeed the Jews were treated by him, (Claudius) with indulgence, especially those in Asia and Egypt, (Josephus Ant., xix, 5, 2, $3 ; \mathbf{x} \times, 1,2)$ although those in Palestine seem to have at times suffered much oppression at the hands of his governors (Tacitus, Hist. v, 9 etc.); but about the middle of his reign those who abode at Rome were all banished thence (Acts xviii, 2 ; see Hebenstreit, Du Judro exule, Liep. 1714.) From the language of Suetonius in relating this event (Claud. 25) it is evident that the Christians were also indiscriminately included in the execution of the edict, as a sect of the Jews, if, indeed they were not the most numerous part of that portion of the inhabitants."

I have underscored the latter part of that quotation to show how absolutely the communication of Spirit Chrestus is in accord with the facts of history, as illuminated by learned theological criticism. It is therein admitted that the edict of Claudius against Chrestus and his followers was principally against Christians, or Chrestians, and not against Jews at all, the very fact which Chrestus, as a returning spirit, testifies to. To call these Christians, or Chrestians, a Jewish sect, is a singular inconsistency, that could be only accounted for by the necessity there was to maintain the interpolated untruth that the edict of Claudius was issued against Jews. This same writer admitted that the Jews in Asia and Egypt were treated by Claudius with indulgence. If this was so, why would he have treated them with less indulgence at Rome? That he did not do so, becomes certain, as appears by the testimony of Chrestus and the corroborating facts that we have hastily thrown together, bearing upon this point. Not only have we the errors of history and Christian theology here set at rest, in a most remarkible and unexpected manner ; but we have the identity of a most important historical personage, which has long been unknown to the most skillful erities, established beyond question or cavil. Having thus established the identity of the spirit witness and his entire veracity, in relation to the matters we have noticed, we will now proced to the critical eonsideration of the other statements contained in his communieation.

The spirit tells us that when at Rome, in the reign of Chat dias, he was a teacher of the (iymmosophie doctrines or ideas in relation to the Indian Christos, in contradistinction to the ideas of A pollonins of Tyana in relation to the same Christos ; and he adds: " He, (Apollonius) taught the reformed Buddhist doctrines eoncerning Christos, while I (Chrestus) tanght the Brahmanical doetrines." And then he proceeds to state: "The diflerence bet ween the two doretrines were simply, that aceording to Apollonins's way of teaching, mankind was to dependmanly, or solely, upon Cloristos as their Saviour; in my way of teaching, Christos conld only be their sawiour, provided their good worksand deeds aceompanied atheljef in him." Of the correctacss of this statement we can only judge from the further statements of the spirit, and the collateral farts which corroborate them. It seems certain, however, that ('hrestus was an agitator of certain sectarian deretrines which crated a great fement and excitement among the inhabitants of Rome, which tinally led (latuline to banish him and his secretaries from that eity. His opponents were not the Roman pagan priesthood, for in that ease it is hardly likely that any of them would have heen permitted to go forth to propagate their disturbing doctrines thronghout the Roman Empire. The nature of the ediet shows two things: 1st, that the eontroversy hetween (hrestus and his opponents was one, the result of which, was local in its character; and od, that the opposing pary was not jhentified with the national religion. Who, then, was the opposing party". ('hrestus tells us it wat Apollonins of 'Tyana and his Essenian followers. We now approall a priat which shows in a very positive mamer that this Apollonitse was no other person than the latal of The Arts of the Apolles, and the real author of the ('hristian Epistles (wrongfally denied to he his work) ; and which were ertainly the work of n ) other person than Apollonins.
 and Ajoilos at Rome, sumpht to put atop the the tachings of himalf, and toacemmbish this, went away from Rome and stopered with Aytuila and Priseilla, and worked with them, while his followers remained at Rome, to work against him, Chrestus. It seems certain, in view of all the faets, that it was the hot dissension between the rival parties or sects of Christosites that led to the expulsion of the party or seet that was headed by Chrestus. Who were Aquila and Priscilla? We are told in Acts $x$ viii. 42.
"After these things, Paul departed from Athens, and came to Corinth:
"And found a certain Jew named Aquila, born in Pontus; lately come from Italy, with his wife Priscilla; (because that Claudius had commanded all the Jews to depart from Rome ;) and came unto them."

We have here a very fair specimen of the historical value that attaches to the anonymoss patchwork of intentional deceptions which is known to us as the The Acts of the Apostles. The writer of "The Acts" says that Aquila was a Jew of Pontus, but admits that he went to Corinth from Italy, and them parenthetically is added "because that Claudius had commanded all the Jews to depart from Rome." If this is in any respect true, then, Aquila and Priscilla were followers of Charestus before they became followers of Paulinus or Apollonins, or of Paul, as the same man has been manifestly called by the Christian plagiarizers of his theological and philosophieal writings ; and perhaps they were very prominent and influential fonlowers of that persecuted Christosite rival of Apollonius. There is, however, another very significant reference to the movements of Apollonins or Paul, which goes very far to confirm the testimony of 'hrestus, and to show the connection of these two originators of the Christian religion the one to the other. In "The Acts" xvi, $8,9,10,11$ and 12, we read:
"And they "(Paul and Silas)," passing by Mysia, came down to Troas.
9. "And a rision appeared to Panl in the night; there stood a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, saying Come over into Macedonia and help us.
10. "And after he had seen the vision, immediately we endeavored to gointo Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us for to preach the gospel minto them:
11. "Therefore loosing from Troas, we came with a straight comse to Samothracia, and the next day to Neapolis;
12. "And from thence to Philipui, which is the chief eity of that part of Macedonia, and a colony and we were in that city abiding eertain days."

Any one who reads this ean ser that it is a much mixed story, andas we think an intentionally mised story. It will beseen that the verses 8 and 9 and the first line of verse 10 were written by neither l'aul morkilas, but by some third person abont them. The remainder of verse 10 and vorses 11 and 12 are apparently quoted from a persoual aceount of Paul's journeyings, as written by himself. Why did not the writer or compiler of Acts relate that vision about a man of Macelonia as related by Panl himself? From the fact that it was no call from a visionary man of Macedonia that latul received, but a call from a real man of Macedonia, none other that C'brestns of Macedonia, the Gymnosophie teacher of Christosism, the m:an who subsequently beemme the Great ('loristoxite rivaland opponent of Apollonios at Fome in the reign of the emperor Clamdins. The writer of Acte desired to conceal the real nature of that Macedonian eall to Panl, and the identity of the man whomade it ; and in order to doso falsely invented the story of the alleged vision of Panl. The untruthful writer little supposel that the spirit of Chrestus wonld ever find opportmity to retarn and state fact concerning himeelf and Aprollonins of Ty:mathat would exprece to the light of day, his dishonesty and untmothfulass. But bet us return to what the spirit, 'harestus, stidabout Apollonins having rone to make common eathse with his former followers, Aquila and Priscilla, neither of which names are Jewish at all, but (ireek.

The partiondar paint to which we insite the reader in that sonneretion is, that Armila and Priseilla were banished from Rome, mbler the ediet of Clandins, which was mentioned by followers. It is therefore eortain that latal, whether Apollonitu of Trama or not, beqame the religious partis:an of twoof the rhiof supporters of ('hrestus at Rome, they having abondoned the seet of ('lirestas and attached themedres to that of Pand, :as his converts. In this the spirit statement of 'harester is ted that he eqpally testitiod to the trath when he satid he wat not : Jow, and that Aquila amd Priscilla were mot Jows lutt (hristosiles, atal that Panl who wat nome other than . Ip,ll io felt quite ageriverel at the eoturse of Aquila and Priseilla in abandoning his Gymmosophic version of Christosism and adopting the Buddhistic version of the same Christosism as proclaimed and tanght by Apollonins. Otherwise he would not have mentioned them as he did in lis communication. Indeed it would seem that the movement which Chrestus had set on foot at Rome, began to decline from the time of the banishment of himself and followers from Rome, and the conversion of Aquila and Priscilla to the doctrines of Apollonius or Paul was no doubt largely due to the fact that the latter doctrines were not proscribed as were those of Chrestus ; and they could adopt and teach them without subjecting themselves to further persecution at the hands of the Roman authorities. Be this as it may, we have given enough and more than enough to establish, not only the authenticity of the communication, but its surprising correctness and instructiveness. We have a right therefore, to claim that unless there is some manifest untruth in the other parts of the communication, that it is equally entitled to credit throughout.

Now, the spirit tells us that Apollonius taught the one especial and distinctive doctrine of a dependence upon Christos as their Saviour, making faith in that doctrine the essential principle of religious duty. If this is true, as we have not a doubt it is, then it is certain that Apollonius of Tyana was the person called St. Panl in the Christian Scriptures, and that the Christian Scriptures are nothing more than plagiarisms of the writings and teachings of A pollonius concerning the Iindoo Saviour, by him called Cinristos. The one aim of the founders and upholders of what is called the Christian religion has been, to pervert, conceal, suppress or destroy all reliable information in relation to Apollonius of Tyana, his teachings and his followers. In this one fact we have sufficient proof that Christianity could not afford to have the truth known concerning these things. In the light of such spirit commmications as this one from Chrestus, and scores of other spirits who have testified to what they personally knew about the origin, nature, and objects of Christimity, we can well understand why everything concerning Apollonins and his Christosite teachings; as well as Chrestus and his Christosite teachings, in the reign of Clandius, have been designedly, systematically and fraudulently suppressed, by a class of men who have made a trade of concealing the truth concerning the theological fraud called, or rather miscalled Christianity.

The spirit then tells us how he came to have a knowledge of Gymnosophic Christosism, and in this, his statement is surprisingly consistent with all the collateral historical fats. Not only does he tells us how he received his knowledge of Christosism, but he tells us with ummistakable elearness how $A$ pollonius received his knowledge of the same theological system, and why the latter differed from his own. He says: "In order that you maty thoroughly understand the import of this communication I will say that Apollonius received his gospels from India through Iarehus; I received mine directly froms Calamus, the teacher of Alexander the Great * * * I mean they came down to me through my ancestors from the time of Alexander, one of whon was with Alexander and who was personally acpuainted with Calanus." This statement of the spirit is singularly explanatory of the call of Panl to go to Macedonia. If we may believe spirit Chrestus, which the writer does not hesitate to say he does, it would seem that Calanus placed a copy of the Gymmosophic grospels concerning the Hindoo Christos, in the hands of Alexander, or some of his generals, after his return to babylon from his conquest of India. By the Latter, these gospels seen to have been taken into Macedonia, after the death of Alexander, and were there secretly taught by the ancesto:s of Ruthalia, the Macedonian slave of a Roman master, at Rome called Chreatus. The latter tells us that in Macedonia his ocenpation was that of a seribe to the Macedonian or Roman priesthood of his native country, that he was not their follower, bat an adierent to the Christosite or (iymmosophic religion of his ancestors. It seems, furthermore that when taken from Maeedonia to Rome, he, Chrestus, began to propagate his (iymmonophic ('hristosism either seceretly or openly, and soon gatined a following of sutticient intluence with the emperor (landius to procme his freedom. ('hrestas had, no douht, heard of Apolloniths's visits to Indis, ath his adoption of the Ifindow gropels cone proner Christos, which the latter had prowted from larchas, the Buddhistie patriarch. Thinking to proctme the cotopneration of $\mathrm{I}_{\mathrm{p}}$ ollonins in his ('hristoxizing selneme at Rome, he sent to him in Asia: aking him to come to his help. Apollonins, it seems, from what the spirit says, and from what is said in Acts x wii., : b mat the vixionary mall to lanl, went mot to Macedonia, but to the Macedonian who had called for his help, who was then propagating his Christosite doctrines at Rome. The help that Chrestus received from Apollonius is very clearly set forth in the communication from the former. Apollonius, instead of becoming a helper and follower of Chrestus, became his sectarian enemy and the leader of a party or sect that supplanted the religious movement which he had fairly inaugurated. From that time forward but little was known or heard of Chrestus and his followers, while the Apollonian or Pauline party came into such prominence in the European provinces of the Roman Empire, as to challenge the Roman religion thronghout the vast area of the civilized world. Never was there a spirit communication given which was more calculated to lay bare the awful crimes and deeds of those who perpetrated the theological fraud called Christianity than the communication we have been considering; and never was a communication more strongly corroborated by apparently remote and wholly disconnected facts.

If there are persons who can read that communication in connection with the facts that we have been able to throw together as tests of its truthfulness, and not sce that Christianity, so-called, is nothing more than the heathen theological doctrines and dogmas concerning the Hindoo Christos-that the New Testament is nothing more than plagiarism of the writings and teachiugs of Chrestus and A pollonius of Tyanaand that Apollonius was the person called Paul or St. Paulthen we can only say we are at loss to see that they possess sufficient reasoning powers to perceive the truth when it stares them in the face.

Reader, remember that but for the fact that the Christian cuemies of truth omitted to erase the name of Chrestus from that one sentence of Suctonius, it would have been impossible to have established the authenticity and credibility of that most important spirit communication. We say important commmication meaning all that the word important can imply. We hold that nothing is more important than the establishment of truth and the banishment of error, in all that in any way is calculated to promote human welfare and prevent hmman misery. It is for this we labor, as few men have ever habored, in order to aceomplish these necessary conditions for hmman progress. We know how few the number is, comparatively, who sympathize with us in this our purpose; lout this does not lessen the importance of these great objects in our sight. As time passes, and the light of supernal wisdom streams upon this world of ignorance, of selfishness, and of mental and moral cowardiee, the truth will become more lovely and weleome and error more hidens and forbidding, until all mankind will joyfully partake of the blessings which truth alone brings.

ARONOMAR.

On the morning of A pril 23d, 1855, I had a brief sitting with the medium at which he was inst controlled by his guide, who told me that Aronomar, the supervising control of the medium, desired to speak with me. In a few moments I received the following communication from Aronomar :
"I salute you, sir:-I will say to you, that ever since these commundations were first given to you, I have dome everything to guard them from interference that was possible for me to do; but I have labored under four disadrantages : 1st, to secure the commmocations aganst interruptions; ald, to hate the communications as clear, lucid, and as true as possible : 3sl, tonvercome the pyehological, spirit fores who know of my intentions, and the mean muterial conditions that I am compelled to meet, and who use their forees to prevent me from carrying out my plans; and tha, and hastly, to compel the controlling spirit, when hostile, to tell the truth :mat mothing but the truth. It is, therefore, for goursalf to wateh the eommanication* with a critical eye, and where they contan manifeat untruth, or will not-tand the test of atrict analysis hy the light of every eollateral fact, then rejeet them :1* Hechas for any other purpme than to show what dillionties attend the proparation of truth from the spirit side of life. I will now commumieate in relation tothe Chaldean paraphrases. I hat, as you perhaps well know, four names, ly which 1 :am known to hitory. Aromonar, which was Persian; Befteshazzar. which was (hatdean; Daniel, which was samarito Jmiatan tafter my timu athe Gommeter, which was also Persian. At the time in wheh I lived at babolon, there was, what yom father of Nebuchaduezas, of :ll the hearned men if the neighboring nations of the Chaldean empire. The object of this assembly of learned men was to record the traditions or unwritten historics of these various countries. I was the president or head of that Council. I understood seventeen diflerent languages. The Chaldean, Egyptian and Phoenician languages were the most important of these. It was at this Council that the Talmud was first made. The Jews had nothing to do with it except to carry that compilation away with them when they returned from their Babylonian captivity. It is this Talmud of Babylon, that is so revered by the Jews of to-day, which their ancestors bore away with them in the reign of Cyrus. Now the most remarkable fact you will find to test the truth of my testimony, is, that, while you will find Targums of all the other books of the Septuagint, you will find none, of the books of Daniel, Ezra and Nehemiah. The reason for this was that to have written Targums of those books would have shown the Chaldean origin of all of them, the point the Targum writers aimed to conceal. From my time to the tine of the history of Aristobulus, the tutor of Ptolemy Physon, there were seventy-two mishnaical doctors, but the Jews make them run down to the time of Juda o: Jchuda, the Holy, the compiler of the Mishna, but this is only done to conceal the Siptuagint of Aristobulus, which was afterwards revised by that learned man, Demetrius Phalerius, the distinguished librarian of Ptolemy Philadelphus. What I have suid here refers to various other communications you have and will receive. I merely give yon the above at this time as corroborative, of what has been given as well as a part of the testimony relating to those matters yet to follow."

In order that the reader may see the vast import of that introductory communication we will cite what a writer in the Cyclopedia Americana says in relation to the Tammed:
"Talmud (from the Hebrew lamad, he has learned;) doctrines. It signifies among the modern Jews, an enormous collection of traditions, illustrative of their laws and usages, forming twelve folio volumes. It consists of two parts, the Mishma and Gemara. The Mishna is a collection of rabbinical rules and precepts, male in the second century of the Christian era. The whole civil constitution and mode of thinking, as well as language of the Jews, had gradually undergone a complete revolution, and were entirely different in the time of our Saviour from what they had been in the early period of the Hebrew commonwealth. The Mosaic books contained rules no longer adapted to the situation of the nation ; and its new political relations, connected with the change which had taken place in the religious views of the people, led to many difficult questions, for which no satisfactory solntion could be found in their law. The Rabbins undertook to supply this defeet, partly by commentaries on the Mosaic precepts, and partly by the eomposition of new rules, which were looked upon as almost equally binding with the former. These comments and traditions were called oral traditions, in contradistinction to the old law or written code. The Rabbi Juda, surnamed the holy, was particularly active in making the collection ( 150 B . C., ) which received the mame of Misha, or second law. The later Rabbis husied themselves in a similar manner in the composition of commentaries and explanations of the Mishan. Among these works, that of the Rabhi Joehanan (eomposed about 230, A. D.) aequired the most celebrity, under the name of Gemara (Chaldaic for eompletion or doctrine.) This Mishna and (iemara together formed the Jernsalem Talmud, relating chicfly to the Jews of Palestine. But after the Jews had mostly removed to Balylon, and the synagogues of Palestine had almost entirely disappeared, the babylonian rabhis gradually composed new eommentaries on the Mishna, which ahout 500 A . D., were completed, and thas formed the Babylonian Talmod."

It would require an essay to show the vast importance of this comm, $n$ ication hy way of explaining what the Jewish seriptures really are. That the spirit was Zoronster, the great Persian sage and seer, I have had too much prow to rationally donht.
[Aronomar gaveother eommmications in this series previous to the one above, but it hats been deement proper to insert his primeipal testimony in the latter part of this work, under the tithe of Zorosister, to which we ceall the special attention of our ramder, and as the history of Aronomar is therein fully set forth and eommented nuon, it is not deemed expeelient to enlarge "pon the same here- - ©omplatere].

ST. DECLAN.

An Ancient Sun-Worshipper.

"May the light of truth-The sux-ever shine:-In the spirit controlling this man (the medium) you have before you one of the so-called Christian Saints. Yet I was no saint. I was only made to be one through ignorance and superstition by Catholic Christians after my time on earth. My name was Declan-Saint Declan. The place where I principally flourished was Ardmore, in the county of Waterford, Ireland. I lived in the fourth century of the Christian era. The doctrines that were taught by me embraced the secret meaning of all the round towers in Ireland. Our religion was the Druidic. Our books were all written upon scrolls, and embraced some of the finest specimens of illuminated writings that there were then in the world. Our whole religious teachings and practices had their origin among the Phonicians, from whom we derived them. The Phœnicians visited and traded in Ireland and Britain one thousand years before the Christian era. The sun was designated by us IES, a designation we received from the Phœnicians, but it was corrupted by the Scandinavians into HES, meaning fire, fire-man, or sun-man, who afterwards figured as the sungod, or Son of God. It was not until nearly three hundred years later that some of Augustin's followers introduced into Ireland the Cbristos religion of the East. St. Patrick taught the same sun-worshipping Druidical religion that I taught. When the Christosite priests gained a foothold in Ireland and Britain, findine that they could not destroy the respect of the people for ourselves and for our religious teachings, they called us saints and said that our sanctification had all come from Rome. By reference to the writings of Herodotns and Pliny you will find that the Phœnicians were trading with Britain long before their times, and went there to obtain tin, on which account they called Britain the Tin Island. You can, I think, by a very straight line of historical facts prove the truth of what I have sat here to-day."

In this communication we have, not only, the most absolute proof of the truth of Spiritualism, but of the power of ancient spirits to return and impart the most important historical facts. I have not been able to find any mention of Sit. Declan in any of the English or French Encyclopsedias or Bingraphical Dictionarins. It was only after much searching that I at length sureoded in finding the following mention of St. Declan in : Itistory of Ireland written in French by M. l'Abbe Ma-Geoghegath (Paris, 1758) vol. 1, 159 :
"Usserius, Colgan Wareus and others make mention of four holy bishops, whom Useerins calls the precursars of St. Patrick, becanse they had preached the grospel in Ireland, some vears tr-fore Pope Celestine charged him, St. Patrick, with the convorsion of the people of Ircland. These saints were Declan, Ailbe, Kicram, and Ibar. Usserius gives us an abridged history of the life, country, and mission of each of these saints. Declan, satid he, was the son of Ere, Prince of Namlesi, of the roval race of the Kings of Teanmer. He was apparently of the FianchaSuidna race, brother of Comn Keadeaha, whose deseembants were banished from Midia in the third century, becanse of their revolt, by King Connae-Ulfada, having heen baptized ly (onman, a priest distimguished tor his sametity, and atterwards appointed bishop, was instructed in Christian religion by Dymma; then recently returned from his native comatry.  (1) Imenal trom the How I'ontitl:"

This is all that we have been able to find in relation to St. Declan, but it is more than enough to establish the anthenticity and credibility of the communication which purported to come from his spirit. It is impossible to concei ve how any personating spirit could have given that communication, or why such a spirit should have sought to deceive us as to the identity of St. Declan. What then are the salient points of this unexpected Druidic testimony? 1st. That St. Deelan was a Druid follower of IESUS or HESUS, the designation of the Sun personified, and that he was not a Christian or a follower of Jesus Christ, as the lattor was set forth by the Roman Catholie Church. 2nd. That Christianity was not established in lreland in the time of St. Declan, St. Kieran, St. Albe and their contemporaries, and not until perhaps more than a hundred years later by some of the assistants of St. Augustin ; and 3il. That Druidism was derived from and was based upon the sumworshipping theology of the Phœenicians, who first propagated those theological doctrines in Western Europe, and notably in Spain and Gaul, whence it spread to Germany, Scandinavia, Britain and Ireland. That the Catholie Church should have canonized the Druid priest and leader Declan, and his successors in Ireland, as Christian saints, shows as nothing else could show, the close and intimate connection of Catholic Christianity with Druidical heathenism ; and we are thus led to a certain indication that Christianity, if anything at all, is, essentially, nothing more or less than the ancient heathen worship of the sun called by another name. It is seen that the spirit gave his name correctly, his place of residence and the time when he lived.
The spirit refers to the round towers of Treland as expressing or symbolizing the religion of which he was a priestly leader. We have thus the certain indieation that the round towers were Druidical structures devoted to the study and observation of the sun's course through the zodiacal constellations, and were, in that connection, as much astronomical observatories as sunworshipping temples. But we have also another most unexpected fact revealed by this distinguished Irish Druid priest and leader, and that is that the Druid religion was attended with a literature of which we have not been permitted to receive atrace. If it is true that the i)ruid serolls embraced some of the finest specimens of illuminated writing then in existence, it is very certain that there must have heen a very perfeet Druidical literature then extant, and perhapis for three, four, five or six centuries later. What has become of that literature? Let those people answer who have made Christian saints out of those heathen Druidical priests, and Christianity out of the Druidieal worship of the Sun under the name of Hesus; the latter religion having preceded Christianity in Ireland hy not less than from one thousand to twelve hundred years.

St. Declan declares that St. Patrick taught the same sun-worshipping religion in Ireland that he did, which ismost probably, if not certainly, true. It is a fact that nearly everything relating to St. Patriek is thrown into the greatest uncertainty because of the almost total destruction of the history of his labors and theological teachings. Declan speaks of the Christosite priests having at first sought to destroy the worship of Hesus under the teachings of the Druid priests, but having totally failed to make any impression upon the minds of the Irish people, they made a virtue of neeessity and set about making Christosite saints out of the Druid priestly teachers of Hesusism and claiming them as good orthodox Christians. This communication of Declan very plainly shows that the Hesusism of the Druds existed in Ireland long before Christosism was heard of there; and that when ('hristosism at hast suceeded in gaining a fouthold there, it was only hy adopting the ancient Druid priesthood and the stm-worship of the Irish people-christening their new venture, in the way of theological adoption, HesusChristosism; they, even, being content to put Hesus before their ('hristos in order to carry their point. Surely the truth is breaking through the elouds of theologieal duplieity and falseharil with which the word hats been so long enveloped.

We call upon the (hristian destroyers of ancient Druidistl to aceonnt for the absence of all historical evidence of what that religion was, and what beeame of it. Inleses they do this we must resard the testimony of the spirit of Devlan ats irrefutable. It has been falsely pretomded hy Christian writers that the Druids had now written denetrines or history, athl that they entrusted everything to the memory of their tewehers amb pupils. If this were true, it would make largely attended schools, is sufficiently shown by the grovetemples, in the open air, where rast assemblies convened to receive instruction, and to worship Hesus their sun god many hundred years before the returning soldiers of Alexander the Great brought a knowledge of the Hindoo religion concerning Christos among the Greeks and Romans in Europe. We are promised ample corroborative evidence, not only from spirit but mortal sources, of the truth of this most interesting and indeed important testimony of spirit Declan.

LEONARDO BRUNI.

An Italian Author.

"I salute you, sir :-That (making the sign of the Greek Cross with his forefingers) and that (making the sign of the Latin Cross in the same monner) have condemned more souls to ignorance, and perpetual contention, and opposition to truth, than all other things combined. I was not a theologian, and yet I had to disguise my true sentiment, in order to gain favor with Catholics and obtain a living. It will now be in order to give you a short history of my life. My name was Leonardo Bruni. I was engaged principally in literary matters, and by favor of the Medici family was promoted to the Secretaryship, of the (dovernment of Florence. I copied and endorsed a half dozen of the most absolute forgeries, which are now among the secret archives of the Vatican Library at Rome. They were intended to make the ediets of Theodosius appear as part of the deerees of the Roman Catholic Church, when in reality this was not the case. It secms there were two versions of the Christosite gospel. One was that given to the Greeks and Romans by Apollonius of Tyana, and the other was that which was brought among them by an Armenian, but unfortumately his name was erased from it. It appeared to me that the version of the Armenian was purer, and less corrupted than that of $A$ pollonius. But as the followers of Apollonins were the more numerous, and constituted the strongest party, Theodosius sided with them, and massacred the other party. The second manuseript of the six that I copied, bore upon the life of Apollonius, and purported to be by Philostratus, but it was evident that Eusebius had changed the whole of that work to suit the Christns and Hesus doctrines, leaving such parts as it would not henefit his purpose to alter, and omitting such parts as conflicted with his views. The thimd manuseript was an add Carthagenian docmment. This manuseript showed that the (onncil of Nice had appropriated the "les" of the Phomidiths and made it "Jes." The fourth doemment was an attempt to prove that leter was the first pope, when the word "pope" in that docmment clearly showed that it was not known until the time of Constantine, and that then it was only used as applied to bishops. The fifth manuscript showed that shortly before my time (11s0 or 1190) 1'ope Colestine 11I. destroyed all the documents he could find that gave direet information about Iarchns's or Apollonins's version of the Hindoo grospels; and that what he had not destroyed had been rewritten to suit the Christian idens of his time. The sixth manuseript that I had in my hands was a enpy of the Drndieal religion. It was beautifully written and showed plainly and positively that the Druid= werestrietly sun-worshippersand had instituted eertain rites of initiation peculiar to themselves. I pased to spirit lifes in 144, in Florence. I wats at heart, and secretly, a materialist."

This is a most remarkable communication in any light in which it may be viewed; but, viewed as an authentic and truthful communication, its importanee :ns a contribution to human knowledge camont be over estimated.

Refer to Biographie Universelle for aceont of Brmi.
This communication of Bruni wats given on Marelh 14, 1 sal. It eoatains a most remarkable empoboration of the eommanieation given hy ('hrestus, the rival of Apollonins of Tyanta, at Rome, inmidhleof the first century. It the ant hentioty of these the spirit textimony they contain can bo demonstratex, there most be an end of all further peremeo that any dew, whether Jesut ('hrist or l'aul of Tarsis, hatl ayythine to do with romposing any portion of the New Thetament. Wie will therefore submit the facts to fair, fearless and tathful analysis, in order that these two points maty ber corectly dewded.

At the thane that rommmication was eriven, we hat never haral of Leonardo Broni ; not did we know :nything of hit literary or otheish pextion, nor anything atomt hin whatever. It wat written down ats it fell from the medimm's lips hemexilf, at it is given. It then cortatily comme from somes spirit, whe, at the time, hat enntrol of the merlimen's physical organism.

This we know as certainly, as that we live. Who was that spirit, if not Bruni himself? Could not Bruni, having the desire to return and testify to what he knew, and having so perfect an opportunity to do so, as well control the medium's organism, as could any spirit who desired to personate him? But, besides, what motive could any spirit have in seeking to personate Bruni in that manner? To have done it the deceiver would have had to be as thoroughly informed about Bruni as himself, and his services as Apostolic Secretary to four popes, a thing which was only known to Bruni and his pontifical employers. The disclosures made in that communication would never have been made by anyone connected with the Roman Catholic Church, for the things therein stated could never be shown to be untrue, and hence would almost be as fatal to its theological assumptions as if shown to be true. Besides, no Roman Catholic spirit, sufficiently well informed to give that communication, would have done it. On the other hand, no one not a Roman Catholic spirit could have given that communication, except Leonardo Bruni himself. For these conclusive reasons, we insist upon the authenticity of the communication. The next question to be determined is, whether the communication is true. Why is it not true? Why would the spirit of the learned, trusted, and honored Bruni come back from the spirit-life to cover his soul with guilt by stating that which was not true? Would he have done it? Did he do it? It is absurd to imagine it, much less to believe it possible. There is, however, one contingency that it is only fair to consider; may the spirit not have fonnd it impossible to say what he intended through the medium. There is nothing about the communication which shows that the spirit was not testifying connectedly, logically, and satisfactorily to himself. In view of all the facts, thercfore, we conclude that the communication is as true as it is clearly expressed.

Let us now proceed to analyze the spirit's testimony and see whether it is in any way inconsistent with the strongest probalbility. The spirit, in closing, says he was a materialist at heart and secretly. He certainly could not have been a devout Roman Catholie, after coming to the knowledge which he says he did, as to the origin and nature of the Christian religion. It is hardly likely that every effort was not made to induce him to enter the priesthood, and take upon limself the vows of tidelity to the temporal and spiritual interests of the 1 foly Mother Church. It is not a little strange that a layman should have been chosen to be the apostolie secretary of the pope ; and that he should have comtinued to hold that confidential and important position through four consecutive pontifeates. The reason for this was, without doubt, his vast leaming and unasual lingual acguirements. At the time, during whirh Bromi hedd the oflice of apostolie secertary, as well as durinur the three preceding eenturies, the Cathorie Church, through its laity as well as its priestheord, was ransacking the world to find and destroy everything in the way of anciont literature that would throw any light on the history of the first tive centuries of the so-ealled Christian era. This work of Roman C'atholie vandalism was begun in carnest in the Pontificate of Hildebrand, who as pope, took the name of Gregory V'I , and was knownin church history as The Great Gregors: His first act in that direction was the burning of the Palatine Apollo at Rome. That library was founded by Augustus Casar, and eontained the literature of the preceding eleven handred years. Much of that literature was in the Greck, Asiatic and Afriean tongues, which were then but little known among the Latin speaking priesthood, and it was impossible for (iregory or his sulordinate clergy to know what that invaluable depository of harning eontane that would reveal the real origin and rhatacter of the religion of which he was the chosen heal. Foully yualitical hy mature for any erime that would be caldulated to promete or perpetnate the religions frame in which he was heant and somb engaged, he ordered the Library of the l'alatine $A$ pollo to he burned, with all its precions store of intormation. By such means did the Roman ('atholic ('hurch hope to eonceal the religions imposition they were seeking to fasten ugen the minds of hamanity for truth. But for the hons-ty of :an Engli-h monk, Johnoffalishury, who, in the twelth econtury, reoorded that pontifical act of vantalism, it would have been impossible to hate fastenw that erime "umen that mesmpmose sum wieked foe of truth, The (ireat (iregory. It wothd semen that in the fittereth ant tury, the latin elergy were me better qualitied thath these when preaded them to know what was contained in the (ireck :and in the time of Broni ; for, if they had been that elmen would not has found it-celf compelled to entrust the translation of these manuscripts to a person who had not taken upon himself the priestly vows. The office to which Bruni was called is designated "apostolic secretary." What were the duties of that office? Just such duties as the spirit of Bruni says he was engaged in ; that of translating such missives and manuscripts as the Latin popes were unacquainted with. Thus, it seems clear that the spirit's statement that he was put in possession of documents such as he described, is most probable, if not certainly true. Finding hisstatements true and consistent in so many respects, it raises the presumption that they were equally true as to the rest of the testimony.

He could have uttered no greater truth than when he said that the Catholic Cross had condemned more souls to ignorance, perpetual contention and opposition to truth, than all other things combined; if by the Catholic cross we are to understand the church or religion of which it is the symbol. It was no doubt to do his part in counteracting that fearful injustice to humanity, that Bruni returned and gave that pregnant testimony. He tells us that it was through the influence of the Medici family that he was promoted to the Secretaryship of the Government of Florence. This fact is not stated in any of the mentions of Bruni that we have found. It is, however, no doubt true, from the fact that the influence of the Medici in Florentine affairs, at that time, was of an overuling power. He does not say how he came to be appointed apostolic secretary to Innocent III, the pope who undertook to complete the work which was begun by the papal incendiary, The Great Gregory ; but, it is manifest, that it was on account of his superior learning ; for, not only was he not a priest, but he was very young at the time he was chosen. Neither does he tell us when it was that he copied and endorsed the six works or manuscripts of which he speaks; but, we have every reason to suppose it was while he was acting as apostolical secretary, and most likely during the pontificate of Innocent III. We merely notice these matters as showing the general consistency of the whole narration. Passing from these introductory portions of the communication we come to that portion which indicates the especial purpose of the spirit's coming back to the earth. He says;
" I copied and endorsed a half dozen of the most absolute forgeries which are now among the secret archives of the Cati-can Library, at Rome. They were intended to make the ediets of Theodosius appear as part of the decrees of the Roman Catholie Chureh, when, in reality, this was not the case. It seems there were two versions of the (laristosite gospele." One he tells us, was that given to the firecks and Romans hy Apollonitus of Tyana, and the other was that which was brought among them ly and Amenian; but unfortunately his name was erased from it. "It appeared to me," said he, "that the version of the Armenian was purer, and less corrupted than that of A pollonins; but, as the followers of A pollonins were the more numerons, and constituted the stronger party, Theodosius sided with them and massacred the other party."

In that statement of the spirit of Bruni, we have given to us the key that unlocks the eloset in whieh has so long been concealed the skeleton of truth, murdered by the Roman Catholic chureh. In order that the realer may the better eomprehend its startling import, we will have to make an inconveniently lengthy quotation concerning the theological and ecelesiastical doings of Theodosius, to whom the spirit refers. To do this ats it should be done would require the limits of an extensive essay. But this will not be expected of us at this time. Treating of Theodosilus, smith's Dietionary of Greek and Roman Biography, says:
"Therdosilus was the son of a Christian father whose ancestors acknowledged the ereed of Niaca; ; and next to ('onstantine he became the great glorg of the Christian chureh. The merits of (iratian swoured him from the orthotos ('hristians a rank equivalent the that of saint ; and after his death they fombl a worthy suceesor to his orthodoxy in the more vigurous emperor of the East. Theos. 16, tit. I.s. 2̈) ambl bramled with the name of hereties all whodisented from the imperlal ered."

We here eopy what (iibhentestys of that ediet in his Dereline and Fall of the Roman Empure, Vol. 5, chap. 27:
 he reevised the sacrament of haptiom from Ancolins, the orthodox hishop of Thesatonita; and asthe empern :asembed trom the holy font, still glowing with the warm feelings of regeneration, he dictated a solemn edict, which proclaimed his own faith, and preseribed the religion of his subjects. It is our pleasure (such is the imperial style) that all the nations, which are governed by our clemency and moderation should steadfastly adhere to the religion that was taught by St. Peter to the Romans, which faithful tradition has preserved, and which is now professed by the Pontiff Damasus, and by Peter, bishop of Alexandria. According to the discipline of the apostles and the doctrine of the gospel, let us believe the sole deity of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, under an equal Majesty and a pious Trinity, we authorize the followers of this doctrine to assume the title of Catholic Christians; and as we judge that all others are extravagant madmen, we brand them with the name of heretics, and declare that their conventicles shall no longer usurp the respectable appellation of churehes; besides the condemnation of divine justice, they must expect to suffer the severe penalties which our authority, guided by heavenly wisdom, shall think proper to infliet on them."

