

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

Being a description of the After-life purporting to be communicated by the late F. W. H. Myers through
GERALDINE CUMMINS

Foreword by SIR OLIVER LODGE, F.R.S., D.Sc.

With evidence of the survival of human personality

by
E. B. GIBBES

LONDON
IVOR NICHOLSON & WATSON, LTD.
44 ESSEX STREET, W.C.2
1933

First published October 1932
Reprinted April 1933

Printed in England at
The Westminster Press
411a Harrow Road
London, W.9

CONTENTS

FOREWORD, by Sir Oliver Lodge	page 7
INTRODUCTION, by E. B. Gibbes	17

PART I

	Comment	29
Chap. I	Why?	30
II	The Chart of Existence	33
III	The Plane of Illusion	35
IV	Consciousness	50
V	The Plane of Colour (the World of Eidos)	54
VI	The Group-soul	62
VII	The Plane of Flame	67
VIII	The Plane of White Light	71
IX	Out Yonder, Timelessness	72
X	The Universe	74
XI	From the World of Eidos	77
XII	The Incident of Death	78
XIII	The Evolution of the Psyche	91

PART II

xiv	Free Will	97
xv	Memory	99
xvi	The Great Memory	105

CONTENTS

PART II (continued)

Chap. XVII	Attention	page 107
XVIII	The Subliminal Self	109
XIX	Sleep	115
XX	Telepathy	120
XXI	The Interpenetration of Thought between the Two Worlds	123
XXII	Happiness	129
XXIII	God is Greater than Love	132

PART III

A Record of some Cross-references between Mrs. Osborne Leonard and Miss Geraldine Cummins	135
---	-----

SUMMARY	157
---------	-----

APPENDICES (F. W. H. M.)

I	On the Writing of the Cleophas Scripts	175
II	The Psychic's Light	180
III	A Sitting from "the Other Side"	183
IV	Difficulty of Communicating Earth Memories	185
V	Animal Survival	189

INDEX	193
-------	-----

FOREWORD
by
SIR OLIVER LODGE

"A civilisation which resigns itself wholly to materialism lives upon and consumes its moral capital, and is incapable of renewing it . . . unless psychical research can discover facts incompatible with materialism, materialism will continue to spread. No other power can stop it, both revealed religion and metaphysical philosophy are equally helpless before the advancing tide."—PROFESSOR MCDUGALL.

FOREWORD

MISS GERALDINE CUMMINS is a fairly well-known amateur trance-writer; that is, one who through withdrawal of consciousness is controlled so as to write on matters outside his or her own knowledge. My first experience of this kind of writing was obtained when I made a study of Mrs. Piper's script and acted as "the experimenter in charge," as narrated in Proceedings S.P.R., Vol. XXIII, 1909, especially pages 131-134. The experimenter in charge in the case of Miss Cummins is her friend Miss Gibbes, with whom she lives when she comes over from Ireland to this country. One of the controls who frequently uses Miss Cummins's hand recently purported to summon my friend F. W. H. Myers, so that he might give information of a specially exalted character. F. W. H. Myers was not known in the flesh to either of the ladies concerned, but he then contributed a considerable amount of script, which seemed to have some value.

Accordingly Miss Gibbes wrote to me to know if I would read some of the script and see whether I thought it reasonable to attribute the substance of the writing to this source. On examination I decided that it was in many respects characteristic of F. W. H. Myers. The account he gives of the group-soul, for instance, is very much in accord with what he taught or discussed with me when he was here. So are the kinds of remark which he makes on the subjects of the subliminal self and reincarnation: they too are sufficiently consistent with his views formed when here. And in general, though some of the things said are puzzling or even superficially discomposing, and though, as he admits, they may not be absolutely correct, yet they are worthy of his intelligence, and if properly understood are instructive.

FOREWORD

To clinch matters, I took an opportunity, when having a private sitting recently with Mrs. Osborne Leonard, to ask my old friend Myers, who was in touch with me through Raymond, whether he knew anything about Miss Cummins's writing, and whether he adhered to the things he was represented as saying in her script. His reply was to the effect that he had communicated through her, and that in a general way he had managed to get through what he wanted; though he admitted it was difficult, and he couldn't be sure that it was always exact, but still on the whole he was willing to pass it as fairly representing what he had intended to say.

In particular I asked the intelligence purporting to be Myers whether or in what sense, when speaking about the different spheres or planes or states characteristic of the After-life, he really meant to speak of the third, or what is sometimes known as Summerland, as "the Plane of Illusion." I know that its inhabitants say it is extraordinarily like the earth, that they have flowers and trees and houses, and can get anything they want by merely wishing for it, which seemed rather strange, but I was not prepared to think of it as a world of illusion wherein all such objects of sense were illusory.

In his reply, conveyed mainly through Raymond, I gathered that these mundane things were felt to be natural and homely by those who had recently gone over, and so were permitted as a temporary environment, much as our physical surroundings down here are temporary and not really what they seem. Sir Arthur Eddington has emphasised this scientific view about our ordinary surroundings, pointing out that, say, a table that feels solid and substantial and continuous is really a multitude of whirling electrons with great spaces between them, and that when we stand on the floor we are bombarded upwards and supported by a great multitude of little blows delivered by the atoms beneath our feet. None of this is apparent to the ordinary person. Scientifically matter can be interpreted in this fashion, but for the ordinary purposes of life we interpret it in a more customary way—a way which we have grown used to, and which is the way it may be said to appeal to our coarse-grained sense-organs. This faculty of interpretation has become part of ourselves, and so we carry it with us, and are liable to interpret other things after a similar homely fashion, so that, wherever we find ourselves, we are liable to interpret our surroundings in an ordinary human way: thus there is no great shock or violent transition in passing over, and we can continue to preserve our feeling of identity. We carry with us, in fact, not only our memory, character, and affection, but our powers of interpretation also. Hence our surroundings will still appear of a terrestrial kind; and whatever element of illusion there is about our perception of objects down here, that same kind of illusion persists into the next state, so long as it may be necessary for our comfort. It is evident that the denizens of the third plane do not consider their perceptions as illusory, any more than we do here. Only to a denizen of some higher state do ordinary objects, both there and here, appear evanescent and shadowy, somewhat after the hackneyed but instructive Platonic image of the cave and the prisoners and the shadows. We are not transported to the full blaze of reality all at once.

FOREWORD

The accounts which Myers goes on to give of the fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh states are remarkable, but I see no reason to dissent from the view that they are the kind of ideas which Frederic W. H. Myers may by this time have been able to form. I asked him whether I should write an introduction to the book and he assented.

It will only be fair if I give an extract from my record of this Leonard sitting, wherein I noted down, as nearly as possible verbatim, what was said at the time. The utterances towards the end of the extract were hasty and short, as the power was beginning to get weak. Raymond did most of the talking for Myers, whom he affectionately calls "Uncle Fred."

FOREWORD

[Extract from the record of a sitting which O. J. L. alone had with Mrs. Osborne Leonard in Kent on the 11th of March, 1932, near the end of a two-hour sitting and after much family and personal conversation.]

O. J. L. Raymond, Myers is thought to have been talking through Miss Cummins, and says your plane is a plane of illusion. Is that all right? Is it he talking?

Raymond. Yes, he has been talking through that person. I want to talk to you on that subject. Uncle Fred is here, and will stop me if I say wrong. I'm on the line at the moment. Father, we're obliged to create conditions, and what you might call things, on our plane. They've only got a temporary life. They are illusions, something to the same extent as a materialisation is an illusion. On your side you have something material for the time being. It's something natural in appearance, in feel, apparently in every way, it appeals to the senses of this body (touching me, O. J. L.). On our side we are bound to create certain things, houses, clothes, partially for the time being, in order to make a satisfactory harmonious and suitable setting for the soul to live in and work in. And they become a medium of expression. So is your home, your study, everything. You're so used to it, you will find yourself more easily able to work under similar conditions. It's one of the necessary illusions of our life.

O. J. L. Then you live in a world of illusion?

Raymond. So do you, father; in the right sense of the word you do too. We live in what you might call an extension of the illusory world in which you live. The outer rim of it. We are in touch with a world of reality because we are in the outer rim of the world of illusion. We're more sure of the world of reality than you are. Father, the spirit universe is the world of reality. Spirit and mind both belong to the world of reality. Everything else, that is, external things, are in a sense necessary for a time, but superfluous and only temporary in existence as far as the world of reality goes—which is external and indestructible. Spirit and mind belong to that world. The world of ether is only created by the power of mind. We are not entirely free from your world of matter, we are more independent of it, but are still concerned with it.

FOREWORD

O. J. L. You've got something physical in your world?

Raymond. Yes, father, physical. Uncle Fred has always maintained that we have.

O. J. L. Would you call it etheric?

Raymond. Yes, it's a difficult word. The ether world has been explored so little. There are so many worlds within worlds within the world of ether. But you see, father, mind is operative in the world.

O. J. L. Always operating in that world, I believe.

Raymond. It is, always. And it can create the illusion of anything that is necessary to its development, to the development, let us say, of the soul. We mustn't forget the soul. The soul is us, you, the essential you. Father, the soul is the you that makes mistakes, that kicks over the traces, that loves, that hates, that does good, and can do evil. The spirit cannot be touched by anything evil. No, but the soul needs a certain setting and surrounding and vehicle of expression. And mind creates them accordingly. So, father, that much misunderstood word "illusion" must be applied to our world and to yours.

O. J. L. Mind has created the things about here, then?

Raymond. Yes, father, not your mind, but the great Architect's mind. We are all architects in degree. The greatest Architect of all created the world of matter, just as He created the world of ether. Spirit and ether always (together).

O. J. L. The ether is necessary for the spirit?

Raymond. I don't see how you can have one without the other. I've just asked Uncle Fred. He says you can't separate them. He has just said that the world of ether belongs to the world of reality. But of course it permeates and is part of your world too. Where there is life there is ether.

FOREWORD

O. J. L. It's the physical vehicle of life.

Raymond. Yes, those are Uncle Fred's words—the physical vehicle of life. If we could make people understand these few simple facts we should help them to realise that when death comes, which the majority of people fear, they will not be plunged into some unknown, strange, terrifying—terrifying because so strange—condition. They say: It won't be in the world that I know. No, but it will be in a world of similar conditions. About Nature, father. Nature belongs to the physical world. We have flowers and trees on our side. Nature still impresses our world. On your side Nature is limited to the plane of instinct: on our side to the plane of intelligence. On the earth we see people living according to instinct. We live because of our mind, our intelligence, not blind instinct. We would say that the vegetable world and the lower animal world live by instinct only. When you touch a form of life that lives by intelligence, that rules and governs its actions by mind, it belongs to, and has fitted itself for, survival in the individual sense.

O. J. L. Acquired an individuality.

Raymond. Yes, father, there's the dividing line. We're not condemning instinct, we are only relegating it to its proper place, in the big scheme of things. Many things happen on your plane, good things, through instinct. We have enjoyed talking to you to-day, father. Uncle Fred too, though he has been talking through me.

O. J. L. I'm going to see Miss Cummins to-day. You spoke of 5th, 6th, and 7th planes.

F. W. H. M. Yes, quite right. In the main I stand by it. It's all that is possible under the circumstances.

FOREWORD

O. J. L. They want me to write a Foreword.

F. W. H. M. Yes, that's all right.

(After this came domestic farewells, and the sitting terminated.)

Thus fortified by independent testimony, I feel at liberty to commend this book as a serious attempt to give information about a future life and the stages through which earnest people may expect to pass. There are lower stages for people less developed or less well intentioned; but those are not here referred to. It must be very difficult for a communicator to give intelligible information about other states of being, in brief form, to folk with no experience of them, and there may be some errors of interpretation, but I believe this to be a genuine attempt to convey approximately true ideas, through an amanuensis of reasonable education,<sup>r</sup> characterised by ready willingness for devoted service, and of transparent honesty.

April, 1932

OLIVER J. LODGE

INTRODUCTION

by

E. B. GIBBES

INTRODUCTION

THE contents of this book purport to be communicated from another life by the late F. W. H. Myers, English poet and essayist, who became classical lecturer at Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1865. In 1882, together with Professor Henry Sidgwick, Sir William Barrett and Edmund Gurney, he founded the Society for Psychical Research. He died in January 1901.

By means of what is called "automatic writing" these communications have been taken down at three different periods (1924-25, 1927 and 1931) by Miss Geraldine Cummins, who, in the language of psychical research, is styled the "automatist." The alleged "communicator," however (F. W. H. Myers), describes her as the "interpreter." This is an apt term, seeing that, in cases of mental mediumship, the "inner mind" appears to be necessary for the interpretation of messages and writings which purport to emanate from the unseen world.

Miss Cummins is the daughter of the late Professor Ashley Cummins, M.D., of Cork and has lived most of her life in Ireland. She has played hockey for Ireland and is an enthusiastic tennis player. She was educated privately, has had no training in science, psychology or metaphysics, being principally interested in the drama and in modern literature. Her six brothers served in the Great War and two were killed in action. She is not a professional medium. She is the author of an Irish peasant novel, The Land They Loved (published by Macmillan), and, in collaboration, of two Irish folk plays produced at the Abbey Theatre, Dublin. She is also a writer of psychic works.<sup>1</sup> We became acquainted in 1923, and at the end of that year commenced a series of experiments in automatism.

<sup>1</sup> See Appendix I, p. 175.

INTRODUCTION

Automatic writing has been proved to be a genuine phenomenon in which the hand of the scribe writes matter of which he or she at times may have no conscious knowledge. By this means the late Sir Edward Marshall Hall, K.C., became convinced of survival. Referring to automatic writing he states: "I was and am convinced that there is an existence beyond so-called death, and that there are means of communication between the so-called dead and ourselves. . . ."

It is possible that certain people are "tuned in" to higher vibrations and that, through such vibrations, the so-called dead may communicate again with the world they have left. I purposely refer to the departed as the "so-called dead" because it is my emphatic belief—after nine years of close study and investigation of the phenomenon of automatic writing—that the dead are not extinct and that, given certain conditions, they are able to speak with those still on earth.

Miss Cummins is a very remarkable automatist. Many messages indicating the continued survival of human consciousness after bodily death have been written by her. Not only have facts been given which were unknown to any present at the time of writing, and subsequently verified, but she has also reproduced the characteristic manner of speech and the personality of a number of deceased persons whom she has never met. The said personalities were recognised by relatives when the writings were forwarded to them. Brief examples of some of these cases are given in a summary attached to this volume.

The method employed by Miss Cummins in order to obtain the writings which comprise this book is as follows. She sits at a table, covers her eyes with her left hand and concentrates on "stillness." She describes the result of such concentration in these words:

INTRODUCTION

" . . . and soon I am in a condition of half-sleep, a kind of dream-state that yet, in its peculiar way, has more illumination than one's waking state. I have at times distinctly the sensation of a dreamer who has no conscious creative control over the ideas that are being formulated in words. I am a mere listener, and through my stillness and passivity I lend my aid to the stranger who is speaking. It is hard to put such a psychological condition into words. I have the consciousness that my brain is being used by a stranger all the time. It is just as if an endless telegram is being tapped out on it. The great speed of the writing suggests actual dictation, as though some already prepared essay were being read out to my brain. But something more than the faculty of amanuensis seems to be required. Whatever intelligence is operating, it may use my subconscious mind as an interpreter, may communicate in the language of thoughts or images and not of words. . . ."

Her right hand resting on a block of foolscap paper, Miss Cummins soon falls into this light trance or dream-state. When in this condition her hand begins to write. As a rule her "control" makes a few introductory remarks and announces that another entity is waiting to speak. Owing to the speed at which the writing comes and to the fact that Miss Cummins is in this light trance, it is necessary that someone should sit beside her in order to remove each sheet of paper as it is filled up. Her hand is then quickly lifted by me to the top of the new page thus exposed, and the writing continues without a break.

In this manner Miss Cummins and I began these experiments. I have witnessed the production by her on paper of about fifty different personalities, all claiming to be "dead," all differing in character and style. Therefore, in view of the fact that Miss Cummins has reproduced the psychological idiosyncrasies of people whom she has never met, and in view of certain cross-references between her and Mrs. Osborne Leonard, it does not seem unreasonable to attribute the automatic writings published in this volume to the source from which they claim to come.

INTRODUCTION

At the time of the first indication of his presence Myers was entirely unknown to us personally and we knew very little about him. His death occurred thirty years ago, when, in fact, the automatist was a small child. We did not endeavour to get in touch with him, neither had we read his famous book entitled Human Personality and its Survival of Bodily Death, nor any of his other works.

It may be of interest to describe the manner in which the following communications actually appeared on the paper. The writing of the name "Frederic Myers" would be followed by a "good morning" or "good evening, ladies." A little friendly conversation would then take place and the request be made that the final sentences of the last essay be read aloud. The heading to the next chapter would then appear on the paper, a line being firmly drawn underneath it. The contents of each chapter in question quickly followed.

In nearly every instance these communications were written without a break, and with no premeditation on the part of the automatist. Neither Miss Cummins nor I had any idea as to what would be written until the material appeared on the paper. If the "psychic power" gave out, the writing would break off in the middle or at the end of a phrase. The actual writing is much larger than Miss Cummins's normal calligraphy and there is no division between the words. Generally speaking, the paragraphing and punctuation have to be inserted later.

The entity who purports to have communicated the following pages frequently expressed dissatisfaction with the English language; showing irritation at the lack of suitable words with which to convey his meaning—to express conditions transcending those found in the earthly state.

INTRODUCTION

Alleged communicators from the Unseen frequently assert that the language used by them is conveyed by thought. It is, therefore, the thought that is thrown, as it were, into the automatist's or interpreter's inner mind, and there it finds the words that express it.

In this connection the following quotation may be of interest. It was written, without hesitation, by the alleged Myers on the second occasion on which he purported to write through Miss Cummins.

"The inner mind is very difficult to deal with from this side. We impress it with our message. We never impress the brain of the medium directly. That is out of the question. But the inner mind receives our message and sends it on to the brain. The brain is a mere mechanism. The inner mind is like soft wax, it receives our thoughts, their whole content, but it must produce the words that clothe it. That is what makes cross-correspondence so very difficult. We may succeed in sending the thought through, but the actual words depend largely on the inner mind's content, on what words will frame the thought. If I am to send half a sentence through one medium and half through another I can only send the same thought with the suggestion that a part of it will come through one medium and a part through another. . . . We communicate an impression through the inner mind of the medium. It receives the impression in a curious way. It has to contribute to the body of the message, we furnish the spirit of it. In other words, we send the thoughts and the words usually in which they must be framed, but the actual letters or spelling of the words are drawn from the medium's memory. Sometimes we only send the thoughts and the medium's unconscious mind clothes them in words."

The above explanation would seem to indicate that communications purporting to come from the unseen world must be in the form of a collaboration between communicator and medium. Obviously, therefore, the quality of the messages would depend partly on the culture and vocabulary of the mind and brain through which the alleged entity is working. It naturally follows that, if a human mind of limited ability is employed by a cultured communicator, the said communicator would experience difficulty in conveying to earth the exact translation of his thoughts.

INTRODUCTION

This explanation, doubtless, accounts for the confusion of ideas and trivial remarks which are sometimes reputed to reach us from another world and which fail to convince the public of the reality of the survival of human personality.

Reference has already been made to the speed at which the writing comes. A few further details concerning its production may be of interest. Take, as an example, the somewhat abstruse essay on the Subliminal Self. The first 1,410 words of this essay were written in approximately one hour and five minutes. As a contrast, Miss Cummins's normal compositions are laboriously put together, seven or eight hours sometimes having been devoted to the writing of, perhaps, 800 words.

The sittings for automatic writing occupy about one and a half hours, but on some occasions have extended to two hours or more. As many as 2,600 words have been communicated without a break in the space of two hours. On another occasion, in the presence of five witnesses, Miss Cummins wrote 2,000 words in an hour and a quarter. This applies to historical material written by her.

Descriptions of the life after death have been given through various channels, but these are frequently condemned as being too material in character and bearing too great a resemblance to the earth existence. They are, therefore, unacceptable to a large public. The matter placed in the forefront of this book also relates to the life Beyond, but it appears to explain much that, to many, has hitherto sounded trivial and unattractive. The alleged communicator particularly states that he is not infallible—that he endeavours to write of “the truth as I perceive it.”

INTRODUCTION

It has been claimed that communication between discarnate beings and human beings has been disproved because “all alleged pronouncements have been either ridiculous or non-significant.”

I submit that the contents of this book are neither ridiculous, non-significant, nor trivial. For instance, the analysis of the Subliminal Self (page 109) surely refutes the claim that only matter of a trivial character is communicated, for, as Mr. Stanley De Brath, M.Inst.,C.E. (editor of Psychic Science), writes of it: “It would be hard to find more important matter—the constitution of man in the Beyond.” And again: “When the physics of the ether are better known, much of what is said will, no doubt, fall into sequence. There is no reason to suppose that the functions of the psychic are less complicated than those of the physical.” Further, in reference to Part I, he states: “I think I can recognise truth when I see it, and even though I may not agree with every detail on a first reading in a metaphysical system, which, nevertheless, is a system and a logical one.”

Communications which give an intelligent explanation of the conditions of our next state of being, such as the account which follows, must surely attract the attention of thinking people. Commenting again on the book, Mr. De Brath writes: “You have introduced me to a mode of realisation which I have long desired to meet. It is something quite original and even stupendous. . . . These communications are extraordinarily interesting. Whether they are from F. W. H. Myers must remain an open question for the present, but if they are, they will be recognised as almost the first attempt to trace the age-long progression of the human soul in the Unseen. . . .”

INTRODUCTION

Further information as to how these writings originated and an account of the cross-references between Miss Cummins and Mrs. Osborne Leonard are printed at the end of this book. These would, at least, seem to show that the same entity purports to speak through two different channels.

E. B. GIBBES

PART I
EXISTENCE AFTER DEATH

The short Comment, Parts I and II, which follow, together with the Appendices, purport to be communicated by the late F. W. H. Myers, through Geraldine Cummins.

COMMENT

IN writing of that mystery men call "The Other World," "Existence after Death," or "Our Father's many Mansions," I am, you will understand, limited by what I know, limited by my own experiences. So I can only endeavour to write of the truth as I perceive it. You must pardon me if I seem to blaspheme, or if I seem merely to be treading the path others have trod.

We are working, I hope, for the same end. We both feel, perhaps, that if we can add anything to the sum of human knowledge, as regards man's spiritual nature, our pains and our labours are worth while. You and I may not have the power to bring about sensational happenings, but at least we can, in our small way, help in the furtherance of the knowledge that there are vast horizons quite beyond our perception, stretching limitless into the infinite.

These stray remarks of mine are the expression of my own "other world" knowledge. I can only retail to you the truth as I know it. Many and varied are the conditions that prevail when the soul comes alive in this world, or in one of the states to which we are subject after death. I use advisedly the term "comes alive" in connection with the soul. For the soul seems to us as dead when it lives in its body of clay as we would seem to the average agnostic. It is certainly true that many of us shades almost doubt the existence of a soul in the bodies of certain men and women of the low animal kind, who live, in the physical sense, on earth at the present moment.

I

WHY?

THE RIDDLE OF ETERNITY

MANY wonderful speculations have been made about the whence and whither of man's destiny. Few have directly attempted to discuss why man was created, why the material universe spins apparently for ever and ever through space, its elements ever continuing, nothing lost, seemingly immortal, changing but in its imagery.

"A vast purposeless machine." Such was the epitaph the scientist of the last century wrote of it, and in so doing he declared the faith of the thinking men of his age, namely, that there is no why. There is, therefore, no fulfilment. Matter is the only reality. And this terror, a purposeless mechanical drama of motion and life, must, with ghastly monotony, play on for ever and ever.

Now, truth is far from us all, but it was immeasurably remote from those who came to this melancholy conclusion. However, if mind is accepted as existing apart from matter, there is a very definite prospect of discovering the reason for the strange fantasy of existence.

First, it is necessary to define it, so far as is possible, in one sentence. If the contents of the following phrases be taken as a working hypothesis, then we may find an answer to the riddle of eternity.

Shadow and Substance:

Matter, Soul and Spirit:

Manifestation and its Source:

God, the Unifying Principle:

Disintegration in Matter, in ever finer and finer Substance:

Unification again in Spirit.

WHY?

The spirit, or deeper mind, which nourishes a number of journeying souls with its light is a thought of God. This thought is individualised, but not in the human sense. It is individual in that it has a certain apartness from its Creator, the apartness of the created thing from the One who gave it life.

Now, the mystic speaks of the god within him. This is an entirely erroneous statement. The term God means the Supreme Mind, the Idea behind all life, the Whole in terms of pure thought, a Whole within which is cradled the Alpha and Omega of existence as a mental concept. Every act, every thought, every fact in the history of the Universes, every part of them, is contained within that Whole. Therein is the original concept of all. So it is preposterous presumption on the part of the mystic to call his own spirit God.

These myriad thoughts, or spirits, begotten by the Mighty Idea, differ from one another; many of them, nearly all, before they control and manifest themselves in matter, are crude, innocent and incomplete embryos. They must gather to themselves numberless experiences, manifest and express themselves in uncountable forms before they attain to completion, before they may know perfect wisdom, true reality. Once these are acquired, they may take on divine attributes and pass out Yonder, entering within the Supreme Idea and becoming part of the Whole.

The reason, therefore, for the universe and for all appearances, for even the little mundane joys and sorrows of human beings, is to be found in the term "evolution of spirit," the need for complete fulfilment which can be obtained through limitation, through the expression of the spirit in form. For only through that expression can spirit grow, developing from the embryo, only through manifestation in appearance can spirit obtain fulfilment. For this purpose were we born, for this purpose we enter and pass through myriad worlds or states, and always the material universe is growing, expanding, giving fuller and fuller expression to mind. The purpose of existence may be summed up in a phrase—the evolution of mind in matter that varies in degree and kind—so that mind develops through manifestation, and in an ever-expanding universe ever increases in power and gains thereby the true conception of reality. The myriad thoughts of God, those spirits which inform with life all material forms, are the lowest manifestation of God, and must thus learn to become God-like—to become an effective part of the Whole.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

II

THE CHART OF EXISTENCE

THE following statement is an index, or rather an itinerary, of the journey of the soul.

- (1) The Plane of Matter.
- (2) Hades or the Intermediate State.
- (3) The Plane of Illusion.
- (4) The Plane of Colour.
- (5) The Plane of Flame.
- (6) The Plane of Light.
- (7) Out Yonder, Timelessness.

Between each plane or new chapter in experience there is existence in Hades or in an intermediate state, when the soul reviews his past experiences and makes his choice, deciding whether he will go up or down the ladder of consciousness.

(1) The Plane of Matter consists of all experiences in physical form, in matter as known to man. These experiences are not confined to the earth life. There are experiences of a similar character in numerous starry regions. Sometimes the body vibrates faster or slower than the body of man in such starry places. But the term "physical" expresses its character and nature.

(3) The Plane of Illusion is the dream period connected with life passed on the Plane of Matter.

(4) The Plane of Colour. Existence in this state is not governed by the senses. It is more directly controlled by mind. It is still an existence in form, and therefore an existence in substance. That substance is a very rarefied matter. It might be called an air of matter. The Plane of Colour is within the terrestrial zone or within the corresponding starry zone wherein the soul previously had experience of a physical existence.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

(5) The Plane of Pure Flame. In this state the soul becomes aware of the pattern his spirit is weaving in the tapestry of eternity and realises all the emotional life of those souls fed by the same spirit.

(6) The Plane of Pure Light. Within its borders the soul obtains an intellectual conception of all the previous existences within its group-soul. Further, he realises all emotional life within the body of the world or earth-soul.

(7) Lastly, the Seventh Plane. The spirit and its various souls are now fused and pass into the Supreme Mind, the Imagination of God, wherein resides the conception of the Whole, of universe after universe, of all states of existence, of past, present and future, of all that has been and all that shall be. Herein is continuous and complete consciousness, the true reality.

III

THE PLANE OF ILLUSION

THE THIRD PLANE

BREVITY can be the soul of wit, but it can also be the soul of error. It will be necessary for me to create a small dictionary if I am to give you my views, in a few pages, on that interesting topic, eternal life.

I shall first define the multitude of the newly dead, those tumultuous waves of life that break, daily and nightly, like the tides upon our shores. Birth and death are two words which contain the same meaning. How strangely they sound to me now; for I have lived so long in a state in which words are obsolete, in which thoughts reign supreme.