If that is a true version of the ediet of the emperor, Theodosius, it establishes several facts beyond reasonable controversy. 1st. That Theodosius was frightened, by a serious illness, into becoming a convert to the doctrines professed by Pope Damasus and Peter, the bishop of Alexandria. In this edict, Peter, the bishop of Alexandria, must have been as high theological and ecelesiastical authority, in the estimation of Theodosius, as was the Pontiff Damasus. It is, therefore, quite clear that a bishop, at the time of issuing that edict, was of equal rank and authority with that of the Roman Pontiff. 2d. In the time of Theodosius, A. D. 379, there was no authentic record of what St. Peter had taught to the Romans, and all that Theodosius ventured to claim, on that head, was, that those alleged teachings "lad been preserved by faithful traditions." If there had been in existence, any authentic teachings of St. Peter to the Romans, Theodosius must have known of it ; and, as he did not, and based hisaction upon "traditional statements" ouly, it is very certain that the Christian Scriptures were not regarded as historical records of the events they narrated, by Theodosius, or that St. Peter did not teaeh the doctrines therein contained to the Romans. Remember that this was more than fifty years after the Council of Niee had canonized the A pollonian Gospel and Epistles eoncerning Christos-Prometheanism. What then were the faithfully preserved traditions concerning the teachings of St. Peter to the Romans, to which Theodosios in his edict alludes? We leave the reader to answer as his or her reason dictates. 3d. Until Theodosius commanded his suljeets to beliese in the doctrine of the Trinity, and enforced his commands upon them ly the most inhuman methotis, that doctrine was rejeeted and resisted by the Greek and Roman followers of the Christes of the Hindoo Gospels, the only Christos that was then known. That so senseless and umatural a doctrine should have been forced upon any people, by any means, however tyrannical, is a mystery even more mysterious than the arithmetic that can make one three, and three one. 4th. Until Theodosius issued that edict, there were no rersons at Rome or elsewhere who had been called "Catholie" Christians. If there had been, Theodositus would not have felt it necessary to say to his Roman subjects: "We authorize the followers of this doctrine" (the Trinity) "to assume the title of Catholic Christians." Prior to that time they had not assumed that title, or if they had done so, they had done it without adequate athority under the laws of Rome. 5th. And finally the persecutions instituted ly the Christian Theodosius, were visited upon the Arian followers of the same Christos, whose teachings Theodosins professed to follow, and not upon the followers of the so-called heathen gods of the Roman Pantheon. Indeed, it becomes more and more evident that in the reign of Theodosius, the worship of the other gods of the people of the Roman Empire had been abandoned for the Apollonian and ('hrestusite versions or modificat ions of the Christosite teachings of the Brahmans and Butdhists of India.

Now, in order to give the reader an itea of what the religions controversy was about, in whieh 'itheondosins took so conspicuous a part as a higoted, cruel, and cowardly partisan, we ferl warranted in referring them to (iibbon's "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," Vol. 5 , chap. 27.

It was in the mamer set forth in (ibibon's work above referred to, that Christianity was fastened upon the Lenman world, in the latter part of the fourth century, prior to which time such a thing as a Christian chureh was unkmon. Before that time the followers of C'hrist, as (ibhben and the ehureh historians call them, were the followers of $A$ pollonius of Ty: ma, and Chrestus, his opponent, who loth tanght the doetrimes attributed to ('hristos in the Brahmanical and Buddhistic religions of India. This will beeome apparent when the commumication of Chrestus as already given, see page 441, is re-read. It is the church that was founded by sueh measures as those resorted to by Theodosius, that to-day is secking to subvert the religious liberty of the people of A:nerica, and whose impious minions aim to subordinate it to the gowned humbug of Rome. If any religion was ever conceived in sin and brought forth in iniquity, it is the religion which Theodosius and his priestly minions, by violence and most iniquitous persecutions, fastened upon the Roman world. Remember that the vietims of their crnelty were as much, or even more so, worshippers of God and Christ than themselves, and that their only offence was, that as followers of Christ they refused to have the ancient worship of Christos subverted by those whom Theodosius in his ediets called "Catholie Christians." The Arians were the followers of Christos, as his doctrines were tanght to Alexander the Great, and his Macedonian Generals, by Calanus, the Gymmosophic Christosite, while Theodosius and his party of Christosites adhered to the Christosite teachings of A pollonius of Tyana, with perhaps a few unimportant modifications. The two versions of the Christosite gospel, of whieh tliespirit, Bruni, speaks, as constituting the first of the manuseripts whieh he says he copied, in order to show that Theodosius' ediets were a part of the deerees of the Roman Catholic chureh, and related to Jesus Christ instead of to the Apollonian teachings concerning the Hindoo Christ or Christos, were no doubt in existence as late as the early part of the fifteenth eentury. Where are they now? The spirit thinks, or says, they are in the secret arehives of the Roman Catholie chureh, at Rome. If that is correct, the world may yet know just what those two versions of the Findoo Christosite gospel were. But there are several points, which are worthy of particular notice, concerning them. 1st. The spirit says that one of them was inseribed with the name of Apollonius, while the other had the name of its author, copier or compiler, erased from it. Why was that done? Who was he? Bruni says he was an Armenian, but does not tell us why he so concluded. Whether he was told so by those who ordered him to copy that manuseript, or whether he so concluded from the general tenor of the manuseript itself, he does not say. For rasons that we made plain in our comments on the communication we received from Chrestus, we conelude that the writer of that version was not an Armenian, but a Macedonian, and none other than the man known to history as Chrestus. 2l. That the version, the name of the writer of which was erased from it, was the purer and less corrupted of the two Christosite gospels. Sd. That in the tine of Theodosius, the Apollonian Christosites were thestronger party, and that on that aceount he sided with them and massacred the other party. As we before said, it was at the time that Theodosius issued his first edict against the opposite party of Christosites that any body of religionists were called Catholie Christians; and then, for the first time, what is now called (hristianity, hat its inception. We lave the testimony of seveal other spirits, which all combine to show, in the most conclusive manner, that this part of the testimony of Lemardo Brmi is true.

The spirit tells us that the second manuseript put into his hands to be copied, bore upon the life of Apollonits, and purported to be by Philostratus, but that it was evident that Eusehins had modified the whole of that work to suit the Christos and Hesus doctrines, &e. Whether the spirit is right in charging Eusebius with altering and mutilating Philostratus' "Life of A pollonius," we camot certainly know; but certainly the learned and eritical Bruni had every qualification to judge correctly on that peint. As to the biography of Apollonitus, by Philostratus, having been most shamefully and dishonestly mutilated and changed, before the time of Drma, is certain, and that it was mutilated aad altered by Catholie ('luristians to conceal the fact that Apollonius of Tyana, and mot Jesus Christ, was the introdueer of what Theodosins called Catholie Christianity among the (ireck and Latin speaking peoples.

The spirit tells us that the third mannseript that he copied was an obd Carthagenian document which showed that the (omet of Niee hat appropriated the god "Ies" of the Phenicians, and made it "Jos." Again we are comperled to take the words of the spirit for what they are worth, as without the inspetion of the document which the spirit says he eopied, we cammot be certain alout it. Bhet it is a fact that ('arthare was a Phonician colony, and the worship of lawelas under the name "I s" mo doubt prevaled there until atter the third "entury of the (hristian era. If some Carthagenian writer knew of the adoption of the ('arthagenian gow "les" mader the modificel name of "Jes," it was not out of ancestral pride lee made a special reference to such a triumph of the religion of his Phœnician ancestors, especially in view of the fact that the once enterprising Phomician people had been brought under the hand of Roman supremacy. Why the spirit should have mentioned the existence of such a Carthagenian manuseript, if it did not exist and he did not have it in his hands, as he states, it is very difficult to conceive. We therefore believe it to be truc. If it is true, the identity of the "Ies," or Sun-god of the Phœenicians, with the Jesus of the canonical scriptures of the Comucil of Nice is very certain. The spirit of Constantine the Great, by whose command that Council was convened has returned and stated the same fact, admitting that he sought to blend the religions which were predominant in his empire, by adopting the gods that were then principally worshipped by his subjects. The Phœnicians, after colonizing the then eivilized world,had ceased to exist, as a distinct people, but their religion, which was essentially the worship of the Sta under the name "Ies," pronounced " yes," had been established all along the southern shores of the Mediterranean sea, had passed into Spain, Ganl, Germany, Scandinaria and the British Islands, where it crowded upon the more ancient Zoroastrian religion, or fire-worship which had been established there long lefore by Assyrian or Persian migration. At all events there is nothing in the testimony of the spirit that is not consistent with the strongest probabilities on that particular point.

The spirit says the fourth document which he copied was an attempt to prove that Peter was the first pope, when the word pope in that document plainly showed that it was not known until the time of Constantine, and then was only used as applied to bishops. This point of the spirit's testimony is fully borne out by the fact that the Greek Catholies have never, to this day, recognized St. Peter as a Foman Catholic pope, or a pope of Rome. As it is plainly shown by the ediet of Theodosius, given above, there was no religions sect called Catholic Christians until Theodosius decreed that his party of Christosites should be called Catholic Christians. Whether Broni eopied such a manuscript as he states, bearing upon that point, we must take his word for it, but it is certainly in $n 0$ way contradicted by any established historical fact.

Celestine III destroyed all the documents he could find that gave direct information about Iarchus's or Apollonius's version of the Hindoo gospels ; and that what he had mot destroyed had been re-written to suit the Christian ideas of his time. Pope (elestine II I was pope in 1191 and no doubt helped as far as he could, to destroy all trace of the Mindoo origin of the ('hristian religion, a work that had been begun hy Gregory VII, when he ordered the burning of the Library of the Palatine Apollo at Rome, about 1075 A . D., and which Imocent III followed up with so much earnest ness and meserupulous zeal. That Celestine III was especially engaged in that same work is mow made known for the first time. No one dare deny that A pollonius did visit India, that he there studied the Hindoo Christosism under Iarchus, who was the Pariareh of the Reformed Buldhistie seet, and that he returned into the Roman empire bringing with him the Iarehian version of the Buddhistic gospels concerning the Hindoc) (lhrist. It is hardly less certain that Apollonius was not only greatly enamored with the philowopy of the larchian go-pels, but that he regardel Hindoo wistom and philosoghy as far before those of the (irecks amd [Romans. This is mate very plain by what hats been allowed to come down to ns of the Biography of $A_{\text {pollo- }}$ nius, hey Philositatus. It is also eertain that the Catholie Christian elergy have taken expecial pains to obliterate everything that wothly show what those Itindes (ionelels were, or how Apellonits comstred them in the philemphy which he tanght. That the ('atholie Christian chureh han some expecially gron reason for concealing everything they posibly eonld about the Emonian Christosite teachings of Apollonits is pertertly manifert in the pains they have taken to aceomplish that eomcealment. They did not supmee that the time would ever come when the truth wonld bre known through returning spirits whese earthy labors they were seekine toapprepriate with the most maloly and seltish aths and pupmere. This is now an acomplished and demonstrated fact ; and eonstitutes the the reign of touth on carth.

 he refored was ar cople of the Druadisal religion. De satse it was beatifully written, and showed phanly aml poitively that the Druids were sun-worshippers, and had instituted certain rites of initiation peculiar to themselves. It is not a little significant that the Catholic Christian church has been just as careful to conceal or destroy everything relating to the Druidical religion as they have been to conceal or destroy everything relating to the teachings of Apollonius of Tyana. When we know that the former religion was nothing more or less than the worship of the Sun under the designation of the god, or divine man, Hesus; and the latter nothing more or less than the worship of the sun under the desiguation of the god or divine man Christos, we certainly need not be at a loss to know why those religionists who sought to steal and appropriate this same sun-god or divine man, under the combined name of Hesus Christos, as a new god, having no relation to either of the appropriated gods, songht to destroy or conceal the truth abont their stolen and spurious deity. It is rarely, indeed, such a vast array of information has come from any returned spirit as is contained in this communication from Leonardo Bruni. The spirit, it appears, did pass to spirit life in $1+44$, as he states.

The communication from Chrestus, will be found on page 441 which not only confirms this communication of Bruni but is itself confirmed in the most remarkable manner by Brmi's testimony. To those who desire to know the truth in relation to the origin, nature, and objects of the Christian religion, nothing can anywhere be found that can compare with these, to ourself astounding spirit revelations. It is unfortunate that there are too few who can duly comprehend and appreciate their momentous import. These testimonies are what the world needs to know. We beseech those who cognize their importance to exert themselves to help us extend the circulation of them. Only in that way will mankind be prepared for the greater revelations that lic beyond.

ST. DOMINIC DE GUZMAN. Founder of the Dominican Order.

[^9]in his persecution of the Albigenses, the spirit has allusion to the war carried on by orders of the Roman Pontiff against Count Raymond of Toulouse, during which the miost cruel butcheries of peaceful human beings any where recorded in history, took place. As we said before, we cannot know how truthfully the spirit spoke as being repentant, but if he spoke truthfully about the matter, the power of Catholicism is fast coming to pieces in spirit life. Whether it is or not, the coming of these spirits show that there is some powerful influences exerted against it that brings dismay to the hearts of the most obdurate of these leaders.

LOUIS THE PIOUS.

King of France and Emperor of Germany.

Abstract

"I greet you, sir :-I was known when here as Louis the Meek, a king, in A. D. $8 \cdot 4$ and later. I was the propagator of the teachings of Dionysius the Areopagite. It was called the religion or teaching of the Mystics. This Dionysius has been supposed to have lived at four distinet periods, in the first, third, fourth, and fifth centuries, by different writers. The fact of the matter is, that he was a disciple of Apollonius of Tyana, and lised in the first century. The mysticism that he taught was a combination of the Eleusinian Mysteries with the Christosite teachings of A pollonius. The manner in which I received a knowledge of them was, through one Balbus, an advocate of those mystical teachings. They were in fact the doctrines of Jupiterean-Christosism; but for seven hundred years after my time they were so timpered with and altered by religious fanatics, who called themselves mystics, that they bear very little evidence now of their original character. The sum and substance of the whole of the doctrines of the Mystics was, that they rested on the divine (so-called) history of Clhristos. In the Eleusinian Mysteries it was represented that when Latona was with child by Jupiter, she gave birth to Adonai ; but, in the modification of that doctrine, as it was taught by Dionysius the Arieopagite, she gave birth to Christos, and it was to this god to which the theology of the Mystics related. On my reaching the spirit life I made the most diligent seareh to find this god Christos, but although I have met the spirits of millions of his followers, none of them could say they had ever seen him. The Christians have tampered very much with the teachings of the mystics, and they are now using them, so modified, as their own."

Refer to Nouvelle Biographie Generale for accomnt of Louis the I'ious.

In the account given of Louis the Pious, as above referred to there is not a word said that would indieate that he was a follower and teacher of the Mystic religion. If such was the fact, we can well understand why the Christian bishops were so bitterly hostile to him. They no doubt had some special reason for that hostility, other than their partiality for Lothate. That reason has been carefully suppressed, if Lonis was the heretic, which, as aspirit, he clams to have been, and an active encourager of the mystical teachings of Dionysius the Arenpagite. But as we cannot determine thereby the authenticity and truthfulness of the eommunication which purports to come from Louis the Pious (Loulis the Meek as he called himself), we must look to some other source to be able to do so. By the by, there is great significance in this difference in designation. The spirit manifestly did not want to be regarded as a pions man, in the (hristian meaning of the term, but admitted he was mele, as his whole history shows him to have been, in his forbearanee with his ('hristian enemies.

Loutis the Meek sets out by telling us that he was the prop:agator of the teachings of Diongsius the A reopagite who wats the fomber of the Mystie school of theokey and philosophy. Who was this Dimysins? We take the following enncerning him from Smith's Dic* ionary of (ireek and Roman Biegraphy :
"Dionywins, smmamed Areopagite, an Athenian, who is (alleal bernidas a most eminent man, who rose to the height of (irenk ermbition. H1 is satid th have first studied at Athons, atm afterwarla at Heliopolis in Eerypt. When he oheremed, in (iod himself is suthering or he sympathizes with some one who is sufferine. On his return to Alhems he was male one of the conncil of Sreopernc, whene he derives his surnatme. About the tirst hishop of Athens, but that he was installed in that office by St. Paul himself (Euseb. H. B. iii, 4, iv, 23; Suidas). He is further said to have died the death of a martyr under most cruel tortures. Whether Dionysius Areopagite ever wrote anything, is highly uncertain; but there exists under his name a number of works of a Mystico Christian nature, which contain ample evidence that they are the productions of some Neo-Platonists, and could scarcely have been written before the fifth or sixth century of our era. Without entering upon any detail about those works, which would be out of place here, we need only remark that they exercised a very great influence upon the formation and development of Christianity in the middle ages. At the time of the Carlovingian emperors, those works were introduced into Western Europe in a Latin translation made by Scotus Erigena, and gave the first impulse to that mystic and seholastic theology which afterwards maintained itself for centuries."

Here we have a most conclusive demonstration that in relation to his propagation of the Mystic Theology of Dionysitus the Areopagite, the spirit of Louis the Meek told the exact truth, for he was the very Carlovingian emperor whose acceptance of that theology gave the impetus to that mystic and scholastic theology which afterwards maintained itself tor centuries in Western Europe. It is, therefore, a demonstrated fact that the works of Dionysius the Areopagite were those which Scotus Erigena translated from the Greek into Latin, no doubt at the instance of the Carlovingian emperor, Louis the Meek; and, that instead of the originals having been written by some Neo-Platonist in the fifth or sixth century, they were written by Dionysius himself in the first century, as they purport to have been. It was, no doubt, to get rid of this manifest fact, that a question was attempted to be raised as to whether he wrote anything. It would be singular, indeed, if this "most eminent man," who rose "to the height of Greck erudition," had never written anything. The inconsistency of such a suggestion of doubt upon that point is in the extreme pitiful. If those books, as translated into Latin by Scotus Erigena, are still in existence, we can very certainly know just what Dionysius the Areopagite did write in the first century, and we have in those writings a correct version of the teachings of that diseiple of Apollonius of Tyana. To show how anxious even so learned a Christian as Dr. Lardner was to get rid of Dionysius the Areopagite and his writings, we will quote vol, ii., page 687 (London, 1829), of his works. He says:
"I need not stay to show that our Dionysius of Alexandria did not write any notes or commentaries upon the pretended Dionysins the Areopagite (as some have thought), it having been already done by others. And, as Tillemont says, there are now scarce any persons, of ever so little learning, who believe the works ascribed tost. Dionysins the Areopagite were composed so early ats the third century.
"It has been observed how few of Dionysins' works, either tracts or cpistles, have come down to us entire. D) lim says, the loss of his works is one of the most considerable of this kind which we could suffer. We have, however, divers fratments, which are very valuable, and some of considerable length."

From the testimony of Lonis the Meek, the Carlovingian emperor and propagator of the Mystie Theology of Dionysins, given throngh at medium who contd not have had any knowledge about the matter, that the loss of the works of Dionysius, which Du Pin deplores, and which Dr. Lardner rejoices at, is not so great as either of them imagine. Those works are in existence, bevend all reasonable question in the Latin translation of them by seotns Erigenat. Who, that desires to have the truth known foncerning the origin of the Christian religion, ean over-matimate the importance of this spirit revelation of the truth in relation to Dionysius the Areopagite, his theologieal teachings, :and the continned existence of his writings? We confess that we were startled beyond expression, ats fact after fact burst upon us, all concurring in absolutely corrohorating the testimony of this imperial propagator of the Mystic Theobory of Dionysins. The dispute abont the time when Dionysitus lived, of which the spirit spoke, was in relation to the date of the writings which have been attributed to him, Which was ats widrly varied in peint of time as the spirit states.

But we now eone to at more suprising statement of the spirit, when he says: "The fate of the matter is that he (I)ionysills) was a dixciple of Apollonitus of Tyana, athe liwal in the tirst century." We hatwe, in the course of the prat four or five yatre, published volmace of epirit teatmony on the part of the spirits of ancient men and womell of historical note, all conemring in showing that dpollomins of 'igana was the st. I'alul of the New Te-tament, and the real fommer of the ('hristian religion; but mothing that hats heretofore heen given has been more enthelusive of that fact thath this testimony of Lomis the Meek. If it is true that Dionysius the Areopagite was a disciple of A pollonius of Tyana, and left a Mystic Theology, the written doetrines of which eame into the hands of Louis the Meek, then there is no escape from the conclusion that Apollonius of Tyana was the Paul of Acts.

We find it said, Acts xvii., 33, 34, that after Paul had spoken to the people of Athens in the midst of Mars Hill, "So Paul departed from among them. Howbeit, certain men elave unto him, and believed; among the which was Dionysius the Areopagite, and a woman named Damaris, and others with them." Here we have Dionysius the Areopagite identified as the adherent of Paul of The Aets of the Apostles. Now we have the positive testimony of the spirit of Louis the Meek that not only was he a propagator of the teachings of Dionysius the Areopagite, but that the latter was a disciple of the Christosite teachings of A pollonius of Tyana. If this was not the fact, why would the spirit have testified that it was so? As there are so many concurring circumstances to show that the general testimony of the spirit is correet, why should we doubt the correctness of that part of his testimony? We can see no good reason why we should doubt it, and therefore accept it as truthful and eorreet.

The spirit says that the Mysticism taught by Dionysius the Areopagite was a combination of the Eleusinian Mysteries, the Christosite teachings of Apollonius of Tyana, and that they were the doetrines of Jupiterian-Christosism. He then tells us that in the Eleusinian Mysteries it was represented that when Latona was with ehild by Jupiter, she gave birth to Adonai ; but, in the modification of that doctrine, as it was taught by Dionysius the Areopagite, she gave birth to Christos, and that it was to the latter god to whom the theology of the mysties related. It would seem that the spirit used the designation Adonai for Latona's son as equivalent to the designation A pollo, by which name he was known to mankint. Both designations, however, mean the Sun in Summer, as did the designation which Dionysius the Areopagite used as applicable to the same child of Latona, the Christos of the Hindoos, which, as a convert to the teachings of Apollonius of Tyama, he sought to substitute for the Greek mythical personifieation of the same Summer Sun. In this, Dionysius was no doubt governed by the fact that the Greek myth was but a more modern imitation of the original Hindoo myth. If the works attributed to Dionysins the Areopagite show the teachings of that celebrated founder of the Mystical Theology to have taught what the spirit of Louis the Meek says he did, then there can be no doubt whatever that those writings were really the produetion of that learned (ireck; a fact which Christian eritics have labored so hard to disprove. Why? Becathe, it Dionysius the Areopagite was a Christosite follower of A pollonius of Trana, athd not a Christian follower of St. Panl, as The Acts declare he was, the identity of Patul and 1 pollonius, as one and the same person, is made certain, and the whole Christian Seriptures are shown to be a plagiarized version of the Hindoo theology concerning Christos, and ean bave no rehation to Jesus of Nazareth, or Jesus Christ, whatever. If we can ever find the time and means to reproduce in English the Latin version of the teachings of Dionysius the Areopagite, as franslated into Latin by scotus Erigena, we will do it ; for therein we know that we shall find the positive proof that Christianity is nothing more than a spurions counterfeit of the ancient Hindoo theology.

The spirit tells us that on his reaching the spirit life he made the most diligent seareh to find, not Jesus Christ, but the god ('hristos, about whom Dionysius the Areopagite had written; and that although he lat met millions of the followers of that grod, he had found no one who eould say they had seen him. It thus appears that Christos, in the Hindoo theology, was as much a myth, and as far from being a man or spirit, as Jesus ('hrist the spurions imitation of him is. Of the Batbus, of whom the spirit of Louls the Meek speakes, as to the person who converted him to the Mystic theology of Donsins, we can find no historical mention. The name would indicate that he was of Roman extraction. The date A. D. set, given hy the pirit as the time he received the writings of Diongsius the Areopagite and his eonversion to his dostrines is gute consistent with probability, as L duis wats in the middle of his reign at that time, which lewan in 814 and eontinned to sto. Inderd the commmanation affords a very remarkable explanation as to the manner in which the works of Dionysins the Areopagite were introlned in Wiestern Eimene in the time of the (arlovingitn Fimperors, and how it wan hat his mystice and scloblastical theology tork sucharoot there, that it mantained iteselfor centuries.

At this point we had closed our review of the communication, having no thought of pursuing the subject, when we had another sitting with the medium, whose spirit guidesuid: "Mr. Roberts, the spirit of Louis the Meek could not tell you who the Balbus was from whom he nbtained the knowledge of the teachings of Dionysius the Areoparite. He says he was strongly opposed by the spirits, who did all they could to prevent him from telling you anything about the matter. He wanted to tell you that the Balhus of whom he spoke was Michael Balbus the emperor of Constantinople. He says he succeeded Leo the Armenian." Julge of my surprise on following the clew that was thus most unexpectedly given, to find conclusive proof that the information was correct in every essential respect. Not only was Michacl Balbus the imperial contemporary of Louis le Debonmare, but he has always been regarded as an enemy of the Roman Catholic Church. I take the following brief account of Michael Balbus from Rose's Biographical Dictionary:
"Michael II., emperor of the East surnaned the Stammerer, a native of Armoricum in Phrygia, was an officer of rank under Nicephorus, and was a principal instrmment in raising Lee the Armenian to the throne. After the murder of Leo (Dee. S20), Michael was invested with the purple. Though he favored the Iconoclasts, he permitted the worship of images beyond the precincts of the capital. He is therefore reckoned among the enemies of the Catholic Chureh."

We may thus see that nothing is more probable than that there was a close boud of sympathy existing between the two emperors, Louis of France and Germany, and Michael Balbus of the Eastern Roman Empire, who were alike the enemies of the Catholic Chureh. It was quite natural that a Phrygian, as Michael Balbus was, whose mative language was Greek and who had at his command the vast stores of ancient Greek literature that had been collected at Constantinople, should have met there with the writings of Dionysius the Areopagite, and have been so impressed by them as to desire to seek to propagate them. With that view, no doubt, he sent Greek copies of them to Louis the Meek who had them translated into Latin and not improbably by Seotus Erigena. Indeed it would seem that Scotus was the person who brought the writings of Dionysius the Areopagite from Michael Balbus to Louis le Debonnaire. As the absolute proof of the truth of this communication goes very far to settle the identity of St. Paul with Apol-lonins of Tyana, as well as of the New Testament itself with the writings of Apollonius, a brief aceonnt of Seotus Erigena may not be out of place here. The Encyelopedia Amerieana says of him:
"Erigena (John Seotus). The birth plare of this cminent seloolar and metaphysieian has been disputed ; notwithstanding the patronymic nsually atlixed to his name, signifying the Irishman, the weight of evidence serms to predominate in favor of Ayershire in seotland. It an early age he visited Greere, and emperially Athens, where he devoted himself to the study ot Oriental as well ats chassical literature, and became no mean protiedent in logie and philosophy: Charles the Bahd, king of Frame, invited him to his court, and encouraged him in the production of some metaphysical disquisitions, which gave great offence to the chureh by the boldness with which he impnged the doetrines of transubstantiation and predestination. But his grand offence was the translating into Latin of a pretented work of Dionysins the Areopagite, the suppesed fist ('hristian preacher in France Many pasages in this treatise, although popular among the clergy of the East, were extremoly otmoxions to the Romish hierarehy ; and a peremptory order from Pope Nicholas to Charles, commanding the immediate tram-mision of the enlprit to Rome, indued that monate to combive at his meape into Engrand, in preference to delivering him $\quad$ p to the vengeane of the papal see Alfred the (ireat reecibed Erigenal glatly, and phaced himat the head of the establishment hately foumed hy him at Oxford, then ealled the King's Latl, and now more genemally known as Brazomose (oblage. The thane of his derease or umbler for he is said to hatwe been stabled to death by his sololare, with iron styles or tratkins, that the jatoney of the monks rather than the insuberdination of his proile, wat the real c:ase of his 小"ath, in at much : : hiv heterodoxy hand wiven weat offene th their fraternity. This statement of fiwti has, howewr, Som, with eotriderable with another John Scot, abbot of Ethelingay, who taught at Oxford. In proof of the latter supposition, Mackensie, in his first volume of Scottish writers, quotes a letter from Anastasius Bibliothecarius to Charles the Bald, written in 875, which speaks of Erigena as then dead. Doctor Henry in his History of England, thinks it probable that he died in France. A treatise written by him with great acuteness and metaphysical subtilty, De Division Naturæ, was published in Oxford, in folio, by Doctor Gale, in 16S1. A work of his, against transubstantiation, entitled De Corpore at Sanguine Domini, is also extant, printed in 1558. He is said to have been as celebrated for his wit as for his learning."

Through the communication of the spirit of Louis the Meek, we have the fact established that the work which Scotus Erigena translated into Latin, was really the writing of Dionysius the Areopagite, and not a pretended work of that author of what has been acknowledged to be mystical theology. We have, therefore, in that Latin translation of Dionysius's theological writings, an extant approximation to the theological teachings, not of St. Paul, whose convert it is alleged he was, but of the writings of Apollonius of Tyana, whose convert he really was. This most important theological fact is made positively certain by the damaging blunder of the writer of The Acts, in alluding to the fact that Dionysius the Areopagite was a convert to the preaching of Paul at Athens. We can very well understand why the work that Erigena translated was pronounced spurions by the Roman hierarehy, and why they should have sought to destroy the man who possessed such perfect knowledge of the real origin and character of the religion they were propagating as something that was genuine and original. Why should the translation of a spurious work have cansed such an alarm at Rome? If it could have been demonstrated that the work attributed to Dionysius the Areopagite was not the work of that writer, it is preposterous to suppose that such a deadly purpose would have been aroused against Scotus Erigena; and which seems to have followed him until his murder was accomplished. It was because the Roman hierarchy could not successfully deny the gentineness of the work which he translated, that they sought to destroy this man, who was perhaps alone qualified to attest its genuineness. But the especial point we want to make in this connection is, that it was, in all probability, Scotus Erigena, who procured the eopy of Dionysius the Areopagite's work when in the East, while yet a young man, and perfecting himself in the knowledge of classical and Oriental literature. On his roturn from that journey, it is highly prohable that he returned hy way of France, where he became known to Iouis the Meek, at whose instance, and under whose protection he published his Latin translation of the theological works of Dionysius the Areopagite. It was no doubt on this aeconnt that Charles the Bahl, the sont of Louis the Meok, ealled him to his eourt, and became his patron and proteetor against the Ioman hierarelys.

In view of all the filets adduced, we are impressed with the comviction that though this commmaication from the spirit of Louis the Meek, we have been brought to the threshold of the depository in which is to be fonnd the long kept secret of the founders and propagators of the ('hristian religion, the knowledge of whieh when once in possession of the world, will put an end to the impions, mental, moral, and spiritual tyranmy, which has so long been perpetrated hy them. Nothing is more eertain than that we have a Latin version of the theologieal teachings of Dionysins the Areogangte in the translation of Geotus Erigena. It is heanse it isatrue version of the writings of the former that its gemuineness, or the gemanmeness of the original (ireek, from whieh the translation was made, has been denied hy ('hristian writers. The spirit says that Dionysins the Areopagite was a eonvert to the doctrines of $A$ pollonitus, and tanght his ('hristosite doctrines eombined with the Elensinian mysteries and repenmoniads. It is undoubtedly this evident finet, as diselosed in Feotus Erigrema's Latin translation, that mate the ('atholie ('hareln sor hostile to him ; and to seek to discredit the work he, seotus, attributed to Dionysins the Areopagite. In their hostility to that learbed writer, the Catholic hierarehy betrayed the seeret they somerht to conceal, and which has been complately revealed hy the spirit eommatinication of Iouis the Merk.

CELESTINE III.

A Roman Pontiff.

"I salute you, sin:-I am here, to-day, as a friend, although I expected to come as a foe. I thought better of it. It was stated by a spirit that I interfered with manuseripts relating to the Life of Apollonius of Tyana. It was not with that work that I interfered ; but it was with the writings of Potamon and Plotinus. When here I was known as Pope Celestine III., about A. D. 1190. The manuscripts that I suppressed were a combination of the Apollonian, Gnostic and Plotinist schools. Plotinus was nothing more nor less than what you call a medium. We called it inspiration. He was influenced by the spirits of Plato and Pythagoras. Those manuscripts, or what is left of them, can be found in the library of Florence. I suppose I will exeite the rage of thousands of spirits who will curse me for what I have said, and charge me with having betrayed my trust. But I am weary of the monotony of Catholicism. I want something broader and more liberal ; and when I return to my spirit state I will search for the heavens of philosophy and science. I feel deeply indebted to you for this opportunity to free myself."

I translate the following concerning Celestine III., from the Biographie Universelle:
"Celestine III. was elected pope on the 20th of March 1191. He was known under the name of Cardinal Hyacinth, Deacon, with the title of St. Mary. He was aged eighty-five years, and succeeded Clement IIL. Upon his elevation, Henry VI., designated emperor, went to Italy to have himself crowned, and to cham his rights over Sicity, as chief, under Constance, his wife; but as he appeared at the head of his troops in hostile attitude, the consecration of the pope was deferred, which equally retarded the coronation of the emperor. The Romans went before Henry, and promised him that he should be crowned if he would give up his castles of Tuscuhm, which disturbed the comntry. Henry agreed to this proposition. It is satid that at his coronation the pope pushed the crown with his foot which the (ardinats rased and placed on the head of ltenry. *  Celestine zealously arged the erusale amb sought to incite the princes to that enterpise. He apmoned of the erea-tion of the Order of Teutonic Knights which was formed in Palestine. He excommunicated Leopold, Duke of Austria, for having held King Richard a prisoner, against the rights of the peopte. He complained against the divorce of Philip Angusthe; but did not follow it up. The chd of that aflair belonged to later times. Pope Celestine died on 8th of January, 119s, after a pontificate of six years, nine months, and nine days. The Cardinals refused to allow him to name his suceessor in his hast moments, under pretext that the election ought to be free, but in reality because some among them specially aspired to succeed him. Innocent III bore away the prize. There are extant seventeen letters of Celestino III."

We have no means of knowing what works Celestine II I had a hand in destroying, but we may infer that as he was stuceeded by Innocent III, who was very largely enneemed in the destruction of the anti-('hristian literature of that period, that the latter only sought to complete a work whieh his predecessor had begun before him. As we have no certan means of corroborating this communication it will have to pass for what it is worth on the more statement of the spirit. There can be little doubt, however, that the writiugs of Potamon and Plotinus, whatever they were, were what the spirit deserites them, as embracing the doctrines of Apollonius of 'lyana, the (inostie, and Plotinist sehools, and it is equally ecrtain that they have been carefully suppressed by the Roman Catholic authorities.

M. COCCEIUS NERVH.

Emperor of Rome.

I SAlute you, sir:-I am afraid that during your mortal life you will be in much the same position I was. I found it hard to maintain peace while the work of reform was a necessity; but nevertheless, I never became discouraged in trying to do as nearly right as I could under the circumstances that surrounded me, although my reign was a very short one. I am here mainly through the efforts of the hero or samt of my time, Apollonius of Tyana, He was in Rome, when I was there, for a short period. There was no other god adroeated by him but Christos of India, whose disciple heclaimed to be; and whose doctrines and logic he expounded in my time. That he was the Paul of the Christian Epistles I know, becalise he submitted them to me to read for myself. They were written in the Latin and Greek tongues by himself. I allowed him full sway during my reign, and upon one ground only-not that I believed what he taught, but simply becalse he was a Pythagorean as I was myself. The real secret of $m y$ becoming an emperor of Rome was, that I belonged to the secret order of the Pythagorean Brotherhood. As to whether there was any other god than Christos taught in those days, I will say, that there were about fifteen of them, among which the most prominent were Prometheus of the Greeks, Horus of the Egyptians, and Hesus of the Scandinavians. These were the principal Saviours of men that were preached in my day. The foundation of the history of each and all of them, as far as I ean give it, was the theory of a woman overshadowed by a got, who gave birth to a divine man. I would further say that in my day, at Rome, all religions seemed to drift towards the central theory of a great god, who had a son who would die to save the world. But from manuseripts written at least four thonsand years before my time, the same idea seemed to pervade all ceremonies and observances, but in every case relating to the great Sum of Light that you behold above you. It was useless for Apollonins to try to convince me of the existence of a god, or a sou of a grod; I beinge, in fact, initiated into at thorough understanding of the secrets of the Order of Light -that light that lighteth all men that cometh into the word. [Was that a Pythagorean idea?] It was. As to the spiritual manifestations occurring through Apollonius, although they were grand in their way, yet similar manifestations were conmon in my day. There were many astrohogers of my court throngh whom the same phenomena oevared. I believe I have sadatl that it is necessary for me to state at this time. I thank you for the opportunity you have given me to do it. [How did your being a Pythagorean influence your chection as (rimperor of Rome?] That order had gatined great power among the nobility of Rome and Grece. It was almost unknown to the common people. The orter was composed of the aristocracy, and its nembers united to forward my clevation. I am Cocceius Nerva, emperor of Rome."

Refer to Biographie U'uiverselle for account of Nerva.

The spirit of Nerva tells us that it was manly through the efforts of the spirit of Apollonius of Tyana that he was present to give his testimony concerning what he knew about the life and writings of the great Cappadocian sage. No spirit had at greater reason than he, to desire that that testimony should be given to the worla. Nerva tells us that Apollonius was, for a short time, at Rome, in lise time ; and that while there he expmuded the doct rines atme logie of the ('hristos of India. It is true that the spirit dees not tell us when it was that this visit of Apollonius to Rome took place. It is a historieally known fact, however, that Apollonins was at Rome several times during his life, and the latione daring the reign of Domitian which oerup, ied the period from A. I). Sl to So. At that time Apollonias mast hate leeel at very obl mam. It was most probably during that period that Nerva met him at Rome, perhaps during the six yars that Nerva was asereciated with Domitian in the consulship, from A. D. se) to ! fo.  empite of the tytant lomatian.

The spirit tells us that there were fifteen other gods, besides the Hindoo Saviour Christos, who were worshipped at Rome in his time; among whom, Prometheus, Horus and Hesus were the most prominent. He says they were all based upon the same theological theories. A god-begotten, virgin-born man, who was to die to save the world. If this was so, it is not difficult to know where the Christians borrowed that heathen idea fiom; although it was very old when it was made the foundation of the so-called Christian theology.

The spirit speaks with great indifference as to the mediumistic gifts of Apollonius. It would seem that while the spirit had great regard for Apollonius as a philosopher and a Pythagorean, that he took very little interest in his Oriental mysticism. This testimony is therefore all the more valuable, for it is free from the bias of partiality. When the spirit, therefore, testifies that he knows from personal knowledge that A pollonius was the author of the epistles attributed to St. Paul, the Christian Jew, we ought to have some very good reason to do so, hefore we adjudge that testimony to be untrue.

While there are only general reasons for regarding this communication authentic and true, yet those general rensons are very strong, and entirely consistent with probability. There we must leave the matter.

INNOCENT III. Pope of Rome.

The spirit who gave the following communication was evidently unwilling to testify what he knew eoncerning the true history of the time in which he lived ; under protest, however, his statement wats as follows:
"I do not want to speak, but I am caught in the working of my own trap. There are two kinds of pyschology-one in which it is necessary that a mortal shall perform the operation -in the other, a spirit is the operator upon a spirit through a medium. Myself and other spirits have been using this latter phase of paychology to defeat all eflorts exerted in the direetion of what you call progression. To-tay I am such a peychologized spirit, and I am hedd by four minds-one is the spirit of Aromomar, another Leibig, and acting with them are Franklin and Jeflerson. I am elosely watched in what I say, and must speak the truth; what I will say, therefore, will be positive, brief, and to the point. I suppose there never was a person in power, who, in the comse of his mortal life, exereised his will more severely than myself-in fact, I was knownas the enemy of princes and heretics. A lope, preceding my time, had mate all temporal power suborlinate to the spiritual power, so-ealled, of the 'hureh; but in my time, mot long afterwards, there was at mited effort of princes and prelates to free themsolves from the ahsolute power of the Chateh of Rome. One of my most deally chemins was Allert of colorne, thongh he was a seeming friend. The latter were preferred because thay were less liable to be disputed, and there was no historical evidence to disprove them, except what was entirely in the hands of the Roman Catholics. The Apollonian system was so well supported by historical evidence in my time, that it could not be disputed. But the Marcion and Lueian system was in such a position that its enemies could bring nothing against it historically. It wasthis system of Marcion and Lueian that Hildebrand and myself sought to establish beyond any power to overthrow it. I am desired further to state that psychology is the main instrument used by spirits to lead those astray, who seek to give the truth of spirit intercourse, with mortals, to the world. By our psychological power exerted upon them we confuse their senses, and thus cause them to actin ways that will lessen or destroy their influence. The fact is that, as spirits, we are adepts in the use of this power; and we use it for the purpose of propagating our ideas wherever we think it will serve our purposes. We often carry this power to the extent of obsessing and possessing those whom we feel can obstruet the propagation of our views. I was known as Innocent III."

Refer to the American Cyclopædia for account of Innocent III.
The reader can well judge, from the sketch of the life of Innocent III in the American Cyelopedia, how far the communication which purports to come from his spirit is eharacteristic of him, Wefeel so sure of the identity of the spirit and the authenticity and correctness of the communication, that we feel little inclined to multiply words in that connection. That the spirit was a most reluctant and unwilling witness was manifest not only by the tenor of his communication, butstill more by his manner while eontrolling the medium. The hesitation with which he uttered each sentence showed how willingly he would have left the control if he could possibly have done so. And now, what is the great lesson which his communication teaches? Nothing less than the laws of psyehology are understood and used by spirits such as he himself was and is, to control the actions of men, by psyehologically inspired or produced delusions in the minds of those whom they desire to use, to promote their immediate aims and ends. Perhaps no man who ever live and figured prominently in human affairs, better understood the piselologieal power wielded by the Roman Chmrel, than Innocent III. Certainly mo one, not even the great Hildebrand, to whom the spirit reters anm who was known to history as Cregory VII. or the Great (iregory, wielded and used that psyehological power with more unlimited and almost uniform suceess. Such was his earth-life as it was made matnifest by his history. It is the spirit of this man, who is eompelled, by a similar but more irresistible paychological power, to return to the earth and through the mortal organism of a medium make known the fact that for six hundred and sixty-eight years, since he passed to the spirit life, he and his Roman Catholic spirit coadjutors have been using, as adepts in the knowledge and use of psychological laws, a vast power over the minds of humanity, of which, in their self-deluded condition, they hive been wholly unconscious. But further than this, he is foreed to admit, that while engaged in that fearful work of deception and wrong he hat come in contact with a psychological power that hat taken him captive, and rendered him helpless for the time to eonceal the truth in relation to the infernal work in which he had been solong engaged. This spirit seems to hase supposed that he wats being compelled to dixelnee, for the first time, the fact that paycholorical laws operated even more fully as between spirit and spirit, than between spirit and mortal, or mortal and mortal. In this he Wats mistaken, for many spirits before him have testified even more strongly th the same fict. It is none the less important, howerer, that we shondd, one and all, as studenta of peychological lans, weigh deeply the testimony of this imperionsand obdurate spirit higot and tyrant. It is some eompensation to ns in our deadly grapple with this spirit power of darknese, to know that We have it in our power, to aid in overemine at perohologieal power that has ruled the word with a rod of iron, and which would have continued to rule it unquestioned bot for the perw(ofall amd benefieent spirit fores that have made Morem spiritualisin a bossibility. By the light which they are letting in on the dark doings of prienteraft, the world is rapidy becoming informod ats to the arencies by means of which they, the priothood, hate managed to antave their fellowmen both ths mortals and as disemberlied -pirits.

He says: "A pope preceding my time had made all temporal power subordinate to the spiritual power, so-called, of the Church ; but in my time, not long afterwards there was a united effort of princes and prelates to free themselves from the absolute power of the Church of Rome." He admits that among those, in the church, who opposed his imperious exereise of power was Albert of Cologne ; and that he sought to find some pretext to charge lim with treachery, but without avail. It was the aim of Gregory V'II. to strengthen the temporal power of the Church as a barrier behind which the spiritual power conld be secure and permanent ; on the other hand Innocent III. gave his whole attention to wielding the spiritual power of the Church without any reference whatever to the exercise of temporal power. Thus while the aim and object of both those greatest of the popes was the same, to wit ; the establishment of the supremacy of the Roman Catholic power, their methods of effecting it were quite opposite, although supplemental of each other. Not only so, but the use of the spiritual power of the Church by Innocent, was by far more potent and successful than were the temporal means which the Great Gregory resorted to, to accomplish the same thing. I must, however, leave this most instructive portion of the communication without further comment and pass on. The name of Albert was mentioned, no doubt, because of his connection with the Codex Alexandrinus about which Innocent directly testifies, and in order that the reader may know to what copy of the Seriptures Innocent alluded to, I will refer our readers to the account of that celebrated cony of the New Testament, as given in the Encyclopredia Britannica.

In the communication of Innocent III. in relation to the real nature of the Alexandrian MS of the Christian Bible, as it is called, we have one of those surprises which have so frequently attended the deliverance of these remarkable testimoniies by the spirits of those who had personal knowledge of the facts to which they have respectively testified. In numerons instances we have had the most unquestionable spirit testimony to the fact that orthodox Christianity was nothing more nor less than a slightly modified version of the teachings of Apollonius of Tyana in relation to the Hindoo Saviour of men, Chrishna, or Christos, as he was called by Apollonius and his Greek disciples ; we say unquestionable testimony, because the testimony of those spirits was so elearly corroborated by a vast array of historically recorded facts as to leave no room for doubt as to its correctness. But now we have the positive testimony of a most unwilling withess, mone other than the haughty and imperious pontiff; Innoent the IfI., testitying to the fact that he knew that the religion which he taght, in the mane of Jesus Christ, had no relation whatever to that God, Son of God, or alleged divinity. He tells us that he knew of the existence of the Alexandrian Msi of the serip)tures whieh was sent by ('yrillus Luearis to king ('harles I of England in 1628 . The spirit of Innocent III. tells us that that manuseript contains the Eelectic version of the $A$ pollonian and Christosite systems, which would indicate that Apollonius did not teach essentially a Christositesystem but one sufficiently analogous to the latter to admit of their being combined in accordance with the fundamental prineiple of Edecticism. But this is not all, the spirit further tells, that Marcion and Lacian, or, in other words, the evangelists, Mark and Luke, undertook to adapt the teachings of Apollonias to the doctrines eonecrning the (ireek Saviour lemetheus ; and that the versions of Mareion and Lucian were preferted by the Christian priesthood lecanse they were less liable to be disputed as being authentic, and there was no historical evidenceexerpt what was in the hands of the Christian anthorities, that cond be used to discredit them. Nor is this all, for the spirit groes further, and tells us, that in his time, as late as 1 首 1 (f, the Apollonian system wat so well supported by historial evidence that it eould not le dieputed. This is a truly startling disclosure of the wilful deeqption that was practised in the name of Jesus C'hrist, by the Roman ('atholie: Chureh of the thirteenth century, of which chureh funocent was a most distinguished representative. But, as if to emphasize this selfeemdemmatory diechasure, the spirit says: "It was this system of Mareion and Lacian that liddebramd amd myself somght to cotablis! beyond all power to owerthrow it." It is a fact that the spirit of hefore returned, athd througla the same medimm confescel that lue ordered the Library of the Palatime Apollo, at Romee, to be burned (about loso) in order to deatrey the historical prowf theme molterted and deposited, of the Aperlonian origin and chan:w or of the C'hristian refigion. That Jmowent
III. should connect himself with Gregory in seeking to complete the concealment which the latter begun, by that crime against learning and truth, of burning the most valuable depositories of knowledge which the world ever possessed, shows, in the most remarkable manner, that the spirit was not only telling the truth in what he said, but that he fully understood the crushing import of his testimony as against the deception, in which, as a Roman Pontiff, he had borne so prominent and important a part.

But this is very far from being all that the reference of this spirit to the Alexandrian Version of the Scriptures demonstrates. That renowned manuscript seems to bear within itself the most unquestionable evidence of the truth of what Immocent III. said concerning it. He told us that, while it was in reality an Apollonian or Eclectic Scripture that it was such scripture, as modified by Marcion and Lucian, to adapt it to the Greek doctrines concerning Prometheus, the Greek Saviour. Now as the reader has seen, that celebrated version does not contain the twenty-four first chapters of Matthew's Gospel ; does not contain from John vi, 50 to vii, 52, and does not contain from 2. Cor. iv, 13 , to xii, 6 . Why those portions of what were established as eanonical Christian Scriptures are absent in the Alexandrian MS. we are not told by those who have made a critical examination of that celebrated and very ancient version of the New Testament. That it is a motilated production, or copy of some older mannseript or manuscripts, is very certain, but by whom mutilated, to what extent mutilated, or to what end, we can only conjecture with the present light before us. But there is one very significant fact which goes very far to corroborate the testimony of spirit Innocent III. and that is that while the Gospels of Mark and Luke are given in full and without mutilation in the Alexandrian Version, nearly the whole of the Gospel of Matthew is gone and a very important part of the Gospel of John, as well. Now, nothing is more certain than that the Gospels of Matthew and John contained substantially the teachings of A pollonius and the Essencs in the first century, while the Gospels of Marcion and Lucian were but modified versions of the two older and first named Gospels, and in no sense original gospels. It is true Imnocent III. does not elaim that he had anything to do with suppressing the portions of the Alexandrian MS. which seem to be missing ;and we may therefore infer that the Ms. did not contain the missing portions of 'anonical seriptures in his time, but lie states that Albert of Cologne did motilate it, by removiag twelve pages of it, which, in connection with marginal motes that established the fact, that that celehated wrining was but : modified version of the writints of Apollomius of Tyana, amd the Eeleetic school of which Plotinus was so distinguisthed :la exponent, and which school made the teachings of Apollonins. so prominent a feature of their system of theology and philosor phy.

At this point the spirit manifested great anxiety to leave the control of the medium, but he was not permitted to dose by the psychologieal power that hed him against his will. Finding he would not be released until he had emphasized what he had only partially diselosed at the opening of his commonication, he satid :
"I am desired further to state that perehology is the main instrument used by spirits to lead those astray whon seck to give the truth of spirit intercourse with mortals to the work. By our piychological power exerted upon them, we confuse their senses, and thas cause them to aet in ways that will lessen or destroy their intluence. The fact is that ats spirits, we are adepts in the use of this poser and we use it for the purpose of propagating our ideas, whereser we think it will sorve onr purposes. We often eary this power the the extent of obtiosing and posesing those whom we feed ean ohetruct the propagation of our vicws."

I have thomeht it well to repeat this long paragraph of the eommanication, in order to impress its importamee mon the attention of the reader. This spirit utterane combes from ons of the most powerful and suceresfal peyohogists that exer *wayed the thoughts and actions of mankind, hy his masterly exereise of that mysterions power. As a spirit be eontinued, as he te-atifes, to exercise that power upon -pirits and mortals, :as an adept in the knowledge of its ther. Whan c:an dombtht that exwry step, stage and exhtition of the mevement known as Moxern spiritualisim, las been beect and intertered with hy this terrible "pposing power". In view of this modoubted fiet, what is the lewon it temehes and what the duties it pints out, to every friond of spiritual trath? le it not that they-houbld uting to its successful exercise, by the most rigid observance of rectitude on their part, and the avoidance of condemning mediumistie sensitives for thoughts, words, and actions which are less their own than those of their spiritual enemies, who besiege them and seek to degrade them by the exertion of their infernal inflnence over them. If Spiritualists, generally, would pursue this most reasonable course, in the very nature of things, the fell influence of these spirit enemies of human welfare would soon be rendered impotent to do further harm, and they would, themselves, be relieved from a spirit condition that at least must be misery itself. So long as Spiritualists continue to cling to the creeds, dogmas, doctrines, tenets, ceremonies, observances and practices to which these spirit bigots devoted their mortal lives, just so long are they contributing to the continuance of a power in spirit life which is descending with crushing force upon us, and staying the march of human progress as nothing else could or would do. It is right at this point where the final battle is to be fought, which is to give a final triumph to truth over error ; and this seems to be the very point which so many half-hearted friends of truth in the Epiritual ranks seem so much to dread and to desire to avoid. To these mistaken friends we would say: Think not that Truth and Error can continue to exist together. One or the other must and will prevail. For long and weary centuries Error has borne almost unquestioned sway ; and it stands to-day demanding not only toleration, but abject obedience. Spiritualism has given formal notice to Error that she must yield her power; and demands of those who would follow her lead, that they bear themselves like men and women who have turned their faces finally and forever in the direction of light, liberty, and progress. There is but one kind of Spiritualism, and that is Radical Spiritualism; all else is only Spiritualism in name. The man or women who approves of anything that is openly or secretly opposed to Spiritualism, is practically an enemy to it, whatever they may claim to be to the contrary. The communication of Immocent I II. makes this sufficiently evident. Heed it, friends, for it shows where and how the victory for Truth is to be won. The sentence with which this captured spirit enemy of Truth closed, shows how utterly incapable he was of profiting by his experience at the hands of more powerful and advanced spirits than himself. He was conscious that his power to effect further deception was gone, and left, eursing those who had been the means of breaking it. He was, however, a wiser spirit than when he came, and may we not hope a better one.

ALBERTUS MAGNUS. Or Albert the Great.

"My best greeting to you:-During my mortal life I was clamed as one who was deeply versed in the sciences of my day, but my hingraphers, after my death, thought I had shown a weakness in regard to one science, which is called Astrology. They have, however, made a mistake as to what 1 understood astrology to be. As a priest, I had no other way to reach the minds of my people than by disguising what I sought to teach them. I therefore taught certain planets affected the life of man. It I had tanght openly what I thus sought to impart to them, I would have been burned as a heretie; so I used that science in an allegorical and metaphysical sense, to consey important truth to the minds of those whom I wished to reach. And I will here say, that the astrolegere, from the tenth to the fifteenth contury, were of the atmost importance to hamanity, in keeping sorence alive. Through astmogy, I wats emabled to toach who the real hesis was, and to show that the whole story fats lorrowed from the stars. To thome who hat my explanatory key, which I furnished to those whom I wished to understand me, the trath wats known. By this manas I helped to build upas system which was afterwarde taken up by the philosophers and scientists of the seventernth century, and which yon, of the ninctenth enotury, are reaping the bemefts of. Many commentators of the present age say that some of the greatest intellects of the midnle ares rained themedres by adrocating astrology ; hat to them I womld say, they don bot know what the real motive of their action was. Had they known it, they would have hesitated before they eomdemmed. I know of mesmiary that ean equal that of the life of a man wholives in :an are when he ata hardly find one mind with which he eath hodd converes. true that to the man of science there is no aid like that of the immortals. If the scientists of to-day would only place themselves in rapport with those spirit helpers, they would enter a domain from which materialistic science is ever debarred. I lived in 1980. My name was Albertus Magnus, Archbishop of Ratisbonne."

Refer to Biographie Generale for account of Albertus Magntis.
Such is the account given of this extraordinary man, who has been so greatly misrepresented and misunderstood by those who have written regarding him and his works. He was not the superstitious slave of delusion that they supposed him to have been; nor was he the ignorant votary of what is called astrology. He, as a returning spirit, plainly tells us that he was a Spiritualist and a medium, and commmed with spirits as Spiritualists do at this time; and that he only professed a belief in the science of astrology to conceal that fact from the Catholic priesthood, who would have burned him as a heretic had they really known what he was doing. While he professed to have faith in astrology, he tells us it was merely to conceal the fact that he was a Spiritualist and held communion with spirits. He tells us that he used astrology in an allegorical and metaphysical sense, to teach that which he knew to be truth, but which he did not dare to teach openly. No donbt this spirit speaks a great truth when he says that the astrologers from the 10 th to the 15 th century kept science alive. We have not the opportunity to get into the real meaning of the teachings of Albertus Magnus, but we have no doubt he went as far as he dared to go, in stating what he knew in relation to the astrological character of the mythical Jesus. It would seem that as late as the latter part of the 13th century, Albertus Magnus attempted to organize a Spiritual movement, in which he was unsuccessful, only becanse of the bitter hostility of the Roman Cathoiic priesthood to any Spiritual movement whatever. How pathetic is the statement of this spirit, that nothing can equal the misery of the man who, knowing that which is true, does not dare to disclose it to a contemporary. Albertus Magnus, through the lips of an organism, the mind of which had no cognizance of his existence, thus vindicates his mortal labor against the misunterstanding which ignorance has songht to fasten mpon his nemory. Truly may it be said that the secrets of the past are being brought to the light, through the means of Modern Spiritualism.

SOCRATES SCHOLASTICUS.

An Ecclesiastical Historian.

"I greet you, sme:-The Greeks-that is the Pagan (irecks, so-called, and the Mohammedan Turks, held the Christians in derision for their foolish aping of the commmion ceremonies of the Elensinian Mysteries of old, in which (eres, the geddess of corn, and Bacchus, the god of wine, formed the principal figures. There was no gospel like the grospel of Christos of India, which was translatedinto the (ireek tongue, and formed the worship of the (irceks, as it constituted ahmost the whole basis of the philosophic system put in shape by Pythagoras, the Samian Sare. In later years it was this gospel of Prthagoras that Apollonius of Tyana disenssed with Iarchus. But the manuseript of the original gospel of Christos, that was in possession of tarchus, was so superior to the version of it by Pythagoras, that A pollonius became a (iymmosephist. It was the custom in those days, when two of the most learned persons met to compare views, that they should have no witneses ; so no one knew what took place between larchus and Apollonins, except what either of them choose totell. They mate the mistake of supposing, that what they reecised from the ir spirit guides came from (iod or his messengers. That was the mistake of anticuity, and it is the mistake of to-day. the surface of error, put to rout the army of religious fools who would prolong that condition of things."

Refer to Smith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Biography for account of Socrates Scholasticus.

It was the spirit of the learned and impartial historian of ecclesiasticism in the fourth century, who gave that instructive communication. No one, when in mortal life, had any better opportunity to know what the Christianity of Eusebius and Constantine was, than Socrates Scholasticus. He lived at the time that Christianity was being erechalized and doctrinized into its present orthodox shape. He tells us that the Christian ceremonial of the communion service, or Eucharist, was the foolish aping of a similar ceremonial observed in the Eleusinian mystevies in honor and worship of the heathen goddess Ceres and the god Bacchus. There is nothing more certain than this, and, that Claristian priests and clergymen should still continue to take part in that heathen mummery, is simply madness on their part, if they would make any pretence that the Jesus Christ, in whose honor they practice it, is anything else, or more, than the Grecian Bacchus, the sun in the sign of Virgo, personified.

But of especial import is the statement of the spirit of Socrates, that the Pythagorean philosophy of Greece was wholly based upon the gospel of Christos of India. The similarity, if not the identity, of the Pythagorean and Buddhist doctrines, was fully understood at the period when Soerates lived, and had been understood long before, by all the learned people of Grecce. It was no doubt this knowledge, on the part of A pollonius of Tyana, a disciple of Pythagoras, that induced him to visit Iarchus in India, about A. D. 46, to ascertain how faithfully Pythagoras had interpreted the Indian gospel of Crishna. Socrates tells us that Apollonius found the manuscripts of that gospel in the hands of Iarchus so superior to the version of them by Pythagoras that he (Apollonius) became a Gymuosophist. This spirit statement fully explains how it came, that so strict. a Pythagorean as Apollonius had proved himself to be, before going to India, became the renowned apostle of the Gigmonsophic religion and philosophy, after his return from his visit to Iarchus, the patriarels or ehief of that wonderfully well informed sect of philesephers.
have passed or may not have passed between $\Lambda_{\text {pollonius and }}$ Iarchus, that they both made the mistake of supposing they were in close and intimate commmion with God: and he remarks that this was the common mistake of antiquity as of modern times. In this lre concurs with seores of other spirits, of various religions and sects who have communicated to the world.

We mote particularly what the spirit says as to what the repositories of confirmatory exidence that exist at various points of Europe and Asia, would show as to the truthfulness of these communications. It is to be hoped that not only Thibetan literature, but the Brahmanical, Buddhistic and (iymmosophic literature, as well, will escape the vandalism of Christian Missionaries; for all these alike, would contribute to show that each and all of those Oriental religions systems were mote or less remotely derived from the Zoroastrianism of the ancient Armenians; and that they were nothing more or less than sunworshippers comnected with ethical and social laws, modified to suit the wants of each of the peoples alopting them. But still more significant is the mention by focrates that the teachings of Brahmanism, Buddhism and Zoroastrianism were largely mixed with the teachings of Hermes Trismegistus, the most enigmatical character in ancient history.

GABINIUS.

Roman Governor of Judea.

"I gREET You, SIR:-During my government of Judea I was constantly fighting the Jews of that time. There were two classes of them. They were not exactly divided into Sadducees and Pharisees, but their differences were mainly about what was called the Ezraite version, and another version of their sacred writings made by a man by the name of Onkelos. And at this point I will have to correct the history of your time. Onkelos lived about seventy-five years before the Christian era. He had departed this life about twenty years before I was governor of Judea. The most noted Ezraite advocates were Rabbi Aristobulus and his son Alexander. These two were finally subdued by me, after a cost of many lives and great expense to the Roman government. On assembling at Jernsalen two of the most learned Jews, two of the most learned Greeks, and two of the most learned Romans, in council, to consider these matters, I found that the history of the Jews, as recorded by Ezra, consisted of the mixed traditions of the Chaldeans and Armenians, which the Jews became acquainted with at the time of their captivity. If the Jewish books are critically examined, the evidence will be found in them that proves that they were borrowed from the two nations I have named. They state that the father of the Jews, Abraham or Abrahm, was a Chaldean and not a Jew. Moses, their great law-giver, appears to have heen a Midianite when his alleged doings are carefully read. The council, of which I have spoken, satisfied me that the Jews were nothing other than rmaway Egyptians. I will say, as has another spirit before me, if you have placed before you a Jew, a Copt, and an Armenian, and these should be dressed alike, you cannot distinguish between their ethnological characteristics. Their general attributes of form and feature proves them to be of a mixed race and not of a distinet race of men, and that neither of them have any claim to the anticuity they set up for themselves. Some of my testimony fou can corrohorate-other parts of it you camot. I was govermor of Judea about 57 B . (:"

APIANUS.

A Pupil of Paracelsus.

"I will salute you, sir:-By saying that truth often becomes apparently anibilated, but the wounds which it receives from error are only on the surface; so truth will ever triumph in the end. My master, Paracelsus, often frightened me by the violence of his emotions. He used to fight the devil with the broad-sword, to my great terror, until I came to moderstand him. Clairvoyantly, the devil was just as apparent to him as this medium is to you. I, myself, continued to dig, or explore into some of the foolishness of my master, but I found in ail eases, there was this difference between my master and myself. When he received either spoken or written communications, they all purported to come from God or the devil. With myself, Zoroaster, Trajan, Berosus, and Marcellinus, a bishop, communicated with or through me. These spirits, properly spaking, were my guides, but I knew it not. All the communications that came to or through me, were in opposition to the popular theology of my day; and, although I became imbued with the ideas thus imparted, I strictly avoided speaking of them, unless compelled to do so. One of the most striking points of the teachings of these spirits was this; that I should believe in Unitarianism and not in Trinitarianism. I thought at first that I was possessed by a devil ; but, on reading the classics, and finding that some of the most intelligent of the ancients were guided, or accompanied by demons or spirits, I undertook to advocate doctrines contrary to the age in which I lived, which ended in causing me physical suffering, but spiritual happiness. None of the spirits who communicated through me, in any sense, tanght the idea of a God in the form of a man. They all tanght that in spirit life they had never found anything to work the regeneration of men but the exercise of their own virtues. I wish my communication was more what I desired it to be, but it may not be without interest. I was known as Apianus. My spirit guide and friend, Marcellinus, will follow me."
Refer to Nouvelle Biographie Genema for aceount of A pianms.
There can hardy be a doubt but that Paracelatas was a healing medimu, ats well as a wonderfal elairvorant, but not knowing whence his power of healing was deriver, he attributed it to God, and hence be was opposed by the devil. Apianus was a contemporary of l'aracelsas, and was, no doubt, a mediumistic pupil of the latter, as he clams to have been. The nature of his mediumship seems to have been quite different from that of Paracelsus. While laracelsus was controlled by spirits who adhered to the popular theology concerning the Christian God and devil, Apianus was controlled by those who opposed that theologieal superstition. So heterodox were the teachings of his guides, that A pianus tells as that he considered himself possessed of a devil ; but that learning that the most intelligent of the classical writers had had their familiar demons or spirits, he became imbued with their teachings, and undertook to advocate doctrines contrary to the popular opinions of the age in which he lived. He mentions especially the fact that none of the spirits who controlled him ever tatught the ideat of God-man.

We cannot but believe that the spirit world made a desperate eflort, in the sixicenth century to get the prople of the earth to realize the truths of spiritualism; but the power of the Roman Catholic Church was too potent to admit of it. Certainly, what phenomena were regarded as neeromaney, atehemy and astrology, at that time, were nothing more or less than the manifestations of spirit intelligenee and power through medimms. That so little is said about the thamaturgieal habors of Apiants and his relations with the alehemists and astrologers amounts to nothing, for it was the poliey of the Christian priesthood then, as it is now, to eonceal the fact of spirits intereourse with mortals, and henee so litule has eome down to us in regard to Apianus's theological and astrological views.

MARCELLINUS.

"I salute you, sir:-There is nothing strange or concealed but which shall, in the course of time, be revealed. All the bishops of my time leaned toward Unitarianism, and it must be distinctly understood, that they were bishops of Christos and not of Christ. They taught Unitarianism. So much so, that you will find, on reference to Dr. Priestly, a learned Christian critic, that according to Athanasius, the preaching of the second portion of the Trinity was almost unknown until the time of Eusebius of Cæsarea. I ans drawn here to-day simply because I controlled the spirit who communicated before me, and I did so at the instance of Zoroaster, Cham or Ham, Rameses II and Demetrius Phalereus. We found the mind of Apianus, such as we could act upon in a benighted age, for Christianism is heathenism of the darkest kind-it is the heathenism of heathenism. Brahm, Ibraham, and the precepts of Hermes Trismegistus were used in my day to lay the foundation of what is now termed Christianity. But much that they used was stolen from the works of Pythagoras, Plato, and the Alexandrian school. The two former had relation to Gymnosophism, the others to Eclecticism. These two systems were the foundation of Christianity. I have said all I will be able to say to-day. I was a bishop of the Armenians. I attended a Council of Bishops at Rome, but it was a council of Unitarians-not Trinitarians."

We take the following account of Marcellinus from McClintock and Strong's Cyclopmedia of Theological Literature.
"Marcellinus, a native of Rome, son of Projectus, is said to have been made bishop of Rome, May 3, A. D., 296. As he lived in a period of violent persecution, we have but little certain information concerning him; the acts of a synod said to have been held at Sinuessa, in 308, relate as follows :Diocletian bad succeeded in compelling the hitherto steadfast bishop to come with him into the temple of Vesta and Isis, and to offer up incense to them; this was afterward proclaimed by three priests and two deacons who had witnessed the deed, and a synod was assembled to in vestigate the afliar, at Sinuessa, at which no less than three hundred bishops were present-a number quite imposisble for that country, expecially in a time of persecution' (Dr. 11. 13. Although the Imonam Breviary，itself，eredits this aceount of the weakness and punishment of Maredlinus，this aceount of the syond is now eonsidered spurious both by Romanists and Protestants．Indeed，Augustine and Theodoret derlared the statement of Mareellimus having betrayed Christianity and offered sacrifice to idols，false．Dr．Dollinger，in his Fables respecting Popes in the Midalle Ages，says：＇the acts of the pretomded syond are evidently fabricated in order to manu－ facture a historical report for the princinle that a pope can be julged by mo man．This ineessantly repeated sentence is the red thread which runs through the whole ；the rest is mere appendage．By this means it is to be inemeated on the laty， that they must not come forward as aceusers of the clergy，and on the inferior clergy that they must not do the like aganst their superiors．＇As the date and oceasion of the fabrication 1）r．Dollinger assigns those troubled sixteen gears（40－514）in which the Pontiticate of Fimmathas ran its course．At that time thetwopartiowf Laurentinsandsmmachusstood opposed to one another in Rome as fors．Prople，senate and elergy were divided；they fonght and murdered in the streets，and Lathentins mantained homedf for several yats in presesejon of part of the fhumber．Symmardhe was acelosed hy his opponents of very grave oflonese＊＊＊＊＊＊The hotile partims were numerous and intluential，$\% * *$ and，therefore，the athorents of Symmathos catusht at this manas of showing that the inviohatitity of the pere had been long simee recognized as a fact，athel ammoneed ats a rule．＊＊＊＊This was the time at Which Eumerlius wrote his apelogy for Semmachus，and this，

right to prohibit the incumbent of the papal chair from selling any portion of the property of the church. Whoever Marcellinus was, it is almost certain he was not a bishop at Rome. As a spirit he says he never was at Rome except to attend a Gnostic Council there, and this is most probably what gave rise to that supposition.

The spirit undoubtedly discloses a great truth when he says that the bishops of his time were nearly all Unitarians, and cites Dr. Priestly to show that prior to the time of Eusebius of Ciesarea the preaching of the second person of the Christian Trinity was almost unknown. We take the following concerning Dr. Priestly's religious views from Chambers' Encyclopredia, article Joseph Priestly :
"Joseph Priestly, son of Jonas Priestly, a cloth-draper of Fieldhead, near Leeds, was born at Fieldhead on 13 th of March, $1733, \mathrm{O} . \mathrm{S}$. His mother having died when he was six years old, he was adopted by an aunt, by whom he was sent to a free school. There he learned Latin and Greek. During vacation he taught himself varions languages, both ancient and modern. For some time he was obliged to abandon his studies, owing to weak health; he then betook hinself to mercantile pursuits. With returning strength, his literary studies were restmed, and successfully prosecuted at a dissenting academy at Daventry; under Mr. (afterwards Dr.) Ashworth, suceessor to Dr. Doddridge. Thongh his father and annt were strong Calvinists, their house was the resort of many men who held very different opinions; and the theological diseussions which he was in the habit of hearing, seems to have had much effeet upon young Priestly. Before he was nincteen he calls himself rather a believer in the doctrines of Arminius, butadds: 'I had by no means rejected the doctrine of a Trinity or that of the atonement.' Before leaving home, he wished to join a C'alvinistic communion, but he was refused admission, the ground of refusal being, that he had stated doubts as to the liability of the whole human race to 'the wrath of God and pains of hell forever.' During his residence at the academy, he conceived himself ealled on to renounce nearly all the theological and metaphysical opinions of his routh. 'I came' he satys 'fo embrace what is called the heterodox side of every question.' In 1755 he became a minister to a small congregation at Needham Market, in Suffolk, with an average salary of thirty pounds per annum. While here he eomposed his work cutithed "The Scripture Doctrine of Remission, which shows that the Death of Christ is no proper Sacrifice or Satisfaction for Sin.'

His leading theological doctrine seems to have been, that the Bible is indeed a divine revelation, made from God to man through Christ, himself a man and no more, nor claming to be more. He seems to have rejected all theobogieal dogmas which appeared to him to rest solely upon the interpretation put upon certain passages of the Bible hy eectexiastical athority. Even the tumdamental doctrines of the Trinity and of the Atonement he did not consider as waranted by seripture, when read by the light of his own heart and understanding.  * * In 1773, he was appointed librarian and literary eompanion to Lord shellburn, with a salary of two humbred and fifty pounds per annum, and a separate residence. He accompanied the Earl on a continental tour in the year 17it. Having been told by certain Parisian savants that he was the only man they had ever known, of any understanding, who beliesed in Christianity, he wrote in reply, the 'Letters to a Philosophical Unbeliever,' and various other works, containing criticisms on the doctrines of Hume and others. His publie position was rather a hard one; for while laughed at in Paris as a believer, at home, he was branded as an atheist. To escape the odium arising from the latter imputation, he published, in 177T, his 'Disquisition Relating to Matter and Spirit.' In this work, while he partly materializes spirit, he, at the same time, partly spiritualizes matter. He holds, however, that sur hopes of resurrection must rest soldy on the truth of the Christian resehation, and that on seience they have mo fombation whatever.  On leaving Lord shedturn he became minister of a dissenting chapel at Birmingham. The publication, in 1ise, of his 'History of Early ©opinions eoncerning Jesus ('hrist, oreasioned the renewal of a controversy, which had hergm in 178s, betwren him :ad Dr. Horsloy, concerning the doctrines of Fire Will, Materialism and Chitarianism."

We have given more than enough concerning Dr. Priestly to show that he had given his speeial attention to the subject to which spirt Aareellinus alludes. Being conversant with the (ireek-Latin and ofher andent languares, he no donht stmdied rlasely the views entertaned by those whon were ealled (hristians in the first three hundred years of the so-ealled Christian era, conerming Christ. It is therefore in the highest dengee probable that Dr. I'riestly did dectare, whether on the authority of Athanasins, as the spirit salys, we camot saly that Jenla Chriat as the second person of the Christian Trinity was not preached until the time of Eusehits. And wo s:y he might just a- truthfulty latio gothe further and satid, that Jesus.

Christ was never heard of or preached prior to that time, either as part of the Godhead, or as a man; for until Constantine conceived the idea of uniting the Oriental worship of Christos with the Western worship of Hesus or Iesus, the worship of Iesus Christos was never heard of. It was a matter of state policy with Constantine, and not of religious impulse at all. This politic movement was opposed by Arius and his followers, and hence the fierce and terrible contest that had so long raged between these Christian factions.