Roughly, the newly dead may be divided into three categories:

Spirit-man,
Soul-man,
Animal-man.

There are many sub-divisions of these particular states of grace or disgrace. But bear these three terms in your mind, for to whichever one you belong so will your future be determined.

Now I would classify conditions or surroundings.

Firstly, there is the earth life.

Secondly, the transition period known as Hades.

Thirdly, existence within an image or reflection of the earth known to some as "Summer-land"; I prefer to call it "Illusion-land."

Fourthly, all that life which is appavelled in form as it is known to man, all those lives in ever finer and finer bodies which are connected with the material universe.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

Fifthly, a mental or intellectual existence within the group-soul in which you envisage and experience—but only as an act of emotional thought—all the stages of existence that belong to those various souls fed by the same spirit. I have spoken before of the group-soul and defined it for you.<sup>1</sup>

Sixthly, a conscious existence within and without time; the measure of time being all those lives that are passed in form. It embraces existence in the most tenuous shapes; it embraces experience in matter whatever its character or degree.

Lastly comes the seventh state, the merging of the journeying soul with its spirit. When you attain to that beatitude you pass into the Beyond, you realise the meaning of the word immortality. Matter is transcended, cast off. You enter into timelessness and become one with the Idea behind all life, one with God, one with that portion of His Spirit which has been connected with you in all the planes of existence.

The Memory-world

The earth is as a reflection in a mirror; it is real only through the image that is cast upon the glass. The earth, therefore, depends for its recognition upon the nature of individual vision and perception. All men, who are in the clay, are unreal, so they have power to perceive only in a certain manner that strange illusion, the swiftly rotating globe. When they shuffle off the heavy body, when in a finer shape they take flight from it, they frequently do not realise the fundamental unreality of earth. They hunger for the dream which was home to them. Then these souls knock and the door is opened, they enter into a dream that, in its main particulars, resembles the earth. But now this dream is memory and, for a time, they live within it. All those activities that made up their previous life are re-enacted, that is, if such is their will. They can, at any time, if they choose, escape from the coil of earth memories, from what I might term the "swaddling clothes" of the life after death. For all these souls are as babies, unaware of the real world of which they are inhabitants, no more cognisant than are infants of the vast whirl of life about them, of its astonishing intellectual activities, of its achievements.

<sup>1</sup> See p. 62.

THE PLANE OF ILLUSION

Such infant-souls frequently communicate with earth when they are in a state almost analogous to the earth sleep. They will then endeavour to describe their memory-world. It is almost precisely similar to the one you inhabit at the moment. Some call this memory-dream "Summerland"—quite an apt term. For the soul, freed from the limitations of the flesh, has far greater mental powers, and can adapt the memory-world to his taste. He does so unconsciously, instinctively choosing the old pleasures, but closing the door to the old pains. He lives for a while in this beatific, infantile state. But, like the baby, he inhabits only a dream, and has no knowledge and hardly any perception of the greater life in which he is now planted. Of course the hour comes when his spiritual perceptions awaken, when he seeks to escape from the memory-dream, when, in short, he realises his own increased intellectual powers, and, above all, his capacity for living on a finer plane of being. Then he passes from the State of Illusion and enters upon an existence which few communicating intelligences have ever attempted to describe to man.

However, to those of us who have journeyed beyond the memory-world this alleged region or heaven of the departed is false because it is unreal, a reflection of a reflection, a tenuous dream that fades before spiritual knowledge. When the crossing of death is achieved many are happy in that state of grace; but theirs is the vegetative happiness, the unintelligent content of an infant who knows little or nothing of the world in which he or she lives.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

Hades

Hades is a term which corresponds with the astral plane. Immediately on the dissolution of the body there comes a brief period of seeming disintegration, a temporary dislocation of those parts which make you one. Pray do not conjure up unpleasant associations with Hades. I died in Italy, a land I loved, and I was very weary at the time of my passing. For me Hades was a place of rest, a place of half-lights and drowsy peace. As a man wins strength from a long deep sleep, so did I gather that spiritual and intellectual force I needed during the time I abode in Hades. According to his nature and make-up every traveller from the earth is affected in a different or varying manner by this place or state on the frontiers of two lives, on the borders of two worlds.

Illusion

During the period passed on the astral plane the soul sloughs the astral shape and enters into the etheric body within which he resides as long as he chooses to dwell in Illusion-land, that reflection of reflections, that dream of the earth-personality. Peace and content prevail so long as he remains within its borders. But in time such peace becomes wearisome; for no actual progress, either up or down, can be made in that delightful region of dream. Picture it for a moment: you live in surroundings that resemble those you knew on earth. You are, it is true, freed from money worries, freed from the need to earn your daily bread. Your etheric body is nourished by light which is not the light of the sun. It is possessed also of energy and life. It does not suffer pain, nor is it subjected to struggle of any kind. It is indeed as if you lived in a pond, and soon you weary of the limitations of that calm unruffled sheet of water. You yearn for struggle, effort, ecstasy; you long for wide horizons. The call of the road has come to you again. In short, you are anxious to make further progress either up or down.

THE PLANE OF ILLUSION

Animal-man

If you are what I term Animal-man, in other words, if you belong to the primitive type, you will make a corresponding choice. You will desire to go downwards, that is to say, you will choose to be an inhabitant of matter as dense as the physical body you discarded when you passed into Hades. Usually you return to earth. But I am told that Animal-man occasionally prefers to enter a material existence on some other planet in which matter may be even denser than any earthly substance.

Human beings exist on certain planets, but their material bodies are subject to a different time from the earth time, and travel, therefore, within the rhythm of that time. Consequently their physical parts are either vibrating slower or faster than yours and may not be discovered through the medium of man's senses. I call them human beings because the conditions of their lives, the construction of their physical parts, are similar to those of man.

The Resting Place on the Road

I stated that no progress was made in Illusion-land. This is, in a sense, incorrect. No seeming progress is made. Illusion-land is the dream of the earth-personality. For a short while after his entry into that state the soul is at peace, warring desires are quiescent; but they wake again at the time the dream is beginning to break. In fact, when these furies are roused they themselves break and shatter the dream. For in Illusion-land Animal-man can satisfy his desire for pleasure without any difficulty, without struggle; so, swiftly, there comes satiety through the full satisfaction of his paltry appetites: then there arises discontent, and he longs for a new life; he is thoroughly bored by this resting place on the road. Thereby progress is made, inasmuch as he has come to realise the limitations of the earth-dream. On the other hand Animal-man has very little awareness of the joys of the soul. Usually, at this point, when longing for a new life with all his being, he desires that it shall be one within the flesh, that it shall be another episode passed in the grosser bodily forms. So he goes downwards; but he descends in order to rise. His experiences in the dream of the earth-personality rouse the higher part of the self in him. During his next incarnation he will probably either enter into the state of the Soul-man, or he will at least be less of an animal, and will seek an existence and follow a life of a higher order than the one he led when previously lodged in the flesh.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

"Summer-land," then, is the dream of the earth-personality, so it should not be regarded as either Heaven, Hades or Hell, but merely as a resting place on the road when the soul dreams back, and thereby summarises the emotional and subconscious life of his earth existence. But he dreams back in order that he may be able to go forward once more on his journey.

The Prison of the Senses

Your present surroundings are, in a sense, your creation, in that you are mentally so unemancipated; your nerves and senses convey to you your perception of life. If you were capable of focusing your ego or daily consciousness within your deeper mind, if in short you trained yourself to pass into a thought compound from which form, as the senses convey it, were absent, the material world would vanish. You would no longer perceive it. If you were sufficiently developed spiritually you might be able to escape form altogether, though actually this is not possible until you have had numberless further experiences.

THE PLANE OF ILLUSION

However, on higher planes of being your intellectual power is so greatly increased that you can control form; you learn how to draw life to it. As a sculptor takes up the formless clay and shapes it, so does your mind draw life and light to it and shape your own surroundings according to your vision. In the first state your vision is limited by your earth experiences and memories, and so you create your own version of the appearances you knew on earth. Understand, however, that in Illusion-land you do not consciously create your surroundings through an act of thought. Your emotional desires, your deeper mind manufacture these without your being actually aware of the process. For still you are the individualised soul caught within the limitations of your earthly self and caught also within the fine etheric body which now is yours.

The Man in the Street

Men and women, as they climb the ladder of their life in the flesh, are, as it were, suspended between earth and sky. They are between two mysteries, that of birth and that of death. They fear to look downwards, they fear to look upwards: as a rule all their attention must be given to each rung of the ladder on which they seek to balance themselves. So, even the most skilful among them is limited by his position upon the ladder, and finds it difficult, almost impossible, to consider what comes before and what comes after the little space of years that makes up his life in the world.

The same parallel may be applied to myriads of souls who have passed through the gates of death. Life for them is certainly on a far loftier and grander scale; but still they dwell between mysteries. They are balanced between God and their own world of appearances. So, many of the dead who endeavour to send messages descriptive of their surroundings and of their life to living human beings, can only describe the actual appearance of things about them, can only write from out of that limited personality which they brought with them from the earth.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

If I chose to describe the After-life from the point of view of Tom Jones who had been a lawyer's clerk and had lived in London all his life, his mind and spirit bounded by his law-work and his own little personality, I should very probably give you what would appear to be a trite and materialistic description of the Hereafter. For, as a rule, Tom Jones is only able to communicate with human beings while he is still in a very crude state of mental and spiritual development. Usually he is like a blind puppy after birth. He writes of what he cannot see. When perception comes to him, when sight is bestowed on the eyes of his soul, he does not, so far as I am aware, look towards the earth again. He feels his own mental impecuniosity. He has not the power to express in words, which he must borrow from earth minds, the amazing character of life after death. So he is silenced, and no echo comes from behind the dark curtain which will even faintly convey the music of that other life, yield to man the strange rhythm of a universe within a universe, a life within a life, and all lying, as ships in harbour, within the infinite imagination of God.

Tom Jones represents many millions. He is the conventional worker, quite efficient in all matters connected with his particular profession, but limited by it and by his life of small amusements, by the lack of leisure which prevents him from ever considering the ultimate purpose of life. As a horse driven in harness and blinkers, so has he been driven from the cradle to the grave. His life has not been eventful. It contains a measure of sorrow and a measure of laughter. What becomes therefore of this symbol of the crowd? What becomes of Tom Jones, Mrs. Jones and Miss Jones? It is far better for us in this study of "the Many Mansions" of the Hereafter, first to consider the future of the ordinary man and woman. Are they transformed in the twinkling of an eye? Do they become great seers highly developed both spiritually and mentally? Or do they follow out the law of evolution as it is known by men?

THE PLANE OF ILLUSION

We must first answer these two questions. If Tom Jones is changed by death into a great seer or into a lofty, spiritual genius he is no longer Tom Jones. He cannot, therefore, be said to survive death. However, I can assure you that he follows the slow path of evolution; he is born into the next world with all his limitations, with all his narrowness of outlook, with his affections and his dislikes. He is, in short, thoroughly human. For such a man a marvellous and lofty existence of a spiritual character is scarcely possible. He is still mentally in swaddling clothes. Therefore he must be treated as the baby is treated in your world. He must be carefully looked after and protected; he must meet with no sudden or violent change. For he is not of a sufficient spiritual and mental ripeness to be able to bear it.

He belongs to a great multitude who must, as we describe it over here, dream back in order that they may later on go forward, proceed towards the ultimate goal, towards a state of spiritual vision when they may enter the timeless state, may pass out of the great cosmic picture and enter within the mind of their Creator. But there is much to be done by Tom Jones before he can, if ever, attain to that condition. He is still an infant needing playthings like a child, and, therefore, requiring about him a world of appearances.

The more advanced souls—whom the Church may call the angels and whom I call “the Wise”—can exist in tenuous forms within vast vistas of space and lead within it an extraordinarily vivid existence. Tom Jones is quite incapable of facing such a strange and strenuous state of being.

So we, who are a little more advanced than he, watch by the gates of death, and we lead him and his comrades, after certain preparatory stages, to the dream which he will inhabit, living still, according to his belief, in earth time. He bears within him the capacity for recalling the whole of his earth life. Familiar surroundings are his desperate need. He does not want a jewelled city, or some monstrous vision of infinity. He craves only for the homely landscape he used to know. He will not find it here in the concrete sense, but he will find, if he so desires it, the illusion.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

The Wise, as I call them, can draw from their memory and from the great super-conscious memory of the earth the images of houses and streets, of country as known to these wayfarers so recently come from the earth. The Wise Spirits think, and thereby make a creation which becomes visible to Tom Jones. So, in those early days after his passing, he is not cast into emptiness, into a void. After he has slept in dimness, rested as in a chrysalis while his etheric body is being shaped, he emerges as the butterfly, coming into a world formed for him by the concentrated thought of men of great spiritual discernment, for whom I can find no better term than "the Wise" or "the Creative Life."

An image is drawn from the young soul's memories. It is of a country considerably more beautiful than—but not unlike the country Tom Jones and his comrades have known. This country is not real. It is a dream. But to Tom Jones it is as real as was his office desk and the alarm-clock that roused him in the morning, summoning him to his work. It undoubtedly presents a more attractive appearance than his little grey London world, but in essentials it is of the same familiar stuff from which his England is made.

Within this dream he will find his friends, some of his own people, and those two or three persons he really loved; that is, if they have already gone before him, been summoned by death at an earlier time.

Let us picture Tom Jones in surroundings that seem to him material and therefore do not, in any way, arouse his natural timidity. He is a simple soul and has led a clean, respectable life, satisfying his desires in moderation. He has spent seventy years of his life in a certain environment on earth. Why should he, after parting with his physical body, again occupy surroundings with which he is to a great extent familiar? Why should he face another existence of a similar character to the last?

THE PLANE OF ILLUSION

In reality it is not similar. It is the period of a great and slow change for Tom Jones. His life in the world, dating, say, from 1850 to 1920, corresponds with the germinating life of a seed in the earth. When its first fresh green shoot presses upwards towards the light, then he reaches the end of his term of years, he is passing into another life. The gardener, who has charge of him and of many other little plants, places them, if they are suitable, in a forcing-house when, as I have described to you, he introduces them to a world of form similar in character to the one they had previously known.

These wayfarers find themselves in familiar surroundings amongst people of a similar mentality. But they find very frequently that their actual needs are not the same. They are not condemned to some mechanically performed task for the greater part of their existence, because their etheric bodies do not require food. They draw what is essential for their well-being from that all-pervading invisible substance. On earth men are slaves of the physical body, and, therefore, slaves of darkness. In the Hereafter we may truly say that, given certain conditions, they become servants of the light. As food, or its equivalent money, is not the principal object of their existence, they have at last time to serve the light. That is to say, they are in a position in which they can reflect at their leisure and begin to reach towards this strange and marvellous life of the mind.

Now, with the dissolution of the body, at least one desperate, clamorous need has gone from us. We do not any longer require the three or four meals a day that were of such excessive importance. One primal factor in earth-life is eliminated, and that is hunger. But we have other factors of great importance to consider. After hunger there comes sex. Has this need also disappeared with the dissolution of the body?

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

I think my answer, in most cases, should be in the negative. It has not disappeared, but it is changed. And here we come face to face with one of the great problems in this period of transition.

First, it is necessary to attempt some definition of sexual desire. It takes many forms. Some of these are perverted. Let us deal with these perversions, and, in so doing, we shall deal with what man calls sin. Cruelty perhaps cuts more deeply into human nature than any other sex perversion. It marks the human soul, scars it more deeply than almost any other vice. The cruel man who has changed his natural craving for affection into a longing to give pain to others necessarily finds himself in a world here where he cannot satisfy this craving. He has pandered to it during all his earth life, and so it has become an integral part of his soul. In the new life he has not, for a time at any rate, the power to inflict pain on anything living. This means for him, with his greatly increased mental powers, a very terrible distress. He goes about seeking whom he may devour and finding naught. The misery of such an unsatisfied state is largely of a mental character. What use to him is a world of light and beauty while still this foul earth longing is unsatisfied? For him there is only one release from his mental purgatory. And until he can find a way of escape, until there is an actual change in his cold, cruel soul, he will remain in outer darkness.

Christ spoke of that outer darkness as being the lot of sinners. By this saying, He did not imply darkness as we know it—the darkness recognised by the senses. He meant a darkness of soul, a mental distress, a perverted desire that cannot find its satisfaction.

THE PLANE OF ILLUSION

Eventually this individual faces up to his own misery, to his vice; and then the great change comes. He is put in touch with a portion of the Great Memory which Saint John has called the Book of Life. He becomes aware of all the emotions roused in his victims by his acts. He enters into a small part of the mighty Super-conscious Memory of his generation which hovers near the earth. No pain, no anguish he has caused has perished. All has been registered, has a kind of existence that makes him sensible of it once he has drifted into touch with the web of memory that clothed his life and the lives of those who came into contact with him on earth.

The history of the cruel man in the Hereafter would make a book which I am not permitted to write. I can only briefly add that his soul or mind becomes gradually purified through his identification with the sufferings of his victims.

I have wandered away from the theme of Tom Jones in order to explain what is meant by Christ's statement that the sinner is cast into outer darkness where there is wailing and gnashing of teeth. It is a mental darkness into which the sinner plunges. His own perverted nature has drawn this suffering upon himself. He had free will, the power to choose, and, temporarily at any rate, he chose this mental darkness in the After-life.

Now, I would give you one more illustration. Let us take for example a man, or if you prefer a woman, who has led an immoral life on earth. Here I may borrow a saying of the angel who appeared to John: "He that is filthy let him be filthy still."<sup>1</sup> The man who comes into this life with a sex history of a reprehensible kind finds, when he enters the Kingdom of the Mind, that as his mental perceptions are sharpened so his predominant earth-desire is intensified, his mental power being far more considerable. He can, at will, summon to himself those who will gratify this over-developed side of his nature. Others of his kind gravitate to him. And for a time these beings live in a sex paradise. But bear in mind that it is created by their mental "make-up," by their memories and their imagination. They yearn still for gross sensation, not for that finer life, which is the spirit of sexual love, that perfect comradeship without the gratification of the grosser feelings.

<sup>1</sup> Rev. xxii. 11.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

They obtain it in abundance, and there follows a horrible satiety. They come to loathe what they can obtain in excess and with ease; and then they find it extraordinarily difficult to escape from those who share these pleasures with them.

A murderer comes into the category of such men. It is a sudden perverted desire, a lust for cruelty which leads in many cases to murder.

The last state in Illusion-land might be termed the purgatorial state. Obviously, it is extremely painful to realise the misery of satiety, to come to the end of the desired pleasure. There is one greater misfortune than the non-realisation of the heart's desire and that is its realisation. For human beings are so constituted that they are almost invariably seeking a false dream, a will-o'-the-wisp, and no permanent content can be obtained from its fulfilment.

It is, of course, impossible to lay down an iron rule. Each individual has a different experience from each other individual in Hades and Illusion-land. In certain cases he is not given the power to satisfy his desires. Actually, he is able to do so, but his own ego does not permit such satisfaction. For instance, the cold, selfish man in Illusion-land may dwell in darkness, for it is not within the power of his ego to throw itself outwards, to express itself in the fantasy of fulfilled desires. He is thrown more than ever inwards by the shock of death. He believes he has lost everything. He loses contact with all except the sense of his own thinking existence. A nightmare of darkness prevails for a time, prevails as long as he lives within his morbid sense of loss, within his desire, which is merely to gratify himself without any regard for others. There may be only night in Illusion-land for the abnormally selfish man.

THE PLANE OF ILLUSION

Nearly every soul lives for a time in the state of illusion. The large majority of human beings when they die are dominated by the conception that substance is reality, that their particular experience of substance is the only reality. They are not prepared for an immediate and complete change of outlook. They passionately yearn for familiar though idealised surroundings. Their will to live is merely to live, therefore, in the past. So they enter that dream I call Illusion-land. For instance, Tom Jones, who represents the unthinking man in the street, will desire a glorified brick villa in a glorified Brighton. So he finds himself the proud possessor of that twentieth-century atrocity. He naturally gravitates towards his acquaintances, all those who were of a like mind. On earth he longed for a superior brand of cigar. He can have the experience ad nauseam of smoking this brand. He wanted to play golf, so he plays golf. But he is merely dreaming all the time or, rather, living within the fantasy created by his strongest desires on earth.

After a while this life of pleasure ceases to amuse and content him. Then he begins to think and long for the unknown, long for a new life. He is at last prepared to make the leap in evolution and this cloudy dream vanishes.

IV

CONSCIOUSNESS

ON earth, consciousness is as a lamp lit each morning when you awake. If you are in poor health the flame is feeble, if you are young and vigorous it flares up and seems to illumine every material object you meet, giving to it a special and happy radiance.

This daily consciousness changes according to age and experience. From one year's end to another it is never quite the same, though you probably do not note its almost imperceptible changes. It is that ego which sees, touches, hears and is aware of the material world. I have already told you that this fantastic being is a sum in arithmetic.<sup>1</sup> After death, and after the stages of transition, that ego, with certain important changes, again resumes its sway. Whatever the plane of being on which it arrives, it is now a traveller who has discarded flesh and blood, the brain cells, the intricate web of nerves which brought unity and proportion to the body, which made of it a kingdom. In its place there is a very much finer shape. This shape also possesses its means of communication, and these feed the whole of the new structure of very subtle atoms. It is, as I have said, a structure so rare, so fine, that it is invisible to the mortal eye and eludes the finest instruments of the scientists.

Actual pain is not felt in any of the parts of this new image of man. For now the mind has greatly increased powers, and though it may experience pain in the spiritual or intellectual sense, such is its control of its outward form on the Fourth plane that form cannot hurt it in the earthly or physical sense, cannot be, in any respect, the ruler. You will realise, therefore, that an important advance has been made. On the other hand, man has still to pass through many states, to experience numberless lives before he draws near the goal, before he reaches out towards fulfilment.

<sup>1</sup> See "The Subliminal Self," p. 109.

CONSCIOUSNESS

Roughly, I may define his consciousness for the greater part of his journey as follows: spirit or higher soul, ego or lower soul, and their manifestation in form.

There is also what I might call the ladder of consciousness. The rungs of the ladder represent the various lives from the alleged beginning to the final achievement; though it is not for me to say that there is any finality. When I use the term "final" I merely desire to indicate the limits of my vision. Now, the soul or ego is the actual self or surface awareness on each rung of the ladder; the spirit is the light from above. It illumines every rung of the ladder, embraces the whole. The soul, then, is merely the part, the gatherer of experience, the representative of the mystery behind all life.

The higher the ego climbs on the ladder of consciousness, the nearer it draws to other kindred souls. I have already told you that there may be a thousand, a hundred, or merely twenty souls all fed by one spirit.<sup>1</sup> Their consciousness of comrade-souls increases on the higher levels of existence. In time they are able to enter into the other souls' memories, perceive their experiences and be sensible of them as if they were theirs. Mind becomes communal in the last stages, for the spirit, the unifying principle, is tending all the time to produce greater harmony, and therefore greater unity. These various individuals are merging more and more, becoming one in experience and in mind, and thus attaining to undreamt-of levels of intellectual power.

On the lower rungs of this ladder of consciousness dwell

<sup>1</sup> See "The Group-Soul," p. 62.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

those souls who still cling to human habits of thought, to the earthly personality, to their own individual line of ideas. On earth some of them have been extremely learned. But knowledge does not make a wise man. A great Indian Yogi, a Chinese sage, a learned or holy Christian father may dwell for aeons of time within the Third and Fourth Super-terrestrial States. They are typical representatives of Soul-man, and they have his shortcomings. They cling to the line of thought which was theirs on earth, and so they remain sadly individualised in it; they are caught in its dream, and are snared in the many errors thereof. For instance the Indian Yogi and the Chinese sage may still seek only to follow the aspiration of their particular religion or philosophy, the freeing of the soul from matter, ecstatic contemplation of the universe.

They appear to gain their aspiration; but in consequence they abide merely on one of the lower rungs of the ladder. They believe that they have attained to Nirvana, that they have passed out Yonder, entered into the Mystery of God. But they have done nothing of the kind; for they are still individualised, still clinging to their blissful little dream created when they were on earth. They are living in the stagnant pond. They are progressing neither up nor down. They have no contact with the material aspect of the universe, and their state of alleged ecstatic contemplation narrows and limits experience, confines them still in the prison of their own ego.

I remarked before that when souls reached to the higher rungs of the ladder they became merged in the unifying Spirit, and might at last journey out Yonder, enter into the Mystery of God. In so doing they slough form and no longer express themselves in an outward appearance. But those spirits who pass out Yonder do not dwell in ecstatic contemplation as does the sage or the Yogi, they are, though formless, in contact with the whole of the material universe: an incredible activity of a spiritual and intellectual kind is theirs. For now they share in the timeless Mystery; now they are in the true Nirvana, in the highest Christian Heaven; they know and experience the alpha and omega of the material universe. The chronicle of all planetary life, the history of the earth from the beginning to the end are theirs. Truly they are not merely heirs, they have become inheritors, in deed and in truth, of eternal life. You are, as you climb the long ladder of consciousness, a sum in arithmetic. When you pass out Yonder you become the Whole.

CONSCIOUSNESS

The spirit, which lights up the ladder, is an individualised thought of God, a thought that may dwell within its own life, or that may still be in intense and direct contact with God when that thought contacts directly the human ego. A Spirit-man is a human being—of whom perhaps a few score have appeared on earth since time began. He differs from others in that his spirit retains that intense and direct inspiration from God when it enters into time and communicates with the incarnate man. Therefore, Spirit-man alone has expressed eternal truth, either in his life or in his words. When his physical body dies he dwells in Hades, but he does not tarry in Illusionland. Swiftly he passes up the rungs of the ladder; easily may he become one with the Father. For even while on earth he has known the Father, having drawn his inspiration from the imagination of God.

V

THE PLANE OF COLOUR

THE FOURTH PLANE

The Soul-man—The Breaking of the Image

IN Illusion-land you wear an etheric body. It is of a finer or more tenuous matter than the physical form. If you belong to the second class, if you are a Soul-man—in other words an intelligent, ethically developed soul—you will desire to go up the ladder of consciousness. The longing for a physical existence will have been burned into ashes with, however, a few exceptions.

Certain Soul-men desire to return to earth, or wish, at any rate, for some planetary existence wherein they may achieve some intellectual triumph, or wherein they may play a notable part in the strife of earthly or planetary life. These, then, become incarnate again. But the majority of Soul-men slough their etheric body and put on a shape which is a degree finer. They are then released from Illusion-land, from that nursery in which they merely lived in the old fantasy of earth.

Now, these beings wear a subtle body and they enter a world I would call Super-terrestrial; for they still abide within the ether. Ether is a bad term; but I cannot find another word to define that air or, I would rather say, fluid or emanation which is of the material universe. Pray remember that ether is the ancestor of matter as you know it. But I am wandering from my theme.

So long as Soul-man would live mainly in form, he must be content to be a Super-terrestrial being. That state contains many degrees, many vehicles of expression. They differ in the rates of vibration; the finer they are, the greater your spiritual and intellectual preceptions; the wider your grasp, the loftier your experience of that Mystery we call God—the goal of all spiritual attainment.

THE PLANE OF COLOUR

Now, in the state beyond Illusion, when you are living consciously and are sensible of your subtle body, you dwell in a world which is the original of the earth. Briefly, the earth is an ugly smudged copy of the world wherein dwells the subtle soul in its subtle body. You are doubtless aware that the copyist, when he produces his painting of a masterpiece, usually fails through being unable to convey the soul of the work in question. The measurements may be correct, colouring and line excellent, but the life is not within it; so you are left cold and aloof, you are merely stirred to a petty irritation when you perceive a copy of an old master you loved. The earth, as you know it, is this unreal thing—a copy of a masterpiece. It is a shadow with all the defects of a shadow. It is, at times, distorted and grotesque; at times, a mere dim outline. Animation is absent. The true life is not expressed in it.

Within the subtle world of which I speak you will perceive a variety of forms which are not known on earth and therefore may not be expressed in words. Yet there is a certain similarity, a correspondence between the appearances of nature and the appearances on this luminiferous plane. Flowers are there; but these are in shapes unknown to you, exquisite in colour, radiant with light. Such colours, such lights are not contained within any earthly octave, are expressed by us in thoughts and not in words. For, as I previously remarked, words are for us obsolete. However, the soul, in this plane of consciousness, must struggle and labour, know sorrow but not earth sorrow, know ecstasy but not earth ecstasy. The sorrow is of a spiritual character, the ecstasy is of a spiritual kind. These two transcend imagination, but they finally lead the soul to the borders of the Super-terrestrial region.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

A Chapter in Superlatives—The Apotheosis of Form

The soul becomes possessed of a new awareness as well as of finer perceptions when he decides to go upwards rather than downwards on the ladder of consciousness; and, therefore, he enters the Fourth plane of being.