The spirit of Marcellinus tells us that he controlled Apianus, the pupil of Paracelsus as a medium ; and that he did so at.the instance of Zoroaster, Cham or Ham, Rameses II and Demetrius Phalereus. He says they found the mind of Apianus such as they could act upon in a benighted age, and sought to use him to get the truths of spirit-life before earth's people. Zoroaster, the spirit whom Marcellinus first mentions was the great Persian or Assyrian Sage whose teachings now form the basis of the Parsee religion. The second spirit named is Cham or Ham which would indicate that he was also a great leader and teacher, whether in Egypt or elsewhere, we are not permitted to know with certainty, for any history that may have existed in regard to him has been cither lost or destroyed. We take the following concerning him from Johnson's Universal Cyelopedia:
"Ham, a son of the patriarch, Noah, and the brother of Shem and Japheth, was, according to Genesis, the father of those nations, which inhabited the Southern countries, Egypt, Lybia, etc. The Coptic or native name of Egypt is Kem, Chemia with Plutarch, Cheme in the Rosetta inseription, which signifies 'hot' or 'burnt'; and this circumstance has occasioned a very strange piece of reasoning. By supposing the Hebrew name Ham is derived from the Hebrew root haman, to be had, to be 'burnt', and by supposing that this name of 'hot', 'burnt', 'sunburnt' was given to the son of Noah prophetically with reference to his descendants, Gesenius has tried to establish ant agreement between the biblical record and the historical fact. It must be remembered that the descendants of Ham were not all Africans. The Canaanites and Phœenicians, the Cushites of the Euphrates Valley, a South Arabian race of importance, all were Hamitic. Some of these peoples were closely associated with the Semitic races, and made use of languages essentially Semitic."

It is certainly most singular that Cham or Ham should be mentioned in eomection with Zoroaster amd Rameses II, if he was not at one time a historical chatacter of little less note than those undonbtediy historical charaters. Who was Rameses If? Under the head "Egypt" the Eneyclopadiat IBritamicea says of hill:
"Ramesus 1I, is without doubt, the greatest figure in the long line of Pharanhs, and, at the same time be is the the of those characters of whom we have the best idea."
The other spirit mentioned is mone other than the learned Demetrius Phalerens, the renowned Alexandrian scholar. Of him we gather the following facts from Thomas' Dictionary of Biography.
"Demetrius Pisalereus, a distinguished orator and philosopher, born at Phalerum, in Attica, about 3+5, B. C., was a pupil of Theophrastus, in philosophy. It is said he was condemmed to death with Phoeion, but saved himself by ilight. About 316 B. C., Cassander appointed him governor of Athens, which, for ten years, enjoyed prosperity under his wise and popular administration. Three hundred and sixty stathes were erected to him by the Athenians. When Athens was taken by Demetrins Poliorcetes, 306 , he retired to the Court of P'olemy, king of Egypt. He died in Eqypt, ahout ost, B. C: He wrote historical and philosophical works which are all lost. (idero and other ancient writers extol his merit as an orator and statesmen."

A writer insmith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Biography says of the literary labors of Demetrins:
"His nomerons writings, the greater part of which he eombposed during his residence in Exypt, embraced sulyerets of the most varied kinds, athd the list of thom given by Diogones Laertins shows that he was at man of the mose extensive aequirements. These works, which were partly historical, partly poetical, hase all perished. * * * It is abso beliewal that it was owing to his inthence with Itokemy Lagi that books were colleeted at Alexamria, and that he thus latil the fommlation of the library, which was formed ander Poolemy Philadelphts."

These, then, were the spirits who inthened Mareellinms to beeme the speceal control of Apianns with the view of naing the lafter to expose the heathenism of ('hristianity in the latter part of the thirel athe the beximine of the fourth century. It Hath (the ('ham being very suggestive of 大hem, the brother of Ham) Rameses II and Demetrius Phalereus. We may conjecture that the total destruction of the vast literary labors of Demetrius was not accidental. No man perhaps ever lived who was so fully aequainted with Indian, Assyrian, Persian, Armenian, Arabian, and Egyptian history, theology and philosophy as Demetrius ; and he no doubt set forth what would have made it impossible for the Christian theology to have fastened itself on the world as it has done. These two communications show low the hidden things of even the distant past may be brought to life through Spiritualism when opportunity is afforded ancient spirits to make known the truth concerning the times in which they lived.

LACTANTIUS.

"Sir:-I wish you well. My subject will be the identity between paganism and Christianity. The Christian writers have been the vilest interpolators of the pagan authors. They have stolen every good thing from them that they could find and have elamed it as their own. They have simply forged a new system in imitation of the old, and the old is not very highly honored by it. If the great infinite God ever wished to make a revelation to man it is strange that he would give a system that is identical with the then known systems in existence. I refused utterly to accept a high position whieh was tendered me if I would help to build up this religious system known as Christianity. Sir, it is one of the brightest jewels in my crown in spirit life that I so refused. All those men who lived between the seconid and third centuries identified themselves with Christianity, because its outlook was the most promising. In the first place its moral code is stolen from ancient systems and principally from the collection of manuscripts ef Ptolemy Philadelphus. [n the second place it is a combination of Neo-Platonism, the Gnosticism taught at Rome, and the Pantheism of Egypt and Greece; and the strangest thing of all is found in the doctrine of the Trinity. The doetrine of the Trinity is one of the first means to lead men astray and had its original formulation in India at least sixteen hundred years before the Christian era. There were documents extant in my day that were as positive ats any historical manuseripts could be on the points herein set forth. As I said before, I refused to join that clases of men who wished to tead future generations into error, by teaching the existence of a myth in the form of a Judean Saviour, that never had an existence, and that was but a continuation of the story of Buddha, ('hrishma and Pythagoras. It was revived by a college of Savants who met from different parts of the world, at Alexandria, to compare notes about twelve years before the Christian era, and the positive proofs of this arestill in existence at Rome and amongst the rnins of certain Christian churches at Ephesus. We, the aneient band who are coming through this medium, will at length through this or some other mediumistic channel, give the directions for excavations at Ephesus where these documents now are. They are, what you call, encased in the corner-stones of the temples and they are there intact. My name was Lactantius. I lived in the first half of the third century."

Refer to MeClintock and Strong's Ecclesiastical ('yclopredia for account of Lactantius.

How completely the above commmancation of the spirit of Lactantius accords with and explains his position towards the Christian religion. The value of that commmnication as light to much that is obscure in relation to the source and origin of the Christian religion cannot be overestinated. We regret that space does not admit of our commenting upon it as it descrves.

PROMETHEUS BOUND.

The above engraving represents Prometheus, bound to the Scythian Crag, and according to the ancient legend dying for mankind to appease an angry God. The tragedy of Prometheus was played upon the stage at Athens, centuries before the Christian era. These ancient spirits claim that the legend of Irometheus suggested to the formulators of Christianity the tragedy of the crucifixion of the Christian Saviour of which it was the prototype. It was well known in past centuries and is regarded as true by some in our day that the legend of Prometheus, the dying god, not only suggested the story of the crucifixion but also the Christian symbol of the man on the cross. See communications of Constantinus Pogonatus, page 160; Clement Alexandrinus, page 197; M. Atilius Regulus, page 210; Lucius Appuleius, page 335 ; Carneades, page 376 , and llermas, page 515 .

HERMAS.

An Apostolic Father.

"Good afternoon :-In order to be successful as a priest you must be influenced by one of two things. Either you must have zeal and really believe what you preach, or else you must be a dissembler and a hypocrite. These last two qualities were the motive power of my mortal actions. I was one of the founders of Christianity. I knew that this Christian religion and its god-man was nothing but a new version of the old story of Prometheus dying on the Scythian Crags for the atonement of the sins of mortal man, and to appease an angry God. The founders of Christianity, and in saying this I impeach the honesty of every one of them, took that whole story from a tragedy, played upon the Grecian stage at Athens, five hundred years before the alleged Jesus. This god of mythology was the principal one from which the story of Jesus originated. Why was this? you may ask. I will tell you. Because the birth, life, miracles and suffering of this Greek god, was set forth in such plain terms, and was avonched for, in my time, by so many pagan authors, that we could only hope to win them to our cause or religion by duplicating the old story, and none helped to do this more effectually than myself. But in working for my own popularity I had no idea that this Christian religion would ever become as powerful as it is to-day. If I had seen, or had had the least conception of those long dark ages of blood which has been the result, I would have withdrawn in horror of such scenes, as were enacted upon this mortal plane after my death. I would say to mortals, Oh! study well what you teach by word or pen, for you know not the awful injury you may do to the unborn generations of the ages to come. I would ask all churchmen-to pause and reflect, for the day will truly come when you will pray that the mountains may fall upon you, not to hide you from the face of ciod, but to hide you from the spirits of injured mortals, who look upon you as leading them astray, and whose spirit eyes accuse you of your damnable course of dissembling and hypocrisy in relation to the most sacred themes that concern humanity. The time when I lived was about A. D. 30 to 90 , and my name was Hermas-sometimes called St. Hermas. I left what is called an analysis of the various religions of my time. I made my home in many places in Masopotamia. In fact I travelled over very much the same ground as did the Cappadocian Saviour, Apollonius of Tyana, in Cesariea and Phonicia. I also made pilgrimages to Rome and Jerusalem. There was a sect then existing in those regions, similar to your Commmists. They were called by a name that meant mon-flesh-etaters. They lived on fruit. They were the principal founders of Christianity."

Refer to Nouvelle Bingraphic Generale for account of Herm:s.
It was the Greek myth of Promethens that Hermas says was the prototype of the Christian Jesus, and that such was the fact there can be little if any doubt. We do not think that Hermas and his contemporaries made much improvement on the original. Certainly, the Greek Prometheus, in god-like attributes, far overshadowed his vagrant successor. Think! ye who still adhere to the deception instituted by the founders of the Christian religion, of the fearful atonement that Hermas, one of its prineipal founders, has had to undergo, and avoid the misfortumes that he points out as the certain result of your present course. The high moral teaching and practical construction of the "Shepherd of Hermas" is strongly confirmative of the fact that the anthor followed the style and method of Fschylus in his scheme to establish a new religion. It certainly comes entirely from a spirit source, and has none of the appearance of a spirit personation.

Abstract

"I was a follower of the doctrines of Ammonius Saccas.

 Those doctrines contained all the elements that are necessary for a true knowledge of, what modern scientists call, the law of cause and effect. Ammonius had found that the ethics contained in several different sacred books were founded on the universal experiences of mankind, but that they were erroneous in attributing their teachings to certain men who were imagined to have existed or really existed, called by the ancient gods; and whose deeds were magnified after death. Those sacred books of different versions were blended, and something like the Christian New Testament was the outgrowth of the labors of Ammonius Saccas and his school. This book was never intended by Ammonius to be read in the way in which it is now read, but the key to the interpretation of it was the Sun's Annual Course through the signs of the Zodiac, or the twelve houses of the Sun as they have been called. This was the key, and it was given to those initiated in the secret meaning of the book. This exclusiveness was adopted to give greater weight to the learned, in the minds of the ignorant masses. If this fact were thoroughly understood by those calling themselves Christians, they never would dare again to preach Jesus Christ and him crucified. All the God or gods, after 1,500 years in spirit-life that I have been able to comprehend is universal life, as it is demonstrated in the spirit and mortal life. My name when here was Iamblichus. I lived A. D. 363."Refer to Smith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Biography for account of Tamblichus.

Why, we again ask, are so many of the works of the writers of the first four centuries of the Christian era not extant today ; and, especially, not a single perfect and unmutilated work of any of the Pagan-so-called-authors of that most interesting era in the world's history? Let the Roman Catholic priesthood answer that question. Here we have another spirit correcting history. If this communication is correct, Iamblichus did not die in the reign of Constantine, but after the reigu and death of Julian. But here we have the amazing statement made that the Eclecticism of Potamon of Alexamdria was revived by Ammonius Saceas more than a eentury later, and that the sacred book of Ammonius was the original of the Christian New Testament. We have the assurance, again, from a spirit who certanly knows wheref he is speaking, that the Sun is the great central object to the Christian theology, the key to which fact has been carefully concealed by the Christian successors of Ammonius saceas. Truly, the grave is giving up its secrets, and the light of perfect truth will not be shut out from humanity much longer. We esteem it a privilege to be made instrumental in heralding the dawn of the opening day.

BELZONI.

"Good day, sir :-I was born a Catholic. During my life, which was an eventful one, I had constantly upon me a desire to travel, and finally snceeeded in so doing. I risited the ruins of antiquity-the Pyramids-Thebes-Berenice. I was an Italian, but severed my connections with my native country and went to Britain; and from London, I tavelled to the Pyramid of Ghiza, and I was the seeond party that ever gained an entrance to that pyramid. I also visited Thebes where I found a great many statues and other ancient relies. I sent some of these to the British musemm, and some to Flomenee, Italy. I alon obtained paintings and engravings of the tombs, amone which was one of I'sammonthis, supposed io date 400 vears hefore the Christian ema. I also datter myself that I was the first traveller that disenvered the site of the mor cient rity of Bermiere Eseh one of these diseoveries utterly destroyed, fo my mind, the trath of the Claristian religion. Why? Beanse "pen these ancient ruins, I fombererything that I had eversen in the Catholic charehes. The cross-a man on at eross-the table-commmanon enp-a pricet swinging a censer, st. Andrew's crosses-and it made me think when I saw these ruins from two to three thmsam sears old-when I saw all these thines that I had been bromght up to look upon ats sacred-it destroyed my faith in the (athohie religion. As a spirit, I find that all these mysteries which the Catholics call sacred, were also held sacred, long before there was a Catholic church, by the Egyptian priests. That is the reason why a great many of the spirits of these ancient priests help Catholic spirits to oppose truth, they know it lets in light upon their mummeries. I find that spirits who live near the earth plane, like to see anything propagated that agrees with their own ancient folly; and especially is this the case with all matters relating to religion. The word religion means to bind, and that is just what these ancient spirits think the Catholic priests are trying to do. I wanted to give this communication in order to spread the light. When I think my mortal life over more thoroughly than I have had a chance to do to-day, and recall what I knew of the ruins of the temples and tombs of the ancients, I hope at some future day I can give you a communication that will make all scholars think and fools to grow wise. I died while attempting to explore Africa at Benin, bes tween Houssa and Timbuctoo, in the latter part of 1823.Giam Batiste Belzoni."

Refer to Nouvelle Biographie Generale for account of Belzoni.
That he should have been able to control the medium so perfectly, as he did, shows that he is as powerful in his purpose and will as a spirit, as he was powerful and persevering as a mortal. Dare any Christian priest, minister or layman deny the truth testified to in that communication that upon the walls of the temples and tombs of ancient Thebes in Egypt, were delineated every symbol and every ceremony now to be seen, in the Churches of Christendom, and this thousands of years prior to the Christian era? We opine not. It does not seem to be known that Belzoni had abandoned his religious views while on earth, but we feel sure that he has left the evidence of that fact in his great work.

Ammonias the Peripatetic. An Alexandrian Philosopher.

"I salt"te yor, sir:-There is no religion that ever existed, as far as I have been able to learn, either as a mortal or aspirit, but what had some symbolical personage that was reogrized as the head of that religion. In my day, sir, in Alexandria, all religions were represented by symbols, and most of these symbols were represcuted on plates or potfery, and some on eopper, and these were used as are your blackboards in your schools of leaming. The pupils, however, were not tanght the true meaning of those symbols, but only received the eonst ruc--tion put unon them by the master. Now each teacher in these diflerent sehooks set himself up ats the best expombler of the ancient religions, and each one of them leaned toward some faverite (ireek, Latin, or Phonician athor. Their ideas of the teaching of those anthom were so mixed, that their purity was lost. The masters thought of only one thing-selfeexaltation. They eombatted each other fierecly, amd at the puphis followed their masters, so eombests were ferpent anomg them, somew hat like the contention befween the stadentsof momern miversitics. From the hates, of which I have speken, I :am convineed fully that the whole story or history of Jexus of Nazareth, is mothing more than the re-deitication of some of the older gods, such ats Chrishas, Promethons and Apoltonius of Tranas. In fact any berson who thomorhly moler-tambs the ant of condpure, will find that the respablane betwern the carrod features of Joshs and thowe of Chrishata, ate almont idemtical; :and it is this rescmblane liat makes the (loristian mis-sonarics and pricists an ardent in their desise, to destroy all idols, as they ternt these seulptures. There is another point 1 want to impress unon yon perple, and it ourht to ln anxionsly watehed by yom, amb that is that yomshomblatake sure that thase personk Who are makiner examations for the omearthing of antigne relice, should be free from all (hristian prejudiee, for the reasen that those relies if proserved, will throw light on the superstition called Christianity. I will add that at the time f lived in teathers in Alexambria, nor in :my fant of the then civilize. world, knew atught of the ('hristan Suchour. There is one thing further that I is in' forsy, and hat i-, that I think it is the uttermost foolishness for spiritual lecturers and mediums, now living in the mortal form, to say that Jesus was a great medium; when in fact his whole history was started by Potamon, myself, Ammonins Saccas, Plotinus, and others of that sehool. It is a combination of the Eclectieison that was put in shape about A. D. 250 , and worked up as a new idea and a new collection of moral precepts, when in fact it is nothing bat a combination of Indian, Phoenician and Grecian moral precepts. My name when here was Ammonius the Peripatetic."

The only biographical references we can find to Ammonius the Peripatetic are the following brief ones. Smith's Greek and Roman Biographical Dictionary says: "Ammonins the Peripatetic, who wrote only a few poems and declamations. He was a different person from Ammonius the teacher of Plotimus. (Longinus ap. Porphyr. in Plotin. vit.)" And Thomas's Dictionary of Biography etc., says: "Ammonius a Peripatetic philosopher, who tanght at Athens or Delphia, in the latter half of the first century. He was the preceptor of Platarch, and endeavored to reconcile the doctrines of Plato and Aristotle. Plutarch wrote a life of him which is not extant." And why, we ask, is not that life of Ammonius the Peripatetic extant. Let the Christian priesthood answer, especially those who are possessed of the scerets of the Roman Catholic Hierarchy. It will be observed that Longinus, a Neo-Platonist Eclectic, refers to Anmonius in connection with Porphyry and Plotinus, the great lights of Neo-Platonism, which shows very plainly that he preceded even Ammonius Saceas, in reviving the Eclectic philosophy of Potamon, the latter not having been similarly engaged until about the beginning of the second century. It will be observed that he speaks of himself as succecding Potanon, and as preceding Ammonius Saccas, Plotinus and others, in continuing the Eclectic School of Philosoplyy. Such being the spirit who commmicated, who can over-estimate the inmortance of that testimony to the utter falsity of the Cliristian religion? We regret that time and space will not admit of a nore detailed criticism of this undoubtedly genuine communication.

ANASTASIUS.

Librarian of the Vatican Library.

"GOOD DAY, SIR:-In my mortal life I was a Catholic-a Roman abbot, and librarian in the Vatican between the eighth and ninth centuries ; and I come here to endorse what the last spirit said, for I know that the various meetings or councils of bishops had for their object the suppression of all beoks that were in any way damaging to the Christian religion. Although they did everything they could do to destroy all accounts of deitied men, called gods or stavous, yet enotgh is written, upon the temples of antiquity, to enlighten any inquiring mind as to the fact that the Cliristian religion was the outgrowth of the teachings of the schools of Alexandria from A. D. 50 to A. D. 200 , and that this tiact can neither be donbted nor questioned by any honest unprejudiced man. Two krooks similar to those attributed to Matthew and John were taken loodily from a Greek athor, commenting on or writing abont Promethens and the teachings of the followers of that (iord after his supposed death ; and this Greek hook was well known and extensively read at Alexandria, athd a few copies of it were yet extant in my day, hut whether they are yet so, I cannot toll; for each pope who came after my time did what he conld to interpolate or destroy such ancient works. There are priests around me here to-day who gnash their teeth and howl as spirits to see me eertifying to the truth; but as an honest spirit, I cambot stand back and endorse that religion that I know to be utterly and entirely false. There is no evidence-there was nome in my daty-not a serap of authentie writing, to show that such a man or god as Jesus Christ ever existed; but there was this kind of evidence, and Henty of it, to show that the real Jesins of Nazareth was Apollonins of 'ryana, the ('appadocian saviour ; and those pricets who worshipped openly Jesus of Nazareth, were constantly engaged in collecting the saced reliesof this Apollonins. All the portrats, pietures or statues of Jesans of Nakareth are open your modern Bibles and see the pietures of your Jesas, you are lowking upon the face of Apollonins of Tyana. No pepe now ('atholie king, mon moble nor seholar, that is well informed, ean truthfulty denty what I here asert. The time hate comes when the world is ripe for the truth. The time is approaching when popes, emperors and kings must go down before the universal rights of humanity. Each man and woman must become their own priest, with none to go between them and the only true religion-simple and truthful spirit communion. This communication will live, and will sound the bell of liberty, long after you and the medium have been transferred to spirit life. My name was Anastasius-surnamed Bibliothe-carius-so-called on account of my biblical knowledge, which is not of much account now."

The only account we can find of Anastasius is in McClintock and Strong's Ecclesiastical Cyclopredia. "Anastasius (Bibliothecarius), librarian of the Vatican, and abbot of St. Maria Trans-Tiberim at Rome, a celebrated and learned writer of the 9th century. The dates of his birth and death are unknown. He was on terms of intimacy with the learned men of his age, especially with Photius and Hineman. He was present in 869 at the eighth council of Constantinople, where Photius was condemned. He translated the Acts of the Council from Greek into Latin. He wrote a Historia Ecclesiastica; but the most important of his writing is a History of the Popes." It was beyond all question the spirit of this learned Catholic author and librarian of the Vaticam, that gave that communication. Taken in connection with the preceding communication from Ammonius the Peripatetic, there can be no possible doubt that all that has been said by both spirits is strictly true. How long can the Christian superstition cudure the blazing light of such testimony!

JONATHAN BEN UZZIEL.

One of the Writers of the Targums.

Abstract

"I salute you, sir:-I am the Jew that wished to speak to, or communicate with you sometime back, as a contemporary of the so-ealled Jesus Christ. I was one of the writers of what is termed the Targums. There was only one older than myself, whose writings have come down to modern times. His name was Onkelos. As in the past, most of the communications have been of a character that bore more particularly on Jesus, my communication to-night is an arraignment of the Old Testament. The legends and traditions of the Jewish people extend no farther than Eara the seribe. The marginal notes upon all the ancient manuseripts went positively to show that the whole of what is called Jewish history was stolen bodily from Chaddean history during the Babylonish captivity ; and this is proven by the nativity of their great ancestor Abraham, whom their own traditions adnit to have been of $\mathrm{U} \%$ in Chaldea. All the intervening characters between Abraham and Gaphas the high priest, in my day, are so intermingled with Chaldean tradition, that it is hard to diseriminate between what is Jewish and what ('haldean. In astrology, Chaldea was one of the most learned nations in antiquity. How many of the Chaddean gods and heroes were borrowed from the stars I know not. That the Jewish Jehovah is hut a modified (and a bad moditication at that) of Jove, I will freely acknowledge, though I amat Jew. I think with all the learned men of my day, that the Jewish Moses was simply used in a typieal sense to signify a hero whose antiquity was so remote that there was no means of acertaning the truth as to his origin. In short, Moses was a creation of Jewish priests, in order to gain power throngh ceremonial religion. Coming down to my own time, 1 knew of no Jesu* exeept the one that has heen speefifed in some of the previous communications, and he was Jeas Malathich, who was, not exactly a bandit, and who was exerated hy Romatn javelins in the form of a crose, for what might be termed revolt. He was one of the disaffectel toward the Komat grovermment. I would say to the Jewish people as a Pbirit, that they who wait for any Redeemer or Mesiah to either restore the Jewi-h polity, of to sate themereles from the conserutnees of their sins, will wat in vain. The aphorism of the spirit life is, 'Every man and woman their own redeemer.' I hope this may do good in the promulgation of truth. My name was Jonathan Ben Uzziel."

Refer to McClintock and Strong's Cyclopredia of Ecclesiastical Literature for account of Jonathan Ben Uzziel.

If this communication is authentic, then it is very certain that the Jewish Scriptures are nothing more than paraphrases of Chaldean writings, instead of being, which they purport to be, Original Jewish writings. This spirit tells us that "the Jewish legends and traditions extend no farther back than to Ezra the Scribe," only about to B. C. 450 or 460 , which is strongly corroborated by their internal evidence, as well as by the general facts of history. The great antiquity of the Jewish scriptures, as they have come down to us, is certainly untrue. As Chaldean legends and traditions they undoubtedly existed long before they were paraphrased by the Jews. Much of this paraphrasing having been done by Onkelos and Jonathan Ben Uzziel, in the century before and the century after the alleged birth of Jesus Christ, the God-begotten son of the Virgin Mary. More than that, the spirit tells us the marginal notes on all the ancient manuscripts, went positively to show that the whole of what is called Jewish history, was stolen bodily from Chaldean history, during the Babylonish captivity; and to show this he alludes to the fact that Abraham the alleged great ancestor of the Jews, was of Uz in Chaldea; and that all the historical characters intervening between Abraham and Caiphas, the high priest in the First century A. D. were so intermingled with Chaldean tradition, that it is almost impossible to distinguish how much is Chaldean and how much has been added by Jewish writers. This is very apparent to any attentive well informed reader of the so-called Hebrew legends and traditions. The spirit of this learned and accomplished paraphrasist of Chaldean history admits that the Jewish Jehovah was but a bad modification of the older Greek supreme god, Jove. He denies that Moses was a historical personage, but being used by the Jewish priesthood as a typical myth, about whom nothing certain could be known, he was made the basis of their ceremonial religion. This spirit who lived and flourished during the first half of the first century, tells us positively that he never knew any Jesus, except Jesus Malathiel, an insurgent Jew, who was exceuted by Roman javelins in the form of a cross. We have no doubt of the authenticity of that spirit communication, and for the following reasons: Ist. It is beyond all question a spirit communication ; 2ll. It comes from a spirit thoroughly conversant with the history and literature of the Jews ; 3d. No one could have been betterinformed on those points than Jonathan Ben Uzziel ; and 4th. We can conceive of no possible reason why any spirit sufficiently well informed to have given that eommunication should have personated another spirit. It being, then, authentic, we accept it, as being substantially if not literally true. In view of the light thrown by this and other returned spirits upon Jewish theology, what becomes of the fonndation of the so-called Christian religion? Let the Christian priesthood answer if they can.

SAADIAS-GAON.

"I salute you, sir :-I was a Jewish teacher and writer, or what is termed, by you moderns, a paraphraser on the Old Testament, at Babylon, in the 10th eentury, A. D. These Arabie versions were copied from Onkelos, in what is known as the mixed Hebrew and Samaritan tongues, their original parport or real object had become, by that time confused by the alterations and interpolations made in them, to suit the views of the Rabbis of the varions Jewish sects, who had paraphrased them. so much so, that the modern King James's version of the Old Testament is merely a patchwork of the Targums of Onkelos, Jonathan Ben Czaiel, Aquila and myself. They have mixed these to such an extent, that if an ancient Targum writer could now make his appearance in mortal form, with what be really did write, you would be ashamed to tind how much of the Old Testament is the stolen history of Chaldea and Eyypt ; instead of having any real bearing upon Jewish history. The Jews have no history-or what may be termed real history-as a people, anterior to about $450 \mathrm{~B} . \mathrm{C}$. Prior to that time, their socalled history is made up of accounts of Chadean and Egyptian heroes and mythis. In aneient times all religions were composed by men, or principles, deified and transerred afterwards to represent some new star that had just made its appearance, or so alleged by the priests, about the date when the moral principle became understood, and its usefulntss proven by test of mortal experience. As a spirit I have long felt it my duty to return here, when I could obtain the conditions to do so, and after proper preparation, contribute my mite towards promoting truth."

Refer to Biographie Univer:elle for aceount of Saadias-Gaon.
We venture to predict that if ever the writings of SaadiasGaon are read by the light which that spirit communication throws upon then, the present version of the Old Testament will be found to be, as this spirit says, not copied from orignal Jewish records, but a patchwork of the Targums of Onkelos, Jonathan Ben Uzziel, Aquila, and Saadias-Gaon, which, as the returning spirit of the latter tells us, were, in the main, Hebraic-Samaritan versions of Chaldean and Egyptian legends, having no relation to the history of the Jews, so altered by Jewish Rabbins as to disguise their origin and nature. And that concoction of Chaldean and Egyptian fictions is made the basis and ground-work of the Christian faith.

ARNOLD.

Abbot of Citeaux.
"Good evening, SIR :-Long and weary has been my journey since leaving the mortal form. The curse of my spirit life has been remorse for being a fanatic and a bigot. May this fair earth never be cursed again by such things in human form as myself. Catholic Christianity has dammed me deeper than the hell of the Grecian Pluto. Torments of conscience have been to me what no tongue could express. My deeper curses alight upon those who made me what I was in mortal form, and my everlasting hate abide with those in mortal form who continue to teach the damnable doctrines that I taught. You probably wonder who this is that speaks to you. I was one of the hell-fire bigots who murdered the poor innocent Albigenses, and who, with an army of vindictive devils like myself, spared neither age nor sex at Beziers, in the thirteenth century ; and I come back here to-night, to speak to all churchmen; first, to tell them that their doctrines are erroneous, and their Saviour a lie; and secondly, if they do not wish to sutfer for humedreds of years in a hell of conscience, taunted by their victims, let them repent at once. To the good-the pure -the spirit life is beautiful ; but to those who are immoraland higotry is always immoral, no matter in what form it is shown-it is horrible. If they would eseape what I have tried to picture in language here to-night, let them throw aside their foolishness and wickedness, and accept reason instead of a myth for a Saviour. Whilst this confession is apparently only listened to by those you see here present, there are thousands of listeners who would damm me if they could ; but there is a bright host on the other hand that I go to join. My name was Arnold, abbot of Citeanx."

We find the following reference to Arnold, Abbot of ('iteanx, mader the head "Albigenses," in McClintock and Strong's C'yclopredia of Eecleyiastical Literature:
"At the begiming of the 13 th century a crusade was formed for the extirpation of heresy in Southern Europe, and Innoeent III, enjoined upon all princes to expel them from their dominions in 1209. The immediate pretence of the crusade was the murder of the papal legate and inquisitor, Peter of C'astlenau, who had been combissioned to extirpate heresy in the dominions of Count Raymond V'I. of Toulouse; but, its real object was to deprive the Count of his lands, as he had become an ohject of hatred from his toleration of the hereties. It was in vain that he had submitted to the most humiliating penance and flagellation from the hands of the legate Milo, and had purehased the papal absolution hy great sacrifices. The legates, Arnold, abbot of Citeanx, and Milo, who directed the expedition, took by storm Beziers, the capital of Raymond's nephew, Roger, and massaered 20,000 -some say 40,000-of the inhabitants, ('atholies as well as heroties. 'Kill them all,' said Arnold, '(iod will know his own.' '"

The spirit of this boody and murderons fanatic and bigot returns, after six hundred and seventy years, to confess his rimose and expate his drealful erimes, by bearing witness against the terrible guilt of the Roman Catholie Cliristan ('hureh and its false and ruinous teachings. It is a fortmate thing for him, even after living in that hong hell of remorse, that he found the medimistie channel, in a por homble heretie, such as he would once have gladly butehered, through whom to expate his terrible acts of wrong, and get a relicf that he eould mot onferwise havedone. And with such testimony as this, coming constantly from the world of spirits, we have professed Spiritualists ready and willing to slander and misrepresent the medium through whom this testimony is coming; and ourself for sending it abroad through the world; and this, because they want to tack the infernal thing to Spiritualism, to smother the truth so long kept back from mankind.

JOHN BAINBRIDGE.

An English Astronomer.

:: Good evening, Sir:-Like others who have communicated liere to night, I feel it my duty to comment on my mortal career, and tell how much benefit I have received from it as a spirit. In this mortal life I was an astronomer; and a study that I took great pleasure in, was correcting the astronomical charts and maps of the ancients. In this work I not only killed the Saviour, so-called, I destroyed Gorl, also, in my belief. In my time it was policy to conceal your belief ; to have told the truth would have ruined one's material interests. There was not an ancient astronomical chart or map, or anything appertaining to the zodiae, but what explained the whole story of the house of Bethlehem, or house of corn, and the sign of the Virgin, and in fact all the signs made it very plain that the history of Jesas Christ was all written amongst the stars, thousands of years before the alleged time of his birth. And I have not been disappointed, as a spirit, in finding that to be true which I discovered while here; for I find this same astronomical or astrological allegory running through all nations and tribes of spirits. The oldest of these say that the whole idea originated in one thing, and that was the custom of makiug sacrifices. They began with sacrificing inferior animals, and ended with sacrificing human beings. The different states of astronomy or astrology, corresponded with the character of the sacrifices made at various periods, and these were placed among the stars. If I had lived to finish my last work, I would no longer have concealed what I had learned, from fear of the clergy. I went to spirit life in 1634, and my name was John Bainbridge."
The guide said, after the control was yielded, that the spirit was a native of Ashby de la Zouth, born some where about 1560.
Refer to Biographie Universelle for aceount of Bainbridge.
The Penny Cyclopredia says, that Bainbridge "was a good Oriental seholar, having studied Arabic for the purpose of reading the astronomers of that lamgage." It is indeed very strange that so very little has been recorded of the labors of this undoubtedly learned and aceomplished seholar and astronomer. We infer that his unpublished works disclosed too much for the safety of the Christian allegory. We feel strongly impressed to believe that the spirit of John Bainbridge returned at this time, not only to testify to what his learned investigations in ancient astrononty led him to diseover, but to point out the significance and value of his suppressed works. What would we not give to be able to follow up and mearth the literary treasures that are being pointed out through these wonderful disclosures.

CHARLES HARDWICK.

An English Theologian.

"Goon Aftersons, sin: In this mortal life I was deeply interested in the Clristian religion. My name was Charles Hardwick, and I came to my death on the leth of August, 1siss, while ascending the Perenees. The last title that I had, in the mortal life, was arehdeacon of Ely, England. I am used here, ats was the first spirit whe eomtronled at the hast seancer, (f)arles Franeis Alter, to propare the way for a concontration of wistom, necessary for the ancient spirit witneseses who will follow me here to-lay. I wrote many works, allangly dyine at the early age of thirty-eight. They were principally dewoted to showing that ('hrist and Christianty were sumerior to all other roligions. What will follow is the restit of my axprionees in spirit life. Se a mortal I was too enthosiastirally blind to consider the value of the testimony of ancient authors whieh I examined in my researehes. I eommenced by eomparing the religions of India, China, Egypt, Medo-Persia, America and Oceanica, with each other ; and after an examination of the whole of the religious systems of the globe, I showed, in my work, the foolishmess of what I called paganism as compared with Christianity. But as a spirit I am compelled to say that I was altogether wrong in my geographical placements of religions. - India is not the mother of civilization and the originator of all religions. Nubia, Kordofan and Ethiopia were the countries in which the most remote civilizaltion arose; thence it spread into prehistoric Egypt. The most ancient monuments of Egypt go far beyond the age ascribed to Moses. Thence it passed to Chaliea and Assyria ; and thence iuto India. I do not mean to say that those countries were not before inhabited, but their peoples were ignorant and barbarons. From India the tide of civilization flowed East and West. The first by way of the lands extending far in the Pacific Ocean to America, and the second by way of the Mediterranean and the Black Seas into Northern and Southern Europe. There was two emigrations from Asia to America before those continents were historically known; one by way of Behring's Strait, and the other by way of Boro Bada, (which was the ancient name of Java) across the Pacific to Guatimala. As the more sonthern emigrants had a finer climate than those who went by way of the north, who landed in North America, they advanced more rapidly than did the latter. And to show you what we know to be the fact as spirits, to wit : that there was intercourse between the Western and Eastern continents firmly established before the Mosaic period, we will call your attention to the fact that the Mexican god Quetzalcoatl was worshipped in Southern India, the latter country receiving him from the former by way of the islands of the Middle Pacific. Indeed there was more than one interchange of Gods between Asia and America, as in the course of time the one became more advanced in civilization than the other. Quetzalcoatl, Ibrahm and Gautama occupied with these kindred peoples the same position, that of Saviour, as Jesus Christ does to the Christians; and as no man could see the father of the Universe, they one and all resorted to an intercessor in the way of a Sun, (not Son) whieh they represented in human form. This is as much as it is necessary for me to say at this time. I will close by saying that I have found as a spirit that no faith or belief not founded on fact and reason will avail any one. If you think to rest upon them you will find that an avenging spirit force will compel you to testify to what you must know to be true as a spirit. I thank you for the favor of being heard."

Refer to the American Cyclopredia for account of Hardwick.

Such was the field of inquiry that engaged the attention of Mr. Hardwiek, and upon which he set ont to exalt the Christian religion at the expense of the more ancient and philosophical "heathen" religions from which it was bodily stoten. The spirit tells us that as a spirit he had discowered his mistake in locating the different religrions of the world ; and that insteal of India being the mother of eivilization and of religions, that these arose in Nubia, Kordofan and diniopia. He tells us that from the latter countries religion spread over aneient beyp t, as its most ancient monmments show ; that from Edypt it passed to Chaldea and Assyria ; thence into India, and thence East and Wiest, to America and Europe. He says there were two emigrations from Asia to America, one by way of the northern connection bet ween the two continents, and one from Boro Bodo or Boro Bada by way of the Pacific istand:-Boro Bada being the ancient name of the islame of Java. This statement of the spirit is strongly corroborated by all known archeological and historically recorded facts. We are strongly inclised to believe his further statement, that long before the Mosaic period there was intercourse between Asia and America. As we have before shown, the god quetzalenatl of Mexion or the Aztee Buddha, was identieal with the rowl Buddhat of the Asiaties, and expecially of the imhahitants of Southern India. How this ancient intereourse was krpt up, between the two continents we ean only conjecture. There is much reason to beliese that at no remote geobgical period much of what is now the Pacifice Ocean was land; but even if this were not the (ase, and there were intermediate islands whichare now smak beneath the ocean, the most primitive know ledge of naviqation would have sufficed to provide for the supposed intereomese

It is at all eventa very certain that (Quctzatemath in Mexien, and thrahm of the Brahmins and (iautama of he Ibaddiatso of India, were to those perphes what (Christ is to ('hristians, their respectivesavions. Refer to Preseott's Conquest of Mexien for aceombt of Quetzalcoatl.
'flarepirit therefore was correet in saying that (Quetzalcoat was reared her the Mexicans an the saviour of their race. In this inatance it will be seen that this. Mexieans satiour was the Sum, that god of the atr-realm which is the erator of the fruits, flowers and other hasings which beatify the earth and contribute to the hepplineso of man.

MESROP OR MESROB.

An Armenian Theologian.

Abstract

"I am here to-day to throw light upon what Philostratus failed to explain, to wit : the Testament of A pollonius of Tyana. The Coptic or Egyptian rersion of the Scriptures, contained the Pentateuch, the Psalms, and the Proverbs of the Old Testament and the New Testament to Revelations. I was myself, what was called in those days, a targum writer, and published an Armenian version of the Scriptures ; and my particular guide in doing this was the Coptic version before mentioned. It went in my day under the title of "The Holy Invocations; or The Actions of the Great Son of God, Apollonius of Tyana," the purpose of which, Apollonius said, was to set forth the thoughts of the sages of the past, which he had obtained by the aid of books; but that the actions and miracles therein set forth were his own. He, Apollonius, travelled over all the countries therein mentioned, and was well known in certain portions of India, Armenia, Abyssinia, Esypt, Cappadocia, Judea, Greece, Rome and Asia Minor; and he performed his miracles and preached his doctrines in all those countries. He was worshipped as a divine being as late as A. D. 275, under the abbreviated names of Apol, Pol and Lesbos. Pol was pronounced in the Armenian Paul. [Was Apollonius called Lesbos?] He was known by that name in the Eastern Countries. Lesbos signified nearly the same as is signified by the term grand Llama of Tibet, in your time. It meant the sainted Sion of God, the Initiated one, who possessed the Father's secrets. My Armenian version was published under its proper title "Apollonius, the Son of God's Teachings and Morals" : but this title was altered by the man whose spirit will follow me, Parlinus, the first Archbishop of York, 622. He will follow me and make plain what I have left unsaid. I thank you for this hearing. We have sought to have these communications interlock, so that they cannot be disturbed."

We take the following account of Mesrop or Mesrob, from MeClintock and Strong's Cyclopredia of Biblical Literature. "Mresop, also called Mashtoz, the noted translator of the Armenian version of the Bible, was born in the latter half of the fourth century, in a small village of the provinee of Tarou.

IIe was at first secretary of the Armenian patriarch Nerses the Great, and afterwards became his minister of eecelesiastical allairs. After filling this position seven vears, he went into a convent, but, failing to dind any satisfaction there, he went into a desert, where he gathered about him a number of young men as scholars. Under the govermment of the patriareh Isak (Nak) the (ireat (A. D). 340-440), Mesrop was commissioned to prath as missionary, for which pesition he was especially fitted ty his thomongh knowledge of foreign languages. He now found need of an Armenian version of the Seriptures, the version of the elergy being in the syriae, a language but little understood ly the populace. After having poent several years in the arduous task, and that with but little show of sumeess, he resolved to throw himsolf upon the merey of his Lord and (iod, and seek at his hands the wisdom and knowledge required for the successful aceomplishment of his undertaking. Nor did he wait lonig for an answer to his prayer. While sojourning at fimmsata, we are todd, he was led to sere the different types engraved in a rock, and that he could remember every single letter so platinly, that he was able to dereribe them to the distinguishod calligrapher Rufanus, who tinally composed the desired aphabet. He immediately commeneed the gigantic work of tramsating the Bible from the (areek into the Amenian, a version that was introdued afterwards into that part of Amenia, governed by his king Vramshapuh. By remest of other sowereigns, he made also transiations for the (eorgian and Abbaian eountries. A change in the gov(rmment obliged him to quit Persian territory, and he sought a new home in (irecian Armenia, where he contmued his atrivity under the special protection of the emperor Theodosits of (onstantinople, and the patriarch Attious. In spite of the severe ernsades against the members of the new religion, he eontimed to inspire his scholars and friends with contidences in their final suceess, and defented several times the varions attempts to introduce idolatry in the practice of a pure (athofie religion. Gne of his later great work was the tramsation of the liturgical books of the (ireek, into the modern Armenian lamgage After the death of his old companion latak 1. , Norong was elected patriareh of Ammenia, bat he died the

This seems to be all and more than was known concerning Mesrob and his theological labors. It will be seen, if the eommuncation of the spirit is true, that the mature of the Armenian version of the Scriptures, as it is called, has been wholly misapprehended. In order to place before the reader all that ean be said against its truthfulness, we will copy what the same Cyclopadia says of what has been called the Coptic version of the Scriptures :
"Egyptian versions of the Holy Scriptures, After the death of Alexander the Great, the Greeks multiplied in Egypt, and obtained important places of trust near the throne of the Ptolemies. The Greek language accordingly began to diffuse itself from the court among the people, so that the proper language of the country was either forced to adapt itself to the Greek, both in construction and in the adoption of new words, or was entirely suspended. In this way originated the Coptic, componnded of the old Egyptian and the Greek. There is a version in the dialect of Lower Egypt, usually called the Coptic or, better, the Memphitic version; and there is another in the dialect of Upper Egypt, termed the Sthidie, and sometimes the Thebaic. 1. The Memphitic version of the BibleThe Old Testament in this version was made from the Septuagint and not from the original Hebrew. It would appear from Munter that the original was the Hesychian recension of the Septaagint then current in the country. There is little toulst that all the Old Testament books were translated, thongh many of them have not been discovered. Although this version (not the Thebaic) seems to be that exclusively used in the public services of the Copts, it was not known in Europe till Dr. Marshall of Lincoln College, contributed some readings from it to Bishop Fell's New Testament."

It was undoubtedly to this Memphitic Coptic version that the spirit referred. The spirit expressly says that he trauslated his version of the Seriptures from the Coptic, and not from the Greek. This fact was undoubtedly known, and hence the attempt to make it appear that the Coptic tongue was a Greek idion. This is certainly not a fact. The Coptic language is in its basic features and its details, the spoken language of the ancient Egyptians, and in later times becane inter-persed with

Greek and Arabian words, which were assimilated and made to conform to the grammatical principles of the ancient Egyptian language. This is admitted on the same theological authority, which says :
"Coptic language, a mixture of ancient Egyptian with Greek and Arabic words, spoken in Egypt after Christianity. It is notnow a spoken language, having heen everywhere supplanted by the Arabie." [The (optic was eertanly a written and spoken language before the ('hristian era.] "It has not been spoken in Lower Egypt since the tenth eentury, but lingered for some centuries longer in Upper Egypt. It is, however, still used by the Copts in their religious services, but the lessons, after being real, in Coptie, are explained in Arabic. The Coptic literature consists in great part of the lives of saints and homilies with a few (inostie works. It isesecially interesting as giving us a clow to the meaning of the himoglyphics after they have been phometically deciphered. It is divided into three dialects, the Memphitic or Lower Eeryptian, which is the most polishod, amd is sometimes exclusively called Coptic; the Gahdic or Lpper Eqgytian; and the Bashmuric, which wats spoken in the Delta, and of which nuly a few remains exist."

On what anthority it is clamed that Mesrob translated hiss version of Seriptures from the (ireek into the Armenian, we do not know. We will give what the same anthority says in relation to the Amenian version of Mespols:
"This tramslation of the Bible was mulertaken in the year 410 hy Maroh with the aid of his pulils doanmes Eeclensis and Iosephas Palnesis. It :uppeans that the patriareh leatak lime attempterd, in consergence of the Persians having destrown all the eopics of the (ireck version, to make a tramsation from the Pe-hiter that Mesol, herame his combutor in this work; and that they actatly comphed their transhation from the siriac. But when the above named pupils, who hat been sent to the reedesiatical comacil at Ephestas, remmed, they bromght with latid aside his trand:ation from the Peatite, tand preparel to (a)mmene :mew from : more anthentio text. Imprimet
 remd his pmpile to Ahexambia, to anduite acomate (ipeck

Can any one read that account of the Armenian version carefully and critically, and not see the labored effort to make it appear that Mesrob's Armenian version was from an accurate Greek version? After acknowledging that the Amenian historian Moses Chorensis was a contemporary and "was also employed as a disciple of Mesrob, on this version," this Christian writer is guilty of the folly of disputing the date given by that correct and careful writer, as to the time and completion of the Armenian version ; and this for no better reason than that the story about the bringing of an accurate Greek version from the Council of Ephesus was by that very fact shown to be false. As it is not pretended that Mesrob, could have had any Greek version, accurate or otherwise, for his guidance, other than the one alleged to have been brought from Ephesus, and as his version was completed, according to Moses Chorensis, twenty years before that could have happened, there is but one reasonable conclusion possible, and that is, that Mesrob did not translate the Armenian version from the Greek. The question then arises: from what version of the Bible did he translate? He tells us as a spirit, that he was guided in his translation by the Coptie version. This seents to be singularly confirmed by the facts already set forth. It is admitted that Mesrob did not understand the Greek tongue, and that he was compelled to send two of his pupils to Alexandria to learn the Greek language. That aceurate Greek version spoken of, we are told, was gotten at Ephesis, a Greek city, where it could have been readily translated into the Armenian tongue, and where it would have been translated, if such a translation had ever been made. There is therefore special significance in the mention of the fact that Mesrob sent his pupils to Alexandria in relation to producing his Armenian version. Hatl he intended to procure a Coptic version of the Seriptures, it was to Alexandria that he would have sent for it, for he could have obtained it nowhere else. We then have, in this one fact, the strongest reason to believe that it was from the Coptie, and not from the Greek, that Mesrob translated his version.

This is still more strongly indicated by the further fact that the Armenian veswion did not follow any known versions of the Old or the New Testament. The same authority says:
has followed the version of Theodotion). Its most striking characteristic is, that it does not follow any known recension of the septarint. Although it more often agrees with the Alexandrine text, in readings which are pecular to the latter, than it dues with the Abline or Complutensian text, yet, on the other hatad, it also has followed readings which are only found in the last (wo. Bertholdt accounts for this mixed text by assuming that the copy of the Greek Bible sent from Ephesus contained the Latian recension, and that the pupils brought back copies, according to the Hesyehian recension, from Alexandria, and that the translators made the latter their standard, but eorrected their version by the aid of the former. The version of the New Testament is equally close to the Greek original, and also represents a text made up of Alexandrine and Occidental readings."

There are several suggestive facts embraced in that statement. The Amenian version "floes not follow any known recension of the Soptuagint" (ireek version. It is also admitted that the Armenian version followed the readings which are only fomed in the Aldine or 'omplutension Polyghot, as well the the readings of Theodotion's version and the version of Hescehins. These facts shom that the Ammenian version wats the translation from an original version, of whieh each of these other versions were moditied coppes. Had the Armenian version been made aceording to either of the known (Greek versions, it would not have presented somany deviations from all of them. Theodotion was an "Ehonite Christian," in other words, a (inontic, athd his version was undonbtedy a (inostic production of the Alexamdrian schesol. But, in Bertholdt's conjecture that the pupils of Mespob took hack from . Wexandria to Armeniat the Hesebian reednsion, and that the Armenian tamslators made that reednion their stamdad, we have almost positive proof that the spirit's statement, that he wats grided in his Amenian version hy the (optie verion, is true. Who was Heschins? The Nouselle Biographie (innerate says of him:
" Hesehins, an Eqyptian hishop, who suffered martyrdom during the persecution of beoletian :and (iaberian, aboun 310 or:311. Hody identites him witha Heydhas whon revied the Bible of the seventy, athl where mevinel version was getherally

If Hesychius was a bishop of Alexandria at the beginning of the fourth century, and about that time made a recension of the Septuagint version which was in Greek, it is hardly likely that he ventured to depart from that most accurate Greek version of the Scriptures, as the Septuagint is claimed to have been. The most that Hesychius, a Greek Egyptian bishop, would have done, was to translate the Greek Septuagint into the Coptic tongue for the use of his Coptic followers, and this is no doubt just what he did. It therefore becomes almost certain that it was the Coptic version of Hesychius, the Greek bishop of the Copts, that the pupils of Mesrob, took from Alexandria, and that the latter followed in making his Armenian version of the same Scriptures. At all events, this is the only supposition that can accomnt for the confusion worse confounded that Christian writers have caused by seeking to show that Mesrob followed a Greek version of the Bible. When, in addition to this train of facts, all pointing to the same conclusion, we have the positive statement of the spirit that he was guided in publishing the Armenian version, by the Coptic version of the Scriptures, there is hardly any room to question the truth of this statement.

The spirit then states what the Coptic version contained. He says it contained the Pentateuch, Psalms, and Proverbs, of the Old Testament, and all the New Testament. If other books of the Old Testament were included in the Armenian version, it is to be inferred they were gotten by Mesrob from some other source than the Coptic version. Mesrob tells us that he was a Targum writer? The definition of Targum is, translation, interpretation, and was the name applied to a Chaldee version or paraphrase of the Old Testament. If Mesrob was a Targum writer, two things seem highly probable. First, Mesrob did not have to invent a written Armenian language, as has been claimed he was compelled to do, in order to publish his Armenian version ; and, second, that he translated or interpreted the Scriptures, not in the Chaldean, but in the Armenian tongue; and if he translated his Armenian version from the Coptic, a third point seems to be established, and that is, that 'Targums were written that had nothing to do with Hebrew originals whatever.

But, having given ample proof of the substantial trathfulness of those pats of the communication already commented upon, we do not feel that we strain a conclusion when we say, that we regard the rest of the communieation as equally credible. If that be so, then it is certain that the Coptic version of the IIoly seriptures was nothing more nor less than the Coptie version of "Apollonitus the som of God's Teachings and Morals," under which title the spirit of Mesrob says he published what is now ealled The Amenian Version of the Holy seriptures. Such undoubtedly was the true character of the Coptie version of what is ealled the Bible. The spirit tells us that Apollonius ditl not clam to be the author of the theological ant ethical teachings eontained in his Testament, to which Philostratus referred as being extant when he wrote about A. D. 225 to 245 ; but that it contained the thoughts of the sages of the past which he had obtained from books. He also tells us that the actions and miracles therein set forth were the incidents of his own life. The spirit does not overstate the vast work in the way of trasel and public teaching preformed hy Apollonins in the extensive countries to which he refers. That Apollonius was worshiphed as a divine being, until A. D. 275, is a historically known fate ; but whether under the name of Lestos, as the spirit states, we have no conclusive means of determining. Nor can we throw any light on the meaning of such atesignation, if it wate ever applied to Apehlonius of Trama. As to the abhreviated manes $A$ pel and I'ol which were applied to him, we have much reason to know this to be the fact. In First Corinthians, chap, iii, 1 to $s$, it is said:
"I. And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, hut as unto carnal, eventas unte babes in ('hrist.
"... I have fid you with milk, athl mot with meat: for hitherto se were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able
" 3 . For yo are yet carnal : for whereas there is among yon onvying and strife, and tivisions, are ye not carnal, and watk :1- 14 " 1 :"
" 4 . For while one saith, I am of Patul ; and another, I :am of

"s. Wha then is Panl, and who then is Apollos, hut ministers hy whom yo beliewed, exon as the lord gave to every man:

"Now he that planteth and he that watereth are one; and every man shall receive his own reward, according to his own labor."
Here we have the plain and unqualified admission that Paul and Apollos were one and the same person. No sophistry can explain so positive a statement away. Now who was Panl and who A pollos, if they were one? In the Cambridge Manuscript, the Codex Cantabrigiensis, or Codex Beza, presented to Cambridge University in 1581 by Theodore Beza, who said he obtained it during the French wars in 1562, when it was found in the monastery of St. Irenæus at Lyons, in this same Chapter 3 of 1st Cor., the name of A pollos does not appear, but instead the name of Apollonius. It is admitted that this manuscript is, with the greatest probability, of the 6th century, which conjecture if correct, connected Apollonius with the Paul of the Christian Scriptures as identically the same person, as late as the 6th century. A writer in MeClintock and Strong's Cyclopredia says of this Codex.
"Its Alexandrine forms would argue an Egyptian origin, but the fact of the Latin translation shows that it is a Western copy. It is assigned with great probability to the sixth century. It is chiefly remarkable for its bold and extensive interpolations, amounting to some six hundred in the Acts alone, on which account it has been cantiouly employed by critics, notwithstanding its great antiquity."

Here is a precious disclosure, truly. It then seems in the highest degree probable that this Codex Bezr, next to the Coptic version, and its Armenian translation by Mesrob, is the most significant and important proof of the Apollonian origin of the so-called IIoly Scriptures. That it should contain the name of Apollonius as its chief author, and be of Egrptian origin, are facts that go far to prove the truth of spirit Mesrob's statement as to the Apollonian nature of the Armenian version. It is a well known fact that Apollonius went into Upper Egypt and Ethiopia, where he remained for a considerable time comparing teachings with the Gymmosophists of those countries of Afrien, and Philostratus has recorded the profound impression he made among those learned ascetics, and the high vencration in which he was held by them. It is most probable that it was only during this late period of his life that he published the writings which have come down to us from him. Be this as it may, it certainly is from Egypt, and not from Judea or Grecee or Rome, that the oldest versions of the Christian Scriptures as they are called, were obtained. The writer last referred to says : "The characters (of the Codex Bezae) betray a later age than the Codices Alexandrius, Vaticanus, and Ephremi (A, I3 and ('), and capitals oceur in Codex Sinatiens." Here we have again a most significant fact. Although this eopy of a Latin and Greek version of the Scriptures, is later than the three above mentioned versions, it pays no regard to them whatever, but goes to some older and anterior original version, whieh differs so widely from the Alexandrins, Vaticanus and Ephremi versions, that in the single book of Acts, it contains some six hundred, of what are called, interpolations. According to every legitimate rule of criticism, it is natural to infer that what the writer referred to, calls interpolations, were parts and pareels of some original scriptures from which all the various versions have been intermediately or immediately obtained. It is conceded that Codices Alexandrins, Vaticanus and Ephremi are not earlier than the begiming of the middle of the 5 th century. It is therefore highly probable that there was some older version than either of them, that contaned all the alleged interpolations of the Codex Bezae. If the three former versions did not eontain the alleged interpolated matter of the Codex Bezae, presuming that the eopiers or translators all uset the same or a similar original, it is natural to infer that mothing materially diflerent foom the common original was added to any of them, and if any portion of that original watromitted, it was admitted for a purpose For instance, if the original Seriptures were the published writings of Apollonitus of TY:an: and the eopiers of those writings wanted to deprive him of the aredit of his labors, and to attribute them to some person anknown to history, they woukd, as a mather of course eliminate from those writings that which wonk show their real mature and authorship. This it is absolutely known was done by Euschanz, Enthalius and other (hristian schemers, whereser they foumd it neecsary, in their work of theological anderednsitatieal deeption. No English or Fremeh tamsation of the (omex Beza hat ever been made, so firas we can diseower, but we venture to say that if such at ramshation ewor is made, it will be fomed that the alleged interphiations, expecially the six humbed in the Aets of the Sperthe, show that wo dexns ('hrist or his Apmstles hatd aty tures, and that Apollonius, who is expressly mentioned therein, was the real author or compiler. We infer, with good reason, that the Codex Beze was a copy of the writings of Apollonius of Tyana by some Neo-Platonist opponent of Christianity. But we can pursue this inquiry no further at present, but will close by noticing the last statement of the spirit. He says; "My Armenian version was published under its proper title "Apollonius the Son of God's Teachings and Morals;" but this title was altered by the man whose spirit will follow me, Paulinus, the first Archbishop of York, in 622." We need do no more than to invite the reader's attention, in relation thereto, to the following communication and our comments thereon.

PAULINUS.

The First Archbishop of York, England.

"My salutation shall be: He or she who tampers with truth shall never rest until they have rectified it. I an here with only one excuse, and that is that zeal and enthusiasm carried me away. I think it was in A. D, 645 that I entered the spirit life, and from that day until A. D. 1700 , I endeavored, with all the perseverance of an enthusiastic spirit, to find Jesus Christ. But all these centuries of searching ended in finding the man, whom I ignored in my earth life, Apollonius of Tyana. Not that Apollonius desires to be considered the Saviour of men, but he does desire that the truth shall be established. I tampered with the Armenian version of the Testament of Apollonius. [Do you mean Mesrob's version?] Yes. The Armenian version of Mesrob; and also one from Upper Egypt. I also made some alterations in the Latin version, that is the Council of Nice version. Because I was one of the first translators of the Scriptures from the Gallic into the Saxon tongue. I translated from the Gallic, Latin, Armenian and Coptic tongues into the Saxon; and I did it simply becanse I thonght this religion of Jesus was true, although the writings from which I translated showed that it was not true. But, how many of your modern commentators are doing the same thing? They are doing this, to-day, blinded by their zeal which takes the place of reason, and then follows bigotry and mutruth. [C'an you now say what alterations or substitutions you made in the Testament of Apollonims:? I substituter, as did Euschins, Jesus C'hrist of Judea for Apollonins of Trana. [Jou tramsatated the versions: you speak of, making thone alterations? Yes; I made them to eorrespond with Ensbbus's version. This is about all I can do to correct my earthly erors. [What heemme of your Saxon version of the Seriptures? It was revised by Bede, and afterwards ly Thomas a' becket; and it was atterwards put into its present shate by Arohbishop Whately. [You have kept trace of these things as a spirit?] I have followed them. [Hase you met Arehbishop Whately in spirit life?] Yes; but since his time, theologieal altereations have taken so many directions that it has been almont impossible to follow them. I am Paulinus, first archbishop of York, in 62. . [How came you to have a Latin mame? I was from Bretanno in Gaul, and it was very customary for Gallic priests to bear Latin names."

We can find very little in relation to Paulinus's life, but will give what we can. MeClintock and Strong's Cyelopedia says:
"sit. Paulinus of York, an ecelesiastic of the 7th ecntury, noted as the companion of Nit. Angustine in his mission to England, was sent from Rome by Pope Gregory in A. D. 601. He soon made himself the favorite of the Englinh princes, and ohtained jositions of influence and trat at eourt. [n A. J). (ix) he wath eonsecrated bishop by Arehbivhop Jusths to attemil Athelberta, danghter of Ethellert, king of Kont, to the Nonth on her marriage with Edwin, king of the Nomthumbrians. In A. D. five and $6=7$ his missionary labors resulted in marvelous suceeses ; thonsands were baptized by him, ant his fame was in all the land. He was made bishop of Sork, where he foumded the ('athedral, about fi2s, and 6.31 consecrated Honorions Archbishop of Canterbury at Lineoln. In 6is3, on the death of King Edwin, he was obliged to dee before the invading Northmbrians, and sottled in Fent. He there becane bishop of Roelhester, athl died about 643."

This is substantially all that has been pertatted to come down to as in relation to Panlinus. The facts that he was sent hy Gregory i. to Britatio to aid sit. Aurnstine in his great mission to that eoountry ; that he become so influential with English prinees, that his mis-ionary labors revulted in such marvolots sucesses; that he was made ly Justas Arehbishop of York; and that he wats the founder of that great eceleviastical province ; it is very certain that Paulinus was a man of extraordinary character. It is said he was sent from Rome to England, but we are not told what country was the country of his nativity. That he was selected to assist St. Augustine would rather indicate him of Gallic birth, as his spirit clains was the fact. He was just such a man as would have songht to provide a Saxon version of the Scriptures, and just such a man as would have known what versions of the original Scriptures were the nearest the truth. It seems he did not use any Greek version whatever, but as he says, used the Armenian version of Mesrob, and also one from Upper Egypt, (no doubt a Coptic version, if not the one made use of by Mesrob himself.)

ST. GERMAIN. Bishop of Auxerre.

"My Salutation, Messieurs, shall be: Let us love, instend of hate each other; and we can only achieve this by individualization of character without regard to any prevailing beliefs. No one can save you but the saving power within yourselves. No spirit or mortal can make you what you are to be, but your own thoughts. Purity cin only be obtained by right actions. I ask that all spirits and all mortals will forgive me for teaching doctrines in relation to a person, so-called, but whom I never have yet seen, namely, Jesus Christ. No more ardent follower had he than me, and yet honesty of belief in spirits is no criterion of honesty. Believe in anything you feel is right, but your actions will sit in judgment upon you, they will be your saviour; and one is with me here to-day, who was intimately related with me in this mortal life, in the propagation of Christianity, who desires me to say for her (a saint socalled), that one good action is worth any amount of belief, in the way of redemption. Her name when she was here, was St. Generieve, one of the patron saints of the city of the highest civilization and deepest immorality, (Paris.) But what I now know of Jesus Christ, I might have known if I had not been a fanatic. I held at one time a copy of the original remaining writings of one Moses Chorensis, and the original of it is now in possession of the Maronite monks of Mount Lebanon ; but no one sees it, and it is guarded as a sacred work by their Patriarch or chief. But those manuscripts once exposed to the world, will prove that the original Gospels were written in Cappadocia in the Syriac-Hebraic tongue, and not in the Greek, and were copied into the Armenian, by this Moses Chorenensis. [Was the Armenian a Greek idiom?] As far as I understood, it was a mixture of Indian and (ireck, but I know that the Armenian, since my time, has come in contact with the (ircek so much that the language has undergone considerable change. These Gospets of the Armenians set forth St. Paul as A pollonius of Tyana, with Jesus Christ as a modern typitieation of Krishna, of India; that is they placed Krishna as living at the time of Apollonims of Tysuna, and A pollonius as the disciple instead of the real master. All this I knew at the time I lived in mortal form, hut I could never see it clearly until I became a spirit, on accomnt of my fanaticism. And as I am anxious and willing to rectify the errors of my mortal life, so I am here to-day, to testify what I know of the truth, thanking you for the opportunity. That will finish what I have to say to-day. St. Germain, Bishop of Auxerre."

If the communication of St. Germain is correct, then there are works of Moses Chorenensis that have been suppressed by the Catholic Chureh. We hope that the time may ame when the writings of this Armenian bishop will be again brought to the light ; it is mueh, however, to have the assurance of this spirit that those writings showed that the original Gospels were written in Cappadocia, in the Syriac-Hehraie tongue, and were copied therefrom by Moses Chorenensis, bishop of Bagravand, into the Armenian tongue. This leaves hardly a doubt that Apollonius of Tyana, a native of (appadocia, was the writer or compiler of the so-ealled original gospels, a fact testified to by the spirit of Apollonims himself. Indeed, the spirit of Sit. (iermain says that this Armmian version of the (iospels, set forth St. I'aul as Apollonius of 'Tyana, with Jesus Christ as a modificed typifieation of Chrishma of India, at living at the time of Apolionius, and A pollouins at the diseiple inste:ad of the master. Thas the testimmen of one spirit after another is being given, all temding to demonstrate, not moly that Christianity is a monstrons frame :und deeption, hat domonstrating the natmere of that framd and deception in all its details. Wet the light shine: Cirenlate these irrefutable revelations from the spirit side ot life. Do not fear. The truth will harm no one ; and will helpall.

MONTHCUTE.

Earl of Salisbury.

"Good day, to you:-My name is Montacute, Earl of Salisbury. In the year 1343, I conquered the Isle of Man from the Scots. My business here, to-day, is not concerning my military exploits, but about the religion I found on that island when I conquered it. According to their priests and teachers, in the year 400 , or thereabout, the god Hesus was introduced on that island, and as that name sounded so familiar to me, I interfered but very little with it. I told the priests of my religion to let them have their Hesus, and to try to make that name identical with Jesus, which they gradually did. The native priests said the Hesus religion had been introduced amongst their ancestors from Ireland by a saint or priest named Columbkille. They said that St. Patrick, St. Columbkille, St. Declan, and a score of other Irish saints, who were called Christians, were all teachers of Hesusism. The writings concerning Hesusism, when that worship was first introduced on the Island of Man, went to show that it was of Phonician origin. If you seek Phoenician history, you will discover that it is almost impossible, to find the work of any Phoenician author of note extant at this time. The writings of Sanchoniathon on religious subjects, if they are ever to be found, must be looked for among the relics of the ancient Irish, Scots and Picts. I think that the round-towers and other ancient ruined edifices of Mreland and Scotland will yet throw a great deal of light upon that religious imposition called Christianity. As the Manx people, who inhabited the Isle of Man in my time, were very superstitious, you will find them so to-day. I think they have among them now the relics of the ancient religion which they carefully conceal from the ministers and priests of the Roman Catholic and English Churches. The evidence I came to give is about completed, and I will say no more."

The only reference I have been able to find in relation to Montacute, Earl of Salisbury, is in the History of the Isle of Man, by Rev. Joseph George Cummings, London, 1848, Appendix B, pages 277-278. It is as follows:
"The rival claims to the throne of Man arose from Affrica, younger sister to Magnus, the last king of Man, and therefore aunt to the aforesaid Mary, danghter of Reginald. In a deed of gift, dated at Britgewater in somerset, A. D. 1305, it which she styles herself 'Aufrica de (ommoght heres de Man,' she made over the ishand to Simon de Monte Acuto, (Simon Montacute), from whom a clam thus descended to his son, Sir William Montacute, who is sad to have mortgaged it for seven years to Anthony Beck, bishop of Inrham and Patriareh of Jerusalem, which bishopalso obtained a grant of it for life from Edward II. On the death of that prelate, March 3il, 1311, the rival clams to the Isle of Man appear to have been entertained by the Montacute family. This rivalry was, however, at length happily set aside by the mion of the two contesting families in the persons of Sir William Montacute, Earl of Salisbury, (son of the last mentioned Sir William) with Mary, danghter of William de Waldebeouf, and therefore great granddatyhter of Reginald, the som of Olave the Black. This appears to have taken place in 1343, through the influence of Edward III, who furnished the Earl of Salisbury men and means for the conquest of the island from the Seoteh, who then had it in possession.
"In 1344, Sir William Montacute was solemnly crowned king of Man, hat the family seem to have hedd the island by an uneasy temme; and in the year 1393, the Earl of salishury sold it to Sir William Seroop, the king's chamberlain, afterwads Earl of Wiltshire, on whose attainder and execution in 1399, 1henry IV granted the Isle to Henry Perey, Earl of Northumberland, to be held hy him on the service of carrving the sword of Lameaster on the day of the coronation of the kings of England."

It is thus seen that a part of this communication is fully confirmed by recorded historical facts. That the commmineation came from the spirit of Sir William Nontacnte, the conflueror and erowned king of the Isle of Man, it is hardly possible to donbt, and it is therefore entitled to credit as poming from a spirit who has very dearly proven his identity. If what he says about the religion he fomm prevaling on the Isle of Man, at the time of its conguest, is true, then we have the surprising information that as late as the middle of the fourteenth eentury the Druid worship of the Sun-god Hesus prevailed upon the Isle of Man. This being the caser, we maty natarally eredit Montaente's statement in relation to the aecount he received from the native prieste, as to the time when, and the somee whence they derived their worship of Hesus. But the probability of its correctness is much inereased by the mention of St. Columbkille as the missionary from Ireland, who first taught Hesusism to the Manx people. St. Columbkille was the contemporary of St. Patrick in Ireland, and his chief assistant in the great School which he established at Armagh, in Ireland, where the Druid religion, of which the sun-god Hesus was the chief divinity, was taught. The coucurrent testimony of several returning spirits all go to show this to have been the case. Montacute further testifies that he was told by the native priests that the writings brought to Man by Columbkille went to show that the Hesusism of the Druids was of Phœnician origin. There is little doubt but that such was the fact. The sun-god of the Phœenicians was called $i$-es pronounced yes, the etymology of that name being " $i$ " meaning one, and "es" meaning fire, or the one fire or the sun. This Ies of the Phoenicians was pronounced Hes by the Druids of Western and Northern Europe, and no doubt received the terminal syllable "us" after the time of the Roman conquests of Gatul and Britain. There is good reason to hope that from the Druidical ruins in France, Great Britain, Ireland and the adjacent islands will yet come forth the facts which will show beyond all question what the Hesnsism of the Druids was, and its relation to the Christian religion which supplanted it. As the worship of Hesus was comparatively so recent in the Isle of Man, rclies may yet be found among the descendants of the Manx, the ancient inhabitants of the Isle of Man, that will contribute to that end.

Franeis Anthony Flemming. A Roman Catholic Priest.

"Good afternoon, sir:-In the year of my mortal life, 1791, 1 prached a sermon in St. Mary's Chureh in this eity, on St. Patrick. I believed, at that time, that I was speaking the truth. As a spirit I am now aware that it was all untrue. To outside people this might seem strange; but to one who has gone so thoroughly over the ground presented by these eommunications as you have, it should mot. St. Patrick was mot a Christian, but a Druid priest. I have not learned this from books, but from an interview with the spirit of Patrick himself. The proof of the truth of this, in a mortal sense, must be sought for among the ruins of the round-towers of Ireland. That there is such evidences there, I, as a spirit, am perfectly aware. If I had a medium whom I could properly control, I could lead you to the exact spot where that evidence is to be found, in the county of Amagls. But even if you should fail to find it there, others probably will. It is not in the roundtowers but at their bases where this proof will be fombl. I will also say to you that I only act as interpreter forst. Patrick, St. Declan and other spirits who went to spirit liti long before me. fou must depend on them for the facts in your seareh for that evidence, and they will not fail you when the proper time comes. The hope of all revolting (atholie spirits is that you will throw out these facts to the world. There are immense numbers of people who will be desirons of profting bevern. In that way yon will aceomplish : work, the bencfit of wheh no one can fossibly estimate. I died of yellow fever, in this city, in 17a3. My name was Francis Anthony Flemming, of st. Mary's ('hureh."

We have not been able to find any hingraphieal mention in reference to the Fix:. Francis Anthomy Flemmine, and do not know whether he was in cearge of si, Mary's Roman ('atholic ('hureh in Philadelphia, in 173, hut I cannot but heliove that such was the case. For in a publication that 1 fomm in the Philadedphat Library, relating to the Vellow Fever and its work of destruction in 1793 , in this eity, I foumt anome those Who diod of that divatise in that year the name of lew. Frameis A. Fhemming, a Catholie elergyman. Whether the A. in the name stood for Anthony, I have not been able to learn. Neither have I been able to learn whether he ever preached a sermon on St. Patrick, in 1791, as he states he did, I have no means of ascertaining; but the very natural inference, in view of all the facts, is, that he did preach just such a sermon before the congregation of St. Mary's Church at the time he states. As a spirit he seems to have learned more concerning St. Patrick than he knew of him as a Catholic priest. As a spirit, he claims, and no doubt justly, that he is now as honest and truthful in what he testifies to as he was then while testifying as a mortal, in relation to St. Patrick and his theological position and labors, as the patron Saint of Ireland.

It is this, no doubt, sincere and truthful spirit, who, as the interpreter for St. Patrick, St. Deelan and their priestly compeers of ancient Ireland, and on theirauthority, declares that they were not Christian divines as he once believed them to be; but were Druid priests. It would seem that the only excuse the Roman Catholic Church had for claming them as Christian divines was the fact that they worshipped the SunGod under the name of Jesus or Hesus, which name was a little before that time tacked to the name Christos of the Essenes and Neo-Platonists, by the Council of Nice, under the politic management of Constantine the Great, who sought by that means to heal the theological dissensions that prior to that time had been keeping the Roman Empire in turmoil and disorder.
These communications are making these facts more clear, and they need only the resurrection of the secrets that are concealed under the ancient round-towers or fire-temples of Ireland, to make them evident beyond doubt or question. The spirit speaks especially of the ancient Druid remains that still exist in the county of Armagh, Ireland, as the most probable source whence the proof of the fact that St. Patrick was a Druid and not a Roman Catholic Christian, will be ultimately found. It is a fact, that it was at "Armagh the beautiful" as he designated it, that St. Patrick founded his great school for the propagation of the Druidical religion.

JACOB CAPO.