On earth the average man's normal ego is largely controlled by the body's desires, though the spirit inspires its life and at times lights up the darkness of the human brain with luminous flashes. Still, the spirit, or what I call the deeper mind, can only faintly impress itself upon the ego. Now, in the Fourth stage the spirit is able to enter, with greater intensity, into the time measurement which I call the soul or ordinary consciousness. This soul becomes sensible of the change through his greatly increased intellectual powers. With that increased awareness there comes greater concentration. The memory of the earth life, in its details, is for the time being lost. So long as the soul dwells in form he is subject to the rhythm of the universe and, therefore, to some form of time. Conceive time and appearance as one symbol.

The soul bears with him, however, the fundamental emotional memory, or rather retains contact with it in the first stage on the Fourth plane of life. This plane of colour might be more aptly termed "The Breaking of the Image." For on this level of consciousness the soul learns how to control form, learns by myriad experiences the ghostliness of all substance. In the anterior period of his evolution he has been controlled largely by substance. Slowly the graven image is broken, slowly the ego learns so to draw from the higher soul or spirit that he can, at will, break up his form and break from all forms, all appearances about him.

Of course, each individual's experiences vary enormously. I take as my example a sensitive Soul-man who makes definite progress upwards, who does not, as do so many, journey with the undulatory motion of a sea wave, up and down, up and down, though always reaching a little higher than before.

THE PLANE OF COLOUR

Now, this sensitive Soul-man realises first of all that he has entered a world of myriad colours, lights and sounds. He is sensible of a body entirely dissimilar from the human body. As regards appearance, it can only be described as being apparently a compound of light and colours unimaginable. The shape of this form is influenced by all the ego's past acts so far as they have impressed themselves on his deeper consciousness. This coloured compound may be grotesque, bizarre in form, may be lovely beyond words, may possess strange absurdities of outline, or may transcend the loftiest dream of earthly beauty.

In this many-coloured region the form vibrates with extreme intensity, for now mind expresses itself more directly in form: so that we can hear the thoughts of other souls. At first only one at a time may break upon that hearing. But after a while we become sensible of the fact that we may hear the thoughts of several souls, each apart and distinct from the other. We dwell in a world of appearances in some respects similar to the earth. Only all this vast region of appearances is gigantic in conception, terrifying and exquisite according to the manner in which it presents itself to the Soul-man. It is far more fluidic, less apparently solid than earth surroundings.

This many-coloured world is nourished by light and life in a greater purity, vibrates at an unimaginable speed. The souls, who dwell within the first zone, realise that with increased consciousness they have gained a far greater sensitivity. A hostile Soul-man's mentality may, with a powerful projection of thought, blast and wither some part of your body of light and colour. You have to learn how to send out protecting rays. If on earth some other man or woman was your enemy and you hated one another bitterly, you will encounter this man or woman on this luminiferous plane; the old emotional memory will awaken when you meet. For love and hate draw you inevitably towards those souls who are in the pattern of your particular design which is ever shaping and reshaping in the tapestry of eternity.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

You will understand, therefore, that pain and pleasure, joy and despair are once more experienced. Again, however, they differ greatly from the earthly conception of them; they are of a finer quality, of an intellectualised character. Mightier is their inspiration, more profound the despair they arouse, inconceivable the bliss they stir within the deeps of your being.

On this luminiferous plane the struggle increases in intensity, the efforts expended are beyond the measure of earthly experience. But the results of such labour, of such intellectualised and spiritualised toil and battle also transcend the most superb emotion in the life of man. In brief, all experience is refined, heightened, intensified, and the actual zest of living is increased immeasurably.

Awareness on the Fourth Plane

The preceding remarks, outlining a more rarefied existence in the Super-terrestrial zone, must be regarded as merely a rough tracing of a very varied state of being. For instance, in that more spiritualised state there are many forms of expression. In it the soul wears several bodies, passing from one to another as he advances. These become more and more subtle indeed, the fineness of their texture cannot be grasped or understood by even a super-scientist. One law prevails, however, your soul is only aware of those beings who possess bodies vibrating with the same intensity—that is, unless he puts himself into a state analogous to that strange sleep known as hypnosis. When thus conditioned he may go back, temporarily descend a rung of the ladder and make mental contact with a soul who inhabits a denser shape. He can even descend into Hades, enter its fog and come into touch with human beings. He is thereby frequently caught in the dream of the earth-personality; and it is as if the memory of his experiences on a higher plane were temporarily anæsthetised away. So he is incapable of conveying to earth—save with rare exceptions—any interesting or remarkable information. Caught in the cocoon of earth memories, which frequently are not his own, he can merely speak of trivial material affairs. It is as if he were a drugged bee in a hive, a bee satiated with honey.

THE PLANE OF COLOUR

His awareness on the luminiferous plane has vastly increased, but usually he cannot convey a sense of it to those individuals he may endeavour to contact if he chooses once more, like Orpheus, to go down into Hell in search of the beloved. These remarks will explain why so few ever receive any spontaneous impression of the departed. Indeed, men and women are as ghosts to us, and only when they seek us with faith and with love do they obtain any convincing suggestion of ourselves, of our earth-personality. Such search is legitimate and will neither hurt nor distress the one who is summoned or sought.

Now, a human being cannot imagine a new sound, a new colour or feeling; so it is impossible for him to conceive the infinite variety of new sounds, colours and feelings experienced by us on the Fourth stage, which I have called "The Breaking of the Image."

Nearly half of the earth life is passed in sleep, that is to say, in a state of unconsciousness; and it is calculated that even when man is awake, his normal healthy self, his consciousness is broken by gaps of unconsciousness forty or fifty to a second.<sup>1</sup> In this respect he resembles a light-<sup>1</sup> An interesting corroboration of this somewhat startling calculation appears as a footnote to page 328 of E. D. Fawcett's The Individual and Reality. It is as follows: "The reference is not merely to sleep, etc. It has been calculated (by whom I cannot recall) that consciousness is broken by unconscious gaps no less than fifty times a second." E. B. G.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

house that stands upon a rocky coast on a starless night. Darkness impenetrable covers the sea; every now and then it is lit up by a ray of light which flashes across the waters, illumining their surface but feebly and momentarily. Man's consciousness appears thus to me now. In his journey up the ladder he is gradually emerging from that darkness in the sense that the light becomes brighter, more continuous. When he reaches the Fourth stage his awareness is as brilliant as an ordinary man's awareness is feeble. There are far fewer gaps of unconsciousness, for the spirit can make a surer and more consistent contact with the soul by reason of the fineness of its body and its greater subtlety, by reason of increased intellectual activity on his part. The blind puppy is beginning to open his eyes at last.

Pray examine the picture of the night sea again. It is almost continually illumined by the beacon of the lighthouse. Only at long intervals does darkness descend. Now how is it possible to convey to human beings, by the primitive, rude sounds called words, the implications that arise from this far greater awareness? For instance, the intensity of the thought processes of the emotional life seem limitless when compared with the sluggish movements of the human brain, with the crude passion that is roused in the stirring moments of earth life. Take the intellectual activity of a slug or a snail, compare it with that of a man and you will understand how different is the mental world of the soul on the Fourth plane from that of the human being.

Our conception of space differs entirely from yours. I can give you a faint glimpse of it if I use the wireless message as an illustration. I have but to concentrate my thought for what you might call a moment and I can build up a likeness of myself, send that likeness speeding across our vast world to a friend, to one, that is, in tune with me. Instantly I appear before that friend though I am remote from him; and my likeness holds speech—in thought, remember, not words—with this friend. Yet, all the time, I control it from an enormous distance; and as soon as the interview is concluded I withdraw the life of my thought from that image of myself, and it vanishes. Of course, I can only make this contact with those on my plane who are familiar with me and, therefore, are in my rhythm.

THE PLANE OF COLOUR

This trivial illustration of the power of thought to give reality to itself is mentioned here merely in order to show you how much nearer we have come to the Creative Principle. We are gradually learning how to live within and without form, learning how ghostly is the most tenuous substance. We are becoming aware of the fluid, flowing character of mind. We understand how it can control energy and life-force, those units which nourish all manifestations and appearances.

VI

THE GROUP-SOUL

THE GROUP OF PSYCHIC CONSCIOUSNESS—THE PHYSICAL BODY A GROUP OF ATOMIC CONSCIOUSNESS

THE group-soul is one and yet many. The informing spirit makes these souls one. I think I have explained to you before, that as there are certain centres in the brain, so in psychic life there are a number of souls all bound together by one spirit, depending for their nourishment on that spirit.

When I was on earth I belonged to a group-soul, but its branches and the spirit—which might be compared to the roots—were in the invisible. Now, if you would understand psychic evolution, this group-soul must be studied and understood. For instance, it explains many of the difficulties that people will assure you can be removed only by the doctrine of reincarnation. You may think my statement frivolous, but the fact that we do appear on earth to be paying for the sins of another life is, in a certain sense, true. It was our life, and yet not our life. In other words, a soul belonging to the group of which I am a part lived that previous life which built up for me the framework of my earthly life, lived it before I had passed through the gates of birth.

In this invisible world there is infinite variety of conditions. I can only speak of what I know. I do not claim to be infallible. Take the following as the axiom I would lay down for you.

Many Soul-men do not seek another earth life, but their spirit manifests itself many times on earth and it is the bond which holds together a group of souls, who, in the ascending scale of psychic evolution, act and react upon one another. So, when I talk of my spiritual forbears I do not speak of my physical ancestors, I speak of those soul-ancestors who are bound to me by one spirit. There may be contained within that spirit twenty souls, a hundred souls, a thousand souls. The number varies. It is different for each man. But what the Buddhists would call the karma I had brought with me from a previous life is, very frequently, not that of my life, but of the life of a soul that preceded me by many years on earth and left for me the pattern which made my life. I, too, wove a pattern for another of my group during my earthly career. We are all of us distinct, though we are influenced by others of our community on the various planes of being.

THE GROUP-SOUL

When your Buddhist speaks of the cycle of births, of man's continual return to earth, he utters but a half-truth. And often half a truth is more inaccurate than an entire misstatement. I shall not live again on earth, but a new soul, one who will join our group, will shortly enter into the pattern or karma I have woven for him on earth. No doubt "karma" is a word I use incorrectly here. For it is something more and something less than karma that he inherits. I am, therefore, a kingdom, and yet I am but a unit in that kingdom.

You may say to me that, for the Soul-man, one earth life is not enough. But, as we evolve here, we enter into those memories and experiences of other lives that are to be found in the existence of the souls that preceded us, and are of our group.

I do not say that this theory, which I offer you, can be laid down as a general rule. But undoubtedly it is true in so far as it is what I have learned and experienced.

Now, this speculation—as you would probably call it—is interesting when applied to genius. The souls who have preceded us on earth naturally stamp us mentally and morally. If a certain type of psyche is continually being evolved in the one group, you will find that eventually that type, if it be musical, will have a musical genius as its representative on earth. It will harvest all the tendencies in those vanished lives, and it will then have the amazing unconscious knowledge that is the property of genius.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

Here, in the After-death, we become more and more aware of this group-soul as we make progress. Eventually we enter into it and share the experiences of our brethren. You must understand, therefore, that existence for my soul—as separate and apart from my individual ego—is dual. I lived two lives, one in the world of form, and one subjective, in the community of which I am a member.

Men and women may not care to accept these statements of mine. They long either for an indestructible individuality in the Hereafter or for a kind of spiritual swoon in the life of God. You will perceive in my analysis of the group-soul that we are individuals and members of one whole. And when you come to the Fourth, and more particularly to the Fifth stage, you will realise how fine and beautiful is this brotherhood within the one being; how it deepens and intensifies existence; how it destroys the cold selfishness so necessary to an earth life, where one living creature must continually destroy another's manifestation in matter in order to maintain its physical life.

In the Fourth stage the soul becomes sensible of the group-soul, and through the awareness there arises a great change. He begins gropingly to realise the character of experience, the possibilities of mind; and in this Fourth stage if he is a Soul-man he is peculiarly liable to error. That is to say, once he becomes cognisant of the group-soul and of its many emotional and intellectual experiences he may, if a certain section of that group-soul be in a fixed mould, take upon himself its shape and remain within it for æons of time. In this connection when I write "mould"

THE GROUP-SOUL

I desire to indicate a certain special outlook. For instance, a fanatical Buddhist or a very devout Christian may be held within the groove of his earthly beliefs. For those other souls in his community are, perhaps, also held in the chains of those particular ideas. So there he may remain, making no progress, in a thought or in a memory-world which consists of the Christian or of the Buddhist dream. He is held fast in the tentacles of an octopus. This octopus is the earthly Christian or Buddhist idea of an After-life, their view of the universe as created when on earth.

Now, you will recognise that such conditions tend to inhibit progress. For it means—to use another metaphor—dwelling in an intellectual chrysalis, living in the past earthly conceptions. And it is needful that the journeying soul should come to a state in which he can at will survey them, but not be held by them, or be imprisoned in their limitations.

Spirit-man

Spirit-man is not caught in this eidolon or living ghost, in this wraith of earthly beliefs. The great masters are not thus ensnared. Christ, the Son of God, entered into Hades, but He did not abide in any of the other planes of being. Christ, being inspired directly by God, was connected with no group-soul. He passed from Hades out Yonder; for His physical body was, during His lifetime on earth, the direct expression in the clay of that Essence, the Imagination of God. Truly, Christ was a limited expression of the Whole, was in earthly life linked to the Whole. But every Christian born upon the earth is inspired by some individualised spirit. When I write "individualised" I desire to indicate that it is a thought of God; it is not, therefore, the Whole, it is not the Fount of all life.

So there are numerous fanatical Christians who, though they led lives of rectitude on earth, committed certain intellectual sins. These might be summed up in the phrase

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

“rigidity of thought,” “an outlook limited by fanaticism.” Briefly, they are wedded to a limited concept. In the Fourth stage of existence they must learn how to escape from such a prison if they are to make further progress. These remarks apply equally to Buddhists, Mahommedans, and all those other fanatical adherents of various religions or, as in the modern world, of scientific conceptions. For science tends more and more to become a religion or special outlook for many human beings.

Now, if the soul is to pass from the Fourth to the Fifth stage he must first shake off, cast from him any dogma, any special earthly outlook which has shaped his mentality, which confines it; so that his vision is limited, and his experiences are, therefore, also limited; consciousness of reality being thus withheld from him.

VII

THE PLANE OF FLAME

THE FIFTH PLANE

Birth into the Fifth Stage

THERE comes a time when the soul who dwells on the Fourth plane of life prepares for the incident of death. This death does not resemble the death of man. At this particular point in evolution the soul has perfect and absolute control of form, of his appearance, of his eidolon or living ghost. This is the last veil between him and a conception of existence without form. He must free himself before he can go up another rung of the ladder, and freedom can only come through the deliberate process called "The Breaking of the Image." It is the farewell to appearance, to form as a necessity, to colour, to feeling as a certainty, as a condition of life.

Again the soul enters into unconsciousness; and when he is born into the Fifth stage he has cast from him certain attributes that were his when he still inhabited the Image; for his soul was, in part, that Shape of Light he has now discarded.

Between each plane there is this lapse into apparent oblivion, a stilling of all processes, a great calm. It is called Hades by the ancients. Here the soul seems to pause. Slowly, however, vision returns, the traveller perceives, imaged upon the glimmering sea of eternity, all his experiences on previous planes; all the past images that make up the story of his life are spread before him. He studies them in the light of his Unifying Principle or spirit. They rouse, according to his nature, his varying desires, intellectual and emotional. He knows then that he must choose either to go forward or backwards. The spirit actually forces the choice. It has to be made according to the fullness of his experiences in the previous life. He has entire free will, but inevitably he chooses his greatest need. When at the gate of Illusion-land, the Animal-man chooses to drop back into a physical existence. When at the gate of the many-coloured world, the Soul-man sometimes chooses to drop back into the first division of this region, which, in its last divisions, is the apotheosis of form.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

However, supposing that his review of his previous lives is satisfactory, he will decide to go on to the Fifth stage, and then the great calm is broken. There arises a tempest wherein he discards his desire for existence in etherealised form, in that plane of colour. He discards then a certain part of himself which he will not lose but resume in the greater wholeness of the Sixth stage.

The Symbol of the Fifth Stage

It is necessary to describe by some symbol each chapter in the Book of Life. The term "flame" expresses the Fifth stage. For now the soul becomes emotionally whole, aware not alone of himself, but of all those other souls who are of his group. He remains himself, yet is all those other selves as well. He no longer dwells in form—as it is conceived by man—but he dwells still in what might be described as an "outline." All the past emotions, passions, intellectual modes of expression belonging to his companion souls shape this outline, an outline of emotional thought; a great fire which stirs and moves this mighty being now.

While he abides in this Fifth plane experience is manifold, is a multiplication, loses, in a sense, its apparent oneness. He lives indeed a life that seems to burn like a flame. It is a time of severe discipline, of vastly increased intellectual feeling, of great limitations, of boundless freedoms, of the glimpsing of infinite horizons. "Swoons of contemplation, agonies of dreaming," states in which all lucid thought lies fallow, states in which the intense feverish activities of all the passionate existence of his comrade souls flame through his being. He is thus all the time becoming more and more merged with the Unifying Spirit.

THE PLANE OF FLAME

A rare intensity of feeling, of joy, ecstasy, sorrow, of dark despair nourish him, feed his life. Yet, all the while, he is, in a sense, apart, aloof. He is not caught in the storm of this emotional whirlpool. He is sensible of it, yet rides above it. His attitude, however, does not resemble that of St. Simeon Stylites, who remained upon his pillar remote and aloof from the gorgeous ancient world which was playing out its drama in those Mediterranean lands of his day.

The soul, on this Fifth level of consciousness, is continuously conscious. There are now no gaps, no periods of non-existence. He revels in the emotional and intellectual life of all those comrade souls who are on the various rungs of the ladders which reach up to the One Spirit and are lighted by it. But this soul, at the climax of his existence on the plane of flame, is as an artist who lives in his masterpiece, derives from it, in all its features, in the freshness of its evolving, changing creation, that strange exultation which may, perhaps, at one rare moment, be known to a creative genius—though very faintly—while he still lives upon the earth.

This state on the Fifth plane may be imagined but not understood or conceived by a man's mind. To the traveling soul the purpose of his existence will seem to be, at last, revealed. He tastes of Heaven and yet the revelation of the last mystery still tarries, still awaits the completion of the design of which he is a part.

It is a glorious existence, despite certain sinister aspects. The Soul-man, however, may not leave it for the Sixth plane until the group-soul is complete, until those other souls, necessary to this design woven in the tapestry of eternity, have also attained to this level of consciousness. Some may still be far behind. But while in this state of being, the Soul-man becomes aware of the emotional life of all the more primitive souls who inhabit denser and denser matter and, yet, belong to his group. He becomes aware, in short, of all the parts of the great body which his spirit, or the Unifying Principle, feeds with its Light. He realises the subconscious life of the flower, the insect, the bird, the beast, all those forms which are connected with the governor of his being, that Light from Above.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

The Construction of the Group-soul

The actual construction of the group-soul must be clearly visualised. Its spirit feeds, with life and mental light, certain plants, trees, flowers, birds, insects, fish, beasts, men and women; representatives of living creatures in varying states of evolution. It inspires souls who are on various planes, various levels of consciousness in the After-death. It feeds, also, creatures on other planets. For the spirit must gather a harvest of experience in every form. Gradually these intelligences evolve and merge. The experience necessary to the spirit is completed when all the souls necessary to the design have reached this Fifth plane. Once they become sensible of their oneness and their individuality they may go forward to the Sixth plane. There is, then, a breaking of the threads, a casting away of the dross of emotional experience, a sifting and changing on the part of all these souls. They pass once more into Hades and review, in that state, all that now lies behind them.

VIII

THE PLANE OF WHITE LIGHT

THE SIXTH PLANE

Pure Reason

LIGHT, though composed of many colours, is colourless. The spirit, though composed of many souls, is above and beyond pleasurable and painful moods of the mind. It belongs, therefore, to the Sixth plane, which is suitably described by the symbol of white light.

Now, on this level of consciousness pure reason reigns supreme. Emotion and passion, as known to men, are absent. White light represents the perfect equanimity of pure thought. Such equanimity becomes the possession of the souls who enter this last rich kingdom of experience. They bear with them the wisdom of form, the incalculable secret wisdom, gathered only through limitation, harvested from numberless years, garnered from lives passed in myriad forms. Knowledge of good and evil and of what lies beyond good and evil now belongs to them. They are lords of life, for they have conquered. They are capable of living now without form, of existing as white light, as the pure thought of their Creator. They have joined the Immortals.

The purpose of the Sixth plane of being might be described as "the assimilation of the many-in-one," the unifying of all those mind-units I have called souls, within the spirit. When this aim has been achieved, the spirit which contains this strange individualised life passes out Yonder and enters into the Mystery, thereby fulfilling the final purpose, the evolution of the Supreme Mind.

1
NIRVANA
h74

IX

OUT YONDER, TIMELESSNESS

THE SEVENTH PLANE

Part of the Divine Principle

AGAIN the choice must be made. Is the soul prepared to make the great leap, prepared to pass wholly from time into timelessness, from an existence in form into formlessness? This is the most difficult of all questions to answer. Only a very few reply in the affirmative when first faced with it.

The Seventh state might be described as the "passage from form into formlessness." But pray do not misunderstand the term "formlessness." I merely wish to indicate by it an existence that has no need to express itself in a shape, however tenuous, however fine. The soul who enters that Seventh state passes into the Beyond and becomes one with God.

This merging with the Idea, with the Great Source of spirit does not imply annihilation. You still exist as an individual. You are as a wave in the sea; and you have at last entered into Reality and cast from you all the illusions of appearances. But some intangible essence has been added to your spirit through its long habitation of matter, of ether the ancestor of matter, of what the scientists call empty space, though, if they but knew it, empty space is peopled with forms of an infinite fineness and variety.

Actually, the passage from the Sixth to the Seventh state means the flight from the material universe, from that space which is a part of it. You dwell not only outside of time but outside of the universe on this last plane of being. Yet you can be and are, in one sense, within the universe. You as part of the Whole—and by the Whole I indicate God—may be likened to the sun; your rays pervade the material universe, yet your spirit remains detached from it, reigning in the great calm of eternity. To be of the universe and to be apart from it is, possibly, the final achievement, the goal of all endeavour.

OUT YONDER, TIMELESSNESS

In a few brief words I have spanned existence within æons of time, and I have endeavoured to give you a glimpse of that mystery, timelessness. When you dwell out Yonder, you, as a part of the Divine Principle in its essence, are wholly aware of the imagination of God. So you are aware of every second in time, you are aware of the whole history of the earth from Alpha to Omega. Equally all planetary existence is yours. Everything created is contained within that imagination, and you, now by reason of your immortality, know it and hold, as the earth holds a seed, the whole of life, the past, the future, all that is, all that shall be for ever and for ever.

The Beyond baffles description. It is heart-breaking even to attempt to write of it.

That Spirit-man, God the Son, expressed a great truth when He said, "Many are called and few are chosen." Only a very few pass out Yonder during the life of the earth. A certain number of souls attain to the sixth state, but remain in it or, in exceptional cases for a lofty purpose, descend again into matter. They are not strong enough to make the great leap into timelessness, they are not yet perfect.

X

THE UNIVERSE

THE Buddhist maintains that the Universe is unreal. It is unreal only so long as you are caught in its web, governed by its laws, controlled by its matter or by that invisible substance I have called an air of matter.

The term "unreal" implies falsehood, sham, humbug. The soul, when he manifests himself in form, is limited by that form. He cannot know truth because he is imprisoned in that shape. He has, during his life on those first five planes, a limited view. Like a horse, wearing blinkers, he has a very poor idea of the world about him. The essential unreality arises through this specialised view merely of a piece of the road before him. Further, the form lies in the picture of this road which it conveys to the soul. So the Buddhist is in one sense right when he claims that the Universe is unreal.

But when the sage claims that the ultimate goal is one of extinction within Nirvana—extinction though not annihilation—he is using dangerous terms. He claims that we are extinguished once we reach this state of grace, this World of the Absolute. He suggests, however, that at any rate we are existing in unconditioned being; we are entirely apart from the Universe, freed from its essential unreality.

Actually, only on the Seventh plane when we are one with the Supreme Idea do we realise the reality of the Universe. It is unreal so long as it imprisons soul and spirit. It is real once these are merged and freed from it, dwelling in the infinite liberty of Pure Intelligence.

Once that state is attained we perceive that old masterpiece, the Universe, as a Whole. We realise it in every microscopic detail, and in its greatest proportions. We perceive the Whole of it as an intellectual concept within the Supreme Idea. We perceive the part of it that is playing out its drama. And thus we exist as the seer and the lover, experiencing all that life as an act of thought. So we reach the zenith of experience. We know the reality of the material Universe, we are aware of the other reality, the Idea, which contains its duplicate from the beginning to the end as a thought. We cannot be said to be extinct. We are one in the great harmony of Mind, we are individual in the love of the Creator for His creation which is contained within him, which is manifested in part.

THE UNIVERSE

We receive from all those myriad spirits who control parts of the material universe the complete impression of it in its least, in its greatest aspects. Therefore we live as never before, we are caught in no Nirvanic swoon. And we join in that contemplation of the destruction of the present Universe, of the creation, life and extinction of other universes, and so on endlessly. We live in the intellectual concept of them all and we are aware of that part which now plays out its drama on the stage of eternity.

Try to realise the dual character of existence when you think of the word "Universe"; then it may be easier to understand the nature of life.

There are ~~physical atoms~~ and there are ~~psychic units~~. The psychic unit develops as it dwells within and without the physical atoms, in the various stages of existence. The psychic unit dwells within the fantasy of ever finer and finer substance, gaining all the while. The psychic unit escapes from that substance, returns to its home in the Idea. But this escape does not mean annihilation. It is one now and yet many, just as the physical atoms of the human body are one and yet many.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

Understand, therefore, that the Universe is only unreal so long as you dwell within its confining web, within form. It is real when you are free from it and are able from Out Yonder to survey it as a whole and to know it as an act of pure thought.

XI

FROM THE WORLD OF EIDOS<sup>1</sup>

THE discarnate being who has conveyed this message has remained in touch with the earth and has followed, step by step, since his death at the beginning of the century, the progress of science, the Great War, which has been continued in the economic war. He has, through communion with the inner mind of his friends who still exist in physical bodies, perceived the change in man's spiritual outlook, perceived his urgent need for some cogent assurance of a spiritual world. Because a man dies, it does not follow that he loses touch with the earth, with that state of Penia—poverty—from which he rose into the delights of the plane named Illusion, from which he penetrated into the world of Eidos—pure form—to the human soul the Heaven World, the ultimate goal. For while on earth the human soul has, in rare moments, perceived that world but has not passed beyond it even when in the loftiest mystic trance.

We intelligences who have journeyed as far as Eidos may, when we choose, journey back to the state of Penia and commune with those who love us or who are to us mentally akin.

We perceive, then, the strange disorder of the world of men and women. We recognise the causes of that disorder and the purpose behind them. We realise the necessity for such disorder and at the same time we desire to convey some indication of the Great Reality.

For this reason I, Frederic Myers, have endeavoured to trace a rough outline of the road man must follow in the After-death if he be a seeker of immortality.

<sup>1</sup> The Plane of Colour.

XII

THE INCIDENT OF DEATH

To those of us who have reached that "unseen bourne" from which travellers in a changed aspect frequently return, death is an incident or a mere episode which we regard with a certain tenderness and not with any pain. To human beings, however, death should seem as a night at an inn, as a halt on the long road home.

It may be a night of feverish insomnia, or heavy with fear; a night full of strange dreams, or a period of almost undisturbed peace. Always there is, contained in it, a time of stillness, of sinking gloriously into rest. Nevertheless, the soul eventually awakens to a new day. And, in dawn and dark alike, he is surrounded by certain of his discarnate kindred, by some of those who are woven into the pattern of his destiny.

Before we discuss death further we must be agreed on the meaning of one word which has caused much confusion of thought. The term "discarnate being" does not imply separation from any body whatsoever, but from exclusive association with the physical body. For, until the wayfarer reaches the Sixth plane, he must customarily use some form, some vehicle of expression, some outward sign or symbol of himself.