Abstract

"I am here to make my way straight. I was an architect and a designer and builder of Roman Catholic churches at Florenee in the twelfth and thirteentlo centuries. I am chosen by the spirit world to fulfil a mission here, and that is, to testify to what I did, to convert thestones of pagan temples into Christian churehes, and pagan statues into the apostles of ('hristianity. Those mute marbles of Fhorence will testify to what neither Catholic nor Protestants ('hristians can deny. W'hy is it that the ruins of Thebers, of Ephesus, of Athens, of Rome, have so few of the pagan grods standing in them tomay. The answer of the Catholie is this: they were destroyed in times of war. 1 will tell you a truth that was well known in the Middle Ares, that no soldier wonld wantonly have destroyed, nor at the command of his otheers, anything, that to him, represented a grod. Where, then, are those statues of the grols of antiguity? They are the finest representations of the twelve apostles; somewhat chamed, it is true, by the sonptor. Nevertheless, these pagat grode now represent at Rome, Padas, Flowence, Venier, and (ieneva, the disciphes of Juas of the ('hristian religion. I, myself, helped, in 1040, to momet at Forenee, at their great charelt there, the stathe of Hesme of the Celtie Drats, which was bronght there by the order of the ruling fontifl from northern Franer, or what is called Brittany. I ann here forday to tostity the incontity of the materials of the statues of fexus and his twelve apmotles, which are all murdy pagan divinities (anced and moditiod to suit Christian wants and requirements, 1 hase mo fear but that what 1 hate here stated ran, on investigation, be proven to hetrme. Wearehiteds alad sentptors, together with the pricas, alone knew this. My matur was Jacob, amd I had a surname ('apo. Youmay timd that I am mes named in hiographical works, but I think yon will find mention of the in combertion with the history of arefitecture. This is a duty I lase long deeired to fultill, and I feel my consefence much lightened by what I have satid."

J. S. SEMLER.

"Sin:-In my mortal life I charged the Christians, learned and unlearned, that their teachings, promngated and propagated, were forgeries, lies, dissemblings, in regard to that which was true. Their attempts to answer me were just such as they usally make-that it was necessary for man to have a saviour, in order to reconcile him with an offended God. What this God has had to get offended at, I have failed, either as a spirit or mortal, to find out. If God made me so that my reason was more critical than my belief was strong, I claim that to be a right which neither God, man nor devils can take from me, namely, my own individuality. That Paganism and Christianity are one and the same thing, and the dying gods of virgins born is a mythical idea, at least fifteen thousand years old, I an willing to stake all my hopes of future happiness upon. Where is the evidence of 15,000 to 20,000 years ago to be found, to confirm what I here state? When European and American scholars turn their attention to the eneyclopredia of two nations, of whom little as yet is known, that is in regard to their ancient records, they will find this evidence. Those two nations are the Chinese and Japanese. They are the nations that have undergone the least changes, and it is amongst such unchangeable people that the most direct and positive evidence is to be found. Away back in those far-distant ages a God was looked for who was to bring about the golden age, when all things should be equal. This was as eagerly looked for by mortals, then living, as it is looked for to-day by moderns. All kinds of symbols and symbolical worship, taken from the attitudes of dying men and animals, have been copied and joined ogether. Two heroes fighting, as, did the Horatii and the Curatii, on whose eflorts seemed to hang some great stake, falling across each other thus afterwards transferred to Christianity, is my firm and honest conviction as a spirit. If we ean only understand it properly, we will find that all those mythological signs have had to do with the individual actions of mortal men, and were then transferred to the stars, after the death of those individuals. I lived in 1725, and my name was J. S. Semfer. I wasa German."

I translate the following account of Semler from the Nouvelle Biographie Generale.
"Jean-Salaman Semler, a Germent theologian, born the 18th of September, 1221 , at Salfeld, where his father was a clergyman; died Mareh 14th, 1791, at Halle. Ratised amid pious surroundings, he modified his religions tendencies at the University of Hatle. During his studies, he became attached tas. J. Bammarten, whom he aded in the publication of his 'History Univerwelte.' In 1749 he was ealled to Coburg, in the capacity of professor, and there conducted the Gazette. After having tanght history and literature at Altdorf (1751), he finally in that yoar, obtaned a chair of theology at Halle. In 1757 he succeded Iatmgarten in the control of the theological seminary. Semler was gifted with a marvelous aptitude for seizing the relation of facts, one with another, to appreciate them at their true value, and to separate with remarkable acuteness the smallest details of those facts. He lacked, it is true, that philosophical quality of mime which sees thinge in bulk or as a whole ; but in matters of eralition and critieism, he was gifted with the most happy ficulties. It was in this tield of inguiry that he shome partionarly. One of the services he rendered was to show that, to interpret the seriptures, whieh have been written at very different epochs, it is necessary to take into accont all the eiremmstames that related to the history of the times at which each of them had been emposed. Somber was the father of historical hermencutios, as Ermest was of grammatical hermementies. The first subject that he submitted to a profond and impartial stmly was the eanon. He diseovered this remarkable fact, that the camon in the first eonturicsof the chureh were not iclentical with that which has beconsedefthed. He showd that all the saded hooks have not the same value in a doctrinal point of view; that the apocalypese and the canticle of canticles, for example, could not he put mon the same line, in this respert, with the didtutie writings. We cammot pass in silence the service be rembered to the history of dogmats. (arrsing into this field of stady the same eritical spirit that hald enverned him in his other lators, be followed the development of the :amitted dostrines in the Christian Chureh, fuinting wht the formation of somm, and the moditieation of others, and indicated moder what influmees these ehanges were sumensfilly producol. (iregory, in his 'Ilistoire des having reduced (lhristianity to a purely haman doctrine; this acensation is minus. It is possible that the way in which he

many of its relations to all other religions, although it surpassed them in grandeur and purity. If he has sacriticed-if he has combatted certain doctrines, commonly regarded as constitutive parts of the Christian religion, it is, on the one hand, because he regards the doctrines only as illegitimate superfluities with which it was loaded by the different mediums through which it had passed, and he has sought the history at hand to give the proof of it ; it is, on the other hand, because he thought that Christianity, led back to its primitive purity, would escape the attacks made upon it, and which bore precisely on the parasitical doctrines that he retrenched."

Semler was a profuse writer, and left many works, all of which were calculated to annoy, if not alarm, the orthodox Christian Church. It was the spirit of this bold and original Christian thinker who gave the above communication. How far his theory, in regard to the origin of the Greek and Roman crosses, is correct, I have no certain means of knowing. With the light I have, I am more inclined to believe theirphallic and equinoctial origin. The idea thrown out by the spirit is, however, singularly suggestive of the struggle between light and darkness, warmth and cold, at the two equinoctial periods of the year, when, apparently equally exhausted, they seem to rest a brief space from their efforts to destroy each other. The communication is, in my opinion, authentic and true, and well worthy of the most profound attention and thought.

Cardinal Sancta De Carr.

"Let us use blessings instead of enrses to those who disagree with us. It would hase been well for me, if I had practiced that precept as a mortal. I was selecterl liy a conncil of priests to prepare the Latin Vulgate in more readable form. I had tive different copies to write trom. The first was a eopy of Mareion, copied ly Chrysostom; the seeond a remson by Clphilas; the third a eopy of the monks of Mount Athos; the fourth a eopy similar to the Codex Alexandrinus ; and the fifth was asimaritan copy suppused to have been written by that great Essenc, Ignatins of Antioch. All these eopies can be traced back to the lati maned which was the original of them all. This Samaritan cong by lgnatius of Antioch, said, in a preface, that the writings that followed it were transerred by a lineciple of Ma Ming, (whose name was not in the preface given), to Apollonits of Tyana, and by him were given to Ignatius of Antioch. This copy had two distinet sections to it ; first anmphet nation in the Ifebracesamaritan tongere, tracing the whole to a (iod, horn of a Star, sern in a trance ly Ma Ming. It was divided iato four l) ivisionsor (iod-spedls, and they bore the names of the four different principles, truth, virthe, peresverance andequity: the whole to tee maderstood, and umderstood mily hy the initiated, as an inguiry into star-worship, with the sum as the central pient of the whole. When the sum hegan to make his aplearance abowe the line, then eommeneed the reign of their (iand on eath, and when he begath to dereline then be was goiner down into the grawe ; and as thos ancents chamed that for atome three days he stome still, before he hegan to arise arain, this is the seeret of the three days and there mights in

 hy him, ami Mareion managel to makest. Mark a suthtitute

 lat of that sed hefore it freame abourded in what is tormed
of the Samaritan copy by Ignatius of Antioch, that Matthias had found a copy that had been lost. Apollonius gave it to his disciple Damis, and it became separated from the rest, and in that way came to be used by Matthias to propagate a religion. It was marked 297. This Matthias was a Cappadocian and connected with the Magi. All the other copies mentioned are nothing more than translations from the Hebraic-Samaritan copy. The other four were modified copies of that one, made to suit the views of the transcribers. The first interruption to the original copy written ly myself was made by Tyndale when he printed the first Bible in the Sixteenth century. He dropped all the marginal notes with the exception of those manufactured by priests; and also destroyed all the preface. It was not so much his fault, for his life would have paid the forfeit. As long as these things were written, they were held by the selected few of the faithful, but when printed there was danger that the masses would become ton enlightened. This is all I can now state. I lived in the 13 th century and my name was Cardinal Sancta De Caro."

I asked him how he came to bring that communication to earth? He replied by saying that spirit messengers were being sent out from one department of spiritlife to the others, to find out those who could in each special department best impart information to earth's people, and he had been selected and sent to discharge the mission he had just performed. This reply opens up a train of thought that seems to be inexhaustible.

I have searched in vain for any historical reference to any person, cardinal or otherwise, that can in any way appertain to the spirit who gives that communication; and yet I have no doubt of its gemmineness and truthfulness. It would be strange indeed, that any personating spirit should have given it, and this must have been the case if it is not genuine. Had the spirit named the "council of priests" to whom he refers, we would have been better able to trace the matter up. He says he lived and labored as a cardinal in the thirteenth century. Now, it is a fact, that in 1274 A . D. there assembled in Lyons, France, a council which was attended by 500 bishops and about 1000 of the inferior clergy, the principal object of which was to bring abont the remion of the Greek and Latin chnrehes. Nothing would be more natural than that at snch an assembly, an attempt would be made to bring the Latin and Greek versions of the New Testament into the closest possible accord. It is therefore highly probable, at least, that there was some effort made at that time, to bring the Latin and Creck versions of the Bible into perfect agreement. Indeed a writer in Me('lintock and Strong's (Yyclopiedia of Theological Literature says:
"In the Thirteenth century, Correctoria were drawn up, especially in France, in which varieties of readings were discussed, and Roger Baeon complains loudly of the eonfusion which was introduced into the eommon, that is the Parisian cops ; and quotes a false reading from Mark viii, 38, where the correctors had substituted confessus for confusus. Little more wats done for the text of the Vulgate till the invention of printing," etc.
This is enough to show that about the time the spirit speaks of, there was a movement mate to correct the V ulgate Bible. To do this the spirit tells us that he had phaeed in his hamds five old versions of the original books. And now particularly mark what he says regardiug the authorities placed in his hands from which to put the Vulgate into more readable form. The tirst he tells us was a copy of Marcion's (iospels mate by Chrysostom. If this be true, as I feel sure it is, then there was an anthentic copy of Marcion's (iospel in existence as late as the Thirteenth century, and we may well ask: what has become of it? Who was ('lirysontom? He was horn in A. 1). 317 at Antioch, where he lived until after the death of his mother, when he went to live in the monastic solitude of the mountains wear Antioch, and there spent, says his bingrapher, six halpy years in the study of the Bible, in samed meditation and prayer, under the gudance of the learned Abbot Diodorns, and in eommanion with such like-minded goung men as Theordore of Mopsuestia, the eelehrated father of Antiochian (Nostorian) theology. He returned to Antioch, alsent 3 and, where he remained sixtern or eighteen years. He died in exile in A. 1). 407. We thas see that (hrysontom was mot only a native of Antioch, hat lived there a large part of his long life. Antioch hat been the eontre of Exsmituinm, ats it was aftorwards, of Nestorianism, ambl it was at Antioch, that Ignatimsthe great E-anian Patriareh and Apollonitus of Tyana, the E-sonian Apostate, drew up their reseetive theobgical toachings. Further, it was at Antion that Mareion, a mative of Seria, of which Abtioch was the seat of gevermment, promed his gosel athe epiotles, which he aftervard texk to Rome. That (haryatom who lived two handred years later than Marcion, may have found a copy of that gospel and those epistles, which he himself copied, is in the very highest degree probable. The spirit of Decaro tells us that such a copy of Marcion was furnished to him and I believe him.

He tells us that his second authority was a version of the New Testament by Ulphilas. If that is so, then Ulphilas's Biblo was extant as late as the Thirteenth century. What has become of it? As we sbowed in connection with a communication from the spirit of Ulphilas, and one from the spirit of Apollonius himself, Ulphilas's Bible was a Gothic translation of an original Samaritan version; this, the spirit of DeCaro says, was the fact. Ulphilas sprang from a Cappadocian family and was undoubtedly versed in the Hebraic-Samaritan, the native tongue of his parents.

He tells us that his third authority, was a copy of the original, by the monks of Mount Athos. Now, who were the monks of Mount Athos? It is said of those at present living there that they are mostly Russians, and of the order of St. Basil. Mt. Athos is situated at the extremity of the promontory of Chalcis, in the province of Salonica, in European Turkey. There are now upon the sides of the nountain between twenty and thirty monasteries, and a vast multitude of hermitages, which contain more than 6000 monks. Here they live in a state of complete abstraction from the world ; and so strict are their regulations, that they do not tolerate any female being, not even of the class of domestic animals among them. The libraries of the monasteries are particularly rich in manuscripts, and other literary treasures. Under the reign of Catharine II of Russia, the learned Eugene Bulgoris took up his abode on Mount Athos, as director of an academy founded by Patriareh Cyril of Constantinople. For some time the academy was very flourishing, but at length the patriarch had to yieid to the demands of the ignorant portion of the monks to abolish it. So says MeC'lintock and Strong's Cyclopredia. There are, no doubt, among those monks of Mount Athos manuscripts that if they conld be procured, would set at rest forever the origin and nature of the Christian Seriptures. It was most probably a Creek copy from the Hebraic-Samaritan writings of Ignatius and Apollonius, made by or for the Monks of Mount Athos that was placed in the hands of Cardinal DeCaro.

He tells us that the fourtlı was a Greek copy of the same original, from which the Alexandrine Codex, or version, was made; and tinally le tells us that his fifth authority was a Samaritan eopy, supposed to have been written by that great Essene, Ignatius of Antioeh. But the most significant statement of all is, that the first four were all traceable to the last named, which was the common origin of them all. More than this, he tells us that there was a preface to that Samaritan copy, which sad that its contents were, ly an umamed disciple of Ma Ming, given to A pollonius of Tyana, and was given by the latter to I gnatius of Antioch. But this is not all ; we are further told that a part of those writings were devoted to an explanation, in the Hebraic-Samaritan tongre, showing that they related to a God, born of a star seen in a trance by Ma Ming. Can there be any doubt that that (iod was the Sim, born of the constellation Virgo, in all ancient sacred legends, of which the beantiful star V'indemiatrix is so prominent a part. Again we are tofl those writings were in four divisions or grod-spells, as the spirit gave it, and iore names corresponding with truth, virtue, perseverance and equity, the whole only to be understood as relating to star-worship or heliography and sabaism.

We are further informed that Mareion did not receive the original writing of Apollonius, as he supposed he had done in obtaining the epistles published by him, but only a eopy of them made by Ignatius, and published with marginal notes by the latter. That Marcion became the St. Mark, and Lucian, the Greek satarist, the St. Lake of the Bible, there is hardly rown for a doubt, as otherwise there would be mo historical mention of either of them that has any appearance of authenticity. Whether Mathew was the Matthias, the (apradocian Essene, admits of more question ; but I am inclined to believe, for varions reatons that camot be given here, that sthel was the fact. I take the following eoncerning Matthias from MeC 'lintoek and strong's Cyelopedia.
". Mathias Matthias a contraction of Matithats or Mathew, a form frequenty met with in Josephas, one of the eonstant attemdant- from the tirst mon our Lord's ministry, who wha Whoren ly lot, in preference to Joseph Barsabas, into the numbrer of the Apostles, to suphly the vacamer eatised by the poobatle the epinion which is shared by Enechits and Epiphanitu that he was onfe of the soventy disemples. He is atid fo have preathed the gropel in Athiopia, aceording to sophronius; or in Cappadocia, according to Cave, and to have suffered martyrdom at last. According to another tradition, he preached in Judea, and was stoned to death by the Jews."

Speaking of the time and place at, and in which the Gospel according to st. Matthew was composed, the same author says: "There is little in the Gospel itself to throw any light on the date of its composition. Ahuding to the language in which it was written, it is said: "The unamimous testimony of all antiquity affirms that Mathew wrote his gospel in Hebrew ; that is, in the Aramaic or Syro-Chaldee dialect, which was the vernacular tongue of Palestine." Yes, and he might, have added, of Syria and Cappadocia, too. He continttes: "The unanimity of all ancient authorities as to the Hebrew origin of this Gospel is complete. In the words of the late Canon Cureton, ('Syriac Recension,' p. lxxxiii), 'no part relating to the history of the gospels is more fully and sat isfactorily established. From the days of the Apostles down to the end of the fourth century, every writer who had occasion to refer to this matter has testified to the same thing. Papias, Irenæus, Pantrenus, Origen, Cyril of Jerusalem, Athanasius, Epiphanius, Jerome, all with one consent affirm this. Such a chain of historical evidence appears to be amply sufficient to establish the fact that Matthew wrote his gospel originally in the Hebrew dialeet of that time, for the benefit of the Jews who understood and spoke the language.'

So said Cureton; and I ask, Why not for the benefit of the Essenes and Gentile Syro-Hebraic speaking people of Syria and Cappadocia? There is nothing in all this that in any way militates against the statement of spirit De Caro; on the other hand, it is most surprisingly corroborative of its correctness. But when the spirit further tells us that Ignatius had made a marginal note in the Samaritan copy which was placed in his hands, in which he said that Matthias had fallen upon a copy of Apollonias' writings that was lost; and explained the matter by saying that Apollonius had given it to his disciple Damis, and that it had passed from the latter to Matthias, there does indeed seem to be no reason to question that it was an original copy by Apollonius himself. De Caro says that Matthias preached in Cappadocia, and this seems to point especially to Matthias, and not to Matthew, who it is not pretended ever preached in Cappadocia. Why it was marked
"297," as De Caro says this copy was, we have no means of knowing. View the matter as we may, the statement of the spirit is wortly of the most profound reflection.

The spirit tells us that his tramslation of the original versions remained uninterfered with until Tyndale printed the first Bible. De ('aro gives lis to muderstand that he retained the preface and motes of the original syro-Hebraie, in his VulGate version ; and that Tyudale, in the 16 th century, published it, dropping the marginal notes and destroying the whole preface of it, substituting other marginal notes prepared for, or byhim. All of which is highly probable, if mot abolutely true.

I must here take leate of this eommmateation, ouse of the most remarkable and important, I venture to say, that has ever bern qiven by a spirit through a mortal medium, to be reeorded by a mortal amamuensis.

wrote a full account of it. At the time I lived, Christianity was what you might term strictly within the control and power of Catholicism. There is a place now in Rome known only to the priesthood, and not to the common people, called the tomb of the Palatine Apollo, which contains the scroll writings from the time of Marcion in the sceond century to Eusebius in the fourth century, which contain the secrets of the Catholic ehurch. I abjure that church. I go further, and if there is anthority in a pontifical curse, I curse that church for the slavery I have gone through in spirit. And in conclusion I will say that I desire all Spiritualists to become freethinkers, as there can be no progression withont full and unrestrained privilege, to reason upon any and all subjects. I have never communicated before, and it is very difficult for me to talk in the English tongue. I could not have done so at all but for the help. I have received from an English speaking spirit. I was known as Hieronymms Abescalo, otherwise as Pope Nicholas IV. I lived towards the latter end of the thirteenth century, and was Pope in 1288."

Refer to DeFeller's Dictionaire Historique for account of Nicholas IV.

We were assured by this spirit that there was a terrible conflict going on in spirit life between those spirits who were seeking to spread light and truth, not only among mortals, but among spirits as well, and those who were opposed to this. He spoke of the terrible bitterness that was manifested by spirits, with whom he had been fraternizing towards him for making the disclosures he was then making, and which he was only able to make by virtue of a power that was superior to the opposing forces. It does indeed seem that there is a disastrous inroad being made upon the spirit domain so long impregnably held by the spirits of the Roman Catholic Hierarchy in spirit life. When popes, cardinals, archbishops, bishops and priests alyure their allegiance to the Catholic Church, eurse the bondage which that church inflicted upon them as spirits, and turn in and help to overthrow that fearful and iniquitous power, the end is not far away. It would seem, from the communication of this pontifical spirit, that the burning of the Library of the Palatine Apollo, by the Great Gregory, in the eleventh century, did not result in the entire destruction of the contents of that library, as has been generally supposed, and that some of the manuscripts it contained were secreted and preserved. They are to-day, most probably, among the secret arehives of the Roman Catholic C'hurch, in Rome. If they are still in existence, it is to be hoped that they will sooner or hater be given to the world. This spirit speaks of the destruction of important evidence againt the clams and zretensions of the (atholic Churelh, bỵ Catherine de Medicis and Simon de Montfort, and especially of the destruction of the writings of Cardimal Sancta de Caro whose commonication will be found on page 550. It is not a strange thing regarding that communication that the spirit of Pope Nieholas IV, should refer to the literary labors of Cardinal De Caro, and state that they were destroyed by Cafherine De Medicis, and that De (aro had fully set forth the destruction which Simon de Montfort had made of the evidences of the fraudulent and untruthful character of the Christim Bible.

ZOROHSTER,

Zarathustra or Zerdusht.

On April 25, 1878, the following communication was received from Aronamar, who was the presiding spirit of the band under whose ministrations the great work herein presented has been laid before the world. The communication was as follows:
"Kingdoms and empires have passed away since I was on earth-revolutions, bloodshed, wars and pestilence-and yet still the human race advances one step nearer to the great I AM. It is vain for mortals to struggle to keep back the light that spirits are bringing to this world. Oh, where I am, I wish all were! I look not upon the selfishness of humanity, I only contemplate that which is grand and ennobling. Men and women when they reach the sphere that I have gained are well purged of all vices. To come back here is difficult but nevertheless it must be done. Spiritual food must be supplied, and who can supply it so well as those who have gained it by their own experience. To enjoy happiness, it is necessary to know its opposite. It is only by contrast that real happiness can exist. What do I know of the Infinite Mind? What do I know of that which is ever beyond the reach? On some trees the fairest fruit grows nearest the top. In spirit life it is always nearest the top, and the more we partake of it the more eager we become to enjoy it. New beauties unfold from day to day, and he or she who will drink at the fountain of Eternal Truth shall never thirst. Not to occupy more time I will say may the good spirits keep yon and aid you in the right, and sustain you in the work in which you are engaged; and when your task is done, may you cross the stream to those beautiful realms beyond. I lived about two hundred years before the time of Alexander the Great, and until shortly after the death of Cyrus, well known in Persian history. I was a Persian and known in my time as an astrologer. Aronamar."

Little did I think when I received that communication, of what was to follow it, through the same medium. It was on March 26 th, 1580, that I received the communication from the spirit of Potamon, the founder of the Alexandrian or Eclectic School of Philosophy, which opened this remarkable series of spirit communications from ancient and modern spirits. I was aware, from that time, that Aronamar was the chiof of the spirit band that controlled at the sittings, I have had weekly with the medium. Since that time I have never had a commonication through the medimm that in any way related to myself personally, or the use I was to make of those commu:nications in forwarding the intentions of the spirits in givinif them. This was left, apparently, solely to my discretion ; and as the communications were continued, until the spirits declared that they had aceomplished their purpose and completed their work, I must conclude that they, at least, approved of my management of the mundame department of the work. On July 1, 1881, I learned from the guide of the medimm that Aronamar had been wating for an oportunity to control the medium for a long time, and that the eiremmstances had not before been such as would enable him to control the medium personally but that he had at last succeeded, and he was compelled to avail himself of that opportunity to do so, or he might be for centuries prevented from saying what he desired to say to me in person at that sitting. Here the guide yielded the control, and the spirit of him who had been known to me as Aromamar, took possession of the medium. The following commnnication was then given :
"I s.liute you, sir:- You have heard from me from time to time, and once I think, I commmicated directly with yons. I am Zarathustra, Zerdusht or Zoroaster, the Daniel of the Jewi-h Neriptures. I lised in the days of Nehnehadne\%zar, Belshazzar, Darins Hydaspes and Cyrns. It is very important that I commanicate with you at this time ; and I must ask this of yon. In making mp or closing your book, I ask that you give this commaniation as the last, as by arangement of the spirits with whom I am actiog, I am to elose or complete these commmotations. The Jewish book of Daniel, was stolen hodily from the books written by myself, or throurh me, con(atming Ormuzd and Dithra. And, sir, I ask you, from all you have known of me, during the time these eommonications have been given to you, whether I have not proven my honaty, and acted with the sole objert of benetiting hamanifly? [I eordially andemphatically answered in the aflimmative.] Oh! sir, how I have desired to come to yon! but conditions were necessary, that I coubd not control ; and which conld only be obtained hy a power outside of, and beyond myself. That power has been exerted, and the conditions have been bronght about, that enable me to come to you. I knew the importance of availing myself of this opportunity. I might not have been able to give this communication for five hundred years to come, did I not do so now. From this you will understand the importance of it. It will be difficult to find evidence of the truth of what I am about to commonicate to you, in any books now extant, whether biographical dictionaries, encyelopredias, or other works ; and I will tell you why this is so. Anything that was opposed to the Christian religion can no longer be found in ancient writings, because of the care with which all such evidence has been destroyed by Christian priestly zealots. Only such evidence as could be construed to favor Christianity, or which did not in the least oppose it, has been allowed to eseape similar destruction. I want you to give this point particular attention, for by doing so you will reach the truth. The Hebrew book, called the 'Book of Daniel.' contains the account of the actual earthly experiences of Zoroaster at the court of Nebuchadnezzar, and the other kings whom I have already named. All that is mentioned as having transpired in the 'Book of Daniel,' oceurred through myself' as a medium, and has no relation whatever to a Jewish Daniel, but solely relates to Zarathustra of the Persians. I want to conmence with that part of that book where mention is made of Nebuchadnezzar eating grass, and expiain what was meant by it. It meant nothing more than that, after years of a life of sensuality, that king was struck with a sense of the enormity of his personal conduct, and he was brought to a realization of this through me,-not that I desire to exalt myself by mentioning this fact, for my sole object in doing so is the good of humanity. I was known as Aronamar at the court of Cyrus. I want you to understand that, at the court of that king, I was in the position of a philosopher, who, having reasoned upon the law of cause and effect, would stand at any court, or in any other condition of life. In the reign of Darius Hydaspes, I went throngh the ordeal of being east into a lion's den; but I was a medium, and was attended by a power that protected me from physical injury; but it was through what may be regarded as superior mesmeric and psychological power. I received this from spirits ; and through that power I was enabled to calm the fury of lions. It was I, Zarathusra, who read the handwriting on the wall, in the days of Belshazzar, and I did this through the power of spirits. I assure you that I was the original Daniel, and the Jews appropriated my works. There was a religious teaching promulgated in the age in which I lived on earth, which was attribued to Hernies Trismegistus, that a child should be bom of a rirgin. This was a common belief at that time. I was only a chip floating on the stream of Time. Back of me and behind me Dies what is known as the Phallic religion. That religion tanght that the forces of mature express themselves in an individual mit. Back of, and heyond that was the philosophical religion tamoht by Hermes Trismegistus. This philosophical religion was derived from the phathetary and stelar systems, and embedied the principle known to youmoderns as the iaw of canse and cffect. Back of and begond that was a Hindoo-('haddaie religion which took its rise at the base of the IImalaya momatains. There was also a very ancient lhendeian religion. The latter religions had, as their chief idea, the relations of heat and cond, and their effects in mature upon men and erops on which they depended for sustenance. Amb here I want yon to observe what I say particnharly. The great Western Continent-by you called America -was progressing, at one time, side by side with the Eastern Continent; and a man mamed Boelaca tanght all the laws of catuse and effect, in Bolivia and leru, long beford Manen (apace and his wife appeared there. And I want yon to say, at the close of your book, that all the sedences, and all the knowledge of antiquity are concentrated in two hooks. The mature of onfe of them [The Book of Revelation] has been explatined to you by Apollonins of Tyana, and the other is the 'Book of Daniel.' Those two books open up to yon the seerets of antiquity. By this 1 mean when properly understond and interpreted, but not when literally read. In the latter part of the book containine thes commanications, I want this train of information set forth; and the fact impressed upon the reater, that we spirits are not working for applase, but for the goon of hamanity. I want it further momerstoon, that the spirits I hate banght to yon, have been emmpelled, hy my power, to tell the truth. Wo alse desine, that it shall be stated in the (fore of this hook, that we are mot seeking to gain believers in athy doctrine. All we ask of them is, that they will examine in order to know the truth. The Book of Daniel is typiral of the lomatige and knowhere of prothritian ages, and its mesming is similat to the lamk of Apollonins, known to yon as the 'Book of Revelation.' We were both inspired media, :and onr work-w erlaperenth other."

 adien. He still remained, however, abll thromg the while continned tosenserse with me. This conversation I conld mot record, at the spirit semmed mathe th remain, and reatueted me to detain him as briefly as possible. Among the things said, deserving of especial mention, was that the spirit forces with which Zarathustra was working, were four-fold-the leaders or chiefs, of which were, first, Hermes Trismegistus, the Egyptian philosopher and sage, who lived B. C. 1150 ; second, Gautama Sakyia Buddha, the Hindoo medium ant sage, who lived about B. C. 9:50; third, himself, Zarathnstra, the Median or Persian medium and sage, who lived B. C. 6.50; and fourth, Apollonius of Tyana, the Cappadocian medium and sage, who lived from the beginning to the end of the first century of the so-called Christian era. When this revelation was made to me, the mystery that had so much perplexed me was all cleared away. I had often wondered how the vast array of spirit testimony that had been given from week to week, through the organism of the medium, had been collected and presented; but this was no longer surprising, in view of the mighty forces that I was then informed, had been concentrated for that special purpose by four of the greatest leaders of human thought that had ever lived upon this planet. Behind Hermes Trismegistus were the thousand of millions of Egyptian spirits, who worshipped him as an incarnated god, and who were animated as one man by the spirit of their great leader. Behind Gautama Sakyia Buddha, were the vastly greater number of the spirits of his Mongolian followers, all moved and swayed by him as one man. Behind Zoroaster were the vast spirithosts of the Semitic nations of Western Asia. And behind Apollonits of Tyana were the multitude of his spirit followers among the Greek and Latin speaking peoples, for the first four hund red years of the Christian era. It was those combined spirit forces, animated and moved by the spirits of those four great leaders of human thought, with the common purpose of giving the unadulterated truth to the world, that made it possible for these series of communications to be given. Sixteen hundred years ago the Christian Church was organized with the purpose of presenting the old heathen mytholorical, theological, allegorical and priestly deceptions of all the preceding religions, in a new disguise, which should forever hold the human sonl in priestly thraldom, and the human mind in the leading strings of the impions hands of priests. So well did these priestly schemers profit by the experiences of their great and truly wise and benevolent predecessors, that they managed to organize asystem of suppressing inquiry, and perpetuating human ignorance, such as the world had never before known, and such as it will never know again in all the coming ages. During the past sixteen humdred years, the C'hristian ehureh hats been semblitg to spirit life, thousands of millions of ignorant and bigoted spirits whose whole desire and aim has heen to perpetuate the ignorance which governed and controlled then while on earth. These being the latest, and most active in the promotion of sectarian higotry, on entering spirit life, have remaned near the earth plane, and have operated as an almost impassable barricr to the return of the older, less selfish, amd more atranced ancient spirits, who sought to inform mortals of the truths of the after life. This harrier has at last been broken through by the eombined power of the more ancient and advanced spirits, and this series of commmaieations has been the result. Another especially important statement made in reply to a question I asked was, that he was not the mythical Zoroaster, the founder of Magianisn, or the religion of the Magian astrologers, who dated many eenturies before himself, but that he was the anthor of the Zend-Avesta, and the founder of the theology in relation to Ormmad and Mithra. The ultimatum of these spirit disclosures, will be the utter demolition of the bigoted sectarianisn that has so long prevailed, both in the spirit world and on the earth, and in its place will arise an enlightencel freedom of thonght, that will carry mankind forward over every ohstacle that may be thrown in the way of general progress.

We give the facts, or supposed fitets in relation to the great Persian pophet and law-giver Zarathustra with such conmments as maty serve to show the significance and importance of the eommanication coming from the spirit of that great leader of humstn thourht. We take the following ably eollated facts eoncerning him and his teachings from ('hambers' Encyelopredia:
" Zoroaster, or rathor Zatrathustra, (which, in (ireck and Latin, wats corrupted into Zamatrades and Voroantres, while the Persiths: and Parsees altered it into Zerolusht), isthe name of the finmaler of what is now khown as the latere religion. The original meaning of the word is manertain, and thomerh there have bexn mamy comjectares formed about it, yct not one of thems aema to he borme out by recent investisatinns. More priest,' and was a common designation of a spiritual guide and head of a district or province. Indeed, the founder of Zoroastrianism is hardly ever mentioned withont his family name, viz., Spitama. He sems to have been born in Bactria. The terms he applied to himself are either Manthran, i. e., a reciter of Manthras; a messenger sent by Ahuramazda, a speaker, one who listens to the voice of oracles given by the Spirit of nature; one who receives sacred words from Ahthramazda through the flames. His life is completely shrouded in darkness. Both the Greek and Roman, and most of the Zend accounts about his life and works are legendary and utterly unhistorical. In the latter, he is to a great extent represented, not as a historical, but as a dogmatical personality, vested with superhuman, or rather divine powers, standing next to God, above the archangels themselves. His temptations by the devil, whose empire is threatened by him, form the subject of many traditional reports and legends. He is represented as the abyss of all wisdom and truth, and the master of the whole creation. 'We worship'-so runs one of the prayers in the Fravardin Yasht-'the rule and the guardian angel of Zarathustra Spitama, who first thought good thoughts, who first spoke good words, who first performed good actions, who was the first priest, the first warrior, the first cultivator of the soil, the first prophet, the first who was inspired, the first who has given to mankind nature, and reality, and word, and hearing of word, and wealth, and all good things created by Mazda, which embellish reality; who first cansed the wheel to turn among gods and men, who first praised the purity of the living creation and destroyed idolatry, who confessed the Zarathustrian belief in Ahuramazda, the religion of the living God against the devils. * * * Through whom the whole true and revealed word was heard, which is the life and guidance of the world. * * Through his knowledge and speech, the waters and trees become desirous of growing, throngh his knowledge and speech, all things created by the Holy Spirit are uttering words of happiness."

As will be shown hereafter, it will be apparent that that most elonuent and comprehensive prayer is addressed to a dual being, one part of whom is but the allegorical personation of the acting forces in mature ; and the other part, some inspired see:, sage, prophet, or medium, who embodied the know ledge of the operation of those natural forces in written speech. Nothing more sublimely grand and comprehensive has ever been said with such beauty and perfect adaptation of words to thoughts, in relation to any being, mythical, or real, or both.
"In the old Yazna (see Zend Avesta) alone, he appears like a living readity, a man acting a great and prominent part both in the history of his country and that of mankind. His father's name secms to have been Pourushaspa, and that of his daughter, theonly one mentioned of his chidiren, Pournehist rab. Very obscure, however, remains, even by this accomm, the time when he lived. The dates generally given are as follows: Xanthus of Lydia places him about 600 years before the Trojan war; Aristotle and Eudoxus place him goko years before llato; others, again, 5000 years before the Trojan war. Berosus, a Babylonian historian, makes him a Babylonian king, and the fomder of a dynasty which reigned 2200 and 2000 years B. (' over Babylon. The larsees place him at the date of Hystaspes, Darius's father, whom they identify with a king mentioned in the Shah-Nameh (ı. v.), from whom, however, Hystaspes is totally distinct. This account womd place him abont 5.50 BB . (: Vet there is seareely a donbt that he must he eonsibered to belong to a mush earlier age, not later than 1000 B. C.; possibly he wat a contmporary of Moses. [Why was he not probably Moses himself'? It is almost certain that Zarathustra was one of the Soshyantos, or fire-priests, with whom the religions reform, whieh he earried ont boldy, first arose. These were probably at first identical with the Vedic Atharvans (tire-priests), as indeed Zoronstrianism is merely an adranced stage of Brahmanism. The former creed, that of Ahura, hy way of eminence, imasformed, after the outheak of the sehism, the groxd beings of the latter into devils or devas; c. &., the parely Brahmanic Indra, Sharva, Nasatya, ete.-unless it promoted them into saints and angels (yagatas). The eontlict that led to this sehism between the Iranians and those Aryan tribes which inmigrated into Hindustan Proper, and whose leader became afterwards, fombders of Brahmanism, sprong from many social, political, and religions canses. The dryans seem to have originally led a nomad life, matil some of them, reaching, in the eotuse of their migrations, lands fit for permanenterttlements, setted down as agriculturists. Bactria and the parts betwem the Oxas and Jaxartes semo to have attracted them mont. The Iramians beeame pradnally estanged from their brother triber, who athered to their anciont nomad lifer and hy degres, the whilom atiextion having turned into hatred, considered than peaceral vettomente a fit prey for their depmedations and inroms. The hatred thas momished, her further degrees inchuded all and (werghine helonging to these devastators, even their religion, originally incontion, with that of the settlers. The 'Deva religion' became, in their eyes, the source of all evil. Moulded into a new form, styled the 'Ahura' religion, the old elements were much more changed than was the case when Judaism became Christianity. Generation after generation further added and took away, until Zarathustra, with the energy and the clear eye that belong to exalted leaders and founders of religions, gave to that which had been, originally, a mere reaction and spite against the primitive 'Brahmanic' faith, a new and independent life, and forever fixed its dogmas, not a few of which have sprung from his own brains."

All of which would be very good reasoning, if the spirit of Zarathustra was not now living, and had not returned to state that his religion, in relation to Ormuzd and Mithra, was the impartation of spirits through him as an inspired medium.
"It is, as we said in the article on the Zend-Avesta, chiefly from the Gathas that Zarathustra's real theology, unmutilated by later ages, can be learned. His leading idea was monotheism. Whatever may have caused the establishment of the dualism of gods, the good and the evil, in the Persian religion -a dualism so clearly marked at the time of Isaiah, that he found it necessary to protest emphatically against it-it was not Zarathustra who proclaimed it. His dualismis of a totally different nature. It was merely the principle of his speculative philosophy-a supposition of two principal causes of the real and intellectual world. His moral philosophy, on the other hand, moved in a triad-thought, word, and deed. There is no complete system of Zoroastrian philosophy to be found in the Zend-Avesta, any more than there is a developed Platonic system laid down explicitly in the Platonic writings; but from what is to be gathered in the documents referred to, it cannot be doubted that Zarathustra was a deep and great thinker, far above his contemporaries, and even many of the most enlightened men of subsequent ages. If proof were needed for the high appreciation in which he was held in antiquity, it might be found in the circumstance, that even the Greeks and Romans, not particularly given to overrating foreign learning and wisdom, held him in the very highest estimation, as may be seen by their reiterated praises of the wisdom of him whose name they scarcely knew how to pronounce.
"With regard then to the first point, his monotheism, it suffices to mention, that while the fire-priests before him, the Sowhyantos, worshipped a plurality of good spirits ealied Ahuras, as opposed to the Indian devas, he reduced this plurality to it unity. This one Supreme being he called Ahura Mazdao, (that Ahura that is Mazkan), or the ('reator of the Universe-Anramazda of the cunejform inseriptions of the Achemendian kings, the Ahurmazd of Sassanian times, and the Hormazd or Ormazd of modern larsees. This superior (iod is, by Zamathastra, coneered to be the creator of the earthly and spiritual life, the lord of the whole universe, at whose hands are all the creatures.' The following extract from the (datha (Ustavata) will leave nodoubt on that mach contested point: 'Blessed is he, blessed are all men to whom the living wise fiod of his own command should grant those two everlasting (vi\%. immortality and wholesomeness). * * * I believe Thee, O (ind, to be the best thing of all, the souree of light for the world. Everybody shall choose Thee as the source of light, Thee, Thee, holiest spirit Mazda! Thou createst all good things by mans of the power of Thy good mind at any time, and promised us, who believe in Thee, a long life. I helieve Thee to be powerful, holy grod Mazala ! for Thon givest with Thy hand, filled with helps, good to the pions man, as well as to the impious, by means of the warmth of the tire strengthening of good things. From this, reasom, the vigor of the grood mind has tallen to my lot. * * Who was in the begiming the father and ereator of truth? Whoshowed to the sun and the stars their way? Who eansed the moon to increase and wane, if not Thou? * * Who is holding the carth and thaskies above it? Whomate the watersand treen of the lied ? Whas is in the winds and in the stoms that they so quickly rum? Who is the "reator of good minded being-:" Thou wise? Who made the lighte of grod eflect and the darkness: Who made the sterp of gexd effect and the activity? Who made the morning, mons, amd nicht?" Aharamazda is thas to Zatathostrat the light and the somere of light. [1n other words the sinn.] He is wiolon and intellert ; he poserses all groxd thiner, temporal and -piritual, among them the good mind immomality, whalesmeness, the best truth, devotion, picty and abundance of all cathly gend. All these grifts he grants to the pions man who is pure in thought, word and deed. He rewards the good, :and panishes the wieked ; and ath that is ereated, good or evil fortume or misfortune, is his work alone.

 havine heen confoumberl with theologial duali-m, which it is metamly very fur trom being. Nothing was further from beine, one :and indivisible. But that everlating problem of all thinking mind viz. the origin of evil, and its intompati-
different, were united, and produced the world of material things as well as that of the spirit. The one who produced the reality (gaya) is called Vohu Mano, the good mind; the other, through whom the non-reality (ajyaiti) originated, is the Akem Mano, the naught mind. To the first belong all good, true and perfect things; to the second, all that is delusive, bad, wieked. These two aboriginal moving, causes of the universe are called twins. They are spread every where, in God as in men. When united in Ahuramazda, they are called Cpento Mainyus, and Angro Manyus-i. e., white or holy ; and dark spirits. It is only in later writings that these two are supposed to be opposed to each other, not within Ahuramazda, but with-out-to stand in fact, in the relation of God and Devil to each other. The inscriptions of Darius know but one God, without any adversary whatever. But while the one side within him produced all that was bright and shining, all that is good and useful in nature, the other side produced all that is dark and apparently noxious. Both are as inseparable as day and night. and though opposed to each other, are indispensable for the preservation of creation. The bright spirit appears in the blazing flame, the presence of the dark is marked by the wood converted into charcoal. The one has created the light of the day, the other the darkness of night ; the former awakens men to their duty, the other lulls them to sleep. Life is produced by the one, and extinguished by the other, who also, by releasing the soul from the fetters of the body, enables her to go up to immortality and everlasting life.
"We have said already that the original monotheism of Zarathustra did not last long. False interpretations, misunderstandings, changes, and corruptions crept in, and dualism was established in theology. The two principles then for the first time becane two powers, hostile to each other, each ruling over a realn of his own, and constantly endeavoring to overthrow the other. This doctrine, which appears first fully developed in the Vendidad, once accepted by some of the most inflnential leaders, it soon followed that, like terrestrial rulers, cach of the two powers must have a council and court of his own. The number of councillors wats six, each having to rule over some special province of creation ; but Ahmmazda, who at first merely presided over this council, came gradually to be included in their number, and we then read of seven instead of the usual six Ameshaspentas or Immortal Saints. Thesesix supreme councillors, who have also fonnd their way into the Jewish tradition embodied in the Talmud, are both ly etymology, and the sense of the passiges in which they figme, distinctiy seen to be but abstract nouns or iteas, rencesenting

"In the same manner as Ahuramazda, his counterpart, Angromainyus, was, in later times, endowed with a council, imitated from the one just mentioned, and consisting of six devas, or devils, headed by Angromainyus himself, who is then styled Devanam Devo=arch-devil. The first after him is called Ako-Mano, or Naught Mind, the original 'non-reality, or evil principle of Zoroaster. He produces all bad thoughts, makes men utter bad words, and commit sin. The second place is taken by the Indian god Indra: the third, by Shiva or Shaurma! the fourth, by Naonhatya-the collective name of the Indian Ashuras or Dioscuri; the fifth and sixth, by the two personifications of 'Darkness' and 'Poison.' There are many devas, or devils, besides, to be found in the Zend Avesta, mostly allegorical or symbolical names of evils of all kinds. While the heavenly council is always taking measures for promoting life, the infernal council is always endeavoring to destroy it. They endeavor to spread lies and falsehoods, and altogether coincide together with their great chief, with the devil and the infernal hierarchy of the New Testament."

"Thus Monotheism was in later times broken up and superseded by Dualism. But a small party, represented by the Magi, remained steadfast to the old doctrine, as opposed to that of the followers of the false interpretation, or Zend, the Zendiks, In order to prove their own interpretation of Zoroaster's doctrines, they had recourse to a false and ungrammatical explanation of the term Zervana Akarana, which meaning merely time without bounds, was by them pressed into an identity with the Supreme Being; whilst the passages on which the present Desturs, or Parsee priests, still rest their faulty interpretation, simply indicated that God ereated in the boundless time; i. e., that He is from eternity, self existing, neither born nor created. Two intellects and two lives are further mentioned in the Zend Avesta. By the former are to be understood the heavenly spiritual wisdom, and the carthly wisdom, i. e., that which is learned by ordinary teaching and experience. The two lives are, in the same manner, distinguished ats the bodily and the mental, i. e., body and soul. From these two lives, however, are to be distinguished the 'first' and 'last' lives, terms which refer to this life and the life to come. The belief in the latter, and in immortality, was one of the principal dogmas of Karathostra, and it is held by many that it was mot through Fersian influence that it become a Jewish and C'hristiandogma, Heaven is ealled the 'House of Hymms,' a place where angels praise Goul incessantly in song. It is also called the 'Best Life,' or Paradise. 'Hell' is called the honse of Destruction. It is the abode chiefly of priests of the lad (deva) religion. The modern Persians call the former Behesht; the batter, Duzak. Between heaven and hell, there is the bridge of the gatherer or Judges, over which the soul of the pions pass unhamed, while the wieked is precepitated from it into hell. The resurrection of the bexly is clearly and emphatically indicated in the Kend Avesta; and it belongr, in all probability, to Zoroaster's original doctrine-not, ats has been held by some, to later times, when it was imported into his religion by other religions. A detailed deseription of the resurrection amd last judgment is contained in the Bundehesh. The same argument -the almightiness of the Creator-which is now employed to show the possibility of the elements, dissolved and scattered as they may tee, being all brought back again, and made once more to form the botly to which they once belonged, is mate use of there to prove the Resurrection. There is still an important eloment to be noticed, viz., the Messiah or Losiosh, from whom the Jewish and Christian notions of a Messiah are hedr, by many, whederived. He is toawaken the dead berdies, to mentore ali life destroyed by death, and to hold the last judgment. Here, again, a later perion introduced a plurality, notably a Trinity. "'1. Everywhere in the world, a duality is to be perceived, such as the Good and the Evil, light and darkness; this life and that life; human wisdom and divine wisdom. 3. Only this life becomes a prey to death, but not that hereafter, over which the destructive spirit has no power. 2. In the universe, there are from the beginning two spirits at work, the one making life, the other destroying it. 4. Who can read those particulars in the light of the communication coming from Zarathustra and not see the importance of the statements which that communication contains. It was the fact, that while I had heard from him from time to time, the spirit had only communicated with me once and that more than three years before, as Aronamar. When he announced himself as Zarathustra or Zoroaster, and not as Aronamar, as I had come to know him, I was especially on the alert, and when he announced himself as the Daniel of the Jewish Seriptures, I settled down into that conviction. When he stated he lived in the days of Nebuchadnezzar, Belshazzar, Darius Hydaspes and Cyrus, I felt very sure he had betrayed his purpose to deceise. Jutge then of my surprise when on coming to test the truth of that spirit, I found the facts to be most surprisingly corroborative of the gennineness and truthfulness of the communieation. Never having had an intimation that there was the least paralledism between the aceounts of the Jewish Danied and the Persian Zoroaster, when I disenvered their identity the reader maty well imagine my astonishment as well as my depp and absorbing interest, in the full import of this unexpected revelation from spirit life.

It is true that in the seripture legend called "The Book of Daniel," it is stated that that prophet and seer was at the courts of Nebuchadnezzar, Belshazzar, Darins the Mede, and ('yrus, king of Persia; but the spirit seems to have designedly mentioned a circumstance that shows that the time that he lised eould be fixd with the greatest certainty, while the Book of Daniel is strangely at fanlt in fixing the time of the reign of the third mentioned king. The spirit of Zoronster says that he not only lived at the courts of the two first named babylonian kings, but that he subsequently lived at the court of Darius "Hydaspes," as the spirt gave the surname. There is not a question that this designation of the king Darias, to whon lie referred, was the Dariths Hystaspes of the beoks of Ezra, Hagrai and Kechariah. Whether Hystajes or Itydaspes is the eorreet rendering, I have no means of detemining. The differener is between the dand st. That Zamathustralived and wrote in the reign of Darius Ifystareses is certain; and that Daniol did not live in the reign of Darius the Mede, seems equally eertan. Now ats Zoroaster the magrian seer knew under what king's reign he lived and wrote, and the Jowish pronhet 1)aniel did not, we conelude that justice requires us to believe the spirit of Zoroastor, and to dishelieve the Book of Daniel, oo fir ats that wery memtial point is concerned. Nothing has more pu\%hed theologitus and historical crities, than to find a phace in listory for the king Darins of the Book of Daniel. On this 1"int we will here cite the Anerican ('yelopediat, to show how this matter stands. It :ays:
" harius (ireek Dareios; Hobrew baryavo-h; Persian Darivathe, in seremal inseriptions, the nathe of several kinge of Matiatand Jersia. Darins the Moke, is repreatomed in the towk

tional and not a personal name, and that king the "Darius the Mede" of the book of Daniel. Another hypothesis is that he was identical with Cyaxares II., mentioned by Nenophon in the Cyeropredia as the son of Astyages and materual uncle of Cyrus, who married his daughter. Being an indolent, luxurious man, Cyaxares, according to Xenophon, left the real exercise of power entirely in the hands of Cyrus, as the immediate successor of Astyages. Josephus seems to have adopted this view, since he says that Babylon was taken by Darius and Cyrus his kinsman, and that Darins was the son of Astyages, and was known among the Greeks by another natne, which he does not mention. Still another theory is that Darius the Mede, was a member of the royal Median family, and was merely viceroy at Babylon for two years, until Cyrus came to reign there in person. This appears to be corroborated by the expression in Daniel, 'Darius the son of Ayasuerus, of the seed of the Medes, who was made king over the realm of the Chaldeans.' In the words of Rawlinson, 'Upon the whole it must be acknowledged that there are scarcely sufficient grounds for determining whether the Darius Medus of Daniel is identical withany monarch known to us in profane history, or is a person of whose existence there remains no other record.'"

Rawlinson is certainly right when he says that biblical and profane history are at fault and irreconcilable in regard to the identity of the Darius of Daniel ; and but for the communication of the spirit of Zarathustra, that identification might have remained undetermined. By one of those strange successions of events by which concealed truth is brought to light, I am enabled to demonstrate a point that no learned critic has ever been able to elucidate; and to make clear two facts, first that the Book of Daniel was a Jewish plagiarism of Chaldean legends, and, second, that it was written after the middle of the fifth century B. C. The writer from whom we have quoted above, continues:
"Darius Hystaspis, son of Hystaspes, (Persian Vistaspa or Ustanspi), of the royal race of the Achemenida, reigned $521-$ 466 B. C: According to Herodotus, he was marked ont for the empire during the life of Cyrus, whosaw him in a dream with wings orershadowing Asia and Europe."
That dream of Herodotus or Cyrus, has certainly played havoe with the historical and chronological correctaess of the sacred book of Daniel ; for it led the Hebrew plagiarist into a blunder, from which the Jewish and Christian priesthoods have never been able to extricate him. When the Book of Daniel was written, the only historieal data concerning the reigns of Darius and (cyrus, were embraced in the following authors, to whom the Ameriewn Cyelopedia, under the head "Cyrus" alludes thins: "Most of the particulars of his (Cyrus's) life, are differently relatedin the histories of ('tesias amd Iferodotus, and in the ('yeroperdian of Xemophon. But as Ctesias is ia general untrust worthy, and as Xenophon seems to have writen his book, a kind of philosophical romance, without mue! regard for history, the story of Herodotus, in spite of its legendary character, has been generally adopted by modem historians down to (irote." It would seem that the legendary character of IHerodotus's accomit of Cyrus and Darius did not militate against its historical correctness, in the estem of the Jew who phatiarized the Chaldean legend, and thas the blunder of Herodotus has been handed down to us through Jewish holy writ, as not only historical truth, but as divine truth as well. In the light of all the facts which we are aboset to submit, it will be seen that Darins Hystatioes sueceded Belshazzar and not ('yrus, and that the latter steceeded Darius instend of preeeding him. It is true that this fact makne an cend of Damiel, hat that eamot be helped. If he mast die, in order that the truth may live.

I must heregive a brief aceount of Zarathustra, as qathered from the Persian tuthor, Zerdust, som of Behram. Thate months before Zarathustra was born, his mother hat a frightful drean, alout which she eomsulted an astrohger, who asemmed her she had wo callse to fear any trouble for her child, and who predieted his future glory. He was born without pain to his mother ; very mueh as Christian painters depiet the Virgin Mary, inmediately after having given birth to the new born Jestic. The astrologers were je:tous of him from the moment of his hirth ; and songlit in varions ways to kill him; bat he was protedeal hy Ahuramazles. These eftorts to doatroy him continued matil he had rompleted his seventh year. It was said of him, "Ifis supernatural wishom, piety amp prity alone sawed him from falling into the shares latid for him. His gernerosity :and goxines were not less remarkable ; he w:a prodigal With hive eharity and consolation : helperl those whosonght his great eelelority anong the people." At the age of thirty, just about the age when Jesns is said to have begun his mission, he was drawn to Iran, as the latter had been to Jerusalem; Iran, here, meaning the seat of Persian learning and power. He then quitted his lome and comitry, and after wandering about for some time, he found himself in a comntry of delights, something after the description oi Paradise. From that lovely country he went up into the mountains, as Moses is said to have done, where one Bahman, whose hand was covered with a veil, led him through throngs of angels, to the throne of Ahuramazda. There Zarathustra questioned Ahuramazda regarding morals, the celestial hierarchy, religious ceremonies, the end of man, the revolutions and influence of the stars, ete. He finally asked immortality of Ahuramazta, but, by a supernatural prevision, foreseeing all that was to take place, he withdrew his request. He then received from Ahuramazda, the Zend A vesta, (the sacred book of the Persians,) with the command to proclaim its teachings to king Gustasp, who would protect the new religion and adopt it as his own. He then returned from Ahuramazda with the Zend in one havel and the celestial fire in the other. The astrologers and magicians apprised of his return, collected a great army to prevent his passage to the king of Iran. They were, however, seattered in utter confusion by the power of Ahuramazda. Reaching the king's palace and making known his mission, he was refused admissien to the king, by the affendants. In a moment he descended through the ceiling of the hall in which the king sat surrounded by the learned and powerful of his kingdom. He was questioned by the king and the sarges present concerning every department of knowledge, and answered them all with so mueh case and manifest erudition, that the king was delighted to welcome him, and gave him magnificent apartments near the palace. For two days he discussed with the sages, every question which they raised to embarrass him, with entire sucecss. Some days after he presented the Zend Avesta to the king, announced to him his mission, and pleaded with him to embrace the truc laws of that God, who had made the seven heavens, the stars and the earth, who had given him his life and his crown, and who offered to all fathful worshippers of his power, an immortal glory after death. Neither the reading of the Zend Avesta, nor the eloquence of the prophet, sufficed to convince the king. Gustasp demanded time to consider and miracles to attest the truth of what Zarathustra told him. These were finally given to a wonderful extent, and the king became satisfied to accept the new religion ; and didso using all his royal inlluence to induee hissuldjects to do the same. Not satisffed with this, Gustasp wrote to the governors of meighboring countries to aceapt the religion of Zarathustra. Some obeyed, others refused. Rapid as was the spread of the n-w law, yet it was too slow to satisfy the ardor of Gustasp. Bie went to war with the king of Touran, incited thereto by Zarathustra. Then follows a long account of the war between Iran and Touran, which, for our purpose, need not be here given.

Now, who was this Gitstasp, king of Iran? That question once definitely settled, and we can then determine almost to a certainty, the truth of the spirit communication that we are commenting on. On that point, 'Thomas's Dictionary of Biography and Mythology, says:
"Gushta-p, or Gustaisp, written also Gostasp, Histasp and Kishtasp, a fatmons Persian hero, and king, who has been by some writers identitiod with Darins I., (surnamed Hystaspis), by others with Hystaspes, the father of Darills. There is so muth that is fabulous in the Persian aromonts that have come down to us, that it seems imposible in most cases, to settle in any satisfaetory mamer the question of ialentity between the kings of the Pemian writers and those of the (ireek historims. Firdonsee (Firdathi), who is genw rally believed to have taken the farts of Pemian history for the hasis of his great perem (the Hhah-N:mah), represents (inshtasp as having ruled over Jersia many years as an absolutesovereign, and as having umder fifs (ommand 'a thousamd thousand warrioss armed with shinimg steel, 一which could hat very well refer to If retaspes, who was hut a satrap or inferior prince maler ('malyses, but would amswer examely to the ciremmitanecs of Darins Hy-tapis. I'uder the tithe of "1tysta-p":," the sitne work :ay:
"Hystaspes, [Greek, Ustaspes, French, Hystaspe, Persian, Gushtasp,] a satrap of Persia, and the father of Darius, lived about 550 before Christ. He is said to have been the first who introduced into Persia the learning of the Indian Brahmans. According to one account, he was the chief of the Magians, which accords with the Persian tradition that Gushtasp patronized the religion of Zoroaster."

Under the title "Hystaspes," McClintock and Strong's Eeclesiastical Cyclopedia says :
"Hystaspes, (in Greek, Ustaspes, also Hystaspas, i. e., Hydaspes, a prophetic apocalyptic work among the early Chistians, thought to contain predictions of Christ and the future of his kingdom, so-called from a Persian sarant (Magus), Hystaspes, under whose name it was circulated. As in the caso of the Sibyllines, the work in question seems to have been an attempt made by the early Church fathers to find in the religion and philosophical systems of the heathen, predictions of and relations of the Christian religion. The first mention of these vaticinia Hystaspis, we find in two passages of Justin (Apolog. 1, 20, cap. 21, p. 66 c.; Ottho, I, p. 180, and cap. 44, 1). 82 c, ed. Otho, p. 226 . According to the first passage, the destruction of the world is predicted by Hystaspes, as it is foretold by the Sybilla. In the second passage, Justin asserts that the bad demons, in their efforts to prevent man's knowing the truth, succeeded in establishing a law which forbids the reading Bibloi Utaspoi e Sibylles e ton propheton under penalty of death; but the Christians, notwithstanding the law, not only read the books themselves, but even incited the heathen to study them. More particular information in regard to their contents is given us by Clement of Alexandria. The information that Clement furnishes is: 1 . There existed in the second century a Biblos Helleniken, a work written in Greck, and circulated in Christian and heathen circles, entitled O Ustaspes. 2. The Christians found in it, even more plainly than the books of the Sibillines, references to Christ and the future of his kingdom, and especially a reference to Christ's divine sonship, to the sufferings which awaited him and his followers, to the inexhaustible patience of the Christians, and the final return of Christ. The third and last of the Chureh fathers whomake mention of Hystaspes, is Lactantius. He speaks of it in three different passages. In the first passage he speaks of the Hystapes in connection with the Sibyl, and in the two other passages he speaks of it in connection with the sibyl and Hermes Trismegistus. According to the first passage, Hystaspes, like the Sibyl, predicts the extinction of the empire and name of Rome. According to the sceond passage, the troubles and warfare which shall precede the final day of the world have been prophesied of by the Prophete ex Dei Spiritu; :aso by the rates ex instinctu demontum. For instance, Itystaspes is satid to have predieted and deseribed the iniquitas seculi hujus extremi, how a separation of the just from the mujus shall take place; how the pious, amid eries and sobs, will streteh out their hands and implore the protection of Jupiter (implor:turos fidem Jovis), and how Jupiter will look down upon the earth, hear the ery of men and destroy the wieked.
" With regard to the person of Itrsta-pes, who is said to be the author of the work containing these predietions, Justin and Clement of Alexandria have left us mo information, and we depend, therefore, solely on Lactantius, according to whom, he was an old king of the Medes, who flourished long before the Trojan war, and after whom was named the river Hystaspes. It1 all probability, Lactantius here thinks of the father of King Darius I., known to us from the writings of Herodotus, Xenophon, and other (ireek authors, but to whom the prophetie talents of Hystaspes were entirely foreign. Ammianns Marcellinns, who flourished in the fourth century of our era, fuforms us that one Hystases had stmdid antronomy with the Brahmins of India, and had even informed the Magri of his ability to know the future. Agathias, the Byantine historian of the sixth century, knows of a llystaspes who was a contemperary with Zoronster, hut he doce not dare to asoort that this Hystasues was the same as the one speken of as the father of Darine I. In view of the uncertainty of the sathorship, it is well nigh imposible to determine fully the orisin, esontents, form and tendeney of the Vaticinia Ilystanpis. We know not ewen whether it emanated from Jewish, Christian or heathen writers, althoms all our present knowledge points to the last as ite probable origin. That the author was a finostie, as Huetits thinks, is posible, but camot be definitely stated mor at all proved; begond this, the only answer left us toall questions that might be put is a non lignet."

I think every reader will saty, that with the facts we have laid before them, "ery peoint of dombt in regard to all these eonfued and mublled Jewish and Christian ghestions is about to be solved, throngl the key whieh the spitit of harathastrat importance of that key in molocking the treastured sectets of the proctly masters of hamanity. But we have the key that unlorke the vault, the key that was supposed to be lost or destroyed forever, and the world shall enjoy that hidden wealth of knowledge. I have inserted the key; now I throw the rusty bolts; and there we find Gustasp, the princely patron and friend of Zarathustra, to be none other than Darius Hystaspes, or Darius I., the successor of Belshazzar on the Assyrian throne, and the great founder of the Persian Empire. This fact would never have been questioned, had not Herodotus blundered as to the proper place of Darius Hystaspes in Assyrian history; and had not the plagiarizing Jewish writer, who sought to conceal his literary theft, followed Herodotus, and thus convicted himself of the pious fraud he was perpetrating. Had Daniel been the anthor of that book, or the hero of it, it is hardly likely that he would have made so great a mistake, as to make Darius succeed Cyrus, when he was in fact his predecessor, and reigned over the empire he founded for more than half a century, luring which time he conquered the Assyrian kingdom and brought it under Persian rule. Thus we see not only that the errors of history are corrected by this communication from the spirit of Zarathustra, but that the identity of the spirit is established beyond all question. The spirit tells us that he lived in the days of Nebuchadnezzar, Belshazzar, Darius Hydaspes, and Cyrus, and mentions motl1ing of any other Darius, and nothing whatever of any "Darius the Mede" as having preceded Cyrus. The book of Daniel does not pretend that he (Daniel) lived in the reign of Darius Hystaspes, and, therefore, he could not have lived in the reigns of Nebuchadnezzar, Belshazzar, and Cyrus, for it is certain that the Darius of whom the book of Daniel speaks nust have preceded Cyrus, and that Darius could have been none other than Darius Hystaspes, or Hydaspes, who, the other books of the Jewish scriptures allege succeeded Cyrus.

Now, that Zarathustra lived in the reign of the four kings he has named, and at their courts, seems singularly corroborated by all the historical facts that we have collated and herewith submit. It is hardly probable that a Jewish captive would have been permitted to live out a long life at the capitals of Babylonia, Media, and Persia, as the favorite and counsellor of those mighty kings, whose national religion was that of Magian fire-worship, intermingled with astrology and starworship, which was so well suited to the tastes and inclinations of those sensual and materialistic tyrants of Babylon-

Nebuchadnezzar, and Belshazzar. On the other hand, nothing was more natural than that Zoroaster, himself a devotee of Magianism, and a recognized seer, prophet, or medium of tramseendent matural endowments, should have ocenpied that precise eondition despite the jealously, emmity and opposition of the Marian priesthood, who sought in every way to comiteract and break his influence over the minds of his royal patrons. The chronological dates of that period of Asyrian history, are at least very confused and uncertain, and the error of a century, or centuries, as to any one prominent event, may have thrown all those that preceded or followed it, out of order, as to time, but not so as to the order in which they suceeeded each other. We will give such dates as we find attributed to the reigns of those four kings. Nebuchadnezar, who was the greatest of the Babylonian kings, is supposed to have begun his reign B. C. 60G, and ended about 562 B . ('. Betshazzar's reign is supposed to have elosed with the conquest of Babylon ly the king of the Medes and Persians about 538 B . ( . That eonquest was made, begond all question, by Darius Hystacpes himself, and by no other Median king Darius, as is made manifest, not only by the remarkable spirit communieation of Zarathustra, but alse by an array of corroborative collateral facts, that [ have been astonished to find, all bearing upon the same peint. The reign of Darins Hysta-pes must hawe cobded, then, before that of Cyrus hegan, as Dirius, and not ('yrus, was the foumber of the Pervian Empire, a fact which the (ireck historians seen to have entirely overlooked. When the reign of Darius emeded, and that of ('yrus legan, it is now impossible to determine; but we know it must have been within the periol of a single life dating from a period of wot more than a few yours before the begiming of the reign of Nebuchadnezzar. We so infer from the fact that in the first elanper of Damiel, it is stated that Daniel wat a chiled when Nehachadne\%zar eaptured Jertasalent, which was very slently before his reign beg:un ; and as it is stated in the secombl chapter of Damiel, that it wats in the seemal gear of his reign that Nobuchadne\%zar dreaned the dream that none of "the hagicians, and the astrologers, and the soreerers, and the ('hatheans." erold slow the kinge, it must have been wholl meaning of it. From that time it is said Daniel survived until after the third year of Cyrus, which, supposing Daniel to have lived to the age of seventy years, would have been until B. C. from 545 to 555 . It is not pretended, in the book of Daniel, that Nebuchadnczzar became a convert to the Jewish religion. So in the case of King Belshazzar ; it is not pretended that he became a convert to the religion of the Jews. It is not until we come to Darius, the Mede, that we find either of Daniel's kingly patrons disposed to accept and become the propagator of the religion of Daniel. Nowhere in all that pretended Jewish book is the religion of Daniel alluded to as the religion of Judea, or of the Jews, and nowhere is the God of Daniel referred to as the Jehovah, or Yahho, of that pre-Christian sect. This ought to be enough to show that the Book of Daniel is not a Jewish book, and that Daniel, the seer, prophet, and dream reader, was not a Jew, but a star-reading practicer of Magian arts. It is therefore only left to determine who was Darius, and who was Daniel, and what was the religion taught or believed in by the latter and adopted and propagated by the former. It would not be difficult to gather enough from the Book of Daniel to determine these points, but I can better do this by the outside facts, pointed out and construed by the light of the spirit communication of Zarathustra.

I have at great length set forth the nature of the religious teachings of Zarathustra, which show, in an astonishing manner, the source from which many of the most highly cherished religious dogmas of the Christian hierarchy have been derived. How Zarathustra came to adopt those theological dognas, so analogous to, if not identical with the Christian dogmas, the two principles, of Good called God, and Evil called Devil, but by the former called Ahuramazda and Ahrimanes, we can only conjecture from the somew hat too poctical history of Zarathustra. We are told by the last historian that from his birth the Magi and astrologers feared his future success. This was we are told because of the astrological prognostications attendant upon his birth. We infer, however, it was on account of the manifest fact that he was endowed with extraordinary mediumistic attributes and mental promise. These were developer in an equally remarkable degree, during the first thirty sears of his life. He then went forth from his home and country and travelled on, with semi-miraculonsadrentures, until hereachet a heautiful country compared to Paradise. It is most probable that this delightful comntry was mone other than the beantiful valleys in what is called the Hill Country of India, in all probability the seene of the first perfect civilization of man, the great eentre from which all suhsequent civilization has radiated over the world. There, we are told, he went up into a motntain, athl was led by the veiled hand of Bahman, through throngs of attendants to the throne of Ahuramazda, where he obtained the Zend Avesta or Sacred book, which has been attributed miversally to him. The mountain he ascemded was the Mountain of the Wise Men, where was located the great central seat of Brahmanical lore. From there he returned to Persia, his mind enriched with the treasures of knowledge acquired during his abode in that centre of spirit imparted wisdom. It was there no doubt, this glorious and immortal medium was impressed by great and good spirits to found a new religion, which would give a more spiritual inferpretation to the import of material things that he found among the learned Brabmins of India, and at the same time, not wholly ignore the sun worship and star worship of his own people and country. The Zend A vesta was the result. When it was completed, he knew hisonly chance of sutceess was to convince Darius Hystarpes, who it is admitted was his contemporary, of the wisdom of his great religions scheme, and secure for it his support. In this he wats at least suceessfnl, notwithstanding the eflorts of all the learned classes, and especially the Chaddean and Persian Magi, toperpetuate the more ancient fire-worshipping and astrological religion. It is true that the story of Zarathustra ley Zeriusht, does not mention Darins as his kingly friend and patron, but the mame (illstasp, which it is admitted is the same as 11ystaricu, is mentioned. Not only was Gustaspand liystaspes one and the same person, and that person the rosal convert of Kamatlustra, but we have it stated on high Christian anthority, no less than Justin, ('lement of Alexandria and Lactantins, that it wats an apocalyptic work among the carly Christians, thonght to contain predictions eoncerning ('hrist ; and that it was calleal Ilystaspes fom the fart that suth was the name of a Persian savant, mbder whose reign it was eirenlated. As we havershow, these good pions ('hristian fathers suppresed the name of that "apoealyptie work" which was rertainly the Zarathustra. In view of the facts collated above, does it not appear that the Sibylline, the Jewish and the Christian books have been largely borrowed from the Zend Avesta of Zarathustra; and could any fact be made plainer than that Justin, ('lement and Lactantius all sought to conceal the fact that the early Christians were sun-worshippers and regarded the Zend Avesta as a sacred book? I attach the highest significance to the testimony of Ammianus Mareellinus the Roman historian, whose reputation for freedom from all sectarian or religious prejodice, and for accuracy, fidelity and impartiality, is universally conceded; who lived probably as late as the beginning of the fifth century. He says that one Hystaspes had studied astronomy with the Brahmans of India, and had even informed the Magi of his ability to know the future. He was undoubtedly misled on this point by Justin, Clement and Lactantius who substituted the surname of Darius for that of the real person who had studied astronomy with the Brahmans of India. He undoubtedly refers to Zarathustra. Still later the Byzantine historian, Agathius, who lived as late as A. D. 582, knew of a Hystaspes, who was a contemporary of Zoroaster. This shows that as late as the latter part of the sixth century, it was known that Zoroaster was the contemporary of Darius I., and that Darius I., was Darius Hystaspes. We have the fact admitted by Christian theologians that the "Vaticinia Hystaspes," which was used by the early Christians, was most probably, of heathen and not of Jewish or Christian production. It has been further admitted that its author was probably a Guostic ; all of which poiuts to Zoronster and his religion as to its iclentification. But it is further admitted by some writers, and with the best reason, (Thomas's Dictionary of Biography, articke (Gustasp, ) that Gustasp has been identified with Darius I, (sumamed Hystaspis.) Thus the communication of Karat thastra is not only confirmed as to the fact that Darins Hystaspes or Hydaspes, preceded Cyrus in the succession of Persian kings, but leaves no room to question the authenticity and truthfulness of his statements. With this correction of historical errors, all the other historical errors that have grown out of it are equally corrected and phanly intelligible.

I clain, therefore, that it is a demonstrated fact that Damiel, the sh-ablled dewish prophet, never did perform the womders related of him at the courts of Nobuchadnezan, Befohazzar, Darius and Cyrus, but that if any one did so, it was Zoroaster or 'Zarathustra, the great Persian sage, prophet and seer-the friend and confidential adviser of the great and good king Darius-and founder of the astro-mythriac, and pre-eminently spiritual religion embodied and taught in the Zend Avesta. How closely the Jewish plagiarist in the book of Daniel, has followed the writings of Zarathustra, and the incidents of his life, we may never certainly know; but that there is nothing orginal about it, and that it is a plagiarism of some Chaldean or Persian narrative I have demonstrated.

I will now return to the communication and hasten to a close. The spirit tolls the that he was known as Aronamar, at the Court of Cyrus. This fact not only explains why Zanathustra gave me that name rather than his own, but it is strikingly convincing of his identity, as the Damiel of the book of Damiel. It will be seen Daniel vi, 27 , that it is said, in the decree of Darins, by whose orders Daniol was cast into the lions'den, "Hedeliverethand reseneth, and he worketh signsand wonders, in heaven and in earth, who hath delivered Daniel from the power of the lions." On aceount of that alleged deliverance from the lioms, he was no doubt especially distinguished at the court of C'yrus, where his intluence was umbounded. The name Aronamar was no doubt given him ats a mark of especial respect. The root of that name Ar is the Chaldaic root of Arat which probably meant lion, as did its Helorew equivalent Ara, and anding as well as beginatig the name Aron-om-ar the meaning of the name no doubt was "the ond saved from lions," or "the lion tamer." Not wishing me to mblerstand the full import of his habors matil he was throtgh, he withbed his identity umber that unhistorical designation.