Many are these forms. For our present purpose it is advisable that I should name only four of them.

(1) The double or unifying body—in my opinion falsely named the astral body.

(2) The etheric body.

(3) The subtle body.

(4) The celestial body or shape of light.

THE INCIDENT OF DEATH

The two latter are occupied by the soul on the higher planes and can be altered greatly in appearance by a mental act, or by an act of will.

Now, discarnate intelligences have probably informed you that the secret of death is to be found in the rate of speed at which the outer shell vibrates. For instance, a human being is primarily aware of the visible world about him because his body is travelling at its particular rate of speed. Alter the timing of your physical form, and the earth, men, women and all material objects, will vanish for you as you vanish for them. Death, therefore, means merely a change of speed. For the purpose of this change a temporary dislocation is necessary, for the soul must pass from one body travelling at a certain vibration to another travelling at a different rate or time.

This entry into the next life involves no sudden break, no leap, as it were, into new conditions. There must, necessarily, be an intermediate state. Even Christ entered into it, abiding, as you have been told, for a period in Hades.

And so we come to the first question. In what form does the human being express himself during the hours that immediately follow the moment when the physician declares that "life is extinct"? "Where is the beloved?" we ask in our wordless misery as we watch by that shell, which, a few minutes previously, contained that bright, living personality; for us so radiant and so dear, quick in perception, eager in intelligence. During the hour after the passing of a soul with whom we have been intimately bound it is hard to believe in extinction. And ours is a right intuition when we instinctively refuse to believe that all is finished, that the soul has come to his journey's end.

During the whole of a man's earthly life he is accompanied by the double or unifying body. It is the link between the deeper mind and the brain, and has many important functions. When you fall asleep your consciousness no longer controls the physical shape. There is not only an apparent cutting off, but an entry into apparent oblivion. The usual disordered dreams are frequently but the play of nerves roused and irritated by the daily activities. Actually, during sleep, the soul exists within the double while the body is recharged with nervous energy, with life-units. So, sleep has been wisely recognised as being even more important than food or drink.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

Space does not permit further discussion of this aspect in the life of man. It is necessary only for you to realise that the double, if it could be made visible, is, in appearance, an exact counterpart of the physical shape. The two are bound together by many little threads, by two silver cords. One of these makes contact with the solar plexus, the other with the brain. They all may lengthen or extend during sleep or during half-sleep, for they have considerable elasticity. When a man slowly dies these threads and the two cords are gradually broken. Death occurs when these two principal communicating lines with brain and solar plexus are severed.

It is a well-known fact that life occasionally lingers in certain cells of the body after the soul has fled. This phenomenon has always baffled the physician, but there is a simple explanation for it. The double still adheres to the shell by means of certain of the threads which have not yet been broken. The soul does not suffer in the physical sense if thus delayed in his journey. He may suffer in the sense that he has, thereby, a greater awareness of the immediate surroundings of his physical body. It gives him the power to perceive his friends and relations wherever this worn-out garment lies. As a rule, however, he obtains complete freedom from earth's detaining grasp within an hour—or a few hours—of death.

When you watch by the dead or grieve for a departed friend, do not be anxious or concerned for him in the period immediately following his release. For the soul, at that time, is usually in a state of half-sleep. All the agony, all the strange dreams, the tortured fever of mind precede the translation of the soul to the double. At the moment of death—unless that death be of a violent character—peace reigns about the human consciousness. It is resting in dimness and sometimes is capable of perceiving those dear friends or relatives who have already passed to another life.

THE INCIDENT OF DEATH

Conditions, of course, vary enormously. The man or woman who has never deeply loved or cared for any other human soul may, at death, rise from the body of clay into loneliness and into a night that, in its impenetrable blackness, is like no night on earth.

This state of complete isolation, however, is only allotted to a few human beings. The egoist or the cruel man will be condemned to it, but, for such a fate, his selfishness must be inordinate, his cruelty considerable.

The average man or woman when he or she is dying suffers no pain. They have become so dissevered already from the body that when the flesh seems to be in agony the actual soul merely feels very drowsy and has a sensation of drifting hither and thither, to and fro, like a bird resting on the wind.

This sensation has its own easeful delight after the pain of the illness which has led the soul to the change of death. So, grieve not for the apparent agony of the dying, rejoice because they are already freed from the torment, are already fluttering between two existences and abide in that nameless content which is due to the quiescence of mind and awareness.

Slowly the soul then rises into the double and for a brief time hovers above the physical counterpart. Some day men will be able to photograph this moment, and the being that passes thus may be registered on the plate as a little white cloud, a pale essence. Only so can this kernel of personality appear to even the finest material instrument. But, to discarnate beings, very different will seem the flight of the soul, for the perceptions of the etheric body are far more finely attuned. And usually those relatives or friends who attend upon death journey to it from the etheric world.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

The Place of Shadows (Hades)

It is not possible to deal with even a tithe of the conditions which prevail in Hades for the multitude of the newly dead. I will, therefore, merely trace the course of an average man who has led a well-ordered life on earth.

According to the nature of the individual, so, also, is the length of his stay in the place of shadows. After a vision of the blood-kindred or psychic-kindred, and sometimes after communion with them, the soul rests seemingly within a veil, in a state of peaceful quiescence, of semi-suspended consciousness, seeing fragmentary happenings of his past life—these being now neither tainted by fear nor whipped by emotion. He watches this changing show as a man drowsily watches a shimmering sunny landscape on a midsummer day. He is detached and apart, judging the individual who participates in these experiences, judging his own self with the aid of the Light from Above.

The terms "Within the Husk" or "The Play of the Shadow Show" define this period. Souls vary considerably in their reactions to it. Some retain scarcely any recollection of it. Others are too aloof and too drugged by the condition of peaceful quiescence to feel either pleasure or pain. But all the while progress is being made, the etheric body is loosening, working out, withdrawing from the husk, until, at last, judgment is completed. The soul takes flight, casts the husk from him as a man throws an old cloak from off his shoulders. For the Spirit or Light from Above has accomplished its work of summing up, leaving to the traveller the final decision.

THE INCIDENT OF DEATH

Once our pilgrim has, as it were, cast his skin, flung away the tattered remnant that bound him to mortality, he passes into the world of illusion and resumes full consciousness. The double, re-imaged within the veil, becomes the body of the man in the next life, only the outer rind or After-image has been flung away.

Three or four days of earth time may suffice for this experience of the Shadow Show, for the re-knitting and re-adjustment of the ego to the etheric body. It is true, however, that certain abnormal men and women linger a long while in Hades and wander to and fro in its grim ways, encountering certain strange beings who hover near the borders of the physical world, who wake old sorrows and troubles in the minds of men, and who play upon the understandings of certain individuals they would possess while still in the flesh, dethroning the reason, stealing from man his birthright. But these creatures have no part in the chronicle of death. For they cannot harm or hinder the pilgrims who journey from the world to us, drifting without pain or stress through Hades, that place of half-lights, of drowsy image-making, and, with a few exceptions, in no way or sense a place of fear or suffering.

Memory and Identity after Death

Physiologists will tell you that memory is merely a condition of the brain. Injure a certain part of that delicate organism and the healthy individual will become mentally a blank, will be quite unable to recall any fact concerning himself, any past experience whatsoever.

Actually, this unfortunate man has neither forgotten his past nor is he intellectually a blank. A certain part of the mechanism of the brain has ceased to function, so he is unable to manifest any intelligence, dependent on memory, to the visible world of men. But he is still intellectually alive, and retains complete power over his memory apart from his actual physical body. For the double or unifying shape is the counterpart of that physical body, and registers, more or less as the brain registers, facts and experiences in the life of its owner.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

Bear in mind that the double accompanies the man from birth till death, houses and shelters his soul, serves him even more faithfully than the actual physical shape of which he is daily aware.

According to the human view, memory is necessary to a sense of identity, to the idea of individuality and all that is conveyed by the words "soul" or "consciousness." Sense of identity, however, is not lost through the change of death, for the soul finds his fundamental memory-centre in his double which, as I have informed you, is his habitation in the After-life.

As the double<sup>1</sup> casts away an outer husk, only its essential part, the etheric body, which has accompanied the traveller and functioned for him all through his earth life, goes on and serves the soul on the plane of illusion, maintaining continuity of individuality through continuity of memory.

During the play of the shadow show this etheric shape gathers new force, is remoulded, readjusted to the soul, and there is a strange and wonderful renewal, a sense of flooding life in the last stages as the butterfly breaks through the chrysalis, as the individual who has entered the period within the husk—an old decrepit man in appearance—passes from it in a youthful body, pulsating with life and eager with human desires.

On the plane of illusion these desires are satisfied.

<sup>1</sup> If I recollect rightly, certain Easterns believe that the human being, in his construction, resembles an onion and possesses at least six bodies which all exist at the same time. I have found no evidence of these numerous shapes. They may, of course, exist. I can only write out of my own knowledge.—F. W. H. M.

THE INCIDENT OF DEATH

"We shall not all sleep"

Apart from Revelations, what is the teaching of the Bible concerning the After-life? "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed."

The words of St. Paul harmonise with the account of the After-life given in these pages. The phrase "we shall not all sleep" implies that many do sleep until "the last trumpet sounds," until the end of the earth. In what garden, in what world, in what space do these sleepers rest?

As birds live in air so do these souls exist in the etheric zone which is about the earth. They are inhabitants of the world of illusion. Now, on that plane, save in the last stages, there is an almost entire absence of conflict and effort, accordingly there is an absence of any true creation. Many human beings regard such a state as the most desirable condition of being. When they ask for heaven while on earth they indicate, by the word "heaven," a life without conflict or effort. Those of them who are satisfied with such a life meet it after death in the illusion world, and so linger within its borders until "the last trumpet sounds." This phrase of St. Paul's must be read symbolically. It possessed its own peculiar meaning in the ancient world, a meaning which has been lost. The souls who rest on the Third plane until they are roused by this summons may be fitly called "the sleepers." For what does sleep indicate if not an absence of conscious conflict and effort?

Existence seems in many respects as real to the occupant of the world of illusion as it does to king, politician, lawyer, doctor, clergyman and working man on earth. But it contains one important difference. The soul has no need to put forth struggle or effort. He obtains his desire through the mere act of desire. So he cannot be said to live as he did on earth, or gloriously as he will live in the world of Eidos. He is, in truth, the sleeper mentioned in the New Testament.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

"We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed." This text infers that some of the dead do not sleep. In other words, many of those, who have died, scorn the pleasant fields of illusion, their deep content; they desire conflict, creation, effort, and so they either become incarnate again or they wisely choose to go upwards and to enter the world of Eidos, to find, indeed, life more abundantly within that masterpiece. For in that state of grace the traveller meets with the finest glories of appearance, with the triumph of life in form.

The After-image, or Husk

The After-image might be likened to an old traveller's cloak. Though he discards it, it remains by the roadside and may be picked up and worn again.

Ghosts have been known to walk for many years in certain old mansions at certain seasons, or inconsequently, without apparent rhyme or reason. Say to yourself if you meet one of these restless shades: "Here walks the ancient cloak, the old disguise, perhaps, of some Roundhead or Cavalier, of some cowed monk or holy nun, of some modern gentleman who has indulged in butchery or has himself been murdered—with new weapons but with the same old passions of rage and hate behind him."

It is that same repetitive passion that provides the energy which, for a brief space, re-animates the After-image. But it may not walk in its own place if there be not association of memory, an energising thought or idea behind it. Somewhere within the far realms of space exists the brawler who died so violently, or the nun or monk who enriched that cloak with all their brooding religious passion. They are resting, withdrawing temporarily from their active life in another sphere, and, for a moment, by reason of the binding threads of past fate, envisage again the old scene where they lived or from which they took their leave of life. They cast on it but the careless thought which is now unclouded by remorse, regret or any emotion. But the mere light flick of their thought stirs up the old cloak, causing it to masquerade again within the building or about the grounds which were familiar to it in life.

THE INCIDENT OF DEATH

But be assured that the essential ego does not return and play the old part, making mockery of it on the stage of earth, with its insubstantial vapouring, with its elusive vanishing into air. No, such ghosts or phantoms, who wander thus meaninglessly, are indeed but ancient garments tossed back to visibility at the appointed hour when the man or woman who has "inner" sight is present to record this deceptive masquerade.

All rules have their exceptions and so all hauntings may not come under any one rule. But it is accurate to accept the average ghost as a persistence of a manifestation of energy through the medium of the After-image, focused by the pull of an old thread of passionate memory.

Violent Death

Sometimes the dead do not know that they are dead. This statement may seem incredible. Yet it is true in certain fairly rare cases.

Only the past history of the dead man can make clear this curious lack of apprehension of his state. If he passes through the gates of death bearing with him a passionate love of material possessions, he will, even after a fleeting glimpse of his discarnate kindred, tenaciously hold to the belief that he is still a man of flesh and blood, wandering, perhaps, on the hills in a mist, but still filled with the life of earth. He will passionately seek for his house, his money, or whatever is his particular treasure, in the dark ways beyond death. And sometimes they may appear in an elusive manner a little ahead of him, leaping thus only for a brief moment before his subjective vision and then vanishing, the cloud descending once more, reducing all things for him to nullity again. Such an egoist will linger for some time on the borders between the two worlds, freedom coming when the force of that passion for material possessions weakens and fades.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

There are also certain others who linger thus in Hades, but not unhappily as a rule. I refer to certain young men of careless, animal and, occasionally, vicious life who die violent deaths. These poor fellows are suddenly wrenched from their bodies while still they are in the prime of manhood. They are not, in any sense, capable of grasping, for a while, the difference between earth life and the After-life. So, they, too, remain in ignorance, and must remain in a kind of coma until the delicate etheric body has recovered from the shock of a too rapid severance from the earthly shape.

However, the great majority of men and women after death flit like passenger-birds through Hades, resting only for a brief while here or there, making one contact with their old friends or relatives who preceded them, held but for a short spell by the play of the shadow show and then loosed into the new life, into the effortless land where the pattern is again woven, but on that plane it will have no new design, no new threads or colours.

The Death that follows a Period of Senility

The very old may, before their passing from earth, in part lose memory or lose their grasp of facts, their power of understanding. This tragic decay all too often causes the observer of it to lose his faith in an After-life. For the soul seems, under such circumstances, merely the brain. This, however, is a false conclusion. The soul, or active ego, has been compelled partially to retire into the double during waking hours because the cord between the brain and its etheric counterpart has either been frayed, or has snapped. The actual life of the physical body is still maintained through the second cord and through any of those threads which still adhere to the two shapes. So the aged, apparently mindless man or woman, is in no sense mindless. He or she has merely withdrawn a little way from you and has no need of your pity, for, through that withdrawal, his awareness is almost wholly confined within his unifying body—the body of his resurrection.

THE INCIDENT OF DEATH

The Pattern

Beyond ambition, beyond any human forms of selfishness, beyond the struggling, scarcely leashed desires, are affection, love, the drawing, intangible force between kindred souls. It is stronger than death, it conquers despair and may conquer on all the finite levels of existence. It must be reckoned as a cosmic principle and is known as "the power behind the pattern" which is being woven for you as long as time, for you, exists.

Death seems terrible to the average man because of its apparent loneliness. If he but knew it, his fears are vain; his dread of being reft from the pattern—that is to say, from those he loves—has no foundation, has no real substance behind it. For, wherever he may journey after death, always will he be caught again into the design of which he is a part, always will he find again, however deep his temporary oblivion or however varied his experience, certain human souls who were knit into his earth life, who were loved deeply, if sometimes blindly or evilly, by him in those bygone days.

It is true that the more primitive types are incapable of the love of the whole being. They fail to understand that to love in this manner is to observe the first law of progress; for it is a love that has within it the seeds of immortality. Such primitive souls as are at the beginning of the pattern frequently initiate its design with hatreds, deathless antagonisms, which, encountered again on the Third plane, hound back such souls to earth, where they are re-born, and where, if progress is made, they may learn the first spiritual law, namely, the Law of the Beloved.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

No man or woman who has mastered it need fear death, for, even if he go first, some other who is in his pattern—and therefore truly his kindred—will speedily join him, give him greeting in the Great Adventure which lies beyond death.

Call death your friend, hail death as your deliverer. For the darkness and soil which is in every earth love passes, vanishes with your passing.

XIII

THE EVOLUTION OF THE PSYCHE

IN the previous pages will be found a rough chart of existence. It was inadvisable to enter, in such a chart, upon any detailed description of the qualities essential to the navigator if he would speedily and successfully steer his course across these strange worlds.

When I was on earth I was a firm believer in the power and strength of agape or love. In the New Testament St. Paul uses the word which is translated as "charity," but attributed to it a meaning which has been also allotted to love.

Here, in the After-life, I perceive that neither of these words conveys the whole significance of the Good, for they have been so long interpreted by human and finite minds that they have become worn and defaced, soiled and obscured by contact with many natures of an infinitely varied character.

To some, the word "love" means only the passion which lights up between man and woman, to others, it is the intellectual love shared by two friends, kindred souls. Thirdly, and lastly, love is held by many to be compassion for others and to contain within it that communal sense of the brotherhood of man, that love, in a general sense, which has led, undoubtedly, to fine endeavour in past times.

But always these conceptions fall short of the ideal. Though again and again agnostic and Christian study the Gospels, image in their hearts the Sermon on the Mount, still they fail, still their understanding perishes in the presence of the great words of immortality.

No man or woman has ever really succeeded in understanding or grasping the whole lofty vision of love as it was seen by the Christ. So now, as I survey the present earth and perceive the chronicle of the years, I am sensible of the need of a word which has not been debased by men, which can still suggest and contain the primary need of the soul, which will define that urge so essential to the psyche when it would climb from one rung to another on the ladder of consciousness.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

The permanent reality of progress is to be found in increase of wisdom. For wisdom may be defined as "right judgment concerning truth."

Upon every plane of being the conception of truth must necessarily be limited or enlarged by the conditions of life, by the form the soul assumes, or by that extension of consciousness which, at the last, tends to shake off form, as the trees in autumn cast off their leaves.

On the dense plane of matter known as earth the term "truth" is still holy and, to the minds of many men, unsoiled. It may, therefore, be used to illustrate what I believe to have been Christ's meaning where the word "love" is put into His mouth in the Gospels. But it is not complete unless "right judgment" is added to it.

Consider, then, the significance of "wisdom." For, clearly, within that lofty word resides the highest love between man and woman, intellectual love, compassion, faith and last, but not least, the power of vision. All these are possessed by the man or woman who rightly judges truth. And, on whatever plane your soul or the soul of the beloved is evolving, be assured that wisdom is the primary urge which causes this soul to choose to go up rather than down, to select the finer life, the greater reality, rather than existence in denser form, in more material worlds.

"Love your enemies. Bless them that persecute you." These beautiful and enigmatic phrases have troubled and perplexed every sincere Christian who has endeavoured to apply them to his own life. Only through wisdom can he, in any measure, fulfil their command, expressing them literally in act and thought. For they are contained in wisdom. Their idea depends for its manifestation, for its very life, on right judgment of the truth.

THE EVOLUTION OF THE PSYCHE

The simple peasant, the humble working man or woman, ignorant in the eyes of the world, may yet be wholly wise if they possess this spiritual discernment, which, for the human soul, expresses Christ's vision when He spoke of "love."

So must it be on each plane of being in the Unseen. Wisdom is the light that, in every instance, gives shape and life to love, is its secret hidden root, is the inspiration, the power that causes the forward and upward progression expressed in the term—the evolution of the psyche.

PART II

INSTRUCTION ABOUT VARIOUS HUMAN FACULTIES AND OTHER MATTERS

XIV

FREE WILL

THE term "free will" presents different meanings to different people. For some it implies the idea that in all we do we are following out our own particular fancy or desire so far as is possible. For others, free will seems to imply simply the right to choose, the right, when we come to cross roads, to follow the particular lane that seems, from our point of view, the most alluring.

Perhaps we decided to travel along the beech-shaded road and not the road that is open on every side. Who makes that decision? I should call it the aggregation defined by the term, body, soul, and spirit. Now, all these are built up out of various elements, but all are one creation. They have been slowly shaped through the ages. All the hereditary influences must be included. All the influences of a psychic and a spiritual character are there. These seem innumerable to our finite minds. Circumstances, friends, enemies, relations, all help to mould that inner being which makes the decision to follow that beech-shaded road. Does it not strike you, therefore, that you are asking what is impossible because of the very nature of our being when you make the demand that free will must rule? We are obviously merely the creation of many other men and women living and dead. Therefore we are largely the victims of their varying influences and are bound to follow those tendencies implanted in us. In other words all mankind is, in a sense, one, and yet many. Man's history, his character since the dawn of the world, might be conceived as a vast web ever growing and growing, and the source of it all is to be found in the Master Spinner who is responsible for every particle of that fine fabric, for the whole history, the whole character of man since the beginning of time.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

Now, you must realise that as God is the Creator, the Great Master Builder, He knows what shape the life of the individual will take before that individual is born. He knows exactly the nature of the unborn babe, how he will develop from the hour he leaves his mother's womb, where his tendencies will lead him, the manner in which circumstances will mould him. For the great picture of all creation has been conceived in the imagination of God before ever the babe has evolved out of what we call the void. For instance, the future of the earth is imaged already in the imagination of God. It has happened because He has already thought it. But what has not happened is the change in the individual soul, the manner, for instance, in which it reacts to the trials and the joys of life. The reactions of the soul are all that matter in connection with your earth life. Will sorrow embitter you? Will ruin but nerve you to fresh effort? In the latter instance, you create within yourself in that you increase the power of your will, increase your courage. Or will you give up hope and sink into penury, thus increasing the weakness of your character? You have, in short, free will only in the sense of creation, only in the moulding of your own soul. Now that is the important and vital factor in connection with your life on earth. For when you go back to the group-soul of which you are one, according to the mould of your soul so shall be the mould of circumstance in the future life of the young soul of your group who is about to be born. It is hard to put my idea into words.

God watches over the cosmic life of the group-souls. And, according to their growth, He plans or designs the future of the life of mankind. But because it was all imaged by Him at the beginning so is there little to change in the vast cosmic picture that lies in His imagination.

XV

MEMORY

• WITHIN AND WITHOUT THE BODY

I SHALL try to give you a brief account of some of the aspects of memory as they present themselves to me. First of all, you would probably like to understand memory, as it is in the case of the living. What do you do? Your will decides that you shall remember the name of Tom Jones. It makes the effort to concentrate upon that image. What is the exact process? It draws to it a certain very fine essence invisible to the human eye. Scientists might describe that essence as something far subtler than electricity and yet of the same nature. This, if the will be strong enough, can be led to make the necessary imprint again upon what would appear to you, if you had the perception, to be something fluid, something that flows. This fluid penetrates matter, and, with the assistance of the essence I speak of, can become so shaped that it is able to get in touch with the cell in the brain that is ready to respond. The will, with the assistance of these two elements, is able to join as by a thread the image, Tom Jones, to the cell. You have such perverted ideas of space, as long as you are in matter, that you cannot for a moment grasp how millions of little images made in this manner are all in touch with the millions of cells in the brain through these threads. Imagine an immense spider's web about you. All the strands bear memories or thoughts to the brain as the wires transmit telegraphic messages, and can carry to the brain messages, or, rather, the sign of the image that has been created through impress being made on something plastic with the assistance of this essence.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

Your words make it impossible. You have no term, for instance, for this clay that receives the impression. I call it clay, but it is not of the nature of matter. This clay—as I call it for want of a better word—is the substance out of which thought is constructed. Of course, it is not substance as you understand it. Very well, then, this clay receives all the impressions your sight, hearing, and touch convey, but it does not make the connecting thread with the brain cell unless your will makes the conscious effort which is necessary for its construction. You now ask: what is will? Will is the energy that flows to you from the large individual mind without you, added, of course, to the collection of images that are all attached to the physical brain as I have already tried to indicate. The will is influenced by the physical body. The larger mind contains that infinite subtlety of atoms that are not destroyed through the death of that crude machine, the body. Actually, though I call them atoms, they would appear to you to be of a fluid character. I want you to realise, though, that the essential You is something that is composite as long as you are alive. It is an alliance between what is material and what you call immaterial. The body or matter has certain yearnings brought about by the actual nature of its construction. These are not you, but they dominate you, because they can usually command much of what is immaterial and can enter into the directive process that goes on in the cells of the brain. These cells are so highly sensitive that they can and do respond to the stimulus of a being who is motion rather than substance. Think of your will, then, as motion; ever by its active energy coalescing these images—marshalling them—causing the brain, which is the only part at all sensitive to pure motion, to draw upon the threads that are attached to these images when the need for their uprisal in the consciousness is made manifest. I have tried to explain what you cannot possibly conceive so long as you are in matter.

MEMORY

Memory out of the body is a different affair altogether. When we become discarnate beings we are far more detached from the earthly images for the reason that they are no longer bound to us by matter through the medium of the brain cells. The threads, as you must realise, are broken by death. It does not mean that these images of all the impressions ever made on you are destroyed, they still exist, but we, when we choose, can, under certain psychic conditions, draw those images we desire to us by making the effort of the will that places us amongst them. We do not draw them to us as when we are alive, with labour and difficulty, we simply make the necessary effort which places us in the state that makes it possible for us to perceive the images we desire. Now, we are not in that state when we communicate through you. That is our difficulty. We are quite detached from these images, and unless the medium has the psychic power of absorbing the facts demanded from our memory—with our assistance, of course—we cannot provide you with the evidence you require. The ordinary human being does not possess this particular power, which is a kind of overflow of the fluid which takes the shape of your body and is about you, though invisible.

These images are outside the brain. They are outside the body, being connected by threads that are invisible to you because they pass through matter and are not themselves matter. They are amenable to touch certainly, but are not remembered unless a very considerable effort is made to draw in the appropriate thread and its image. Even then there are many images that cannot be drawn within the normal consciousness. I cannot find in the English language words sufficiently exact to make my meaning clear.

Now, memory may be likened to the sea. It is all about you, and as elusive as the water of the ocean. When we are alive we come to it like children with our small buckets and fill them with the salt fluid. How little we carry away up the sands. How easily and swiftly we spill it upon the ground. Yet, behind us is that vast area of water booming endlessly upon the shore. The sound of memory is now to me like the sound of the tide, as when in the olden days I listened to it through the summer evenings.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

I want you to think of memory as this great sea. It gives of itself to the earth through all the seasons. It is, therefore, all about you as moisture is about you. Even when you are on earth you may draw from this invisible memory almost unknowingly. And, as one country has a damper atmosphere, a heavier rainfall than another, so will one mentality draw to it a greater share of the collective memory than another. It is changed when filtered through the brain of man; it takes upon itself his colour, his personality, and eventually it comes up to his consciousness as original thought, but horribly dull and unoriginal at times. For the average man draws through him mostly the recent memory ejected by many living brains. The thinker has a greater capacity for drawing to him the memories that lie in the depths of human nature, the strong memory, not the superficial one that is tossed off by the brain of man at the moment. What is rapidly cast off does not continue to live for any length of time. It is only the emotional memories, or the memories created by a fine vehemence, that permanently continue.

Man is like a power station, constantly generating the fresh electric fluid of memory, constantly receiving, constantly giving out again. Human beings cling to their individualities; probably it is but fitting that they should do so. But only what is fundamentally themselves, what is the very kernel of their being, survives the continual dissolution. For, my friend, in life we are mentally perpetually dying; in other words, as in every third season the tree casts off its leaves, so do we, as the years go trooping by, continually cast off our memories. And in so doing we change very considerably. What a stranger the boy Tom Jones of ten years old is to the man Tom Jones whose sixty years have sounded! How shy and self-conscious they would be if they met! How, in many respects, they would dislike each other! But, from far down, there would come some elusive stirring, some strange thrilling, deep calling to deep, if you will; so that these two, the boy aged ten and the man aged sixty, would, despite their superficial differences, be drawn to each other as surely as the magnet draws the iron. They would scarcely know why they thus responded, flew together despite their conscious incongruities. But they would inevitably respond, be thus drawn together. For something deeper than individual memory compels this unity. They share very few concrete memories, they are strangers. But the fine core of things has moved them to be comrades, friends.