When he says that while at the court of (yrns, "I wats in the pmation of a philosopher, who, having rasomed um the law of catmes and cflee, would stand in any position in life," he indicates in the most striking mamere the great fumdamental prineiphe of all his philesopheal and theological system. Before Fowrates and llato lived, and long before besartex, Baton and

istic power, that the materialized spirit-hand wrote that warning on the walls of Belshazzar's banqueting hall. The spirit tells us that when he lived, at least 550 B . C., there was a religious teaching promulgated, which was attributed to Hermes Trismegistus, the then ancient Egyptian sage and law-river, which prophesied that a child should be born of a virgin, and that it was commonly believed at that time. This, then, was no Jewish prophecy, as has been pretended, but a prophees of a Gentile heathen. Zarathustra, in his conmmonication, informs ns that it was the Phallie worship that preceded hismythriac religion ; that back of that was the astronomical and philosophical religion of Hermes Trismegistus, which, even five hundred years before the time of Zarathustra, embodied what we call the inductive philosophy, of which Bacon was the great modern exemplar; and that away far hack before that advanced philosophy there was a Hindoo-Chaldaic civilization which took its rise at the base of the Himalayas. Besides that there was a very ancient Phœnician religion, and that the chief idea of the two latter religions, was the relations of heat and cold, and their effects upon men, and on the crops on which they depended for food. All this is indicated by all the historical or traditional evidence that has been permitted to come down to us. But here we have the additional spirit testimony, that the civilization of this, our Western Continent, was at one time in history, progressing side by side with that of the great Eastern Continent of Asia; and that the Buddhistic sage Bochica taught all the laws of cause and effect-or in other words the Baconian philosophy-in Bolivia and Peru long before Manco Capac and his wife appeared there. It would appear that Christianity had performed the same part, in utterly arresting an advanced native civilization on this Weestern Continent that it did in Asia, Europe and Afriea, when it supplanted the civilizations of those continents. But for the art of printing, that religions curse would have continued to block the way to human freedom and progress. When the spirit said that all the science and all the knowledge of antiquity is eoneentrated in the Book of Daniel and the Book of Revelation, so-called, he meant, as he afterwards explains, that they furnish the key to the secret mysteries of all aneient knowledge. That both those works were from the same spirit source, is manifest to any person who will read them by the allegrorical key placed here in their hands. That the Book of Daniel so far as it possesses any value is due to Zoroaster or Zarathustra, and the Book of Revelation to Apollonius of Tyana, I have not a doubt ; that their meaning is the same ; and that their authors were two of the greatest spiritual mediums that this world has ever seen, or that it will soon see agsin, I fully believe, if I have not a right to clain that I know it to be so.

And now in elosing the great task imposed upon me by those grand old sages of the mest important epochs in the distant past of the worid's history, I have but one regret ; and that is, that I have had to perform it under so many difliculties ; so little to my own satisfaction ; and I justly fear, sol little to the satisfaction of the great spirit minds, who, for want of a more fitting and stitable instrment, were empelled to depend npon my humble efforts to got their invaluable impartations and inculeations before the world.

While laboring incessantly for years to aid these spirit messengers to fulfill their great mision to mankind, I have had to do fattle almost alone. But throngh it all, 1 have nover looked back to see how far I had adsanced, or wished for rest. Inspired hy influmees that came to establish the reign of truth on earth, I have been sustaned in every emergeney that has been presented.

CONCLUSION.

TTHOSE of our readers who have closely followed these communications and examined carefully the comments thereon, we address these closing remarks. If they ponder over the revelations and events in the light reflected from the spirit world, and avail themselves of such information as can be gleaned from history's pares relative to this subject, it must be apparent to them, as it is to us, that Christianity has been formulated from the heathen theological doctrines and dogmas concerning the Hindoo gorl Christos; that the New Testament is nothing more than the plagiarism of the writings and teachings of Apollonius of Tyana and Chrestus, and that these teachings originated in ancient sun worship, fire worship and man-god worship. In confirmation of this we have the testimony of not only a large number of the world's greatest scholars, but many of the most profound and philosophic religious teachers of the past.

In summing up, we briefly consider some points which are deemed of special importance in connection with the subject. The originators of the religious delusion named Christianity, claimed that it was founded upon the inspired word of God, who sent his only son, Jesus Christ, into the world to atone for the sins of mankind, by suffering an ignominious death upon the cross. The object of these spirit commmications is to show to the world that the Christian religion was created by man, and that Jesus Christ was a mythical character, existing only in the minds of those who bronght forward as his teachings the doctrines gathered from heathen mythology and its gods.

These spirit witnesses also claim that all the ancient manuseripts were matilated by the carly Christian Fathers. This is not withont foundation. Much eorroborative evidence of it can be found in the works of Sir William Drummond and Godfrey Higgins. These eminent writers prove that mot only have the Christians stolen their religions rites and ceremonies from the pagans, but have even changed the spelling of the name of their god Mithra, the Sun, and appropriated him to their own use.

It is a well-known fact that scholars in the old languages found considerable difliculty in making copies of the manuscripts that were in existenee at the time of Christ, so-ealled. These old manuscripts often being written without the vowels* made them liable to misinterpretation by the seribes, it being left to them to supply the required vowels. Those who were instrumental in formulating Christianity took advantage of this by employing translators who were entirely devoted to their interests. These scribes in making eopies changed the vowels, words and sentences, inserting or omitting them as best suited their purposes. As an instance of this we refer to the word "Beth-el," found in Genesis xxviii, 19, which aceording to the Christians signities " Honse of God." Originally the god Mithra, the Sun, was represented by the term "Al;" this combined with the word "Both," which signified house, gave rise to the name "HIonse of the sun." In (iodfrey Ifiggins' work, "Anacalypsis," he says "the Druids worshiped in a temple called Bothal, from 'Both,' a house, and 'Al', (iod. This god ineant the (iod Mithra, the preserver and saviour."

As it is shown all through this work that the doctrins of the ancient sun wor-hip are elosely conneeted with the doctrines of Christianity, and that the Druids were worshipiag the sun in their temples long before the inception of Christianity, is it not significant that this word Bothal, "the house of the sum," should re-appear in the Christian seriptures as Betheel, "the house of Cod?" the only difference being that the vowels are changed. We have already shown how casily and for what purpose this was done. Had this word Bothal heen allowed to remain unchanged in the eropies which were taken it would be selferident that the sinn of the Druids was identieal with the (iond of the Christians, and to the emprejudieed mind the resemblance het ween the Bothal of the Druids and the Bethel of the ('hristians would be at onee apparemt. To this one pions frath, that of inserting "el" in plate of "al" we ean attribute the tramposition from the grol Mithra, the sum, the light of [^10]the world, to the God of the Christians. From the deception practiced here it was but an easy step to change the "Ies" or "Jes" of the Phœmicians, into the name Jesus by adding the Latin termination "us;" or, if we refer to the Druids we find them calling their god Hesus, which name was derived from the Phœnician word "Ies" or "Jes" and meant the sun personified. If we substitute the letter "J" for " H " in the name Hesus, we have the word Jesus derived from still another source. Passing to India, we find the source of the name Christ. It is derived from the name of the incarnated spirit of the Hindoo sun god Chrishna, which in the Greek language becomes Kristos or Christos. Thus it only requires a knowledge of the names of the sun-god in the different languages to understand from whence the name Jesus Christ comes. The emperor Constantine, it appears, proposed to combine the characteristics of Hesus and Kristos and worship them under the name of Hesus Kristos, or, as we now have it, Jesus Christ. It was to decide this question that the Council of Nice was convened. Is it not a significant fact in this connection that the promoters of Christianity have been so careful to destroy everything relating to the Druidical religion as well as everything relating to the teachings of Apollonius of Tyana? The former religion was nothing more nor less than the worship of the sun under the designation of the god or divine man Hesus, and the latter nothing more nor less than the worship of the sun under the designation of the god or divine man Christos. Therefore we need not be at a loss to know why the religionists who sought to appropriate the same god under the name of Hesus Kristos, sought to conceal or destroy the truth concerning their spurious deity, Jesus Christ.

It is in order here to inquire what proofs Christian commentators bring forward as to the existence of this Jesus? They claim that Josephus, a historian of the first century, mentions him in his writings; that Seutonius writes of him under the name of Chrestus; that Abgarus held correspondence with him ; also Tacitus and Lucian are credited with writing of his existence. Of these five the extract of Josephus is admitted by the most critical Christian commentators to have been an interpolation of the time of Eusebius; the correspondence of Abgarus a misrepresentation, pronounced spurious in the fifth century; the passage in Seutonius to refer to an entirely different personage, viz., Chrestus, leader of the Chrestosites. The works of Tacitus and Lucian, as will be seen by their communications, ats well as evidence drawn from other sourees, have been so mutilated by Christian writers that they are worthless as evidence relating to this question. Mention is also made of a letter written by Piiny the lounger to the Emperor Trajan, giving an accotnt of a sect calling themselses Christians. The genuineness of this letter has been questioned by many commentators. The communication of Pliny shows, however, that the letter was written, but that be referred to the Essenes and not to the Christians; the latter word being an interpolation. These are the only passages in history outside of the New Testament,* to whieh the Christians ean refer to sustain their position. If the revelations of these spirit witnesses, combined with the deductions from history, have any weight, what unprejudiced mind can accept the New Testanent as evidence upon this subject, when it is shown so clearly that its gospels and epistles were plagiarized from mannseripts brought from India by Apollonius, previons to the inception of Cbristianity. It is only reasonable to guestion the claims of the New Testament with more than ordinary emphasis, when so little collateral evitlence bearing upon the personal existence of Jesus Christ can be drawn from disinterested historians of that period. Even the evidence presented, when tested by the light of these spirit revelations, appears to have been manufactured in the interests of Christianity. Not only this, but candid commentators are obliged to admit that the works of the historians offered as evidence show plainly the marks of mutilation and interpolation. So much importance has been attached by Christian writers to the noted passage in the Anmals of Tacitus that we deem it worthy of more than a passing notice, as it seems to come the nearest to mositive evidence of the existence of Christ. It is as follows: "Those people were commonly known by the name of Christians. They hul their denomination from Christus, who, in the reign of Tiberius, uas put to death as a criminal by the procurator Pratius Pilete." In his communieation Tacitus states positively that he never heard of the Christian Jesus, nor of Christianity Is it not signitiennt that this celebrated passage wats never quoted until near the elose of the dark ages? Had it

[^11]existed in the time of Eusebius it could not have been overlooked by his critical eye, and would have been accorded a prominent place in his "Eeclesiastical History." When the spirit of investigation was aroused, it became necessary to manufacture evidence, hence we find this forgery interpolated in Tacitus' Annals which has been generally copied. The Rev. Robert Taylor, A. B., M. R. C. S., made exhaustive researches as to the origin, evidences and early history of Christianity and published the full accomnt of the same in a volume entitled Taylor's Diegesis in 1829. In writing under the head of Tacitus he says: "We have investigated the claims of every document possessing a plausible claim to be in vestigated which history has preserved of the transactions of the first century; and not so much as one single passage, purporting to have been written at any time within the first hundred years, can be produced from any independent authority whatever to show the existence of such a person as Jesus Christ, or of such a set of men as could be accounted to be his disciples."

On the other hand, we have abundant proof that Jesus Christ was a mythical personage, whose life, as it has come down to ns, is fomnded on the known life of Apollonius of Tyana, the earthly existence of whom has never been questioned, to which is added passages from the lives of various personages, and teachings concerning the mythical gods of other lands. The Prometheus of the Greeks was the character which suggested the crucifixion. The Eleusinian mysteries suggested the " Last Supper" and other ceremonies connected with Christianity, and these, combined with the doctrines of the ancient sun worship, have been gathered and represented to be a history of the events connected with the life of the Christian Jesus. That Prometheus of the Greeks suggested the crucifixion was admitted by one of the most popular clergymen of our time, who in a recent sermon speaking of Eschylus, a noted book, said: "Although the author does tell of Prometheus, who was crucified on the rocks for sympathy for mankind-a powerful suggestion of the sacrifice of Christ in later years-it is a very poor book, comparcd with that book which we hug to our hearts because it contains our only guide in life, our only comfort in death, and our only hope for a blissful immoriality."

of Christ on the cross was suggested by a heathen tradition. He tells us of hugging to his heart the Holy Scriptures, (which are proved to have been derived from heathen mythology, as containing the only hope in life and death, as well as for a blissful immortality. What darkness is here manifest with the midday light of truth all round us, and what a sad outlook for those who walk in darkness! The tradition of Prometleus was not only a powerful suggestion, as the learned divine admits, but the ral foundation in fact upon which rests the tradition of the eruefifion of Christ on the eross; the name being ehanged from Promethens to Jesus Christ, and the rock -the Seythian erag - for the (hristian cross, as our readers have already learned by the testimony of these ancient spirits.

The Cliristians elam that the inspired word of God is revealed to man in the Seriptures. How ean this be true when they are proved unamthentic both as to the writings they contain and as to the time received? For instance: The Book of Danicl is shown to be only the record of past events in the life of an individuad instead of prophecies of the time to cone. The original Gospels and Epistles of the New Testament are proved to have originated in India, while those elamed to have been written at the time of Christ are shown to have been written long after that period, and based on the life and teachings of Apollonius of Tyana.

Volumes might be written as to contradictions in the Seriptures, but space will not permit. In consideration, however, of the faet that this volme has given so much proof of the non-existence of the man Jesns, we eamot refrain from ealling attention to the discrepancy in the genealogy of Christ as given in Mathew and Lake.* In the first chapter of Mat thew this genealogy is given as twenty-eight generations from David down through Joseph to Christ ; in the thitd chapter of Lake the same geneahogy is given as heing forty-there generations from ( 'larist (brough Joseph up to D)avid. This is a very remarkable oversight on the part of the tramsators, for if there is anything on which they shomblaree it is in regatd to the derent of Chri-t. Commentators have attempted to explatin

It i, not genctally known that the serealled (inapelis of Sathew, Marn, Luke and loh:s, were nut writlen ly thoe indivaluak, but were wroten much hater ly others who claimed they followed the same style, therefore they are entitled "According to Matthew, Mark, etc."
this discrepancy as follows:-That the Gospels were written for two different classes of people, the Jews and the Christians, though what connection that has with the matter is not appa-rent.-That the account of Matthew is correct, and that Luke in his researches has taken the genealogy of an entirely different Joseph without taking the trouble of verifying it.-That Luke is correct in his account.-That one list gives the genealogy of Mary and the other that of Joseph.-That the diserepancy is of minor importance. Very questionable positions to assume upon a subject of such magnitude. All of these explanations are so manifestly absurd as to prove that it is only the powerful psychological influence exerted by the clergy that keeps the people banded together in the belief that the Bible is the inspired word of God and that Jesus Christ was a real entity instead of a mythical character.

Notwithstanding the power of the church over the people, religious thought and unfoldment are compelled to move onward, as the rays of light from the torch of knowledge dissipate the darkness of ignorance. This light may come throngh the medium of science or through the mediums employed by those in the spirit spheres to enlighten the children of men, causing them to cast their mythical gods aside and accept truth. Even when the creeds and dogmas of the church are proved untrue it yields only when it encounters some antagonist superior to itself. It may be science, or a revelation from the spirit world, or the giant public opinion, the outcome of advanced thought, or the combined effect of them all. When the electric light of truth is turned on, the Christian creeds, dogmas and teachings, shrink away and disappear, or are revised by the prelates of the church. Many of the more courageous of the clergy in these times of rapid progress are repudiating some of the old dogmas which but a short time ago were held as sacred truths, but are now crumbling in the light of the nineteenth century. They seem to catch the spirit of one in the olden time who is said to have exclaimed under similar circmistances: "if l hold my peace the very stones would cry out."

It has been the policy of the Christian church since it undertook the management of man's religions affairs to cut ofl all knowledge of spirit intercourse between the two worlds as it existed in the centuries before the Christian era. The church authorities did not overlook the importance of this spirit intercourse, hence they retained it within their own preseribed circle, and still continue it through mediumistic chammels, disguising it under the title of "eommunion of saints," that they may more easily maintain their power over their subjects. Sucereding in this, all their energies were bent upon holding them to forms and eeremonies commeted with the worship of mythical characters. Not only this, but the teaching. of theathen mythology in a modified form have been brought forward and st:mped with the insiguia of the potentates of the chureh, and made to appear as a direct inspiration from the divine mind.

It is this ontrage upon humanity that these spirit prophets ant sages of ohd have combined to overthrow, thereby establishing universal liberty and a highway of progress mobstructed by the power of a time-serving and self-enstituted priesthood. They entered into the great work with an earnestness and determination which betokens success to the cause of rescning humanity from the dark condition into which it hats been led. Mankind has a matural tendeney to multiply roligions rites and ceromonies such as excite fear and imagination; it maturally dreads the unknown and unfathomable future. In these traits priesteraft finds its opportunity; therefore every means is employed to eneourage them. Let us glance for a moment over the world and behold the evils which have followed the nations that have hindly accepted the teachings invented by priesteraft. The clergy have framed the chureh machinery inancient as well as in modern times, which as it turns canses the people to move aromud in the treadmill of religious forms and ceremonies. Through these they are made shaves to the priesthood-abject shaves where ignorance prevails, and mental shaves even among the most intelligent clasans. Then think of the tortures of the Juggernant, ats in India, as wetl ats tortures of sarions other kimds in other eommtrise, to appease the vengeanee of an angry (iod-the eruel sacrifices of the ('rusades, the Massaere on st. Bartholonew's Day, the tortures of the Inquisition, of Calvin and the martyre. On every hand is foum the tail of priestly persecution-the hmman mind enslawed. Priesteraft hats been the curse of the world. In its path hatpy nations are huriod, and the fane of Nature dremelocl in the home and tears of innocent people. All this on the basis of the fiendish maxim: "The end justifies the means." But why enlarge further here upon this terrible picture; history abounds with the details of this painful theme. The reason it does not affect the public mind more at present is because time gently covers human folly with its mantle, hence as the centuries roll by, what occurred in the past affects us only as a troubled dream.

Why is Christianity so revered by the people of to-day? Certainly not because they realize that its teachings are true, as they are accepted without question. . The answer is, becanse it has been clothed with an apparel entirely foreign to its true character. A false sacredness has been thrown around its mythical teachings by priesteraft. The sympathy and imagination of the devotee have been drawn upon by depieting the sufferings of an innocent victim, who in reality never existed, until they have become an actuality in the mind. If Christianity was stripped of this superficial covering, now made attractive by all the embellishments that intelleet and eloquence can devise, it would present an image which would at onee be recognized as a relic of heathen mythology. From generation to generation and century to century, we have been tanght to ignore reason, and accept blindly the absurd doctrines that even the religious teachers themselves cannot explain. Fortunately, however, they are being explained in this generation from a source and in a manner that cannot be refuted. Why do we find the masses more intelligent to-day than in former centuries? Surely not by reason of this legacy of heathenism. Education is the principal factor in the production of this marked change. To illustrate, we refer our readers to those countries where Christianity has predominated for centuries without education, or with only such as would not interfere with its man-made religion. They will find that in the proportion the church power has been absolute, ignorance, misery and bloodshed has prevailed. Then glance over ourown country, with its free school system, free institutions and government, with entire separation of Church and State, and where Christianity rests on its merits, with no compulsory power to enforce submission to its dictates as of old, and very marked results will be seen for the better. Christianity and the church have followed the march of civilization instead of leading it, while the ministry have hugged their precious delusions to their hearts and forced as far as possible their religious teachings upon the people. Notwithstanding these potent facts the clergy claim and would lave us believe that all real progress and civilization itself is the product of Christianity. The priestly and ministerial forces of the Christian elureh by enforeing its heathen doctrines place themselves squarely across the line of progress, and with an assumed anthority eommand the people to obey their religious mandates. In doing this they are required to ignore reason, the soul's true guide. As well might the mariner cast his compass into the sea and expeet to arrive safely in port.

The law of evolution loolding good in the mental as well as the physical, man should progress in his religious as well as in all other natural faculties. In view of this, it was not only natural, but in the line of evolution, that he should have entertained crude religious ideas and worshiped the sun and stars before he could conceive of higher objects of devotion. In the past, men of superior minds and spiritual attainments were also worshiped as Gods, or as being teachers sent from God, for man intuitively reveres and worships that which is above or superior to him. The great error of the present time is committed in attempting to confine the progressive tendency of religions evolution within the preseribed limits of the erude religious theories of the past; thus foisting upon the more progressive and enlightened nations of the earth the eflete ideas gathered from the primeval religions. The religions of to-day are nothing more than a modified form of the systems of idolatry and religions ceremonies that prevailed when the race was in its infancy. These barren religious ideas portrayed the wanderings of the human mind while battling up throngh the dark ages, when the intelleet was struggling for suprenacy over the :minal in man.
Startling evidence of the conscions necessity of religions evolution was made manifest by one of the leading exponents of Christianity, in a leetmre, January, 1892, the tone of which is so near in aceord with vews herein expressod, we feed emstrained to make the following quotations from his remarkable uttrances: "Evolution has giern us a new phitosop'ty, a new biology, a new so iology, a uow astronomy, a new !ge.dogy. It will not finish its work until it has giern us a new theologn! ! The time hus come for all religious teuchers to reoognize the dvetrine of erolution." "Theology mus! apply the law of eco!ution to spiritual as well as material phenomena." "It has been said that Christianity is unchanging. I hold that it is a progressive and changeful religion, and that its creeds should be better in the nineteenth than in the sixteenth century." "The force which we call Christianity is a force resident in humanity. Only the application of the law of evolution to the problems of religion will ever so.ve them." "Christianity is a civilized paganism, and will always remain so until the paganism in man's nature is eradicated. We find much paganism in Christianity-in its creeds, practices, and ceremonies." "If we are Christian evolutionists we shall not go back to the Westminster Confession, or to the Thirty-nine Articies, or to the Nicene Creed, or to Peter's Confession, or to any creed of the New Testament. We shall not go back to the fourth century for our ideas of the Church of the future. We shall not be surprised to find errors and imperfections in the Bible." "Truth is not in a book. Truth is in the heart and the mind, and the book only communicates it from one mind to another." "Evolution and redemption are only two words for the same thing; or, in other words, redemption is evolution in the spiritual realm." The people may indeed take courage when the prominent teachers of Cliristianity not only admit the possibility, but the necessity of religious evolution. The dawn of light must be near to those who have remained so long under the shadow of modified paganism.

In contemplation of this vast subject with the religious mists of ages dissipated, and "Antiquity Unveiled" before us, the mind is shocked as the theological mysteries and fraudulent proceedings of the promoters of Christianity are exposed. Their mysteries and false religion have liung over mankind as a dark pall for many centuries. When we realize what a stupendous system of deception has been practiced upon the unsuspecting generations of the past we start back in astonishment. When these crimes against humanity were set in motion by a few selfish, ambitious minds, they could not have realized what gigantic proportions their creation would assume in the following centuries. It may occur to the reader, in view of these late unfoldments, what an unfortunate position the chureh is placed in by its great efforts to proselyte and convert the heathen to the very ereeds and dogmas which were plagiarized from the religions of their aneestors many centuries ago Can we wonder at their indignation when the Christian missionaries go among them, or that they treat them with cruelty when they persist in forcing upon them these doctrines?

The same spirit which inspired the reign of terror in the past in the effort to cause man to aceppt teachings that his reason repudiated is still extant, and manifests as much and ventures as far ats public opinion and the present intelligence of the masses will permit. To the publie school and the printing press we must look for the retlemption of the race, and not to the theologieal dogmas which have eome down to us through the mists of oriental ages. We feel sure that many in both worlds will receive light from the pages of this work to guide them out of the shadowy wilderness, made more dark by mythical gods. These are survombled with an almost impenetrable tangle of creeds and dogmas-a legacy handed down to us throngh the medium of priesteraft, eflectually blocking the way of the soul's progress in this primary school of life. "Truth is mighty and will prevail." Though shrouded in centuries of darkness, it is destined to shine forth as the beacon light to direct all the ehildren of men into the tields of endess happiness and progress.

As a preliminary to some closing remarks we quote an extract from the communication of Zorotster as follows: "In publishing these communications in your book, at the elose of your volume, I wish this train of information set forth and the fact impressed upon the reader, that these spirits are not working for applanse but for the grood of hamanity. I want it further moderstood that these spirits 1 hatve brought to you have been eompelled by my powser to tell the truth. We also desire that it shall be stated that we are not seeking to gain helievers in any doetrim, all we a-k is that what has been diselosed herein be examined in order that the trath may be known."

We coincide with the views of spirit Zorosater. We are ant trying to gain converts to any dectrine or religions belief, hatwing long since sede the folly of sothing. The truth only is ourehief concern in this conncetion and it that is bronght tolight We shall feel repaid a thousat-fold for our ctlorts in its lehalf.

Our work of eompiline is timi-hod. lefore eloning, however, we wish to say in our own behalt that the tak has been a very be borne in mian hy any who may fiel hepored to criticise.

In compiling this work we were obliged to take the matter as we found it in the columns of a weekly journal, which accounts for many passages in the comments bearing marks of the haste in construction which frequently attends the cditing of matter for a newspaper. The most critical reader, however, cannot, fail to note the great labor and research that must have been expended in order to bring them to their present condition. It was the intention of Mr. Roberts to carefully revise these comments, before publishing the work in book form. This we did not feel at liberty to do.

The conmunications, as the reader has already been informed, are given verbatim. Some readers may criticise their style and language as not being up to the standard that would be expected from such spirit minds. It should be remembered that many of them were unfamiliar with the English language while on earth, and all of them were obliged to deliver their statements through a very illiterate medium instead of a scholar and linguist, which will account for many objections which may be raised. It seems to have been their design to speak in terms that the common mind could comprehend, evidently for the purpose of bringing out the truth in a plain and simple form. To the critical mind there may also be apparent contradictions in the spelling of names of persons and things which sounded differently when articulated by spirits who were not familiar with the English language. The spirit testimony was recorded as it was voiced through the medium, as nearly correct as was possible with rapid writing. By this process some trivial mistakes were liable to occur which could not well be corrected, as repetition of the spirit's testimony was impossible after he had left control of the medium. We think however, in all cases the meaning the spirit intended to convey is clear.

We have not taken up this task for the purpose of pecuniary gain but with all that honesty and sincerity of purpose which could prompt the mind in the interests of truth. If such noted personages as Zoroaster, Apollonius, and others could labor for centuries to bring these truths to light, we certainly can appropriate some time to co-operate with them in a cause of such vast importance to all. These intelligences from the great beyond are obliged to depend upon human instrumentalities and co-operation in orter to bring to the attention of the world any truth or knowledge they have to impart. Our brother, Mr.

Roberts, fell by the wayside under the weight of years and excessive mental labor in this work. After such extended efforts on the part of spirit and mortal, we could not see a canse fail upon which rested the common interests of mankind, withont an effort in its behalf. In taking up this task, our sole objeet lats been to complete the work commenced by this band of spirits and left minimished through the decease of Mr. Roberts.

The reader eannot fatl to realize that we question the origin of the doctrines and teachings of Christianity and even of Cluristianity itself. In fact, the more bonest and conscientions among the clergy begin to question these ancient dogmas themselves, as they see them erambling before the gaze of an enlightened people.

The Christian reader will naturally exclaim, "If I relinquish my hold upon the Christian religion, what have I upon which to depend?" We answer tritur. Upon this basis yon will prove to yourself either in this or the life beyond that to work out your own salvation is human destiny, ever progressing from the lower to the higher eondition in the moral as well as the spiritual nature. This may he termed "Spiritual evelution." We know full well that there are good and trae people in the chureh, and in so fir as they are sincere and truly believe in what they profess they have our denpest sympathy, knowing as we do that they are better than their ereeds and dogmas. It is their moral qualities and innate goodness that the world feels and respeets, and not the doetrines in which they telieve.

The caustic criticism of the press is to expected, especially when subsidized to the interests of Christianity, for peenniary reasons. The Christian devotee will doubthess be horror-stricken at these revelations. The materialist will ridieule, while the indiftirent will pass them hy moticed, and though this work may not generally be understood and appreciated at first, we are sure the time will come when this volume will prove a light to those secking for truth.

A- we take leate of our readers we sineerely ragret that it had not fallen to the lot of one more competent to fultill the takk we are about to close. The sulgeret is of great import and transeondent interst to the work, and while we regret that the work coubld not have been befter aceomplishem, we are ghad to hase heon the hamble instrment to atid in bringing these great revelations before the world in this form.- (omplate.

ANTIQUITY UNVEILED. - Christianity proved to be of heathen origin in a long series of communications from ancient spirits concerning the religious history of mankind.
This volume contains a wonderful treasury of knowledge and explains how the life and teachings of Apollonius of Tyana were appropriated, upon which to construct Christianity, the name of Jesus being used in place of Apollonius to hide the truth.

It proves that all religions originated in sun worship.
It shows that Christianity and Paganism are identical.
It lays bare the system of deception practiced by the founders of Christianity.

Jesus Christ proved to be a mythical character.
It is the book of the Nineteenth Century.
625 pages, iliustrated, well bound in cloth and gilt. Price $$ \mathrm{r} .50$. Postage 12 cents.

CHRISTIANITY A FICTION. By Dr. J. H. Mendenhall.
An inspirational poem showing the true origin and mythical character of the Christian Saviour, and the fictitious nature of many of the most eminent heroes and heroines of Biblical fame. These lines not only vividly portray the mythical character of Christianity, but show conclusively the astrological and astronomical nature of all religions, ancient and modern. In its descriptive lines, we read how the ancient people of the earth gathered their religious symbols and the names of their gods from the sun and stars. The explanatory notes given in connection with the poem, are of great value in defining many things in heathen mythology, bearing upon the religions of mankind, that have heretofore been shrouded in mystery. The late Mr. J. M. Roberts, editor of Mind and Matter wrote the following estimate of the value of this poem :
"The remarkable metrical analysis of the astrological and astronomical origin and nature of all religions versed in this poem, we regard as a most important contribution to the already large accumulations of facts which prove that Christianity is a fiction of the most stupendous proportions; we also regard it as displaying a conversancy with the so called sacred mysteries of old, that invest it with the highest value."

A correspondent from St. Louis writes: "All who have read of the Bible gods and heroes have been mystified. No intelligent mind could accept these tales except as legends and allegories. The poem Christianity a Ficrion explains the enigmas, showing them to be symbols drawn from the heavenly bodies and that gods and man-gods were named after the sun and stars. Its lines clearly portray that the religions of the world had their origin among the stars, and were transferred to Earth by the seers and sages of old, and through heathen mythology handed down to us. This valuable and suggestive poem explains the hidden religious mysteries of long ago. Every one should read it."

Christianity a Fiction is printed on fine heavy paper and neatly bound. Price 50 cents; postage 2 cents.

EDITH BRAMLEY'S VISION.-A thrilling appeal to all who are interested in learning how the great forces of the Roman Catholic Church are seeking to control all movements pertaining to human progresthat are in opposition to their dogmatic religious teachings.

[^0]:    * Many of these spirit witnesbes could not deliver their textimony in the order arranged by the spirit guides of the mediuns, for the reason that conditions were unfavorable.

[^1]:    *This condition of affairs, in relation to opposing spirits in the interests of Christianity, may seem very strange to those who have not had experience in that direction, but the truth of it has been demonstrated to an extent which renders doubt impossible It must be self-evident to our readers that the millions of defenders of Christianity, who have passed to spirit life, would not permit an attempt to be made to elucidate the falsity of their religious teachings without making a most strenuous effort to prevent it. We refer more especially to the leaters in the cause of Christianity, whose power over the people it affects.

[^2]:    "In some respects Antiquity Unveiled is one of the most remarkable works of the present century. Whatever may have been the the real inspiration of the work, the evidence it presents is directly in the line of Mr. Liltie's greatest work, the author of which eertainly cannot be charged with a belief in or sympathy with the theories of Modern Sipiritualism. It is also strietly in harmony with the conclusions of many learned, thoughtfulmen, who havegiven Church Christianity thorough :and muprejudiced study in the light of the latest historical disooveries and translation of the philosophical books of the Fast. Inshort, the convietions reached by Mr. Lillie, Baron Harden Hickey and others, through what are considered the legitimate ehamels of scientifie rescarch, are fully corroborated hy the amthor of Antiquty Unveilen, who can hardly be aecused of borrowing his ideas from the anthors referred to. This is a singular fact in itself, and while it eannot be taken as condmave evidenee of the correctuess of the Spiritualistic thorios, it gives the work at claim to eareful eonsideration which it might not utherwise possess."

After acquiring all I could learn from the teachings of that philosopher, I went to Antioch, and from there to Jerusalem. On account

[^5]:    "I GREET YOU, SIR:-I will, in giving this communication, speak very slowly, because I want every sentence I utter to tell on behalf of truth. I will begin by saying that the great mistake of modern times is, the supposition that Buddhism is an offshoot from Bralimanism, and that Buddhism stands in the same relation to Brahnanism that Christianity does to Judaism. It is true that Guatama Buddha was an Indian prince, and also a Brahman, but he was not a reformer of Brahmanisn. Buddha, according to his history, which was extant in my day, was born in the Nepaul mountains, about five hundred and fifty years before my time ; and he began to teach a system of spiritual nniversalism, while Brahmanism was essentially a Trinitarian religion. And he further held that, as no man brought anything into the world, and could take nothing out of it, that if people endeavored at all to live a pure life, they reached the sphere or heaven of rest suited to their individual natures and conditions-all of which doctrines you will plainly see in Modern Spiritualism; whilst the Brabman's doctrine was that of caste and of the elect, both in this world and in the next. But all religions are subject to leeches in the persons of priests ; and these priests, by their mistaken zeal and cupidity in regard to this world's goods, corrupt and defile all religions. Buddha's teachings, in their earliest form, did not constitute a religion. They constituted merely a moral philosophy. It was becanse those teachings had been corrupted by the Buddhist priesthood, that I endeavored, about B. C. 250 , to purge Buddhism of its false teachings and in some senses of its itlolatrous proceedings. It was for that purpose that I convened the Council of Asoka, a name by which I have been known ; but it was the name of the place, and not of the man. The only place, in extant works, in which my name is mentioned, is in the writings of Abel Remusat. My right name is Ardilua Babekra, but in the book to which I refer, the name is given as Ardelos Babeker. I will now speak

I became deeply interested in what he showed to me in writings that were then extant. But owing to the fanaticisms of my countrymen who were Mohanmedans, I was obliged to disguise my real views through life. In reality $[$ was a follower of Aristotleand $A$ pollonius of 'lyana. There were two Apollonian systems; one that passed toward the East, and the other toward the West. The Western system passed through the hands of Potamon, Ammonins Sacens, Plotinus and other men of that school. It was a strange position that I oceupied-an Eelectic philosopher in a Mohammedan country. But my school was private. Our investigations had to be carried on very much as your investigations of Spiritualism are carried on now, in private apartments of our own.

[^8]:    "I GREET YOU :- In this work in which we are both engaged, you doing your part and I mine, I have now to show you that we do not wish to set Apollonius up as a god or christ ; and the spirit I am abont to introduce to you, will show you that his ctain for special consideration was the fearless advocacy and mantenance of his ideas. The epirit who is about to take control of the medium will give you the particulars conceming the doings of himself and Apollonius. He was opposed by Apollonius, and can tell you about him, as well as about himself. Yon can ask him any questions you desire to have answered, because I haveconcentrated a very strong force around the medium, and I think we can sustain the spirit until you have done with questioning him."

    Here Aronomar yichled the control to the spirit, and the following astonishing communication was given :
    "I salute you, sir :- In the time of Clandius Cresar, I was at Rome, engaged in propagating the Gymnosophic ideas in relation to the Indian Christos in contradistinction to the ideas of Apollonius of Tyama, in relation to him. He taught the reformed Buddhist doctrines concerning him, while I taught the Brahmanical doctrines. The difference between the two doetrines were simply, that according to Apollonins's way of teaching, mankind were to depend mainly, or solely, upon Christos as their saviour; in my way of teaching, Christos could only be their Saviour provided their good works and deeds accompanied a belief in him. My idea was the same as that of genuine Christianity, forlay, in relation to salsation. Apollonins tatught the doctrines of Universalism. In crder to

The worst part of my punishment results from the fact that I knew I was helping to uphold a frand, for I had read the works relating to both the Christos of the East and the Hesins of the West, and so did all the popes who lived from eight humded untilny tine. 'Thegreater part of those works that I read were written in Italian, and I recerved them from Venice, and not from Ronte. The ('atholieism of spirit life differs considerably from that among mortals, in the following particulars: The most rabid ('atholies we have in thespirit life are those wholived on earth between the eirhth and fonmeenth centuries.