MEMORY

In like manner, when men and women journey into this new state of life they meet, perhaps after many years, wives, husbands, sons, daughters who have tarried twenty or thirty years behind them on the earth. If all is well, if they meet again in the world of the departed souls, they will not recognise each other through memory of facts. They will know each other through something that goes far deeper than that memory. Love and hate, caution and impetuosity, all the qualities that lie at the base of a man's or a woman's nature, will cause them to recognise each other, so that there is no need for reference, or for search in the Book of Life. The fundamental knowledge still remains, and the old ties may be renewed, that is, if they belong to the fundamental part of you. But please believe me, since I died I have not remained stationary. I have been changing, evolving, putting on, if you will, like the trees, a fresh coat of leaves, but unchanged within; so that my wife and my children will know me though some of my earth memories be buried as the foliage underground when winter comes.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

* * * * *

In stating that some of my earth memories are a closed book to me I do not wish to indicate that they are cut off irretrievably from me. They do not, in my present state, assist me, for I am exceedingly occupied on the Fourth plane in forging new impressions out of a fresh set of experiences in form. Be assured I shall, in the intermediate state between the Fourth and Fifth plane of being, review all those earth memories again.

•

NOTE. The statements concerning discarnate beings contained in these two essays on memory apply to souls when they are living consciously on the Fourth plane.—F. W. H. M.

XVI

THE GREAT MEMORY

THE Great Memory is, if you will, the subconscious mind of the whole human race. In our life, as in yours, there is the consciousness, the self known to other discarnate beings who live in the same state as those akin to them fundamentally. But there is also a deeper self, which is the self of the world, imperishable as I believe, containing what was and is, containing also what shall be. For the history of man from the earliest to the latest times is all within what is sometimes called "The Tree of Memory." You may say, "~~But future events have not yet happened,~~ so how can they have shaped themselves upon the ether?" I tell you they have happened, ~~for they have already been born in the imagination of God.~~ But the future is difficult to read, I mean difficult for men to read, because the memory of the future has not been so deeply impressed upon the invisible timeless substance, in that it has been thought only once and not twice, thought by the Maker of the Universes: therefore, it is very fine and faint, and only its echo is caught by certain mortals who have the inner hearing. Whereas the gross and clumsy subjective thinking of man causes past memories to be, from the point of view of the sensitive, more definitely shaped in the flowing energy.

I want you to understand the significance of this vast memory in the lives of the ever-living, whom you may call "departed souls." These, in pursuing their present existence, can live away from the memory of all past existence, or they can resume a vanished personality by picking up the threads from the Great Memory and sucking in from them, as you might suck a sugar cane, the nourishment of a past personality. It is not always perfectly shaped when the discarnate being endeavours to communicate. Sometimes only a little of the past individual's garment of mortality is taken from the great storehouse and, for a brief while, displayed.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

Now, I would call your attention to an important point in this connection. We, you and I, are each recorded on some page in this Great Memory. We must, as players in a drama, re-learn the old part before we endeavour to speak to our friends on earth, through a medium. As a rule we neglect this task, or we succeed in obtaining only a glimpse of the memory that enshrines our vanished personality. We have vanished and we have not vanished. It is hard to explain this duality. Fundamentally we are the same as we were when a loved wife, mother, or sister bade us "good-bye" in the earth life. We are the same in the sense that we should continue to have a feeling of repulsion for certain things and people we disliked on earth, and the old affections would flame up if we met again those people and things that were dear to us. But if by personality you mean the sum total of our earth memories—our knowledge of Greek and Latin, our knowledge of concrete facts—then we are indeed changed, in that we can, as a rule, only resuscitate the old knowledge by obtaining contact with that part of the Great Memory which is ours. Yet we do retain—apart from it—our old mentality, much of its idiosyncrasies. That part of ourselves that is no longer integral, that has become detached, is the fleeting physical consciousness of that period when we bade the earth farewell; is the aggregation of memory concerning facts in our earth life, concerning certain concrete knowledge memorised by us. Emotional memory remains an integral part of the soul, for it comes from the creative Life.

XVII

ATTENTION

FOR THE INCARNATE AND DISCARNATE BEING

I WILL define attention. As you know it, in physiological terms attention is the direction by the will of a certain nerve-force into certain special cells of the brain. That is, suppose I want to recall the image of St. Mark's in Venice; I direct the nerve-force into that special cell or cells connected with my memory of Venice. The entity created by Venetian experiences wakes into life, and becomes for a time a "personality," while all the time, quite behind it, in the background, is the controlling will; but the Venetian self is expressing its personality during that period. I merely take Venice as an example. These centres of personality have been, I think, created usually by a network of far more complicated associations and memories. They have each of them been derived from a series of fundamental experiences that have cut deep into the soft material of the soul.

Attention for the Discarnate Being

Try and think of the mind as a web: in it are numerous centres about which radiate thoughts and memories. Any one of these centres can direct its attention towards the earth. We are all fundamentally one, but when we concentrate upon some special operation of thought we become divided. In order that we may become one again we have to travel far from you. We must be fused in the spirit again. I do not, by the word "far," wish to indicate distance as you know it, I merely wish to indicate that the very fineness of our composition leads us, when we are one, to be remote from you. You possibly will not believe me when I tell you that each star has its own personality. It is one and yet it is many. In the same way you, even when in the body, are, in the same material sense, one yet many. There are myriads of little entities within you but there is only one mind or one channel for the mind. The interesting feature of my state here is that I am within a larger mind which is not a collective one but is rounded off from many others. Many of my affinities are contained in it. All those phases in my earth life are represented by these various centres.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

I have spoken to you of attention in a physiological sense. I have described it as a stream of nervous energy, being directed towards certain cells or a certain cell in the brain, these being connected with certain images. Very well. As we are now constituted we have no material brain, but we possess a certain psychic web. This web is not exactly on the plan of the brain. It does not contain millions of tiny neurons or compartments, but it contains several centres which can draw or attract a stream of psychic energy from the Unifying Principle. If a great effort is made there can be attention in more than one direction, but not always. It is possible when we are communicating with the world that we can only supply one centre or focus at a time with this active stream or motive force. This is quite easy to understand, for a considerable effort of concentration is required when we manipulate another deeper mind. Sometimes we succeed in communicating with two people at once, but it is exceedingly difficult. The interesting point for you in connection with these centres or half-way houses is that the memory of what we have communicated is lodged therein, or rather it is in touch with that centre and no other centre with that focus, and also with the Unifying Principle, which, as you know, contains many in one.

XVIII

THE SUBLIMINAL SELF

I PROMISED to speak to you about the inner content of mind. I think, perhaps, I had better commence by speaking of man as a living organism. That seems a curious idea to me now, but I must use your terms as you understand them. To begin with, scientists have not in the least realised how very detached consciousness—or the soul—is from the body. The latter is the inheritance received from many past generations. It is in itself an empire, polyzoic and even polypsychic. It is, in fact, infinitely more complicated, with three degrees of nerves, those of the higher centres, those of the middle and lower. These nerves are the keys upon which our consciousness plays. Now, I want you to understand that we, in our etheric condition, to a certain degree correspond with the physical organism. Have you ever pondered over that mysterious phrase, “in the beginning the image was made flesh”? I may quote incorrectly, but that phrase, or one that is similar to it, which you will find in the Bible,<sup>1</sup> contains a vast truth. The living organism is, to a certain degree, a reflection of what is in the Unseen. There is a Unifying Principle of which I have already told you. There are also minor consciousnesses which I have already spoken of as centres, or as the focus. When I communicate with the earth, one of these minor consciousnesses, or psychic entities, takes possession of the medium, supplanting one of the psychic entities which she possesses. We never supplant what I call the Unifying Principle in her; if we did, she would go mad. It is a very difficult feat, and is only attempted by certain <sup>1</sup> John i. 1 and i. 14.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

malevolent entities on this side. Now, can you imagine a country, take England for example, dotted over with towns all self-contained, yet looking to that vast city London for general directions and for a certain essential stimulus? Such is the condition of the discarnate being. He is a kingdom, bounded by what would seem to have the appearance of a veil. It has a curious elasticity. I mean, we differ from the kingdom to which I have alluded in that we can alter at will the shape of this very subtle material or fluid. We differ in many other respects. Our surroundings are of a metetheric character. You may ask me to define this. It is exceedingly difficult. But I think I may say that it contains atoms of the very finest kind. They pass through your coarser matter. They belong to another state altogether.

You may then ask: "How does your world or state differ from our earth?" It differs very considerably, for the reason that this fluid is quite unformed. After death, if we are sufficiently developed, we enter into our subliminal self. When we were alive we believed that there were two forms of consciousness: one the inner mind, the other the supraliminal, the latter was above the threshold and controlled our ordinary business, appearing to direct operations generally. We looked on the subliminal as being that which was below the threshold, the inner mind, the inspired part of our nature, the creative source. Very well then, since I have passed over I have come to realise that actually, in the sense of pure mind, there is no supraliminal part. There is in its stead an infinitely complicated machine which has become more and more subtilised through the centuries, so that now it responds to the slightest of vibrations, sent out by the subliminal, or what you may perhaps call the subconscious, mind. Of what, then, does the supraliminal or ordinary consciousness consist? Of a very wonderful nerve-memory; of all the physical desires of the body, to a large extent controlled by that nerve-memory; and lastly, and most important, of the reflection of the subliminal part of you. Usually, the subliminal sends its reflection, which, to a faint or a powerful degree, is received by the fluid shape which I call the nerve-memory. This, in its turn, transmits the reflection in vibrations to the brain. Normal consciousness is to a certain degree threefold. It consists in the main of the image interpreted by the nerve-memory, and of the material part, the brain, which is responsive to the image sent by this inner mind. But that is not by any means all. The brain and body, as a rule, must set the desire for the image in motion before the latter can be despatched and made perceptible. In short, the body must be receptive, or, rather, the nerves and brain must receive and register. These two alter and elaborate, or they simplify and give colour to, the contribution that has come from the higher portion of man's nature. There is also a reverse process: the assimilation of impressions of the material world by the brain which are transferred to the higher centres and returned in due course. There is, in short, a constant trafficking during the individual's waking hours between these various parts of his being.

THE SUBLIMINAL SELF

Many points still require elucidation. You probably desire to know where is that positive, and very frequently objectionable, entity the "ego." It is a sum in arithmetic, a figure worthy of the attention of mathematicians. It is really the sum total of the physical needs of man, and the accretions through many generations of inherited memories, added to his innate capacity for corresponding with the inner mind and for receiving its image. Now there are times of creative activity which scholars have been kind enough to allocate to the inner mind. Then great works are produced, and you cannot understand the mystery of their creation. They are produced through a certain singular aptitude on the part of the brain, which responds to the message from the inner mind directing the nerve-memory. The fluid shape does not act as a medium, and there is in consequence no blurred interpretation. Added to this, of course, must be a considerable store of knowledge, or images, all connected with the brain-cells by those invisible threads of which I have already spoken. You must realise that the act of creation, then, is collaboration. The stream of energy from the inner mind moulds the work of art, partly out of these associations, these memories, but also partly out of the harvest of floating thoughts, from which it can draw more directly when the fluid shape is not the actual medium. In the case of the normal consciousness the fluid shape plays an important part and is largely the "ego." It will very frequently draw from the psychic entities, the minor consciousnesses; but these usually are directly bound up with the Unifying Principle, they are merely its tributaries. When there is a disintegration of personality it is sometimes due to one of these entities losing touch with the Unifying Principle, owing to the possible misbehaviour of the fluid shape or nerve-memory, which sends out a too powerful appeal to this psychic entity. The central consciousness, however, is usually, if directly evoked, able to obtain control again. I want you, in the light of my remarks, to consider and study the evolution of man. The larger mind has been there, in a state at times unformed, from the dark ages, from the beginning if there ever was a beginning, which I doubt. At first this mind found it could only at times send faint reflections to primitive people, whom it had gradually evolved, created as a sculptor creates. But in time the form of man developed, and was the more easily able to receive the image. The Word was made flesh with greater and greater facility.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

You may ask, in connection with mind, why it thus sought to express itself? It desired individuality; it, too, desired form; and form and individuality were, to a certain degree, achieved through this constant interchange between mind and matter. But, mark you, it is still the essence of matter—the nerves and nerve-memory—that dominates and controls the actions of the human being. So seek for the normal ego, when you are a living woman, in the nerve-soul, in the construction of the brain and body, and in the image sent by the Unifying Principle. The Word was made flesh. In that phrase you may find the whole mystery of man's nature, the sum total of his being.

THE SUBLIMINAL SELF

* * * * *

You desire to know what is ordinary consciousness. The actual constructive force is, in its essence, the nerve-soul; but ordinary consciousness is a sum in arithmetic. The needs of the body, the cravings of the mechanisms, are all influencing the nerve-soul in its decisions. What you call the subconscious is the reflection, the light from above. Sometimes it is feeble because the summons is weak. It also plays a part in the decision. Time, of course, is a factor that puzzles you in this connection, but the whole organisation is through centuries of evolution, so subtilised that it can make its decision rapidly. In the days of primitive man, the I, the constructive force—the "ego"—was principally the body; the nerves—the fluid shape even—were subordinate. I want you to understand that there are not, save in very rare cases, two wills making decisions at the same time consciously. There is only one, because there is only one channel; but the subliminal self, which is outside the larger mind—if you prefer that term—is exceedingly active, and, when messages in daytime are sent to it through the channel, that is to say, viâ the nerve-soul, then this mind works upon the message and sends it during sleep, in a new guise, back to the nerve-soul, which it can easily do, because the soul is apart from the body, quite still, and yet able to reflect the desired image which it craved for in waking hours. This is, on waking, attached by it to the brain cells, and you find some problem solved for you as by a magician when you are roused again out of sleep.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

Initiative during the day, then, comes from the nerve-soul, fed by the image or the reflection from the subliminal, and influenced always by the body and its desires.

XIX

SLEEP

I WANT you to understand that I have not by any means explored the possibilities of the subliminal self in that little essay of mine. Please regard it merely as a preliminary canter. I have been puzzled as to the treatment of it.

When I was a dead man, that is to say when I was alive on earth, I believed that sleep was simply a withdrawal of the spirit, an emptying of the chambers of the brain and a search for refreshment in another world, or, rather, that there was a replenishing of spiritual energy, a kind of irrigation, and that from it there came that freshness, that sense of invigoration, which we have all experienced on waking to a new day. I believed firmly in a life passed in two worlds, and in this I was perfectly right. I was puzzled as to the exact conditions obtained during slumber, now I am more sensible of them. Actually the nerve-soul is detached from the body when you are in the state you call sleep. That means there is no direct interpreter, or medium, between the spirit and the brain cells. This is important. The body, as I have previously stated, is largely dominated by this nerve-soul. It becomes almost quiescent when the latter is withdrawn into a metetheric atmosphere. The nerve-soul is bathed in this atmosphere, and receives a very necessary stimulus, or rather nourishment, from what I believe you now call ether. But ether is a broad term, and it is in reality a subdivision of ether that feeds the nerve-soul during sleep. Perhaps I should coin a new word and call it "Etheric Essence." I feel I am most audacious in thus infringing on the rights of physicists, who alone should christen the elements—both visible and invisible. Now, while the nerve-soul is absent, the spirit is still close to the body. It cannot send the image—as I have termed it—directly to the brain. It makes no effort to do so usually, but there are occasions when the higher nerve centres are in a particularly susceptible state. Then the spirit may endeavour to cast upon it some image, or rather to direct one, through invoking a residuum of power that has been left behind by the nerve-soul. Then your sleeper will dream, perhaps, of some future event, or will image some violent death that is taking place elsewhere. The spirit draws within it the reflection of certain emotional affinities of the being who is slumbering and it thus succeeds on rare occasions in casting an image of the future, or of some present happening, upon the quiescent brain.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

Now, you may ask me to explain the origin of the foolish, and apparently chaotic, dreams that visit the sleeper nightly. These, if you have the key, are neither foolish nor chaotic. Very often there is a steady nerve-irritation during the day, a firm suppression of emotions. This leads, on occasions, to the photographing of some of the causes of irritation, and these photos or pictures are bound to the neurons that have been active during the day. They (the pictures) are in a web of threads. There is no controlling entity, but the nerves can, and do, react upon them making confused and foolish patterns. They are in every sense of the word nerve-visions, and must not be regarded as reflections emanating from a higher source.

I have defined attention as the direction of nervous energy into certain special cells of the brain. Now, if this flow has been violent and prolonged during waking hours, the vibration will continue. The echoes, as it were, of that concentration will still be resounding, but mingling with other echoes, other impressions, and these make a certain sequence that, at times, is added to by some very old associations. During the day, perhaps, you have seen a bonnet that reminded you of a dead grandmother. The actual reminder may be faint, but it will be sufficient to stir the thread that binds an old association to your brain cell. When control is relaxed, and sleep comes, the image of your grandmother figures in your dream. She has been drawn on to the canvas, through the visioning of a bonnet, some hours before. As the memory was of old times, it was far from the seat of operations, and the passage of time was necessary before it could arrive.

SLEEP

I fear I am writing in a rather dull fashion, but what I want to indicate is that the memories, the images of them, and the nerves, play a game of hide-and-seek with each other within the brain during sleep. The spirit cannot send the controlling image, nor can that fluid shape, with its agglomeration of experiences, exert itself in the management of the vast population in the brain. I know also that, if the nerves be brittle or in a high state of tension, it is possible for them to be to a certain degree guided by a minor consciousness. But, though this entity gives the impulse of movement, it must obey the nerves which dominate, and owing to some harassing and latent memory compel the sleeper to arise and walk. This will usually account for sleep-walking. The nerves control the minor consciousness instead of the latter controlling them. But usually this psychic entity has just sufficient power to prevent the sleeper from falling into any great danger, or it can give the signal of alarm to the nerve-soul, and cause it to hurry back to the body again and assume control.

I have spoken of sleep in a rather crude manner, and I have endeavoured to show you that it is owing to the need of nourishment that the nerve-soul, or interpreter, has to withdraw and that this leads to an isolating process. The spirit can still animate the body; but only in very rare cases can it influence the directive centres in the brain, for its medium is absent. Undoubtedly during the hours of sleep a certain stratum of the subliminal self pervades the brain, or would seem to do so. What actually occurs is this. Certain old associations, old emotions, have been roused by events during the day. The nerve-soul has not allowed them to enter the active consciousness, it was busy with other matters. They have remained there, like a stream that is dammed up. The dam is removed, through the absence of the nerve-soul, and these memories, particularly if the nerves be in a state of tension, flood the field of the brain, and enter again the old frames, looking down once more on that interior where they had been, for a brief space, its decorations and the images of conscious thought.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

I will speak very briefly about hypnosis. The large majority of hypnotised subjects are not hypnotised at all. But, if I may take a case of genuine hypnotism, I will show you that in one essential, at least, it differs from ordinary sleep. The nerve-soul of the subject is suspended, but it is not, save in a very extreme instance, absent from the body. It is not permitted to act. It forbids its own actions. That is an important point. The individual who hypnotises cannot, unless there is some morbid condition of the nerves, compel the individual to give up his will, that is to say, suspend the nerve-soul. Now the subliminal self is in a sense drawn nearer to the body through this suspension. Its creative flow no longer circulates, for it requires its medium and the latter is suspended. But another stratum of the subliminal self can be, and is often, summoned. I refer principally to that section connected with buried memories. Now the command of the hypnotist sets in motion some of the fluid shape, some of the essence directed by the nerve-soul when it operates, it, too, being a part of that invisible fluid body. A portion of its essence is used, merely in order that certain sunken memories may be drawn to the surface. They could not come if the nerve-soul were actively operating in conjunction with the image sent by the subliminal self. Actually hypnotism opens up a more direct road to the subliminal mind, that is to say, that part of it which is loose and floating. The Unifying Principle, the centre that sends the message when the ordinary consciousness is operating, is also out of touch when its medium is suspended.

SLEEP

You will understand, therefore, that a part only of the subliminal self can be drawn on by the subject.

?
Vibrations

XX

TELEPATHY

MAY I give you my opinion as regards telepathy between the living? It is different in some respects from telepathy from the dead. There must be a far greater adjustment on our side than when the two subjects are alive. However, we are perfectly conscious of our inner mind, so, on the whole, it is simpler for us. If you were more fully aware of your deeper mind it would become quite easy for you to act as a receiver or as a transmitter. But let me try and explain. I have already spoken of a fluid body which links up the subconscious mind with the physical body. Now, this fluid shape, as I shall call it, is constantly changing, it has an elasticity quite foreign to the physical body. It is decidedly impressionable, amazingly sensitive. The trouble is that it is not intimately connected with the brain; or, rather, the human being does not understand how to make that connection. He can do so partly by detaching his mind from certain matters so that the actual mechanism is not working at top speed. It can also be manipulated in another way. Now, there is memory in relation to the fluid. It can be tapped through the fluid. The fluid can also receive what you call the telepathic message. It does indeed receive many of them, but only in the case of certain rare human beings can the telepathic record be conveyed to the brain. I want to make clear that the fluid launches a message into space. It is not carried usually by any entity, but there are many floating filaments of mind which help to draw it into the fluid on which it makes the impression that may be conveyed from it to the brain.

The scientist seems to believe that no physiological or physical means can explain telepathy between the living. I say that the physiology of the soul can explain it. That would at first sight seem a contradiction in terms, but actually it is not quite the case. There are infinitesimal particles not yet discovered by human beings. They are so minute that you would not recognise them as matter. But to the dead, who have far finer perceptions, these particles are suggestive of matter though they cannot be said to resemble matter in most particulars. Anyway, these tiny atoms are influenced by emotion and will. These give a driving force to the atoms, the brain can give them the shape in which they are received.

TELEPATHY

The nerve-soul or the nerve-memory is, naturally, very much influenced by the consciousness. I have already told you that it responds very rapidly to stimuli. Very well, the consciousness braces itself for an effort. It desires to catch the thought sent by the agent when you arrange a telepathic experiment. That mere desire has, with many people, the effect of stiffening the nerve-soul into a kind of stillness. In that condition it is motionless. It cannot receive. The brain has sent an instinctive warning to it not to receive. In this case instinct conquers the conscious desire. It is the instinct that protects the individual against the inroads of alien thought. In its essence it is a right one. If you kept perpetually registering the thoughts of others a very unwholesome condition of brain might develop. Nature, therefore, gives the human being this protection from the many arrows of thought that might pierce the armour of consciousness and injure the mechanism. If a human being has this instinct sufficiently controlled he is likely to prove receptive. The nerve-memory or nerve-soul is, of course, very directly connected with the inner mind which plays its part in the reception of a telepathic message.

* * * * *

The term "fluid" must not be taken in its literal sense.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

I would not have used such a word in this connection when on earth. But now, for the sake of simplicity, and because the nerve-soul or shape is suggestive of something that flows, I employ this term which, at least, is suggestive and not in any respect technical.

Neither must the words I have employed in connection with the planes be taken literally. They are symbolic of those particular states.

NOTE TO SECOND EDITION. I am at present on the Fourth plane, which is known to me as "Eidos." I have, however, been, as St. Paul, permitted, when in a certain subjective state, to travel even to the Seventh Heaven to commune with God and to obtain thereby a renewal of spiritual strength. When I communed thus, I obtained what certain rare mystics obtain, a knowledge and sense of the Whole and of its various parts. This knowledge I brought back with me—or at any rate a fragment of it—to Eidos. I have also gathered knowledge from the souls who dwell on the higher planes. These may descend to us in Eidos when we withdraw from that world, entering for a time into the quiet and into that prayerful solitude that can be peopled with higher beings.—F. W. H. M.

XXI

THE INTERPENETRATION OF THOUGHT BETWEEN THE TWO WORLDS

THERE is continual interpenetration of thought between the visible and invisible worlds and that is what makes communication with you all the more difficult. If we could separate and classify the vast accumulation of floating thought from the living and the dead it would be far more easy then, with the way clear, to send you one easy flow of thought from one individual discarnate mind. It is possible to get lost in the vast forest of men's fancies, more particularly when you go out as a discarnate explorer. You are pretty sure to pick up false trails and in the end to give up the soluble problem in disgust. I speak not alone of minds but of the continual currents of thought thrown out by such millions tossed through our mighty Mother, the Universe, whose illimitable womb harbours them all.

I beg of you to remember that I am but a fallible shade. However, it is well in this difficult matter to lay down as our foundation certain premises. Firstly, let us take, for example, the average educated man. It is possible for him, while in the physical body, and while he is at the zenith of his mental power, to enter three states which differ very considerably from one another: first, the condition of deep sleep; second, the subjective state; third, the state of ordinary consciousness. You must allow much latitude for the subjective condition. It can vary to a wide degree. It may be induced by artificial means, through hypnotism. A subject well trained to respond to the hypnotist will, as you are aware, perform amazing feats, recall memories of early childhood, be insensible to pain, and, I believe, even obtain, at times, knowledge that appears to be of a wholly supernormal character. The Indian mystic can enter very easily into the subjective state and can, at times, learn of the doings of strangers who are many miles away from him. He can, in short, make mental journeys.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

Now, in our life—the life of the so-called dead—there are three states also, though it cannot be said that they closely resemble the three orders of consciousness that prevail for man. Even when asleep you are, in a sense, conscious, sometimes more so than when you are in this subjective state, for pain or noise may rouse you, whereas the deeply entranced man may not feel pain, may not be even roused by thunder. When we discarnate beings desire to communicate through some sensitive we enter a dream or subjective state. There are two degrees of it that are important in relation to ourselves. If we are but slightly entranced we are detached from the memory of concrete facts in our past life. Further, if we communicate directly through the medium, though we often retain our personality, our manner of speech, we are frequently unable to communicate through the medium's hand or voice many exact facts about our past career on earth, sometimes not even our own names.

We can enter into the deeper mind of the medium and read many of the memories belonging to him, which are outside the cells, or neurons, being joined to them by invisible threads.

Now, you are aware of the strange association of ideas. You met a Mr. Tom Jones at a tea-party ten years ago. You had forgotten all about him, even his name, but someone mentions it to you. At the moment it means nothing, perhaps, but in a minute or two you remember the Mr. Tom Jones you met ten years ago at a tea-party. In the same manner the discarnate being may find certain memories in the subconsciousness of the medium which will recall certain facts connected with his past earth life. Then the memory is rapidly communicated.

INTERPENETRATION OF THOUGHT

I would now speak of the second degree of trance which may be penetrated by the discarnate being. It is a pleasant and, at times, very happy state. It is nearer to the condition of sleep and dreams than the one I have previously mentioned. When we are on this plane of consciousness we can enter the subjective mind of man. But it is necessary that he should come to our aid in this respect. He must either be closely bound to us by ties of affection or he must be what you call "psychic." Very well, those dear friends or relatives, who through their affection or love, or intense interest in us, conjure us up in their subjective thought, open the door to us dreaming shades, and we enter again into the earth dream. We perceive pictures of actual earth happenings, imprinting themselves on the subconscious mind of the one who has cleared the way for us, bridged the chasm with their love or their intense interest. Often we perceive most trivial incidents mirrored on their subconsciousness. Sometimes, when we are really thoroughly submerged in this dream atmosphere, we can get into touch not alone with one subconscious mind but with the subconscious mind of many thousands. It is like a wide sea stretching out before us. Much of it is scarcely apprehended. We can only tap it here and there, but, with the assistance of the guide we may draw out of this sea of mind the particular association of ideas that corresponds with a happening, a name, or a place in our earth life. We recognise it and use it as evidence of identity when we are communicating.

Now, the third subjective state leads us to the Great Memory, but, alas, it is not the condition or state in which we approach our people on earth. We can gather up many of our memories when we thus reach out into the vast subconscious—or rather super-conscious—mind of the race. So I will not dwell upon this aspect at any great length beyond remarking that those who have been among discarnate beings for many ages, those who are highly developed, the possessors of wisdom among us, can, on very rare occasions, while in the third state, communicate through a sensitive the actual history recorded in the Great Memory. But such beings are not suffered to communicate their own wisdom, for it cannot be expressed in terms of language, only an echo being sometimes caught which is rendered in the form of the inspired utterance of genius. Nevertheless, discarnate beings, who have only been a few years absent from the earth, in many cases cannot enter into this third subjective condition when they use the physical mechanism in order to give their thoughts to the world.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

It is true that we communicate by pictures or images, by signs which the deeper mind of the sensitive apprehends, and sometimes we may convey, by a sign or symbol, a name or word unknown to the medium. It would be well for you to note that what you call "normal consciousness" means the raising up of the barriers between your mind and another man's mind. But behind all that there is among human beings a deeper self, a subjective mentality that can trespass into the domain of other subliminal selves, that meets with few barriers. This matter, however, belongs to another story.

I would ask you not to be troubled by my remark that when discarnate beings pursue an active, eager life here the greater part of their concrete memories are temporarily in abeyance. Mark you, they are in a state of normal psychic consciousness under such circumstances. But a discarnate son and father, or any others who have dear remembrance of one another, may, if they so desire, recapture all their old memories of facts in their earth life if they choose to enter the third subjective state together. Then these two discarnate beings can re-enact, if they will, the drama of their earth career page by page. They can recall all the infinitesimal knowledge they reaped with such care on earth. Homer, The Odyssey, all the painfully acquired Greek and Latin of school-boy days, recollections of youthful games, of hoarded learning may be gathered anew in all clearness. The very conversations at tea-tables or at dull dinner parties can be recalled and digested, perhaps with some boredom again. You can gather to you all the old rusty relics, all the little quarrels and worries, all your proudly gotten learning if that is your desire. But you must, of course, enter, with your friend or relative, into the third subjective state if you yearn to play again the old rôles in the past, if you would wistfully finger once more the precious little details of circumstance and happenings in your earth life, if you would, indeed, be like some old man or woman who takes from their drawer ancient love-letters, locket of hair, and little miniatures framed in gold which recall dear departed days.

INTERPENETRATION OF THOUGHT

But many of us are of an adventurous temperament. It amuses us, for a while, to dally with these pages in the Book of Life, and from them, when we meet our loved ones after death, we derive a certain wistful pleasure, or a quiet delight, without the pangs of the flesh attached to them. We tire, however, after a very brief while, of these heaped-up remains of our past careers, all so carefully stored in the Great Granary. We would pass from out one fold of time into another; we would be bold and adventure into the imagination of God. So, while in this third subjective state, we turn again the pages of the Book of Life and read the future of our race. We gaze upon a drama that has not yet been enacted upon the earth, the vague echo of which is sometimes caught by prophets and sooth-sayers. We perceive the wanderings of those begotten by us, the fate of those who are of our blood, who bear upon their foreheads the seal of kinship with us. And, indeed, many of us sorrowfully close the Book of Life when we have thus gazed into a future that is not yet for men, sprung out of the Unknown, out of the boundless sea, which, I must again remind you, is the creation of the all-pervading imagination of God.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

Finally, the power to enter the third subjective state and thus to follow the future as well as the past, page by page, is bestowed only upon those souls whom human beings—to use a trite adjective—would call “advanced” or would hail as “spiritually developed.” Many millions of souls, who have passed through the Gates of Death, rest within the borders and limitations of their own psychic development. I use the word “psychic” here in the general sense, not in its relation to the study of survival after death. Such myriad souls follow a road and a destiny that does not, as a rule, lead them for a time, at least, to the great super-conscious mind of the earth. These so-called dead remain in spheres and states of pleasant—or sometimes disagreeable—illusion. I cannot write concerning all the souls who pass to an invisible life from the arms of their foster mother—earth.

NOTE. When I say we are in a subjective state during the time of communication, I would imply by it a special form of concentration so that we are able thus to detach ourselves from the life we live on, say, the Fourth plane. Equally, when a human being is engaged on a difficult piece of writing, he must detach himself from his surroundings, refuse to be beguiled by the view from his windows, by the sight of the pictures in his room. For his difficult task he must live in the world his pen is describing, enter a subjective state, become detached, also, from the memory of concrete facts in his past life. This applies to a considerable degree to the discarnate being who directly communicates through the medium. But, before he takes control of the medium, before he enters the subjective state, he may prepare his message, may draw up certain facts concerning his past earth life, which he can then give through the medium, though he may be unable, while communicating, to give evidential facts which are not contained in his message.—F. W. H. M.

XXII

HAPPINESS

FOR THE AVERAGE MAN AND WOMAN

IN discussing happiness it is necessary to have a sense of proportion and to classify human beings. The life that brings true and permanent joy to one will bring only discontent and positive distress to another.

Learned men have endeavoured to declare hard-and-fast principles of happiness and in so doing have worked on a false premise. Infinite is the variety of human nature. You cannot say to any class, nation, man or race, "Follow the principles I have imparted to you and you will discover happiness." The individual or nation in question may not be in a sufficiently developed state physically, mentally, and spiritually to be capable of applying such principles to their daily life, or, if they are capable, the principles may be so framed that the promised happiness resolves itself into boredom or acute disillusionment.

For instance, the Christian and Buddhist ascetics and mystics are in accord as to the road to happiness. They will assure you that no true happiness can be derived from the use of the senses, neither can it be obtained by money or by power and authority over others. They recommend complete renunciation, scorn of wealth, power, beauty, in whatsoever way it expresses itself. They claim that true happiness can be found only in contemplation, in communion with God—in contempt of all those works of God which please the senses or satisfy natural desires.

I am afraid their views are open to many and serious objections. For the mystic, perhaps, this inner life constitutes the only real happiness. But ninety men out of a hundred are not mystics, they belong to a general pattern and are constitutionally incapable of putting such recommendations into practice, or, if they attempt to do so, they merely warp, limit, and embitter their natures.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

True happiness for the average man is to be found in such words as moderation, self-control, and freedom. He must first learn to control himself, and, that power once acquired, he must learn to control people and situations wisely. Thus he wins his freedom. Secondly, Tom Jones has to gain some knowledge of his own unimportance in the prevailing scheme of things. Thirdly, he should cultivate any special creative power he may possess.

Now, his control of himself gives to him a certain serenity, so that daily worries and misfortunes fail to penetrate, fail to upset his calm. His power to control other people will save him from physical distress, from destitution, and will enable him to defeat any persons who may, in various emotional ways, endeavour to turn his life into a hell. His sense of his own unimportance will, in itself, bring happiness by leading him naturally to throw himself into other people's lives, so that "self" can be temporarily forgotten and a lively sympathy extended where it is genuinely needed.

Now, the creative instinct is an essential part of a man's nature. Its wise expression should be one of his principal preoccupations. It springs, partly, from the sex urge, but often offers the greatest happiness in activities quite apart from sex. Whatever a man's sex life, he would be wise if he sought in some way or other for an outlet for the creative principle. If he has not a constructive mind or imagination he can express it merely in the enjoyment of beauty in some form or other, in a wise but controlled indulgence of his senses. But happy is the man with self-control as well as real creative power, however humble may be the medium of its expression.

HAPPINESS

Usually, the ascetic who recommends you to scorn money has no anxieties on that score. Either his friends or admirers supply him with all he needs or he has an excellent income of his own.

I therefore strongly advise the seeker of happiness to have a due appreciation of money. Without it he must starve or experience such physical discomfort, such ill-health, that he is unable to keep the light of his intelligence or soul bright within its temple. He is no longer free because, hourly, the clamorous needs of the body besiege him, and if he is employed for long hours at a small wage he has no time or physical strength for the cultivation of his own nature or for the enjoyment he can give to others through its fruition.

A desire for money in moderation is a virtue, for it happens to be a desire to become a complete man, and, through such completion and its resultant content, to benefit others.

Happiness comes through effort; through a wise and controlled indulgence in the pleasures of the senses; through athletic activities for the perfecting of the body; through study for the development of the mind; and through toleration or a charitable outlook. The development of these leads to the cultivation of the spirit.

True happiness will be found by the average man in the constant and wise use of all his talents, all his powers—of body, senses, mind, and spiritual perception.

Lastly, in wisdom will the modern human being find the secret of life and the secret of serenity. Faith, hope, and charity—all these virtues commended by St. Paul—are contained within this lofty word and all are made lovely by its radiance. For faith, hope, and charity without wisdom are without light, and things that are hidden in darkness may not attain to healthy growth.

[Unfinished, owing to illness of G. C.]

XXIII

GOD IS GREATER THAN LOVE

It is strange to me that God should be described as loving and good, or as jealous and vengeful. He is none of these. He is the inevitable, the "Omega" of all life. But He is neither evil nor good, neither cruel nor kind. He is the Purpose behind all purpose. He neither loves nor hates, there is no thought created that expresses Him, for He would seem to me to be all creation and yet apart from it. He is the Idea behind the myriad worlds, behind the unnumbered Universes.

When we speak of love and hate we think in human terms. Perhaps we picture to ourselves the beautiful love of a mother for her son; we think of a man who loves his wife devotedly; we think of heroic deeds performed for the sake of love. Then we visualise hatred—our loathing of some individual who has tricked us, deceived us, or committed some rather evil crime.

Now, neither human love nor human hate even at their highest can be regarded as qualities possessed by God. For in all love as we know it there is some taint, some streak of desire. Therefore love is not of a purity which we can associate with God. And even the noblest hatred has in it some soil, so that we blaspheme if we couple it with the Name of God.

There is, in short, no phrase that we can apply to God in this connection. We might say, "He is infinite compassion, infinite tenderness"; but he is not the "loving Father" as described by the prayer-book. He is something loftier and grander. "A loving Father"—in the sense the world uses the word—loves only his own. In a war, for instance, the English will claim God's love as their particular property, the Germans will claim it as theirs. Always man uses the term "love" when he wishes to imply that it is a devotion for certain selected persons or selected things. He may mechanically say that God loves everything He has created, but he is utterly unable to understand such a condition of mind, so this phrase is meaningless from his point of view. I would not cheapen the idea of the Creator by calling Him a God of love. For, inevitably, I should be limiting our conception of God; I should reduce Him to human terms; I would, in short, make a man of Him.

GOD IS GREATER THAN LOVE

No, God does not love. For love is a human virtue that is like a flame, that leaps up and down, that at one moment in life may be a glory; but when there are many moments the glory cannot be maintained, and love becomes, even with the best of men and women, tainted by irritability, by some peevishness, or by some selfish melancholy.

God does not change. His fatherhood and motherhood of the Universe never falter, never fail. If He were love, then the marvellous creation of the life you know would never have continued so perfectly. It would have been subject to the changeable character of that thing you call love. At times there might have been cessation of growth—great harvests destroyed, vast tracts of country laid waste because the heavens did not continue to gather moisture. Tides might have spread themselves over half the visible earth, mountains leaped from their rocky seats, many millions of living creatures suddenly perishing. I tell you that if God possessed love, as man understands and knows it, the history of the world would have been wholly changed, changed rather for evil than for good. God is greater than love. That is the phrase you should utter.

I know that our Master, Christ, preached to the Jews, saying "God is love." And to Christ God was love. For

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

Christ set no human meaning to the term as has been the way with every soul who has walked upon this earth since the world began. The claim that Jesus was the Son of God is based upon the fact that He was the one unique Son of Man who knew the mystery of God, who, in saying "God is love," alone of all men understood what He meant by that phrase.

All sons and daughters of Adam, when they declare that "God is love," mean by it love in the human sense: for it is all that they understand and know. So I would counsel finite minds to endeavour to image the Deity in the phrase, "God is greater than love."

PART III

A RECORD OF SOME CROSS-REFERENCES
BETWEEN MRS. OSBORNE LEONARD AND MISS GERALDINE CUMMINS

Arranged by E. B. GIBBES

“Every case is a new stone in the edifice the dead are building for the living—out of the shadows as they believe them to be —beyond the grave.” (Myers’s script.)

CROSS-REFERENCES BETWEEN MRS. OSBORNE LEONARD AND MISS GERALDINE CUMMINS

FREDERIC MYERS first purported to speak in my presence in November 1924. Miss Cummins and I had been invited to tea with an elderly couple—Captain and Mrs. R.—who had been interested in psychic matters for many years. During this time they claimed to have received numbers of messages from the dead by means of an improvised “ouija board.” They were anxious to see what results would be obtained from Miss Cummins’s association with them.

Miss Cummins and Captain R. sat on opposite sides of a small table on which the letters of the alphabet had been arranged in a circle, their hands resting on a piece of glass. After a few moments the glass began to move, spelling out, letter by letter, “Frederic Myers. You are investigators. Do you know my friends?”

E. B. G. (recording). Which friends? We know of you, of course.

F. M. Barrett.

G. D. C. You mean Sir William Barrett?

F. M. Yes. Also Balfour. I want to make it clear to you that the time is ripe for our communication with the earth. . . .

This entity then expressed his desire to speak through two or three mediums in an endeavour to put through what is called “cross-correspondence.”<sup>1</sup> He then departed, that is to say, the movement of the glass ceased.

<sup>1</sup> i.e. the giving of some piece of evidence through one medium and following it with a further reference through another.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

The name "Frederic Myers" came as a complete surprise. We had not thought of endeavouring to get into touch with him, and, as stated elsewhere, had no personal interest in him. In fact, we were expecting friends of the Rs. to communicate; and they were not a little disappointed at this unexpected conversation, Myers being a stranger to them also.

Thinking it might be of interest to follow up the lead given us by Myers and to trace whether or no his first appearance was merely the invention of that unknown quantity "the subconscious mind," I decided to ask Miss Cummins's control "Astor" to find him and to await results.

A week later, therefore, at one of our usual sittings for automatic writing in my own flat, Myers again purported to speak to us. My comments are in parentheses.

F. M. May I talk, please?

(E. B. G. Are you Frederic Myers?)

F. M. That is the name I was known by.

(E. B. G. Please excuse our asking for you.)

F. M. Not at all. I am interested by the new shape of the flame.<sup>1</sup>

(E. B. G. We wanted to know if you really spoke to us at the flat of the old people the other day?)

F. M. I tried to speak through the old man but it was very confusing. Someone else was trying to talk too. . . . Anyway, I tried to get through my message in spite of him and other influences.

I referred to the possibility of the intervention of the subconscious mind, stating that allowance had to be made for this when investigating psychic phenomena.

<sup>1</sup> This refers to the automatist's psychic "light." An explanation of this light (which, it is affirmed by unseen communicators, surrounds all those gifted with supernormal powers) was subsequently given by Myers. See Appendix II (p. 180).

A RECORD OF SOME CROSS-REFERENCES

The alleged Myers then gave the explanation of the manner in which the inner mind of the medium is impressed from the Unseen. (See Introduction, page 23.)

During this writing it occurred to me that, from a point of view of evidence, it would be of interest if the soi-disant Myers could give a message through Mrs. Osborne Leonard, to whom I was shortly going for a sitting. I put this suggestion to him, refraining, however, from mentioning the actual date of my appointment. It should be explained that, in this form of communication between the two worlds, the "sitter" makes his or her comments aloud and the reply is quickly written down by the automatist. Myers at once replied that he would think of something, adding that he was "only too pleased to speak," and continuing, "You know before I died I was quite sure we survived death. But the public never learnt that from me. I am telling you of it because I want to encourage you to go on in the belief that we are speaking. It is the absence of the belief that helps to make a barrier between us."

At a later sitting I suggested that he should give us some message which he would endeavour to put through Feda, Mrs. Leonard's control. He replied: "Yes. I will try to do that. I am most happy to have met you."

The above form of conversation may sound commonplace and mundane. But, after all, if personality persists after death and death means merely parting from the physical garment we call the body, these conversations are perfectly natural.

Before recounting the cross-references between Mrs. Leonard and Miss Cummins, it may be of interest to record a further explanation of the reason Myers gave for appearing so unexpectedly at the flat of Captain and Mrs. R. In answer to a question on this point, he replied:

"We feel that the present time is ripe for communication. We feel that efforts are being made in various quarters on earth to understand us. So we are determined to seize the opportunity to break through and convince human beings of our entire individuality, of the indestructibility of our personality. I was, in consequence, looking for the signal which to me always means that some human being is endeavouring to speak to us. On the occasion of our first meeting the signal came to me most clearly. I was, therefore, a little disappointed at the difficulties of communication. There were others who were anxious to speak, so it was difficult to send a message that was in any way adequate that evening. . . . We are summoned in two ways—one, by a strong desire from a sitter. Now desire has a certain force of which you, who are in the flesh, can have no conception. It has a drawing quality, it acts like a peremptory summons. We usually respond eagerly. In the second case there is no desire on the part of the medium or sitters, but there is a strong desire on our side. I felt I must find new mediums. I had been wishing to find them for some time. The two mediums, when they sat that night, had a rather bright psychic light. It was possible for me to perceive it, and though there was no link between us I came to you and spoke. It was a little adventurous perhaps, but I have presented myself at sittings in that way before. . . .”

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

It is necessary to state emphatically that Mrs. Osborne Leonard and Miss Cummins have not, to this day, met each other. Neither have they corresponded with each other. All idea, therefore, of any conscious communication between these two individuals must be definitely ruled out. Neither had I any contact with Mrs. Leonard other than at the sittings.

In connection with the following it is necessary to relate that a large meeting of the Society for Psychical Research had been held on Friday, December 12th, 1924. At this meeting the late Lord Balfour had spoken, giving his views on the telepathic experiments which had been carried out by Professor Gilbert Murray and others. Miss Cummins and I were present and the newspapers recorded details described at the meeting.

A RECORD OF SOME CROSS-REFERENCES

On Sunday, December 14th, Miss Cummins sat for automatic writing at my flat. The following is an extract from the script.

Astor is here. Am I called to speak?

(E. B. G. Will you please ask Frederic Myers to speak to us?)

Astor. Yes, if you will wait. (Pause.)

F. M. I was told you wished to meet me again.

(E. B. G. You said you might like to give us a message and then endeavour to send it through Feda.)

F. M. Most certainly. . . . I should like to try. Feda might be able to receive a message, or do you think a part of a sentence would be better?

(E. B. G. You probably know best.)

F. M. It is harder to put through half a sentence than an idea or an image. I will give you two subjects. One had better be something in connection with mediumship. I will try to convey through her the idea that I am speaking through this lady. . . . Would you like me to speak to you about the ideas we have on our side? . . . First, let me tell you that we are aware that Balfour has spoken at last. You may imagine that it was his own idea. On the contrary, he was most reluctant to speak. To the last he had a certain feeling against it, but was impelled by something outside himself. That something was the desire of the dead, of Gurney and myself.<sup>1</sup> I will try to convey this <sup>1</sup> This remark must not be taken as meaning that Lord Balfour had hitherto reserved his opinion in connection with psychical research. Lord Balfour had been President of the Society and had never, in any way, concealed his great interest in the subject, although he had been too much occupied in other ways to do active work. The allusion undoubtedly refers to the fact of his having been occupied with other impression to Feda. It is difficult, and if I fail you must understand that it is neither Feda's fault nor mine. It may be impossible if others are anxious to speak. I would like to make one request of you. The day—or two days—before you go to Feda, think strongly of the fact that I have written through this lady. Think of me, Frederic Myers, by name, visualise it, think also—Myers has written that Balfour has at last spoken and that he was reluctant to speak but impelled by us to do so. You will probably reply, "Then this will be a case of telepathy." Certainly not, in the sense of telepathy from you to Feda. What such concentration on your part will do is this: it will generate a certain thought-force which will draw me to your sitting and give me the necessary power which will enable me to make myself and my message known to Feda.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

You understand that I am not connected with you by any ties, so it is necessary for me to have some kind of magnet to draw me there.

(E. B. G. You may meet N., a friend, who speaks to me from your side at that sitting.)

F. M. I shall be pleased to meet her. It will depend on the grossness or fineness or the particles that make up her soul-body whether I can speak with her.

affairs and, therefore, unable to speak on the subject. It must be mentioned that a member of the Council of the S.P.R. states that, in reference to the meeting of the Society referred to above, Lord Balfour spoke mainly at his suggestion. It is quite possible, however, that Lord Balfour was "reluctant to speak" and that he had a "certain feeling against it," but was impelled by some unseen influence to fall in with the suggestion made to him by the member of the Society already alluded to. The interest in the statement lies chiefly in the fact that through Mrs. Leonard the communicating entity corroborates his remarks on this point written through Miss Cummins and makes a direct allusion to the S.P.R. meeting (page 145), stating that he (Myers) was there "and where friends of his were too, people that he has been definitely helping and impressing." If the alleged Myers picked up my own trivial little feeling of annoyance to which reference is made on page 147, it is quite possible that he also gathered the condition of the mind of Lord Balfour at the moment of speaking.

A RECORD OF SOME CROSS-REFERENCES

(E. B. G. Near the end of the sitting, if Fedra says nothing, shall I ask her to look for someone else?)

F. M. Yes, please, that would help. It is difficult to break new ground. If I once spoke—while you were present—to her, I have no doubt that it would be easier. We throw out threads of thought upon which we can travel again to the medium. (Note. Here I explained that the automatist and I had both been at the meeting at which Lord Balfour had spoken on the subject of telepathy, and that an account of it had been published in the papers. I suggested that such a subject, therefore, might not be considered wise for cross-references.) I understand. Then I had better think of an image of another kind. You can still retain the initial statement that I have written through this lady. I will tell her that I intended before I died to write a book expressing my conviction that survival of the dead had been proved. That book was never written by me, but I had a considerable amount of evidence collected, which, to my mind, proved the case for survival once and for all. I will ask you therefore to be so good as to think of this statement of mine two days or a day before you go to Fedra. Kindly rub out of your memory the proposition about Balfour. Place in its stead the fact that Frederic Myers before his death intended to write a book expressing his convictions that the survival of the dead was proved beyond a doubt once and for all. I doubt if any knew of this intention of mine. Nevertheless, this was the case.<sup>1</sup> Do you desire me to write a brief statement of the two things I intend to communicate to Fedra?

(E. B. G. Yes, please.)

<sup>1</sup> Mrs. Salter, of the Society for Psychical Research, commenting on the above, writes: "His book, Human Personality, which contains the record of his own personal convictions concerning survival of death and the possibility of communication with the dead, was published only after his death, though he had collected all the material for it himself." Both Miss Cummins and I were unaware of this.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

F. M. Firstly, Frederic Myers has written through this lady. Secondly, Frederic Myers, before his death, intended to write a book expressing his conviction that the survival of the dead had been proved conclusively. You now have my statement and my name. It will depend on conditions, on your psychic power, on the power of the medium controlled by Feda, whether I succeed or fail. . . . Kindly image my two remarks as you fall asleep to-night. I am obliged to you for this opportunity of experimenting from this side among the living.

The early part of my sitting with Mrs. Leonard on the following day had been devoted to my customary communicators. As I felt the sitting might soon be drawing to a close and there had been no mention of Myers, I suggested to Feda that she should look round and see if anyone else desired to speak to me. Feda made brief references to others whom I could not place. Mindful of the suggestion that, if nothing transpired, I should try to help matters out a little, I told Feda that I was thinking of someone, "a man—a rather important person." It will be noted that I did not indicate the age of the communicator for whom I wished her to look, or to what particular importance I referred.

She then began as follows:—

[Extract from sitting with Mrs. Osborne Leonard,<sup>1</sup> Monday morning, 15th December, 1924. The italics denote correct statements.]

Feda. It's not Mr. T., but someone quite different. . . . There is a man here but he is not a young man, rather an elderly man. I can't see him yet, but I know he is here. He has been here before. And not only here, he has tried to get through somewhere else. He has been somewhere else. I feel as if he is a man rather interested in this subject. I feel I ought to know him very well. I get the feeling of someone who has travelled. When he was on earth he went about and saw people and things. He passed over rather quickly. I can always get the feeling whether they went over quickly or not. I can't see him. I wish I could get his name.

<sup>1</sup> It must be remembered that Mrs. Leonard's form of mediumship is quite unlike that of Miss Cummins. Mrs. Leonard goes into a trance and is controlled by another entity calling herself "Feda." While she is in this state "Feda" takes the messages or translates the entire conversation given by the communicator (in this case Myers) by using the person of the medium.

A RECORD OF SOME CROSS-REFERENCES

(E. B. G. Perhaps he can come a little nearer.)

Feda. He is trying to. Did he do writing?—I get a feeling of writing—not very important writing that people would think a lot of. He did two kinds of writing, like two different subjects almost. He wrote in two quite different ways. M. I am seeing a big M. Was he fond of poetry too? I am seeing the big M still, though I can't see just what he is pushing out to me. Oh, now I see lots of poetry. Do you know, he is not showing me very new poetry—he seems to have been rather clever in understanding old poets—classics, Virgil particularly. Made rather a study of him. He is keeping an appointment with you.

(E. B. G. Excellent!)

Feda. Isn't it funny he can't show himself? You have been somewhere lately he was interested in, and where he was too at the time, and where friends of his were too, people that he has been definitely helping and impressing.

(E. B. G. Yes, very good.)

Feda. The place was full of those gone over—those progressed on the other side and those still doing good here. L. was there.

(E. B. G. Who?)

Feda. Oh, yes, you know L. that this man on the other side was interested in too.

(E. B. G. I know. Quite right.<sup>1</sup>)

Feda. Wait a minute, I can't get that. There seemed to be more than one person there—I get a lot, and one, two, three days. Were you doing something, three days ago, that had to do with him?

<sup>1</sup> Presumably Sir Oliver Lodge. He was present at the meeting.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

(E. B. G. Yes, indirectly.)

Feda. I get the feeling of three days ago.

(E. B. G. Yes, three days ago.)

Feda. You put yourself not exactly in touch with him but in conditions he would be interested in. I cannot quite get it. He is what? He has been very interested in things that have been happening lately which you would know about. He has been interested in you personally—only lately. He has been brought in touch with you and just came in to-day so that you won't think you were mistaken.

(E. B. G. Thank him very much.)

Feda. Fred! I keep getting Fred. It's something to do with Mr. Fred—the clever one who knows Sir Oliver. That is the one you had the assignation with to-day. It must be lately to do with you. I get the feeling it's something just happened.

(E. B. G. That's right—it is only lately.)

Feda. I feel as if you leant over to him through somebody, and he is pleased about it. It is not just something that is done and finished with but something that will go on.

(E. B. G. I hope it will.)

Feda. It was just as well for Feda to get a few facts about him before knowing his name, so that it would make it more clear that Feda did not just jump at him. That's why he was anxious to get in about Virgil. He says he is doing all he can to build up evidence to help the science, if I may call it so, of telepathy, both on your plane and from our plane to yours. He feels he is going to come through again in a third place.<sup>1</sup> . . .

(E. B. G. Does he remember how he talked to me, in making the assignation?)

Feda. He does remember, but is a bit afraid he will not be able to say it now. He says that we must be very careful not to say anything after the sitting—he will probably be able to get through another time. . . . He is very busy on the other side and he is always thinking out new ideas in proving he is in communication with the earth, and was very glad of the opportunity you gave him. Wait a bit—oh dear, not yesterday; that was Sunday. (Pause.) You spoke to him lately, yesterday.

<sup>1</sup> This also transpired.

A RECORD OF SOME CROSS-REFERENCES

(E. B. G. Admirable.)

Feda. Also on Friday there was this indirect connection which you could not quite link up with yesterday, and yet in a sense all was done through you.

(E. B. G. That's quite right.)

Feda. He says at the time you didn't know he was there on Friday, and, well, he laughed and says, "you ought to have thought so, for it is my happy hunting ground."

(E. B. G. [laughing]. Yes, I see.)

Feda. Why were you irritated? He says you were very interested but there was something he felt in you—why did you feel suddenly irritated about someone?

(E. B. G. I don't quite remember.)

Feda. He says you had good reason, it was not being irritated without any reason.

(E. B. G. I was irritated about somebody?)

Feda. As if somebody was rubbing your nerves up a bit.

(E. B. G. Only just on Friday?)

Feda. He felt it on Friday because he was with you. . . .

The sitting ended soon after this and no further allusion was made to Myers. This extract contains many cross-references between Mrs. Leonard and Miss Cummins. Feda describes an elderly man who has spoken to me elsewhere, a man interested in this subject. The letter M. That he was keeping an appointment with me. She then passes on to what we had decided to "rub out" of my memory as being unsuitable for cross-references, i.e. any allusion to the meeting of the S.P.R. She says: You have been somewhere lately he was interested in, where he was too at the time and where friends of his were also, people that he has been definitely helping and impressing. . . . Was I doing something concerning him three days previously? . . . Not exactly in touch with him but in conditions he would be interested in? He has been very interested in things that have been happening lately which I would know about. He has been interested in me, personally, only lately and just came in to-day so that I should not think I was mistaken. . . . The name Fred. The one I had the assignation with to-day. She feels as if I leant over to him through someone. I spoke to him lately, yesterday. On Friday there was this indirect connection with me which I could not quite link up with yesterday.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

Also, Feda's remark that he "was very glad of the opportunity you gave him" had been similarly expressed through Miss Cummins on the previous evening (p. 144).

"Leaning over to him through someone" exactly describes my attitude when reading over the automatic script as it comes through Miss Cummins, and conveys "the idea" that Myers was speaking through her. It is noticeable that the communicator does not attempt to give the name or the initials of the automatist. Had he endeavoured to do this, Feda might have jumped to the conclusion that he referred to Miss Cummins, for she (Feda) had spoken of her to me at previous sittings and I had informed Myers of this fact at the last sitting for automatic writing. No difficulty should have been experienced in alluding by name to Miss Cummins, had the communicator desired to do so. The manner in which he indicated the latter denoted a communicator versed in psychical research. If he had at once conveyed to Feda Miss Cummins's name or initials, or in any way connected her with writing, not only would he have given something away, but telepathy or thought-transference from me to

A RECORD OF SOME CROSS-REFERENCES

Mrs. Leonard might be claimed as an explanation. Moreover, he deliberately referred to the S.P.R. meeting, which I had, as arranged, "rubbed from my mind." At the same time, by adding the sentence that we "could not quite link up with yesterday," he seemed to indicate that he appreciated the fact that the proposition to put through a reference to the meeting had been cancelled, and that thereby it was not one of the two statements upon which I had been instructed to concentrate. In spite of this it may be held that Mrs. Leonard merely read my mind and interpreted it as described; that she was also aware of the S.P.R. meeting. It will be noted, however, that until I suggested to Feda that she should look for another communicator, she (or Mrs. Leonard) apparently received no impression whatsoever from me concerning details which would have been uppermost in my thoughts at the time. Be this as it may, Feda makes one allusion which appears difficult to attribute to telepathy or to any similar theory. I refer to her sudden reference to my being irritated when at the meeting. "Why did you feel suddenly irritated about someone? . . . you had good reason . . . as if somebody was rubbing your nerves up . . . he felt it on Friday."

Now, there is no conceivable means by which Mrs. Leonard could have, normally, acquired this information. Yet the allusion is astonishingly accurate. I had been extremely vexed at finding myself seated next to a friend—a Mrs. F.—whose attitude towards psychical research has always rather annoyed me. Feda distinctly points out that the irritation was caused by an individual and not by an event; that I had good cause to be irritated and that it occurred at that particular meeting of the S.P.R. Had Myers really been present at this meeting and conscious of my feelings he would certainly consider that I had good cause to be irritated. Mrs. F.'s attitude towards psychic phenomena was of a somewhat superficial and stupid character, and, to a serious student like Myers, would appear extremely tiresome.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

It is difficult to see how this trivial little fact could have been conveyed to Mrs. Leonard except by the unseen entity who claimed to have observed my unconscious irritation. It may be postulated, however, that the memory of the annoyance was registered in my subconscious mind, and that Mrs. Leonard merely sensed my latent feelings in the matter. From my remarks recorded at the time, it will be seen that I had no recollection of this feeling of irritation and was completely mystified by Feda's allusion to it.

Only one of the two statements which Myers had arranged through Miss Cummins, to mention to Feda, reached me, and that in a manner which I was not at all anticipating. If the enumeration of all these details is explained by thought-transference (including the very one to which it was decided that no allusion should be made), why did Mrs. Leonard fail to select the other statement concerning the book? It was, obviously, one of the two prominent ideas in my mind.

It would seem that Myers deliberately endeavoured to refer to a matter which we had mutually arranged to avoid. This again suggests an intelligence accustomed to the investigation of psychic phenomena from the earth side. Moreover, it will be seen that Myers makes a spontaneous admission to this effect through Miss Cummins (page 153).

We must also recognise the manner in which Myers first endeavoured to disclose his identity at the Leonard sitting.<sup>1</sup> Among other things he indicated that he wrote on two different subjects, and that he was connected with poetry and the classics.

I was aware that Myers had communicated to other members of the S.P.R. through the same channel. But that does not invalidate the evidence he gives concerning me, personally, and my association with Miss Cummins.

<sup>1</sup> See Appendix III, p. 183.

A RECORD OF SOME CROSS-REFERENCES

The next sitting for automatic writing with Miss Cummins took place on December 17th, two days after the Leonard sitting. On this occasion I decided to reverse matters and to ask Myers, through her, what he had said through Mrs. Leonard.

It must be clearly understood that I did not, in any manner, discuss the matter with the automatist. She was neither aware of the date of the Leonard sitting nor if the experiment had proved successful. Any recollection that she might have had concerning it would, as it happened, have been almost completely obliterated from her mind. During those few days she was entirely absorbed in endeavouring to straighten out affairs of an exceedingly worrying and personal character. In questioning Myers through her, I endeavoured to avoid giving any hint as to the success or otherwise of the suggested cross-references.

The sitting opened in the usual way, Astor announcing at once that Frederic Myers was near.

F. M. I must apologise for having in a sense failed.

(E. B. G. In what way?)

F. M. You made a request and I tried to carry it out. But conditions were curious and I fear you will have nothing to report in the matter.

(E. B. G. Were you not able to come?)

F. M. Yes, I tried to make myself apprehended and endeavoured to catch the attention of the control. But she is so very lively, and even when made aware of me did not seem really to grasp my significance or my message. She made definite statements and remarks but I found it hard to keep up. My perceptions when adjusted to earth are not rapid in their working. . . . The noise of so many thoughts made it seem as if I were in a factory with machinery buzzing loudly about me. I felt that only by great concentration could my thoughts get through. So many were thinking near me, though Feda only chose from the crowd two or three others.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

(E. B. G. I think you were very successful.)

F. M. Good, you surprise me! I felt sure a part of my statement had not been taken in, but I tried hard enough.

(E. B. G. Do you remember at all what you said?)

F. M. I believe I got through the initial statement that I had spoken through this lady. I also tried to make it clear about the book. I think the fact of a book seemed to be conveyed, but I feared that exactitude was lacking—the fact that it would express the belief that survival was once and for all proved.

(E. B. G. She was not quite clear about that.)

F. M. That was the important point. You must understand that I had never been really emphatic and definite with regard to survival when I wrote my previous books. . . . I was interested and struck by the strange struggle for speech with the earth on the part of so many, but of course it led to my not getting through the most important point—my emphatic belief in survival while I was on earth. . . .

In connection with the above, the following remarks should be noted.

Myers at once wrote that he had "in a sense failed." This was correct if definite allusion to the two statements was indicated. Moreover, he infers at once that he did succeed in making his presence felt; that he tried to carry out my request and that "conditions were curious." Though I had given no hint to Miss Cummins that Myers had purported to speak through Mrs. Leonard, in answer to my question, he replies at once in the affirmative. He says he "endeavoured to catch the attention of the control." The reader will realise the accuracy of this statement if he refers to the commencement of the Leonard sitting and to my remarks leading up to it. It is true that Feda did not at first grasp who was giving evidence, and, from the verbatim record, it seemed obvious that he had difficulty in catching her attention. Through Miss Cummins (who certainly in those days knew nothing of a Leonard sitting) he mentions the noise of the many thoughts around, and it is quite correct that there seemed to be several others hovering near Feda at the time. It is further correct that Feda only chose two or three of them. Through Miss Cummins, Myers correctly affirms that he "felt sure a part of my statement had not been taken in." In answer to my question as to what he said through Feda, he at once replies that he believes he got through the very statement which Feda most distinctly implied, i.e. that he "had spoken through this lady." He immediately follows this with the comment that the fact of a book seemed to be conveyed but that he fears "exactitude was lacking." This assumption appears correct, for Feda certainly referred to two kinds of writing. But the direct statement concerning his book connected with his belief in survival is not indicated, though Feda makes an indirect allusion to a man "rather interested in this subject."

A RECORD OF SOME CROSS-REFERENCES

At the conclusion of the remarks reproduced above I hinted that it would be inadvisable for me to say much in reply on account of giving away information to the mind of the automatist. Myers spontaneously continued:

F. M. Yes, I understand. I tried to say something about Balfour in spite of your criticism of such a subject, but there, again, I found it hard with the buzzing.

Now, it will be recollected that the impression left in the mind of the automatist would have been that no attempt was to be made to refer to Lord Balfour or to the meeting. Yet this remark corroborates the statement made through Mrs. Leonard, if by "people that he has been definitely helping and impressing" Feda was endeavouring to interpret Myers's message in that connection.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

It is possible that the buzzing to which Myers refers accounts for his failure to make the allusion clearer. The remarkable fact remains, however, that practically every observation made by Feda was accurate and relevant.

In the light of the foregoing automatic script received through Miss Cummins, it is important to note that the typescript of the Leonard record was not, at that time, in my possession. I parted at King's Cross from the stenographer I took with me. Her notes were all in shorthand, and three or four days elapsed between the Leonard sitting and my receipt of the verbatim typescript of it. Anyone who has sat with Mrs. Leonard realises that it is exceedingly difficult to retain in one's conscious mind much of the conversation that transpires, without even a few rough notes to which to refer. It was, therefore, only on receipt of the complete transcription that I realised the many important corroborations and cross-references which occurred in connection with these two psychics. Incidentally, the contrast in the two forms of mediumship is not without interest. For it illustrates some of the difficulties experienced by communicators in establishing their identity through two different channels.

Replying to some queries from me concerning Myers's preliminary remarks through Mrs. Leonard, Mrs. Salter, the hon. editor of the Journal of the S.P.R., wrote as follows:—

"(a) Myers certainly travelled a good deal. To my knowledge he had been in various parts of Europe and several times to America. He may have travelled elsewhere also, I cannot say. (b) He had been very seriously ill for some time before his death, but the end came rather sooner than was expected. The immediate cause of death was heart failure. (c) He wrote at least two kinds of books, poetry and prose. If you take the prose works alone you might divide them into books on psychical research and books on literature, ancient and modern. (d) I was only a child when he died, but my impression is that he was rather a highly strung, nervous man. I don't mean nervous in the sense of shy, but quick and impatient, a man of very strong feelings."

A RECORD OF SOME CROSS-REFERENCES

The last paragraph refers to a query from me regarding a remark made by Myers in automatic writing. Through Miss Cummins he had stated that he "used to be a little quick in replying." This apparent fact had been illustrated when, during the writing of the essay on "Memory," he suddenly broke off, violently crossing out a sentence and beginning again with, "Your words make it impossible" (page 100). Other instances of a similar character occur in the writing of these essays.

It may be of interest to state that the title of this book was also suggested by the alleged Myers.

The method of endeavouring to link up with the same entity through Mrs. Leonard and Miss Cummins was adopted on the occasion of my next two visits to the former. These experiments were also attended with successful results.

The material given is somewhat involved and exigencies of space prevent their inclusion in this volume. The reader is referred to Psychic Science (the Quarterly Transactions of the British College of Psychic Science) for July 1931, which contains a record of one of these experiments.

It should be mentioned that I have had no sittings with Mrs. Osborne Leonard since 1925.

A short account dealing with the evolution of animals and their survival is added to this volume as Appendix V. This was communicated by Myers at an early date and does not fit into the context of the book. Nevertheless, it may be of interest to a considerable number of people.

SUMMARY

SUMMARY

A FEW further explanatory notes may be of interest.

In the first place, Miss Cummins is a perfectly normal individual, capable of coping with any ups and downs in life which may fall to her lot with complete equanimity. There is no sign of hysteria or of neurasthenia, such as is often erroneously attributed to those gifted with super-normal powers. She is, indeed, far calmer and more self-possessed in a crisis than are many people considered extremely well balanced. She has not studied books on theosophy or psychical research. She was an agnostic as regards survival until, by weight of evidence, she was forced to change her views. Even so, she had no definite theories regarding the conditions which are stated to prevail in the next life.

The communicator who claims to have dictated Parts I and II of this book describes the state to which we pass at death in a manner that certainly had not occurred to Miss Cummins. Even if the matter written is held, by some, to be merely the invention of her subconscious mind, it is, nevertheless, extremely arresting. It contains a description of the Hereafter which would seem to be a logical development of the conditions of earth life.

The book under discussion is composed in a manner totally different from the style of the numerous other entities who have endeavoured (intentionally or otherwise) to demonstrate their survival through Miss Cummins. Moreover, these writings are quite distinct from those of the automatist's. F. W. H. M. speaks of some matters of which he had already written when on earth, though this fact was unknown to us at the time of writing. He introduces words which, on referring to Human Personality at a later date, I found were used in that book. I refer to

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

"polyzoic," "polypsychic," "metetheric," "telæsthesia,"<sup>1</sup> etc. Neither Miss Cummins nor I had any idea as to their meaning nor had we any recollection of ever having seen them in print. In addition to the fact that the communicator gave several indications of his knowledge of the investigation of psychic phenomena from this side, on some occasions he also wrote as though he were delivering a lecture. In view of his position as classical lecturer at Cambridge, this would, in all probability, be characteristic of him.

It must be realised that in automatic or supernormal writing there is no time for correction and re-writing as is possible for a living author when composing an essay. As the alleged Myers has remarked, "These essays are hastily written and must necessarily be crude owing to the difficulties of communication and the difficulty of the theme. I have, of course, no opportunity for studying them. I am like a speaker who has only a few minutes in which to utter his ideas. He may not retract any of the words. Once spoken they belong to the world about him. You will understand that, when discussing eternity, the supernatural lecturer is at a considerable disadvantage, and must, admittedly, make errors. Also, he is dependent on the medium's or interpreter's mind." This fact should be remembered when comparing the style of writing in this short book with that of Myers's various works written during his life on earth.

It may be claimed that these contain long sentences; whereas, in some of the material written down by Miss Cummins, the sentences are somewhat shorter. If this is so, it must be remembered that in automatic writing the words are joined together and the paragraphs are without punctuation. Moreover, some of these writings are in the form of simple, instructive conversation concerning the <sup>1</sup> The script in which this word occurs is not incorporated in this volume. The essay on the Subliminal Self in which the above words occur was written, together with other essays, before Miss Cummins and I had read Human Personality.

SUMMARY

After-life, and are not in any way an attempt to enter into an elaborate analysis of those conditions, such as, perhaps, was his habit in life.

It is noticeable that there is a certain similarity in the phraseology of Human Personality and in that of the automatic writing under discussion. In her normal writing Miss Cummins avoids all remarks in parenthesis and particularly dislikes the introduction of them into her writing. It will be noted that in The Road to Immortality the parenthesis occasionally appears.

I can state emphatically that Miss Cummins has never attempted to study any of the subjects with which this book deals. She has written a few articles which were published some years ago. But these concerned the theatre and modern literature. She has written short stories and the works referred to on page 19 of the Introduction. I may add that, throughout the nine years that it has been my privilege to be associated with her, Miss Cummins has been absorbed (so far as her reading is concerned) in the drama and in modern works of fiction.

Why, then, is it that, when she prepares herself for automatic writing, she writes sometimes on metaphysics? Moreover, such writing is always headed by the name of an individual who claims to have once lived on earth, and who tries to indicate in every possible way that he is merely living on another plane?

As it may be urged that Miss Cummins might, while in a state of self-induced hypnosis, extract knowledge from my mind with which she could unconsciously build up these essays, it is necessary to mention that I have no training in metaphysics whatsoever.

Such remarks also apply to Miss Cummins's other psychic books. I refer chiefly to her historical works, The Scripts of Cleophas, Paul in Athens, and The Great Days of Ephesus.<sup>1</sup> These suggest an immortality of intelligence and of memory that is truly remarkable. These volumes, together with those still unpublished, form a vast history of early Christianity. Some of the information contained therein could not have come from the mind of the writer, Miss Cummins, who has had no theological training. It is not without interest to compare the style of these writings with those of the alleged communicator of The Road to Immortality. In so doing, it should be remembered that the manner of their production is precisely the same.

<sup>1</sup> This volume is not yet published.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

It is not relevant to enter here into further details concerning Miss Cummins's very extensive psychic works. But when all are published it is probable that she will go down to posterity as one of the finest trance-writers in the annals of psychical research.

In considering the description of the After-life, readers will naturally attach importance to the credentials of the alleged communicator. On what authority are we to accept the information given? Does it come from a reliable source? If the reader considers that Myers has proved his case for survival and has found, in his "interpreter," the clearest channel available for the expression of his views, then it seems that reliability can be placed on the statements made herein. In his life Myers was undoubtedly a man of unimpeachable honesty and sincerity.

It is hardly conceivable that one individual can reproduce the characteristic manner of speech, peculiarities of phraseology, and the actual idiosyncrasies of a number of people whom she has never met in life. Yet this has been the case as regards Miss Cummins. For when such dramatisations of personality were studied by those claiming to be their friends or relatives they were recognised by them. This phenomenon cannot be explained by any of the acknowledged theories connected with psychical research. It may be claimed that telepathy or even latent telepathy can account for a medium or "interpreter" obtaining knowledge of a fact unknown to him, but it cannot explain the reproduction of personality.

SUMMARY

As an illustration I quote a short résumé of five cases which may be taken as examples.

In the early days of our experiments the mother of a friend of mine purported to write through Miss Cummins. I forwarded the sheets of foolscap to Mrs. L., her daughter. In discussing their contents a few days later, the latter exclaimed in a bewildered voice: "But it is exactly like the old lady; how does Miss Cummins know?" In this case Mrs. L. had met Miss Cummins once, the latter had never seen Mrs. L.'s mother and knew nothing about her. She died a few months prior to the above episode. I, myself, had met the hypothetical communicator once only twenty years previously, when she made no impression upon me whatsoever, and I had no recollection of her peculiarities.

On another occasion the name and address of a person entirely unknown to anyone present were written by Miss Cummins. The statement was made that this entity had just died and that he knew his wife was grieving. There was an insistent request that she should be traced and be assured of the continued existence of her husband. I followed up these remarks and eventually corresponded with the widow at the address given in the automatic script. She corroborated eight of the statements made as being entirely correct, including a description of her husband's personal appearance and the condition of his health for some time prior to his death.

This man had lived in a town in the north of England, the existence of which we were both unaware at the time of writing. It is true that we might have heard of this town and forgotten it, but that does not explain the fact that Miss Cummins wrote the name and correct address of a man unknown to her who had recently died there. The following are the facts acknowledged by his widow. (1) Her husband had recently died (five days afterwards his name was written by Miss Cummins). (2) He was in the fifties (his age was 55). (3) He was of medium height (correct). (4) He was dark (correct). (5) He had retired from business, that is, had not been fit for it for some time. ("He was ailing for two years, but kept going to business. He was not fit to go but would not give in.") (6) He was not ill for very long. ("He died three days after the doctor was called in.") (7) They were devoted to each other (correct). (8) The widow would not believe in the survival of her husband when informed of his message (correct). (9) That he had a wife also proved correct.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

Another case connected with Miss Cummins's automatic writing concerned a young girl who died at the age of 15. Her mother was a friend of mine, but I had not seen the child since she reached the age of five years. Through Miss Cummins I was able to converse with what appeared to be the personality of the little girl, who eventually gave convincing proofs of her continued existence. Not only did the mother, Mrs. B., recognise the signature and style of writing as belonging to that of her dead daughter, but the latter appeared to be in constant touch with her mother's mind. On several occasions the child wrote through Miss Cummins, giving details of what Mrs. B. had been doing, thinking, and feeling. She indicated the place where her mother spent the Christmas of 1924, and made other statements which Mrs. B. pronounced to be correct. These were entirely unknown to the automatist and to myself at the time of writing. Miss Cummins had not had any communication with Mrs. B., who, as a result of these communications, became fully convinced of her daughter's survival and confident that they would meet in a life to come. In this case, six facts were written, which were entirely unknown to either of us, and a great number of statements were also made which were known to me but unknown to the automatist.

SUMMARY

An even more remarkable example of the reproduction of personality as well as of evidential matter is as follows:—

The wife of a certain Mr. X. died. Through Miss Cummins she purported to communicate, together with her sister, Miss P., and a mutual friend of theirs, a Mr. T. M. These writings (which extended to ten sittings) gave evidence of the survival of their different personalities and intimate details of family affairs connected with the husband and wife. When the communications were sent to Mr. X., the husband, he decided that they should be destroyed, considering it inadvisable that any mention of such private matters should be found after his death. Of these writings Mr. X. wrote: "Marvellous. The script is the most wonderful thing I have ever read. The personality of everyone is unmistakable. I have read and re-read it many times." Again, Miss Cummins had never seen any of these three communicators, yet she reproduced their different characteristics, their style of speech and phraseology, and references to family feuds and differences which had occurred before she was born. Moreover, when the writings purporting to emanate from the mutual friend, Mr. T. M., were read over to his widow, she exclaimed that the style was "exactly like him." In every possible way she then expressed her belief that her husband had been communicating through Miss Cummins.

In this case the widow of T. M. and Mr. X. corroborated nineteen statements which were unknown to either Miss Cummins or to me at the time of writing. Moreover, we were not then acquainted with Mrs. T. M., or with any member of her family.

With regard to the scripts purporting to be written by Mrs. X. and her sister, Miss P., these also contained facts which I was subsequently able to verify. In addition to this, the number of characteristic phrases and curious idiosyncrasies exhibited by these alleged communicators which were recognised by Mr. X. and myself are almost uncountable. These peculiarities could not have been known consciously to the automatist and telepathy cannot explain their reproduction by her. At some of the sittings reference was made to the petty quarrels of the sisters in their earth life. In this discussion they continued to express views which were characteristic of them.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

Another remarkable case connected with Miss Cummins's automatism is published in the Journal of the Society for Psychical Research for May 1929.<sup>1</sup> In this instance it concerned information given by Captain J. M., who had been killed in the South African War. He gave the correct names of some of his brother officers who were killed at the same time. Neither sitter<sup>2</sup> nor medium had conscious knowledge of these names nor of the details communicated concerning them. Captain J. M. stated that one of these officers told him of a "spree" which he missed when both battalions met at the same station in India, relating a certain scandal connected with two young subalterns which occurred at this place.

These details were subsequently confirmed. The communicator did not accompany his regiment to India. The two battalions met as described—a most unusual event—and the "spree" was eventually verified by a man who was there at the time as a junior subaltern. None of these facts was known to the sitter. The incident which occurred in 1898 could not have been mentioned anywhere in print. The sitter did not meet or hear anything of her communicator after June 1897 until she read of his death in South Africa.

In 1898 Miss Cummins was a small child living in Ireland. She had no connection with the regiment in question. Moreover, the communicator hinted at another matter which he could relate but, when asked to do so, refused, stating that the person concerned was still alive. It was subsequently ascertained that a certain incident had also occurred at the same time and that it concerned a man still living.

<sup>1</sup> The following résumé has been taken from the Journal by kind permission of the Council of the S.P.R.

<sup>2</sup> The term used in psychical research indicating the person to whom the messages are addressed.

SUMMARY

It is not possible here to give further evidential matter. But none of the recognised explanations—i.e. telepathy, thought-transference, cryptæsthesia or the subconscious mind—can, it seems, account for the reproduction of the personalities mentioned in the foregoing notes. Even in the last case given I understand that it was characteristic of the communicator, Captain J. M., to refuse to relate anything of a derogatory kind concerning anyone he knew.

In these few cases alone over forty correct facts are mentioned which could not have been obtained telepathically by Miss Cummins from anyone present when she was writing down the information contained therein. In addition to this, we have the problem of the reproduction of the personalities of various people whom Miss Cummins had never met. Of all those who have purported to write through her in my presence, only one was known to her personally. Six who were known to and recognised by me were not acquainted with her in life, the remainder were strangers to us both. All these exhibited different peculiarities of character and often expressed views on certain subjects which were at variance with those expressed by others.

What, then, is the explanation? Can all such phenomena be attributed to the dramatisation of the subconscious mind? Are they to be accounted for by telepathy or by the hypothetical theory of cryptæsthesia? It is true that we have not considered the phenomenon of multiple personality; but it must be obvious that this theory does not solve the problem. I contend that, so far as our present researches into psychic phenomena have extended, none of these theories explain the case. And I submit that the spiritistic hypothesis, that we survive death, supplies the only possible answer.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

It seems that the two branches of psychic science—physical phenomena and mental phenomena—should definitely be separated. In so far as the mental side is concerned (i.e. trance-speech, clairaudience and automatic writing, by which means the survival of human personality can sometimes be indicated) the word “medium” might, with advantage, be dropped. Another more comprehensive word could be substituted. As Myers says, “The medium is not a medium, he is an interpreter. Please remember that.”

It is of interest to note in Part III the reference to the meeting of the Society for Psychical Research. If we admit that the surviving consciousness of Myers was speaking through Mrs. Leonard and through Miss Cummins, is it not the most natural thing in the world that he should refer to this event in some way? As Feda remarked, it (the S.P.R.) was “his happy hunting ground.”

The records of supernormal phenomena issued by that Society during the last fifty years are sufficient to satisfy the most rigid sceptic that they present a strong case for survival. One of the practices of the Society is to amass, criticise, and analyse cases that are brought to its notice, cases that cannot be described as other than supernormal phenomena: and the reader is then left to form his own conclusions. Among its Presidents are numbered the following: The Right Hon. the Earl of Balfour, William James, Sir William Crookes, F. W. H. Myers, Sir Oliver Lodge, Sir William Barrett, Charles Richet, Andrew Lang, and many others. All these have testified to the genuine character of certain psychic phenomena, and Sir Oliver Lodge, Sir William Crookes, Sir William Barrett, and F. W. H. Myers have stated their conviction that survival is a demonstrated fact. Such notable men as the famous

SUMMARY

Prime Minister the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, the Poet Laureate Alfred Tennyson, John Ruskin, R. L. Stevenson, G. F. Watts, Lord Leighton, also Lord Rayleigh, Sir Archibald Geikie, Sir J. J. Thomson (past Presidents of the Royal Society), and the late Sir Arthur Conan Doyle have given their names and support to psychical research. In increasing numbers other eminent men, scientists, doctors, novelists, journalists, soldiers, sailors, lawyers, politicians, have testified to their belief in a life after death and in communication between the two worlds.

Surely, then, the time is ripe for this fact to be recognised.

Without dispute or investigation on our part, the average individual accepts the stupendous statements—for example—that the sun is nearly 93 million miles from the earth, that light travels at 186,000 miles per second. Sir James Jeans is reported to have said, "The earth is only a tiny speck of dust, circling with other specks of dust round a sun which is a million times bigger, and yet is itself only a grain of sand in the vastness of space."

After careful scientific research, extending over many years, experts have declared proven a matter of vital importance—that we survive death. They have not hesitated to declare their conviction in this respect. Yet, distinguished and undistinguished men and women, who have not so much as had one sitting with a reputable medium, throw doubt upon a subject about which they have no right whatsoever to express an opinion.

The Society for Psychical Research has made a thorough investigation into the mediumship of Mrs. Osborne Leonard. Their Journal and Proceedings record cases received through her which cannot be explained by the theories discussed in these notes. Mrs. Leonard is undoubtedly the finest trance medium of this generation.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

Faith has now the backing of proof. Not alone through Miss Cummins, but through other mental mediums, have I received what is, to me, incontrovertible evidence of survival. There seems, indeed, no other solution to the mystery of mediumship. That mistakes are sometimes made in the transmission of messages, and that allowance must be made for the occasional inadequate recollection of earthly details on the part of the communicator,<sup>1</sup> must be evident to all who study the subject intelligently and from an unbiased standpoint.

In the light of our present knowledge it is difficult to claim that psychic phenomena are a modern development. If we refer to the Bible we shall find that at least one instance occurs which may be described as a reference to "automatic writing."

1 Chronicles xxviii. 19 reads: "All this, said David, the Lord made me understand in writing by his hand upon me, even all the works of this pattern."

The inference seems unmistakable, though in these days "the hand of the Lord" would probably indicate a "messenger of the Lord."

Again, in 2 Chronicles xxi. 12 we read: "And there came a writing to him from Elijah the prophet . . ." (giving warning of the punishment that was to fall upon the King of Judah). A student of the Bible has written that "this writing came not earlier than B.C. 889, and must have been [written] about seven years after Elijah's death."

If we examine the New Testament for evidence of "psychic phenomena" we shall probably be surprised to find the extent to which these words might be applied. Acts ix. 11 records the communication of the name of a street; and the name of a man living in it, with other instructions, were given to Ananias in a vision. And, to use the language of modern psychical research, all these details were subsequently verified. This instance might, in a sense, be considered analogous with the case recorded on page 163 and with similar cases which occur from time to time in connection with psychic phenomena.

<sup>1</sup> See Appendix IV, p. 185.

SUMMARY

Numerous other obscure passages in the Bible can be explained and rendered convincing to the sceptical mind through reference to well-attested instances in modern psychic investigation.

In the concluding chapter of Frederic Myers's great work, Human Personality and its Survival of Bodily Death, he writes:

"What the age needs is not an abandonment of effort but an increase; the time is ripe for the study of unseen things as strenuous and sincere as that which Science has made familiar for the problems of earth. . . . I venture now on a bold saying; for I predict that, in consequence of the new evidence, all reasonable men, a century hence, will believe in the Resurrection of Christ, whereas, in default of the new evidence, no reasonable man, a century hence, would have believed it."

Here is the considered testimony of a brilliant scholar who devoted many years of his life to psychical research. Yet the Churches so far do not appear to have recognised the full importance of this "study of unseen things." It is true that some of the clergy have investigated privately, and it is probable that fear of the opinion of their congregations prevents many of them from more openly expressing their views. The mind of the lay public is not yet fully prepared for the acceptance of the fact that faith has now the backing of knowledge, that psychical research—which may be described as the study of the human soul and its destiny—is an ally of the Church in the aid it gives to belief in a materialistic age, in the assurance it conveys to thousands, of a life beyond the grave.

APPENDICES

"The Scripts of Cleophas," "Paul in Athens" and "The Great Days of Ephesus" all come under the heading of "The Cleophas Scripts." They are historical works dealing with early Christian and Pagan times, and purport to be drawn from the Great Memory, by Cleophas and his scribes. They are written through Geraldine Cummins. The following information concerning them was given by the alleged Myers in 1927. E. B. G.

APPENDIX I

THE CLEOPHAS SCRIPTS

F. M. These scripts have been drawn out of the void, as it were; not by chance; not through certain fortuitous circumstances. Their origin may be traced to quite a number of things. For instance, there has been, since the War, a great desire among living men and women for some spiritual reality. Out of that vast outbreak of materialistic forces there has come the yearning for knowledge of the truth. There is, on this side, what we call "the earth's sounding board." Upon it strike the collective desires of the masses. These, at times, draw to themselves influences from our side, group-souls who respond—if they find a suitable instrument—to the imperative summons of the earth children.

Now these group-souls are not in any way infallible. They see truth from a certain angle, and in a certain manner. They are anxious to illumine the path of man, but they may not always succeed in giving him what he needs. Undoubtedly the stirring in the earth-life made its impression in various ways here. There have been numerous responses, and these do not always appear to come through psychic channels. There has been, for instance, a speeding up of science during the War and since the War. And many of the discoveries made through the applied intelligences of living men did not, in their essence, originate in the living mind. A group-soul concentrated upon a certain promising scientist, and, using the mechanism of his brain, gave to the world the secret that initiated a new invention, that stimulated, perhaps, mechanical progress or, perhaps, medical science.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

There were group-souls of a low kind who gave to the world a mad desire for violent primitive dancing, and in this manner the young people carried on the expression of those years of violence and crazy destruction.

Picture these various spirit influences gathered round the earth, like good and evil godmothers watching over a child's cradle, each bestowing the gift that is characteristic of the donor. A group-soul watched for a sensitive who would receive, through the mechanism of her brain, the old story of Christianity at the time of its birth. To the members of this group there seemed to be but one answer which could adequately satisfy the hideous spiritual loneliness of man, a terrifying loneliness as seen from the Invisible. For he lay there in the mud, smitten and bleeding, his pride humbled, his mind utterly bewildered, his soul shaken at the roots.

So she<sup>1</sup> has been wandering, no doubt, among the old memories in the ether. In your world the young man of an adventurous disposition loved to journey into unknown countries. Similarly the medium, who has an adventurous disposition, and suitable qualifications, can rove in the tropic wildernesses of the world's great past, cutting the flowers of man's emotional history, gathering the fruits of vanished days.

But no age vanishes or passes away. You will find it again: not as it was, but as man imaged it, in the heart of the Universe.

The Great Memory contains the sum total of man's subjective experiences imprinted on the ether. Certain intelligences can link up the medium with a fragment of this very considerable MS. She writes down the charge, which is conveyed to her from that Great Memory by—what can I call him?—a spirit who has passed beyond the state of earth-individuality.

The whole process is extremely difficult. It places a considerable strain on the medium; but it may, given favourable conditions, lead to the recapture, not so much of the actual history of a certain period, as of the view that certain intelligent and emotional men held of that period.

<sup>1</sup> This refers to Geraldine Cummins in person. E. B. G.

APPENDICES

There is given, in short, the interpretation of an era, as seen through the eyes of men who felt and thought deeply in that period, and so printed their impressions of it on the Ether Memory.

It is accurate history in so far as it gives the impression of the truth concerning that time as it was graven on the minds of certain men. It is inaccurate in so far as the subjective experiences of even the most highly gifted men, in any age, are inaccurate.

For what is true of the vast histories imprinted on the Great Nature Memory is, to a certain degree, true of the histories written by living men. In short, there will always be the difference between a bad portrait and a good portrait! It lies with the people who read these histories to discern, almost instinctively, what is false and what is true.

History-making is an art. I hope that the long-dead men whose ether memories you tap were true artists. For, with the passage of time, really what matters, in connection with a great revelation, is not accuracy as regards facts, but accuracy as regards vision.

Cleophas and his scribes believe they are giving to the earth the panacea which the sons and daughters of men require. But they do not realise that the mental outlook of man has vastly changed. He has little faith. He seeks for what is spiritual through material means.

In the days of the Roman Empire, when it was in its glory, the same kind of despair, and the same violent moods of desire, as in your day, swayed the souls of men. They were plunged in an abyss of materialism; they yearned for an assurance of life after death; for spiritual truth; for some escape from the doom of the flesh. But, in those times, their attitude of mind was very different. Their world was not ruled by a mechanical god, as it is to-day. They were not fettered by the machine, they were not dazzled by the gigantic triumphs of physics, chemistry, and mathematics. They were, therefore, unhampered in their reception of the revelation given them.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

Cleophas and his scribes may succeed in gaining the ear of some intelligent people, but the masses seek for spiritual reality through physical stimuli, or in the doctrine of physical science. In other words, they are trained so perfectly to think now in physical terms that they will not care to think in spiritual terms. The worship of the old pagan gods, that preceded the worship of the One God and His Son, prepared the way for the marvellous figure of the Christ. The philosophers, even when most sceptical, helped to produce the suitable attitude of mind among the people. But nowadays your physicists, your medical men, hold the power over the collective mind that the philosophers once held; and they wave only the banner of materialism.

Cleophas might be described as a unit, and yet as many. In other words, he is the expression of a certain stage in the long journey of evolution, of a number of fervent Christians who lived in that early period. He is not an individual, as are the souls of those who have of recent times passed over. He is a collective soul, if you will—I cannot find another term—and he is able to draw from the Great Ether Memory the pageantry of that early Christian period; not as set down by a cold detached historian, but as the passionate outpouring of fanatical and holy Christians, who strove to state in writing their own emotional view of the period in which they lived.

Now, mark you, I use the term "emotional view." A book that is written without emotion cannot impress itself upon the ether. What is there imprinted is not the actual words, but the images in the imagination of the scribe.

APPENDICES

These pictures and symbols are converted into words through the peculiar mechanism of the living woman's brain. You will understand that it contains an inherited tendency for sacred drama and for Holy Writ. The necessary framework of dignified language lay there dormant. This framework was not the creation of the present owner of the brain. It is an accretion of the tendencies inherited from a number of devout Bible-reading ancestors.

The scribes of Cleophas, or, rather, that collective Christian mentality that hovers near the Ether Memory, gather it up, and set it in the deeper mind of the living woman. This deeper mind thinks and talks only in the language of images. The process of translation into words seems to occur when the subliminal mind casts these images and symbols, in swift procession, upon the brain of the woman. Instantaneously they gather to themselves the needful garment of words from the memory-centres attached to the physical organ, and the ancient drama of Christianity, as dreamed by the saints, is set down upon the page.

It is all true as a record of the vision that certain holy and earnest men had of the time in which they lived. But I cannot answer for the accuracy of their vision. The spirit, that makes them one, closed its doors to fresh souls migrating from the world at a period when religion and mysticism were dethroned; when science, rationalism, and materialism came to sway men's hearts.

So the objective of this particular group-soul is simplified, and not rendered complicated by the incursion of types of a very different character.

APPENDIX II

THE PSYCHIC'S LIGHT

F. M. There are certain vital fluids that are connected with the body. I call them fluids because that term alone seems to describe them. These fluids are important. If the vitality is low they have less vigour. They fulfil an important function, they are the soft material which . . . I find the term difficult . . . the soft material which links up the mind with the nervous system and the body. The brain is certainly the conscious controlling power, but the unconscious must also play its part. This invisible fluid connects the unconscious mind with all that appertains to those myriad activities of the body that go on without conscious direction.

Now, with some this fluid has a stronger flow than with others. This is due to the balance between the soul and body and to the peculiar characteristics of the individual. When, as I say, the flow is strong and possesses a certain quality recognisable by us, it glows or, rather, we perceive it as a flame. Most human beings have this flame, but it is usually invisible to us. Only certain persons—mediums, in short—can make it so clear and bright that we become sensible of it. This flame depends partly for its brightness on the medium's will. The medium must consciously will herself into that state of detached calm which makes the fluid more active and contributes to the intensity of the flame. The medium's will can injure our communications if it, at any time, starts the working of the machinery of the brain. It is thanks to this quiescence of the will that we operate. Of course there are other conditions which must be taken into account. There is the influence of the sitter's fluid; there are extraneous influences; there is also the health of the medium. All these factors must be taken into consideration. If any of them are lacking, our difficulties are manifold. I would like to add that any emotional storm which has possessed the medium will, unless she be extraordinarily capable as regards self-detachment, influence injuriously the sitting that may follow closely on the storm. This is natural. The fluid is very sensitive and profoundly affected by any very violent emotion which has shaken the medium.

APPENDICES

There are other observations I might make on the subject, but, ladies, they would lead to a rather long digression. The variety of mediums, their peculiar idiosyncrasies, have all to be taken into account. One must be a skilled operator or one must have a very quick mind to communicate vital evidence from here. The transmission—you will understand—is much complicated by the inner mind and its fluidic connection with the human being.

I find here a mind that is fertile and therefore responds to my message in a manner that could not be hoped for in the mind of one who had no scholarship of any kind. You must understand that the dead impress the minds of the living far more than they can ever realise. Most discoveries are the product of two worlds, of two minds, one without a body and one with a body to give it expression. But your scientist calls our suggestions inspiration and will not admit that the creative flash requires more than the tinder to ignite it.

You perhaps do not understand medicine or the secretions of the body. That may be taken as a parallel when we speak through mediums. Our messages cannot contain quite the same form even if the idea be the same when written through two different mediums, for the very good reason that the inner mind shapes the messages according to the fertility of that mind. It is a phenomenon that still surprises me.

I want you to know that I have made other attempts to reach the earth and am still making them.<sup>1</sup> But this particular form interests me because it is direct and I can at least convey certain ideas of mine very effectively when dealing with this type of inner mind. Actual facts come perhaps more fluently through the other type of medium, certainly through the little lady, Fedá. She is very easy to handle in a certain way. We discuss these mediums over here and I know a great deal about Fedá's methods. I wish I were alive to experiment with her. . . .

<sup>1</sup> This was written in 1925. E. B. G.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

I wish to assure you that all my old friends who search so industriously for proofs of survival have an entire misconception as to the manner of communication and as to our attempts at controlling the mediums. We do not control them, to a large extent they control us when we speak. It must be so, given the abnormal conditions of communication. Our message, when it is direct, comes from us to the medium and is always translated by the inner mind. What that mind cannot conceive or apprehend it cannot translate. It receives our thoughts not in words but as thoughts. We can on occasion, if we are clever, give to these thoughts the very definite stamp of our style, then the style is reproduced. It may seem strange to men and women that a revelation of our condition seldom comes through with clearness. That is the fault of the instrument which cannot render the tune we would gladly play upon it. You must remember that a medium is rarely a mere medium. He should be called an "interpreter." It is an interpretation, not a literal statement, that is conveyed to you through him. The interpreter has always to talk in two languages: he has to transmit to us and to transmit to you. It is a double function. You should study the medium, and if you perceive any very strong prejudice expressed, you will know that it comes from the subconscious overflow and not from the poor shade who has the greatest difficulty in contending with any fixed ideas in the medium's deeper mind.

APPENDIX III

A SITTING FROM "THE OTHER SIDE"

FREDERIC MYERS, I am at your service.

(E. B. G. Would you care to describe to us what a sitting, with Mrs. Leonard and Feda controlling, appears like from your point of view?)

F. M. I will take our first sitting as an illustration. I asked you, when I talked through this lady, to memorise certain remarks of mine, and I asked you, in short, to keep your mind actively employed in imaging the idea that I was going to speak there. This was very necessary. In the first place your apprehension of my possible coming, your thought clothed in desire was like a delicate thread cast into the infinite sea. I was watching for it, seized it and was drawn by you to the sitting. That was my summons. I had still to make my presence known. Now, Feda was obviously accustomed to you; I perceived that very soon. She did not look for any stranger, but cast her net only in the direction of those in whom you have a personal interest. How, therefore, was I to make my presence known? Chiefly through your assistance I was able to draw from your subliminal mind, or rather from the strata of it nearest your consciousness, the image of my name. It was graven on a very fine essence which accompanies the human being and yet is not within the human being. I refer to the store of memory that hangs about you and each individual like a cloud. I was invisible to Feda, but Feda, when she understood that she was to search for a new communicator, cast about her that net of psychic force with which she apprehends the symbols we try to display to her.

It was difficult at first to drop my name within it, but at last success was mine. Again through your help I was able to use your fluid shape in order to obtain the necessary force with which to precipitate my image into the net. You understand that unconsciously you were quite an active agent, for your desire was propitious, and so I was able to use your force and at last I was recognised.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

(E. B. G. It seemed to me at that sitting that you gradually approached, giving some evidence first.)

F. M. I refer to image in a general—not in a particular—sense. A general impression connected with the symbol Frederic, she got the letter first.

(E. B. G. I think she got the letter “M” first.)

F. M. I do not know which letter first met with her attention, I merely gave the suggestion of my Christian name and surname in letters, and I understood that the first letter was apprehended separately. To me it is of little moment what first caught her attention; the image really was the sum of myself as I was when alive. Many figures in that sum were not perceived, were not snared in the net, but a sufficiency was obtained and then she was able to get the name.

APPENDIX IV

F. W. H. M. DESCRIBES THE DIFFICULTY OF COMMUNICATING EARTH MEMORIES

(E. B. G. When you are communicating through Mrs. Leonard and Fedá you appear to stand in your own mind, as it were, throwing out your thoughts to Fedá to interpret. When communicating by means of automatic writing, you appear to control the writer directly. Will you explain how much you remember of your earth life in these two conditions?)

F. M. Ah, that is very interesting! I must explain the methods. When I "stand in my own mind"—as you call it—I really stand in my own memories. Now these memories would appear to you, perhaps, as a faint cloud if you had rays sufficiently strong to expose them. But Fedá, who is in touch with a human being, can, if we take the trouble to concentrate on a particular memory, read what that memory is. She apprehends it and then conveys it to the deeper mind of the medium through whom it is finally expressed.

When I speak directly, either through this lady or through another medium, the process is rather different. I enter into the deeper mind of the medium in order that I may make the necessary impression upon it which will be conveyed to the hand that writes. In doing this my deeper mind blends with her mind, the latter is in my control almost completely. But unless I leave off controlling it in order to regain my memory of a particular fact, I shall not be able to convey that fact or fragment of memory through her.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

What I wish to convey is this. I have to leave her deeper mind, lose contact with it in order to obtain some fragment of memory from the whole of my memories which are outside the medium's deeper mind. It is very difficult for me to regain control of my ship—if I may call it so—with the plunder from my memories. But I can—and this is important—employ the ripe faculties of my inner mind when communicating directly. They have the knowledge, and the memories to a certain degree, of the new unearthly life. Can you imagine a mummy or a shell? My earth memories have hardened, as it were, into a shape of that character. They are as dead as a mummy; but can be revived if I enter into them. . . .

From the point of view of the writer I prefer the direct control, for my will and mind can make use of her mental powers in order to express my ideas. Now, these ideas are a little coloured by her deeper mind, but only in so far as she possesses very strong prejudices which might inhibit the thought conveyed by me. I find, however, very few barriers of this kind in her mind. It is loose and pliable.

Through Feda I can convey memories. I have worked with her before, and she has been singularly quick at catching my meaning. Of course, each new sitting with a new sitter means such a change in conditions for me that it is like learning the ABC of communication again. . . .

(E. B. G. After you have spoken to earth do you find you can remember what you have said when you return to your own sphere?)

F. M. That question requires a detailed answer. I have previously replied to it in a short way, but I feel now that it requires some qualification—I mean my short answer. I have suggested, in a sense, that clear memory in another sphere was difficult. But what I wish to make clear is this, that the actual fact—or the most significant part—cannot be forgotten. I am but a microbe compared with an elephant when I compare my thinking mind, even now, with my memory; and I who inhabit a body that is mind cannot grapple with all my memories, or even a tithe of them. They must, therefore, be pigeon-holed, but each is attached to my thinking mind by an invisible thread of association which can draw it up to me when the thread receives a signal. Certain threads receive a signal when I speak through this lady, certain threads receive a signal that rouses certain memories through another medium's proximity. At times the memory of certain things in connection with this sitting will come to me in that sphere to which I return. But they will come to me because certain associative threads recall them to me, not because I carry them about with me. That is the kind of idea the average man who is alive possesses of memory. He believes that memories are all carried about in his head—an amazing and utterly false idea. Memory is the most mysterious part of us because it is a part—and yet, not a part—of our being. I could write a book on the subject of memory.

APPENDICES

WHETHER IT IS RIGHT OR WRONG TO SPEAK TO THE DEAD

(E. B. G. Some people say it is unkind to draw the dead back to earth in order to speak to them.)

F. M. I quite understand your meaning. There is, of course, the obvious answer that we would not speak if it pained us and made us suffer. But, in any case, the individuals who make this statement labour under an entire misapprehension. There are many souls who are craving to communicate; but those on earth who care for them deny them the facilities. Actually, it is a very exquisite pleasure for those who have left people they care for behind to converse even with strangers, for it enables them, as it were, to sense the love and happy memories that remain of their earth life. But apart from considerations of sentiment in "coming back," as you call it, we are simply in a different state of being, and one of its features is that a part of us can project itself into the condition that makes it possible for him to speak through the medium, while the other part continues his work and life in another sphere. You may be perfectly sure that it is a kindness to permit the disembodied to speak. You suggest that it is unkind to remind them of earth associations. These are there still in their memory. You are not reminding them of anything, you are merely giving them an assurance that makes them happy—that the earth that contains much they care for has not been wiped out, obliterated. They are often glad and grateful for that assurance.

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

APPENDIX V

ANIMAL SURVIVAL

F. M. You wish me to write of animals and to be entirely frank in the statements I may make.

It is first of all necessary to classify those that man tends to regard as inferior creatures. There exist on earth various parallel lines of evolution. There exist, as Genesis will tell you, plants, fishes, birds and beasts, not to mention insects. All these have had the breath of life set within them. How far are these beings the creation of the One Great Mind endowed with the capacity for evolution? You must understand that if man's soul continues to evolve in another life, in another state of existence, it necessarily follows that those other animated forms which contain the power to evolve have also the possibility of sending out a mysterious essence which may be likened to what we call the soul in man.

I want you to place plants, insects, fish, birds and beasts into their several classes. These resemble the forms in a public school. The essences or souls of plants, after dying, gather together in their myriads and in time form one whole. These innumerable little beings—if you care to give them that name—go up one step in the ladder then, and are one when they enter the body of an insect. Myriads of insect lives again make one being which, in due course, enters the body of a fish or a bird. And so the process continues until you meet with the most intelligent of the tame animals.

Certain dogs, horses and cats, also monkeys, are possessed of a nucleus of intelligence that resembles, in some ways, the crudest of souls that inhabit the bodies of

By my grand tunc ? 108

THE ROAD TO IMMORTALITY

men. These dumb friends of ours pass into "the land of earthly desire," as some of us call it. "After-death state" is, perhaps, a better term than "land." I wish to indicate by this term that they do, very often, exist in a world beyond your world. They live within the loom of earth still, in the sense that they dwell in the soul's dream of earth.

For many departed souls there is this dream-world here, this ether-image of the earth. It is a place built up out of the earthly memories of men, and possesses many of the geographical features of the earth. Many simple souls dwell contentedly in surroundings that appear to them as solid and substantial as the material shapes on earth. There are, of course, certain vital differences. The problem of food or of money does not enter into the life of this dream-world, of this super-terrestrial image of the globe. In this habitat, old dog friends or cats who were comrades in other days may gravitate again to their masters or mistresses by virtue of their affection for them, that is, if the masters and mistresses are living in this Shadow Land. For we call it a "Shadow Land," though it is really far more beautiful than the earth. It is, in truth, the next state, and the journeying soul must pass through it, even though he may not tarry long within its borders. But those animals who come to it cannot journey beyond it. They must, at some time, go back to earth and enter the bodies of human beings. For they have not yet eaten of the tree of knowledge of good and evil. Only man has tasted that fruit. This pretty tale, which appears in the second chapter of Genesis, has a profound symbolic significance. The eating of the apple really symbolised that era in the history of nature when man emerged from the animal state. Poor Eve and all her daughters have been terribly maligned through this, the first of all earthly scandals.

If I were to translate literally the fable of the eating of the forbidden fruit, I should describe it as symbolising

APPENDICES

~~the birth of the first man with a human soul~~, the birth of the first ape from the monkey shape of a female that was truly man. By man, I desire to indicate one who had wrested the secret of intelligence from the Invisible. It was truly a step forward in the history of the evolution of the creation of God.

Now, I would return to the theme of the animals. Animals are not lower in creation than we are. They are merely far less complex. They are not what men call evil or good, for, as a rule, they have no understanding of the knowledge of good and evil. But, as the tendency throughout the Universe is gradually to evolve from the simple to the complex, so what I can only call "the animal mentality," that part which survives the death of the body, goes on dwelling here, perhaps for a space, in the state that is nearest to the earth life, but always inevitably returning to that earth, re-entering matter, taking on the shape of man in due season.

So you must understand that animals have souls, that is to say, there is within each one a certain individual essence that sometimes, uniting with another essence, eventually enters upon a new line of evolution and takes on man's estate. However, there are added to this embryo soul other things that, according to the history of the individual, are gathered within its nascent mentality.

INDEX

- ANIMAL-MAN, 35, 39-40, 68
 Animal survival, 189-91
 Attention, incarnate and discarnate, 107-8
 Automatic writing, 20-2, 24, 160-1, 185-7
- BALFOUR, the late Earl, and the Society for Psychical Research, 140, 141 n., 168
 Bhuddism, belief in reincarnation, 63 conception of happiness, 129 conception of Universe, 74-6
 Bible, references to psychic phenomena in, 170
 Brain, function of, 111
- CHRIST, after human death, 65 and God, 133-4
 Cleophas Scripts, 161, 175-9
 Colour (or Eidos), Plane of, 33, 54-61, 77 conditions obtaining in, 55-8 increased intellectual awareness, 58-60 telepathic communication on, 60-1 Communication, from discarnate to incarnate, difficulties of, 23, 101, 139, 160, 181-2 method of, 109-10, 124-5 Consciousness, before and after death, 50-3, 59, 69 constitution of, 110-11, 113 its detachment from the body, 109
 Creativeness, 111-12, 130
 Cummins, Miss Geraldine, 9, 10, 12 communications from F. W. H. Myers, 137-8, 141-4, 151-2
     Cummins, Miss Geraldine (cont.)
     cross-references with Mrs. Osborne Leonard, 21-2, 26, 137-55 family history of, 19 method and speed of her automatic writing, 20-2, 24 proofs of authenticity of her psychic writings, 159-68 suggests to Myers cross-reference through Mrs. Osborne Leonard, 139 writings of, 19, 161-2
- DEATH, sundering of the soul from the body, 79-82
     after period of senility, 88-9 fears of, groundless, 89-90 memory and identity after, 83-4 violent, 87-8
 De Brath, Mr. Stanley, editor of Psychic Science, 25
 Discarnate beings, three states of, 124-8
 Dreams, 116-17
 Dream-world, 36-7, 190
- EDDINGTON, Sir Arthur, on the structure of matter, 10-11
 Emotions, on Plane of Colour, 58
 Existence, purpose of, 30-2 planes of, 33-4, 35-6
- FLAME, Plane of, 33, 67-70
 Free will, 97-8
- GHOSTS, explanation of, 86-7
 Gibbes, Miss E. B., 9, 21 comments on sittings with Mrs. Osborne Leonard and Miss Cummins, 147-50, 152-5

INDEX

- Gibbes, Miss. E. B. (cont.)
 on Miss Cummins, 159-68 records communications from
 F. W. H. Myers, 137-55 suggests to Myers cross-references through Mrs. Osborne
 Leonard, 139
 God, beyond conception, 132-4
 Group-soul, 62-4, 70, 98, 175, 176, 197
- HADES, 33, 38, 67, 82-3, 84, 88
 Happiness, where found, 130-1
 Hypnosis, 118-19
- ILLUSION, Plane of, 33, 38-9, 39-40, 77, 85-6, 190
 Initiative, 114
- LEONARD, Mrs. Osborne, 10, 12, 140 communications through, from
 F. W. H. Myers, 144-7
 cross - references with Miss Cummins, 21-2, 26, 137-55
 mediumship of, 144 n., 169
 Light, Plane of, 33, 71
 Lodge, Raymond, 10-14 Lodge, Sir Oliver, foreword by, 9-15
 allusions to, 145, 146
 Love, transcends death, 89-90 as applied to God, 133-4 conceptions of, 91-2
- MAN, ordinary, on Plane of Illusion, 41-3, 44-5, 49
 his form after death, 50 his form on Plane of Colour, 54-5 immoral, on Plane of Illusion, 47-8
 three possible states of, 123-4
 Matter, Plane of, 33
 Mediums, 180-2
 as interpreters, 19, 23, 160, 162, 168, 182
 Memory, continuance of, after death, 83-4, 101-4 living, process of, 99-100
- Memory (cont.)
 the Great, 105-6, 125-6, 176 of earth, process of communicating, 185-7
 Memory-world, 36-8
 Mind, expression of, 112-13
 Myers, F. W. H., identity of his views verified by Sir Oliver Lodge, 9-15
 allusions to his book, Human Personality and its Survival of Bodily Death, 22, 159, 161, 171 describes a mediumistic sitting from his point of view, 150, 183-4 explains that it is right to speak to the dead, 187-8
 first communication from,
 through Miss Cummins, 137-8
 founder of Society for Psychical Research, 19
 further communications from, 138-44, 151-2
 his communications through
 Mrs. Osborne Leonard, 144-7 limitations of his spiritual knowledge, 29 on animal survival, 189-91 on Cleophas Scripts, 175-9 on process of communicating earth memories, 185-7 on the Psychic Light, 180-2 states his intention to speak through Mrs. Osborne
 Leonard, 139, 141, 142
 timeliness of his revelation, 77,
 139-40
- NEWLY dead, divisions of the, 35
- OUT Yonder, 33, 72-3
- PSYCHIC Light, 138 n., 180-2
Psychic Science, journal of British College of Psychic Science,
 July 1931, 155

INDEX

- Psychical Research, Society for, 19, 140 1, 141 n., 149, 168-9
- REINCARNATION, 9, 39, 40, 54,
62-3, 73, 89-90
- ST. PAUL and the After-life, 85
- Senility, death after period of, 88-9
- Sex, continuance of, after death, 46
- Sleep, detachment of the nerve-soul during, 115, 117-18
- Sleep-walking, 117
- Soul, bodily forms assumed by, 78 connections with the body, 79-80
- Soul-man, 35, 54, 57
and reincarnation, 62-3 liability to error in fourth Plane, 64-5 prepares to cast off form, 67, 68 on the Plane of Flame, 68-70 unification in the spirit, 71
- Spirit, evolution of, 31-2 nucleus of group of souls, 51, 62 unification of souls in, 71 fusion of, in the Supreme Mind, 72-3
- Spirit-man, 35, 53
and the fourth Plane, 65-6
- TELEPATHY, on the Plane of Colour, 60-1 process of, between the living, 120-2
- Timelessness, 33, 72-3
- UNIVERSE, real and unreal, 74-6
- Unseen World, language difficulties in communication from, 22-4 significance of Myers's communications from, 24-5
- WISDOM, definition of, 92
the secret of happiness, 131
- Wise, the, 43-4

The Westminster Press
411a Harrow Road
London W 9